Epaphras. The anſwer to this wretched exception (not for the waight of argument that it carieth, but for the variety of lewdnes and error which is in it) will diuide it ſelfe into many particulars. Firſt of all therefore touching them that obiect this, they are very properly by a learned man of our times compared to foule Gameſters, who when they haue loſt all at the Cards, and haue the laſt dealing in their hands, and perceiue, that, not likely to proue to their mind, riſe vp in a chafe and fling down all, and ſay, there hath been foule play played, when indeed the fault is chiefly in themſelues: ſo many being naught themſelues, and being (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) damned by their owne conſciences [t], when they haue no other ſhift, cry out vpon Preachers, thereby to cloke their own iniquity: therein not much vnlike to him, that in a throng at a Faire or market, bids men to beware of the Cut-purſe, that he in the meane time (being a man of the trade) may practiſe diuing into mens Pockets with the leſſe ſuſpition. And marke it when you will, you ſhall neuer find them any other then meere ſenſuall men, yea, and for the moſt part openly noted for ſome one bad courſe or other of drunkenneſſe, oppreſſing, vſury, couetouſneſſe, adultery, or the like, that make this obiection. Secondly, (becauſe there may bee truth in an obiection, though there bee little truth or honeſty in him that maketh it) know this therefore for the ſubſtance of this cauill, that put caſe it were ſo, (which thankes be to God, is not ſo) that all Preachers did confute their owne Sermons with their euill life, and had Eſaus hands with Iacobs voyce, and were like a file which ſmootheth other things, it ſelfe remaining rough, yet this could make nothing againſt preaching. For is Phiſicke naught, becauſe many Phiſitians perhaps liue contrary to their owne rules of phiſicke? Or is law damnable, becauſe ſome profeſſors thereof do liue lawleſſe, giuing rules of equity to others, themſelues keeping none but ill rules? no man will be ſo without ſenſe to affirme it: why then? Shall the courſe of preaching be condemned, for the ſuppoſed miſdemeanor of them which preach? God forbid. Is any man ſo vnwiſe as to diſobey a warrant comming apparantly from a man of authority, becauſe the Conſtable or Tithing-man is a naughty fellow that bringeth it? Who then either but a foole, or a froward heart, will tread the holy doctrine of God vnder his feete, becauſe hee is a man of no good carriage that deliuereth the ſame? Thirdly, men are to conſider this alſo, that all are not Miniſters which are ſo called, neither all true Preachers come from God that ſtand vp in the Pulpit: for in theſe corrupt times many are crept into the Church of God by the window, whom God did neuer ſet apart to that holy ſeruice: now it is vnpoſſible, but that ſuch as theſe (though they may a long time couer their double iniquity vnder a diſſembled ſanctity) yet ſhould at laſt breake out into extremities. Now it is againſt common reaſon, to turne their miſcariage into the generall diſgrace of all honeſt Miniſters. There be many counterfet Dog-leaches and pretenced Surgions, that hauing gotten a little Rubarbe or Balſamum, and

and ſome few words of art, run about the Country and beguile the people, and cozen them of their Money, purging their purſes, and ſcouring their bags vnder colour of cleanſing their bodies and ſearching their ſores? Shall we ſay therefore that all Phyſitions though they be neuer ſo well learned, neuer ſo well experienced, neuer ſo conſcionable and wary in their courſes of adminiſtring, are Cozeners, and that it were pitty but the Country were rid of them all? It were an indignity once to imagine it. There is no profeſſion, but it hath as it were a certen ſcumme, and there are ſome that make ſhew of it, that are altogether vnworthy of it. Shall the vileneſſe and vnbeſeeming cariage of thoſe that are but the refuſe, and (as I may ſo ſpeake) the taile[u] of an honeſt profeſſion, bee caſt into the face of all the reſt that belong vnto it? Reaſon it ſelfe ſaith, that it is vnmeet. And men would ſoone yeeld to this, were it not that the Diuell hath taught them to be wiſe in any thing, ſauing in religion, to fauor any profeſſion ſauing that of the Miniſtery. Men are heerein like vnto many Lawyers, who if you put them a caſe, without naming the parties, will tell you truly what is Law: but when they vnderſtand who they be whom the matter concerneth, then they change their opinion, and the Law is altered. So in the world, aske you any man of common vnderſtanding this queſtion, whether it be meet that all of a trade or company ſhould bee challenged, becauſe ſome ſuch, or ſuch are worthy to be puniſhed? He will tell you there is no reaſon for it: but come to the particulars touching Preachers, then he is of another mind, he will be ready to ſay, that all Chriſts Diſciples were naught, becauſe Iudas was a diuell[x]: and becauſe he (it may be) knoweth ſome two or three Sir Iohns, or ſome other (perhaps of better note in the eyes of the world, but yet ſcarſely worthy of their places) to be climing with Diotrephes[y], or imbracing this preſent world with Demas[z], or carrying themſelues inſolently with Paſhur[a], or otherwiſe keeping bad rule with him, who imagining that his Maſter doth defer his comming, begins to ſmite the ſeruants and the maidens, and to eate and drinke and to be drunken[b]: By and by he concludeth, that they are all naught, and voweth that he will neuer beleeue any of them, for all their ſhewes of holineſſe. Fourthly, for the further cleering of this point, this is alſo to be conſidered, that Miniſters and Preachers doe not thinke themſelues freed from common infirmities, or endued with ſome greater power or larger priuiledge againſt ſin, then others: and therefore euery ſlip is not by and by to be taken hold of (as the manner is) and to be turned to the blemiſhing of a whole profeſſion. He is ſaid to be a man of vpright conuerſation, not who ſlippeth neuer, (for who is he that can vnderſtand his faults[c]? But he who by his ſildome ſlips, and by his not continuing in any one knowne euill, ſheweth himſelfe to be a man that vnfainedly deſireth to haue his carriage ſuch, as becommeth the Goſpell of Chriſt[d]. Laſtly, marke this alſo and you ſhall find it true, thoſe who are euer harping of this ſtring, touching the liues of Preachers, let them be vrged to ſome particulars, you ſhal perceiue, that either their euill ſpeaking is occaſioned by ſuch kind of Miniſters as I before named, or elſe, if they haue any exception againſt any of the better and painful ſort, it is ſuch, which if it be well examined and throughly looked into, will be found rather to ſauour of malice in the ſpeaker, then to argue any great error in the accuſed. I told you I ſhould be long in this point, but now I haue done, vnleſſe you haue ought further to vrge therein.

Tribunall seat of Gods word, to be condemned for lying vanities, and to be no more able to stand before it, then the Philistins Dagon could keepe his shrine, (though no doubt he was fast nailed to it) when the Arke of Iehouah came in place y. y 1 Sam. 5. 4.

Nymph. The next exception is of a larger scope, and fighteth against you with the generall wretchednesse of this last generation. You shall see it in it owne likenesse, that you may the better iudge of it. It commonly runneth thus: In former times when there was lesse preaching, and the Scripture was more geason then now it is, the world (they say) was much better, there was more loue, more hospitality, more truth, more mercy, more good dealing amongst men, then is to be found at this day: so that whereas there is now much lawing, much contention, much oppressing, much cruelty and sinnes of the like nature, all this is laid vpon the backe of preaching: this is the leauen that hath put the whole world out of taste. This is also a piece of Dagons stump. I make no doubt but the Lord hath furnished you with weapons mighty through him to cast downe holds, and euery high thing that is exalted against the knowledge of Christ Iesus z. z 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5

Epaph. I perceiue the diuell much doubteth the ruine of his kingdome: and therefore though preaching amongst men is thought to be but wind a, yet he feeleth his state begin to totter with the power of it, so that he doth stretch his wit, and set his pollicy on work, and spareth for no engines to beat downe that which he shall neuer be able to ouerturne. And that as we haue seen hitherto, so I doubt not but we shall further see it in the examination of particulars. For those elder times (as men call them) first it is to be noted, that it is true indeed, that many of those who liued in them, were in the eies of men very commendable for these morall vertues (as they are termed) of hospitality, of bounty, of humanity of plaine dealing, and the like: the reason was this; Satan let them alone in these things, because he did hold them captiue at his wil in the principal. Though he doth hate these specialities in their owne nature (being an vtter enemy to all goodnes) yet he was content to giue way in those lesser things, so long as he could nuzle them in ignorance of God & of his word, which he wel knew was both hold enough for himselfe, and sufficient enough also to blemish and disgrace all these reputed vertues before God. But now, the light of knowledge being come into the world, and spreading it self further by the more common vse of preaching, Satan secretly perswadeth many, that it is enough for them to haue knowledge, though they neglect practise: and he laboureth also by killing mens care of shewing themselues forward in these duties of ciuility, to lessen the credit of the Gospell, and to haue matter of slander against the knowledge of Gods truth. Secondly, to speake more specially of this last and worst age of the world: if it be well vnderstood, preaching may be said to be the occasion, though not the naturall cause of the extreame wretchednes thereof, according as Paul saith, that sin tooke occasion by the Commandement, and when the commandement came, sinne reuiued, and grew out of measure sinfull b. Now the preaching and publishing of the truth, may be said to be the occasion of much euill in these last times, in two respects: first, because of the fuller discouery of sin: In the daies of former ignorance many of the same grosse sins were, which now are, but either they were smothered in the darknes of the times, or if they were a little descried, yet they were reputed nothing so odious. But all things when they were reproued of the light, became manifest; for it is light that maketh all things manifest c, so that now, sin being seene more, is thought also to bee more: for sin not espied, is in mens iudgements as no sin. So then partly in this respect it may be said that since there was so much preaching, the world hath bin worse, because the holy doctrine which is taught, condemneth many things for sinne, which the blind world esteemed as no sin, and because the liues of those which are conuerted by preaching, doe shew more euidently the monstrous sinnes of a Ierem. 5. 13.

b Rom. 7. 8, 9, 13.

How preaching is the occasion of sin.

thoſe which were giuen ouer to vngodlines. Secondly, the preaching of the word is the occaſion of ſin (as alſo the Law of God is) not in it ſelfe, or in it owne nature; (for it reproueth ſin, and ſetteth it ſelfe againſt all manner of vngodlines) but it is ſo, partly through the corruption of our nature, partly thorow the iuſt iudgement of God: the corruption of our nature is alwaies the more furious, the more it is reſtrained, ſtriuing ſtill to doe that moſt, which is moſt forbidden: euery humour deſireth that moſt, whereby it may be moſt encreaſed. Let a Phiſition forbid a melancholick man ſuch and ſuch meates, he ſhall find himſelfe to haue an appetite to no meat ſo much, as to that which is inhibited. I do verily think other Trees in Paradiſe afforded fruit as pleaſant to the eye, and as good for meat, as the forbidden Tree: but when as Satan had made a little entry, then euen that circumſtance (that it was forbidden) did ſet an edge vpon the womans deſire, and made her more faine to eat of that one, then of any of the reſt which were allowed. Paul ſaith, that the Law is the ſtrength of ſinne [d], both becauſe it increaſeth the guilt of ſinne, and becauſe ſin thereupon becommeth more outragious; according as Ieremy witneſſeth out of his owne experience; I cried out (ſaith he) of wrong, and proclaimed deſolation, therefore the word of the Lord was made a reproach vnto me [e]: It ſeemeth that vpon his preaching, the people grew to greater inſolency. Beſides, there are many points of neceſſity to be taught, which though they be deliuered with neuer ſo great circumſpection, yet the lewdnes of mans heart, not being ouer-ruled by the power of Gods Spirit, will abuſe the ſame. So we ſee, the doctrine of iuſtification by faith only, breedeth negligence in good workes, as appeareth by the caueat of the Apoſtle, What ſhall we ſay then? ſhall we continue ſtill in ſin that grace may abound? God forbid [f]. So the doctrine of our freedome by Chriſt from the curſe of the law, bringeth forth carnall liberty: that made Paul ſo carefull to vſe that reſtraint, Only vſe not your liberty as an occaſion to the fleſh [g]. In like manner this point, that we are inſufficient to keepe the law, and that we cannot ſo much as think a good thought, but as God worketh it in vs: Satan workes by and by vpon a ſuppoſed aduantage, and drawes (as much as he may) to careleſnes thereupon. And therefore the Spirit of God in his great wiſdom, together with the teaching of that point, that it is God which worketh in vs both the will and the deed, coupleth this exhortation, Make an end of your owne ſaluation with feare and trembling [h]. The ſame might be ſhewed by many other points, which yet notwithſtanding is ſo, not in the nature of the doctrine, but in the wretched diſpoſition of mans heart, who abuſeth the comfortable doctrine of the Goſpell, and turneth the grace of our God into wantonnes [i]. Againe as ſin through the corruption of nature taketh occaſion to multiply it ſelfe by the doctrine preached, ſo it falleth out by the iudgement of God, that the contempt of much preaching bringeth forth abundance of iniquity. My word (ſaith God by the Prophet) that goeth out of my mouth, ſhall not returne vnto me voide [k]. And therefore in the ſame place it is compared to the raine [l]; becauſe as the raine maketh the ground, if not more fruitfull, ſurely then more vnprofitable: ſo the word of God, either maketh mens hearts ſofter, and themſelues more fruitful in good works, or elſe harder, and their liues more abominable. And yet is this no fault in the word, for that is vnto God the ſweet ſauour of Chriſt, euen in them which periſh [m]. I haue been longer in this point then I thought: but becauſe it is ſo much ſtood vpon by many, I haue the rather endeauoured to manifeſt the full truth in this behalfe.

Nymph. Truly for mine own particular, I muſt needs confeſſe, that you haue taught me more touching this point, then I haue heretofore obſerued. Indeed I haue many times wondred how it ſhould come to paſſe, that there being now (as I thinke) much more preaching againſt ſin, then hath been in the daies of our fore-fathers, yet there ſhould be that abundance of extreame impiety: but now I ſee the reaſon of it. Firſt, ignorance in Gods word, is the ſupporter of Satans kingdome, and he hauing drowned men in that, gaue way to other things, which being good in their owne nature, and approued of in the eyes of men, yet loſt their grace, being done without knowledge. Secondly, mans corrupt nature, ſpider-like, turneth the wholeſome doctrine into poyſon, and ſtriueth more when it feeleth it ſelfe limited. Thirdly, it is iuſt with God, to giue them vp into vile affections [n], and to lay iniquity vpon their iniquity [o], that they may worke all vncleannes, euen with greedines [p], who receiue not the loue of the truth, that they might be ſaued [q]. This (I thinke) is the ſumme of all which you haue ſpoken touching this.

Epaph. You haue well obſerued it, that is the very ſubſtance of my anſwere to that exception, which I thinke is ſufficient to ſatisfie thoſe whom the truth of God, grounded vpon the Scripture may ſatisfie: I pray you now proceed to the next, if there be any more of this kind.

Nym. There is only to my remembrance one more, and that is taken from the tumults and diuiſions which accompany your doctrine: they ſay, it many times breedeth difference euen among thoſe betwixt whom formerly there was the beſt agreement.

Epaph. My good neighbour, maruell not at this: for as I ſhewed you in the beginning of our conference, that reſiſtance doth alwaies accompany the firſt publiſhing of the truth, ſo alſo doth diuiſion of hearts follow it: and to this end is that ſpeech of Chriſt to his Diſciples, Thinke not that I am come to ſend peace into the earth (that is, ſuch peace as the world dreameth of) I came not to ſend peace, but the ſword [r]. We read, that when Paul exerciſed his miniſtery at Iconium, there was much ado, & the people of the City were diuided, and ſome were with the Iewes, and ſome with the Apoſtles [ſ]. This made him to be accuſed before the ciuill Magiſtrate, for a peſtilent fellow, and a moouer of ſedition [t], according as at this day (factious and humorous) is a common imputation. Now a diuiſion cannot chuſe but follow preaching: for when as among the hearers, ſome mock, ſome cleaue vnto the teachers [u], ſome beleeue, and others beleeue not [w], and men fall to haue great reaſoning among themſelues [x], there cannot but follow a kind of diuiſion and ſiding; ſo that they which in their ignorance accorded together touching religion, are by the working of the word ſundred, and ſome become zealous followers, others malicious oppoſers, labouring to ſtop the paſſage of the Goſpell, and to peruert the ſtrait waies of the Lord [y], and ſome neuters neither cold nor hot [z], but iuſt of deputy Gallio his religion, who cared nothing for thoſe things [a]. The preaching of the word is the Fan in the hand of Chriſt, by which he parteth his wheat from the chaffe [b]; and whereby he maketh way for that great day of ſeparation, in which the beleeuing ſheepe ſhall be ſeperated from the rebellious and vnbeleeuing Goates [c]. Againe, let it not be forgotten, that the word in the right applying of it, is called a light which maketh all things manifeſt [d]. When things lie hid in the darknes, though they all differ each from other in colour, yet they ſeeme all alike; but the light approaching, the variety of colors is ſoon deſcried. So, though men in the duskiſhnes of ignorance are reputed to be knit together in the vnity of affection, yet when the bright beames of Gods word break in among them, the thoughts of many hearts be opened [e], and then you ſhall ſee diuers humours, and variety of diſpoſitions. By theſe things it appeareth, that if it be well vnderſtood, diuiſion and tumult (eſpecially at the beginning and firſt entry of it among an vntaught people) muſt needs follow the ſoundnes of ſetled preaching: though thoſe that are reclaimed and brought to the knowledge of God, are all of one heart and of one ſoule [f], proceeding by one rule, minding one thing [g], and endeauouring to keepe the vnity of the ſpirit in the bond of peace [h].

A diuiſion muſt needs accompany preaching.

of Religion, to carry themselues in an allowable conformity, and not be ouer-forward as many seeme to be, whose zeale they account rash and heady indiscretion.

Epaph. The danger of this kinde of people, is most of all in respect of themselues, because this, to be wise in a mans owne eyes [k], and to feare God, cannot stand together; otherwise, for answering any thing that they are able to obiect, it is a matter of no such great difficulty: For the foolishnes of God is wiser then men [l]: and as waxe melteth before the fire [m], so shall their best framed conceits vanish at the very name and presence of the Scripture.

First then it is demanded,* Why preaching should be the most excellent meanes of spirituall instruction, and wherefore you should take so much vpon you, as that your speaking should be able to saue mens soules: you be but men as others are, and it is but your pride, who because you would be thought some body, doe thus endeauour to extoll the worth and necessity of your profession.

Epaph. Here is indeed a perillous argument, it sauoureth altogether of the sawcinesse of an ignorant and vnhumbled heart. It is come to a proper passe, when as the sonne of man, who dwelleth in a house of clay, whose foundation is in the dust [n], and which is but a worme [o], shall dare to talke so presumptuously, and so to set his mouth against heauen [p], as to aske of God a reason of his doings. It is not enough that the Lord hath made it knowne vnto vs, that his will is by the foolishnesse of preaching to saue those which beleeue [q]? O Man, who art thou which pleadest against God [r]? And yet behold a reason, though this kind of men generally are wiser in their owne conceit, then seuen men that can render a reason [s]; and a man may haue more hope of a foole then of them [t]. Looke what reason there was, why the Lord would haue the walles of Iericho beaten downe, onely with the sound of Rammes hornes, and with a shout [u]: looke also why the Lord would haue no more circumstance obserued in the clensing of leprous Naaman but one: this, Wash and be cleane [x]; the same is the reason why God hath sanctified the Ministery of man to so excellent a worke, as is, the casting downe of the holds of Satan [y], and the gathering together of his Saints [z]. God vsed no engines of warre, no pollicies of men, in the ouerthrow of the walles of Iericho, to the end the people might haue good cause to say: This was the Lords doing, and it is marueilous in our eyes [a]: So likewise, the Prophet vsed so little ceremony about Naaman, that he might see the finger of God in his recouery. The same may bee said of Preaching, the Lord hath sanctified hearing to bee the outward meanes to beget faith: and hath imparted to vs the treasure of his word in earthen vessels [b], to the end that the whole glory our conuersion may bee his, and that Hee that reioyceth in the renewing of his mind, and the reclaiming of his soule, may reioyce in the Lord [c], and acknowledge with humility, the excellency of that power [d]; which by so meane a meanes could bring so mighty things to passe: It is a generall rule, and holdeth in the whole course of our saluation, that Gods power is made perfect (that is, apparant and more conspicuous) through weakenesse [e]. Great is the pride and arrogancy of the heart of man: and if it may find it selfe able though but by a thought, to further and helpe forward it owne saluation, it prides it selfe forth-with, and to it selfe secretly, it more magnifieth that little, which it imagineth to be in it own power, then all that which it receiueth from the Lord. For this cause, and for the preuention of this euill, God in his great wisdome, hath so carried the whole Mystery of Godlinesse [f], from the first foundation of it in Heauen, (his Election according to his foreknowledge [g]) vnto the last perfecting of it, vntill the day of Iesus Christ [h], that when a man shall enter into a deepe consideration of it, and withall marke the order and progresse of his owne conuerſion, he may lay his hand vpon his mouth [i]: and in the truth of his ſoule may ſay: Not vnto thee O Lord, not vnto thee, but vnto thy name giue the glory [k]. This is the ſumme: the reaſon why the Lord hath thought good to commend the hearing of a Preacher, aboue other courſes, for the calling of vs From the power of darkneſſe, into the Kingdome of his deare Sonne [l], is, becauſe it maketh moſt for the ſetting forth of Gods glory, which is the thing chiefely reſpected by him, and for which hee made all things [m], euen to this very end, that all Being of him, and through him, and for him, to him might be glorie for euer [n]. If it were left vpon man, By his owne wiſdome to finde out God in the Wiſdome of God [o], in the pride of his heart, fearing his own diſparagement, he would neuer make choiſe of preaching, (for wee ſee how the world in the wiſdome thereof, doth euen ſcorne it) but hee would either drowne himſelfe in the puddle of ignorance, as the moſt doe, or elſe truſt to his owne induſtrie, as many doe, vpon whom this curſe iuſtly falleth, that they become vaine in their imaginations, and when they profeſſe themſelues wiſe, proone meere fooles [p], thinking they know much, but yet knowing nothing as they ought to know [q]. If this reaſon cannot ſatisfie thoſe, who will needs haue reaſon of Gods ordicance, I know not what will ſatisfie them. Once I am ſure, that as many as haue learned the firſt leſſon of Chriſtianity, to deny [r] themſelues, and to vnderſtand according to ſobriety [ſ], they will yeeld to this truth, and by yeelding, no doubt they ſhall haue comfort. Now whereas wee are thought to take too much vpon vs, ſo often as wee endeauour to make knowne the worth and excellency of our Office, it is a meere ſlander: For I hope wee haue learned to preach not our ſelues, but Chriſt Ieſus [t], and to account our ſelues no more then The Miniſters by whom yee beleeue [u]. Wee confeſſe the increaſe [x], to be the Lords: wee leaue the purifying and opening of the heart [y] onely to God. God forbid that wee ſhould dare (as it were) to encroach vpon the Lords right, ſeeing wee know that he is a iealous God [z], and will not giue his glorie to another [a]. This is our opinion of our ſelues heerein, and if any man bee ſo ſuſpicious, or ſo hardly conceited of vs, that hee will not otherwiſe bee perſwaded, let him remember that Loue thinketh not euill [b]. And yet I muſt needs adde this alſo, that ſo is the Lord pleaſed to bleſſe the labours of painefull Miniſters in his Church, that he vouchſafeth them the name of Gods labourers [c], nay which is more, Workers together with his grace [d], and ſauers of them which heare them [e]: The Lord for the gracing and crediting of the inſtrument, and to preſerue it from contempt, attributeth that to it, which is in his owne onely power to effect. Tell mee now, whether this anſwer doth in your opinion ſilence this grand obiection.

Epaph. It is not wrong done vnto the grace of God, to limit it to thoſe meanes, which God in his wiſdome hath ſet apart, for the conueyance thereof vnto vs. When Paul was in his dangerous Sea-voyage, in the night there ſtood by him the Angel of God, ſaying; Lo, God hath giuen vnto thee all that ſayle with thee [g]: yet notwithſtanding, when as afterwards, The Mariners were about to flye out of the Shippe, and had let downe the Boat into the Sea, purpoſely to make an eſcape, Paul ſaid to the Centurian and Souldiers: Except theſe abide in the Ship, ye cannot be ſafe [h]. Did Paul herein ſtraiten the Almighty power of God, in ſaying, there could bee no ſafty without the ſtaying of thoſe Mariners in the Ship? Was the Lords hand ſhortened, that hee could not deliuer, but by the skill and induſtry of thoſe men? Surely no: but becauſe Paul knew, that God was not pleaſed otherwiſe to giue deliuerance; therefore he ſaid, that vnleſſe the Mariners taried, the company could not be preſerued. The learned doe thus diſtinguiſh of the power of God: It is an abſolute power, by which hee can doe infinite things which hee will not doe: ſo Iohn ſaid of him, that hee was able of the very ſtones to raiſe vp Children vnto Abraham[i]. Againe, It is an actuall or a working power, which hee executeth in the gouerning of the World, and the things therein: Now when wee ſpeake of the power of God in this ſenſe, it may bee truly ſaid, That hee cannot doe, that which hee will not doe. So touching preaching, we may ſay without any reſtraint of Gods power, that except there be preaching, men cannot bee ſaued: not that God is tyed to the voyce of man, and that without it he cannot ſaue; becauſe the Scripture hath reuealed to vs, that theſe things are linked together with an indiſſoluble knot, praying, faith, hearing, preaching, ſending. There is no praying without Faith, there is no Faith but by hearing, there is no hearing to beget Faith, but of a preacher ſent, that is furniſhed with gifts from aboue, for the feeding of the flocke of Chriſt, depending vpon him[k], with knowledge and vnderſtanding[l]. It ſhall bee vrged (as me thought you alſo touched it) that wee ſhall by this, preiudice them who haue either liued or died without preaching, for thoſe who enioy it not now: I anſwer, that it is one thing what God can do where the meanes is wanting, another thing what he will doe where the meanes is ſupplied. When the people of Iſrael were in the wilderneſſe, and were deſtitute of the vſuall helpes of tillage, the Lord gaue them Bread from Heauen to eate[m]: but as ſoone as they came into the promiſed Land, the Man ceaſed, neither had the Children of Iſrael Man any more[n]. Euery man was then to fall to his worke, and not to hope by thoſe extraordinary meanes to bee relieued. To ſtrengthen the Faith of Hezekiah, the Lord ſaid to him, Thou ſhalt eate this yeere ſuch as groweth of it ſelfe, and the ſecond yeere ſuch things as grow without ſowing, but in the third yeere, ſow yee, and reape, and plant[o], &c. He that (thoſe two yeeres being expired) had truſted to the former courſes, neglecting husbandry, out of all doubt he might haue bin ſtarued: and yet before, he that had called Gods power to furniſh them with food without ſowing, into queſtion, had been worthy to be puniſhed. In the beginning of the worlds Creation, God for the manifeſting of his own power and glory made light to be, and the earth to bud forth, before the Sun (which to vs is the fountain of light, and the cheriſher of the vitall heat which is in all things) was created[p]: yet now, God hauing eſtabliſhed an orderly courſe, we cannot hope either of light in the ayre, or of life among the creatures vpon the earth, without the Sunne. I doe apply all theſe things thus: the want of the meanes of publike preaching in former ages, could not bee any hinderance vnto God in ſauing thoſe Which he knew before[q], and who were ordained vnto eternall life[r]: And I am out of doubt of it, that in the daies of Popery in this Land, when The Key of knowledge was vtterly taken away[s]: and The law periſhed from the Prieſt, counſell from the wiſe, and the Word from the Prophet[t], ſo that if a man did wander from Sea to Sea, and did runne to and fro, from the North euen vnto the Eaſt, to ſeeke the Word of the Lord, yet he could not finde it[u], I ſay, I am cleere in it, that many then in that darknes, did (as the prouerbe is) See day at a very little hole, and very ſtrangely came to the knowledge of the truth, ſome by the ſight of ſome parcels of Scripture, ſome by the writings of good men, ſome by conference with others, though the ſame were both very ſeldome and very ſecret, ſome by knowing little more then the Lords prayer in engliſh, and yet had they that aſſurance of the truth of it, and felt that comfort, and receiued that ſweetnes by it (as the hiſtories of the Church make mention) they were contented to ſacrifice their liues, and to ſpend their beſt blood to bear witnes to it; which the Lord did that it might appeare to all enſuing ages, that he reſerued a ſmal remnãt[x], euen as the ſhep- ſkepheard taketh out of the mouth of the Lion two legges, or a piece of an eare [y], then when as the Daughter of Sion was become as Sodome, and not much vnlike vnto Gomorrah; and withall, that at the day of Chriſts appearing, when hee ſhall conſume that man of ſin [z], he may haue witneſſes againſt him out of all ages, both of the deceiueablenes of his ſuperſtitious doctrin, and of the cruelty of his tyrannous and bloody proceedings. That which I ſay touching the times of the Egyptian darkeneſſe of Popery, may be ſaid alſo of many parts of the Realme, which notwithſtanding the long flouriſhing of the Goſpell in this Land, yet (I know not through whoſe default) neuer enioyed the benefit and comfort of ſetled preaching: for though for the moſt part it be true, that where the Lord hath much people, there hee is not wanting to ſend ſome, who may continue with them, and teach the word of God among them [a], yer as he ſometimes vouchſafeth a preacher to impudent and ſtiffe-necked children, who will not heare, to that end, that in the day of vengeance, they may know there hath been a Prophet among them [b]: ſo alſo it pleaſeth him by ſecret and hidden, yea, and very vnlikely courſes, to affoord vnto ſome hearts the bleſſing of inward conuerſion, vpon whom he hath not beſtowed the benefit of outward inſtruction by a Preacher. But what then? Yet this remaineth certen, that as when the good meanes is wanting, and cannot by any way bee procured, the power and mercy of God muſt not bee diſtruſted: ſo when the meanes is beſtowed, his bounty cannot without great ſinne bee deſpiſed. It is herein, as it is in the caſe of the Sacraments: It is not ſimply the want of them (when a man cannot, though faine he would become partaker of them) but the contempt which is damnable. As for example, if a Father vnneceſſarily defeere the Baptiſme of his Child longer then the time appoinred by the order of the Church, it is a ſinne in him, if the Child dye without Baptiſme: So likewiſe for a man vſually to turne his backe from the adminiſtration of the Lords Supper, making no reckoning of the comfort offered therein, it is doubtleſſe a fault, which God will not let goe away vnpuniſhed. The ſame may be ſaid of the word Preached, if a man be depriued of it through a kind of vnauoidable neceſſity, ſimply there is no preiudice to his ſaluation thereby, if ſo be theſe things be ioyned with it: firſt that in this ſtrait, the ſoule doe pant [c], after that great benefit of which it is depriued: Secondly, that a man doe both deſire and require that one thing of the Lord, euen to beholde the beauty of the Lord [d], namely, the light of the glorious Goſpell of Chriſt, which is the Image of God [e]: Thirdly, that hee be carefull to vſe all ſuch helpes of reading the Scripture, and of other godly Treatiſes, and of conference with men of knowledge, as may poſſibly bee procured. But if ſo be a man may by any meanes enioy the benefit and comfort of Preaching, though it bee with ſome both charge and trauell: if then hee careleſly neglect it, and truſt to other meanes, no doubt the Lord will curſe thoſe meanes vnto him, which for all that in their owne nature are good, and might profit, if they were not vſed with contempt of the principall. This is my iudgement touching this ſuppoſall, that by preſſing the worth of preaching, we doe confine as it were Gods grace, and tye it to our tongues, and doe cut them ſhort of all hope of ſaluation, which by any occaſion haue liued or doe liue without it.

Nymph. Well ſir, this kind of men for all this is not ſatisfied, but being beaten by argument and Scripture from one fond conceit, they forthwith runne to another, and ſeeke not ſo much how to make a direct reply, as to heape vp diuerſity of obiections. And therefore when they haue ſaid all they can, for the preſſing of thoſe particulars, the vanity whereof you haue laid open to the full; then (hoping to obtaine that which multitude of words, which with waight of reaſon they cannot) they will needs know a reaſon; Why there may not be as much good gotten by their owne priuate reading in the Bookes of the Scripture, and in other good Sermons and Treatiſes which are ſet forth, as by hearing a Preacher in the Church.

Epaph.

Epaph. Touching priuate reading of the Scripture, I am ſo farre from diſliking it in any way, that with that learned Chryſoſtome I doe alwayes exhort, and will not faile in ſtirring vp the people, That they ſhould not onely diligentlie attend to matters ſpoken publikely, but endeauour themſelues alſo to reade and peruſe the Scriptures priuately. God forbid, I or any other of my profeſſion, ſhould maintaine that Popiſh Maxime; That the common vſe of the Scriptures is the cauſe of all Hereſies; and not rather the contrary taught by Chriſt[f], and ſeconded by the learned in Gods Church, namely, That the cauſe of all euill, whether it bee errour in iudgement, or corruption in manners, is the ignorance of the Scripture. Wee might well reioyce in the happineſſe of our times, if we might be occaſioned by our peoples experience in the Booke of God, to ſay as one ſaid of old: You may (ſaith hee) ſee commonly our opinions and rules of Religion, to bee held and maintained, not onely by the Maſters of the Church, and Teachers of the people, but euen by Smiths and Shoomakers, and Husbandmen, and Hedgers, and Heard-men, yea, and by Women and Seamſters: The comfort which we ſhall take herein, ſhould make vs a little to eſteeme the ſcoffes of Iſmaelitiſh Papiſts, who obiect it to vs as a matter of diſgrace, That we haue profaned the Scripture by making it common to Artificers and Women.

Now that which I ſay of the priuate reading of the Scripture, I ſay alſo of the peruſing of godly Treatiſes, and Sermons, and the like. I wiſh mens care in this kinde encreaſed, and I know that thereby there commeth much comfort vnto Gods people. But yet I dare not aſcribe that to priuate exerciſes, which by the doctrine of the Scripture belongeth to the publike Miniſtery, namely the begetting of Faith[g], and the gathering together of the Saints[h] of God into his Church. I finde in the holy Hiſtory, the teaching by the Miniſter of man to bee preferred before thoſe things, to which I ſuppoſe no man will dare to equall his owne priuate induſtry. When Chriſt called Paul from Heauen, and Paul demanded, Lord what wilt thou that I doe[i]? A man in reaſon would haue thought, that there could haue been no more excellent meanes for Pauls inſtruction, then if Chriſt ſhould haue diſcourſed to him with his owne mouth; yet to maintaine the credit of Gods ordinance, and to make knowne the bleſſing that followeth it, Paul is commanded to depend vpon the Miniſtery and direction of Ananias. Not much vnlike is that example of Cornelius[k]: it pleaſed God to ſend an Angell vnto him, to teſtifie vnto him the remembrance of his almes and prayers with the Lord: Why then did not the ſame Angell proceede to inſtruct him in the myſtery of Chriſt? What credit would the words of ſo glorious a Creature haue carried? (ſaith fleſh and blood:) And yet the Lord in his wiſedome thought it the moſt fitting courſe to put ouer Cornelius to the Miniſtery of Peter, (Send men to Ioppa and call for Simon, hee ſhall tell thee what thou oughteſt to doe[l]: to the end that it might appeare, that it pleaſeth him to vſe mans voyce as his inſtrument, and to tye our Faith vnto it. Shall any man dare to put his owne priuate courſes of reading, into the ballance with publike preaching, when as it hath ſeemed good to the wiſedome of God to prefer it (in regard of mans vſe) before the immediate teaching of Chriſt, or the inſtruction of an Angell? Chriſt a little before his death, among other things whereby he endeauoured to comfort the hearts of his Diſciples, deliuered to them this promiſe, Verily, verily, I ſay vnto you, he that beleeueth in mee, the workes that I doe he ſhall doe alſo, and greater then theſe ſhall he doe[m]. It was a promiſe made vnto the whole Church, neither peculiar to the Apoſtles, nor common to euery Chriſtian. If any man demand what bee theſe greater workes, which ſhall bee done by men, which Chriſt did not: I confeſſe with the learned, that it was in part verified in the miracles of the Apoſtles; as namely in that of Peter, who cured the diſeaſed with his ſhadow[n], which may be thought greater then that of Chriſt, who healed with the touch of his garment: yet thereby was chiefly meant the conuerſion of the world by the preaching of the Goſpell, to which it pleaſed our Sauiour to depute his Apoſtles and their Succeſſors: a worke indeed farre greater then any of thoſe miracles which he wrought here vpon earth by his owne immediate power. His worke it is, I confeſſe, the conuerſion of ſinners, (for neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth p;) yet he thought it moſt agreeing to mans infirmity and weakeneſſe, and the beſt meanes both for the furtherance of his owne glory, and the tryall of our obedience, to put men in the ſeruice of his Church that they may pray the people, In Chriſts ſtead to be reconciled vnto God q. Who then can without great preſumption, and no leſſe contempt of Gods Maieſty, relie vpon any other meanes for his ſpiritual edification, when as the Lord hath thought it meeter to put his words in the mouth of a man r, and to be with it ſ, then to ſpeake from heauen by an immediate voice, or to employ thoſe miniſtring Spirits in that ſeruice, which notwithſtanding, Are ſent forth for their ſakes which ſhall be heires of ſaluation t? Great is the benefit of priuate reading, eſpecially of the Bookes of holy Scripture; but yet, as giuing attendance to reading, in a Miniſter u, is to make him the better able to diſcharge his publike duty, in exhortation and Doctrine: So the chiefe end of priuate ſearching the Scripture by priuate men, is in reſpect of the publike Miniſtery, that before hand they may be prepared to it, and afterwards may the better know how to profit by it. For the former of theſe two (namely preparation by reading to the publike hearing,) it is a fit ſaying of Chryſoſtome: Wee doe (ſaith hee) oftentimes tell you before hand, the Text whereof our purpoſe is to entreate, that in the meane while you (taking your Booke, and weighing the ſumme and ſtate of the place) may make your mindes fitter to receiue thoſe points which ſhall afterward bee deliuered. As indeed the ignorance of the people in the language of the Scripture, and the generall courſe and ſtory of the Bible, maketh preaching to be much leſſe profitable vnto them. Now for the latter, to wit, the vſe of priuate reading for profit after hearing, wee haue that memorable example of thoſe worthy Gentlemen of Berea, who hearing the Apoſtles preach, and receiuing the Word with all readineſſe, ſearched the Scriptures daily, whether thoſe things were ſo x.

Epaph. If we preach vnto you any other doctrine then that which the Scripture will allow, we are worthy of Pauls curſe y; Wee know and confeſſe the Bible to bee the moſt exact rule, and ſquare, and canon, by which all our Sermons muſt be tried: wee acknowledge alſo, that holy men which haue written touching matters of religion, and haue publiſhed their well laboured, and zealouſly deliuered Sermons, haue (many of them) ſet downe the truth of God ſoundly, and bin the meanes of much comfort to well-affected people: but yet, though the doctrine be the ſame in ſubſtance, that is read priuately, and which is publikely deliuered, yet the like fruit cannot follow vpon both. at the other, continue ſweet, but onely this: God ſhewed his power in preſeruing it at the one time, becauſe it was his own ordinance for the better ſanctifying the Sabbath, and he ſhewed his iuſtice in rotting it at the other time, becauſe he had forbidden it, to teach them to depend vpon his prouidence. You will aske me, why ſhould the knowledge of the former, rot (as it were) and putrifie and become nothing worth, he being a man of good capacity and vnderſtanding, and reading none but ſound Authors: and the other, thriue in knowledge and in the power of godlineſſe, that yet for all that, learneth no other doctrine then the former findeth in his good Bookes at home? I might haply, but verily for mine own part, I will ſeeke no other anſwer but this: God hath promiſed to bleſſe the latter courſe, ſaying; If thou cauſe thy eares to hearken vnto wiſdome, and incline thine heart to vnderſtanding: then thou ſhalt vnderſtand the feare of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God[d]. But for the other, becauſe it is a courſe of mans owne deuiſing, ſauouring of inward prid, therfore the Lord turneth it (as he doth all humane wiſdome) into fooliſhneſſe[e]: So that the knowledge ſo gotten (I meane by another by-way, and not by that old trodden path of hearing) either becommeth as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, vaine iangling[f], or elſe if it be ſound, in regard of the apprehenſion of truth, yet it ſwimmeth onely in the braine, and neuer worketh to the renewing and ſeaſoning of the heart.

Nymph. There is yet one thing more touching this conceit which men haue, to gaine more by their owne priuate courſes then by the publike Miniſtry, and that is thus: men that write, write with great deliberation and aduice; as for you when you preach, you ſpeake many times at aduenture, and nothing ſo iudicially as doe theſe who commit things to writing. Beſides that, many of you are but Nouices and yong Schollers, whom S. Paul ſeemeth not ſo well to approue of[g]. And for theſe cauſes, as they muſt needs be iealous of your iudgement in many things, ſo neither can they receiue that profit by your preaching as they may by priuate reading.

Epaph. Alaſſe a poore excuſe: it is true, if men write as they ought, they write with iudgement and heedfulnes: and ſo doe they alſo preach with good aduice, who haue learned to feare him, that hath ſaid; Curſed be he which doth the worke of the Lord negligently[h]. I will not goe about to patronize the negligence and careleſneſſe of any man: I wiſh wee ſhould all ſtudy to ſhew our ſelues approued vnto God, Workemen that need not to be aſhamed, dividing the word of God aright[i], that ſo, when the fire ſhall trie euery mans worke of what ſort it is, ours may abide[k]. Yet this I will ſay, that if you compare like with like, that is, ſound Writers with ſound Preachers, you ſhall finde the Sermons of the one, framed with as good iudgement, as the Booke and Writings of the other. And if that be commendation (as I ſee no reaſon but it ſhould) for a mans labours to ſmell of the Candle, doe doubt you ſhall perceiue euen the ordinary exerciſes of painfull and conſcionable Preachers, to ſauour of as much art and induſtry, as the Treatiſes of your moſt iudicious and graueſt Writers. Neuertheleſſe, becauſe as the Scripture ſaith, In many things wee ſlippe all[l], both Preachers and Writers, both Readers of Bookes, and Hearers of Sermons, therefore there is a neceſſity of care and iudgement, in thoſe that ſeeke to reape benefit by other mens labours, that like Bees, they may ſucke out the beſt and ſweeteſt, and moſt wholeſome doctrine from them both. many Miniſters, which men (as you ſay) pleade, and ſeeme alſo to ground their conceit vpon the Scripture. I anſwer: firſt, that it is greatly to be lamented to ſee the ouerforwardneſſe of many young men, who not conſidering the weight of that holy calling, doe ſuddenly thruſt themſelues into it, and vndertake (as the ſaying is) to teach others before they themſelues are well inſtructed; ſo that I doe verily thinke, there are not at this day more nouices and punies of any profeſſion then there are of the Miniſtery. And for the preuenting of this euill, were thoſe decrees of the ancient Councels, which ſet downe a certaine age, before which a man was not to be admitted to the office of a Miniſter, or Biſhop in the Church. Secondly, I adde this withall, that the graces of God are not to bee limited to any age. It was a good diſtinction of the Heathen men, betwixt a young man in yeeres, and a young man in conditions: It is meete that young men ſhould ſay with Elihu, The dayes ſhall ſpeake, and the multitude of yeeres ſhall teach wiſedome [m]. And yet it muſt be remembred which is alſo there noted, that it is the inſpiration of the Almighty which giueth vnderſtanding, and that the aged doe not alway vnderſtand iudgement [n]. Young Dauid by the ſtudy of Gods word, may come to vnderſtanding more then the ancient [o]. Paul biddeth Timothy that no man ſhould deſpiſe his youth [p]. If wee ſhall diſtinguiſh the age of man, according as ſome Philoſophers did, then Timothy could not bee aboue fiue and twenty when Paul ſo wrote vnto him. Touching the place it ſelfe (that a Biſhop muſt not be a young ſcholler) it muſt not be vnderſtood of a young man in yeers, but of one lately conuerted to the Chriſtian faith, and newly planted in the Church. Timothy liued in Aſia, and therefore was neceſſarily to furniſh the Church out of Gentiliſme: for this cauſe Paul aduiſeth him to make choice of ſuch as were ſetled in the doctrine of Chriſtianity, and not to aduance men to the dignity of a Biſhop by and by after their conuerſion. So that howſoeuer I confeſſe, that maturity of yeeres is to bee reſpected in a Miniſter, becauſe in the ordinary courſe it is accompanied with ripeneſſe of iudgements, yet neither doth that place of the Apoſtle preſcribe a law for the debarring of young men from the miniſtery, neither doth any place of Scripture diſable that age, or make it vncapable of the miniſtery, ſo that it be graced with gifts ſufficient for ſo excellent a function. And this I thinke may bee anſwer full enough to this obiection.

Nymphas. What exception theſe wiſe men will make againſt this your anſwere, I know not; you haue reſolued me to the full: and concerning young Miniſters, I heard once an acquaintance of mine, who was brought vp in the Vniuerſity, ſay, that he knew many ſchollers in his time, that when they were young and freſh, were of very great hope, and were alſo very zealous, and had a good gift in preaching, who notwithſtanding in time grew cold, and leſſe able for gifts, both of iudgement and zeale, and vtterance to doe good in Gods Church: but theſe points I will not meddle with; onely your diſcourſe brought that into my mind which I heard a friend of mine ſay a good while ſince. I muſt craue your iudgement yet a little further, touching theſe men; beſides all theſe pretended reaſons, they ſtand much vpon two things, which fleſh and bloud doth well approue of: one is, that few of the great men of the World doe eſteeme preaching; the other is, that it is not wiſdome for a man in matters of Religion to be too forward. What ſay you to this?

Epaphras. I ſay, it is a hard matter for thoſe men to come to amendment out of the ſnare of the Diuell, which are taken of him at his will [q]: and wee had need to begge of that God, who commandeth the light to ſhine out of darkeneſſe, that hee would ſhine in our hearts, to giue the light of his knowledge [r]: for if a man bee once entangled in errour, Sathan hath ſo many deuices to hold him in, that it is a hard matter for him to get from him: yet if men haue any grace, or will yeeld yeeld to any reaſon, that they may ſoone ſee the vanity of theſe perſwaſions, as I will briefly declare vnto you. In the former there are two things to bee noted: firſt, that if the practiſe of men were a ſufficient rule in matters of Religion, there are (thankes be to God) many honourable perſonages, many Nobles, many Gentlemen, many of good note for worldly reſpects, who doe vnfainedly reuerence, and heartily imbrace the preaching of Gods word, and no doubt it is vnto them the ioy and reioycing of their heart [f], and they eſteeme of it to bee euen as it is, The power of God vnto ſaluation [t]. So that if the approbation of men were a reaſon of force, it is not wanting vnto preaching: but as God hath a people out of all, ſo that alſo hath friends and fauourers amongſt all. Secondly, ſuppoſe that this courſe of preaching were vtterly deſpiſed, and all the great wiſe men of the world did euen ſcorne it, and tread it vnder their feete, yet this were a poore argument, vnleſſe we will ſay, it was a good reaſon which they vſed againſt Chriſt, Doth any of the Rulers or of the Phariſees beleeue in him [u]? The beſt things haue not commonly the moſt voices, and many times according to the prouerbe, The greater part is too hard for the better part. There was a voyce put vp for making a golden calfe, and there was not one againſt it [x]. There was a voyce, what ſhould be done with Ieſus, And all cried, Crucifie him [y]. Another was, whether God ſhould be God, or Baal ſhould be god: and none held with God but Eliah [z]: S. Auguſtine ſaith, that the Church was ſometimes in one Abel, and in one Enoch: God forbid we ſhould be in the number of thoſe, who define the Church by the multitude, we are content to leaue that abſurdity to the Papiſts: we know that Chriſts flocke is a little flocke [a]; and we muſt endeauour to grow to that reſolution, to ſay, Lord, though that all men ſhould be offended by thee, yet will I neuer be offended [b]. Now for that other perſwaſion, that it is not good to bee too eager in matters of Religion, I know it to be the common perſwaſion of a great many: but yet this is a ſure rule, that that man who thinketh himſelfe to haue knowledge, and zeale, and religion enough, the ſame hath no knowledge, no zeale, no religion at all. For whereſoeuer the graces of God are in truth, there is (in regard of the ſweetneſſe which a man findeth in them) a forgetting that which is behind, and an endeauouring a mans ſelfe to that which is before [c], grieuing more for that which is yet wanting, then reioycing in that which already is attained. In the parable of the Talents, it is ſaid, that from him that hath not, euen that he hath ſhall be taken away [d]; but in another of the Goſpels it is ſaid, From him ſhall be taken euen that which it ſeemeth that he hath [e]. So that it is but a conceit and opinion of grace, where there is no deſire to increaſe in grace. It is a good ſaying; When a man is come to that paſſe that he hath no deſire to be better, then he quite leaueth off to be good. And therefore men doe but deceiue themſelues, in neglecting the benefit of preaching, vpon a conceit, that it is beſt to keep a temper in matters of religion, and to content themſelues with a certaine portion of knowledge, and with a ſet meaſure of zeale, and neuer to proceed further; for we muſt deſire the ſincere milke of the Word, that we may grow thereby [f], And indeed if ſo be that we haue taſted how bountifull the Lord is [g], we ſhall neuer be able to ſatisfie our ſelues, either in the labouring after knowledge in religion, or in the zealous profeſſion and practiſe of religion.

Nymph. Now that you ſpeake of being too forward and preciſe in matters of Religion, it putteth me in mind of a ſaying of Salomons, which I well vnderſtand not; Bee not thou (ſaith he) iuſt ouermuch [h]. It may ſeeme to agree with their opinion, which would not haue men to be too ſtraite, as they call it.

Epaph. It is a good rule of the learned, that for the finding out the true meaning of a place of Scripture, we muſt conſider what goeth before, and what followeth; this rule obſerued will ſoone cleare this place. In the verſe going before Salomon had ſpoken

Now to expreſſe the raſh headineſſe of mans diſpoſition, which is ready to cenſure Gods courſes at pleaſure, the Wiſe man addeth this, Bee not thou iuſt ouermuch: that is, Beware thou take not vpon thee, vnder pretence of Iuſtice, to charge theſe courſes of Gods prouidence with iniuſtice. It was an errour wee know, that Dauid by his owne confeſſion had wel-neere fallen into [k]. u Iob 32. 22.

The Exceptions of ſome ſeeming learned.

Epaph. Your Methode is good enough: But doe you know any profeſſing the Miniſtery, which doe vtterly miſlike and diſallow preaching.

Nymphas. I doe not ſay ſo: for they who are the moſt eager in this matter, if you fall to reaſoning with them, cannot for ſhame but ſay, That preaching is the moſt ordinary, and vſuall meanes which God vſeth to worke by in the hearts of the hearers: and againe, That preaching doth profit more then reading. And yet for all that in their ordinary diſcourſe they make knowne their opinion thus, That the Word of God is as effectuall when it is read, as when it is preached, and that reading is Preaching.

Epaph. Certainly I cannot but maruaile, that men of learning and profeſſed Diuines, ſhould vndertake the maintenance of ſuch an opinion, yea though it were but for their credits ſake: for put this caſe, that in the vacancy of an Eccleſiaſticall preferment, there were ioynt ſuters for it, a man of note and quality, that hath ſpent many yeeres in ſtudy, and run through the whole circle of ſciences, and is graced alſo with degrees of Schooles, (the teſtimony of his deſert:) and another, an ordinary fellow, that hath had but reaſonable breeding, and no ſeaſoning but in a country ſchoole, and therefore is able to doe little (perhaps) ſaue onely, reade faire, and go by his Rubricke: thinke you that your Vniuerſity Scholler would not thinke himſelfe greatly wronged, and grow into a maruellous diſcontentment if that other ſhould be preferred before him? yes doubtleſſe: he would renew that old complaint of Salomons, and ſay, Folly is ſet in great excellency, I haue ſeen ſeruants on horſes, and Princes walking as ſeruants on the ground[x]. He would ſay, it were enough for ſuch a one as he, if he were appointed to ſome lower office in the Church, where he might eate a morſell of bread[y]: and that if he were ſo well prouided for, as was Michah his Leuite, with ten ſhekels of ſiluer by the yeer, and a ſute of apparell, and his meat and drink[z], ſurely, then he were as well preferred as he deſerued. Like to theſe, would bee the priuy thoughts of a well-deſeruing Scholler, being diſappointed of his hoped preferment, by ſo vnworthy a competitor. And for mine owne part, I thinke him to haue very iuſt cauſe ſo to complaine. But yet this being held for a truth, that reading is as effectuall as preaching, and that an ordinary man may doe as much good, ſaue as many ſoules, draw as great a multitude to Heauen with his diſtinct reading, as the other with all his Vniuerſity learning and long laboured for Diuinity, ſurely then the Scholler hath no reaſon to thinke himſelfe wronged in miſſing his preferment: for why ſhould there be a diſparity in reward, where there is no great precedence in reſpect of the poſſibility to doe good in Gods Church? So that I ſay, me thinkes if it were for no other cauſe, yet men of learning and Preachers by profeſſion, ſhould neuer goe about to equall bare and naked reading vnto preaching.

x Eccl. 10.6,7.
z Iud. 17.10.

Nymph. This may (perhaps) be ſome reaſon in policy: but I hope you haue ſome better proofe then this for the matter: otherwiſe I know what the world will ſay, (euen that which it ſpareth not to ſpeake already) that you Preachers are ſo earneſt in the extolling of preaching onely for your owne priuate credits ſake, that you may bee the better eſteemed.

Epaph. God bethanked, variety of ſufficient proofes is not wanting in this cauſe; but yet this I thought good to obſerue, as it were by the way, to the end that men (who it may bee haue a good opinion of their owne well-deſeruing) may ſee what an inconuenience is like to follow by the defence of ſuch an opinion.

Nymph. I am very deſirous to heare what may be ſaid in this caſe touching the compariſon that is made betwixt reading and preaching, and therefore I doe euen long till you come vnto it.

Epaphras. Well then (to cut off all preambles and vnneceſſarie circumſtances,) for this point touching the efficacie of preaching aboue reading, I will ſtand vpon two reaſons chiefly: the one is experience, the other is Gods ordinance, who hath appointed the ability to preach, as a matter of ne-

ceſſity in every one that is called to the Miniſtery.

Experience is ſometimes called the miſtriſſe of fooles, but by it in this point wiſe men may learne a good leſſon: firſt of all, if there be a view taken of all the places and Pariſhes where there hath been onely reading, and of thoſe which haue been furniſhed with a ſetled preaching Miniſter, whoſe care hath been to deuide the word of truth aright [a], the different eſtate of the places will ſoone make knowne the worth of preaching aboue reading: for looke into thoſe who haue euer reſted themſelues ſatisfied with a reading Miniſter, neither ſeeking nor caring for better meanes of inſtruction, and you ſhall finde them generally to bee wofully ignorant, lamentably blind in the matters of God, altogether children in vnderſtanding [b], popiſh, ſuperſtitious, heatheniſh, in one word (to ſpeake with the Apoſtle) Walking in the vanity of their minde, hauing their cogitations darkned, and being ſtrangers from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in them, becauſe of the hardneſſe of their hearts [c]. This is the generall condition of ſuch perſons. But looke againe to thoſe, who haue been taught in the word [d], and haue made conſcience to profit by the good meanes wherewith God hath bleſſed them, there ſhall you ſee the Seale [e] of the Miniſtery, euen the conuerſion of ſoules, comfortable knowledge and conſcionable carriage, the Lords Sabbath ſanctified, his word accounted precious, the Sacraments reuerently vſed, priuate families trained vp in the inſtruction and information of the Lord [f], and euen a very Church in every houſe [g]. I know indeed that there are many good people dwelling in pariſhes wanting preaching, and many ignorant and vngodly ones in places well furniſhed with teaching. For God ſometimes cauſeth his word to bee ſpoken to thoſe which will not heare, neither indeed will ceaſe [h]: But yet let theſe circumſtances noted by mee bee remembred, of reſting well enough ſatisfied with bare reading, and of reioycing in the benefit of an able preacher, and then it will bee found true which I haue ſaid, and be a ſufficient teſtimony of the power of preaching aboue reading. Secondly, whereas the Scripture is a witnes of the bad opinion which the world will haue of the miniſtery of the word, aſſuring them that are called to that office, that the faithfull diſcharge of their duty ſhall be rewarded with affliction [i], with hatred [k], with all manner of euill ſayings [l]; let any man examine his owne obſeruation, and ſee in which of the two the Reader or the Preacher, this is beſt verified. It is an old ſaying, That by the marketh folkes you ſhall vnderſtand how the market goeth. Take mee therefore a common man whom you meete by chance, and queſtion with him touching the place where he dwelleth, and about his Miniſter; if he be but a Reader, you ſhall haue him ſay ſtrait, Truly wee haue a good honeſt quiet man, mary indeed he cannot Preach, but he liueth peaceably, and medleth with no man, and is very wel-beloued amongſt vs: for why, he is a fellow-like man, &c. But put caſe the Miniſter be a painefull preacher, one that ſeeketh to draw the people from their godles and ſuperſtitious courſes, to the knowledge of God, then you ſhall heare him in another tune; he will ſay then, There we haue a man, ſome ſay hee is learned, but ſure I am hee hath troubled vs all, a good many of vs wiſh hee had neuer come amongſt vs, wee were all quiet before, but now all is out of frame; there is ſuch reproouing and finding of fault, and bringing vp of new faſhions and orders, that we know not what to doe, ſome of the beſt of our pariſh will doe what they can to remoue him: theſe and the like are the thoughts and ſpeeches of no ſmall many, and the ſame no fooles in the eies of the world, who doe indeed iuſtifie preaching by condemning it [m], and ſhew it to be the power of God by reſiſting it. Thirdly, for one other ſpecialty drawne from experience: I will appeale vnto mens conſciences, whether they be ſuch as feare God or otherwiſe. They which feare God, and tremble at his words [n], and doe in humility deſire to know the Lords ſecret [o], cannot but acknowledge, that they doe much more increaſe both in the know-

And no maruell, for indeed it cannot be, that a briefe clauſe of holy Scripture, wherein, in a ſhort tenour of words (ſuch is the riches of the ſacred text) many particulars are compriſed, being onely read, ſhould profit ſo much, as if by preaching it were expounded, and according to occaſions, applyed vnto Gods people: If a man (ſaith the heathen Orator) come into a wardrope, where many rich garments are folded vp together in a narrow roome, it cannot ſo ſatisfie him, as if the ſame might ſeuerally be laid forth to his view, time being granted to take notice of euery particular: becauſe being lapped vp, hee cannot ſee the whole beauty, and being together, hee is not able to obſerue euery ſpecialty: euen ſo it fareth with the Scriptures: if a man heare them read, it cannot but draw him to admire the maieſty and riches of them, and it will caſt ſome glimmering light vpon the vnderſtanding: but when hee heareth them laid open by preaching, it will much more aſtoniſh him, it will euen rauiſh him as it were, caſting a cleerer light vpon his iudgement, and working more mightily vpon his affections. This truth, all which truly feare God, are able to iuſtifie out of their owne experience. Now for others, I know they alſo muſt yeeld to this, that they finde, the word being vrged and preſſed by preaching, to be farre more powerfull, more piercing, more maieſticall, more awaking the conſcience, more entring through, euen vnto the diuiding aſunder of the ſoule and the ſpirit, more diſcerning the thoughts and the intents of the heart r: and this is my firſt reaſon fetched from experience, againſt which there can bee no diſputing: for it is in vaine to goe about to perſwade a man, that that thing is not ſo, which he by obſeruation hath ſtill found to be ſo.

I can tell you, it is commonly ſaid, that you and others ſuch as you are, doe miſlike the reading of the Scriptures.*

Epaph. God forbid that I or any man ſhould hold ſo groſſe an errour, as to contemne a courſe of that antiquity: Moſes was read in the Synagogue euery Sabbath day s: and there was the Lecture of the Law and Prophets t. And our Sauiour Chriſt comming into the Synagogue on the Sabbath day, ſtood vp to reade u. And for mine owne part, I agree to the opinion of a learned man of our later times, that reading of the holy Scripture in the congregation is good, to that end, that the phraſe and manner of ſpeaking of the Scripture, and the Scripture it ſelfe might be more knowne and more familiar to the people: and I confeſſe alſo with him, that by that meanes the iudgement of the people is confirmed in all points of religion, ſo that thereby they are made able to iudge of the interpretation of the Scriptures, and of the doctrine taught them by their owne teachers or others: all this I willingly acknowledge. And howſoeuer men are diſpoſed to interpret it, yet that which is ſpoken in the praiſe of preaching, tends rather to the countenancing, then to the diſgrace of reading: for he who obſerueth it ſhal find, that none in priuate examine the Scripture more carefully, none in publike heare it read more reſpectiuely, then thoſe whom preaching hath taught to ſee the excellency of Gods word, and the worth of the Scripture.

ſ Acts 15.21. t Acts 13.15. ἀναγνώσις. u Luke 4.16. Bucer vpon Eph. cap. 4. The vſe of reading the Scripture in the Church.

Nymph. You haue done very well to make knowne your iudgement touching the reading of the Scripture; for the conceit, that you thinke baſely of the word read, is a great preiudice to you in many places, and in many mens opinions. If it pleaſe you, come now I pray you to your ſecond reaſon.

Epaph.

Epaph. The second reason which I haue for the maintaining the efficacy of preaching aboue reading, is grounded vpon the ability to preach, which the Lord requireth in euery Minister. For this being taken for granted, that the Lord would both in the riches of his loue, and the depth of his wisedome, set downe that course which should be most for the behoofe of his Church: it must needs follow, that if he haue not thought it sufficient for a Minister to be able to read, but to performe some further duty of instructing, then surely there is something more in preaching then in reading, and more profit like to follow by opening the text, then by bare propounding it.

Nymph. Your reason is good, if you be able to proue it: for it seemeth to some a hard doctrine, to say, that God requireth euery Minister in the Church to be able to preach, and therefore I wish you may be able to make it good.

Epaph. How hard soeuer and incredible it may seeme to some, yet I doubt not but to proue it, especially if wee bee content to stand to the iudgement of the Scripture, and to that sure word as S. Peter calleth it[x]; endeauouring by a reuerent kinde of examination, to search out the secret and hidden meaning of Gods Spirit. And first of all, I will place in the front as it were of this proof, that worthy place in the tenth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans; How shall they beleeue in him of whom they haue not heard, and how shall they heare without a Preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent? The summe of the place, is this: that the hearing of a Preacher which is sent, is the ordinary meanes ordained of God to beget faith. From thence ariseth another point: that hee whose Ministery must be the meanes and instrument to beget faith, must bee a man sent; for, How can they preach except they be sent? Onely that man is a Preacher, which is sent. Now if we shall examine what it is to bee sent, it will appeare to be true, that a sufficient Minister to call Gods people, must bee a man of better quality then a bare reader of the Scripture. To bee sent therefore is this, to bee appointed and deputed of God, and (as the Lord speaketh of Jeremy) sanctified[y], or (as Paul saith of himselfe,) put apart to that seruice[z]. Were it not now a presumptuous and ouer-bold imputation, of a certaine dissolute carelesnes vnto the wisest and most prouident God to say or thinke that he would put any man in this seruice[a], for the worke of the Ministery[b], vnlesse the same were so gifted and qualified, as is meet for the discharge of so weighty a businesse? Salomon saith, that He that sendeth a message by the hand of a foole, (that is of a man vnable to deliuer the tenor of his message, and to open it to him to whom it is sent,) is as he that cutteth off the feet[c]. It is as if he should bid a man goe, and yet chop off his feet wherewith he should trauell. A Prince purposing an ambassage to another Prince, thinketh it not enough that the man whom he will employ in that seruice, be able to carry his errand written in a paper, and faithfully to deliuer it according to directions (for that euery ordinary Carier and common Post may doe;) but hee maketh choise of one that hath had the best breeding, a man of good vnderstanding, of good discourse, of good behauiour, and of no lesse discretion, who is in these respects able to debate and manage those great affaires, as may be most for the behoofe and honourable aduantage of him that sendeth him. Shall wee thinke God to bee lesse carefull for the businesse of his Church, then earthly Princes bee for their State causes? Shall a man of the best quality bee sought out for the carying of a message from one man to another? And shall one of the meanest sufficiency haue the ministery of reconciliation betwixt God and man giuen vnto him[d]? God forbid. Let all these things then be put together: First, that he whose Ministery shall be the meanes to breed faith, is as a man sent, which the text auoucheth. Secondly, that to be sent, is to be gifted in that measure, as agreeing to the weight of so great a calling, which common sense will not suffer vs to deny. Thirdly, that to be able only to reade the Scripture, is a common gift, and a faculty of no great note,

Againe, to presse this place yet further, this is the constant doctrine of the Scripture, that no Minister can haue comfort in the day of the Lord, but onely he which is able to say with Ieremy, I haue not thrust my l Acts 9. he did Paul l: and yet there is a meanes and course as certaine herein, as if the Lord should say directly by a voice sounding in our eares, Goe, behold, haue not I sent thee? It is in this matter, as it is in that of election. A man that is carefull

m 2 Pet.1.10. (according to the rule of the holy Ghost) to make his calling and election sure m, must not presume to search the vnsearchable counsels of God, neither yet waite for some speciall intelligence from Heauen; but hee must enter into his owne heart, and rise vp by degrees from the fruits of sanctification to his being iustified, from iustification to his effectuall calling, from thence to election, and from all these, conclude eternall glorification in Gods Kingdome: this is a sure course, to be led by the streames vp to the well-head. Not much vnlike is the course in iudging of a mans calling to the Ministery. I meane in some sort to apply the speech of Paul in another case to this purpose: Say not thou that affecteth the Ministery, Who shall ascend vp into heauen, to assure mee what is Gods purpose touching me? for there is another way, The testimony of

Now may a man with a safe conscience, or with any good ground, make himselfe beleeue that God hath sent him, and called him to the Ministery, because he is able to read distinctly the text of the holy Scripture? Can this one faculty be a sufficient testimony to

Surely (for as much as I can conceiue) the doctrine of the Scripture, describing the office of a Minister, is against it. This vse I haue made of this place: the summe is this; the ordinary meanes to beget faith, is the hearing of a Preacher sent, that is so furnished with gifts sutable to his calling, that both in respect of the tenor of his message, and his ability to manifest the riches of the glo-

r Rom.10.15. ther is bare reading to be numbred among those gifts which might argue a man to be sent, neither is it safe for any man to aduenture vpon no better sufficiency: Therefore there is more required in him, who must be heard for the breeding of Faith, then the naked faculty of deliuering to the people out of a Booke, the letter of the Scripture.

Nymph. But by your leaue sir, that which you speake touching sending I feare mee how it will be well taken: for hath not the Church the power of sending and calling to the Ministery? If then a man able onely to reade the Scripture, be by the Church appointed to that office, is not that a sufficient warrant to him in this case?

Epaph.

Epaph. The calling of the Church, I acknowledge to bee so necessary, that without it (a settled forme of Church gouernment being established) no man is to be reputed a lawfull Minister, though he be otherwise of neuer so great sufficiency. God (I know) calleth men extraordinarily sometimes, as namely, in the first founding and planting of the Church: (so were the Apostles and Euangelists called:) and when the Church of God is defaced; and an vniuersall Apostasie spread ouer it; (so it is thought they were called, who restored the sincerity of religion, after the long night of Popery.) But this extraordinary kind of calling neuer taketh place, but when ordinary calling faileth. Now though the calling and allowance of the Church is necessary, yet it is not sufficient to the being of a Minister. The office of the Church is onely to approue, it is God that maketh a Minister. And therefore the Church is tyed to a law, to lay hands suddenly vpon no man [f], but to proue first [g], and to vse a very precise examination before they seperate any man to the office of a Minister. The Churches duty is to search out what men the Lord hath chosen, to take a part in the ministration [u]. I know there may be an error committed herein, and men in their choises and elections, may be deceiued. It fareth many times with the Gouernors of the Church, as it did with Ioab in the Campe [x]. When Absalon was slaine, and the army of those which ioyned with him in the conspiracy, was ouerthrowne, Ioab was purposed by a messenger to informe Dauid of the successe of the battell: hereupon one Ahimaaz offered himselfe to be the carier of tydings: Ioab put him backe, taking another, one Cushi to be the fitter for that seruice. Ahimaaz notwithstanding continued to importune Ioab, What (I pray thee) if I run also after Cushi? And againe, Yet what if I run? And neuer left vntill he had obtained licence to run also. Hauing gotten this leaue to run, he ran by the way of the plaine, and ouer-went Cushi, and came first to Dauid, and made wise, as if he could haue told great tydings. But when the King came to particulars, then he was silent, I saw a great tumult, but I knew not what. The case so standeth many times in the Church. The spirituall Ioabs, the leaders [y] of Gods people, intend (perhaps) to send none but Chusies, men of whose faithfulnesse and sufficiency, they haue good experience: but yet haply some Ahimaaz or other, some that might well stay to beare tidings another time, steppeth in, and putteth forward himselfe, and by importunity purchaseth that which otherwise desert could not obtaine, and so runneth by the way of the plaine (that common and too much troden path of Symony) and ouer-goeth the worthier; and being first come into the face of Gods Church, seemeth to be able to bring out of his treasure, things both old and new [z]. But if you grow with him into particulars, you shall finde him like the guest in the Gospell, euen speechlesse [a], so that he must bee faine to stand aside till Cushi commeth to resolue you. Thus I say an errour may happen, and an ouer-sight may be committed euen by the best ouer-seers. But when this negligence becommeth a custome, and it waxeth an ordinary matter, to make of the lowest of the people, Priests of the high places [b], so that in a manner who will, may consecrate himselfe, then a man may well cry with Dauid, it is time for thee Lord to worke [c]: Arise, O God, and lift vp thine hand [d]. And how fearefull a thing it is, for those which willingly suffer it, may appeare by an example not much vnlike. God sent Samuel [e] to annoint one of Isai his sonnes, to bee King ouer Israel: Samuel seeing Eliab, because of his countenance, and the height of his stature; said, Surely the Lords annointed is before him: The like conceit had hee of the rest of his brethren: but yet he receiued still a secret information, The Lord hath chosen none of these. Put case that Samuel notwithstanding this direction giuen him, had tooke the horne of oyle, and annointed some other beside Dauid, had it not been great contempt to haue proceeded contrary to command? So in this case, they to whom the office and function of laying on of hands belongeth in Gods Church, when the Lord shall say expresly in his word, I haue haue not choſen this man, he is not gifted for this weighty buſineſſe: if they for all that ſhall giue the outward allowance of a Miniſter to him, whom in their certaine knowledge God hath not graced with gifts ſufficient for the calling of a Miniſter, what puniſhment in all likelyhood this raſhneſſe is liable vnto, I leaue it to euery mans conſcience that feareth God to examine: and I pray God giue them whom it concerneth hearts to conſider it.

Nymph. I ioyne with you in your good deſire, and yet perhaps men of place may plead a kind of neceſſity, to admit men of no better ſufficiency, there being not that ſtore of learned men and Preachers, to furniſh euery ſeuerall congregation.

Epaph. What is to bee borne withall in caſes of ineuitable neciſſity, is one thing, and what is to be permitted when the good meanes is not wanting, is another thing: for this our land, firſt, I think there was neuer any trial taken, whether the number of learned men were proportionable to the tale of ſeuerall pariſhes: Secondly, the Vniuerſities are like to the market place, in which ſtand many of good quality, of whom if you demand, Why ſtand you here? They will anſwere, Becauſe no man hath hired vs[f]. And the ſeuerall Colledges, bee (as it is ſaid of the teeth of the ſpouſe) like a flocke of ſheepe in good order, which goe vp from the waſhing which euery one bring out twinnes, and none is barren among them[g]. Thirdly, the Scripture telleth vs, that Chriſt aſcended vp on high to giue gifts vnto men[h]: Why then ſhould we thinke his hand ſo ſhortned, as that it ſhould bee deemed vnpoſſible to furniſh this whole Church with preaching Miniſters? Fourthly, if that be true which ſome ſay, That there are more learned men in England, then in all the reformed Churches of Europe beſides, then there is no cauſe to plead any ſuch neceſſity. And therefore I account that as a colour, rather then any argument.

Nymph. I feare me ſir, I haue too much interrupted you: I pray you therefore proceed in your proofe of this point, that there is a neceſſity laid vpon euery Miniſter that ſhall vndertake the cure of ſoules, to bee able to doe more then bareley read the holy Scriptures vnto the people.

Epaph. The next reaſon which I haue to ſtrengthen this principle, is grounded vpon this, becauſe I finde by the Scripture, that it is a matter of very great difficulty to be a good Miniſter. There are two things principally required in a Miniſter: the one, that he be able to exhort with wholeſome Doctrine: the other, that he haue skill to improue them that ſay againſt it[i]. Whereto agreeth that ſaying of Auguſtine, that Hee muſt bee a maintainer of truth, and a withſtander of error. For which cauſe the ſpirituall builders in Gods building[k], which is the Church, are not vnfitly compared to thoſe who builded the Temple in Nehemias his time, who did the worke with the one hand, and with the other held the ſword[l]. It is a ſhame for a Miniſter, if it ſhall fall out with his ſpirituall worke, as Tobias the Ammonite ſaid in ſcorne of the re-edified Citty and Temple of the Iewes, Although they build, yet if a Foxe goe vp, hee ſhall euen breake downe their ſtony Wall[m]. So, I ſay, it ſhall be a blemiſh to a teacher in Gods Church, if he ſhall build ſo weakely that thoſe Foxes, thoſe little Foxes[n], (of whom the Spouſe complaineth) ſhall be able by and by to breake downe the building. Well then let any man conſider either of theſe two, and tell me whether it be not a matter of very great difficulty in any good meaſure to performe it. The Prophet Iſay ſaith, that The Lord had giuen him a tongue of the learned, for that one peece of ſeruice, That he might know to miniſter a word in time to him that is weary[o]: And yet this is but one branch of a Miniſters office. If we ſhall adde to it other particulars, ſuch as are wiſdome in admoniſhing, courage in reprouing, ſoundneſſe in opening the treaſure of the holy Text, diſcretion in applying according to times and perſons, with the like, which are required of euery Miniſter in his place; then wee cannot but yeeld that he had need to bee able to doe ſomething more then reade, who ſhall ſeeke to behaue himſelfe in the houſe of God[p] as he ought to doe.

doe. Now for that other part, which ſtandeth In ſtopping the mouthes of vaine talkers, and deceiuers of mens minds [q], which oppoſe themſelues againſt Gods truth: it is (as Auguſtine well ſaith) A matter requiring more painefull and plentifull learning, as ſhall appeare to him that ſhall conſider either the multitude of falſe opinions, or the quality of thoſe which doe defend them. For the multitude, this is a cleere caſe, that whereas euery former age hath brought foorth ſome one or moe, to the diſturbance of the peace of Gods Church, and to the exerciſing of the beſt learned that each time could affoord, all theſe are flowne together in this laſt age, as into a common ſewer. So that there is not any error which the former times knew, and withall condemned to the pit of Hell, but this our age hath raked it vp againe, and ſet (as it were) a new gloſſe vpon it, and made it by addition much more dangerous. Beſides, wee haue Popery, which is a fardle of Hereſies, and the very compound of all the reſt. Now for the quality of thoſe which are Patrones thereof, (of Popery eſpecially) it is well knowne that though they haue among them, as it was ſaid of old, Many wooden Prieſts, all whoſe learning hangeth at their girdle in their Portuis, yet they which in theſe our times haue put forth themſelues to ſupport the drooping and decaying kingdome of Antichriſt, are no punies, but many of them men of excellent wits, deep learning, and vnwearied induſtry: by their writings, & books, and diſputations, making good the ſaying of our ſauiour Chriſt, The Children of this World are in their generation wiſer then the children of light [r]. Now then to diſcouer the force of my intended reaſon, I draw it to theſe heads: firſt, I know that whoſoeuer ſhould vndertake out of the Scripture to deſcribe the office of a Paſtor, hee cannot without palpable betraying of the truth, leaue out theſe two things which I haue named, the ability to teach the obedient Chtildren of the Church, and the skill to oppoſe himſelfe againſt the enemies of the Church. Secondly, this I know alſo, that he that ſhall either by diſcourſe examine, or by perſonall experience try the difficulty of well performing theſe duties, will ſay with S. Paul, Who is ſufficient for theſe things [s]? And acknowledge with Bernard, That the Miniſtery is a burden, which the Angels themſelues may well tremble at. Thirdly, I am ſo cleere in this, as in any of the two former, that there is no ſuch difficulty in the faculty of reading, which as it is the firſt ſtep to learning, ſo it is of all other things (incident to a Scholler) the moſt eaſie. So that, ſeeing to hold opinion, that an only readig Miniſter is a ſufficient Miniſter, maketh that calling of all other, the moſt eaſie, which in it owne nature, as it is deſcribed to vs in the Scripture, is the moſt laborious, requiring ſo ſtudious preparation to it, and ſo great intention and diligence in the performance of it, I muſt needs ſettle my ſelfe vpon this point, and perſwade others alſo to it, that there is more required in a Miniſter of the new Teſtament, then to read the Scripture, though I ſtill hold that a part of his duty, and (as I haue ſaid before) a matter very behooueſull for the ſpirituall benefit of Gods Church.

Epaph. For anſwer to that doubt, firſt, this is a true and a receiued rule, That a Sacrament is not to bee eſteemed by the hand of him which adminiſtreth it: Neither doth the dignity of the deliuerer, adde worth to the Sacrament, nor the indignity, leſſen the true nature of it. Secondly, hee which hath an outward calling by the Church, though haply hee bee vnworthy and vnmeet for the place whereto he is called, yet hee is to be reputed as more then a priuate man: And therefore becauſe by the appointment of the Church hee ſtands in the roome of a right and lawfull Miniſter, if there be no fault in the ſubſtance of the action of adminiſtring, the Sacraments are true Sacraments, though the party executing executing that office be not altogether ſo allowable. The Scribes and Phariſes, who were the Doctors of the Iewes, many of them were of other Tribes, then of the Tribe of Leui, and crept in by corruption and bribery into thoſe places, and were of vnſound iudgement in many things, as may eaſily bee gathered by the ſtory of the Goſpell; yet our Sauiour willed his Diſciples to heare them, becauſe they ſate in Moſes chaire [t]. Nymph. I will reſt ſatisfied with this anſwer, till I ſhall finde either by mine owne priuate meditation, or by conference with others (better skilled in theſe points then I) what further to reply. I deſire to heare you yet further in this matter, touching the neceſſity of preaching in a Miniſter.

Ep. iph. I am very willing to proceed, onely I would haue you to remember what I ſaid at my firſt entrance into this matter: namely, that I would ſtand only vpon proofes of Scripture. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that that was the ancient order of diſputing, to haue the bookes of holy Scripture by, and to ſtand to the triall thereof. And therefore it was an excellent and memorable courſe of Conſtantine the Emperour, who commanded the Fathers met together in the Councell of Nice, to referre that great controuerſie then in hand, touching the Godhead of Chriſt, to the deciſion of the Scripture. And it is Gods owne voice that we ſhould to the law, and to the teſtimony [u]. Wherefore wiſhing you to looke for no proofes from me, but ſuch as are fetched out of the Scripture, I ſet this downe as my third reaſon; That whereas the Lord made very good prouiſion for the maintenance of thoſe who were to miniſter about holy things, I find not either in the old or new Teſtament, that any were prouided for by ſuch allowance, but onely ſuch as were able to inſtruct the people by opening and expounding the law. The office of the Leuites in the old law, ſtood vpon two things, one was to put incenſe before the Lords face, and the burnt offering vpon his altar: therein they were the peoples mouth vnto God: the other was to teach Iacob Gods iudgement, and Iſrael his Law [x]: in that they were Gods mouth vnto the people: for this cauſe it was the ordinance of God (according as I noted to you the place in the beginning of this conference,) that the Prieſts lips ſhould preſerue knowledge, and they ſhould ſeeke the Law at his mouth: for (ſaith the text) he is the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts [y]: that is, one appointed to be the opener and declarer of the will of God among the people. And leſt any man ſhould thinke, that the Law which the people were to ſeeke at the Prieſts mouth, was nothing but the bare letter & written text of the law, we may remember firſt, that the people had the free vſe of the law in their priuate houſes [z], ſo that they had no ſuch need to ſeeke that at the Prieſts hands. Secondly, that it was the vſe of the Leuites when they did read in the Booke of the law, to giue the ſenſe alſo, and to cauſe the people to vnderſtand the reading [a]. And hence it was, that when our Sauiour Chriſt ſtood vp to reade on the Sabbath day (according to his office, as ſome thinke that he was choſen one of the ordinary two and twenty Prieſts of the Temple,) when he had cloſed the booke, the eyes of all that were in the Synagogue were faſtened on him [b]: becauſe it was the order, that preſently vpon the reading of the law, followed the expoſition of the law. Thence alſo was it that Paul and Barnabas being at Antioch vpon a Sabbath day, After the Lecture of the Law and the Prophets, the Rulers of the Synagogue ſent vnto them, to intreat them, that if they had any word of exhortation, they would be pleaſed to deliuer it [c]. This their requeſt aroſe vpon the cuſtome of ioyning ſtill the opening and interpreting of the Law, with the publike reading thereof, whereto agreeth that ſaying of Iames [d], that Moſes was of old time in euery cittie, both read and Preached euery Sabbath day. For albeit ſome thinke there is great ſtrength in that place, to proone reading to be preaching, Moſes (ſay they) was preached, in that he was read; yet the true

drift of the place, is, to proue that Moſes was preached, in as much as he was read, not becauſe to read Moſes is to preach him, but becauſe the conſtant courſe of the times was to ioyne preaching with reading; thoſe which read Moſes on the Sabbath dayes in the Synagogues, did expound him alſo: So that the ſtrength of the reaſon brought to proue, that Moſes was preached euery Sabbath, ſtands not vpon the agreement which is ſuppoſed, to be in nature betwixt reading and preaching, but vpon the perpetuall connexing of thoſe ſeruices in euerie well-ordered Congregation. Thirdly, this may bee noted alſo, that whereas the Lord threatned to refuſe them, that they ſhould be no Prieſts to him, who had refuſed knowledge [c], by that refuſing of knowledge is to bee vnderſtood, both their ignorance in the doctrine of the law, and their negligence to informe the people in it: otherwiſe, to thinke that there was nothing reproued in them more, then an vnability to reade the law, were a very groſſe conceit. And thus much to proue that for the times of the old teſtament, none had the allowance of Prieſts, but ſuch as were able to inſtruct. Now for the times of the Goſpell, S. Paul thus declares the continuance of the equity of that ancient law, that like as of old, They which did miniſter about the holy things, did eate of the things of the Temple, and they which did wait at the Altar, were partakers of the Altar; ſo alſo it is ordained by the Lord, that they which preach the Goſpell, ſhould liue of the Goſpell [f]; none haue any right to liue by the Goſpell, that is, of the exhibition or ſalary of the Church, but thoſe which preach the Goſpell. If you demand of me what it is to preach the Goſpell, Paul ſhall reſolue you elſewhere, namely, it is this, to labour in the word and doctrine [g], which whether it be not more then to read, I refeare it to any mans iudgement. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that theſe words require of a Miniſter, that he doe preach and teach, and make Sermons: and the old rule of the law, which Paul applies to the purpoſe, requires ſo much, Thou ſhalt not muzzle the oxes mouth that treadeth out the corne. The oxe which is allowed to eate of the corne, is not he onely which treads on the corne, but which treads it out, that worketh it out of the huſks, that it may be fit for mans vſe. So he is to eate of the Churches maintenance, who is able to ſet Gods word (the ſpirituall food) before the people; not onely in the eare (as it were) in the words and letter of the Scripture, but in the true ſenſe and interpretation of it. It is an excellent ſaying of Saint Hierome; Let vs not thinke (ſaith hee) that the Goſpell is in the words of the Scripture, but in the ſenſe, not in the outward face, but in the marrow thereof: and as Baſil ſpeakes, not in the ſound of the aire, but in the power of the things meant. I would haue thee (ſaith Tertullian) exerciſe thy ſelfe to the ſenſe of the matter, and not to the ſound of the word. It is a rule among Lawyers, that not the bare words is the law, but the meaning of the law. And in the Scripture, they are ſaid to teach the law; which ſhew the ſentence [h], or ſubſtance and matter of the law. So then, hee is a teacher allowed to liue vpon the common charge, which treads out (as I may ſo ſpeake, alluding to the ſimilitude of the oxe) the ſenſe of the Scripture out of the letter of the Scripture: and ſtaies not (as Hierome ſpeakes in the fore-remembred place) in the leaues of words, but ſearcheth to the roote of the vnderſtanding thereof. You may (if you will) adde hereto that other place of Paul to this purpoſe [i]; Let him that is taught in the word, make him that hath taught him partaker of all his goods. He that will haue a ſhare in the peoples temporall goods, muſt let them receiue ſpirituall good from him. Hee who lookes to eate of the milke of the flocke (that is, as it is expounded by Auguſtine, of that which is giuen by the people for their ouerſeers ſuſtenance), muſt in equite afford them that, which may be for the building vp of their ſoules in Chriſt Ieſus: otherwiſe there is no proportion. And were it not that men did more affect pride then painfulneſſe, the fat and the wooll of the flocke, then the feeding of the ſheepe [k], this doctrine would neuer be gaine-ſaid; wee ſhould not then haue that iuſt cauſe to lament the ſtate of ſo many, whom we ſee ſcattered abroad as ſheepe hauing no ſhepheard[k]: neither to complaine with Auguſtine, that there are many who reioyce in the name of Paſtors, but care not to fulfill the office of Paſtors. Thus haue you my third reaſon, which though it hath been ſtretcht out by a diſcourſe ſomething large, yet it may be reduced to this briefe: Gods word prouiding a maintenance of honour[l] for the Miniſters of his Church, hath not giuen allowance to any to liue by it, but only to men able to inſtruct by opening the Scripture, therefore there is more required in a Miniſter, then to be able to reade the Scripture.

Nymph. You haue ſo well and throughly ſatisfied me for this matter by theſe your three reaſons, that I will not vrge you further: onely I will pray you to teach me how to anſwere ſome exceptions, and pretenced reaſons, ſome againſt the neceſſity of preaching, ſome for the ſufficiency of reading.

Epaph. I am willing to follow you, ſeeing I entred into this matter for your ſake: and if hereafter any doubt ſhall ariſe in your minde vpon further ſeanning, touching theſe things which haue been ſaid, I hope God will affoord vs opportunity further to debate them. If you will therefore, let me heare what you haue heard pleaded by thoſe which are of a different opinion, I doubt not but by the grace of Chriſt, you ſhall finde the truth to be as it is well called; An eternall victory: and that (as that worthy Roman ſaid ſometime) though it be often too much withſtood, yet it can neuer be cleane extinguiſhed.

Veritas aeterna victoria Aug. de ciu. Dei, l. 2. cap. 29. Fab. Max. apud Liu. l. 22. ſæpe laborare nimis, nunquam extingui.

Nymph. It is ſaid by ſome, that this opinion touching the neceſſity of expounding and opening the Scripture by preaching, doth derogate from the dignity of the Scripture, and doth ſeeme to fauour the doctrine of Popery; touching the obſcurity and darkneſs of the holy Writ, as though there were ſuch neceſſity of a Teacher to come to the vnderſtanding of it.

Epaph. The anſwer to this is eaſie. Touching the Scriptures, God forbid but we ſhould acknowledge, that they are both in their own nature light[m], and ſuch alſo which by the beames thereof do giue light vnto the eies[n]. And it is true which S. Auguſtine ſaith, that all matters neceſſary to faith and manners, are to be found in thoſe things which are ſet downe plainely in the Scripture: and therefore we do both exhort to the reading of the Scriptures priuately, and commend the publike rehearſing of them in the congregation. Yet this is no whit contrary to the opinion touching the neceſſity of preaching. And ſo much ſhall euidently appeare, if we marſhall our hearers into three companies. The firſt ſort are groſſely ignorant, and extremely negligent in the matters of God. The ſecond are of ſome better, both care to looke into the Scriptures, and capacity to conceiue them. The third are as well able to ſound out the truth by the priuat ſtudy of the Scripture, as thoſe who be profeſſed Diuines. There is no hearer (I meane among our people profeſſing the preſent Religion) but hee belongs to one of theſe three ranks. Now for the former of theſe, preaching cannot but be moſt neceſſary: for as in their negligence of themſelues they will neuer ſeeke for knowledge, but it muſt euen in a kinde of violence be put vpon them, ſo in their ignorance the plaine text read will profit them nothing, vnleſſe with it be ioyned the skilfull induſtry of ſome painefull workman[o], who by framing himſelf to the ſhallow capacity of the ſillieſt, and by adding precept to precept, line to line, here a little and there a little[p], may drop in ſome knowledge, and through often ſharpening[q] of the neceſſary points of Religion, may make ſomething to enter: neither doe we account preaching neceſſary for ſuch, becauſe of any darknes which we ſuppoſe to be in the Scripture, but becauſe we know their cogitations to be darkened[r], & that they cannot perceiue the things of the Spirit of God[s]. Preaching is not to put light to the Word, but to remoue the ſcales from their eies, who, albeit the Scripture ſhine as bright as doth the Sunne at perfit day, yet vnleſſe their ſight bee holpen, bee not able to ſee the wonders of the Law[u]. And what though (as I ſaid) the Scripture doe giue light, being the eye-ſalue ordained to that end, yet there muſt be a courſe by which to apply it to ſuch an vſe:

And

And whether preaching bee not the course ordained of God to this worke, of plucking away that vaile which is laid vpon euery naturall heart [x], let that place testifie in which Pauls commission to preach the Gospell [y], is explaned to bee, to open the eyes of the Gentiles, that they may turne from darknesse vnto light [z]. Secondly, for the next sort which according to Christs commandement doe search the Scripture [a], though I know they shall find their spirituall hunger to be satisfied by many plaine and comfortable places, yet they shall many times be so plunged and set (as it were) that they shall say with the Eunuch, How can I vnderstand, except I had a guide [b]? It is Gods wisdome as well to exercise vs with hard places, as to feed vs with those which are perspicuous, both to teach vs to pray with Dauid, that the Lord would open our eyes that we may see [c], and withall to establish the necessity of the publike Ministery, and to teach vs humility, when wee must bee faine to depend vpon the instruction of others. As for the third kind, who perhaps are able because of education in good letters, to search out the mystery of the text by their owne priuate industry, as well as the most sufficient Preacher, yet as I doubt not but the same shall euen better their iudgments by the meanest Sermon (if that be a fit tearme to be giuen to a Sermon, in which Gods truth is soundly deliuered) so I am sure they shal find hearing to be very behouefull, if it be for no other thing, yet (as a learned Father well obserueth it) for their owne sluggishnes, that so they may bee quickened vp to good duties, we being all in nature so prone, though wee know much, yet to be weary of well-doing [d], and to bee idle and vnfruitfull in the knowledge of our Lord Iesus Christ [e]. It is an excellent saying of the Apostle Paul, writing to the Romanes, and well fitting to this purpose: I my selfe (saith hee) am perswaded of you my brethren, that ye are also full of goodnesse, and filled with all knowledge, and are able to admonish one another [f]: what greater commendation could bee? these men might seeme not to need any further instruction: but marke what follows, Neuertheless brethren, I haue somewhat boldly after a sort written vnto you, as one that putteth you in remembrance, through the grace that is giuen me of God. Though a man haue attained to neuer so great perfection in knowledge, yet he standeth still in neede of a Preacher, though it be but to be a remembrancer vnto him. Theophilus was well instructed in the mystery of Christ, yet Lukes Gospell was needfull for him, that he might acknowledge the certenty of those things [g]. Preaching is not superfluous, though a man were neuer so cunning. This briefe view of the state of our seuerall hearers, may serue to make this good, that to vrge the necessity of preaching as the meanes to beget faith, is no derogation to that doctrine which we hold, touching the brightnes and plainnes of the Scripture. The Scripture is as a light shining in a darke place [h], but neither doe all looke into it, neither can all that heare it read publikely, conceiue it, vnlesse they be prepared to it by some former familiar instructions, neither do all that peruse Gods Book, so fully vnderstand all, that they need no teacher, neither yet can any man, though of neuer so good parts, attaine to that fulnes, as that he shall not (at the least) stand in need of an admoniſher. It is a good obseruation (in my iudgement) of him, who saith, that the word is indeed light, but the preaching Minister is as the candlestick [i], of which Christ speakes, by which Gods Word giueth light vnto all that are in the house. And indeed this similitude may haue the better approbation, if we note how by the candlestick [k] which the Lord Iesus threatneth to remoue out of Ephesus, is meant especially the Ministery of the Word. God doth all things by meanes (ordinarily.) Christ is the true light, which giues light to them that sit in darknes [l]; yet the faithfull Ministers of seuerall congregations are said to be stars in his right hand [m], by which he giues light vnto his Church. If this be true, I see not what inconuenience can follow vpon it, if we say, though the word be a lanthorne [n], yet it then giues best, and cleerest, and fullest light, when it is lifted vp at it were, and the brightnes thereof caused to spread forth into euery corner, by the skill and paines of a ſufficient Miniſter. Yet further (if this doe not ſatiſfie) you may coſider thus much; that albeit the Scriptures were throughout ſo plaine and eaſie, that there were no need at all for any to haue a Preacher to expound them, yet this is nothing againſt the neceſſity of preaching. For the queſtion is not ſimply, touching what may bring a man to the vnderſtanding of the doctrine of religion, but, touching this; what is the ordinary meanes ordained of God, to conuert, and to beget faith in the heart. It is poſſible for a man to vnderſtand much, and to conceiue aright the meaning of the Scripture, and yet to remaine a reprobate ſtill, and to want that faith, which for diſtinctions ſake we call a Sauing Faith. Now in this lieth the maine queſtion, what is the ordinary outward inſtrument ſanctified of God to make a man a beleeuer, and this I ſay ſtill, is, the word which we preach[o], ſo that if at any time, any man (which I do not ſay is vnpoſſible) haue faith begotten in him either by his owne priuate reading, or by hearing another reade in publike, it is meerely extraordinary.

Nymph. Another exception vſed by ſome, whoſe endeauour is to equall (if not to preferre) bare reading vnto preaching, is, that there is more certenty in the word read, then in that which you preach: that which is read, men are ſure is Gods word, but they haue not the like aſſurance of that which is preached, ſermons (they ſay) are but mens Inuentions; Reading deliuereth the Word of God moſt ſimply & ſincerely in it owne proper forme.

Epaph. If you deſire a ſhort and direct anſwer to this exception, take it thus. This allegation touching the certainty of the word read, aboue the doctrine preached, is not true. There are in our congregations three ſorts of people eſpecially: firſt, ignorant perſons: ſecondly cauillers, and laſtly, iudiciall and carefull hearers. The ignorant are as vncertaine touching that which wee call the Scripture, whether it be the Word of God, as they bee touching our preaching: they haue no aſſurance of it, but tradition and report, which is a poore certenty: and they haue as good an opinion of the Apocripha bookes, as of the other which wee call Canonicall. Beſides that, it is buzzed into many of our common peoples eares, by whiſpering Papiſts, and it is there by become ordinary in many mouthes here in the country, that our Bible is no true Bible, and that our tranſlation is iuſtly to bee doubted of. Secondly, thoſe that are poſſeſſed with a humour of cauelling, and may as well demand how they know the Scripture to be Scripture, and thoſe things to be true which are written in it, as how they may be reſolued that our preaching is the truth. Thirdly, your beſt hearers which heare as Chriſt ſaith, with a good and an honeſt heart[p], to them the certainty of the truth in the written text and in the ſermon is both alike: for, as they haue a certaine ſecret teaching by the Spirit of God (which S. Iohn calleth by the name of an anyntment from him that is holy[q]) whereby they are perſwaded of the truth of the Scripture, and doe account it the oracle of God[r] (in reſpect whereof they are ſaid to be taught by God[ſ]: and Auſtine ſaith, God ſpeaketh to our hearts:) ſo alſo they are enabled by the ſame ſpirit to iudge of that doctrine which they heare, by the Scripture, and equally to embrace points confirmed by it, and thoſe which are expreſly, and in ſo many words reueiled in it. So then there is no more certenty of the Text, then of the Doctrine preached out of the text. Thoſe which are ignorant, or diſpoſed to cauill, are doubtfull of both alike, for the one are blockiſh and know nothing, the other are humorous and will be ſatisfied with nothing. Againe, thoſe which are Gods children, are alike aſſured of both: of the text, by the ſecret perſwaſion of Gods Spirit: of the doctrine, by triall taken of it by the text. I remember a ſaying of S. Hierome; I know (ſaith he) that I otherwiſe eſteeme of the Apoſtles, then of other treatiſes: the Apoſtles I know ſpake alwaies the truth: the other as men in many things were deceiued. The ſpeech may well be applied to this purpoſe: the bookes of holy Scripture wee muſt yeeld conſent vnto them without refuſall, becauſe it is certaine, that they are all giuen by inspiration of God [t], so that there is nothing in them of any priuate motion [u]: but as for the writings and preachings of men, they are not to be credited before they be tried whether they are of God [x]. Thus much willingly is acknowledged: but yet after this triall made, and by the daily searching of the Scriptures [y], those things which in preaching are deliuered, are found to bee so; then the doctrines, though drawne out of the Text by the art and wit of man, and otherwise amplified, enlarged, and vrged by the helpes of learning, are not to be called the opinions of a man, but the words of God [z]. It is a good rule of the learned, that those points which are collected out of the Scripture, are of like authority with those which are directly written in it. When Paul being at Thessalonica went into the synagogue of the Iewes, and disputed with them by the Scriptures [a], I hope no man will say, but that those things which hee by argument and discourse drew out of the written word, were of equall authority with points expresselie mentioned. Paul pleading before Agrippa, stood stiffely to the iustifying of his doctrine, because he had said no other things but those which the Prophets and Moses did say should come [b]. His doctrine was the same with the doctrine of Moses and the Prophets, yet not in words, but in sense and substance. And the same Apostle is not afraid to call his preaching the counsell of God [c], though it were in regard of the tenor and course of speech, differing from the expresse letter of the text. And hee commends the Thessalonians, because they receiued of him the Word of preaching, not as the Word of men, but (as it is indeed) the Word of God [d]. If it shall be said vnto mee, that there is a difference betwixt our Sermons and Pauls, I willingly confesse it; but yet I say, that euen Pauls Sermons were subiect to the like triall that ours be, as appeareth by the practise of the Noblemen of Berœa [e]. And therefore as his preaching was not to bee esteemed as the word of God, till triall, and being tried, was equally to be reuerenced as the written Word it self: so neither are our sermons to be by and by credited vpon our bare word, but to be thorowly examined: but being once found to hold at the touch-stone, then they are so to bee reputed Gods word, that it may be safely said, Hee that despiseth them, despiseth not man, but God [f]. And indeed vnlesse we shall giue equall credit and respect to matters soundly prooued by Scripture, and to points expressed in it, we shal hazard the truth of many, and the same no petty principles of religion, which I know are substantially confirmed by the Scripture, but yet are not word for word so to be found in the sacred text, as we maintaine them. I remember S. Iames giueth vnto that speech (The spirit that is in vs, lusteth after enuy) the title of Scripture [g]: Who can shew me in what part of the Bible that is written: I confesse it may be iustified by those places of holy Writ, in which the naturall corruption of mans heart is reported: but word for word, sure I am it cannot be found, which is a plaine proofe that it is not simply vnfitting to terme that (Gods word) which being by due collection deriued from it, yet is not expresly, and in the same forme of words, in which it is deliuered, written in it. As for that which is said, that reading deliuereth the Word of God in it owne proper forme, it is idle: for (to speake strictly) that which is read in our Churches, is not Gods Word in it owne proper forme. The proper forme or shape (for in that obiection, the word forme signifieth so much) of the Scripture is the language in which it was first written. Now as it is true, that albeit the Hebrew and Greeke text of Scripture, be simply better then our English (because the writers of it had that infallible assistance of the holy Ghost, which our translators had not) yet in respect of vs, and for our vse, the English is the better, because our vulgar people vnderstand it better; so, although the Word read doth come neerer to the natiue forme, and shape, and stile of Gods Word, then the Word preached, yet for our behoofe, the Word preached is the better, both because it furthereth our vnderstanding of the text, and especially (which is the chiefe thing) because it is Gods ordinance, by which to bring vs to beleeue.

And this I thinke may be a ſufficient anſwere to this obiection. Tell me I pray you, how you doe conceiue it.

Nymph. As farre as I can coniecture, your anſwer is this: that when that courſe of due triall which is meet) is taken, touching things taught by preaching, then the Scripture being found to giue allowance to them: there is as great aſſurance of the authority of the one, as of the other, and that is as much to be accounted the Word of God, which the Scripture warranteth, as that which by name in ſo many words it expreſſeth.

Epaph. That is indeed the ſum of the anſwer: to which (if you will) you may adde this; that by preaching, men come to be better aſſured of the authority of the Scripture: for, the better they vnderſtand it, the more comfort they find in it, and the more they feele the power and working of it (all which, by the bleſſing of God, are the effects of preaching) the more are they aſſured that the Scripture is the very thing which it is ſaid to be, euen a perfect, pure, and ſweete doctrine, conuerting the ſoule, reioycing the heart [h], and able to make a man wiſe vnto ſalnation [i]. It is truly ſaid, that the Scripture ſtandeth not in reading, but in vnderſtanding. What ſhal it auaile men to carry a kind of conceit of ſome diuine authority to be in the Scripture, ſo long as they are ignorant of the myſterie of it, and without any apprehenſion or taſte of the comfort [k] which is intended in it?

Nymph. Yet (I pray ſir) cleere one thing to me, that now (by the way) commeth into my mind: you will (me thought) haue your Sermons to be called Gods Word; will it not follow from thence, that you that be Preachers then, in your Sermons cannot erre; for, the Word of God cannot erre?

Epaph. It will not follow at all; as I will ſhew you by the like: we will haue our tranſlations of the Scriptures out of Hebrew and Greek into Engliſh, to be called Gods Word: doth it therfore follow that tranſlators cannot erre? not at all. Againe, wee terme that which is read, the word of God; may it therefore be iuſtly concluded thence, that he which readeth the text to the people, in his reading cannot erre? ſurely no: ſome tranſlators doe tranſlate amiſſe; ſome readers doe reade amiſſe; and ſome Preachers do preach amiſſe; yet the Word tranſlated is Gods Word, the Word read is Gods Word, and ſo alſo the Word preached is Gods Word. A particular erring in the carriage of the buſines, doth not hinder the giuing of the title of Gods Word vnto the generall courſe. Tranſlations muſt be ſcanned; readings muſt be conſidered of; and Sermons muſt be examined. Gods Word cannot erre, but in the handling of Gods Word there may bee a miſtaking; and a difference muſt be put betwixt things miſtaken, and things ſet downe aright. The text truly tranſlated is the Word of God; the text truly read (being truly tranſlated) is the Word of God; and ſo againe the text that is tranſlated truly, and read truly, and then is opened, expounded, and applied truly, is the Word of God. Nothing, in what manner ſoeuer it is deliuered, is to be reputed and taken as the Word of God, without enquiry.

Nymph. But now (me thinks) you breed a new doubt, which although it be not properly to the matter of our conference touching preaching, yet I muſt craue your helpe, becauſe you ſeeme by reſoluing me of one ſcruple, to entangle me with another. By this which you haue ſaid, I am become very vncertaine what to account Gods Word. For ſeeing (as you ſay) not the Word tranſlated is more to be reputed the Word of God without enquiry, then the Word preached, how ſhall we doe that vnderſtand no language but Engliſh, we muſt truſt to the tranſlation which we haue, in which, in as much as there may be an errour as well as in reading, or in preaching, how ſhall we be ſure that we haue the Word of God indeed?

Epaph. You doe not amiſſe to aske this; well it may make a doubt, and I know that the Papiſts doe much vrge this, to proue that our common beleeuers can haue no infallible rule of faith, becauſe we make the Scripture to be the rule of faith, and how (ſay they) can they which vnderſtand not the originall, know whether they haue the Scripture yea or no? To helpe you therefore, this I ſay in a word: The maine aſſurance that that which is tranſlated is Gods Word, is the witnesse of Gods Spirit. This is that annointing which the children of God receiue[l], which enableth to discerne all things[m], and to know the voice of Christ[n]. This first perswadeth the heart, of the generall truth contained in the translation, and then continueth to be a directer in the triall of particulars. There is a certaine patterne of wholesome words[o] called by Diuines the Analogy of faith, which is the maine substance and pith of the whole Scripture. This comming to vs by the Ministery of the Church (the meanes consecrated of God to that end) discouereth it selfe to the soules and consciences of Gods people, to be the Truth of God. Being thus proued to the soule of a Christian to be pure[p], this remaineth as a rule to iudge all other parts of the translation by, nothing being to be accounted sound, which is not manifest by due triall to be agreeing hereunto. This is the security of a Christian touching the translation, that it is the scripture. It is the very same, which the most learned haue, though they vnderstand the originall tongues neuer so exactly. For when a man hath read the scriptures in the native language thereof, and finds the translation of it in the mother-tongue to be agreeing to it; yet that thing which after all, must assure his soule, that this is the word of God, is the secret teaching of Gods Spirit, which openeth the heart, that the light of the truth may shine into it. I hope this shall satisfie you for this. The ministry of man by which the scripture is translated for vs, and preached to vs, is but as a lanterne, and the word through it will shew it self by it own light. I haue knowne (saith Dauid) by thy testimonies that thou hast established them[q]. Euen out of the word wil arise a sufficient witnes for it self. And althogh it be possible for men ignorant in the Originall tongues, in some particulars (as in matters of story or circumstance) finally to be mistaken (which may also befall the most skilfull) yet that they should vtterly and generally erre (submitting themselues in meeknes[r] to the Ministry of the Church) it is vnpossible.

Nymph. I am glad I mooued you in this: The truth is, I haue been vrged with it by Popish cauillers: but (I thank God) the power which I feele the Scripture to haue in commanding my inward parts, and in making my soule sometimes to tremble, and againe, sometimes to reioyce together with the sweete Harmony which I find in the seuerall parts thereof each with other, hath much strengthened me against all gain-sayers: and herein your speech now hath much confirmed me. But let vs returne to our maine purpose; for I am almost ashamed that I haue held you too long in this matter, and that so much the rather, because there are many other things yet behind, wherein I am as desirous of your help, as in these already handled: yet because I haue this good opportunity, and doe find you also so willing to instruct me. I will yet further acquaint you with one other allegation, which being answered I shall (I think) be well prouided, both to satisfie those of my acquaintance which shal perhaps seeke help from me, and also to say something to those, who with their quirks and shewes of reasons, think to put down such plain men as I am, when we came into their compuny. I named it to you before (though haply by length of communication it is slipped from you) and it is this, That euen reading it self is preaching: and that they seeke to proone by these reasons: first they say, to preach is nothing but to publish the Gospell, and that is done by reading: secondly, in hearing the Scriptures read, we heare the Sermons of the Prophets, of Christ and of his Apostles, which passe all other sermons which any man now can make. Thirdly there is (they say) euen in reading that which we so much commend preaching for, namelie, expounding and applying, for the new Testament is the expounder of the old and the Epistles of Paul and Peter and the rest, doe apply both vnto mens consciences. Fourthly, certaine Scriptures are produced not onely to proue reading to be preaching: but to proone it also to be more effectuall then preaching. Thus, though in our common speech wee account reading to be one thing, and preaching to be another, yet by these deuises we are many times shrewdly puzled, and know not suddenlie what to answer.

Epaph. These reasons, what shew soeuer they may make at the first view, yet are they neuer able to proue that for which they are alleadged, as shall (God willing) appeare in the seuerall examination of them: First, for that which is ſaid, that Preaching is nothing but a publiſhing of the Goſpell, I yeeld vnto it, if it be well and rightly vnderſtood: and when it is ſo vnderſtood as it ought to bee, then it will appeare, that the reading of the bare context, cannot properly bee termed preaching. I find in the new Teſtament foure words eſpecially to be vſed, when preaching (ſo farre forth as it is incident to the office of an ordinary Paſtor in Gods Church) is mentioned. The firſt ſignifieth, to deliuer good tidings [f], becauſe the Goſpel is, as it was ſaid by the Angels to the ſhepheards, tydings of great ioy to all Gods people [t]. The ſecond and third words [u], ſignifie, to make manifeſt, to diſcouer, to make knowne, to ſet forth to open view, and ſo to handle a matter, as the Prophet was commanded to deale with a viſion which God had ſhewed him, namely, to make it plaine vpon Tables, that hee which runneth may reade it [x]. This ſhall appeare to bee true to any man that ſhall take the paines to examine, and duly to ponder thoſe places of the new Teſtament, in which theſe words are vſed in the Greeke, which being applied to the Miniſter his Office, are tranſlated by the word Preach [y]. And theſe kinds of words, doe fitly ſet forth the duty of a Preacher, which is eſpecially that, which Paul exhorteth the Epheſians to begge of God on his behalfe, to wit, To make knowne the ſecret of the Goſpell [z], which ſeeing it muſt be ſought for as ſiluer, and ſearched for as for treaſure [a], is not ordinarily to be looked for in the vpper face it were, but to be with paines and induſtry digged out of the very bowels and heart of the Scripture. The fourth word ſignifieth to publiſh [b], and as an herald or a crier, to deliuer a matter in open place, in the hearing of a multitude, that many may take notice of it. For this cauſe the Prophet Iſaiah was willed to Crie alowd [c], and to Lift vp his voice like a trumpet; and Ieremiah was commanded to ſtand in the gate of the Lords houſe, and to crie the word there [d]. And hence alſo it is, that the wiſdome of God, is ſaid to ſtand in the top of the high places [e], and to make as it were a publike proclamation: O men! ô ye fooliſh! who ſo is ſimple let him come hither. He, euery one that thirſteth [f]: come vnto me all ye that are weary [g], &c. By this it may appeare what it is to preach, and in what ſenſe preaching may bee tolerably defined to be a publiſhing of the Goſpell: namely, it is an open and comfortable diſcouery by word of mouth, making plaine vnto the people of God, the myſterie of Godlineſſe, euen the ſecret of the Goſpell. Now, as no man duly conſidering the nature and vſe of the forenamed words, can deny preaching (by a Miniſter lawfully called) to be euen ſuch a kind of publiſhing the Goſpell, as is now ſet downe: ſo neither can he with any face or colour affirme, the action of reading the Scripture to be anſwerable to this deſcripetion. So that though it be granted, that the text of Scripture is the Goſpell, and the very word of God; and withall, that reading is after a ſort a publiſhing thereof, becauſe thereby the letter of the Text is recited with a lowd voice, from an eminent and conſpicuous place, in the audience of a multitude: yet when we ſhall enter into a more exact examination of things, it will then appeare, that Reading ſimply cannot be called a publiſhing of the Goſpell, in that ſenſe, as it is required of Miniſters and Teachers to be ſpreaders abroad and proclaimers of Gods truth. Adde hereto, that that which is the principall thing looked for of a Preacher in the publiſhing of the word, the bare Reader in the act of Reading, neither can nor doth performe: and that is, the diuiding the word of truth aright [h]: and (to apply Chriſts words in a caſe not much vnlike) a giuing to them of the houſhold (which is the Church, 1 Tim. 3. 15.) their portion of meate in ſeaſon [i]. A Miniſter, is one to whom the diſpenſation (or ſtewardſhip) is committed [k] in the family of God: and his office is out of the ſtore-houſe of the Scripture, to ſhare out to euery one, that which he ſhall finde by his caring to know the ſtate of his flocke [l], to be beſt fitting and agreeing to him. As for example: Milke [m] (that is, the firſt principles of the word of God) to thoſe which are inexpert in the word of righteouſneſſe: Strong meate [n] (that is, doctrine of greater depth) for them, who are able to beare it [o]: Meekeneſſe of inſtructing

ſtructing for thoſe which are contrary minded [p]: a rod[q], and ſharpe rebuke of ſlow bellies, that they may be ſound in the faith [r]: Improuing (or conuincing) of gain-ſayers, that their mouthes may be ſtopped [s]: admonition for them that are vnruly: comfort for the feeble-minded [t]: a diſcreet and reſpectiue framing of exhortation to ſeuerall ages and degrees, to the Elders, as to fathers; to the younger men as to brethren, to the elder women as to mothers, to the younger as to ſiſters [u]. After this ſort, euery mans portion muſt be allotted out vnto him: and this ordering of that prouiſion, which the Lord (as a carefull houſholder) hath left for his ſpirituall family, is committed vnto the Miniſter. This is that action which Paul calleth a dealing vnto the people the Goſpell of God [x], our Sauiour tearmeth it ſowing [y], which euery country-man knoweth to be more then to bring the ſeed into the place, and to ſet it at the furrowes end, (which is in effect as much as the Reader doth) there muſt bee a diſpoſing and a diſperſing of the ſeed with the hand, that euery part of the land which is eared vp, may haue ſome, which is the liuely repreſentation of the very act of Preaching, by which the word of God (that ſeed of immortality [z]) is caſt by the labourers in Gods husbandry [a] into euery heart. The Scripture I confeſſe is profitable for theſe purpoſes, and able to make the man of God abſolute and perfect vnto all the good workes [b] of his calling; and it is no wholeſome food, nor no cleane ſeed, vnleſſe it be deliuered out of that Garner: but yet, vnleſſe there be more performed, then is done by naked reading (to wit, a propounding to the houſhold the whole ſtore, as it were in groſſe) it cannot be, but whileſt euery one is left to be his owne caruer, the young ones will be ſtarued, and the riotous and miſgouerned will ſurfet themſelues, with greedy and vnbeſeeming taking that vnto them, which they are neither fit nor able to receiue. And this I thinke may ſerue to ſhew how little reaſon there is in this firſt reaſon, why reading of the Scripture ſhould deſerue the honourable name of preaching: when as both our common ſpeech, and (which is more) the language of the holie Ghoſt hath put an apparant difference betwixt them [c].

Nymph. Indeed I acknowledge that to be true out of my owne experience: for though by priuate reading the Scripture, as alſo by hearing it read, I haue receiued much comfort: (the memory of things taught thereby being renewed, and the truth of them confirmed) yet I haue often been quite ſet, often been altogether miſtaken, and ſtill afraid of mine owne iudgement euen in plaine places, vntill I haue found the publike expoſition giuen by the Miniſter iumpe and accord with my opinion. But what ſay you to the ſecond reaſon: namely, that in the Scriptures read, we heare the worthy Sermons of Chriſt, of the Prophets, and of his Apoſtles: and therefore reading is preaching?

Epaph. I ſay it is a very weake argument. That the Sermons of Chriſt, the Prophets and Apoſtles were excellent Sermons, and that the ſum and abridgment of them is to be found in Scripture, no man goeth about to deny: yet this being granted, will neuer prooue a Reader to bee a Preacher. For hee is not a Preacher, who reciteth publike things of another mans inditing (for then how eaſie a thing were it to be a Preacher? but he which deliucreth matters (though not inuented) yet in reſpect of art and induſtry compiled and framed by himſelfe. If it be ſaid, that the Sermons of Chriſt, &c. though they bee not of his framing that readeth them, yet being read, may turne to the profit of the people; I anſwer, that the queſtion is not, whether they may be profitable, but whether the reading of them may be called preaching. God forbid any man ſhould deny the publike reading of them to bee for the behoofe of Gods people (I hope you haue not forgotten what I told you was my iudgement in this caſe) but how it may be ſaid, that he which hath read them to the people, hath performed that office of a Miniſter which wee call preaching, neither can I conceiue, neither (as I thinke) is any man able to ſet downe. Beſides, if the word Sermon, ſhall be preciſely vrged, that which was the ſermon of Chriſt, or Ieremiah, or Paul, when they liued, and the ſame vttered by them, cannot bee now, being being recorded in the Bible, and read out by another, ſo properly called a Sermon: becauſe in our common ſpeech, a Sermon requireth the tongue and voice of him that framed it. And therefore to ſay (as ſome doe) that Chriſt or ſome one of the ancient Prophets or Apoſtles preacheth to vs, when wee heare the ſumme of their Sermons read vnto vs, is but a borrowed kinde of ſpeech, vſu-

k Hab. 2. 11. ſhall anſwer [k]? Beſides, is there any ſenſe in it to ſay, the Scripture hath a voyce as a man (for of the other, that they haue a voyce as Angels, I will not diſpute, for what voyce Angels haue, as Angels, I cannot determine.) The Scripture ſpeaketh mediately by man: Man ſpeaketh of himſelfe without another from himſelfe, to cauſe him to be heard. And if this were true, that the Scripture hath ſuch a ſpeaking voyce as man hath, I ſee not for my part what need of a Miniſtery at all: For what ſhould need more then to ſet vp a Bible in the Church: It hath an articulate ſpeaking voyce, it can preach. Againe, not to dwell vpon the anſwering of ſuch enforced collections, let the nature and eſtate of thoſe which are called the Sermons of the Prophets, of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles be a little conſidered. Firſt in generall this is to be knowne, that wee haue but the briefe and ſumme, and as it were the heads of their Sermons related in the Scripture: for if all that euery one of theſe ſpake publikely by way of teaching had been written, we might well ſay, as Saint Iohn ſaid touching the Acts
l Iohn 21. 25. and ſayings of our Sauiour Chriſt, The world could not containe the bookes [l]; and therefore (if profit be deſired) there muſt neceſſarily be ſome courſe taken, by which the things abridged by the Pen-men of the holy Ghoſt in their writings, may be enlarged. Secondly, the Sermons of Moſes, are ſo interlaced with Iudiciall ordinances and ceremoniall rites, appertaining onely to the policy of thoſe times, that for the peoples behoofe, it is more then conuenient, that they ſhould enioy the benefit of an able Miniſter, who may informe them herein, what things be morrall, and what be temporary, what is the ſubſtance of euery ceremoniall ſhadow, and what the perpetuall and vnchangeable equity of euery iudiciall conſtitution. Thirdly, touching the preachings of the Prophets; though they be full of comfort, and abounding with ſweet conſolation, becauſe the maine ſcope and drift of them all, is to foreſhew the renewing and reſtoring of the Church by Chriſt, and though they doe alſo notably make knowne the iuſt iudgement of God againſt ſinne; yet they are ſo intermixed with myſticall prophecies, with hidden parables, with hiſtoricall narrations, and deſcriptions of Countries, with borrowed ſpeeches, and proprieties of that holy language Gregor. epiſt. ad Leand. in which they were deliuered, that, howſoeuer ſometimes a lambe (as the prouerbe

n Iob 33. 23. and guidance of ſome learned Ezra [m], ſome Meſſenger, or Interpreter, as Elihu fitly called him [n], and the ſame no ordinary man, but (as the Text ſpeaketh) one of a thouſand, the people cannot poſſibly reape that good which God o Matth. 4. 17. Luke 4. 21. intendeth in the reueiling of thoſe things. Fourthly, for the Sermons of our Sauiour, as we haue but the very ſhort ſumme of many of them [o], according

as I ſaid before) ſo for thoſe which are reported more largely by the Euangeliſts, I perſwade my ſelfe there is no man, but (if he will ſpeake the truth, out of his owne conſcience) he will confeſſe, that he learneth more by them, when by preaching they are explaned, then when they are onely read vnto him. Fiftly, we haue in the Bible very few copies of the Apoſtles ſermons: thoſe that be, are in the booke of the Acts, and yet many times, this is all which is ſaid of them: they preached in Ieſus the reſurrection from the dead[p], they went too and fro preaching the Word, preached Chriſt, preached the things that concerne the Kingdome of God[q], and many the like ſpeeches: all which are like vnto the little cloud, which the ſeruant of Elias ſaw[r]; which though at the firſt it was but like a mans hand, yet at laſt it couered the face of heauen: ſo theſe, being clauſes of very few words, yet miniſter iuſt matter of many large diſcourſes, and the ſame alſo very needfull for the well vnderſtanding of them. If it ſhall be ſaid, that the Apoſtles writings were ſermons. I anſwere, they cannot properly bee called their ſermons: Paul writing to the Romans, ſaith, that beſides this labour of writing, he was ready alſo to preach the Goſpell vnto them[s]: ſo that he did not account his writing to bee preaching. The Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, were the ſummes of that doctrine which they had taught by word of mouth, and according to the tenor whereof, their deſire was, that the Miniſters of the places to whom they wrote ſhould proceede. I know they were read in the Churches[t], according as it was meete, that a matter written to a whole Congregation ſhould bee communicated to all in publike: but what then? I doubt not, but the Paſtors in the ſeuerall aſſemblies, did (as we now doe) preach vpon thoſe Epiſtles, and open and apply them to their auditories: and ſo much may eaſily appeare, as by other places, ſo eſpecially by that ſpeech to the Hebrewes, by the Author of the Epiſtle written to them: I beſeech you alſo brethren, ſuffer the words of exhortation: for I haue written vnto you in few words[u]: which ſpeech (as it is well obſerued by two learned interpreters of our latter times) the Apoſtle purpoſely vſed, leſt his writing ſhould be an occaſion to any, of leſſening that due eſtimation, which the ordinary courſe of preaching did deſerue: It is alone as if the Apoſtle had ſaid: Brethren notwithſtanding all this which I haue written vnto you: yet I pray you continue your accuſtomed reuerence to the labours of your owne Miniſters: I, as the nature of an Epiſtle requireth, haue written briefly, therefore you ſhall ſtill need the aſſiſtance of your watchfull and learned Ouerſeers, who ſhall enlarge theſe points, which I haue drawn as it were into a narrow roome, and by powerfull exhortations apply them either to your comfort or reproofe, as their knowledge in your eſtate from time to time ſhall direct them: This is the meaning of that place, plainely proouing the neceſſity of ioyning the paines of a Preaching Miniſter, with the writings and Epiſtles of the Apoſtles of Chriſt Ieſus. Obſerue this alſo further with me touching that place, that that phraſe (word of exhortation) there vſed, as it is but once more in the new Teſtament (as far as I can call to mind) ſo there where it is, it is put directly for that preaching or as I may terme it) ſermoning, which was wont in publike aſſemblies to follow the reading of the Scripture[x]. And thus haue you my anſwere to this ſecond ſtout reaſon why reading ſhould be preaching, becauſe forſoot, thereby is communicated to vs the ſumme and ſubſtance of the worthy ſermons which Chriſt and the Prophets and Apoſtles haue formerly deliuered. The weakneſſe of which reaſon, I hope this ſhort diſcourſe hath made you to perceiue.

Nymphus. For theſe two alleadged reaſons, you haue indifferently ſatisfied mee: I doe now expect, what you will ſay, touching the laſt reaſon why reading ſhould bee preaching.

Epaph. The third reaſon (as I remember) was, that reading may therefore truly be called preaching, becauſe in our Church the reading of the Scripture is ſo ordred, that firſt, there is a portion of the old Teſtament read, next of the new, new, and thirdly, some parcell of the Epistles: which they will haue to be called preaching, because as the new Testament is an exposition of the old, so the Epistles are the applying of both vnto Gods people. And Scripture also generally doth expound Scripture, and what is preaching, but an expounding of the Scripture? This I thinke is the third reason that you told me of.

Nymph. You haue hit it right, if you can answer it as fully, as you haue rehearsed it truly, then it shall neuer be any occasion of scruple to me hereafter.

Epaph. To make a short answer to a slight reason, this is that I say: It is true, if we compare the whole new Testament, with the whole old Testament, that the latter is an exposition of the former, because it maketh knowne vnto vs, that all the ancient promises, touching the Messias, are yea and amen in Christ Iesus[x]: so that the substance both of old and new is this, Iesus Christ yesterday, and to day, the same also is for euer[y]. And hereupon is that saying of Augustine: The old Testament (saith he) is reuealed in the New, and the New was as it were lapped and folded vp in the Old: the same may also bee acknowledged touching the Epistles, that in them the doctrine both of the old and new Testament is applied and pressed vpon mens consciences by wholesome exhortations. But what then? though this hold in generall, that the new Testament is the Commentary to the old, and the Epistles, the appliers of both, yet it will scarcely be found to hold in particulars: namely, that such a parcell of the new Testament which commeth in order to be read, is an exposition of the speciall doctrine and matter of that portion of the old Testament; which was read before it, or that, that part of the Epistles, which followeth both, is a direct and expresse vrger of both. So that howsoeuer when we diuide the Scriptures into these three parts, the old Testament, the history of the Gospell, and the Epistles, it bee true, that this is the common nature and state of them, that the second part giueth light vnto the first, and the latter raiseth exhortations out of both, yet when we come to single out these parts into seuerall portions, we shall not find that precise and exact correspondence, as that the exposition of the same points shall be said to follow one the other. As for that which is said, that Scripture expoundeth Scripture, it is but a deceitfull kind of speaking, to entrap the simple, as will strait appeare, when the true meaning of it is deliuered in another forme, which is this, That one place of Scripture, affordeth helpe for the clearing of another; which albeit it be a certaine truth, and necessary to be maintained yet it doth not imply that any actuall or vocall expounding, can bee attributed to the Scripture. This hath as little weight in it, as that before touching the speaking of the Scripture. The Scripture speaketh by the voyce of man, and so it is fitted and applied to be the expositer of it selfe by the industry of man. And this is all which I will oppose to this third reason: which though perhaps it may make a shew among those that are of lesse iudgement, yet it can deceiue no man, that hath any ordinary skill in the state of an argument.

Nymph. I must not forget to mind you of those places of Scriptures which are produced, for the weakening of your maine assertion: which places are partly to proue reading to be as operatiue of all Christian vertues, as the most adorned sermons; and partly to make it good, that reading is not only a powerfull kind of preaching simply, but (which is more) of greater power to moue then any Preachers Sermons.

Epaph. Forbeare not I pray you to propound them, I will vse the best of my poore skill to answer them.

Nymph. The places of the first sort are such, in which the same effects seeme to haue followed, or to be promised to follow reading, which can be wrought by preaching: as in Deuteronomie[z], It is said, that the Law beeing read before all Israell, the knowledge of God, the feare of God, and the keeping and obseruing of the commandements of God shall follow thereupon. Againe, in Nehemiah[a], it is reported, that when Ezra had but only read the Law vnto the people, it was of that powerfull operation, tha that it caſt them all into mourning and weeping. Thirdly of Ioſias it is recorded, [b] that the bare reading of the law cauſed him to rend his clothes, and made his heart to melt away within him. Fourthly, euen Faith it ſelfe is aſcribed vnto the action of reading, as, Theſe things are written, that ye ſhould beleeue [c]. Now (ſay ſome) that which is written cannot make vs beleeue but onely by reading. Laſtly, our Sauiour bidding vs to ſearch the Scripture (and that is, ſay they which vrge theſe places, to read it) addeth, that ſo we ſhall finde eternall life [d]. Here in theſe places, you ſee the knowledge of God, the faith of God, the feare of God, the obedience of God, and eternall life with God, are expreſly aſcribed vnto the bare reading of the word, who therefore can deny Reading to be an effectuall kind of preaching? After this manner I haue heard theſe places vrged, I pray you direct me how to anſwer them.

[b] 2 King. 22. 11, 19.

Epaph. I will ſay ſomething to each place in order, hoping to make it appeare vnto you, that none of them make ought for the iuſtification of that for which they are alleaged. And firſt to that of Deuteronomy I anſwer two things. Firſt, that the ſequell of the argument (which is this, By reading, the feare of God, and the obedience of God may be gotten, and therefore Reading is an effectuall kind of preaching) is very weake: for by the ſame reaſon, the publike execution of an offender among the Iewes, might be ſaid to be an effectual preaching, inaſmuch as this fruit was ſaid ſhould come euen by it, that all Iſraell ſhould heare and feare, and do no more any ſuch wickedneſſe [e]. Here is Feare and Reformation intended to follow, and yet here is no preaching: vpon the ſight of the mighty power which the Lord ſhewed vpon the Egyptians, it is ſaid, that the people feared the Lord, and beleeued the Lord [f]. Here was both Feare of God, and Faith too; was therefore the drowning of the Egyptians in the ſight of the Iſraelites, a preaching (properly?) Euery occaſion of furtherance of grace or Chriſtian vertue is not preaching: ſecondly, I anſwer, that it ſhall neuer be proued, that this reading preſcribed in this place, was a bare reading, a reading not accompanied with that, which elſ-where is termed, a cauſing the people to vnderſtand the reading [g]. It is out of all queſtion, that thoſe to whom this charge of reading was giuen, and who were perſonally to performe it, were the Prieſts the ſonnes of Leui [h]; and was it their function to be only readers? was it not their duty to teach Iacob Gods iudgements, and Iſrael his law [i]? and is not to teach in euery mans vnderſtanding a further matter then to reade, that is, to deliuer the words as they lie in the volume of the booke, & no more? ſo that the charge to read, had a further reference, euen to that labour and buſines of expounding, which the Prieſts were bound to ioyne with their publike readings. This for the firſt place. Now for the ſecond, touching the working of the word read vpon Ioſiah, this I ſay: firſt, that Ioſiah was a beleeuer before: for this was in the eighteenth yeare [k] of his raigne, but he did vprightly in the ſight of the Lord [l], euen in the very firſt entry into his kingdome [m]: ſo that this example touching the power of the word read, vpon a man already conuerted, is not proper to our maine queſtion, which is concerning the meanes of the firſt begetting of faith in mens hearts: ſecondly, that the times then were ſomething extraordinary. For by meanes of Manaſſes and Amon, the grand-father and father of Ioſiah, the courſe of teaching was out of vſe. The Prieſts were gone from their charges [n]. Now when the vſuall meanes is wanting, God worketh otherwiſe, and bleſſeth reading only to many, who for the preſent cannot otherwiſe be ſupplied. Thirdly, I may ſafely affirme, that in the ſtory there is nothing to the contrary, but that, together with Shaphans reading there went either then, or not long after, the preaching of Hilkiah the Prieſt, of whoſe preſence at the time of that reading, the text maketh mention [o]. Take which of theſe anſweres you will, it may ſerue for the weakning of the argument from that place. As for that in Nehemiah (which you named as ſecond, but came not to my minde till now) I marueil at the vrging it: ſith there it is plaine that there was a courſe taken by Ezra to make the people vnderſtand [p]. If it be ſaid, that that mourning there reported, is aſcribed to the

q Verſe 9. *words of the Law*q, and therfore not to any gloſſe vpon them. I anſwer, that in euery mans conceiuing, it was not the ſound of the words which made them weep, but the vnderſtanding of the words, and the apprehenſion of the ſenſe and meaning, and intent of the words. Now they were the Leuites which cauſed the people to vnderſtand the Law r: ſo that, ſith the vnderſtanding the law made them weep, (as common ſenſe muſt needs euict) it muſt neceſſarily follow, that it was the Leuites their expounding, and not their onely reading which ſo effected their harts, and diſſolued them into teares. Could the words of the law haue affected this, had they not bin vnderſtood, and not their giuing the ſenſe, that made the people vnderſtand? You named alſo two places out of S. Iohn: Theſe things are written,

r Verſe. 7. Aug. in Ioan. tract. 122. Lyranus, Hugo Card. Ianſenius. that you ſhould (or might) beleeue; and how can things written make vs to beleeue, but only by reading? This is a very ſtrange argument. The purpoſe of that place (in the iudgement of the learned) is to acquaint vs both particularly with the ſcope of that ſtory, and generally with the common drift of the whole ſcripture, which is to bring vs to beleeue, and by beleeuing vnto life eternall. The place is ordinarily vrged by our beſt Diuines, to iuſtifie the ſufficiency of the Scriptures without Traditions. Now what is this to proue reading to be preaching? Yes (ſay you) for how can that which is written make vs to beleeue but onely by reading? Indeed it is true, to the end the matter of the Scripture may bring vs to beliue it muſt be knowne, and to the end it may be knowne, it muſt be read: Is therefore the act of reading the begetter of faith? ſurely no. I aske this queſtion, How can that which is read make vs to beleeue, vnleſſe it be vnderſtood? I hope we will not make the words of Scripture like words of coniuration, the very noiſe whereof ſhall effect that which is intended. If then the vnderſtanding of that which is read be neceſſary vnto faith, why may I not ſay with the Eunuch, How

f Acts. 8. 31. *can we vnderſtand without a guide*f. Though then it bee true, that things written cannot make vs to beliue, except they be read, yet it doth not follow, that therefore onely reading is ſufficient vnto faith. The Scriptures muſt be vnderſtood as well as read, they muſt be beleeued to bee true, as well as vnderſtood, they muſt be applied in particular, as well as aſſented vnto in generall; to theſe the reading of the Scriptures is the next ſtep after writing them, but yet not the thing which is onely neceſſary. As much may be ſaid of that other place, where eternall life is promiſed to ſearching the Scriptures, and to ſearch (you ſay) is, to read: to reade is but a degree to ſearching. I remember the words of a reuerend Diuine vpon that place; Chriſt (ſaith he) doth not onely exhort to read the Scriptures, but to inquire into them, and to ſift them thorowly: he requireth ſuch laborious diligence, as they vſe which ſeeke into the earth for treaſure that is hidden. The Scriptures muſt be read that they may be ſearched, but the naked act of reading or of hearing read is no ſearching. But of theſe places enough, vnleſſe you be not ſatisfied. The other now if you pleaſe.

In the meane time, I will tell you what I haue heard alleaged to proue the word read to be* (as I ſaid) of more power to moue then any Preachers Sermons. Two places I remember aboue others; the one, the ſpeech of Chriſt to the Iewes; If yee beliue t Iohn 5. 47. not Moſes writings, how ſhall ye beleeue my words t?

Epaph. Why? what of that? wherein doth that place make for this purpoſe?

Nymph. Here they ſay, our Sauiour himſelfe aſcribeth greater power of working faith vnto the written Scriptures, then vnto his owne moſt liuely and excellent Sermons.

Epaph. This putteth me in mind of the ſaying of Salomon, He that wringeth his u Prou. 30. 33 x 2 Pet. 3. 16. noſe, cauſeth blood to come out u. Here is a manifeſt peruerting x of the Scripture, and a forcing that from it, which was neuer intended in it. To beleeue Moſes writings, is, to beleeue the matter which Moſes wrote: and to beleeue Chriſts words, is, to beleeue the matter which Chriſt ſpake: ſo that our Sauiours ſpeech is this in other words, If you beleeue not the matter that Moſes wrote, how ſhall you beleeue the matter that I ſpeake? No man can deny this to be the true ſenſe. Here is now no compariſon betwixt writing and ſpeaking, or betwixt reading & preaching, but only a ſimple auouchment of this truth, That a man not beleeuing Moſes doctrine cannot beleeue Chriſts doctrine: which doth not proceede hence, becauſe a matter written and read is more effectuall, then a matter preached and heard; but becauſe of the concurrence and agreement of the doctrin of Moſes and the doctrine of Chriſt: Moſes wrote of Chriſt[y], and Chriſt did interpret Moſes[z]. There being then no difference betwixt their doctrines, he that beleeued not the one, could not giue any credit to the other. Put this caſe, that Chriſt had alſo written, as Moſes did: It might then haue been truly ſaid, that hee which would not belieue Moſes writings, would not beleeue Chriſts writings, and yet it could not follow thence, that there is more power of working faith in Moſes writings then in Chriſts: and yet this is the ſtate of their argument that thus reaſon. Againe, it is a true propoſition, That they which would not beleeue Iohn Baptiſts preaching, would not beleeue Chriſts; yet it cannot be thereupon inferred, that Iohns ſermons were more auaileable to beget faith then Chriſts. So it is true, that they which will not beleeue the preaching now, would not haue beleeued Chriſt himſelfe if they had heard him; are therefore our preachings of more force to worke vpon the hearts of the hearers then were Chriſts? The truth of all theſe ſpeeches depends wholly vpon the ſameneſſe of the doctrine, in the one and in the other. I may adde further, that by Moſes writings, may well be vnderſtood the doctrine that was preached out of Moſes writings; Moſes was preached in the Synagogues euery Sabbath[a], and as well may we ſay, that Chriſt preferreth the ſermons of the Prieſts and Scribes before his owne, as that he aſcribeth more power of working faith to Moſes writings, then to his owne preachings. But what is your other place?

Nyn ph. The other is out of Pauls Epiſtles: where (as ſome ſay) an aduerſary of Pauls found ſo affection a great deale more touched by the bare reading of his letters (which he plainely confeſſed to be ſtrong and mighty) then euer it had been by the hearing of his ſermons, which he deſpiſed as light, and things of no value. His letters (ſaith he) are ſore and ſtrong, but his bodily preſence is weake, and his ſpeech of no value[b]. This is the ſecond place, and this is the manner of diſputing from it.

b 2 Cor. 10. 10

Epaph. To this place, If I ſhall anſwer in one word, that here is no compariſon made betwixt Pauls writings and his ſermons, but only betwixt the phraſe of his Epiſtles, and his ordinary ſpeech, and other deportment when he was perſonally at Corinthus, I am ſure it is more then any man out of the Text is able to diſproue. Some wretched ones, hearing how roundly and how powerfully Paul wrote againſt the corruptions crept in amongſt them, began to thinke with themſelues, What? This man now taketh vpon him being a far off, and thundereth againſt vs with high and peremptory words: but (alas) when we ſaw him here, we beheld in him nothing more then ordinary; nay, he ſeemed then euen baſely feareful, and all his ſpeeches fauored of a deſire to get our fauors. Whence then is this new courage that he hath taken to him being abſent? Thus they meaſured Pauls miniſteriall and apoſtolicall threatnings in his Epiſtles, by his outward ſemblance, when he was among them. The truth is they were no more touched by his menaces when he was abſent, then they were by his behauiour when he was preſent, but did equally contemne both. That ſoreneſſe and ſtrength which they attributed to his letters, was not out of any apprehenſion of the power of them in themſelues. It was altogether ſpoken in ſcorne, Thinks he now to affright vs by letters; who being here carried himſelf amongſt vs ſo demiſſely? The place thus opened, I ſuppoſe, maketh little to the prouing of the power of reading aboue preaching. For what though ſome wondred to heare Paul in abſence to reproue ſo ſharpely, who in preſence both ſpake and behaued himſelfe ſo gently? Is therefore reading able to worke more powerfully vpon mens affections then preaching can? The true drift of Paul was,

Si coram adeſſet vix hiſce auderet. Calu. in locum. humilis propter timorem vel propter fauorem, captandum. Tho. Aq. in locum.

Ostendit falsum esse quod sibi imponitur Tho. Aqu. in locum.

to put off the imputation which was cast vpon him, that when he was many miles from Corinth, he durst reproue and speake vehemently but when he was there hee was no body, but liued among them in weakenesse and in feare and much trembling[c]. And therefore hee maketh it knowne vnto them, that (if need so require) they should find him to equal his fashion and carriage when he commeth, c 1 Cor. 2. 3.

Si necesse fuerit. Tho. Aqu.

to the quality and stile of his Epistles when he is wanting[d]: so then this being further noted, that Pauls intent was to disproue those, who challenged him for a kind of peremptorinesse in his absence, and for a cowardly disposition, being present; there will neuer bee any such thing iustly cald to hence, as, that to heare a mans writings read, is more powerfull then to heare him preach. Thus for this place. Proceed now to what you haue further to enquire.

Nymphus. This point hath held vs longer then I either wished or imagined: but I was willing, seeing God had giuen this opportunity, to mention as much as I could remember, of things which I haue heard spoken touching these points: neither is there now any thing behind (that I can call to mind) which I may further propound vnto you, concerning this matter.

Epaph. It is no maruell though the examination of this one point hath spent vs so much time: for this is certaine, that euery short obiection will require a large confutation. Now for the matter it selfe, there may perhaps be some other obiections differing from these in shew, but yet they will all in the end be found to be the same. I remember I haue read of a vaine-glorious boaster, who hauing but one only seruant, yet because he would be thought to keep a great retinue, would call that one seruant by many seueral names, that men might imagine, he hath sundry seruants: so, men may set new names, and new formes vpon these allegations which wee haue examined, that so they might affright vs with the name of multitude: but when they are looked into, they will proue the same things, varying in colour and pretence, but agreeing in substance.

Exceptions against the manner of preaching.

Nymph. That I may then reape benefit by your aduice, in respect of that which followeth, I said (if you remember) that the exceptions in which I desired to be resolued, were some against preaching it selfe, some against the manner of it: the exceptions against preaching it selfe, I haue (as memory would serue) acquainted you with: there are three things in the manner of your preaching that are much disliked and discommended: the first is, Rudenesse: the second, is Roughnesse: the third, is Ouermuch commonnesse: Touching the first, it is said, that you preach vnlearnedly without eloquence, without allegation of Fathers and of other Authors; and therefore you are accounted but as a company of English Doctors, which preach vpon the sudden what commeth into your heads, without study, which causeth your doctrine to be the lesse regarded.

Epaph. Verily for mine owne part I doe as much mislike rashnes in preaching without due preparation, and rudenesse in handling the word of life, as any required in preaching. Saint Paul saith, preaching must be discharged in all learning[l]. All liberall Arts and Sciences are handmaides to diuinity, and doe owe a kind of seruice vnto Gods Church. It is said, a Minister must be a workeman, rightly rightly dividing the word of truth [m]: now if he wants his knife, that is, his art and cunning, well he may teare and rend it, and violently dismember it, but that he should rightly diuide it, that is vnpossible. Yet withall, this I adde, that if to preach after a popular and familiar fashion, with desire to speake to the conceit and the capacity of the simplest, and to stand most vpon allegation of the holy Text, very seldome and very sparingly mentioning other testimonies, either of profane and diuine Writers: If I say to preach on this wise be to be termed rude and vnlearned preaching, truly for mine owne particular, I had rather acknowledge that fault, then seeke to put it from me.

Nymph. What is then your opinion touching humane learning, and the writings of the ancient Fathers of the Church, are they not very behoouefull for you that are Students and professors of Diuinity?

Epaph. For the study of humane learning, I would not haue you conceiue otherwise of me, but that I hold it very expedient for him that intendeth the profession of Diuinity: I am of his mind, which would haue a Scholler like the witty Bee, which gathereth honey out of euery flower: and I willingly yeeld to S. Augustines conceit, who compareth the knowledge of humane sciences, and profane Authors, to the spoiling of the Egyptians by the Israelites. Howbeit I would also still giue my allowance to these studies with this caution, namely, if they be vsed to prepare the wit, and not to detaine it, and keepe it too long from grauer studies: for seeing as the saying is, Learning is long, and our life but short, it must needs be a preposterous course, to spend the most and best time in those things, which are but as it were circumstances to the principall science. Againe, for the Fathers, this I say in few words, I receiue them, and do a kind of homage to their very names, and I am contented to acknowledge that of them all, which was said of two of them, to wit, that they are euen the hammers of Heretiks, and the eyes of the world. Our later Hereticks, as the Antitrinitarians, the Anabaptists, the Suencfeldians, the Libertines, the Papists, haue reuiued the ancient heresies of elder times, against which those holy men euen spent themselues: and it is to bee reputed as a great blessing of God, and an argument of his especiall care and prouidence for his Church, that their writings are preserued to this day, by which we are the better fitted to grapple with the enemies of Gods truth. And yet in the study of the Fathers, there is diuers times a double error committed: the one is, that men begin to study of Diuinity with the reading of their workes: which course for the most part breedeth both confusion for want of methode, and error also through the lacke of knowledge in the rule and proportion of faith, by which to trie all thing [n], that so onely that which is good may be kept: the other errour is, that many are ouer-much deuoted to them, being ready almost to sweare to any thing which is affirmed by them: whereas indeed they both might and did erre in many things, often altering their iudgements, retracting and repealing many things, seeing more in their grauer yeeres, then at the first they did perceiue. Hierome confesseth, that he was in one mind in some things when he was a youth, and of another when he grew more in yeeres. Hee acknowledged also, that in some things he plaied the Rhetorician, and did discourse something idlely after the manner of declaimers. Augustine in many things was led more by affection then by iudgement, speaking sometimes that whereof he was not fully resolued, as touching Purgatory, and prayer for the dead, out of the abundant loue to his mother Monica: somtimes forbearing to vtter that which he thought, brought lothnesse to incurre the offence of some, yea, and frankely he acknowledgeth, that his ignorance in Scripture was greater then his knowledge. And Origen was so iealous of his owne iudgement, that he would neuer aduenture to write any thing, till he was forty yeeres old, neither would he suffer those things which he had taught publikely, to be taken by Notaries, whose intent was to make them common to the world. And therefore though it be very profitable and expedient for a Di-

Nymph. But I pray ſir, why may not the teſtimonies and writings of men be as lawfully vſed in the action of preaching, as in the priuate preparation for it?

Epaph. It is no good conſequence, to ſay that they may be alleaged in the pulpit, becauſe they may be peruſed in the ſtudy. When as Salomon made preparation for the building of the Temple, he had 80000 Maſons in the mountaines[o], and among ſo many, there could not chuſe but be much hewing and knocking, and hamering; yet, there was neither hamer, nor axe, nor any toole of yron heard in the houſe while it was in building[p]. After the ſame manner it is in Gods ſpiritual building[q]; thoſe things may lawfully be vſed in the making prouiſion for it, which are not of the like neceſſity or lawfulneſſe in the actuall performance of it, But to ſpeake more directly (becauſe theſe ſimilitudes ſerue more to giue light, then ſtrength to a matter) if you be deſirous to know a reaſon why we ought to bee very ſparing in the vſe of mens teſtimonies in our ordinary Sermons, this is (as I thinke) the principall, namely, that our faith ſhould not be in the wiſdome of men, but in the power of God[r]; that is to ſay, that our iudgement in matters of religion might be grounded not vpon the opinions and verdicts of men, but vpon the certen and vndoubted truth of God. What is it to the conſcience of the hearer, that this is ſuch a mans opinion, or the ſaying of ſuch a Doctor, it being ſo well knowne that they might erre? Surely the conſcience can neuer find ſure footing vntill it commeth to the Scripture. It is a good ſpeech of Chryſoſtome: If any thing (ſaith he) be ſpoken without Scripture, the knowledge of the hearers halteth: his meaning is, that the iudgement is neuer firme, till Scripture hath reſolued it. It is of no force (ſaith Auguſtine) to tell the people, Thus I ſay, and this ſuch an one ſaith: only, Thus ſaith the Lord, that ſtriketh the ſtroke, and doth either conuince or confirme the hearers conſcience, it maketh him either to agree to it, or not to bee able to ſay againſt it.

Nymph. Doe you then thinke, that it is not at all lawfull for a Preacher in a Sermon to alleage the Fathers, or to inſert the ſayings of Heathen Poets, Orators, Philoſophers, and ſuch like?

Epaphras. I doe not ſay that it is abſolutely vnlawfull to alleage a ſentence out of an ancient Writer, or out of a Heathen Author: for beſides that, many graue, godly, and well-learned men doe ſometimes ſo: there may bee as I thinke ſome (at leaſt) tollerable cauſes to alleage them. As for example: the Papiſts ordinarily giue out (as it is common in the mouthes of our ſubuerted Proſelites) that the ancient Fathers of the Church are all on their ſide. For this cauſe, ſometimes in ſome ſpeciall points of difference betwixt them and vs, I take it not to bee diſallowable, if the Preacher for the taking away of that ſcruple out of the mindes of men, doe ſhew the conſent of the elder Writers, that men may ſee it is but a vaine bragge which our aduerſaries make, when they ſay that their Religion is ſutable to the iudgement of the ancient Church: yet withall, I would not haue a man make this ordinary. And beſides, I hold it fit for him to admoniſh the people that it is done, not to derogate from the ſufficiency of the Scripture, neither to tie them to the opinions of men, but onely to remoue that doubt, which by the whiſpering of wandring Papiſts, may ariſe in the mindes of thoſe that are not ſo well ſetled in Religion. So likewiſe, for the ſpeeches and ſentences of profane Authors, to barre them vtterly vtterly out of Sermons, I dare not, becauſe I find them vſed by that worthie Paul three ſeuerall times [s]: yet this I ſay, that as Pauls example warranteth, ſo it limiteth the vſe of ſuch teſtimonies, and ſheweth, that it muſt bee done wiſely and ſoberly, and that vpon two occaſions chiefly: the one is, to conuince Atheiſts and irreligious perſons, which eſteeme not the Scripture, that they may be driuen to ſay, Wee are pierced with our owne quilles; and by that meanes may bee either conuerted or ſilenced. Another occaſion is, by ſome other actions or ſpeeches of theirs to ſhame thoſe that profeſſe themſelues Chriſtians. I remember how God threatneth to prouoke the people of Iſrael with a fooliſh Nation [t]? According as many times the Prophets to reforme the backwardneſſe and ſlackneſſe of the Iewes, preach to them of the forwardneſſe and zeale that ſhould be in the Gentiles after their conuerſion. The ſame kind of reaſoning no doubt a Preacher may ſometimes very profitably vſe, by the morally good precepts and actions of the Heathen, to checke the careleſneſſe of men profeſſing Chriſtianity. Thus, now and then I hold a man may tollerably alleage a ſentence of a profane Writer, and a ſpeech of a Heathen Author. As for the ſtrange manner of preaching which is in vſe in many places, both in the Vniuerſities and elſewhere, there is no man well affected, but if hee knoweth it, hee doth exceedingly pity it. One, as though the pulpit were but as a ſcaffold, in which he like a Maſter of Defence were to play his prizes, and to giue teſtimony of his wit, playeth vpon euery word, and deſcanteth vpon euery letter in his text, and as though the Scripture were but a rattle for Children and fooles to make ſport withall, he toſſeth it hither and thither, and will not faile to offer it any violence, to frame it to an imagined conceit, and to draw it to an idle purpoſe. Another, as if his purpoſe were onely to amaze the vulgar, and to affright and aſtoniſh the multitude, mounteth aloft, and is all in his great words, and new coyned phraſes, more fit for ſome Mimick or Tragedian, then a Miniſter of the Goſpell. A third, to gaine the opinion of a profound man, that looketh into matters of more depth then the common ſort, rubbeth ouer the vnſauory writings of ſome Moath-eaten Frier, and by an vncouth faſhion of teaching, together with a multitude of Allegories and intricate diſtinctions, mazeth both himſelfe and all thoſe whoſe vnhappy chance it is to be his hearers. A fourth, to be reputed a good linguiſt, and a man of great reading, ſtuffeth his Sermon with a legion of allegations, and enterlaceth it with many ſhreddings of Latine and Greeke, and by that meanes, though his doctrine perhaps may bee profitable, yet he confoundeth the memory of the diligent and attentiue hearer. Thus, while men being ſicke of the Phariſaicall diſeaſe, Loue the praiſe of men more then the praiſe of God [u], and preferre the oſtentation of their owne ſuppoſed learning before the edification of Gods Church, the people is brought either into ſuch an amazedneſſe, as they thinke that any thing may be made of the Scripture, or to ſuch an vnſetledneſſe in iudgement, as that they doe rather hunt after variety of Teachers for their ſtrange manner of preaching, then ſeeke for ſound inſtruction for their owne better edifying. Thus haue you my iudgement touching the vſe of humane teſtimonies in the exerciſe of preaching.

Nymph. I willingly agree vnto you in that which you haue ſaid touching ſome mens courſe of preaching: I haue ſometimes my ſelfe been at ſome mens ſermons which had the name of great Clerkes and learned men, and yet (it may bee mine owne dulneſſe was the cauſe) ſuch hath been their manner of handling, ſo full of Schoole points, and tearmes and ſayings of men, that neither hath my iudgement been bettered, nor my conſcience any whit comforted. But I doe not yet ſee how you will make the parts of your owne ſpeech to agree: you ſay preaching muſt bee learned and eloquent, and yet you are ſtraite in allowing the vſe of thoſe things which may teſtifie learning, and garniſh and ſet forth your Sermons: for I tell you in the Country here, you are not thought learned, nor yet eloquent, ſo long as you speak nought but English, and withall common and ordinary words, and alleage nothing but places of Scripture, which euery man can search out of the Bible as well as you: I pray you therefore reconcile these two, how there shall be that plainenesse in your Sermons, and yet learning too.

How a sermon may be plaine and yet learned.

Epaph. The matter is not what men thinke, but what men ought to thinke. It is possible for a man to be skilfull in the tongues, and yet to be farre enough off from being a learned man: and much reading, though it argueth industry, and may be a witnesse of a good memory, yet it is no certaine argument of sound iudgement. That man is most learned, who by his skill can make another man learned: for this is the end of preaching, to make men Schollers*: and hee is most eloquent, that can make him who heareth him vnderstand that which he himselfe conceiueth. The intent of learning, is not that men that haue it, should thereby breed astonishment in their hearers, and gaine admiration to themselues, but that by it they should bee profitable and helpefull to those which are without it. So likewise, the vse of eloquence it not to bee as it were a mist before a mans speeches, to cause him to bee the more hardly vnderstood, but to giue lustre (as I may so speake) thereto, and to bring both light and delight to the dull apprehension of the hearers. And therefore whosoeuer so preacheth, as that because of the depth of his learning (as men call it) he passeth the capacity of the meanest hearer: againe, whosoeuer so speaketh, as that his eloquence (as men tearme it) maketh him to be as it were an alient to his ordinary audience, surely the same is neither truly learned, nor truly eloquent, because his learning not conceiued, profiteth not, & his eloquence not vnderstood, benefits not. So that this being considered, that he is most learned, whose preaching is most profitable; and he most eloquent, whose manner of speaking best entreth into euery ordinary conceit: it is an easie matter to reconcile these two, that our preaching must bee learned, yet familiar; eloquent, and yet so plaine, that it may be truly said of it, that *if it be hid, it is hid to them that are lost*y.

Nymph. Yet it will be thought, that preaching will grow into very great contempt, and seeme but base in the eyes of wise Men, if choise speaking and quaint words, which in other discourses are thought very commendable, shall bee banished from your Sermons.

Epaph. Why man, did you neuer heare of this phrase, *The foolishnesse of preaching*z? When the Gospell was first preached in the world, the reason why it had so cold entertainement was this: The Iewes, they would either haue it confirmed by some extraordinary signes, or else they would not credit it (The Iewes require a signe) The Gentiles being men of great learning (as appeareth) they seeing Paul and the rest comming after a very meane fashion, men for their personage silly, for their profession making shew to know nothing but onely Christ, and the same crucified; and for their course and carriage in the ministry, plaine, auoiding purposely the inticing words of mans wisdome, by and by scorned it, and deemed it folly to be caried away by a thing of that simplicity: (The Grecians seeeke after wisdome:) hereupon this Ephitete was cast by the reproachful world vpon the best kind of preaching, to call it foolishnes, & all for this once cause, that as for the substance of it, it is crossing to mans reason, so for the fashion of it, according to the world, it is cleane out of fashion, only beautiful in this, because it is not beautified with that, without which the nice and giddy world thinketh euery thing to be deformed. So that the opinion of men reputing it to be but foolishnesse, because it wanteth that garish garnishing which mens itching eares are much delighted with, ought to be no disparagement to it in the sight of those that are truly religious: and I pray God giue vs all grace that are called to the Ministry, to be so set for the glory of God in the conuersion of soules, that wee may more affect soundnesse of teaching, then fitnesse of speech,

and may thinke it our best Art to secret Art, and to take heed of that bastard eloquence, which this worst age of the world seeketh to make legitimate. It is a good aduice of Ierome, to auoide a pompous kind of speaking in theologicall discourses: for a man (saith hee) that handleth holy matters, a low and (as it were) a foote oration is necessary, and not such as is thickned with artificiall framing of words. It is no matter, though the Papists continue to call vs in scorne Iuke Diumes, because of our close adhering to the holy Text, so long as the soules of Gods seruants shall receiue comfort by vs: for then I am right sure, this being sought for, the little flocke shall pray for vs, and the great shepheard shall bee good to vs.

Nymp. You haue (at least to my vnderstanding) well remooued this imputation of rude vnlearnednesse: I pray you therefore come to the next, which is that your manner of preaching is too austere: you haue nothing in your mouthes but hell and condemnation, and the iudgements of God which (as some say) is the next way to bring men vnto despaire.

Epaph. I confesse indeed, that there is a great error committed by some, whose zeale doth sometimes so far ouer-carry them, that they forget the Apostles rule, of suffering the euill men patiently [a]: and it may not vnfitly be said to many such, as Christ said to his disciples, when they would needs haue had leaue to command fier to come downe from heauen, to consume them that would not receiue him; they know not of what spirit they are [b]. Yet notwithstanding, the conceit of the most, who would haue nothing but peace preached to them, when as it may be truly said to them, as Iehu said to the seruant of Ieboram, What haue they to doe with peace [c]? is not at any hand to be giuen way vnto. It is meet for a preacher to take heed, that he breake not the bruised reed, or quench the smoking flaxe [d]; so it is meet also to beware, how he taketh the childrens bread, and cast it to whelpes [e]. The course warranted to vs by the Scripture, is this: first, to endeauour the softning of our hearers hearts, by bringing them to the sight and sense of their owne wretchednes, before wee aduenture to apply the riches of Gods mercy in Christ Iesus. The preaching of the Gospell is compared by our Sauiour himselfe vnto the sowing of seed [f]: as therefore the ground is first torne vp with the plough, before the seed be committed to it; so the fallow ground [g] of our hearts must first bee broken vp with the sharpenes of the law, and the very terror of the Lord [h], before we can be fit to entertaine the sweet seed of the Gospell. They who desire as liuely stones [i] to be made a spirituall house, euen the habitation of God by the spirit [k], must yeeld themselues to be squared and hewen, and smoothed by the well applying of the law: that so they may become fit to be coupled together with the rest of the building, and to grow vnto an holy temple in the Lord [l]. Wee must haue our mouthes stopped by the law, and in our owne feeling stand culpable before God [m], and euen as it were concluded vnder sinne [n], before we can be admitted to thinke our selues to haue any the least interest in the glad tidings [o] of the Gospell. To preach mercy and grace vnto them, which feele no need of mercy, and know not the worth of grace, is no better then to cast pearles before swine [p], and to expose the louing kindnesse of God vnto contempt. The person that is full, despiseth the hony comb, saith Salomon [q]: and what doth a proud Pharisee, or a churlish Nabal, or a scoffing Ismael, or a politick Gallio, care to heare of the breadth and length, and depth, and height [r] of the loue of God in his son Iesus? the doctrine of that nature, is as vnfitting such vncircumcised eares [s], as the snow the summer, & the raine the haruest [t]. Vnto the horse belongeth a whip, to the asse a bridle, and a rod to the fooles backe [u]. So long as men will be like an horse, and a mule, which vnderstandeth not [x], and manifest their folly by hating knowledge [y], and by making a mocke of sin [z], what other thing should they haue, but that which of right belongeth to them? let the soule be once humbled, and brought to hunger and thirst after righteousnes [a], & then a word in season [b], will be as cold waters to a weary traualler, & as good newes from a far country [c]: then will mercy be as welcom as the raine vpon the mowen grasse, and as the showers that water the earth [d]. Besides, we

Well then, this is the ſubſtance of my opinion in this point: I would haue a preacher to preach peace, and to aime at nothing more then the comfort of the ſoules of Gods people, yet I would haue him withal frame his courſe to the manner of Gods appearing to Eliah: the Text ſaith, that firſt a mighty ſtrong wind rent the mountaines, and brake the rocks: then, after that came an earth-quake, and l 1 Kin. 19.11. after the earth-quake came fier: and after all theſe, then came a ſtill and a ſoft voice [l]. After the ſame manner, I would not haue the ſtill and milde voice of the Goſpel come, till the ſtrong tempeſt of the law hath rent the ſtony hearts of men, and

Nym. But what ſay you now, ſir, to the third accuſation: which is, that you make your preaching too cõmon, & ſo by that meanes draw it into contempt, & make it to be the leſſe eſteemed among men? I can tel you, there be many that are preachers thẽſelues be of that opinion.

Epaph:

Epaph. I am the more sory: and to tell you what I thinke plainly, I am of that mind, that those which blame often preaching as a fault, what colour soeuer they may set vpon it, yet they do it chiefly for the couering of their own shame, that their negligence may not bee taken notice of. I remember the old fable of the Fox, who hauing had a mischance and lost his taile, comming into the assembly of the beasts of the same kind, fell to perswade them, euery one to cut off his taile, pleading the cumbersomnesse and waightnesse of it, with many the like circumstances; but the matter comming to further scanning, it was found, that the wily Fox did it onely to couer his owne deformity, which (if to be without tailes had once bin a fashion) should neuer haue been espied. I leaue you to apply it. Onely I would wish all such so minded, to follow Hieromes counsell, in which he admonished one Calpburnius, vpon some such occasion as this, that if he wanted teeth himself, he should not be enuious against those which were able to eate. When one counselled Moses to silence Eldad and Medad, imagining that their Prophecying in the hoast, might haue eclipsed Moses his credit; Moses liked not the aduice, but wished, that all the Lords people were Prophets [b]. But lest I should seeme too tart against this kind of men (of whom yet there is some hope) I will be content to examine their reasons, because (as I gather by your speech) they seeke (as the Prouerbe is) to be mad with reason.

[b] Num. 11. 27, 28, 29.

Cum ratione insanire.

They say, the ouercommonnesse of preaching, will breed contempt of preaching. First of all, suppose it fareth with some, in respect of preaching, as it did with the vnthankfull Israelites [c], which loathed the Manna, wherwith the Lord so miraculously fed them in the wildernesse; so they also seeme to be (as it were) glutted with the continuall vse of the word preached: yet this can be no reason why a diligent and frequent Preacher should remit any thing of his former industry, and speake more sparingly, drawing his Sermons into a smaller number, then he was wont. It was a worthy speech of Chrisostome; that worthy and industrious Preacher: Although (saith he) I am not ignorant, that I speake in vaine, yet I will not giue ouer; for in so doing I shall be excused with God, although none would heare me. It is truly said, that there are three very good mothers, which haue three very bad daughters, and they are these: 1. Truth, which yet in the world breedeth hatred: 2. Peace, a great blessing of God, and yet through our corruption it causeth idlenesse: 3. Familiarity, and the common vse of a good thing, which is notwithstanding mostly recompenced with Contempt. And yet this is not in the nature of these things, but only in our corruption. For as the nature of God is so perfectly good, that he doth turne euen very euill things into very good things (as he made the malice of the Iewes, in putting his Sonne to death, to be a meane of our saluation) so, our nature is so absolutely euill, that it turneth very good things into euill, as sometimes the grace of God into wantonnesse [d], & Christian liberty into an occasion vnto the flesh [e], and so in these particulars which I haue named. Now because truth is generally hated, shall men therefore banish it from their speeches, and frame their tongues to flattery? Because many abuse the blessing of peace, shall we therefore voluntarily raise tumults, or desire God to put an end to our happy daies of quietnesse? There is in the world no reason for it, neither is there any iust cause, why we should go about to make our preaching as it were, something more dainty, because it may seeme, to some raw and ill disposed stomackes, to breed a kind of fulnesse and saciety. Secondly, if we looke better into it, wee shall see, that the true cause of mens contempt of preaching, is not so much the common vse of it, as the ignorance of the worth and excellency of it. The Sunne, the Water, the Fier, what things more common, and yet what things lesse despised? and the reason is, because we all know, we cannot liue without them. Let men be once perswaded of this, that neither the Sun, nor water, nor fier are more necessary for the outward man, then preaching is for the soule and spirit; and that where it is wanting, there the people

decay[f], then they will neuer be cloyed: or at least, if saciety through the in-bred corruption of our nature creepe vpon them, by the remembrance hereof, it will quickly be recouered. Thirdly, doe but marke what course of preaching it is, which it pleaseth some to call ouer-common: namely, a setled course for euery Sabbath, and it may be some weeke-day Lecture, as it is called vsually. Now I would faine see, how any man can say with reason, that this is ouer often. Paul commandeth to preach in season[g]. If this charge carry any waight, what better season can there be, then the Sabbath, a day of leisure, a day in which men if not for conscience, yet for custome, and because of the lawes, assemble themselues in one place, for the performance of one common duty and seruice vnto God? I remember it is permitted as a circumstance to the historicall relation of some of Christs Sermons, that when he saw the multitude, and great troupes resorted to him, then he spake many things to them[h]: and in another place it is said, that beholding the swarmes of people, and considering their spirituall wants, euen his very bowels did worke within him, and hee began to teach them[i]. So no doubt it is, and ought to bee with euery good Minister: hee cannot (as we say) find in his heart to dismisse a multitude assembled to worship God, without some word of exhortation. Mee thinketh, that when a Pastor of a parish is come into the Church vpon the Sabbath day, and beholdeth his whole flocke gathered together as one man, he should euen imagine, that the very presence of the people doe call to him, (as the Rulers of the Synagogue did to Paul and Barnabas,) that if hee haue any word of exhortation for them, hee should say on[k]. So that, if to preach in season, bee a Minister his duty; and the fulnesse of an assembly vpon the Sabbath bee a seasonable occasion, (as no man can deny it) I cannot see how so seasonable an exercise, can bee charged with ouer-commonnesse, or blamed as a meanes to make the word of God lesse precious amongst men. God requireth, that wee should call the Sabbath a delight to consecrate it[l]: now, how can that day bee hallowed and consecrated as it ought, if so speciall a part of Gods spirituall worship, as preaching is, be left out? how must not the whole other seruice of the day, bee euen as a lame and maimed sacrifice before God? I know indeed it pleaseth some to say, that the meeting of the people together to the hearing of the word preached (a phrase scoffed at, as though it were not the language of the Scripture[m]) is not the chiefe institution of the Lords day. But whatsoeuer mens idle conceits be, yet the truth is, that the most excellent parts of Gods seruice, consisteth in the exercise of his word, the faithfull dispensing whereof is the beauty of the Lords house, and the very life of the Sabbath. The other parts of Gods publike worship, doe but as it were wait and giue attendance vpon this. For wherefore is prayer, but to prepare vs to the word, and to beg of God to bestow those blessings which are promised in the word? & if we will credit the Scripture, men cannot pray, till by preaching they are taught to pray; How shall they call on him, vpon whom they haue not beleeued[n]? &c. The place is known well enough. Againe, what is the vse of the Sacraments, but to be seales to the word? The preaching of the word is the tenor of the couenant betwixt God and vs: the Sacraments are seales to assure vs of the performance of the gracious promises made vnto vs in the word. So that indeed the other specialties of Gods worship are of no vse, but only so far forth as they haue reference to the word. In the 2. of Esay his Prophecy, where the state of the Church of the Gospell is described, the people are brought in, prouoking one another to ascend vp to the mountaine of the Lord, to the house of the God of Iacob[o]. To encourage themselues and other hereunto, they vse this reason, he will teach vs his waies: no doubt in their meetings they were to vse both praier & the Sacraments. But yet, that there they should be taught, was vsed as the principall motiue; because, as to be taught the waies of the Lord, is the principall blessing[p], so obediently to heare, is the principall seruice. Wherein hath the Lord so great pleasure, as in this, when his voyce is obeyed [q]; and how can his voyce be obeyed till it is knowne? and what other ordinary meanes of knowledge shall wee trust vnto besides preaching? Seeing then the Sabbath day is a fit time in regard of peoples assembling together, and seeing also the preaching and hearing of the word, is a maine part of the worship of God, and by consequence especially intended in the first institution of the Sabbath, he that endeuoureth to entertaine his people euery Lords day, with the opening and applying the Scriptures, cannot iustly be accused to be one, who by too much familiarity draweth the ordinance of God into contempt. And if examples bee of any force herein, they be not wanting: of old Moses was read and preached in the Synagogues euery Sabbath day [r]. That which our Sauiour did at Nazareth, is said to haue been his custome [s]. Iustin Martyr testifyeth, that the reading and opening of the Scriptures lasted ordinarily for an houre long euery Sabbath day. Tertullian reports, that in his dayes (and they were neere the times of the Apostles, as were also Iustine Martyrs) there was no publike meeting, in which before the dissoluing of it, they were not fed with holy sermons. Augustine saith of Ambrose, that he preached euery Lords day. And I remember the speech of a reuerend Bishop of this land, namely, that a Minister can no more enter into the Church vpon a Sabbath day without preaching, and not be guilty of a damnable sinne, then Aaron could enter at any time into the Congregation without death, in case he sounded not his belles when he entred. And further, that he committeth the sinne of a dumbe dogge, who passeth ouer a Sabbath without preaching, and in so doing, causeth also the people to pollute the Sabbath day. You see examples and iudgement in this case not to be despised.

Nymphus. Well, suppose it be yeelded vnto, that it be good to continue the exercise of Preaching euery Sabbath day, yet it may seeme superfluous to draw the people to hearing vpon the weeke-dayes, when men are otherwise in their worldly affaires to bee imployed.

Epaph. That is it which I was now next about to speake of: I cannot say, it is a matter of necessity for a Minister to tye himself or his Auditors to a week-day Sermon: yet if a Preacher bee willing so to bestow his paines; and the people, in respect of their dwelling together, as in Cities and greater Townes, be ready to redeeme some time [t] for so good a purpose. I hold it very commendable. When Paul and Barnabas preached at Antioch, we reade, that the Gentiles besought them, that they would preach those words to them, in the space betwixt that and the Sabbath day [u]. Now though I will not say, that that example is a Law, yet I must needs say it is an allowance to such a course: and that which was commendable in them, cannot deserue blame in others of Gods Children, who are willing to diuert some of their time allowed for outward businesses to spirituall occasions; as namely for the increasing of their knowledge, and for the edifying themselues in their most holy Faith [x]. Neither can such a course be more an occasion of bringing preaching into contempt, then the established order for meeting on Wednesdayes and Fridaies to prayer and reading of the Scriptures, can bee or is an occasion to make these good exercises to bee despised.

the ſpeeches of ſome: it is worth the marking, how Satan in his ſubtilty vnder the colour of allowing and vrging ſound preaching, would ouerthrow diligent preaching? therein building vpon a falſe ground, namely, that a man cannot preach often, and preach ſoundly too; which how falſe it is, the vnreproueable labours of many induſtrious Miniſters in this land, are a ſufficient witneſſe. It is a wiſe and holy ſpeech of Salomon, and may be well applied to this purpoſe, z Chap. 11. 24. ſurely commeth to pouerty z. Men of excellent gifts many times, whileſt, either in niceneſſe (fearing to hurt their bodies) or in pride (being as it were vnwilling to make themſelues too common) they are more ſparing in this exerciſe of preaching (which is the glory of a Miniſter) through the iuſt iudgement of God loſe their former perfection, and as through diſuſe they grow leſſe willing, getting a kinde of habite of negligence, ſo alſo they become leſſe able to doe good in the Church of God then they were before. Now, when preaching (through default of often inuring themſelues vnto it) becommeth more irkſome (they being to ſeeke in many things when they fall to make preparation for it) then ſtrait, becauſe of their owne vnaptnes (the iuſt puniſhment of idleneſſe) they conclude, that thoſe who preach ſo often (as they call it) preach carelieſly without ſtudy and without learning. On the other ſide, men (it may be) of meaner (yet commendable) gifts, who remembring the neceſſity which is

So that to ſay, that ſound preaching is for the peoples behoofe, and not frequent preaching, is a meere colluſion, preſuppoſing that which is moſt falſe, namely, that ſoundneſſe of doctrine, and oftneſſe of teaching cannot goe together. How little I approue of raſh aduenturing vpon this kind of exerciſe, that which I haue ſpoken formerly may witneſſe: and how ſmall reaſon there is to ſeparate theſe two, profitable preaching and often preaching, I referre it to any indifferent iudgement.

Nymph. But becauſe ſome that are reputed learned, affirme that often preaching is not ſo much for the peoples profit: ſhew me I pray you ſome good reaſon to the contrary, that I may be able both to preuaile againſt mine owne backwardnes, when I begin to grow weary of diligent hearing, and to prouoke others alſo, when I ſhall behold them as it were glutted with multitude of ſermons.

Epaph. There is a certaine diſeaſe which we are all more or leſſe infected with: our Sauiour Chriſt calleth it ſlowneſſe of heart e: this euill ſickneſſe beeing accompanied with a kinde of ſpirituall ſleepineſſe and lethargy, maketh vs (as it were) a very lumpe of ſluggiſhneſſe, ſlow in attention, ſlow in vnderſtanding, ſlow in remembring, ſlow in practiſing. vp our hearts to our eares, that one ſound may at once pierce them both: this is our ſlowneſſe in attention: there is nothing that is heard more idly, then that which ought to be liſtened vnto moſt carefully. Secondly, for conceit and vnderſtanding, our ſlowneſſe therein, equalleth our ſlothfulneſſe in the former: many points are taught, and that with as much plaineneſſe as it is poſſible; in which notwithſtanding he that ſpeaketh, ſeemeth as it were a Barbarian vnto vs[k]. That ſame naturall man which perceiueth not the things of the Spirit of God[l], ſometimes beareth too great a ſtroke within vs: ſometimes alſo (God permitting it for our better humbling) the god of this world blindeth our mindes, that the light of the glorious Goſpell of Chriſt cannot ſhine vnto vs[m]. The blind man whom Chriſt healed at Bethſaida, when his ſight began in ſome degrees to be reſtored, being asked if he ſaw ought, he looked vp and ſaid, I ſee men walking as trees[n]: he ſaw at the firſt not diſtinctly, but after a confuſed manner. I apply it thus: Wee are all by nature blind in the beſt things, and becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned[o] of ourſelues, wee can not ſee them: now when it pleaſeth God (which commandeth the light to ſhine out of darknes) to ſhine in our hearts[p], we haue at the firſt but as it were a certen glimpſe of heauenly matters, the preciſe and exact knowledge is not by and by attained. Thirdly, touching memory, how great weaknes there is in it, I call euery mans conſcience to witnes. Indeed we ſee how ſurely and how long men can remember matters of the world. The vncharitable and malicious man will remember an euill turne many a yeere, waiting ſtill an opportunity to reuenge it. The old man hath ſo freſh an impreſſion of the toyes and vanities of his youth, that he will make you as perfit a relation of them with euery circumſtance, as if they had been done but yeſterday. The couetous worldling, though perhaps he can neither write nor reade, nor hath any to keep his reckonings, yet he can remember all his bargaines, all his conditions in bargaining, all his dayes, houres, and places, either for the paiment or receit of any thing. The young man or woman can ſoone learne without booke many a ballad or idle loue-ſong, tending to the increaſing or ſtirring vp of vncleanes: and ſo it fareth in other particulars. But come now to matters of religion and piety, alas how true is it that the conceit of them is as ſoone gone from our minds, as the ſound from the eares? When Dauid enquired of Ahimaaz comming from the Camp, touching Abſalon, his anſwer was, I ſaw a great tumult, but I knew not what[q]. Like to this will be the anſwer of a great many, when at their returne from the houſe of God, they are demanded touching the particulars there deliuered: they will ſay, they ſaw a man ſpeaking, and heard the noiſe of his voice, and beheld his geſture, but they know not what, they can tel little of that which was vttered by him. Laſtly, for ſlowneſſe in practiſe, it is long before (after long hearing) we are brought to incline to a good duty, and yet after ſome good diſpoſition to it, there are ſo many delayes, and ſo many pul-backs, yea and after a reaſonable beginning ſo many fallings backe, and ſo much waxing weary of wel-doing[r], that we are too well like Salomons ſluggard, who it may be maketh many offers of riſing, yet whilſt he crieth, Yet a little ſleepe a little ſlumber[ſ], the time ſtealeth away, and his vineyard is all growne ouer with thornes[t] for want of husbandry. This is our drowſie ſicknes of ſlownes of heart: The beſt ordinary remedy againſt this diſeaſe, is often preaching, as you ſhall ſee, if you will examine it. Continuall calling vpon, at laſt through a kind of importunity will win vs to attention. Often repetition of the ſame points will both cleare the vnderſtanding, and ſettle the iudgemet alſo. It grieueth me not (ſaith Paul) to write the ſame things to you, and for you it is a ſure thing[u]. That which after many times deliuery is ſtill committed to forgetfulneſſe, yet at the laſt it is laid vp in the midſt of the heart[x]: and the negligence and backwardneſſe of many yeeres, yet in the end (the words of the wiſe Preacher being like goads[y]) is drawne vnto ſome comfortable perfection. If often preaching may lawfully be complained of, who haue iuſter cauſe to grone vnder the burden of it, then wee that are Miniſters? For beſide the waſting of the bodies health, and the conſuming of the vital parts thereof, what a griefe is it to a mans ſoule, to lift vp his voice[z] to them which will not heare? What a death and toyle to make infinite repetitions of the ſame principles? What a vexation to beate the aire[a]? What a diſcouragement and euen the killing of a mans heart, to haue to doe with thoſe whoſe necke is as an iron ſinew, and their brow braſſe[b]: and yet though theſe things might make a man to reſolue with Ieremy, to ſpeake no more in Gods name[c], yet we haue no ſuch commiſſion to giue ouer, but we are commanded ſtill to be inſtant[d], with all long-ſuffering proning if God at any time will giue repentance[e]. If a Preacher ſhould put forth ſuch a queſtion to Chriſt touching preaching, as Peter did touching forgiuing[f], and ſhould ſay, Maſter how long wilt thou that I preach vnto a ſtif-necked and obſtinate people? vnto ſeuen times? I doubt not but he would returne him the like anſwer that he did to Peter, I ſay not vnto thee, vnto ſeuen times, but vnto ſeuentie times ſeuen times. When Peter and his company had trauelled in fiſhing all night, and had taken nothing, neuertheleſſe at thy word (ſaid he to Chriſt) I will let downe the net[g]. The Lord hath called vs to be Fiſhers of men[h]. And though it be a great heart-breaking to haue laboured long to ſmall purpoſe, yet for our Maſters ſake there is further trial to be made, hoping that yet at the length that long expected draught will come, and accounting our ſelues happy, and all our paines well beſtowed, if with all that we can doe, we ſhall gaine one ſoule vnto God. To ſhut vp this point, then if we ſhall duly weigh our own backwardneſſe, and withall the Miniſters duty, of whom that inſtant diligence is required, we ſhall then ſee, that it is much and often preaching which we muſt wiſh for, beſeeching the Lord to pardon that aboue all things, if we ſhall finde the word (through the common vſe of it) to grow vile before vs.

Nymph. You haue ſaid well to this point, onely you haue forgotten the ſimilitude of the raine, which may bee ſome occaſion of doubt to vs that are common men, both becauſe we finde in the Scripture the word of God to be compared to the raine, and becauſe alſo in common experience wee feele the inconuenience of too great abundance of raine.

Epaph. I had not forgotten it, though if I had, it were not much materiall, it being indeed (but for the ſatisfying of your minde) ſcarce worth the anſwering. Wee haue a rule in Schooles, that borrowed ſpeeches doe make no grounded arguments; and for Scripture ſimilitudes it is certen, that by preſſing euery thing that is applied by the Spirit of God for ſome ſpeciall illuſtration, a man ſhall run into a world of abſurdities; according as the Papiſts in their violent wringing of many parables, to giue ſo me colour to their vile opinions, affoord vs no ſmall number of examples. It is true, the Word of God is in the holy Scripture compared to raine[i], and that very fitly: becauſe as the raine falling vpon the Land, maketh it either more fruitfull or more barren, according to the nature of the ſoyle vpon which it falleth; ſo the word that goeth out of the mouth of the Lord, doth not returne vnto him voide, but it becommeth either the ſauour of life vnto life, or of death vnto death[k] to thoſe which heare it: making the children of God more zealous of good workes[l], and the wicked more outragious. I do not find in the Scripture the ſimilitude of raigne, when it is applied to the word, to haue any further meaning: and therefore to ſtretch it further according to a mans owne priuate fancy, is to forget the Apoſtles rule of vnderſtanding according to ſobriety[m]; and wilfully to continue in ſuch a practiſe, is no other but to peruert the Scriptures to a mans owne deſtruction[n]. The Lord doth in the Scripture threaten it as a plague, to take away the Prophet[o], and to ſend a famine of hearing the word[p], and he promiſeth it alſo as a bleſſing, to giue Paſtors which ſhall feede the people with knowledge and vnderſtanding[q], and watchmen which all the day and all the night continually ſhall not ceaſe: but I doe not remember that euer I read, either often often preaching threatned as a curse, or seldome and thinne preaching promised as a blessing. And surely, if, as abundance of raine, so abundance of preaching were a punishment, I doubt not but the good lawes of our Church, which haue prescribed a prayer against ouer-much raine, might well set downe the same course in respect of much preaching: from which notwithstanding, euery honest mans eares would abhorre. And therefore I will be bold to conclude, that this reason pressing the similitude of raine and moysture, to the washing away of diligent preaching and hearing from out of Gods Church, is a very dry reason, which though it may appeare to haue some tast of wit, yet hath scarcely any smacke of honestly.

Nymph. I pray God therefore we may remember to make the prayers which our Sauiour taught vs namely, that the Lord of the harueſt should send forth labourers into his harueſt [s], and that he would so furnish them with gifts of knowledge, of vtterance, and of zeale, that they may vrge and call vpon vs continually: for (as you truly said) we are so slow and backward that except we be daily pricked forward and rouzed vp, we shall grow cold and careleſſe, and be euen frozen vpon the dregs of our owne security. I know Sir, that in good manners it is now high time to forbeare troubling you any further, yet I would gladly craue your direction in one thing more; and that is this: for mine owne part I thanke God, I both do, and euer (since I had any taste of goodneſſe) haue loued preaching, onely I find a great defect in my selfe that I cannot so profit by it as I would, and as I see many do: I am bold therefore to intreate you to shew me how and by what meanes I may heare profitably, both for the setling of my iudgement, and for the increase of holineſſe in my common conuersation. The humour of many men, are herein very strange: some say, that there are such differences of opinions among you that bee learned, that a common man knoweth not which of you to beleeue: others hold an opinion, that it is not for priuate or dinary persons, to take vpon them to argue or iudge of those things they heare; so that the onely resolution of the greateſt part is, that it is the safeſt and wiſeſt way either not to heare, or else if for satisfying the lawes they muſt heare, yet not to giue credit. Beſides, there are many of vs which heare vſually, and yet are little bettered by it: their knowledge is but vaine iangling [t], and their conuerſation not much differing from the irreligious multitude: they are like the Fiſh in the Sea, which howbeit it liueth in the salt water, yet is without all taſte of saltneſſe. So though they liue vnder a setled miniſtry (which is the salt of the earth [u]) yet being taſted, will be found vtterly without any true seaſoning. Now if it might be, I would be loth to be in this number: and therefore my laſt (though not my leaſt) ſuit vnto you, is to affoord me your beſt counſell in this caſe.

[u] Mat. 5. 13.

Epaph. I muſt needs commend your good care to this matter: for indeed whatſoeuer men thinke, there is nothing so full of danger as is idle and vnprofitable hearing. Thoſe things which are in their owne nature beſt, being ill vſed, become moſt hurtfull. Hearing is the ordinance of God to draw vs vnto himſelfe: but being vſed careleſly and vnprofitably, it turneth to our greater condemnation: and therefore you cannot be too carefull herein. It is true, that men pretend many things, whereby to ſhift off the diligence which is required in this behalfe: but their pretences being examined, will become lighter then vanity it ſelfe. They ſay, wee that are Preachers cannot agree among your ſelues; that is not abſolutely true: for bleſſed be God, many of vs doe proceed by one rule, and doe mind one thing [x]. Beſides, so long as we liue here in the world, our vnderſtanding is mixed with the darkneſſe of ignorance, and by reaſon thereof, there cannot chuſe but bee differences of opinions in ſome things euen amongſt the beſt. Take me three or foure, or halfe a dozen, which are dim-ſighted, and cannot ſee without ſpectacles, if you ſet them to diſcry a thing a farre off, they will be of diuers and contrary opinions touching it; now Saint Paul ſaith, that in this life we doe but ſee, as in a glaſſe darkely [y]: and therefore our iudgements in all things at all times cannot bee the ſame. Moreouer, it pleaſeth the Lord ſometimes for their puniſhment, which haue not receiued the loue of the truth [z], and for the diſcouery of thoſe which are approued [a], to giue leaue vnto Satan to bee a falſe ſpirit in the mouthes of ſome [b], and to ſuffer them to come amongſt vs in ſheepes clothing, though inwardly they are rauening wolues [c]. Now the poſſibility of being deceiued when we heare, ought rather to increaſe our care in hearing, then to be an occaſion of vnwillingneſſe to heare. This may be manifeſted by a plaine ſimilitude: Salomon exhorting vs to bee carefull to obtaine the knowledge of Gods truth, deliuereth his exhortation in theſe words, Buy the truth [d]: from this kind of ſpeech I reaſon thus: If a man wanting neceſſaries, as meate and rayment, and being aduiſed to furniſh himſelfe from the market, ſhould make this anſwer: The World is ſo full of deceit, that a man knoweth not whom to truſt, thoſe which ſell, many of them will not ſticke to beguile their owne fathers, and the trickes and deuiſes that tradeſmen haue are infinite, ſo that it is twenty to one but a man in chaffering with them ſhal be beguiled: I had rather therfore goe neere the wind, and want neceſſary prouiſion, then put it to the aduenture of buying. If (I ſay) a man ſhould pleade thus, what would we thinke of him, but that either he were very fooliſh, or very froward? And indeed wee might well ſo eſteeme him, becauſe we know, that the fraud of others muſt be preuented rather with care and circumſpection, and not vſed as an occaſion of abridging a mans ſelfe of neceſſaries. Is not he then as much as a foole, who wanting the ſauing knowledge of the truth, and being called vpon to repaire vnto the houſe of God (which is as it were the Lords market, in which the hid treaſures of wiſdome and knowledge are laid open to the view and offered freely to the vſe of all men) ſhall eſtſoones pleade the deceiueableneſſe of falſe doctrine, the corruption of many Preachers, the ſhew of ſome contrarieties among them? Yes verily, for is he to depriue himſelfe of the neceſſary foode of his ſoule, becauſe it may be for lacke of care, that in ſtead of hoping to be fed, he may bee poyſoned? Nay rather, he is to become the more wary, the more diligent in prayer, the more exerciſed in the Scripture, that when he commeth to buy the truth he may not be deceiued.

Nymph. Truly you ſay well: only it ſeemeth you build vpon a falſe ground (at leaſt in the opinion of ſome) namely, that we which are priuate men, may iudge of that which we heare, and examine it whether it be the truth or no: I deſire therefore that you would proone that point well vnto me.

Epaph. Indeed it is the opinion of popery, that it is not for euery particular perſon of himſelfe, to examine, trie, or iudge, which is true or falſe doctrin, who is a true or falſe doctor; and it is a principle in that Church, that it ſufficeth a common man to giue his conſent to the Church, and to beleeue as the Paſtors beleeue. But all the true Miniſters of Ieſus Chriſt are of another iudgement: for how ſoeuer we doe vrge all reuerent reſpect to the preaching of the word, as to the ordinance of God, yet we take not vpon vs to haue dominion ouer the faith of our hearers, as though we would bind them to giue credit to euery thing we ſpeake, by the authority of our name (as Ambroſe his words are) therefore becauſe wee ſpeake it. And in truth there is nothing more manifeſt in Scripture then this, that the people ought iudicially to examine the doctrine taught, before they dare to entertaine it. Paul to the Galathians ſaith thus, Though we or an Angell from heauen, preach vnto you otherwiſe then that which we haue preached vnto you, let him be accurſed [f]. Now if he which preacheth contrary to the reuealed truth bee accurſed, ſurely the caſe of him which giueth credit to him muſt needs bee dangerous: and therefore for the auoidance of the danger, it is meet for euery man to be fully perſwaded in his owne minde [g], that he may diſcerne things that differ one from another [h]. The Theſſalonians are willed to trie all things [i]. Thoſe to whom Saint Iohn wrote, are counſelled to trie the Spirits [k]. Salomon hath branded him for a foole, who will beleeue euery thing [l]. It is a diſgrace for men profeſſing religion to be like children carried with euery wind of doctrine [m]. It is an honour to be like the Nymph. Indeed me thinketh it standeth with some reason that we should trie the doctrine which we heare, before we credit it: for otherwise we may soone be drawne into many errors: we haue a prouerb, that a man must tell money euen after his owne father, not in distrustfulnesse, as though we thought he would deceiue, but in wisedome, because vnwittingly he may be deceiued. No doubt we ought to be much more circumspect in matters of doctrine, because euen the best that teach, in that they are men, may erre, and because also in matters of that nature, to be deceiued, is so exceeding dangerous. But all the matter is, how to iudge, and by what meanes to be able to know truth from falshood, wholesome from vnwholesome doctrine.

A similitude like to this, in the same case (Chrisostome vseth, hom. 13. vpon 2. Cor.

Epaph. Know this therefore for a truth, that in all cases and controuersies of religion, the Scripture onely must be admitted as vmpire, and euery thing must stand or fall at the determining thereof: for therefore hath the Lord commanded it to be written, and to bee made common to all, that by it all controuersies might be decided, all doubts resolued, all heresies confuted, all truth confirmed, euery conscience guided, euery mans life framed. Nothing is sound that is disagreeing from it, nothing vnsound that is consonant thereunto. We are well content to let that absurdity dwell with the parents of it the Papists: namely, that the Scripture is rather to bee termed an admoniſher, then a Iudge: let it bee their glory, to thinke basely of the written word, and to ascribe the authority of iudging to vnwritten verities and traditions, rather then to it; we haue learned, that the Law which is come forth of Sion, and the word of the Lord that hath issued from Ierusalem, must be Iudge among the nations [p]; and we are commanded to appeale still to the law, and to the testimony, assuring our selues, that there is no light in them which speake not according to this word [q]. We find that our Sauiour himselfe stood to the iudgement and triall of the Scripture [r]. Paul submitted his doctrine to the same rule [s]: We reade the learned in former ages to giue the priuiledge of iudging onely to the Scripture. Augustine disputing with a chiefe Arrian, saith thus: Let vs dispute by the authority of the Scriptures, which are indifferent witnesses to vs both. And in another place: The Epistles of Bishops giue place one vnto another, and Councels are mended one by another: but the canonicall Scripture, that is the rule of all, and must correct all. Basil the Great demandeth, that against all Heretiques, the Scripture onely bee the vmpire. Cyprian saith, that the rules of all doctrines haue flowne from the Scripture. Chrysostome willeth his hearers to fetch all things from the Scripture. But what should wee stand vpon testimonies of men, when the fore-alleaged places out of the written Text are so apparant? Therefore to prepare you to the trying of the doctrines which you heare, hold this firme ground, That all points must receiue their allowance from the Scripture.

The Scripture the only iudge of doctrine.

Nymph. I could easily agree to you in this that you haue said, but that there is this difficulty therein, namely, how to make vse of the Scripture, and to apply it to this worthy purpose of finding out the truth thereby. You that are schollers, and haue the helpes of learning, and of the Arts and Tongues, may make better shift in these cases, then we plaine men of the countrey can. There is no man that preacheth, but he alleageth the Scripture, and so carrieth it, that it may seeme to be absolutely for him, in that which he auoucheth: so that vnlesse we be taught how to iudge by the Scripture, we shall still be in suspense.

How to make vse of the Scripture for the trying of the truth.

Epaph. You haue made a very needfull motion; and therefore, if you will listen to it, I will acquaint you with that course whereof my self both in my pri-uate ſtudies, and in hearing others publikely, haue had very comfortable experience. Firſt of all, when you haue occaſion and opportunity to heare, you muſt s Eccl.4.17. remember Salomons aduice, to take heede to your foote [s], and to vſe ſome preparation before-hand, praying the Lord to open your eyes, that you may ſee the wonders of u Pſal.119.18 his law [u], and that his Spirit of truth may be with you, to leade you into all truth [x]. x Ioh.16.13. Secondly, you muſt labour by all meanes to ſubdue and ſuppreſſe the ſeeming wiſdome of your owne heart, reſoluing to yeeld vp your ſelfe to whatſoeuer the Lord reueales, though it be altogether croſſing to your owne reaſon, and y 1 Pet. 5.5. diſpleaſing to nature. For as God reſiſteth the proude, and maketh them which pro-

a Pſ. 25.9.14. the humble his way, and reueale his ſecrets to them that feare him [a]. Thirdly, when you haue thus framed and fitted your ſelfe by prayer and humility, be ſure to remember this rule eſpecially; namely, that that doctrine is the trueſt, which makes moſt for Gods glory, moſt for the comfort and reliefe of a wounded conſcience, moſt for the reſtraining and curbing of our corrupt nature, and fleſhly affections. Marke a little, and I will ſhew you the reaſon of this rule. Firſt b Prou. 16.4. of all, the end why God made all things, was the glory of his owne name [b]: the thing eſpecially aimed at by him, in that great and admirable worke (the redemption of mankind) and in all the particulars of it, euen from the firſt foundation of it, his eternall election, vnto the laſt end hereof, our glorification in heauen, is: That no fleſh might glory in his preſence: but that he that glorieth, might c 1 Cor. 1.29, glory in the Lord [c]. This being then the maine end of all Gods courſes, to keepe
31. the glory of all things entire vnto himſelfe, it muſt needs be, that that doctrine μὴ κεκωχεύσηται is the moſt ſound, which doth not admit the leaſt impeachment of Gods glory. Secondly, one chiefe end of the Scripture is, as to beate downe man, and cleane to ſtrip him of all goodnes and inclination thereunto, for the keeping of Gods glory whole vnto himſelfe, ſo alſo to put gladneſſe into all diſtreſſed hearts, and d Pſal.51.12. to bring the ioy of ſaluation [d] to all afflicted ſpirits. Dauid ſaith, it is one proper-e Pſal. 19.8. ty of the word of God to reioyce the heart [e]. And Paul affirmeth, that the driſt f Rom.15.4. of all the Scripture is, that wee through patience and comfort thereof, might haue hope [f]. So that, look what doctrine bringeth the fulleſt comfort to a poore ſoule, when it is euen at the depth of ſorrow, that muſt needs be wholeſome doctrine, ſeeing it concurreth with the whole ſcope of the Scripture. Thirdly, one thing pricipall intended in the diſcouery of that grace of God which bringeth ſaluation
g Tit.2.11,12, vnto all men, was that vngodlines and worldly luſts ſhould be denied [g], that the fleſh with b Gal.5.24. the affections and luſts ſhould be crucified [h], that the body of ſin ſhould be deſtroyed [i], and i Rom.6.6. that mortifying our members which are on the earth [k], we ſhould ſerue the Lord all k Coloſ.3.5. the daies of our life in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe before him [l]. And therefore that l Luk.1.74,75 doctrine which preſſeth vpon men, the moſt preciſe and ſtrict obedience to Gods will, not giuing any the leaſt toleration to any the ſmalleſt ſinne, but ſtill bridling mans naturall inclination vnto euill, that is the truth of God which euery ſeruant of God ought to entertaine. Tell me now, vnderſtand you this direction?

Nymph. Yea truly, I doe in ſome meaſure vnderſtand it; yet if you ſhall pleaſe by one or two examples to ſhew the vſe of it, I ſhall the better perceiue it, and know the rather how, and after what ſort to apply it.

Epaph. I will not ſticke with you for that: becauſe I am very willing to ſatisfie you in this matter. For the firſt branch therefore touching the glory of God, take this example: Wee teach at this day, that faith onely iuſtifieth: our meaning is, that the very thing which maketh a man ſtand righteous before God, and to bee accepted to the life euerlaſting is, the imputed righteouſneſſe of Chriſt Ieſus: which righteouſneſſe is appropriated and applyed to vs onely by faith. Others (as the Papiſts) ſay, that to iuſtifying of righteousnesse, that is to say, charity with the fruits thereof. So that we exclude, they establish the merit of mans workes. Well then, in this difference of opinion, there being learned men on both sides, and Scripture alleaged on both sides, you desire to know which is the truth: bring them both to the touchstone, and see which of the two maketh most for the glory of God, and the matter will soone bee answered, the doubt will quickly bee cleared. Consider therefore how euen the Apostle Paul by this rule decideth this controuersie: By what law (saith hee) that is, by what meanes of saluation, is boasting excluded? Not by the law of workes, but by the law of faith. Hereupon he concludeth, therefore a man is iustified by faith, without the workes of the Law [m]. And indeed the reason is excellent, for if man could by any of his owne doings, further his owne saluation, or procure the encrease of glory in heauen, he had then some matter of glorying, and might (as it were) account himselfe the lesse beholden vnto God. But iustification by faith onely, taketh all vtterly from man, and ascribeth his whole saluation, the beginning, middle, and ending vnto the Lord: so haue you both an example of this rule, and warrant for it, being vsed by the Apostle to decide so great a controuersie: and I am sure that you shall finde it of very great vse in many maine points of our religion. Secondly, for the second branch of the rule, which is about the comfort and reliefe of a distressed and distracted conscience; marke this particular for the manifestation of the force of the rule. It is taught and maintained in our Church, that a Christian man may bee vnfallibly certaine of his saluation in his owne conscience in this life, and that by an ordinary and speciall faith. Others there are (both Papists, and some also amongst our selues) which hold that the certainty of saluation, which in this life can bee attained to, is onely coniecturall and probable, grounded onely vpon likelihoods: and this certenty they confesse to bee vncertaine, and such as many times doth deceiue. Behold, heere is a great controuersie, and much is said on either side: now you that are a priuat man, would gladly know, to which part you may safely encline, and what to rest vpon, as the alone truth in this case. My aduice is therefore, that for your full satisfaction herein, you scan the matter by this rule: suppose a spirit deepely wounded, a conscience set as it were vpon the racke, seeing nothing in God but Iustice and Maiesty, and a consuming fier; finding nothing in it selfe but sinne and corruption, and infinite matter of despaire, so that by this meanes it is brought to such an exigent, that it knoweth not which way to turn, but is euen ready to crie out with Paul, Who shall deliuer me [n]? Enquire now which of those two doctrines doth affoord the best comfort in this wofull case, that will quickly appeare: for the one holdeth the conscience in a continual suspence, the other laboreth to settle it in the firme assurance of Gods vnchangeable loue in Christ Iesus: the one bringeth a plaister, but much too little for the sore; telleth of the riches of Gods mercy, of the depth of his loue, of the vnsearchable sufficiency of Christs merit, but yet denieth the soule to bee assured of a particular interest into it, and by that meanes rather increaseth then releeueth the anguish: the other applieth the medicine to euery part of the wound, sheweth Christ, discouereth the riches of Christ, and putteth the amazed heart into a full assured and comfortable possession of Christ. So that whatsoeuer shall bee argued to the contrary, you may bee bold to build vpon that which bringeth the most ioyfull and welcome tidings to an affrighted conscience: that is best agreeing to the scope of the Scripture, that commeth neerest to the nature of the Gospell. Come now to the third branch, which is concerning the liberty of the flesh, and let mee giue an instance of that also. There is at this day a doctrine (almost openly taught, or at least tollerated by many that should teach otherwise) namely, That a man may doe well enough, without so much preaching: that it is not a matter of that great neceſſity to frequent the places of Gods publike ſeruice, but that a body may do well enough at home, with ſome priuate deuotions: that common men need not trouble themſelues greatly with the Scripture, or with knowledge in religion. that the religious ſpending of the Sabbath is a thing indifferent: that often communicating at the Lords table is not of any great importance, but that once or twice in a yeere is as good as euery day: that it is not good to be too forward in matters of religion, ouer-ſtraight in conuerſation: that God will beare with many ſmall matters, &c. On the other ſide, there is a doctrin that telleth vs, and proueth vnto vs, that if we deſire to walke, and to liue ſo as may pleaſe God, & as becommeth Chriſtians, we muſt make conſcience of often hearing the word, we muſt as new borne babes deſire the ſincere milk therof, that we may grow thereby [o], neuer contenting our ſelues with any meaſure of knowledge: we muſt ſtriue and ſtraine our ſelues, though ſometime it be with ſome trouble and diſeaſing of our bodies, to come to the places of Gods worſhip, and to giue attendance at the poſtes of the doores of the Lords houſe [p]: we muſt call the Sabbath a delight to conſecrate it [q], reſting not onely from labour, but from all things that may diſable, and make vs more vnfit for Gods ſeruice, either in reſpect of preparation before it, or of conference and mediation after it: wee muſt for the ſtrengthening of our faith, and the ſolemne remembring of the death of Chriſt often communicate: wee muſt in our liues walke circumſpectly, with zeale and courage, and openneſſe in the practiſe of religion: we muſt make conſcience of the ſmalleſt ſinne, and neuer thinke we haue done enough in the duties of holy obedience. Here is againe a new queſtion, and you perhaps in ſome of theſe particulars, through the diuerſity of opinions, may be vnreſolued. If you demand of me, how you may be ſtabliſhed: I referre you to this rule; ſearch and conſider which of the two tendeth moſt directly to the yoking and hampering, and reſtraining of mans naturall diſpoſition: that will ſoone appeare, if you looke out into the world, and harken how theſe doctrines are entertained: for the former, who ſo ſhall teach it, or ſeeme to approue it, no doubt that man ſhall haue many followers, and many fauourers: for doth not euery man almoſt like it, and wiſh it, that there ſhould be leſſe preaching? that it ſhould be free to ſpend the Sabbath, euery one as himſelf liſteth? to receiue the Communion when men thinke good? to neglect knowledge? to baniſh the Bible out of their houſes, or elſe to let it like old harneſſe, ruſting for lacke of occupying? will it not by and by be receiued, that it is not good for men to be preciſe, to be ouer-ſcrupulous, to ſtand too nicely vpon points? Surely, he that ſhould teach this, I might ſay of him, as the Prophet ſpake of old, He were a Preacher for the people [r]. But now for the other doctrine, ſee what an acceptation it hath in the world: fie vpon it wil one ſay: what a tedious thing is this to heare ſo many Sermons, what a trouble to come ſo often to the Church, what a miſery to be reſtrained from our Sunday ſports, what a dull time will it be, and how long will the day ſeeme, if thus we be limited? What need ſo many Communions? what ſhould men be ſo hot and earneſt in religion? if this once take place, farwell all mirth, farwell all good company, adiew to all thriuing, if this bee hearkned vnto. This is, and will be the intertainement of this doctrine: it will be reputed as the Prophets Sermons were of old, euen the burden of the Lord [s]. So by the generall yeelding or gain-ſaying of the multitude, it may ſoone appeare, which of the two is the greateſt enemy to the fleſh: and therefore you both may and muſt conclude with the latter doctrine, that this is from aboue, becauſe it meeteth with our corruption at euery turne, and is ſtill beating it downe, labouring to keepe it within compaſſe. And by this rule (to gaine it the more credit) Paul tooke vp the queſtion among the Galatians, touching the vſe of Chriſtian liberty, ſetting it downe for a ground; that it is then beſt vſed, when it is not vſed as an occaſion to the fleſh, but with a holy reſpect to become ſeruants each to other by loue [t]. Thus I haue (for your better vnderſtanding) giuen you an exam-pie of euery branch of this rule, that you may know how to apply it; assuring you out of mine owne poore experience, that there are very few of the fundamentall points of religion, which directly concerne the worship of God, or our conuersation with men, but they may receiue their triall by this Canon, & may truly be said to stand or fall, according to the iudgement and verdict thereof.

Nymph. I thanke you vnfainedly for this direction; yet touching this latter branch, it seemeth to me that there may be some doubt made, because the Popish religion is thought to restraine and punish the flesh more then ours: for it imposeth many very straight things, and vnpleasing, as fasting, penance, going bare-foot, pilgrimage, payings of money to purchase prayers when men are dead, and diuers the like: I pray you therefore cleare me this onely doubt, and then I am satisfied.

Epaph. I say in one word of all these, as Paul did of things very like, They haue indeed a shew of wisdome in voluntary religion, and humblenes of mind, and in not sparing the body[u]; but yet another way they giue greater liberty: for when it is taught, that these things are meritorious, and of worth to doe away many sins, what will not a man be content to doe, for a weeke or an houre, or a short time, for the remouing of the sinnes of his whole life? and who will not be content when he is dying, to giue all that away which he must needs leaue behind, for the deliuery of his soule from a supposed Purgatory? Who would not goe an hundred miles on pilgrimage to the shrine of such or such a Saint, to be assured that it shall be his discharge for the remainder of his life? So that though these bodily impositions may seeme something straight one way, yet they giue treble liberty another way, and therefore may truly be said, rather to be an occasion to the flesh, then to limit the corruption of the flesh. [u] Coloss. 2. 23.

Nymph. It is very true, for what will a man feare to doe, so long as he is taught, and by teaching perswaded, that by almes-deeds and fasting (falsly so called) and some legacies bequeathed to religious vses (as they terme them) or by conformity to the penall iniunctions of a Priest, he may make sufficient satisfaction? therefore I hold this for answer enough to that obiection.

Epaph. Well neighbour, to let that passe, and to follow the motion which you made, I must to the former rule adde one thing, which is this: Take heed by all meanes of such eares as the Apostle calleth itching eares[x], and of deligh- ting to get an heape of teachers. It is a dangerous humour to affect variety of instructers, and it must needs cause distraction: it fils mens heads with a world of idle questions, and draweth them into vaine iangling[y]. It is Satans policy as long as he can, to hold men in ignorance, and in the contempt or neglect of knowledge: when he cannot preuaile that way, but men will listen to instruction, then he will endeauour to busie them with profane fables, and vaine bablings, which breede questions, rather then that godly edifying which is by faith[z]: that so hee may withdraw their thoughts, and steale away their hearts from those things which ought principally to be looked vnto. Especially remember the aduice of Paul to his sonne Timotheus; Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned, and art perswaded thereof, knowing of whom thou hast learned them[a]. Note the place. The Apostle presseth a stiffe and firme continuance in truths receiued, when as these two things concurre therewith; a mans owne perswasion; and the consideration of those which first taught vs. First, for a mans owne perswasion, I pray you to obserue it, lest I should seeme in stead of grounded setlednesse, to commend selfe-willed peeuishnesse. By being perswaded, Paul meaneth thus much, as if he had said to Timothy; If it be an opinion which thou hast not suddenly entertained, but vpon good aduice, if it hath seated it selfe in thy iudgement, then, when as thou with care and conscience, with humility, with vsing the ordinary meanes, with prayer vnto God, with hearty desire to be guided in the truth, hast enquired after knowledge, surely thou oughtest not, being by these degrees brought vnto it, and in this manner perswaded in it, rashly and suddenly to forgoe it. This is that which is meant by perswasion in [x] 2 Tim. 4. 3. [y] 1 Tim. 1. 6. [z] 1 Tim. 4. 7. Chap. 6. 20. [a] 2 Tim. 3. 14.

in this place. A ſetledneſſe of iudgement, following vpon an orderly courſe to bring a man thereunto. The ſecond thing that muſt concurre, is the conſideration of the parties of whom we haue learned: as if Paul had ſaid, Obſerue and marke well what kind of men they are, by whoſe Miniſtery thou haſt been inſtructed; if they be men, who by their fidelity in teaching, and by the bleſſing of God vpon their labours, in vſing their Miniſtery to conuert mens ſoules, doe carry with them the ſeale of their Miniſtery; nay if thine owne conſcience can witneſſe for them either of theſe out of thine owne feeling, then beware of a contrary doctrine: though I would not haue thee tie thy ſelfe to any mans authority, yet be well aduiſed before thou alter thy iudgement confirmed by ſuch a Miniſtery. This was Pauls meaning: and if you care to follow it, you ſhall in experience find it good counſell. Thus I haue acquainted you with the beſt courſe I know as yet, both for the firſt informing, and the after-ſetling of your iudgement in Gods truth.

Nymph. I pray God to enable me by his holy Spirit, both to remember, and to practiſe this your good aduice, I will now make this only requeſt: you know it is not enough for one to be a man of knowledge, vnleſſe he doe with knowledge ioyne obedience. If you know [b] Iohn.13.7. thoſe things (ſaith our Sauiour) bleſſed are ye if you doe them [b]. Wherefore as you haue taught me how to heare profitably for the gaining of knowledge, ſo I pray you direct me how I may make good vſe of hearing for the gouernment of my life.

How to draw things heard into practiſe.

Epaph. In the firſt place therefore remember, as to pray to be guided into all truth, by the Spirit of truth, ſo to beg of God to direct the Preachers tong, that he may ſpeake vnto your conſcience, and that his Sermons may bee as a glaſſe, in which you may behold the very true eſtate of your owne ſoule. Se[c] Prou.17.20. condly, labour to put away from you that which Salomon cals a froward heart [c], that is, a heart that cannot beare reproofe: remember it well, and thinke ſeriouſly vpon it, that there can be no greater teſtimony of true wiſdome, then to

Fourthly, when you are departed from the Sermon, forget not to finde a time as ſoone as is poſſible, whilſt things heard are moſt freſh, in which to commune with your own
[g] Pſal. 77. 6. heart [g], and to ponder [h], and ſcanne, and ſearch diligently thoſe things which were

Now in the practiſe of this duty, it is good to conſider what things are preſently neceſſary, and what otherwiſe. Thoſe things which are of preſent vſe, are eſtſoones to be laid hold vpon, and a certain ſecret oath is to be

If it be a matter of ſpirituall conſolation, or of prouocation and encouragement to perſiſt in a good duty, it muſt bee reputed as a chearing from heauen, and heart (as wee ſay) to bee taken thereby againſt all, either inward aſſaults, or outward diſcouragements whatſoeuer. As for other points, which may ſeeme not to be of ſo will thinke to be no charge to keepe it, once in ſeuen yeeres it may ſerue for a purpoſe, for the which you would be loth to lacke it: ſo though ſome things which you heare, are not (as may ſeeme) preſently needfull, yet you muſt make conſcience ſafely to preſerue them, becauſe a time of vſe may come hereafter, in which, as it would be a griefe to want direction, ſo the Lord (it may be) may then in iuſtice deny that, which formerly being offered, was entertained with contempt. In a word, looke to it that you be well furniſhed for all occaſions, and know it to be the chiefe duty, and the ſpecial marke of a good Chriſtian, to take heed [o], and alwaies to haue reſpect [p] vnto the holy directions, which are ſoundly deliuered from Gods word: ſo ſhall you become wiſe vnto ſaluation, and perfect vnto all good workes [q]. This is the ſhorteſt and moſt familiar direction that I can giue you, for the religious gouernment of your life by the forme of Doctrine [r], which in the ordinary Miniſtry of the word ſhall be deliuered vnto you. Larger directions the many good bookes which good men haue written of that matter, will plentifully affoord you. This may ſerue at this time, and it may be God will offer vs an occaſion to talke of this matter more at large hereafter.

To my much esteemed Friend, Mr. I. L.

YOu will wonder, I am sure (considering my profession) to see me become a Poet. And indeed I doe almost marvell at it my selfe, knowing my selfe to want the two principall furtherances of Poetry: the one is Natures instinct[a], which God in his holy providence hath denied me: the other is a certaine retired freedome from all such businesses, which may breed distraction[b]; which my publike calling, besides priuate encombrances, will not afford me. Yet notwithstanding, vpon this present occasion, I haue euen forced my self to this straiter course of verse-making; though I know, that for mine own ease (hauing to deale in such a distempered and vnruly Subiect) that lesse-limited and freer kind of discourse, which Prose alloweth, had been more conuenient; becaus the rules of Cadence, and number (to which our English Poetry specially is confined,) doe many times so straiten an vnaccustomed Practicioner, that he is in hazard, either of obscuring the sense (which in a matter of this nature were something dangerous, or of marring the Verse, (which to the apprehension of euery common conceit were very ridiculous.) But howsoeuer I haue erred in the carriage of this Verse, I hope, to you and to others, whose fauour, either because of their iudgement, or their honesty, I desire, this shall excuse mee: that meeting with our common Aduersary (who appeareth sometime in shape of a States-man, debating of Titles, and common-wealth affaires[c], sometime as a Petitioner to the King and Parliament[d], sometime as a plausible perswader[e], sometime as a Restorer of the holy Text, to the natiue purity thereof[f], sometime as a man of very tender conscience, giuing reasons why hee cannot come to our Assemblies[g], sometime as a Rayler at our gouernment, and an approouer of our open enemies[h]; that, I say, meeting with this time-seruing Proteus, in the fashion of a Rimer or Balladine, and crept in (as the manner of false brethren is[i]) into both the hands and the heart of many simple-seduced; I haue endeauoured to make the Lettuce like the lips (as the prouerb is) and to proportion my self vnto him in versing, to whom I am sure (without wilfull forsaking the plaine truth of God, manifested in Scripture) I shall neuer be like in beleeuing.

To the Reader.

Enſure me not ouer-ſuddenly (I requeſt thee, Chriſtian Reader) for vndertaking that (now in this writing Age (which is already commendably performed by another. I am loth enough of my ſelfe to breake the ancient Law, which forbids to redoe things once done *, *or to oppreſſe mens ſtomacks with twice ſodden Coleworts, as the prouerb is. The truth is, that vntill ſuch times as I had both finiſhed this Reply, and let it go ſo far out of my hands, that it was (in a manner) paſt my power to recall it, I neuer heard that this Popiſh ballad, was elſewhere but in theſe weſterne parts, much leſſe that it was anſwered by another. For ſurely had I knowne it, I would neither haue delayed mine owne courſe in other imployments by framing it, nor haue ſtayed thee from looking into other more behouefull treatiſes by publiſhing it: But now, ſith there is (almoſt) no other remedy but forth it muſt, I muſt pray thee to vouchſafe it to the beſt acceptance thou maieſt: intreating thee withall to conſider, that ſeeing the well-neere breathleſſe body of Popery, beginneth to entertaine ſome hope of a new Reuiuing (though I dare aſſure thee it is but a lightning before death) nothing can be too much which tendeth in any meaſure to the furtherance of Romes long-deſerued, and fore-denounced ouerthrow. His Preface.

I Pray thee, Protestant, beare with me [a],
To aske thee Questions two or three,
And if an answer thou canst make,
More of thy counsell I will take [b].

Many sundry Sects appeare,
Now in the world farre and neere,
The Caluinist, the Protestant,
The Zwinglian, the Puritant.

The Browneist, and the family of loue,
And many more which I can proue,
And the Romane faith truly,
Which you call Papistry.

And euery one confesse Iesu,
Saying that their faith is true:
But amongst these, tell me how
The truth from fained lies to know.

All these in very deed,
Rehearse all Articles in the Creed,
And euery one of them saith,
That theirs is the Catholique Faith:

But this it is that I doe seeke [c]
To know the Church Catholique,
The Communion or Company
Of holy men in Vnity.

[a] Indeed a man had need to be very patient, that meaneth to heare thee.

[b] Yet I feare, that though thou were brayed in a Morter with a Pestell, among Wheat, thy foolishnesse will not depart from thee: Prou. 27. 22.

[c] I beleeue, thou art one of those, which are euer learning, and neuer come to the knowledge of the Truth. 2. Tim. 3. 7. Take the lanterne which Dauid vsed, and thou shalt soone find the true Church: Psal. 119. 105.

Protestants Answer.

His Preface.

I May not (Papist) suffer thee,
Because thy Questions idle bee:
And if my counsell thou wilt take,
Then heare the answer I will make.

Thou tell'st of Sects that doe appeare,
And seemest the truth glad to enquire:
But euen in this I malice smell,
And see thy spitefull meaning well.

When thou these diuers Sects dost name,
Thou wouldst thereby our Church defame [d],
And make fooles thinke that we them lou'd,
When as with vs th'are not approu'd.

We doe not hang on Caluins sleeue,
Nor yet on Zwinglius we beleeue:
And Puritans we doe defie,
If right the name you doe apply [e].

All giddy Sects among vs crept,
We wish out of our Church were swept:
No name doe we delight in more,
Then that at Antioch giuen of yore [f].

But now what Sects you Papist haue,
I doe but thy owne witnesse craue:

[d] I haue reason so to thinke, because the multitude of supposed Sects amongst vs, is a common imputation. See Brist. Motiues, pag. 10.

[e] Viz. If either by that name, are vnderstood those antient Heretikes, called Cathari, who dreamed of a state of perfection in this life, (so as Papists also doe) or else such factious ones among vs, which haue sought the spoile and hauocke of the Church.

[f] Christians. Act. 11. 26.

Some

Some Capucines, some Franciscanes,
And some be called Dominicans:

Some Iesuites, some Seculars [b],
Some gray, some blacke, some white Friers:
And that your store may not be spent,
New Locusts still from Hell are sent [c].

Thou saist, thou would the Church find out,
So that I see thou art in doubt:
And so indeed Vncertenty
Is still the fruit of Popery.

[c] Reu. 9. 3. Those Locusts doe well represent the Popes Clergy: they were bred of the smoke of the pit, so are these of Heresie, Ignorance, and superstition; they destroy the fruits of the earth; so these spoyle the Church.

Papists Rime.

Catholike.

IN your Bible I haue red,
The Church must through the world be spred:
For Christ he his Apostles sent
With power and Commandement,

That to all Nations they should goe,
To Preach and to Baptise also.
Who hath done this? to know I wish;
For that is sure the Church of Christ [d].

And for example, let me know,
And if thou canst, I pray thee show,
What Church did take in hand
The first conuersion of this Land [e]:

And all other Countries euery where,
Throughout the world farre and neere [f]?
If this were not the Church of Rome,
Then will I be conuerted soone [g].

Saint Paul in his Epistle saith [h],
The Romans had the Catholike Faith, Saying it was renowned,
Spoken of, or published.

Through the world ouer all,
Catholique, Vniuersall:
And if your Churches were euen so [i]
Then to your Churches I would goe [k].

[d] I hope thou wilt not say that Rome hath done this: the charge was giuen and vndertaken before Rome was conuerted.

[e] The Apostles Church, for ought you can proue to the contrary.

[f] Who but a Papist, would dare to say this?

[g] You build your Faith upon a very sure ground.

[h] Did Paul say that Rome should neuer deny the Faith?

[i] Our Church is a part of the Catholike Church: disproue it if you can.

[k] You may come to our Churches; the Pope giueth you leaue, so that you keepe your hearts to him.

Protestants Answer.

Catholike.

IN our Bible thou hast read:
T'is well in ours, for yours is fled,
And lurketh in a tongue vnusde,
Whereby poore people are abusde.

The Church is Catholike, as you say,
And so say we: but why * I pray?
Because to it, it were disgrace,
To limit it to time or place.

It euer was, and so shall bee,
Since Christ, excluding no degree [l]:

* The reason why the Church is called Catholike.

[l] Col. 3. 11. Act. 10. 34. 35.

It

It once was tyed vnto the Iewes,
But now no place it doth refuse.

It is a very fond surmise,
Which you the Papist doe deuise,
To shut the Church within Rome wall,
And yet to call it generall [h].

The very name which you pretend,
Whereby your Church you would defend,
To all which doe the meaning know,
Doth quite your fancy ouerthrow.

You say, the charge, which Christ once gaue,
The Romists well performed haue:
But marke how thou thy selfe doest hurt,
And lay Romes honour in the durt.

That charge [i] was giuen first to them,
Which liued at Ierusalem [k],
And thence the Gospell issued out [l],
As Esay told [m], the world throughout.

By them the Nations turned were [n],
And thence of Christ Rome first did heare:
Yet now the place [o] which others call'd,
To Turkish Empire is enthrall'd.

So though't were true, which is not so,
And neuer shall be prou'd I know,
That Rome to Christ the Nations brought,
Yet this your reason were starke nought.

But now (perhaps) Rome doth, youle say,
Bring home the wanderers to the way.
Indeed the Spaniards louing Gold,
Haue brought the Indians to your fold.

The Frogs from Euphrates came out [p],
I meane, the Iesuited Rout,
Doe spread themselues in each country,
To draw men to disloyalty.

They councell Subiects kill their Kings,
Stabbings they vse and poysonings [q].
Christ gaue no such commandement,
When first he his Disciples sent.

Of this conuersion if you boast,
Whereby poore soules, Hell hath engrost,
I yeeld it you full willingly,
It well agreeth with Popery.

To draw Disciples is no marke,
For so doth many a fained Clarke [r].
The Church to truth which doth conuert,
Wee doe embrace with all our heart.

Thou say'st, Romes Faith once ouer all
The word was famous (so saith Paul [s])
And Rome did first conuert our Land,
And hereupon you greatly stand.

And so it did deserue it well:
But Rom's not now as heretofore;

Because of old it was renownd,
It may a Papist satisfie:
But men of iudgement it deny.

Yet now that Church is cleane defac't,
And there the Turke himselfe hath plac't.

From th'antient Church by Paul refinde:
And then Ile say, thou hast done more,

For they that looke in History,
There of can find no certainty.

Then we of Rome our leaues must take.

If of the word thou knewest the sence,
Thou soone would'st leaue that fond pretence.

Which all those hold in euery place
Who leauing mens Traditions cleane, Vpon the Scriptures onely leane [k].

Prophet.

SO saith the Prophet Malachy,
There should be offered far and nye,
A cleane Oblation or sacrifice [l],
From place where now the Sunne doth rise,

To the going downe of the same:
And what is that, I pray thee name?
If it be not the holy Masse,
I will be a Protestant as I was [m].

In the eighteenth Psalme I found,
The whole world should heare their sound [n]:
And if this marke you doe not want,
Presently I will recant.

Protestants answer.

Prophets.

THou cit'st a Text of Malachy [o],
Hoping to proue thy Masse thereby;
Alas, the reason is but small,
And helpes that Idol not at all.

* In it God threatneth the Iewes,
Who their great Priuiledge did abuse,
And thought the Lord was tied to them,
And vnto their Ierusalem.

The Prophet tels, that God elsewhere
Will find out those, which shall him feare,
And in an order without blame,
Shall call vpon his holy name.

Speaking to their capacity,
The Legall tearmes he doth apply [p]:
And cals our Gospell like Seruice,

What ground is here then for the Masse?
It still remaineth, as it was

THis is another marke most sure,
The Faith of Christ must still indure *,

Protestants Answer.

Visible.

THou tel'st a tale incredible,
How that Gods Church is visible:
And by the Bishops Catalogue, Wouldest proone the Romish Synagogue.

The errors here together lapt,
By wich the simple are entrapt,
All which your fained Church doth hold,
I meane in order to vnfold.

The Catholike Church defin'd aright, Cannot be subiect to our sight:
It is th'Elected company [o],
And Christ his chosen Family [p].

Of this, one part in heauen liues [q],
The other here with Satan striues [r],
The part aboue (youle not deny)
With mortall eyes none can descry.

The same is true of that below,
It is vnseene by vs also:
How with mine eyes I might discerne,
And see th'Elect faine would I learne.

Vpon their persons we may looke,
Whose names are written in Gods Booke [s]:

[o] 1 Pet. 2. 9.
[p] Ephes. 3. 15.
[q] Called the Church Triumphant.
[r] Termed the Church Militant.
[s] The Booke of life, Phil. 4. 3.

But

But as for their Spirituall being,
It is a thing doth passe our seeing.

Parts of Christs Church, you Papists make Euen those whom God will quite forsake[p]:
Which if the matter be well scand,
Cannot with any Scripture stand.

Of the true Church Christ is the head[q],
In him can be no members dead[r]:
His Church a Garden[s] closed well,
In which no reprobates can dwell[t].

So that, if fitly we will speake,
The ground you lay is very weake:
In calling it a marke most cleere,
That Gods true Church must still appeare.

Of Churches nam'd in seuerall,
In Cities, or else Nationall,
We yeeld sometime they may be seene,
Though sometime they are darkned cleane.

Sometime the Moone with cheerefull light Shines in the height of heauen bright[u]:
Sometimes with clouds 'tis ouerspred,
And in the Wane cleane vanished.

So is the Church in safety still,
Although not alway visible:
Sometimes it sits in glory great,
Sometime it hath no certaine seat.

The Woman, which to Desert fled,
From Satans rage to hide her head[x],
By all the learnedst full consent,
The Church on earth doth represent.

The famous Church of Israel,
Where God did promise still to dwell[z],
Was drownd so in Idolatry,
And superstitious slauery,

That all true worship being gone,
Elias thought himselfe alone[y]:
And when Christ comes to iudge vs all,
Then faith on earth shall be but small[z].

How is the Church a City then[a], Rais'd on a mount, and seene of men?
And how a light set vp on high,
That all that will may it espie?

How shall we to the Church complaine[b]?
If of the Church no shew remaine?
This is thy Popish reasoning,
And Scriptures plaine misconstruing.

Christ doth the Apostles counsell giue,
Soundly to preach and well to liue,
Because their places were in sight,
And 'twas their Office to giue light.

[q] Ephes. 1. 22.
[r] They are caldlining stones. 1 Pet. 2. 3
[s] Cant. 4. 12.
[t] So August. applieth the place. Contra Cres. Gram. lib. 2. cap. 26. and Gregory the great, who was Bishop of Rome, in his Commentary vpon that place. Charitatis vallo circumquaque munitur, ne intra numerum electorum reprobus aliquis ingrediatur.

[u] Aug. vseth that similitude. Epist. 48. and Epist. 80. and Ambrose Hex. 4. C. 8. Ecclesia sicut luna defectus habet & ortus frequentes.

[z] Luke 18. 8.
[a] Mat. 5. 14.

[b] Mat. 18. 17.

The true meaning of those places:

They erring, many might misse-leade,
Which in their steps might hap to tread:
If that their Doctrine were vnsound,
In falshood many might be drownd.

It was in vaine for them to weene,
In doing ill not to be seene:
You are (saith Christ) vpon a mount,
To be well markt, make full account [c].

This shewes wherein our duty stands,
And what God lookes for at our hands,
Who cal'd are to the Ministry,
To labour in Gods Husbandry [d].

But from hence how may proued be
The Churches visibility?
This place affords a slender proofe,
And little for the Popes behoofe.

Yet you perhaps will vrge it still,
The Pastors are set on a hill,
And called Light: euen so say I,
But all men can them not descry.

For those which want spirituall eyes [e],
Nor are by searching [f] Scriptures wise [g],
This mounted City cannot see,
Nor where these lightsome Pastors bee [h].

Christ bids vs we the Church should tell,
If things be not reformed well:
By Church he meanes all such as be Indued with authority [i].

These Office-bearers all men see,
In times of setled Soueraignty:
Yea, and among themselues th'are knowne [*],
When th'outward state is ouerthrowne.

When that was said in speciall,
You turne to Church in generall:
Thereby you may deceiue some fooles;
But soone it will be seene in Schooles.

This argument of outward state,
Which for a marke you intimate,
Against that thing doth strongly make,
Which you to proue doe vndertake.

Romes state hath sometimes been obscur'd,
And hath disgraces foule endur'd:
Burnt [b], sackt [l], some Popes imprisoned [m],
Some glad to flye [n], some banished [o];

Where did your glorious Church abide,
When Popes were glad themselues to hide?
Peace, peace, no more of this for shame:
Rome saith you will her cleane defame.

Whereby thou seek'st thy Church to grace:

The Grecian Churches at this day,
For their defence as much can ſay [p]:
Yet you of them doe giue this doome,
That in Gods Church they haue no roome.

Yet if Succeſſion were a ſigne,
Which your grand Captaine Bellarmine
Dares not auouch [q], I faine would ſee,
How Rome can proue her pedegree.

You call your Church Saint Peters Chaire,
As though the Pope were Peters Heire:
But if that ground we once deny,
What Papiſt can it verifie?

You cannot proue by holy writ,
Peter at Rome did Biſhop ſit:
The only place which you doe name [r],
Returneth to your greater ſhame.

The things you fetch from Hiſtory,
Touching this point, doe not agree [s],
And what our part hath herein ſed,
By Papiſts ſtands vnanſwered.

Tell me who next did him ſucceed?
Some, Clement [t], and ſome, Linus hold [u],
Thus your ſucceſſion is controld.

Once was a Pope ſuppos'd a man [*],
But prou'd in time a Curtezan.

Vnity.

T'is true, Christs Church is alwaies one,
Ty'd vnto him as head alone:
The parts thereof doe well agree [c],
Like Children of one Family.

But yet not euery company,
Together linkt in Vnity,
Must by and by be called good,
If truth by them shall be withstood.

To make a Calfe they all agree'd [d],
All cry'd, Let Christ be crucifi'd [e]:
Great is Diana, with a shout
At once the people all cry'd out [f]:

Iohn said, they should yeeld to the Beast,
Euen from the greatest to the least [g]:
As Christ his City is but one,
So is the Diuels Babylon [h],

The best sometimes doe disagree [i],
Each man hath his infirmity:
Better the discord bringing light,
Then is agreement without right [k].

Yet by this marke, if Rome be try'd,
It will fall hard vpon your side:
Your ioynt-consent we cannot find,
Nor that you all are of one mind.

If we shall credit History,

And yet another [o] comes behind,
Who with the former fault doth finde,
And all which they did quite displace,

To bring our Sauiour to his end.

Some yeeld as fearing to resist

You may not call this Vnity,
But rather publike Tyranny.

Some ioyne because they doe not see

Of lay Religion is the breefe.

Some for their ease and bellies sake,

Whom none but Romists can approue.

This is your Romish Concordance,
Among your selues at variance:
Though all for some respects are led,
To meete together in one head.

With Christ you doe Saint Francis ioyne [y],
And so his glory doe purloine:
One Mediator we doe [z] know,
You haue ioynd with him many moe [a].

We doe the Virgin Blessed call [b],
And say she passed Women all:
But when you call her, Gate of Grace [c],
We say Christs honour you deface.

The thing which made her spirit glad,
Was, that she such a Sauiour had [d]:
Can she on him commandement haue, Whose helpe she needed her to saue?

* This honour to the Saints we giue,
We craue Gods grace like them to liue [e],
We care to keepe their memory [f],
And God in them we glorifie [g].

* Your Ceremonies idle be,
And sauour most of vanity:
You stand so much on outward show,
That you the substance ouerthrow.

With Images and pictures gay,
You steale the peoples hearts away:
Well may you please the outward eye,
The spirit you doe not edifie.

A prety play, to see a Priest
Tossing his God between his fist:
Such gestures, and such apish mowes,
Such warbling, and such antick showes;

Now bends, now ducks, now stands vpright,
Then turnes him to the peoples sight:
Now sighes, now twenty crosses makes,
And ore his head the wafer shakes:

Then washeth, then the Chalice lickes,
And shuts his Idoll in the pixe:
But still the man is much afraid,
Least ought should hang vpon his beard.

Meane while the vulgar in amaze,
Vpon the Caky Idoll gaze,
And knock, and kneele, and thinke them well,
That they haue heard the sacring Bell.

Tell me, I pray thee, doth God will,
With such fond Rites his Church to fill?
They neuer came into his thought [i]:
Tradition onely hath them brought [k].

Your Rites and Masse doe well agree,
Both full of grosse idolatry:
Both are vnholy, and vnsound,
Both wanting holy Scripture ground.

You say that in the Eucharist,
To God is offered by the Priest,
A Sacrifice in wine and bread [l],
Both for the liuing and the dead [m].

Looke

Looke firſt what Chriſt did inſtitute[n],
And that one place ſhall you refute:
What he did, we muſt doe likewiſe[o]
There's no word of a ſacrifice.

By this (ſaid Chriſt) Remember me:
That ſhewes he would not preſent[p] be.
We keepe ſuch things in memory,
Which we behold not really.

The Prieſts of old did euery day
Some Offring on the Altar lay[q].
Chriſts holy Offring is but one,
Performed by himſelfe alone[r].

If Chriſt ſhall often offred be,
We ſhall his ſufferings multiply:
As on the Croſſe he died not twice,
So there's no ſecond Sacrifice[s]:

There's now no ſacrificing Prieſt:
That Office reſted vpon Chriſt[t]:
It comes to none ſucceſſiuely:
T'is his for all eternity[u].

How can a Maſſe a pardon bring,
Sith 'tis a bloud-leſſe Offering[*]?
Chriſt hath procur'd Remiſſion[x]:
What needs a new Oblation[y]?

See then your holy Sacrifice,
A thing without all warrantize:
Of Scriptures, or of Writers ſage,
Which liued in the pureſt age[z].

*The Sacraments in number twaine,
You eek't haue with a longer traine:
The ſeuen-headed Romiſh beaſt[a],
The two to ſeuen hath encreaſt.

Both Baptiſme[b], and that holy Feaſt[c]
Commanded are by Chriſts beheaſt:
Shew me but one commandement,
To proue an other Sacrament[d].

Two in the Old[e], two in the New,
So ſhall we haue proportion true:
Name what in th'antient[f] Liturgy,
Your fiue falſe Symboles doe ſupply[g].

Thoſe Sacraments which holy be,
You ſtayn'd haue with your pedlery:
In Baptiſme, oyle, lights, ſpettle, creame,
Your Exorciſme, and coniur'd ſtreame;

Were theſe inuented by Gods Spirit,
Or found you them in holy Writ?
Whence had you all that riteous ſtore
Vſ'd in the Maſſe, and nam'd before?

*You ſpeake next of Feſtiuities,
And holy day Solemnities:

And you with them at variance be.

OVr Sauiour warneth vs to haue care,
Of false Prophets to beware [b];
Which in his name shall come.
Not sent, yet they shall runne [c].

That kill and steale, and keepe a store;
Wolues in shepheards clothing,
That kill the soule, and steale the tithing.

Dogges, Foxes, and Masters of lies,
That new Sects will deuise,
Bringing in dissension,
And heape thousands to perdition.

Where haue you been this many a yeere,
That none of you durst once appeare?
Euer since our Sauiours time,
To whom did your light shine [e]?

Where did your principall Pastor sit [f]?
Who kept your keyes? who fed your sheepe [g]?
Shew some Churches you haue built:
I can shew many you haue spilt.

How might a man haue found you out,
To haue triall in a matter of doubt [h]:
Where for so many a yeere,
No such company did appeare?

Vntill Luther, a lying Frier [i],
Vpon whom the Diuell had desire,
Brake his vow [k], and married a Nunne,
And there your Sect [l] first begunne [m],

And fauoured in Saxony,
By a Duke that loued liberty:
And in King Edwards time truly [n],
It first infected our Country:

For a thousand yeeres you say,
That Papistry did beare the sway:
And during all that space,
No Protestant dust shew his face [o].

Who kept [p] the holy Scriptures then
From the hands of wicked men?
Who had authority to ordaine,
Our Priests and Bishops againe?

For he that entreth without order,
As a thiefe doth kill and murder.
And one thing maketh me to muse,
That no Priest you doe refuse [q].

[s] I beleeue you will not bee so good as your word.

[t] A man need not be long in making you an answer.

[u] Who made him an Apostle?

* This Gregory accounteth him the forerunner of Antichrist, who so should seeke to be called Vniuersall Bishop: from this faith you are gone.

Being ordred by the Church of Rome,
But he was accepted soone:
If he would say the new Seruice,
He should haue a Benefice.

Without any further order,
And accounted for the better [r],
How can shee make a lawfull Priest,
If shee be not the Church of Christ?

Answer this, O Protestant;
If thou canst, I will recant [s]:
But while an answer you deuise [t],
I councell all men that are wise,

To hold the faith maintained heere,
The space of a thousand yeere,
Brought vnto vs Englishmen,
By our Apostle [u], Saint Austen;

Who from Rome was hither sent,
When Ethelbert was King of Kent;
Who learned his faith of Gregory *:
His faith was kept successiuely,

By threescore Bishops and three,
Since Saint Peters time truly,
Who learned his faith of Christ Iesu,
Who is the Sonne of God most true.

Heretickes.

THe Caueat touching Heretickes,
Doth make against false Catholikes:
We know full well that Popery,
Is but a Masse of Heresie.

Those errors which of old were hatcht,
Your Church together hath them patcht [u]:
On them shee puts a a fairer name,
But in effect they are the same.

You raz'd haue the foundation
Of all truth and Religion:
You chang'd haue the sincerity
Of all the Grounds of Piety *.

the Scriptures, the imputation of Christs righteousnesse. 2 *Cor.*5.21. The Papists place it in our merits, Rhemist, 2 Tim. 4. sect. 4. Secondly, it is a ground of Christian religion, that the law cannot be fulfilled by vs, and that no is to expect righteousnes or saluation by it, *Rom.*8.3. *Act.*15.10. *Gal.*2.15,16. and 3.10. The Papists maintain, that men may keep the law. Con. Trid. *s.*6. *c.*11. Yea & that they may performe more then the law binds vnto: whence are sprung the works of supererogation, & indulgences, which that Councell so highly prizeth *Sess.*21. c 9. A third ground of Religion ouerthrown by them, is, that eternall death is due to euery sin. This the Scripture auoucheth, *Rom.*5.12. and 6.23. *Ezek.*18.14. The Papists teach, some sins to be in their owne nature pardonable, not deseruing death, Con. Trid. sess 6. *c.*11. From which opinion arose Purgatory. A fourth ground of Religion, is the certainty of saluation. That beleeuers may be certen of saluation, is the doctrine of the Scripture, *Rom.*8.38. *Heb.*11.1. *Luk.*10.20. The Papists deny and say, we can but haue hope only, *Con. Trid. s.*6. *c.*9. and yet therein they confound themselues: for true hope cannot be deceiued, *Rō.*5.5. It is the Anchor of the soule, *Heb.*6.19. A fift ground is, that we cannot satisfie God for our least sins: The Scripture ascribeth all satisfaction to Christ, *Heb.*1.3. 1 *Pet.*2.24. *Rev.*1.5. The Papists maintaine that we may and must satisfie, making satisfaction a part of Penance, *Con. Trid. s.*14. *c.*13. A sixt ground is, that the Scripture containes all doctrine necessary for our saluation. So saith the Scripture, 2 *Tim.*3.16. and the ancient Church. *Aug. l.*3. *cont. lit. Petil. c.*6. and others. The Papists equall Traditions to the Scripture, *Con. Trid. s.*4. A seuenth ground is, that the knowledge of the Scripture is needfull to the people vnto saluation, and ought to be read of them: thereto accords the holy Text, *Ioh.*5.39. *Col.*3.16. The ignorance therein is the cause of all error, *Mar.*12.24. The Papists forbid the people the vse of the Scripture, Rhemists Preface: and doe all in the Church seruice in an vnknowne tongue. Eightly, the Scripture teacheth vs to worship God alone, *Mat.*4.10. The Papists worship Angels and Saints, yea their Images and relikes: their distinction of Latria and Dulia, will not serue them: for they pray to Creatures, and that is Latria: and they acknowledge that which they call Latria, to be due to the crosse, *Tho. p.*3. *sum. Qu.*25. art.4. & *Andrad. l.*9. Orth. expl. Ninthly, it is the doctrine of the Scripture, that Christ, according to his humane nature, is only in Heauen, *Act.*3.21. Papists say, he is bodily present in the Eucharist, *Con. Trid. s.*13. *c.*6. Tenthly, Christ ordained the Communion in both kindes, commanding to do as he did, 1 *Cor.*11.24. &c. Papists take the Cup from the Laity, *Con. Trid. s.*21. *c.*1. Thus as in these particulars, so in many other, it were easie to shew how the Church of Rome hath ouerthrowne the maine points of holy Doctrine, and haue nothing left but the name of the Church, and a Title and shew of Religion.

Thou fall'st now to a railing vaine,
And would by this thy Pope maintaine;
Leaue idle tearmes and shew some reason,
Else all these words come out of season.

Shew thou what sects we doe diuise,
And wherein we deliuer lies:
And prooue it so, that all may see,
Lest thou thy selfe the Lyer be.

Foxes and Dogges, and Wolues thou nam'st,
And Theeues, wherein thy selfe thou sham'st:
Or proue all this in vs is true,
Else we returne it backe to you.

They call'd Saint Paul an Heretick[x],
A Babler[y], and a Schismaticke[z]:
They said our was possest[a],
And of his preaching made a Iest[b].

Yet Paul no Heresie did teach,
Nor in the Church made any breach:
Nor yet our Sauiour had a Diuell,
He neuer did, or Preached euill.

Let Scripture try wherein we erre,
We craue no other Arbiter:
Conuict vs once by such a Iudge,
We will not at your railings grudge.

Now that your store is almost spent,
Thou com'st to an old worne Argument:
Where was your Church some yeeres agoe,
Before the world did Luther know?

If briefly now I should deny
The Churches Visibility:
It were a word sufficient,
To ouerthrow this prattlement.

Yet this I say and will maintaine,
That euen when blindnes most did raigne,
Our Church a certaine being had,
Though not with outward beauty clad:

Like to that holy portion [c],
In that great superstition,
Which ouerwhelm'd all Israel,
After the Tribes from Dauid [d] fell.

Or as some eares of purer seed,
Amidst a field of noysome weed:
So God had some euen at that time,
When Antichrist was in his Prime.

And now and then outbrake the Light,
Euen in that long and irkesome Night:
Like as the Sunne in lowring daies
Sometime sends forth his glittering raies.

Long time ere Luther yet was borne,
Whom you our Founder name in scorne,
There were which shew'd their enmity,
Against your vile Idolatry [e].

But now the Lord hath let vs see Your Antichrists deformity:
That all men might him fully know,
Before his finall ouerthrow.

Our Pastor chiefe [f] in Heauen did sit,
And so doth still, saith holy Writ [g]:
On earth, a vniuersall Priest,
None dare be cald but Antichrist [h].

He that our Church and keyes had sought,
By tokens in the Scripture taught,
Our Church and keies he might haue found
Euen when the world was most vnsound.

Building of Churches nothing makes
For that which here thou vndertakes:
For then commend Demetrius,
Who builded Shrines at Ephesus [i].

Well may the heathen people boast,
Of Piramees and Churches cost:
In houses made, God doth not dwell,
As holy Scripture doth vs tell [k].

[m] It is well called a lawleſſe vow, becauſe it is of a thing which is not in mans power. If it be ſaid that by faſting and prayer it may be performed, and continency obtained; I anſwer, the gifts of God are twofold. Some common to all beleeuers, as Faith, &c. Some peculiar to ſome onely, as this of Continency. Now, if by faſting and prayer we labour for the firſt ſort, wee ſhall in ſome meaſure receiue them: but we haue not the like aſſurance for the gifts of the latter ſort: becauſe (it may be) the Lord is pleaſed otherwiſe to diſpoſe. Now, to make ſuch a vow, is a ſinne: but to perſiſt in it, is double euill.

You

You did them Priests and Doctors make,
And they from you this charge did take*,
That they the truth should soundly preach,
And in the same the people teach.

Hereto you caused them to sweare,
That to the faith they would adheare,
And neuer should errors endure,
That were against the Doctrine pure.

That whereunto you did them call,
Full well they haue performed all:
Truth they haue sought to propagate,
And heresies to ruinate.

As we account your Baptisme true,
And neuer doe the same renue*:
So may you make a lawfull Priest,
Yet be not the pure Church of Christ.

We know that now you wiser be,
And sweare your Priests to Popery[z],
And bind them to maintaine the state
Of your three-crowned Potentate.

See now (O Papist) thou recant, Th'art answered by a Protestant:
I counsell thee, if thou be wise,
No new enuasions to deuise.

Thy tale of Ethelbert of Kent,
Is but a slender argument[y]:
It skils not whence the Faith was brought,
Or who it first amongst vs taught.

Let vs into the Scripture look[z],
And duly search[a] that holy Booke:
Thence shall we know which Church to leaue[b],
And vnto which alone to cleaue.

These swelling words[c] of Vnity, Succession, and Antiquity,
Are but poore groundlesse fantasies,
To blind the simple peoples eyes.

Though that an Angell thou shouldst see,
Let him (saith Paul) accursed be[d],
If from the Scripture he doth erre,
Account him not Gods Minister.

If one arise, and wonders showe,
Seeking the truth to ouerthrow,
Though that might seeme a motiue strong,
Yet vnto him death doth belong[e].

If threescore Bishops here and three,
Haue been with vs successiuely,
It either proues our Church is true,
Or else that marke makes nought for you.

That faith, for which Peter was slaine,
Our English Church doth still retaine:
We heare the voyce[f] of Christ Iesu,
Who is the Sonne of God most true.

RIght Worshipfull, Let it not (I beseech you) be thought presumption in me, to present that now to your view by penne, which not long since, I commended to your eares by voyce. I am, among many others, thankefull to God, who hath put it into your hearts, both to commiserate, and to helpe the spiritual necessity of an vntaught Town, by procuring the establishment of a weekely Lecture in it. I hope the Lord shall remember you in goodnesse, according to that which herein you haue cared to doe for that people. And I doubt not but the soules, which shall reape comfort by the Ordinance of God there, will blesse you, and God for you, acknowledging you his Instruments for their best good. It is fallen to my lot, by your chusing, to be one in this Preaching course: when my first turne came, I thought it fitting to hansell (as it were) the Businesse, by treating vpon the worth and necessity of that seruice, which the rest of my Brethren, and my self, were there called to discharge; that both they which wanted it, might vnderstand their Hazard, and they which enioyed it, might know their happinesse, if they might be so happy as to embrace it. This thing thus laboured in by me, (according to my measure) though it was gladly entertained by the most, yet by some it was not so wholly approued of, but thought in some particulars, to smel too much of self-opinion. This hath moued me (contrary to my first thoughts) to aduenture it by printing, vpon the common censure. I haue deliuered nothing in it, but that which I haue learned, partly in the Vniuersity, partly since by my poore studies in the Country, and that from the chiefest for Learning, Place, and Paines, in this our English Church, whereof I reioyce to be a Sonne; and wherein, it shall be my glory and my Crowne in the day of Christ, to haue been employed as a Minister. Now, I am bold, to shrowd it vnder your patronage, in as much as your calling me to a Turne in this Lecture, was the occasion of its first Being, and you all likewise gaue countenance to it by your presence, (according as you haue respectiuely done the like to vs all, and I trust will do still) when it was deliuered. If you shall please to accept as a fruit of my due respect to each of you in your places, it is all the recompence I looke for: In confident expectation whereof, I bind my selfe vnder my hand, to be

THE DIGNITIE of Preaching.

1 Theſſ. 5. 20. Deſpiſe not Prophecying.

THe verſe next before this, I handled not farre hence, now well neere halfe a yeere agoe. My meaning was to haue there alſo treated, both vpon this and that which followeth, if there had been opportunity. But now, this Lecture being well begun, (and I pray God it may ſo long continue) and my ſelfe, being called to beare a part therein, I thought with my ſelf, I could not chuſe a more fit Text, wherewith, to ſet on with this worke, it being ſo directed to procure honour to this preaching buſineſſe, which the Gentlemen of theſe parts (for their own good and the Townes) haue ſeemed ſo deſirous of, and vpon which they profeſſe to haue dependance. I delight not to be long in preambles, I am come hither to diſcharge the duty of a Preaches, not of an Orator. Thus then, it was Pauls aduiſe in the precedent verſe, to euery one ſenſible in himſelfe of the graces of Gods Spirit, ſuch as do accompany ſaluation, to beware of quenching them; and ſo accordingly to endeauour to keep life in them, yea, and to adde more heate vnto them, by all good meanes. Now a ſpeciall meanes, both to continue and augment this ſacred fire, is here preſcribed, and it is this, not to deſpiſe Prophecying: ſo haue you of a ſhort Text the connexion in ſhort. I cannot bee profitabe to you in diſcourſing vpon theſe words, vnleſſe I make you to know, what that is, which is termed, Prophecying, and what not to deſpiſe Prophecying. In the ſtricteſt taking of the word, to Prophecy, it is to foretell ſome future thing, and ſo accordingly they were anciently termed Prophets, to whom God reuealed his ſpeciall purpoſes touching the after times. But now in the new Teſtament we find this Prophecying, not ſo much to ſignifie a reuealing before hand, by diuine inſpirement, what touching States and Common-wealths, and particular perſons ſhall enſue, as an expounding the Scriptures in ſuch ſort, as might beſt aduance the common benefit. Me thinkes I find in Paul an exact definition of Prophecying; it is a ſpeaking

The Coherence of the Text.

The opening of the words.

[a] 1 Cor. 14. 3. to men, to edifying, to exhortation, to comfort [a]. It is euen the very ſame which we terme, Preaching. I could countenance this interpretation, by the names of men, which deſerue reſpect, but Pauls deſcription is warrant enough: whatſoeuer any ſay, diſcouering their opinion touching this words meaning here, they ground vpon the place of Paul which I haue named. Plowing therefore with the ſame Heiſer, we may ſoone attaine to the depth of that, which may be thought the Riddle of this place.

Now not to deſpiſe, here is to honour: for this caſe there can be no third. Hee who doth not deſpiſe Prophecying, doth honour it; and he who doth not honour it, doth deſpiſe it. So that to come (as ſoone as I can) to the principall matter of this verſe, you may pleaſe to entertaine it, as it is preſented you in this forme:

The generall Doctrine. That the exerciſe of preaching ought to receiue from vs all eſteeme.

Wouldeſt thou that the Spirit of God, namely, the ſauing graces thereof, might be conueied into thee, and preſerued in thee? loe, God hath giuen gifts vnto men, and hath furniſhed them with skill of right diuiding his holy and ſacred Word, Paſtors and Teachers for the gathering together of his Saints, and for the comfortable diſcouery of the ſecret of the Goſpell: ſee thou harken vnto theſe, and let their labour in the word be ſweet and precious to thy ſoule. This is the effect of Pauls counſell here, which now that we haue found out, to the end it may be more vſefull, I am a little further to enlarge. My proofe of this doctrine ſhall be made good by the declaring of two things. 1. That it is the expreſſe will and ordinance of God, that there ſhould be in his Church a certaine calling of men, ſet apart to this worke and ſeruice, of making the holy Scriptures vſefull to the people by the act of preaching. 2. That this act of preaching is ſo ordained by God, that we haue no aſſurance in the world to attaine ſaluation, but by it. Theſe two points well cleared, will take away all doubt touching this doctrines truth. For if preaching be Gods ordinance, ſhall it not bee honoured? and if we haue without it no hope of being ſaued, ſhall it not deſerue eſteeme? If then I ſhall be able to double theſe two points, I ſhall hope to procure an eaſie paſſage for the maine doctrine, into the heart and ſoule of euery one that heares me. So that you will not crie when I haue done, as they did againſt Paul, Away with ſuch a fellow from the earth [b]; but rather breake out into ſome ſuch note, as theirs that followed Chriſt; Lord euermore giue vs this preaching [c]. My firſt taske muſt be this, to make it to appeare, that God neuer purpoſed to leaue his holy Word to be no more but read, either priuately in mens houſes, or publikely in our Churches; but appointed there ſhould be men ordained, to expound the ſame by voyce, and to apply it to the occaſions and neceſſities of the people for their edifying. For this is the ſoule of prophecying, and the very life of preaching. It openeth the Scripture, to ſhew what it meaneth, it fits it to the particular vſes and caſes of the hearers. Now that there hath been from the beginning a Calling of men, to deale betwixt God and man in the things of God, the courſe of the holy ſtory makes it plaine. In the daies before the Flood (beſides that, the firſt borne of euery Family was an officer of this kind) we read particularly of Enoch and of Noah; the one a Prophet by the teſtimony of S. Iude [d], the other a Preacher of righteouſneſſe by the witneſſe of S. Peter [e]. In the following times, notwithſtanding the ſmalnes of Gods Church for diuers yeeres, yet that which is ſaid of Melchizedech, that he was a Prieſt of the moſt high God [f], is an argument, of ſome ſuch ranke and condition of men as I now ſpeake of. As the people of God multiplied, and began to put on the ſhape of a Body politique; ſo this courſe became more euident, and more ordinary. Then the Tribe of Leui was deputed to a ſpeciall attendance vpon this function [g], and from thence there was a continuall ſucceſſion of men ſitting in Moſes chaire, vntill our Sauiours time. Chriſt when he came, did not ouerthrow this courſe, but eſtabliſht it. Hee appointed Apoſtles firſt [h], they being by him inſtructed in the things, which pertaine to the kingdome of God [i], and preciſe to ordaine nothing, but that which themſelues had receiued [k]: as they were diligent in reſpect of their perſonall induſtry, ſo they appointed ſuch as themſelues (in regard of the ſubſtance of their office) and gaue order (for the perpetuating of this courſe) to make choice of faithfull men ſtill to be employed in this ſeruice [m]: and Paul ſaith expreſly, That Chriſt aſcended on high to giue gifts vnto men, euen that there might be ſuch for the gathering together of the Saints to the end of the world [n]: now, as ſuch a calling was of old and muſt continue till time ſhall be no more; ſo the ſpeciall intendment was to Teach. See for proofe in the old Teſtament, Deut. 33.10. 2 Chron. 15.3. and in the new, Mat. 28.19. Therefore, (as we gather by our Sauiours ſpeech to Nicodemus) they of this profeſſion were called Maſters in Iſrael [o], and after in the ſame ſort Teachers.

The manner of their Teaching in the old Teſtament, is reported to be Reading in the booke of the Law, diſtinctly giuing the ſenſe, and cauſing the people to vnderſtand the reading [t]: in the new, a publiſhing of the ſecret of the Goſpell [u]: a dealing vnto the people the Goſpell of God [x].

t Nehe. 8.8.
u Epheſ. 6.19
x 1 Theſ. 2.8.

Now in Teaching, it is manifeſt, that there is a further matter then the publiſhing to the people, by reading from out the booke, the words and tenour of the Scripture. Euery ordinary man will quickly conceiue ſo much, out of the nature of the word, Teach: Doth a Schoolmaſter teach his Scholler in reading to him his rule, vnleſſe he do alſo cauſe him to vnderſtand it, & ſhew him how he may practiſe that which is the purpoſe of it? Doth a man of occupation teach his apprentiſe his trade by propounding certen generall precepts, if he do not diſcouer to him that, which we tearme the myſtery of his profeſſion in particulars? Thus far we are come in the proofe of this firſt branch.

It is the ordinance of God, that there ſhould be a Calling of men, to deale betwixt him and man; and that euery one called to this calling ſhould bee apt to Teach [y]. He that wants this knowledge is no Prieſt for me, ſaid the Lord of old [z]. Agreeing heereto is the wholeſome order of our Engliſh Church, in which no man is admitted Presbyter, but he is firſt exhorted by the Biſhop, to conſider that his office is of great excellency, and of great difficulty, ſuch as hee cannot by any other meanes compaſſe, but with Doctrine and Exhortation taken out of the Scripture: And then after he is asked, whether he is determined to inſtruct the people committed to his charge with the Scriptures, in the end (a Bible being deliuered into his hand) hee his willed to take authority to Preach the Word of God. And by the booke of common Prayer it is manifeſt, that none ought to adminiſter the Sacrament of the Lords Supper to the people, but he who may boldly ſay to the people, If there be any of you which cannot quiet his conſcience, but requireth further counſell or comfort, let him come to me, or ſome other diſcreet and learned Miniſter of Gods Word, and open his griefe, that he may receiue ſuch ghoſtly counſell, aduice, and comfort, as his conſcience may be relieued. It is not meant, that he ſhould haue ſomewhat in him, who muſt openly in the Congregation make ſuch an offer? Our learned men doe in their writings deride that of the Popiſh Decretals, which require little more of a Prieſt, then to fetch out according to the rule of his Rubricke, the appointed ſeruice for the day. I muſt yet adioyne one thing more, before I quit this branch, namely, that this is alſo Gods ordinance, that of this ſort there ſhould bee ſome in euery Towne, and that the ſame ſhould performe this Teaching-ſeruice euery Sabbath. The ordinance for euery towne may be probably collected, out of the antient ſcattering of the tribe of Leuy through all the land, land, out of that which is said, that they (Viz. the Leuites) taught all Israel[b]; and by that which is reported, that when Christ was teaching, there sate by, Doctors of the Law, which were come out of euery towne of Galile and Iudea, &c. [c] More directly by that, that Moses was preached in euery city [d]; and the Apostles ordained Elders in euery Church [e]: according whereunto was Pauls Iniunction to Titus, to constitute such in each City [f]. Hereupon came the tearme of charges in the old Testament [g], and of flocks in the new [h]. Then the ordinance for euery Sabbath is iustly gatherable out of the former saying, Moses was preached in the Synagogues euery Sabbath day [i], and it may be (without violence) concluded out of that commandement of the Apostle to preach in season [k]: what better season, then when the people rest from al other seruices, and meet together in one place for holy duties? This course was held in the daies next following the Apostles. It is the report of Iustin Martyr that in his time, Reading and opening the word lasted an houre long euery Sabbath: and Tertullian, that there was not a meeting of the Christians, wherein their soules were not fed with holy Sermons before they departed. It was a decree of the Counsell of Mentz, vnder Charles the great, that there should bee a course taken, that there should not be one wanting, who should vpon the Lords daies preach the word of God, to the vnderstanding of the people: With this consents that opinion of Reuerend Bishop Babington, of respectiue memory, namely, that a Minister can no more enter the Church vpon a Sabbath day without preaching, and not be guilty of a damnable sinne, then Aaron could goe into the congregation without death, in case, that at his entrance in, he did not sound his bels. And againe, he sinneth the sin of a dumbe dostste, who passeth ouer the Sabbath day without preaching, and therein maketh the people guilty of the prophanation of Gods holy day. Vpon this ground the Canons of our Church haue ordained, that euery beneficed man (allowed a Preacher) shall preach one Sermon euery Sunday in the yeere: and againe, that euery Incumbent shall euery Sunday before Euening Prayer, examine and instruct the youth and ignorant persons of the parish in the ten Commandements, the Articles of the Beleefe, and the Lords Prayer. These things I note, to preuent a conceit which some may haue, that I come hither to open a packe of Puritanicall ware, and to vent some priuate humorous opinions; you may see, that that which I auouch touching the ordinance of God in this point, is the iudgement of our Church. And thus haue I finished the first part of my proofe, that preaching is Gods ordinance. It is his will, that the ability for it should be in euery Minister; and the execution of it, in euery Congregation euery Sabbath.

The next part of my proofe is, that without dependance vpon preaching, we haue no assurance of saluation. To make this manifest, I demand whether we beleeue the Scripture? That without Faith it is impossible to please God [l]: and whether any other meanes be sanctified by God to beget Faith, besides the hearing of a Preacher? that I am sure, is ordained to that end [m]: as for any other mainly deputed thereto (without this) I am sure there is no iust euidence in all Gods booke. The Lord hauing Saints to gather, and to translate out of the kingdome of darknesse, hath appointed and gifted Pastors and Teachers to that end [n]: so much is apparant. And whereas the promise of saluation is limited onely to so many, as God shall call [o], (whereupon they which shall be saued, are termed a called company [p],) faine would I know whereto calling hath reference, but to a voyce? What voyce shall we thinke it to bee, but that which soundeth in the publike Ministery? Christs voyce wee will all yeeld it to bee, and so we may well, (For his sheepe heare his voyce [q]:) and where is Christs voyce now, but in those, who by their calling are in Christs stead [r]? and of whom hee hath said plainly, He that heareth you, heareth me [s]. As we can haue no certenty of our Election, vnlesse we giue diligence to make our calling sure [t]: so what warrant rant hath any man to thinke he is called, but by that meanes which God ordained to call the Gentiles? And what meanes find we that to be, other then this? [u] Goe teach, Preach the Gospell to every Creature [x]. What can be plainer then this? God hath reconciled vs vnto himselfe by Christ, and hath giuen vnto men, a Ministry of Reconciliation [y]. Wee will soone yeeld that hy this place it is proued, that there is no comming vnto God the Father, but by Christ: Shall it not be as strongly proued thence, that there is no ordinary accesse to Christ, but by the Ministry? What moued our Sauiour to pity the multitude, being without a shepheard, (a labourer in the Lords harvest [z]) was it not because they were in apparent hazard of saluation, being so destitute? Why is the Land of Zabulim, and Nepthalim said to sit in darknesse, and in the Region of the shadow of death, vntill the light of preaching shone among them [a], but because the inhabitants were in the high way to hell, without Ministeriall instruction? Note that speech: Israel, a long time, without God, and without a Priest to teach [b]. No Priest to teach, no interest in God. There is no Logicke in the world to conclude otherwise. I am faine to stint my selfe in that, which I could say in this argument. I heare what men say, when they bee not able to elude the euidence of these testimonies. They obiect and cry out, Oh Cruelty, oh Barbarisme! Now you doe damne all that haue no preaching. I speake all this while of a way and course to which we are tied, and whereto we must trust, and out of which wee may not venture. I take not on me to preiudice the power or mercy of God; I will not for a world say in a Pulpit, that there are none in heauen, which neuer heard a Sermon: I am not ignorant of Gods ableness to saue, as hee pleaseth: I know God can giue bread from heauen [c]; he can make one sute of cloathes, or one paire of shoes to serue a mans turne forty yeeres [d], hee can cause the earth to yeeld corne without sowing [e], he can make one pitcher of oyle to pay a greet deale of debt [f]. But what of this? No warrant hence for me to say, husbandry is not the ordinary meanes of hauing Corne; sowing and mending the ordinary meanes to preserue apparell; prouidence and industry, and endeauour to get mony, the ordinary means to pay debts. Because the Israelites were fed with Mannah, May I lie vnder a hedge in the Sunne, looking till Mannah drop into my mouth? or because Corne once grew without sowing, goe sell away my Plough: And like Salomons sluggard [g], shear vp my hands into my bosome, and renounce Husbandry? Or because of that of the Prophets widow, discharging debt by a pitcher of oyle, purposely run my selfe into debt many pounds, resoluing to leaue to mine Executor a Iarue of oyle to pay all? wee would laugh at such inferences, and thinke a man halfe mad, who should make such conclusions. And yet I know they are better a great deale then this; that because we doe not say, they are all damned which haue no preaching, therefore Preaching is not the ordinary meanes to seeke saluation by; I say these conclusions are better, because wee haue euidence of some, sustained in outward things by such vsuall meanes; but there is no certenty of any particular mans saluation, without ministeriall Teaching. As therefore notwithstanding Gods dealing with the Israelites, with Hezechiah, with the widow, I may boldly say, that he who trusts to be fed from Heauen, shall be sterued; and he who supposeth to pay his debts with a pitcher of oyle, shall rot in prison: So he who thinks to be saued without preaching, shall be damned: We must looke to what God bids vs do, and not to what he in his absolute power can doe. Gods extraordinary working is no impeachment at all to the truth of an ordinary rule. There bee some, which haue gotten that by the end, which Augustine reports, touching himselfe, how that he heard a voyce saying to him, Take vp and reade, take vp and reade. And so taking the new Testament, he fell suddenly at the first opening of the booke vpon that place: Not in gluttony and drunkennesse, &c. [h] And hereby it is supposed, Augustine was conuerted: Whereupon they would conclude a possibility of turning a man, from the power of Satan vnto God, without preaching. Hereupon I answer, that who so shall say, that Aug. was not conuerted vntill he heard that voice, shall deliuer an vntruth. For it is plain, that Aug. had before that time been in spiritual affection, greatly exercised with a combat betwixt the flesh and the spirit, as appeares plainely in the chapter going before this, whereas he reports the matter of the Voice: And when this Voice came, he was on his face weeping, and at prayer, earnestly confessing his sinnes, and desiring to be deliuered from them. This voice is rather to be reputed a confirmation, and perfecting of his conuersion, then the proper instrument of working it. If we would know whereby indeed he was conuerted, let himselfe be heard whose report this is, That being a Rhetorician, he came to the City wherein Ambrose was Bishop, desiring there to professe Rhetoricke: whilest he was there, he would needs goe heare Ambrose preach, Not as a Teacher of the Truth, (so are his owne words) for hee thought there was none such to be found among the Professors of the Christian Faith) but because he had vnto him shewed kindnesse. Now marke what he speakes, directing his speech to God: To him I was by thee led vnawares, that by him I might through knowledge be led to thee: And so he goeth on to shew, how by hearing him, whom (as he repors other-where) he heard preaching euery Lords day, he was brought by little ad little ere hee was aware, neerer and neerer to the embracing of the truth. An excellent example for the confirmation of this point, that preaching is the meanes of a mans conuersion. And yet I adde, that in case it were true, that the reading of that place had been the direct meanes of his turning, yet it were nothing to the preiudice of that which I now teach; for I would say (& well I might) it was extraordinary, & such wherof we can make no rule: and so indeed whensoeuer any man is brought to haue sauing grace, and true faith otherwise then by preaching, it is a couse out of course; such wherein God will shew his power and mercy, and the freedome of his proceedings; not such whereupon he will haue vs simply and generally to relie. I returne then to my point, which is this: Wee haue no warrant to expect saluation any other way, then by dependance vpon preaching; neither may we (to speake of an ordinary course) perswade our selues wee are in the way of saluation, vnlesse we be sensible of our being set into it by this meanes. God doth diuers things (as it were) by way of preparing men to grace: such are afflictions, crosses, inward affrightments; but when all is done, and spoken that can be, to this we must come at last, that the maine worke (ordinarily) either by Preaching it is wrought, or not at all. What an absurd thing were it to acknowledge Preaching to be Gods ordinance, and yet to deny it to be simply necessary to saluation; and to mince it ouer with (I know not what) faire tearmes, that it is good if it may be had, and profitable for those who haue no other helpes, and the like? Why? What make we of Gods ordinances? doe we account them only matters of conuenience, and not of necessity? For my part I know no more Scripture for Faith without preaching, then for saluation without Faith; I am sure that the same Spirit of God, which hath said. Beleeue, that thou maiest be saued, hath also said, Heare that thou maiest beleeue. You would all cry out vpon me (and you well might) if I should say, a man may be saued without praying, and yet men are ready to account it halfe an heresie, to auouch that a man cannot bee saued without preaching: yet Saint Paul linkes these together vpon one string, Saluation, Praying, Beleeuing, Hearing, Preaching, Sending[i]. Men cannot be saued without praying to him that can saue: They cannot pray to him, without beleeuing on him; they cannot beleeue on him without Preaching: they cannot preach without Sending: and whom did God euer send, who was not able to diuide the word for the peoples edifying?

grant the beginning, (no ſaluation without prayer, no praying without faith) but we will diſtinguiſh vpon the latter, no beleeuing but by waiting on a Preacher which is ſent.) Thus (I hope) albeit I haue not ſaid ſo much as might be ſaid in ſuch an ample ſubiect, yet I haue ſaid enough to confirme the two things which I vndertooke: Namely, firſt, that Preaching (vnderſtanding thereby, as before, aſpeaking to men to exhortation, edifying and comfort) is Gods ordinance: Secondly, that he hath not reuealed or warranted vnto vs any other way of being ſaued, other helpes with this: all fruitleſſe and in vaine, with the neglect of this. Theſe two things being true, ſhall not the maine doctrine be true, that the preaching of the Word by men deputed of God to that ſeruice, doth deſerue eſteeme? Indeed as the whole worſhip of God deſerues honour, ſo this ſeruice eſpecially, as being the chiefe of all the reſt. It is more excellent then the adminiſtration of the Sacraments: Paul was ſent to Preach, not to Baptize[l], that is, to Preach was his maine errand; for baptize ſome he did, which he might not houe done, if he had not been ſent. It is more noble then gouerning and the adminiſtration of diſcipline, becauſe (as ſaith the Reuerend Bilſon) God gathereth his Church by the mouthes of Preachers, not by the ſummons of Conſiſtories: and Paul requiring honour to bee ſhewed to Elders ruling well, willeth it to be ſhewed eſpecially to thoſe that labour in the Word and Doctrine[m], as the perſons employed in the better buſineſſe. It excelleth reading as much as the Apothecaries bruſing and breaking the perfume, doth the preſenting it in lumpe; the Houſholders cutting the bread to the Family, the ſetting it downe in the whole loafe; the ſtirring vp of the whole fire, and the blowing it with the bellowes, the letting it lie couered in the aſhes: all which are the ſimilitudes to this end vſed by reuerend B. Babington in his expoſition of that petition of the Lords Prayer (Thy kingdome come) It is more of worth then Prayer: for what but preaching ſhall direct to Pray? And whether in reaſon ſhall be throught more excellent, our ſpeaking to God (which is prayer) or Gods ſpeaking to vs (which is preaching?) and looke 1 Cor. 14. and ſee whether Paul doth not prefer prophecying before all other ſpirituall gifts, and makes it to be the chiefe, euen where he alſo ſpeakes touching Prayer. If then the worſhip of God is worthy of reſpect, the exerciſe of preaching moſt of all, as being indeed the beſt of all. It is worthily reiected as a Popiſh barbariſme by learned Morton, that opinion, that the duties of the Sabbath ſerue, not ſo much to edifie the people, as to ſerue the Lord: which the Papiſts maintaine for the vpholding of that abſurd propoſition, that the hearing of a Maſſe is to be preferred before the hearing of the Word. So that by the beſt of iudgement, the preaching of the Word is reputed the maineſt part of Gods publike worſhip. I ſay by the beſt of iudgement, becauſe it is not vnknowne to me, that to ſome, this giuing of the precedent vnto preaching aboue Prayer, ſeemeth harſh. But why ſhould it? If the queſtion ſhould lie betwixt the Word of God, and Prayer; whether were the more excellent? I ſuppoſe it would be yeelded by euery man, that the Word of God is (of the twaine) the more of worth. Now what is Preaching in true vnderſtanding, (it being carried and performed as it ought) But the Word of God? The Text, is the word of God more abridged: Preaching, is the word of God more enlarged. If Preaching ſhall be excepted againſt, not to bee ſo certainely the word of God as the text, becauſe there is in Preaching, a worke of mans wit, and of his contriuing, wherein there is poſſibility of errour, I ſay the ſame exception may be made againſt the Text it ſelfe; becauſe, in bringing that, to be vſeful for the people, there is alſo an act of mans wit and labour, in tranſlating it, and man is as ſubiect to miſtaking, in tranſlating the Text, as in expounding it: but as the Text well tranſlated, is the word of God, and more excellent then Prayer: ſo is the Text wel expounded, and well applied, the Word of God, and ſo alſo of greater worth then Prayer. And it is abſurd, to ſay that Prayer is the voyce of Gods Spirit in a man; whereas preaching is onely the voyce of a man: For a faithfull Preacher is no leſſe aſſiſted with the Spirit of God in preaching, then a good Chriſtian is in praying. And miſerable is the caſe of that Preacher, who is not ſenſible of the guidance of Gods Spirit in his miniſtery, euen as it is a poore comfort to him that prayeth, if he cannot feele the ſame Spirit to direct him in his praying. It is true (I confeſſe (which ſome ſay, that a mans performing of his duty, is better then his hearing it, and his knowing it: Now (ſay they) Prayer is the performance of a mans duty: I anſwer, that though my doing my duty, be better then my hearing and my knowing it: yet Gods teaching me my duty (which is by preaching) is better then my performing it. It is much ſtood vpon, that the Church is called the houſe of Prayer: indeed it is ſo: I hope they which ſay ſo, doe not thinke it is the houſe of Prayer only, but of Preaching alſo, and of Sacraments. What is it then they vrge thence? This: that Prayer is therefore the moſt excellent ſeruice, Gods houſe being in a manner chiefly and mainely deuoted and conſecrated thereunto. A poore Collection. It is onely called the houſe of Prayer, not to exclude other ſeruices, or to giue Prayer the hand of all the reſt; but becauſe prayer muſt accompany all the reſt: Preaching muſt not be without Prayer: Sacraments muſt not be without Prayer: that therefore which muſt goe with all the reſt, is in that phraſe (the houſe of Prayer) put for all the reſt. Neither is this ſpoken to diſparage Prayer any way, or to perſwade or countenance any either diſuſe, or diſeſteeme thereof, either in publike, or in priuate. Nay rather this ſhall bring Prayer into more requeſt, and into greater practiſe: For he, who is the moſt conſcionable in hearing, is ſtill the moſt conſtant, and the moſt deuout in Praying. I haue now done with the prouing of the doctrine. Euery way I hope it is cleere: Honour and eſteeme is the due of Preaching.

A double vſe. 1. For Miniſters.

There is much matter by way of vſe to be deriued hence: Firſt, this concernes vs that are Miniſters: ſecondly, this concernes all good Chriſtians generally. Firſt for vs Miniſters, this doctrine binds vs to maintaine by all good meanes the honor of preaching, and to beware how we doe bring this reuerend and ſacred ordinance of God into contempt: of all men, it ſtands vs vpon to endeauour, that, that may bee duly eſteemed, which God commands not to be deſpiſed: it is the life and glory of our profeſſion: it were a ſtrange thing, if wee ſhould not care to bring it into diſgrace: I ſay it is the glory of our profeſſion: for when it may be ſaid of a man, he is a Miniſter, but no Preacher, it is like that which is ſaid of Naaman[n], he was a great man, & honourable in the ſight of his Lord, he was alſo a mighty man, and valiant, but a leper. This is a (But) which darkeneth all the reſt: So that thereon I infer, how much it behoues vs to labor to vphold the reputation of preaching, becauſe to be termed a Preacher, is the faireſt flower in our garland. Me thinks I ſhould not ſay much of this: and therefore I will rather apply my ſelfe, to ſhew how we may ſaue this courſe from contempt, then to proue that we are in equity tyed thereunto. Thus then, there are three things by which a Miniſter ſhall aduance the honor and eſteem of prophecying. 1. Diligence in preaching: It is that which Paul calleth in one place, labouring [o], in another, a being inſtant [p], in a third, a preaching the Goſpell with much ſtriuing [q]: It is the Lords worke [r], and curſed be he, that doth it negligently [s]. It may be thought in the reaſon of fleſh and blood, that this is no meanes to make preaching honorable. but to auaile it rather, in as much as (according to the old ſaying) familiarity breeds contempt and excellent things, when they once become ordinary, are the leſſe regarded. If ſermons were dainty, and mens ſtomacks were kept ſharp, they would be more eſteemed. It is not ſo in this caſe, when the people are once brought to vnderſtand the neceſſity of preaching. (the neceſſity, I ſay, both for ſaluation, and for the worſhip of God, in as much as whithout it, ſaluation is in hazard, and the worship of God is maimed) surely then, the more they haue it, the more they will honour it; and the more frequently the Kingdome of God is preached, the more they will presse vnto it[t]. Looke into experience, and see, whether the seldomnesse of this seruice doth not confirme the people in their opinion, of the no great necessity of it: which is the maine ground of contempt. Suppose a Parish haue an Incumbent reputed learned, but yet remisse in preaching, shall not his slackenesse cause the people to conclude, that preaching is not so simply necessary as it is thought? will they not say, Our Minister is learned, and of iudgement, and knowes what is what; surely if preaching were so vsefull, he would be more frequent in it then he is? And what hath bred those preiudiciall paradoxes to preaching, as that reading is preaching, &c. But the indisposition of men of gifts to be diligent in preaching? The vnwillingnesse and backwardnesse of men to spend themselues this way, hath caused (for the hiding of their shame) a straining of wits, and a wresting of Scripture, to proue the competency to saluation of a reading Ministery: such spurious propositions had neuer seene the light, if diligence in this duty had vniuersally been made conscience of. Therefore we must yeeld that, that which old Latimer (a man who sacrificed his life in Gods cause) once blamed, vnder the witty tearme of strawbery-preaching, is a speciall meanes to lay the honour of preaching in the dust. It brings a rust, yea and a curse vpon our gifts, and begets a kind of habit of idlenesse, and causeth the people to respect that little, which we performe but little: when I speake of diligence, I do not meane that a man should be euer and anon in the pulpit, for there must be a time of gathering, as well as of dispersing; and there is a kind of mercenary diligence in some, which is meet to be restrained: but this is diligence; a man is ready to take all occasions to doe good; especially bindes himselfe constantly vpon Gods day to be busied in Gods word. Happy is that seruant, whom his master when he commeth shall find so doing.

2 The manner of handling the word of God in preaching so as it is fit. If any man speake, let him speake as the words of God[u]: let him remember what hee hath in hand, and so deale accordingly. I remember how often Paul stands vpon his manner of preaching[x]: It is Hoseas phrase, the great or honourable things of the Law of God[y], yet may these be so vsed, as that they may seem base to those that heare them. Woe be to that good meat that must passe the fingers of a slouen, before it comes to the mouth of the eater. I loue not to be forward to taxe any mans preaching, and therefore I will so speake as shewing, rather what may be, then what is. There may be a preiudicing and an endangering the honour of preaching in handling it, two waies: One is too much exactnesse: as when men striue to haue euery word in print, and to stand in equipage; one neither higher nor lower, neither further forth, nor more backward then another, and do affect termes more then matter: embellishing their Sermons with the gleanings of all manner of Authors, sacred, prophane, any thing which may bee thought to smell of learning, and may raise an opinion of Eloquence, profoundnesse, variety of reading in the hearers. Will, I say, this make preaching to bee despised? Rather it is like to procure admiration and reuerence, and to cause a kind of astonishment in the hearers: happely it may for the present draw some such superficiall respect to a Preacher, as that which is counted euen by the heathen a vanity in Demosthenes: he said it pleased him secretly, when as he went in the streets, he should heare the women that carried water, say, There goeth eloquent Demosthenes. Thus a man may be rewarded with some such breath for this windy kind of preaching: but when it commeth to the touch, this shall bee found to dishonour Gods ordinance in true iudgement. For what is that, which indeed makes preaching honourable in the hearts of Gods people, but their vnderstanding it, so as that they may feele the sweetnesse of it, and receiue com-comfort by it? That therefore which hinders vnderſtanding, muſt needs expoſe this courſe to a kinde of diſgrace: what contentment ſhall a man take in it, when he conceiues but little what it meanes? It comes in our ordinary congregations, to as little purpoſe (ſuch a kind of teaching) as that which is ſaid in the Prouerb, Where one doth milke a goat, another holds vnder a ſiue. It may be the matter is good and excellent, but the hearer holds no more then a ſiue: Becauſe nothing to any great purpoſe is vnderſtood. It is the pithy plainneſſe, which is the beauty of preaching. A Text well opened, handſomely diuided, inſtructions familiarly raiſed, ſubſtantially proued by the Scripture, powerfully preſſed vpon the hidden man of the heart, faithfully applyed to the ſoule and conſcience of the hearer. This is the courſe which makes manifeſt the ſecrets of his heart, and brings him to fall downe on his face and worſhip God, and to ſay, that God is in the Preacher indeed [z]. It is truly ſaid, that in ſome caſes Iron can doe that, which Gold cannot: and ſo that, which is by ſome in their niceneſſe and curioſity accounted but a blunt kind of teaching, ſhall yet doe that, which the more glorious and glinſtring and gaudy courſe could not effect. The kingdome of God is not in word, but in power [a]. I haue heard of a thing that fell out once at the Counſell of Nice, where a Chriſtian of no great learning in eſteeme, conuerted a learned man, whom all the learned Biſhops with all their skill and eloquence could not perſwade: the party won, brake out in theſe words: Oh you learned man, as long as the matter went by words, againſt words I oppoſed words; and that which was ſpoken I ouerthrew by the art of ſpeaking: but when in ſtead of words, power came out of the mouth of the ſpeaker; words could not withſtand truth, nor man ſtand out againſt God. Thus that plaine kind of Teaching, in which the euidence of the Spirit is to be ſeen, workes that which the more curious and refined eloquence could not doe.

Ruffin. hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 3.

Non poterunt verba reſiſtere veritat (or, virtuti) nec homo aduerſari potuit Deo.

A ſecond way, by which in handling the word, preaching may be made contemptible, is in another extreame: namely, when the manner of dealing with the word, is ouer-ſlight to looſe, and ſuperficiall; a man vents raw, ſudden, vndigeſted meditations, ſuch as haue no manner of coherence, either with the text, or with themſelues: the text is rather torne, then diuided; rather toſſed, then handled; rather named, becauſe it is the faſhion to haue a text, then followed, for as that the hearer may ſee the courſe, by which all is drawn from the Text. Here a man makes a ſhift to rub out an houre, and to haue ſomewhat ſtill to ſay; he is much like the begger, of whom we ſay, hee is neuer out of his way, (though he be neuer in his way: ſo in this caſe, a man is neuer out of matter, though he ſpeakes neuer to the matter. This makes preaching ridiculous, and layeth it open (as it falleth from ſome mouthes) vnto a iuſt ſcorne. The common ſort happely eſpy not the weakneſſe by and by, thinking all well ſo long as one goeth on; but the more aduiſed holding it vp, (as it were againſt the light) ſee the rawneſſe and raggedneſſe, and independance of that which is deliuered. It is an honour to a Sermon, (when as the ſaying is) it ſhall ſmell of the candle, and teſtifie for it ſelfe, that there was afore-hand care to deale ſubſtantially, and to approue our ſelues to euery hearers conſcience in the ſight of God.

The third way for Miniſters to honour preaching by.

The third thing to bee taken heed to, that wee may preſerue the honor of preaching, is our manner of life. An euill life in Preachers cannot but cauſe preaching to bee vile: I call it an euill life, not when a man failes in ſome things; For in many things we faile all [b]: but when a man maketh it to appeare by his courſe, that he makes no conſcience of framing his life according to his owne teaching: is ſtrict in the pulpit, and in the ſtreet diſſolute. There is a great readineſſe in many to picke quarrels with the liues of the beſt Teachers, and no doubt many things are ſlanderouſly reported touching ſuch. Cruell witneſſes ariſe vp, and aske things they know not [c]: but when men taking the ordinance of God into their mouthes, ſhall yet walke like men hating to be reformed, and run into the ſame exceſſe with others, and be iuſtly taxable with open and ſcandalous euils; what can more diſhonour preaching? Will it not cauſe it to be reputed a meere ioy? A man ſhall be ſeene to perſwade to that, which himſelfe ordinarily neglects; and to cry out againſt that of which himſelfe doth make a common practiſe. Let no man deſpiſe thee, ſaid Paul to Timothy: how ſhal that be? Be vnto them that beleeue an example [d]. I haue here a large field before me, but I would be loth to preuent my ſelfe in that I haue to ſay: and therefore I here ſhut vp this vſe, touching vs of the Miniſtery. Preaching deſerues eſteeme, take we heed how we expoſe it to contempt. Our diligence in diſpenſing the Word; our reuerend and wel-aduiſed handling the Word; our endeauouring in the eies of the people, to frame our liues according to the Word, ſhall vphold the credit of this worthy ſeruice: Men (though we do this) ſome wil deſpiſe notwithſtanding and ſpeake contemptuouſly both of vs and of our Miniſtery: yet in doing it, they ſhall be as the Hereticke, of whom Paul, who is condemned by himſelfe [e].

[e] Tit. 3. 11.

I am now come to the ſecond vſe, which concernes all Chriſtians more in generall: All that profeſſe to expect ſaluation by Ieſus Chriſt, are bound to this duty, to ſaue preaching (as much as may be) from deſpiſing. This may bee done (that I may not ſay all which might be ſaid, but may inſiſt only vpon the chiefeſt) by two things eſpecially. Firſt, by a conſtant and an vnwearied dependance vpon preaching, ſeeking by all meanes poſſible to enioy it. Haue we not reaſon to depend on it, when, where it wanteth, the people periſh [f]? And ſhall wee not honour it exceedingly, when our feet ſhall euen weare out the threſhold of that houſe, where it is faithfully diſpenſed? And when wee ſhall ſeeke knowledge at the lips of the Prieſts with ſuch earneſtneſſe, as if wee were guided by the ſpirit which was in thoſe primitiue Conuerts, that cried out to Peter and the reſt, Men an brethren what ſhall we doe [g]? It will appeare that we eſteeme Gods ordinance, when we ſhall for the ſake of it neglect our profit, hazard our outward peace, ſeeme careleſſe of our credit, ſtraine our purſes, and be like the Merchant in the Goſpell, that parts with all that he hath, for one ſpeciall Pearle [h]. Great contempt is caſt vpon prophecying at this day, by default herein; I will not ſo much ſpeake of thoſe, who caſt no manner of reſpect vnto it, but openly and ordinarily, and in a ſhort profeſſedly doe auaile it: but of thoſe which make ſome ſhew to eſteeme it. That is moſt pittifull, when ſuch as pretend a kind of honour, ſhall yet by conſequent, bee found deſpiſers. Firſt, ſome would (as they make ſhew) waite on this means, but they will make their own conditions: prouided that it comes home to them, that they may haue it without trouble: Oh how glad would they be, had they a Preacher in their Churches, they would thinke it to bee none of the ſmalleſt portions of their happineſſe? But when it comes to the point of ſeeking out and of trauelling to the Prophet with the Shunamite [i], or elſe of cutting off ſome of their ſuperfluities, and of ſtinting themſelues in other things, that they may draw to them ſome able Miniſter of the new Teſtament: then they begin to be as backward and ſorrowfull, as the rich man in the Goſpell, who was forward as hee ſeemed at firſt, yet began to flinch, when he heard the charge of ſelling: and ſo they after a large commendation of preaching, and a faire tale of their eſteeming it, yet while they are afraid of trouble, and reproach, and labour and are loath to be at any charges, they ſtill content themſelues with an vnable Miniſtery. Heere is a faire honour done to Preaching. For ſhame if our hearts bee to it, (as woe be to vs, if they be not) let vs engage our ſelues for it. Remember what hath both been ſaid and proued, there is no other ordinary way of ſaluation: and wilt thou not ſtraine thy body, thy purſe, thy credit, aduenture thy outward peace, doe any thing that thou maieſt be ſaued? It is not honouring of the ordinance of God, if thou canſt any way ſatisfie and content thy ſelfe without it. I ſhall bee thought (perhaps) to perſwade ſtrange things, and

The ſecond vſe for all Chriſtians in generall.

Two things by which ordinary Chriſtians may ſaue Preaching from contempt.

(as may be thought) not iuſtifiable. But doe me right, I pray you, in indifference, conſidering what I ſay: Behold Luke 6. 17. and marke what you finde there: A great multitude of people out of all Iudea, and Ieruſalem, and from the ſea-coaſts of Tyre and Sidon which came to heare him. Did theſe ſay, If this good man would come to vs, how glad ſhould wee bee? But they went out to him, they left their blind guides, and followed this Seer where he was. I demand, is not this written for our learning? can we ſay, It was not well that they did? were they not worthy of praiſe for ſo doing? then ſay I with the Apoſtle, Whatſoeuer things are honeſt and of good report, thoſe things doe[k]: And if this ſatisfie not, and you ſuſpect my iudgement, I pray you look into the book you haue in your Pariſhes, the workes of Biſhop Iewell, in his Sermons vpon this chapter, and vpon the 12. and 13. verſes: What ſhall we ſay of them that labour not, that doe neither Teach, nor Exhort, nor reproue, nor correct; that haue no care to doe their meſſage, and no regard to the people, what may I ſay of ſuch? God himſelfe ſaith, They are dumbe dogges that cannot barke, they lie and ſleepe, and delight in ſleeping, they all looke to their owne way, and their owne aduantage, and euery one for his owne purpoſe[l]. Chriſt calleth them Theeues and Robbers. They are vnſauory ſalt, profitable for nothing, but to be caſt forth, and trodden vnder feet of men. Woe is vnto me (ſaith Paul) if I preach not the Goſpell[m]. Woe to the ſeruant, that wrappeth his Talent in a napkin, and encreaſeth not his Maſters gaine. God grant ſuch idle and ſlothfull Miniſters grace, to know their office, and doe it: If not, God giue the people grace to know them, and to ſhun them, and to flie from them. (So farre he:) Which words if they doe not teach, not to be ſatisfied without preaching, and to ſhun thoſe which are vnſufficient, and negligent in that duty; for my part I muſt acknowledge, I doe not vnderſtand Engliſh. Let this then be our honour giuen to preaching, euen to ſtriue that wee may enioy it, and to put our ſelues to hard conditions, rather then to want it. And doe you of this Towne particularly take notice of it; ſee how God hath mooued the hearts of the Worſhipfull of theſe parts, to pity your neceſſity; and to procure a courſe of preaching with you; not ſo much that you might reſt content with this, or ſay as Micah the Ephramite, when he had got a Leuite into his houſe, Now I know, the Lord will doe me good, ſeeing I haue a Leuite to my Prieſt[n], ſo now, We are ſafe, we haue a Lecture in our towne. No, if yow ſhall not ſet together amongſt your ſelues, to haue it amongſt you on the Sabbath day, the day principally deputed to this ſeruice, for my part I ſhall thinke our paines here (in reſpect of you) to be vnprofitable.

2 There is another kinde of dependance, which is alſo preiudiciall to the honor of preaching, and that is that, which is but by fits and ſtarts; ſomewhat eager happily at the beginning, but ſlaking by degrees, till it come to nothing: you will diſgrace it here much, if filling the Church now at the firſt, you ſhall hereafter like men whoſe ſtomackes are full, begin to grow weary, and full of that which you now ſeeme to affect. Giue vs not occaſion to ſay hereafter, as Chriſt of Iohn; He was a burning and a ſhining light, and you were willing for a ſeaſon to reioyce in this light[o]. It is a thing to be ſuſpected; experience ſheweth that (as the ſaying is) euery thing is prety when it is young; ſo ſuch exerciſes as theſe are flocked vnto at the firſt, but after, men by little and little fall off: ſome will heare only this man, ſome onely that man; ſome only now and then, when they haue occaſion to come to towne; ſome neuer a whit: You will bring a diſgrace vpon your paines here, if you ſhall cauſe it to be thought that we haue cloyed your ſtomacks, and taken away the edge of your appetites. Haue not the Faith of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt the Lord of glory, with reſpect of perſons[p]: Make much of, and honour any mans endeauours that doth his duty vpon his conſcience. This ſhall be your firſt way of honouring preaching, your manner of dependance vpon it, let it bee earneſt, painfull, conſtant: let it appeare that you will not hope to be ſaued, but by the meanes that God hath ſanctifyed.

The ſecond way by which you ſhall honour Preaching, is, yeelding obedience to that which is taught, and conformity in life to our preaching. It it is not the bare hearer, but the doer withall, that ſhall be bleſſed q. There is no fouler ſtaine to preaching, then when they which ſay they loue it, and deſire it, and eſteeme and follow after it, and trauell to enioy it, ſhall yet make no conſcience of obedience to it. How doth this open the mouthes of gainſayers, and embolden them to their imputations vpon preaching, when they ſhall haue ſome colour to cry out, There be none Worſe, more Proud, Wanton, Contentious, Couetous, Oppreſſing, Fraudulent then the greateſt hearers? When you walke not according to the rules you are taught, you make preaching and profeſſing, to be reputed the nurſery of vngodlineſſe, and the couert for all villany. And therefore, you that are of the firſt ſort, Gentlemen and Iuſtices, who haue laboured to draw Preachers hither, and who now giue countenance to vs by your preſence, honour vs alſo (I pray you) with your holy practiſe: make it to appeare by your zealous execution of Iuſtice, when you ſit here vpon the buſineſſe of the Country, by your ſuppreſſing of groſſe diſ-orders, and that world of Ale-houſes, that is; and which is the very neſt of all wickedneſſe; and by the reformation of your followers and families; and principally by the Chriſtian cariage of your ſelues: and by the abatement of your exceſſes, vaine pleaſures, Epicuriſmes, ſwearings, and ſuch like: that you haue not drawne preaching hither for a forme, or out of a glory: but that in ſincerity of heart, you haue ſought your owne furtherance in the waies of piety. Let it not be ſaid, as it will be, if you preuent it not, Behold here be ſuch and ſuch, euery weeke at Sermon, and yet how doe they liue, rather as Atheiſts, and enemies to Religion, then as godly Chriſtians? And you of the Towne, who ſeeme to be glad of this erected courſe, reſolue with your ſelues, that you will ſet on with a generall reformation. Let vs ſee ſome fruit by our labours with you: giue no cauſe to haue it thought, you reioyce in this for outward reſpects; as to encreaſe your Market, and to draw company to your towne, or to vent your commodities, or that you may glory: Oh, we haue a Lecture too, as well as ſuch a Towne, or as ſuch: But as other adioyning Townes ſhall be beholding to you, for borrowing from your Church the light of Doctrine: ſo let them receiue from you the light of good example. And you all whether Gentlemen, or Yeomen, or whatſoeur elſe, I beſeech you in the feare of God, receiue not this grace of God in vaine: make ſome vſe of your comming, learne to practiſe that, by which your Families, through you, may be bettered: your Neighbours prouoked, eſpecially your owne ſoules comforted in the day of Chriſt. Let not the lecture-day (now when the Sermon is ended) be made a day of voluptuouſneſſe, of quaffing, ſwaggering, diſorder: Goe not from the Church, to eate out, and eate vp one another in the market, by fraud and cruelty: Run not euery man to his race, as a horſe to the battell; but let vs haue comfort to ſpend our Spirits among you, when we ſhall behold your good conuerſation in Chriſt, that wee all, both Preachers, and hearers, may reioyce together at the laſt day, that we haue not run in vaine. If you faile in this, it is not your comming to heare vs, your commending vs, your reſpectiue ſaluting vs, your prouiding to entertain vs, that can honor our Miniſtery: we ſhall (notwithſtanding all this complement) hang down our heads with ſhame, and ſay: You haue requited our labour with intolerable contempt.

q Iam. 1. 25.

To my verie honourable good Lady, the Lady Margaret Hele, of Wenbury in Deuonſh.

MAdam, This Sermon, whereof, when it was preached your eares did partake, is here now in another forme preſented to your hands. It ſeemed welcome to you then. I hope it ſhall not be vnpleaſing now. You ſhall finde it here faithfully related, according as I ſpeake it: and albeit the matter cannot bee ſo liuely from the pen, as from the tongue, yet if it wrought any thing vpon your heart when you heard it, the hauing of it by you, to looke on (at ſome of thoſe times, which I truſt you doe conſcionably and conſtantly beſtow on priuate exerciſes,) ſhall not be vnprofitable. I thought to haue reſpited the publication of it, vntill God had giuen opportunity to accompliſh the whole Text, (I meane the two next verſes to this heere opened) in the place, to which I was called to handle this. But ſome other occaſion (which your La. will gueſſe, though I ſay nothing) haue moued mee to doe otherwiſe. And yet that it might not goe altogether alone, I haue accompanied it with two other Sermons, in the generall matter thereof very well agreeing to it, not long ſince preached, in my weekely courſe in my own Cure. All three together, I reſpectiuely offer heere vnto your Ladiſhip, as a teſtimony of my continuall deſire, to helpe you onwards in your wel-begun iourney towards Heauen. It were folly for me to commend what my ſelfe haue done, yet for the maine ſubiect of theſe three Sermons, I may (without boaſting any way in my ſelfe) boldly ſay, it is the moſt behoefull point, which your Ladiſhip, or any other good Christian can be busied in. to seeke assurance of having the Spirit, to endeauour the cherishing thereof, when it is felt, to be vnderstandingly aware of Satans practices to extinguish it, to labor to bring the soule to a resolued and wel-grounded resting vpon the power and grace of God, through Iesus Christ, what a necessary taske is this? that the more your Ladiship shall take paines herein, the greater sweetnesse shall you find in Religion, and the more rest for your soule. Thus hoping your Ladiship will accept of this small Gift, though not as a recompence, yet as an acknowledgment of that much, which in many respects I owe vnto you, I pray God to increase your feeling and care, in and for that which these Sermons doe perswade: and so rest,

1 THES. 5. 19. Quench not the Spirit, &c.

MY firſt thoughts vpon this Text, after I had determined the handling of it at this time, and in this place, were accompanied with the remembrance of that ſaying of Salomon [a], A three-fold cord is not eaſily broken: me thought I beheld here ſuch an holy twine, artificially made vp by Saint Paul, of three ſeuerall threeds, as being made vſe of for the faſtening of the ſoule of a Chriſtian to his God, cannot quickly be diſſolued. For ſurely he, who feeling in himſelfe the graces of Gods Spirit, ſhall bee conſcionably carefull not to quench them, and to that end ſhall honour prophecying, and in his reſpectiue dependance thereupon ſhall diligently examine what he heares, that, that which is good indeed he may obediently entertaine: well may I apply to him that ſaying of the Pſalme [b]; He that doth theſe things ſhall neuer be moued, nothing ſhall be able to preiudice the ſaluation of his ſoule. Thus briefly, to poſſeſſe you with a conceit of the ſpeciall worth of this Scripture. My prayer is that to the dignity of the place, both my handling, and your hearing may be anſwerable.

[b] Pſal. 15. 5.

I loue not to be curious about diuiſion: to the eares of that which Saint Peter [c] cals the hid man of the heart; the plaine ſong doth alwaies make the beſt muſicke. Thus then, here are three verſes, of which the firſt giues occaſion to the two later, and the two later, are appurtenances to the firſt. The Apoſtle giuing a charge not to quench the Spirit, immediatly giues direction how, and by what meanes to keep it in, Diſpiſe not propheſying: ſpeaking of propheſying, leſt whatſoeuer is preſented to vs in the ſhape thereof, ſhould eftſones bee honuored: he annexed a caution touching triall: Embrace nothing before triall, and make much of that which is found to bee good vpon triall. This is the ſtate of this place. I will take euery thing in that order wherein it comes, and proceed ſo as the time ſhall ſuffer.

[c] 1 Pet. 3. 4.

The order of the place.

The firſt charge heerein giuen, vpon which doe hang the other two, is, Not to quench the Spirit: Intreating vpon which ſhort, yet plentifull precept, my firſt and ſpeciall worke muſt be to examine, what is meant by the word Spirit in this place; for the word quench being ſo familiar as it is, needs no great inquiry. Touching Spirit, Auguſtine in two ſeuerall places expounds it, of the third perſon in the bleſſed Trinity, whom we call the holy Ghoſt or Spirit: and vrgeth this place againſt thoſe who denied the third perſon, whom he terms quenchers of the ſpirit, becauſe as much as in them lyeth, they aboliſh the being of the holy Ghoſt: in the iudgement of the learned, this expoſition is a little too much forced: For the very courſe and current of the place, may ſhew that the Apoſtle had an aime at ſomething within our ſelues, which he would not haue vs quench, and had no purpoſe here to maintain the miſtery of the Trinity.

The expoſition of the words. Epiſt 23. ad Bonifacium l. 2. con. Epiſt Par. c. 13.

Some fanaticall and Anabaptiſticall humor, who ſtand much vpon reuelations, and I know not what inſpirings, endeauor to make vſe of this place, for giuing countenance vnto them, and would haue the Spirit here to betoken thoſe extraordinary diſcoueries which they dreame of; theſe (forſooth) muſt not bee quenched, that is, muſt not be repreſſed, but cherished, and allowed of, and men not ſo preciſely tyed to the words and letter of the Scripture: But how far this is from the Apoſtles mind, the following verſe plainely ſheweth, where hee commends prophecying; that is, interpreting of the Scripture, as a meanes for the continuance of the heat and light of that ſpirit, which hee here perſwades not to quench: and therefore intends no ſuch inſpirings which ſhall ouerthrow the neceſſity of the Scripture, or promote that which contradicts the Scripture. So that there is no doubt to be made, but that by Spirit, are meant here (according to Theophilact) the gifts and graces of Gods Spirit. So is the word vſed often in holy Scripture, as *Rom.*8.9. where is not meant the very eſſence of the third perſon, but as the ſame Apoſtle ſpeakes elſewhere, the fruits of the ſpirit [d]; ſuch things as are wrought by the Spirit of God, by the power of the holy Ghoſt, in the hearts and ſoules of thoſe that are the Lords.

d Gal. 5.22.

In reference to this, a man regenerate is ſaid to haue a new ſpirit put into his bowels [e]; yea, to be ſpirit [f], to haue receiued of the ſpirit [g], to liue in the ſpirit [h], and all becauſe the Spirit of God hath a working in him, of renuing, ſanctifying, enlightning, &c.

e Eze. 11.19.
f Ioh. 3.6.
g 1 Ioh 4.13.
h Gal. 5.25.

Now, to quench the Spirit, is, to put out, to weaken, to abate the power and working of thoſe graces: ſo then, Quench not the ſpirit, that is, You that feele your ſelues to haue receiued the graces of Gods Spirit, and to bee furniſhed with thoſe ſpirituall bleſſings in heauenly things, with which God is wont to accompliſh his Elect, looke to it, that through your neglect and careleſneſſe, theſe good things in you bee not extinguiſhed, rather labour for their encreaſe, and the helping of them ſtill forward to more perfection. Thus is the ſenſe.

Now wee haue gotten that, let vs proceed to enquire what we may gaine and gather hence as matter of inſtruction. It ſeemes to me, that there be two ſpeciall points of doctrine to be collected from theſe words: 1. That it is poſſible for a man hauing the Spirit of God, to know that hee hath receiued it. 2. That it is neceſſary for him that doth know he hath receiued it, to beware how he quencheth it. The former of theſe two, I raiſe thus, Quench not the Spirit, ſaith the Apoſtle: I demand, Is it poſſible for any man to make conſcience not to quench it, vnleſſe he knoweth touching himſelfe that the doth enioy it. The care to preſerue a commodity, may perhaps not vnfitly be learned before a man hath it, but it cannot poſſibly be practiſed before poſſeſſion: and how can a man in common reaſon, ſettle himſelfe to that care, before he be ſure and ſenſible of his hauiug it? It is in vaine to aduiſe a man not to quench the Spirit, if he cannot aſſuredly know himſelfe to haue receiued it. May not a man otherwiſe very iuſtly reply thus vpon this charge: Alas, you ſpeake of not quenching the ſpirit; but where is it? I doe neither know now, nor ſhall euer bee able to know, whether this Spirit which you talke of, be in me, yea, or no.

Me thinkes I ſhould not ſay much concerning this. There cannot bee framed a ſurer conſequence then this. A man may and muſt make conſcience, Not to quench the ſpirit, therefore a man may know himſelfe to haue receiued the Spirit. This which is ſo plaine by this Text, is as apparent elſewhere in holy Scriptures.

That there are ſome whom God endoweth and endueth with his ſpirit, I truſt I need not proue. I haue ſaid ſomewhat to that effect already: Paul ſaid to the Romans, Ye haue receiued the ſpirit of adoption [i], he hath giuen (vs) ſaith he, (ioyning himſelfe with others, and others herein with himſelfe) the earneſt of the ſpirit [k]: God hath euen giuen you his holy Spirit [l]. Now, that they which haue receiued

i Rom. 8.15.
k 2 Cor. 5.5.
l 1 Theſ 4.8.

receiued it, ſhould be aware of their receiuing it, how can it be made queſtion of? I thinke that I haue alſo the Spirit of God[m]. Wee muſt not thinke (thinke there) to be a word of ſurmiſe, as it is ſometimes in our ordinary ſpeaking oppoſed to certenty of knowledge, as when a man ſaith, I thinke it is ſo, but I cannot tell: but here, I thinke, is all one with that Engliſh of ours, I trow I haue, &c. Or, I take it, &c. [m] 1 Cor. 7. 40

For had this been a word of doubtfulneſſe, how would it but haue been a preiudice to the Apoſtles aduice giuen to the Corinthians? They might haue ſaid well, When we ſee him more ſure of his hauing the Spirit of God, then will we make a little more account of his counſel. Looke then, Paul knew: and as it was not appropriated to Paul, to haue the Spirit (for it is the common promiſe of all that are Chriſts[n], ſo neither was it his peculiar, to know ſo much. I ſhewed you how in this point of hauing the Spirit, and ſo of ſpeaking confidently touching hauing it, he ſorts himſelfe, with others of Gods faithfull ones[o]: The truth is, the ſpirit wil make it ſelf to be felt, and perceiued where it is: it hath ſuch workings within a man, which cannot be ſecreted. It is a Spirit of life[p], can a man liue and not know it? I confeſſe his knowledge herein, in reſpect of the outward working thereof, may be ſometimes intermitted, as when one is in a ſound, or a ſleep: and ſo there are fits and moods, in which this knowledge of the preſence of Gods Spirit, is more obſcure, and leſſe feeling. But in the generality, the hauing of life cannot be vnknown to him that liues: and ſo vndoubtedly, as bodily life giues euidence of it ſelfe, ſo doth ſpirituall life alſo. The Spirit of God where it is, comforts, inſtructs, guides, leades, enlightneth, ſanctifieth, is an earneſt of a future inheritance, can theſe things be wrought in a mans ſoule, and he not know it? There is as great an alteration effected in a man after the entrance of the Spirit into him, as was in Lazarus when hee was raiſed to life out of the graue: or as in Bartimeus, when his ſight was reſtored, or as in the Creeple at the Temple gate, when his feete and anklebones receiued ſuch ſtrength that he walked and leaped, and praiſed God[q]. A man was dead, and the ſpirit quickneth him, he was blinde and ignorant, and his cogitations darkned, the ſpirit enlightneth him, hee was not able to moue a foote in the path of righteouſneſſe, the Spirit makes him nimble and actiue to runne the way of Gods commandements. [n] Rom. 8. 9. [o] 2 Cor. 5. 5. [p] Rom. 8. 2. [q] Acts 3.

How can theſe things be vnknowne? I will voluntarily abridge that plenty, which doth euen preſſe vpon me herein, the caſe is ſo plaine, that it needs not much confirming: I will rather haſten to the vſe, which I hope ſo many of vs as deſire to feare God, ſhall finde to be exceeding profitable.

It is poſſible for a man to know himſelfe to haue the ſpirit of God, and is it not then neceſſary for euery man to make enquiry into himſelfe, concerning this? If I may know this, I would faine know what warrant I haue, not to ſeeke to know it. Perhaps thou wilt ſay, It is no great matter, whether thou haue the Spirit of God or no, and ſo it is of no great behoofe to vſe enquiry. Oh far be it from thee ſo to thinke; Harke what is ſaid[r], If any man haue not the ſpirit of Chriſt, the ſame is not his: there is no part in Chriſt without the fruition of his Spirit. Looke then how much it ſtands thee vpon, to vnderſtand whether or no thou ſhalt be ſaued, ſo much alſo it concernes thee to know whether or no thou haue Gods Spirit. And who ſo feeds himſelfe with an hope of being ſaued, and yet cannot tell whether he haue receiued the ſpirit of God or no, he feeds himſelfe with the wind, and truſts to that which ſhall deceiue him. [r] Rom. 8. 9.

The Vſe.

And now conſider here, what iuſt occaſion is giuen mee, to lift vp my voice like a trumpet, and to cry loud againſt thoſe, who neuer in their liues did ſeriouſly put this queſtion to their owne ſoules; (Haue I the ſpirit of God?) I am afraid there is ſcarce one for an hundred, that is not guilty of this neglect, I would all you that heare me ſay this, this day, would doe as our Sauiours

Diſci-

Diſciples did when he told them that one of them ſhould betray him, euery one was afraid of himſelfe: Is it I, ſaid one: is it I ſaid another [f]: So when you heare a general imputation laid vpon the times concerning this, of looking into mens ſelues, whether they haue the Spirit of God or no; oh, that euery one of vs might be iealous of himſelfe, and ſay to his owne heart; What, and am I one that am remiſſe herein? No doubt, our hearts would ſmite vs herein, as Dauids did him [t], and happy ſhould ſuch ſecret ſmitings be; they would be like the precious balme [u], ſuch blowes would cauſe the blewneſſe of the wound, which Salomon ſaith, ſerues to purge out the euill [x]: ſhould we once fall to an earneſt communing with our ſelues concerning this; this good I am ſure would follow, that we would neuer leaue preſſing and vrging queſtion vpon queſtion, till we had gotten ſome aſſurance in this matter. Well, my truſt is through the mercy of God, this which I haue ſaid ſhall not be vtterly in vaine, but ſome that heare me ſhall be moued to this inquiry? therefore for the furtherance and helpe of ſuch, I will enlarge this vſe; by teaching how a man may certenly ſatisfie himſelfe in this demand: Haue I the Spirit of God or no? I will not herein goe beyond the kenning of my Text: I find a fier here in my Text, at which I may eaſily light ſuch a candle, as ſhall abundantly direct vs in this ſearh.

How a man may know himſelfe to haue the ſpirit of God.

The terme of quenching here coupled with the ſpirit, is an argument, that the Spirit of God is of a fiery nature: Quenching is the peculiar to fier: Now in fier we doe all conceiue two things; firſt, a light; ſecond, a heate. Theſe two in this element are inſeparable: ſo that to apply it to our purpoſe, briefly (that I may not as we ſay burne day-light, by diſcourſing further touching fire then is neceſſary) if we would be aſſured of our hauing the Spirit of God within vs, there is a ſpirituall light, and a ſpirituall heate to be inquired for: the ſpirituall light is ſpoken of, Epheſ. 1. 18. viz: it is, when by Gods giuing the Spirit of Wiſdome and reuelation, The eyes of the vnderſtanding are enlightned, &c. Man by nature is euen darkneſſe it ſelfe [y], A very beaſt by his owne knowledge [z]; he perceiueth not the things of the Spirit of God [a]: Now vpon his being endued with the Spirit, that God, who at firſt commanded the Light to ſhine out of darkneſſe, cauſeth a ſhining to breake into his heart, by giuing the light of knowledge [b]: This is that Oyntment from him that is Holy [c]. Heereupon the regenerate are ſaid to bee Light in the Lord, to be the Children of the Light [d], the children of the day [e].

So then to this firſt iſſue, we are now come. My demand to my ſoule is, haue I the Spirit of God? I am taught here to ſay, Sure if I haue, I am indued with ſpirituall light, where is then my knowledge in the things of God? where is my vnderſtanding in the things of Chriſt? Am I ſenſible of the falling away of the ſcales of ignorance from the eyes of my minde, feele I how the myſt of my naturall darkneſſe is diſperſed and diſpelled, and how I am called vnto a marvellous light [f]? Are not now the ſecrets of Religion, ſuch riddles and ſuch vnſauory obſcurities to me, as they haue been in times paſt? Cannot my conſcience witneſſe with me in theſe things? Surely the Spirit of Chriſt Ieſus is not in me, I am yet none of his, I am yet a limme of the kingdome of darknes, a ſeruiter of the prince of darkneſſe, and if I continue ſo, vtter darkneſſe muſt needs be my portion, and I cannot eſcape it.

f 1 Pet 2. 9.

What a matter of terrour is this, for all ſuch as hate knowledge, as pleaſe to nouzle themſelues in ignorance, which truſt to it as to the ſafeſt courſe, as if they had ſome ſpeciall gift of ſmelling out the way to heauen in the dark: ſuch deſpiſe the key of knowledg, & though they be neuer ſo often and ſo vehemently called vpon with the words of Dauid, Vnderſtand yee vnwiſe among the people, and yee Fooles, when will yee be wiſe [g]? See how ready the Lord is to powre out his minde vnto you and to make you vnderſtand his words [h]; Why will you be deſtroyed for lack of knowledge? yet they ſhew themſelues like Salomons foole, whoſe fooliſhneſſe

Iſſhnes will not depart from him, no though he be braied with a peſtell among Wheat: i Prou. 27. 22.

They will not know i: yea, they ſet downe a law ouer and aboue all that euer God made, that their ignorance, yea, though it be neuer ſo much affected, neuer ſo wilful, yet it ſhall excuſe them, and their good meaning ſhal bring them as ſoone to heauen, as all the knowledge in the world. (Father forgiue them, for they knw not what they do.) What heart that hath grace may not melt within him, to ſee that men will needs periſh, and are ſo deſperately bent to aduenture their ſoules vpon meere vncertainties? Remember I pray you, no illumination, no preſence of Gods Spirit, he that is not acquainted with this ſpirituall light, neuer ſhall he ſee the light of the Lord, in the Land of the liuing.

Oh, that ſaying of the Apoſtles; enough to make our belly to tremble, to conſider it: If our Goſpell be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt k: If there bee any that are not anoynted with eye-ſalue, to ſee that which is called the ſecret of the Goſpell, and to vnderſtand that great myſtery of godlineſſe, which God hath reuealed in his word, they haue vpon them the very marke of loſt-ones: A terrible verdit. k 2 Cor. 4.

I might ſeeme to haue done with this euidence of the ſpirits preſence: but as I was about to giue it ouer, it came to my mind, that though I had ſaid the truth, yet if I left the matter ſo rawly, I might fall at vnawares into two extremities: 1. of diſcouraging ſome, who haue need rather of refreſhng: 2. of putting heart into otherſome, who deſerue rather to be taken downe. I conſidered the inconueniences of both: remembring how dangerous it is, either to make the hearts of the righteous ſad, whom the Lord hath not made ſad, or to ſtrengthen the hands of the wicked, that he ſhould not returne from his wicked way l. Hereupon I laboured to adde to that which I haue ſaid a little more: 1. They which may be diſheartned hereby, are ſuch, as are weake in knowledge, dull in apprehenſion, hard of conceiuing; who (it may be) read and heare much and often, yet profit little; they ſeeme to themſelues, to ſee nothing as yet to any great purpoſe: to tell them then that if they haue not the gift of illumination, they haue not the Spirit of God, you amaze them quite, and that little hope which they ſometimes had, is by this meanes vtterly ouerthrowne. l Eze. 13. 22.

To releeue ſuch therefore, this is to be known, that this light wee ſpeake of, is not at the brighteſt and cleereſt at the firſt, nay, reſpectiuely to that which ſhall be, when it is at the higheſt in this World, it is but in part m: When a man is vpon the point of entrance into the ſtate of grace, there is a light appeares n: but yet it is but as the light in the firſt dawning of the day, a certen ſtep from darkneſſe, and a degree aboue it, but yet ſo tempered and intermixed with darkneſſe, that as the Poet ſaith, thou canſt call it neither darkneſſe, neither light. m 1 Cor. 13. 9. n Pſal. 119. 130.

It is a certaine compoſition of both, nay at the firſt appearing thereof darkneſſe is the predominant. The blind man whom our Sauiour cured in the Goſſpell, after the firſt touch he was asked, if he ſaw ought: I ſee men, ſaith he, for I ſee them walke like Trees o. His ſigne at the firſt was confuſed and vncertaine, he did not ſee diſtinctly. o Mar. 8. 22. 24.

Thus it is in the inward man, the enlightning many times is but weake and duskiſh, yea, and that in men of place, ordained to giue ſpirituall light to others: as that famous Apollos ſtood in need to haue the way of God expounded vnto him more perfectly p. How were the Diſciples of our Sauiour, liuing vnder ſo excellent a Teacher? Are yee yet without vnderſtanding? Perceiue yee not yet, &c. q. I haue been ſo long time with you, and haſt thou not knowne mee, &c. r? So that the littleneſſe and dimneſſe of the Light receiued muſt not diſcourage: If there be any, it muſt bee reioyced in: and that there is ſome in thoſe which complaine, (as I haue ſaid) it is manifeſt by their complaint. They complaine of darkneſſe: therefore they ſee how it is with them: the ſtate of their ſoule is diſcerned p Acts 18. 26. q Mar. 15. 16. r Iohn 14. 9.

cerned by them, and what is it but light that maketh theſe things manifeſt [f]. If thou art come as yet no further then to that which is called, A mind to know him which is true [t], ſo that thou art weary of thy naturall blindneſſe, and if thou wert put to thy choice, like the blind man in the ſtory [u], and the Lord ſhould ſay to thee, as to him; What wilt thou that I doe vnto thee, thy anſwere would bee (with reference vnto thy ſpirituall blindnes) like his: Lord that I may receiue ſight. If the ſmall portion which thou haſt, bee precious to thee, like a little glimmering to a blind man, when he is in the way of turning, and thou be diligent with conſcience and with conſtancy, to vſe all good meanes for increaſing of it, thou haſt no cauſe of diſcouragement; this little oyle in thy cruze, ſhall feed thy ſoule, this ſmall light ſhall guide thy feet into the way of peace. This for the firſt ſort, that might be grieued with this point.

There are another ſort may preſume too farre vpon that which hath been ſaid, and they muſt neceſſarily be reduced to termes: Illumination and knowledge in Religion is a pledge of the preſence of Gods ſpirit; may not then euery one that is enlightned and furniſhed with knowledge, aſſure himſelfe that he is Chriſts? I ſay no. Though euery one that hath receiued the ſpirit of God is enlightned, yet not euery one that is enlightned hath receiued the ſpirit of God in the ſenſe we now ſpeake of. I know there is a working of the ſpirit of God in all that are enlightned with any truth of knowledge in religion, for no man can ſay, that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt [x]; but yet there may bee an enlightning with knowledge, which is not accompanied with that preſence of Gods Spirit which brings ſaluation: what ſay wee to thoſe, which ſhall ſay to Chriſt in that day, Lord, Lord, haue we not prophecied in thy name [y]? Such had enlightning: what ſhall we ſay to thoſe that ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, haue not they alſo been enlightned? Doth not Paul ſpeake of a poſſibility, to know all ſecrets, and all knowledge, and yet to be nothing [z]? I doubt not but there are many exquiſitely and exactly ſeen in the generall doctrine of diuinity, able to teach it for the good of others, able to write and preach for the conuincing of gainſaiers, which yet ſhall haue no inheritance among the Saints in light.

[z] 1 Cor. 13.2.

There be who giue ſmal teſtimony of any truth of ſauing grace to be in them, who yet can diſcourſe at large, eloquently and iudiciouſly touching matters of Religion; I confeſſe here is an enlightning, but not ſuch as is a pledge of regeneration. It is poſſible for a Comet to haue a more blazing light then one of the fixed ſtars; which yet vaniſheth at laſt, and commeth to nothing: and ſo it may be that ſome one, who is a meere hypocrite, and but as it were the ſheath and ſhadow of a Chriſtian, may in ſome particularities of knowledge goe beyond a true Nathanael, and put him down quite, ſo that he ſhal be as no body in reſpect of him: wherefore the kind of that knowledge muſt be conſidered of, the enlightning wherewith may be a comfort indeed: Now that knowledge, hath theſe two ſpeciall properties; 1. It is an experimental knowledge; ſuch a knowledge in Religion, as a man is able to make good not onely by proofe of Scripture (though that be neceſſary) but by his own particular and perſonall feeling: I will ſhew an example or two hereof. Firſt, Pſal. 116.6. The Lord preſerueth the ſimple, ſaith Dauid: there is a poſition in diuinity, ſuch an one as no doubt in the generall truth thereof many an vnregenerate man is able by proofes and teſtimonies of Scriptures to confirme. But ſee now the maine proofe; I meane in reſpect of a mans own ſatisfying: I was in miſery, ſaith he, and he ſaued me: This is that which Chriſt calleth the ſetting to ones ſeale that God is true [a]: A man can beare witnes to the truth of God out of his own feeling. A ſecond example is, Rom. 8.1.2. There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus: Behold a notable point of Religion; A man may conceiue the meaning of this fully, and prooue it out of Gods word plentifully, for the good of many others, and yet himſelfe come ſhort: Note therefore what proofe Paul brings in, For the law

Law of the Spirit of life, which is in Chriſt Ieſus, hath freed me from the Law of ſinne and of death: I am well able to ſay this is ſo indeed: for (bleſſed bee God) I my ſelfe haue felt it. It is knowne to many that the Word of God is ſweet, comfortable, quickning: they know ſo much is teſtified thereof, and in a kinde of generall faith they do beleeue it: but this is nothing, vnleſſe a man haue felt it ſo in his owne particular. The generall point of the corruption of mans nature by Adams fall, is apprehended and conceiued by many; but who is the man that is ready to ſtep in, out of his own experience touching himſelf, and to ſay with Paul[b], I know that in me, that is, in my fleſh, dwelleth no good thing: and therefore well might Moſes ſay, The imaginations of mans thoughts are onely euill continually. I could thus inlarge this point; but it ſhall ſuffice if I can make you vnderſtand my meaning, as I hope you doe, by that which I haue ſaid: yet to adde a little more light to it, I will commend to your obſeruation one place of Paul; Eph. 1. 18,19. where ſpeaking of that knowledge which proceeds from ſpirituall enlightning, and ſhewing the matter of it: (the hope where to God calleth by the preaching of the Goſpell, and the riches of his glorious inheritance in the Saints: Excellent things I confeſſe, but yet ſuch as they who are not intereſſed in them may conceiue) heads ouer and aboue, this ſpecialty of experimentall knowledge, And what is the exceeding greatneſſe of his power toward vs which beleeue: So that heere is the life of all, when a man hath a feeling and ſenſe in himſelfe, of the worke of God, and of that power in renewing of his dead ſoule, which he manifeſted in the raiſing vp of Chriſt Ieſus.

This then is the firſt property of ſauing knowledge, it is experimentall: as when a man can ſay, I know God is reconciled to ſinners, in the blood of his Son: for behold I am a ſinner, and with me in Chriſt he is at peace, and theſe be the euidences hereof: I am ſure God heareth Prayers: for thus and thus haue I tried him by petition, and thus and thus I haue been comforted; and ſo in the reſt.

The Second property of ſauing knowledge, it is a knowledge tending to practiſe: It is ſuch a light, as is made vſe of, for ſpirituall guidance. Many haue a knowledge, but it is onely a knowing to know; they be like ſome humerous ſchollers, which will haue euery booke of note that is publiſhed, more to be able to ſay they haue it, then that they may vſe it: the knowledge which accompanieth ſaluation, hath a further aime; Teach me thy way O Lord, and I will walke in thy truth[c], Giue me vnderſtanding, and I will keepe thy law[d]; Come let vs goe vp to the mountaine of the Lord, &c. He will teach vs his waies, and we will walke in his paths[e].

[e] Eſay 2. 3.

Here is practiſe and obedience made to be the purpoſe of knowledge: I remember what Paul ſaid, when he was ſtrucke to the earth, Lord what wilt thou that I doe[f]? He deſired to know, that is knowing might appeare in doing: ſo that now there can bee no iuſt matter of preſumption gathered by this point, that illumination is a teſtimony of the preſence of Gods Spirit, ſo, as in thoſe that ſhall be ſaued: for what if thou canſt talke much, and diſcourſe much, and reaſon wittily, and diſpute plauſibly, and relate proofes of Scripture readily, yet if this ſwim only in thy braine, & be only a ſpeculatiue knowledge, no ſuch as thou feeleſt the truth and ſweet of in thy own ſoule, no ſuch as thou makeſt vſe of for the guiding and ordering of thy ſelfe in an holy life, in that particular ſtanding wherein God hath ſet thee; I will bring thee one who for profound knowledge and gifts of vtterance and the like, may come to ſchoole to thee, who yet becauſe of his experience in the truth of that little which he knowes, and his conſcionable obedience therunto, ſhall ſit at table with Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, when thou ſhalt be called the leaſt in the kingdome of God.

[f] Acts 9. 6.

And thus farre of the firſt euidence of the preſence of Gods Spirit; ſpirituall light. I perceiue my matter to ſwell further then I thought; I am now ſenſible of the truth of that which S. Iames ſaith, Behold how great a matter a little fier kindleth;

g Chap.3.5. loth g; That little ſparke which ſprang out of one word quench, hath increaſed to a greater flame then I was aware of. I muſt needs proceed on a little further, and for the perfecting of this point, ſay ſon; what of that heat alſo, by which the being of the Spirit of God in a mans heart is vnderſtood. There are two effects of the ſpirituall heate of this holy fier: 1. It conſumes. 2. It inflames. Fier burnes vp, and waſts that which it meets with; if it be combuſtible, and ſuch as is deuourable by it: and ſo doth this ſacred coale. There are naturally in the heart h 1 Pet. 2.11. of man many groſſe corruptions, ſuch as the Scripture calleth fleſhly luſts h, and the

i Rom.6.12. luſts of ſinne i: with theſe the inward man is ouer-run; the field of Salomons ſluggard is not ſo ouer grown with thornes and nettles, as is the ſoule of man with theſe. I might name particulars, but all may be reduced to theſe two heads: 1. A reprobate awknes to all good; 2. A ready and inclinable pronenes, euen with deſire and greedineſſe, to any manner of vngodlineſſe.

Now when the Spirit of God preuailes, thoſe corruptions are conſumed: though not at once; ſo that their being is inſtantly and vtterly aboliſhed; yet ſo, that their height and ſtrength, and extremity is abated; and they haue not that raigne, power, and dominion ouer a man, which they ſometimes had. Hereupon it is ſaid, that they which are Chriſts, (and none are Chriſts, but they in whom k Gal.5.24. the Spirit is) haue crucified the fleſh, with the affections and the luſts k. Their corruptions in them haue receiued their deaths wound, ſo that albeit they ſtriue and ſtruggle and hinder a Chriſtian from doing the good which he would, yet they are paſt recouery: though they be not quite burnt vp and brought to nothing, but perhaps like ſmoky and ſappy wood, are ſometimes ready to put out, and to ſmother that fier into which they are thrown, yet they conſume daily, and can neuer come againe to their ancient flouriſhing.

I beſeech you, let vs affoord the conſideration of our ſelues about this: let vs ſee how the fier of Gods Spirit hath ſeized vpon our corruptions, how it hath in any meaſure waſted them, ſo that we are not ſo enthralled to them, and at the command and ſeruice of them, as in times paſt. This will declare many to bee vtterly void of Gods Spirit; when there are ſuch palpable corruptions, to be beheld in their liues and courſes, of pride, oppreſſion, worldlines, malice, vnmercifulnes, riot, exceſſe, louing of pleaſure, ſwearing by Gods glorious and feareful Name, neglect of Gods worſhip, ſcorning of his word, profaning of his Sabbath. Shall it be thought that the kingdom of corruption is ſubdued in them by l 2 Cor.3.17. the power of Gods Spirit? Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty l, there is freedome from the ſeruice of theſe raging ſinnes. If once the Arke of God come into Dagons temple, let the Idoll be neuer ſo faſt ſeated in his ſhrine, yet downe

m 1 Sam. 5. he falles and breakes his necke m: So let Gods holy Spirit once ſet foote in a mans Soule, though ſinne be there, as in its proper place, and as I may ſay in the head City of its Kingdome, yet immediatly it begins to loſe its wonted hold. There is a ſtronger then it come, which will take away the armour of it, and triumph in the ſpoyles thereof: ſo that they which are the Lords, ſhall bee able with ioy of heart to make their boaſt, though without boaſting: Our ſoule is eſcaped a Birde out of the ſnare of the fowler. Thankes be to God we were the ſeruants of ſinne, but now we are the ſeruants of righteouſneſſe, and the Lords free-men.

The iſſue then is; No waſting of corruption, no powerfull working of Gods Spirit. Doth it not appeare by the conſcionable reformation of thy wayes, that the natiue ruſt of thy inward man is fretted out? I ſhould ſinne againſt thy ſoule, and againſt mine owne too, if I ſhould put thee in any little hope that thou art Chriſts.

I go on: This holy heat, as it conſumes, ſo it inflames, it inkindleth a certaine fier in the boſom of a Chriſtian, producing that, which we term by the name of Zeale; an intention of feruency, diffuſed through the whole ſoule, begetting earneſtneſſe neſtneſſe in all good ſeruices for Gods glory, and depth of deteſtation to whatſoeuer is preiudiciall thereunto. This is that Paul teſtified of the twelue Tribes, n That they ſerued the Lord night and day inſtantly: that is, with a kind of extenſion or vehemency. So Apollo is ſaid to haue been o hot in Spirit. It is the improuement, or higheſt pitch of ones affection: it is, as it were, the mettall and vigor of the ſoule; it makes a man to doe the worke of the Lord (in what kind ſoeuer it be) with a kind of courage.

n Acts 26.7. ἐν ἐκτενείᾳ.
o Acts 18. ζέων τῷ πνεύματι.
p Chap 4.6.

I remember what Nehemiah ſaid concerning his proceeding in the reedifying of the Citty and Temple of Ieruſalem after the captiuity: albeit there were many diſcouragements, yet the buſines went on, for p The heart of the people was to worke, they were ſet vpon it, and they would not be put downe: much water was not able to quench this fiere. This cauſeth a man, if he be a Magiſtrate not to be lither in buſineſſe q, but with Dauid, to be at it betimes r, with Iob, to ſeeke out cauſes diligently ſ, neuer pretending that excuſe which Salomon forbids to vſe, Behold we know not of it t; ſuch a man euen with his eye, ſhall chaſe away euill u. This againe, makes a man if he be a Miniſter, to haue ſuch a fier within him as Ieremy had, when hee was Weary of forbearing, and could not ſtay x, as was in Paul at Athens, when his Spirit was ſtirred in him to ſee their ſuperſtition y: this will ſet him on to a fulfilling of his Miniſtery; this will not ſuffer him to dare to doe the worke of the Lord negligently and perfunctorily. In euery ordinary Chriſtian, this will bring foorth notable effects: it will make his hearing ſwift z, forward to embrace all good opportunities for inſtruction; his praying feruent; his ſinging hearty; his comming to the Lords Table, not faſhionable, but affectionate; his giuing to the poore cheerefull, his exhortations and admonitions to thoſe with whom he conuerſeth, frequent and powerfull, his words of comfort vpon iuſt occaſion, feeling and effectuall; his courſes for good, either for himſelfe, or for his children and family, conſtant and vnbroken; his deteſtation of euill, ſtrong and implacable; his ſorrowing for the ſinnes of the times, deepe and piercing. Theſe be the ſparkes which this fier of zeale will caſt forth continually where it is. Oh you now that thinke you are in the ſtate of grace, and haue the ſpirit of God within you, deale effectually with your ſelues about this: Can a man ſaith Salomon, carry fier in his boſome, and his clothes not be burnt a. Is it poſſible to haue this heate of zeale, and not perceiue it?

Now woe is me, for the coldneſſe to be found among all ſorts of men. Where is your zeale for God, oh you Magiſtrates? where is that bleſſed paſſionatneſſe which ought to be in you, making you vnable to forbeare them that are euill? Where is your care to beautifie the houſe of the Lord, to endeuour the ſuppreſſing of the raging ſins of the firſt Table, as well as the more notorious branches of the ſecond? What a wofull caſe, what pitty, you ſhould bee meere Gallioes, not caring for theſe things, and counting Religion but a queſtion of names and words? What an heauy caſe, that they which by their places ſhould keepe downe euill, ſhould by their perſonall practiſe, and by the courſes of their ordinary attendants, countenance and approue, and ſet vp euill, taking recognizances of poore Tiplers, for the reſtraint of gaming and drunkenneſſe, when yet the ſame things ſhall bee found no where ſo much as within their owne doores. Here is poore zeale for God; woe to that ſtupidity, which by theſe foule diſhonours againſt God, cannot be ſtirred.

Well, I would yet that this zeale, which is ſo ſcarſe in Iudahs Tribe, were to bee found plentifull in the houſe of Leui: but there is a lamentable coldneſſe come euen vpon vs alſo. I delight not to bee a finger in the ſores of thoſe of mine own profeſſion: I wiſh and pray, that all the Nazarites were purer then the ſnow, and euery one in his place, like the poliſhed Saphir b, but let my right hand forget her cunning, if euer ſhee want a finger to point (at the leaſt) at thoſe more then palpable teſtimonies of our vnzealouſnes, and of our Laodicean lukwarmneſſe, ſuch a time-ſeruing, men-pleaſing, forſaking of flockes, multiplying of liuings, hunting for preferments, vncompaſſionatneſſe to the peoples ſoules: ſome neuer preaching, ſome ſeldome, ſome too profoundly, ſome too ſhallowly, ſome as good neuer a whit, as neuer the better: theſe things ſhew plainely, we haue ſmall zeale for the Lord of hoſts. It is time that the Angell of the Couenant, who is like purging fier, and as the Fullers ſope, ſhould make ſpeed to come into his Temple, to trie and find the ſonnes of Leui, and to puriſie them as gold and ſiluer, that they may bring offerings vnto the Lord in righteouſneſſe[c].

[c] Mal. 3. 1. &c.

I haue diſcouered the ſmalneſſe of zeale in the heads and eyes; let vs deſcend a little to the view of the lower parts. And here behold at the very firſt, wee are encountred with a wofull ſpectacle: I meane the generall diſgrace and diſ-reputation that this zeale is; it hath many enemies, and the world for the moſt part cannot abide it: folly, madneſſe, fury, indiſcretion, headineſſe, ſingularity, vncharitableneſſe, hypocriſie: Like to theſe are the rebukes that are laid vpon it. It is good to loue earneſtly alwaies in a good thing ſaith S. Paul[d]: yet the world commonly approueth of earneſtneſſe in any thing, more then in Religion; with pretences of temper, diſcretion, aduiſedneſſe, moderation, they haue almoſt ſhut zeale out of doores. I know there is an extremity in going too far, and there is a folly in going awry: yet no reaſon why the indiſcreet and heady zeale of ſome, ſhould out-face and diſcountenance true zeale in any. Beſides this, if we looke vpon thoſe, that yet will pretend to approue zeale, and make a ſhew to haue ſome of this holy fier vpon their hearts, what defects ſhall wee find, what a naked formality in the profeſſion of Religion, what ſleight hearing, as if ones preſence at a Sermon were enough for him, what ſuperficiall praying, what lip-deuotions, what cuſtomary communicating, what grudging liberality? What either vtter neglect, or cold and curtald performance of houſhold holy duties, what ſilence and backwardnes in the duties of admonition, what eaſineſſe to digeſt oathes and filthy profane ſpeeches, which wee haue without any token or diſlike? Alas, where are our ſpirits, or what mettall are we made of? Doe not thoſe things, ſo true, ſo apparant, iuſtifie againſt vs, that we want zeale.

But I muſt ſtoppe, leſt I preuent my ſelfe before I thinke. I haue hitherto plaid the right Spinſter, and drawne out a long thred out of a ſhort roule: Sure I am, I haue not ſtrayed from my firſt ground; I will, now (as the vſe in ſpinning is) that I haue, as I hope ſufficiently twiſted this thred, briefly wind it vpon the quill, and ſo ſet on with that which is next.

We are charged not to quench the Spirit. From whence I haue enforced in the Doctrine, A poſſibility of knowing whether or no we haue the Spirit: I haue vrged in the Vſe, euery one to make enquiry into himſelfe concerning this, becauſe I know well, it is in vaine for a man to conceiue an hope of being ſaued, if he bee not ſure hereof.

Now, becauſe to perſwade enquiry herein, were ſenſeleſſe, without direction how to be reſolued by enquiry, therefore I haue enlarged my ſelfe in this, to teach how that hauing of Gods Spirit, which is a pledge of ſaluation, may be knowne.

The word (Quench) ſheweth it to haue a fiery nature, and ſo it hath: It is bright as fire, it is hot as fire. Bright in the inlightning of the minde, with a knowledge grounded vpon Scripture, confirmed by experience, and directed to practiſe.

It is hot, in conſuming and waſting the groſſenes of our natiue corruption, and inkindling in vs an holy zeale for God. Now, leſt through deceitfulneſſe of our hearts, we ſhould imagine our ſelues furniſhed with thoſe things, (not hauing them,) I haue laboured to diſcouer our defects; as namely, ſo the former: ſome without any manner of enlightning, voluntarily wrapt vp in the myſt myſt of ignorance; ſome, hauing only ſome flaſhings of knowledge, ſuch only as ſwim in the head, and are neuer made vſe for an holy practiſe. For the later, The moſt, ouerwhelmed with the preuailing of their owne corruptions, and without heat, or life, or courage in the things of God.

This is the ſumme: if I haue ſeemed in any thing too tart or peremptory, I am content to ſtand or fall, at the iudgement of any man, that ſhal indifferently conſider the ſtate either of the times, or of his owne ſoule, I deſire withall, to haue that meaſure met to mee, which was of right due to the Prophets of old, that as when they ſpake at large, There is not a man to be found that executeth Iudgement, and ſeeketh the truth[e], They be all Adulterers, an aſſembly of Rebels[f]: There is not one godly man left [g], From the ſole of the foote, vnto the head, there is nothing whole [h]: They were not to be vnderſtood, as if they thought there were no particulars to bee excepted, in whom there was ſome goodneſſe: ſo whereas I haue mentioned a generall liuing in the ſeruice of ſoule ſinnes, and haue complained vpon Magiſtrates, and Miniſters, and people for want of zeale, thinke not I goe about to be ſpot all, without exception.

f Chap. 9. 2.
g Pſal. 12. 1.
h Eſay 1. 6.

I know well, that the Lord hath reſerued a remnant, and there are that know the truth comfortably, profeſſe it ſincerely, and yeeld obedience faithfully: I know there are zealous Magiſtrates, Miniſters feruent in ſpirit, God increaſe the number of both, but yet the generalty is out of tune.

I feare me, thoſe that are truly zealous, are but As the ſhaking of an Oliue tree, two or three berries in the top of the vtmoſt bonghes, &c[i]. One of a Citty, two of a Tribe[k]. And then withall, euen the beſt of ſuch, if they will doe themſelues right, muſt needs yeeld they haue need of quickning: it ſhall be for their good, either to be awakned out of that ſecurity with which they are ouertaken, or to be kept from that preſumption which may befall them; that ſo they may looke againe, and againe, and often vpon theſe euidences of hauing Gods Spirit, which they thinke they haue, and bee aſſured they are ſuch, as ſhall not deceiue them in the end.

i Eſay 17. 6.
k Ier. 3. 14.

t And thus I come to my ſecond point; That it is neceſſary for him that thinkes he hath the Spirit of God, to take heed of quenching it. This is the maine thing which the Apoſtle here intends. I am here neceſſarily to beginne my handling of this Doctrine with a queſtion or two. Whether the Spirit of God once receiued, may be quenched: and then if we finde vpon conſideration that it cannot, to what end is this doctrine of not quenching it, and what muſt bee thought in it to be intended. The 2. Doct.

To the firſt Queſtion, whether the Spirit can be quenched, I anſwer directly thus: That vnderſtanding by Spirit, thoſe graces of God which ſtreame from Election, and are beſtowed as the pledge and earneſt of Adoption: and againe, taking the word quench, at the largeſt, for an vtter putting out, ſo that the being of thoſe graces, ſhall be ſuppoſed vtterly to ceaſe, and bee aboliſhed: then thus, the ſpirit cannot be quenched. For, in him that is borne of God There is a certaine Seed remaining ſtill [l], and the Spirit of renuing, is a liuing ſpring, which is neuer vtterly drayned, but is ſtill Springing vp vnto eternity [m]: Gods Spirit entereth the ſoules of Gods beloued ones, as a dweller [n], as a remainer [o], not as a ſoiourner.

This holy fier is ſuch, as no blaſts of tentation can extinguiſh, though the diuell, like the Serpent [p], ſhall caſt out of his mouth water like a flood: yet for him to be able to quench it cleane, it is impoſſible. As is the fier of Gods Iudgement, ſo is that of his ſauing Grace, euen both vnquenchable.

p Reu. 12. 15.

Thus to anſwer the firſt Quare. Now this firſt giues occaſion to a ſecond: If (as you ſay) this holy fier be exempted from all poſſibility of extinguiſhment, why is this precept, and to what purpoſe will the Doctrine be which you thence collect?

I anſwere, It was a true ſaying of the woman of Tekoah vnto King Dauid, ſet on by the ſubtilty of Ioab, to treat for Abſolon, God (ſaith he) doth appoint a meanes [q]. I apply it thus: God will not, ſuch is the ſtableneſſe of his counſell, the vnchangeablenеſſe of his election, the vnrepentingneſſe of his conferring ſauing grace, he will not (I ſay) ſuffer this heauenly fier to goe out, but hee hath ſanctified a meanes to this end, he hath laid downe a courſe for the effecting of his purpoſe: for, as determining to ſaue, he ordained a meanes of ſaluation, the death of his deareſt Sonne, as purpoſing to tranſlate his choſen into the ſtate of grace, he deuiſed an Inſtrument, the preaching of the Word, ſo reſoluing the perpetuall reſidence of his Spirit, he hath deuiſed a way to accompliſh the ſame; one ſpeciall branch of this meanes, is the continuall preſſing of ſuch quickning exhortations as this.

[q] 2 Sa. 14. 14.

Deus qui fecit te ſine te, non ſernabit te ſine te.

It is rightly ſaid of Auſten, if it be aduiſedly vnderſtood; God will imploy man in the ſauing of himſelfe: yet not as an inſtrument working of it owne natiue ſtrength, but as one enabled by him, to do that which is his will. Hereupon a man is ſaid to labour out his owne ſaluation [r], yet ſo, as both the will and the deed in him is Gods worke [ſ].

[ſ] Verſe 13.

It is remarkeable that is ſaid [t] of the ſonnes of God, They are carried by the Spirit: They worke, but it is as they are wrought by Gods Spirit. And thoſe All things, which S. Paul ſaid hee did, it was wholly by a certaine ſecret Enabler, Chriſt Ieſus [u].

[t] Rom. 8. 14. ἄγονται τῷ πνεύματι.
[u] Phil. 4. 13.

Well then, this is Gods courſe, to employ his for their owne good: now if the queſtion be how he brings them to this; it is by ſuch vrgings as this, which when they are vſed, it pleaſeth him to make effectuall: by my care, not to quench the Spirit, he in me preſerues his Spirit; and this care he begins in me by working vpon my ſoule, by this charge. Thus it is plain, that there is a neceſſary vſe of ſuch precepts, in as much as they bee the meanes for the bringing of thoſe good things to paſſe in thoſe that are Gods, which to them and concerning them he intends. They proue no power in man, as mans naturally, either to keepe in the Spirit, or to put it out. Caluin ſaith well: The Preacher preſſeth it, but God worketh it, and but by this meanes he will not worke it.

And for the fuller opening of this point, I adde this, that albeit the being of Gods Spirit in thoſe which haue receiued it cannot be quite aboliſhed, yet it is poſſible that it may through the neglect of obedience to this holy charge, be brought to ſuch a low ebbe, that a man himſelfe ſhall ſtrongly be perſwaded that it is vtterly gone in reſpect that now he feeles no life nor comfort of it, no quickening, no vigour, nothing but a ſad kind of dulneſſe, in that meaſure that he ſhall ſeeme to himſelfe to be in a far worſe caſe then euer he was before he knew what Religion meant, and to be euen to begin all againe, as if he had neuer taſted of any grace of God, neuer felt any euidence of his Spirit. This was Dauids caſe, and to this wofull paſſe he had brought himſelfe, by his offence, that as a man vtterly depriued of all grace, he cried out to God, To create in him a cleane heart, and to renew a right ſpirit within him [x]; ſo was he vtterly ſtript of all his owne conceiuing.

And indeed to bee brought to this, and to be thus robbed of all feeling of the comfortable fruition of Gods Spirit, is a condition ſo diſmall, ſo perplexed, and ſuch as will coſt a man ſo much ſorrow, ſo many ſighes, ſo much renting of the heart, before hee can get out of it, that it were better to tye ones ſelfe to any manner of care and paines before hand for preuention, then euer to fall into it. A man that hath been grieuouſly ſicke in body, and

and is pretily recouered, put caſe that hee were aſſured that albeit hee ſhould fall into a relapſe, he ſhould notwithſtanding bee relieued againe, and eſcape Death: yet he would be loth to come to thoſe weakeneſſes, to thoſe grieuous pangs and puls, to the tedious and irkeſome vſe of thoſe experiments of Phyſicke, which doe neceſſarily accompany ſuch an eſtate. So, what though there be an aſſurance out of Gods Word in the generall, that after a reducing into the ſtate of grace, there can be no falling backe into the ſtate of condemnation, and that the Spirit once conferred, can neuer be taken away; yet no wiſe Chriſtian would be willing to abide this brunt of recouery from a ſpirituall relapſe: The ſmart of it will bee ſuch, and will coſt a man ſo deare, that though he be healed, yet he would giue a world, if he might, to eſcape it. A wounded Spirit who can beare? [y] Prou. 18.14.

Theſe things were here neceſſarily to be promiſed, for the cleering of this ſecond Doctrin, that we may conceiue of it aright; this is the effect then: It is the will of God, that euery man who is renued, called; ſanctified by his Spirit, ſhould ſet to it by all meanes, that hee may continue in that gracious eſtate, and may neuer loſe the ſweet comfort of the grace of God, which he now enioyeth; but may rather encreaſe it, & make it to become greater and fuller and more effectuall in him then it is: for ſuch is the nature of euery negatiue precept to include the enioyning of that good, which is contrary to that euill which in it is inhibited: as (Thou ſhalt not ſteale) together with the reſtraint of all ſuch acts as may impeach a neighbours eſtate: it compriſeth an iniunction, of readineſſe and forwardneſſe to promote his good: ſo here thou ſhalt not quench the Spirit; both forbids the doing of that which may abate the graces of God in vs, and bindes vs to the practiſe of whatſoeuer may increaſe the ſame.

Now for the confirmation of this Doctrine, ſerue directly thoſe ſpeeches; Take heed leſt at any time there be in any of you an euill heart and vnfaithfull, to depart away from the liuing God [z]. Let vs feare leſt at any time by forſaking the promiſe of entering into reſt, any of you ſhould ſeeme to be depriued [a]. Let vs be led forward vnto perfection [b]. Take heed that no man fall away from the grace of God [c]. Beware leſt yee be plucked away with the error of the wicked, and fall from your owne ſtedfaſtneſſe. But grow in grace, &c [d]. Looke to your ſelues that you loſe not the things which yee haue done, but that you may receiue a full reward [e]. Ediſie your ſelues in your moſt holy Faith, and keepe your ſelues in the loue of God [f]. That which you haue already; hold faſt, &c [g]. Hold that which thou haſt, &c [h]. Let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall [i]. Let vs grow vp into full holineſſe [k]. Obſerue the plenty of the Scripture herein: all theſe places aime at the very ſame thing which is here required, ſome of them (as you ſee) aduiſing to beware how we let go our hold, ſome vrging vs to ſtriue to adde ſtill as much as is poſſible to our preſent ſpirituall ſtore. The ſenſe of this duty made Dauid to pray to be ſhielded from theſe quenchings, which he perceiued himſelfe to bee inclinable to [l]; to be eſtabliſhed [m], ſtayed [n], and to haue his ſteps directed [o]. No doubt Dauid herein diſcouered his deſire to cheriſh the ſpirituall heate which he had receiued, and to bee quickened in righteouſneſſe [p]. This made Paul to be ſtill preſſing forward and following hard [q]: Hereupon he prouoked Timothy, to ſtirre vp the gift that was in him [r], or as the word properly ſignifieth to blow, or to take out of the aſhes the fier of grace which he had receiued, that ſo the heate being inflamed in his owne boſome, the ſparkes might flie out abroad, for the warmth of others alſo.

It were not hard to enlarge this point: but I muſt limit my ſelfe, by ſpeaking too much of not quenching, I ſhould at vnawares quench your attention, and dull you by the ouer abundance of that matter, by which my deſire is to quicken you: yet I hope if you ſhall but put forth euery man the end of his rod, and dip in this little combe of hony which I haue preſented you, like (to the pra-

Vſe. Whoſoeuer thou be, that haſt found, or hereafter vpon due enquiry ſhalt find thy ſelfe to haue receiued this Spirit of God, whereof hath hitherunto been ſpoken, behold here what duty lieth vpon thee; euen to beware how thou ſuffer that bleſſed heat to ſlake, which by the grace of God hath been enkindled in thee. Thou art the Temple of the liuing God, if thou art a right Chriſtian: and if thou wanteſt this fier, thou canſt neuer offer vnto God any pleaſing Sacrifice. Oh then make much of that warmth of grace which thou haſt gotten, ſuffer not that coale which the Lord hath caſt into thy boſome, to die within thee, which though in thy ſeeming it be but a little one, yet euen by that little one holily imployed, thy ſoule may liue; blow it, adde ſtill more and more matter to it: albeit it doe yet but ſmoake, yet it will breake forth into ſuch a flame, by which thou ſhalt ſhine as a light here in this crooked world, and as the Sun in the

I would our continuall care to preſerue the earthly fier, for our common houſhold vſe, might daily mind vs of this duty: why ſhould we not be afraid of ſuch things as may quench Gods graces in vs, and coole that feruency, the increaſe whereof ſhall be our owne glory? How many be there, who through their own ſecure preſumption, haue brought themſelues to a wofull coldneſſe, yea, little other then a meere deadneſſe in religion: ſome by diſuſe and neglect of dependance vpon a powerfull Miniſtry, contenting themſelues with, in a manner, any thing in that kind: ſome by ingulfing themſelues too far into the world: ſome by making themſelues little better then ſeruants vnto pleaſure: ſome by ſorting themſelues with perſons of corrupt minds and inordinate behauiour, by whoſe either perſwaſions, they haue been ſeduced, or example, poiſoned, or ſcoffes diſheartened: ſome by ſeldomneſſe of fellowſhip

Let euery man that tendereth the good of his owne ſoule, looke to himſelfe in this particular. If ſome captious wit ſhall obiect, that the parts of my ſpeech are without Concord, ſith I perſwade not to quench, and yet teach an impoſſibility of quenching: Let him know that his preſuming, his aduenturing to intermeddle with the meanes and quenching: and to neglect the helpes to encreaſe the heate of grace, vnder a pretext that the Spirit of God cannot bee quenched, is a ſtrong euidence againſt him, that in him the Spirit of God is not; no ſpirit ſaue that which ruleth and worketh in the ſonnes of diſobedience. This is a ſure rule, that God accompliſheth all his purpoſes of good to vs, by begetting indeauours in vs agreeing to his purpoſes: Gods purpoſe of affording mee ſauing knowledge, is effected by his raiſing vp in mee a deſire and loue of knowledge: Gods purpoſe of enduing mee with faith, is made good by inſpiring me with a ſtriuing diſpoſition to beleeue: Gods purpoſe of ſanctifying me, is brought to paſſe by working in me a cõſcionable aime to the duties of obedience: Gods purpoſe that I ſhall not fall, is brought to perfection by a care wrought in me, not to fall: Gods purpoſe not to let his Spirit goe out in me, is ſtabliſht by his framing my heart to a holy feare, leſt I ſhould quench it, a conſtant laboring to auoid the quenching of it, & to vſe all helps by which it may be holpen on to perfection; if theſe things be not in thee, thou art a carnall man euery way, a ſpiritual man no way. The Spirit of God is neuer the

What then, ſhall ſinne be continued in becauſe of this grace? No: Let euery one that calleth on the name of the Lord, depart from iniquity; I can neuer haue a ſurer teſtimony to my ſoule, that the Spirit of grace is in me, and ſhall abide with mee to the end, then this my care not to Grieue that Spirit, by whom I am ſealed vnto the day of Redemption[a], and my feare leſt I ſhould ſlake that ſpirituall heate within me, which God in Ieſus Chriſt hath beſtowed on me.

A Caueat, and a Comfort for Beleeuers.

The first Sermon.

LVKE 22. 31, 32.

31. Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired you, to winow you as wheat.
32. But I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith faile not.

FAll other afflictions, they are the most sharpe and grieuous, which proceed from the speciall and more immediat practise and endeauours of the diuell to weaken, yea, and to ouerthrow the faith of Gods children, and to draw them from that state of grace into the which they haue been called, into that old condition of damnation and misery, from which once by the great mercy of God they haue escaped. Of the trials of this sort, that speech of Christ to Peter, euen at the very point of his attachment, will giue iust occasion to speake as much as shall be necessary. Two things are here to be considered: first, a word of admonition; Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired you, to winow as wheat: Secondly, a word of comfort: But I haue prayed for thee, that thy Faith faile not. The diuision of the Text.

In deliuering the word of admonition, Simon onely is named, but all the other Faithfull Disciples were intended: and therfore our Sauiour speaketh as of more then one, he hath desired to winnow you): whereupon Caluin in his Harmony of the Gospels, makes this speech to hold proportion with that; [a] All you shall be offended by me this Night: now Simon was onely named, because in this first brunt, which was now instantly to follow this warning, he was like to receiue the greatest foile: therefore he was now specially singled out, to attend to this, both caueat and comfort, into which notwithstanding all the rest were interessed as well as he; nay, we shall find vpon further inquiry, that both of these appertaine to the whole company of Gods beloued ones. It is their portion to be sifted by Satan: and it is their stay, that Christ Iesus is a continuall suter for them to his Father, that their Faith may not faile. ἐζητήσατο ὑμᾶς

I will speake of that first, which is first; the admonition: not handling any other point out of it, saue that which belongs to that speciall matter for which I haue chosen it. The Doctrine is thus.

That it is the earnest desire and practise of the diuell, to be as preiudiciall and as hurtfull as he possibly can, vnto those which haue beleeued through grace. Our Sauiour telleth The 1. Doct.

Peter here, and in him his other Disciples, that Satan was (as it were) an importunate Petitioner, to haue so much leaue and liberty affoorded him, as to winnow them as Wheat: that is, either to giue them as little rest, as the Corne hath that is cast into the vessell, wherein it is put, that it may be sifted, which is perpetually tossed and hurled about from one side vnto another so long as it is there: or else wee must vnderstand by this winnowing, his labouring to drive away, or sift out from the children of God all grace and goodnesse, and to leaue in them (if it might be) nothing else but the course branne of all corrupcion. We must beware how we stretch similitudes too farre. Truth is, there is an vsing of the children of God like wheat, which tendeth to their purging, and so doth this practise of the diuels here spoken of, but not in his intent: and we must now here consider of it, not as it is a matter ouerruled by Gods gracious prouidence, who turnes all to the good of those that loue him, and makes euen the enemy of their soules to become an instrument of their perfection: but here we are to take notice of it, as it is in Satans drift and aime, and so it is only to doe mischiefe, and in that respect, to molest and to disquiet those that are the Lords, and if it were possible, to leaue not so much as a dram of faith, or a graine of any grace within them.

Now, this is a matter, saith our Sauiour, which the diuell is much in loue withall, accounting (as it were) a piece of his happinesse to attempt it. And albeit this were spoken to the Disciples of Christ, yet it appertaines to all that belong to the election of grace: for, though this enemy be most spightfully set against some speciall ones (the preuailing against whom may bee a meanes to hazard and to endanger a great many) yet his malice is towards all, euen to as many as are comprehended within the compasse of that tearme of the seede of woman[b], without limitation. Such as the Disciples, which were ordained to be as lights set on a hill, from which many were to receiue direction in the way to life, shall be mainly leuelled at aboue others. The diuell knoweth, that the fall of one such one, will weaken diuers, but yet there shall none escape him, that hath giuen vp his name vnto Christ in sincerity of heart. And so much both this Text was written to assure vs of, and I am further to declare by the Scripture: It was spoken touching all Christians generally, that they are subiect to the assaults of the diuell[c], and wrestle not with flesh and blood, but against Principalities, against Powers, and against the worldly Gouernours, the Princes of the darknes of this world, against spiritual wickednesses which are in the high places[d].

It was deliuered as a warning to all that feare God without exception, that it behoueth them to be sober and watching, because they haue their aduersarie the diuell, who as a roaring Lion walketh about, seeking whom he may deuoure[e]. If Satan were not maliciously bent against all that beleeue, Pauls iealousie ouer the Corinthians, hath been causeless, when hee was afraid of them, lest as the Serpent beguiled Eue through his subtilty, so their minds should be corrupt from the simplicity that is in Christ[f]. Satan in his practise against Christ, shewed his disposition against all that are by faith engrafted into Christ: he winnowed and sifted him with as much violence and subtilty as he could, shifting from one tentation to another, to see if by any meanes he might haue corrupted him. He that encountred the head, will not spare the heele: and much would he please and satisfie himselfe in it, as some piece of a reuenge vpon Christ, if he could but make some few drops of his precious bloud, in regard of some one or two of his beloued ones, to bee spilt in vaine. He hath as Christ saith[g], been a murtherer from the beginning: neither is his, either name or nature yet altered.

Hee is that great Abaddon[h], that professed Destroyer: whose neuer ceasing practise, and vnintermitted indeauour it is, to enlarge his owne kingdome as much as hee may by the spoile of soules. Wee can dispose of our selues no where, nor apply our selues to any manner of imployment, wherein we can say we are free from his attempts. Euen in Paradise he assailed Adam, and our Sa-uiour Christ no lesse in the holy City, and vpon a pinacle of the Temple, then vpon the top of a Mountaine, or in the forsaken Wilderneſſe: nay, the better the perſon is, in regard of a large meaſure of ſanctification: the holier the place is, in reſpect of the vſe to which it is deuoted: and the more religious and ſacred the buſineſſe that is vndertaken, the more hot is he: and, though not idle at other times, yet vpon ſuch occaſions, he exceeds in ſpight, and in his helliſh labour to doe miſchiefe.

The faſhion of Pharaoh towards the Iſraelites, may ſerue as a very excellent type vnto vs, of the diuels dealing. The cruelty of Pharaoh towards the Iſraelites was euer great, after the time that he once began to oppreſſe them: but after the firſt motion made by Moſes, that they might goe to worſhip God, his tyranny began to be improued, and the burdens he laid vpon them were heauier then before: and when they were now come neereſt to that holy buſineſſe, being departed from out his land, then was he moſt of all enraged: then marched he out after them with his full ſtrength, to reduce them againe into their former ſeruitude, if it had been poſſible. This is Satans manner, looke as any man ſhall increaſe in godlines, and in a care of approuing himſelfe vnto God in any holy courſe: ſo doth he increaſe towards him in enmity. And by how much the more one ſhall grow into fauour with God, by ſo much ſhall the ſpight of this Aduerſary againſt him be more bitter, and his practiſes be both more frequent, and more violent to ſeduce him.

I hope I ſhall not need to adde more for the confirmation of this doctrine. The ſum is this: It appeares by his diſpoſition towards the Apoſtles of our Sauiour, by the teſtimonies of Scripture, touching his continuall compaſſing the world, with an intent and purpoſe to deuoure, by the implacablenes of his enmity againſt Chriſt, by the bloudines of his nature, and by whatſoeuer elſe is any where reported of him in the booke of God: that it is the exceeding deſire of Satan, to doe as much miſchiefe as he can, and to procure as much diſquiet as he poſſibly may, to all thoſe, to whom the Lord hath vouchſafed this mercy to beliеue: let vs grow into a due conſideration of the vſes to be made of this doctrin.

The firſt vſe is, to ſtir vs vp to ſtand continually vpon our ſpirituall guard. It is the effect of that which S. Paul and S. Peter in the places before ſpecified, doe preſſe vpon vs, in reſpect of this enemy; and it was the reaſon of this intimation giuen here to the Diſciples by our Sauiour, that being forewarned, they might the rather be forearmed. If we thinke our ſelues to be Chriſtians indeed, we ſhould be in continual expectation of ſome aſſault, looking ſtill out, where, when, and in what manner this enemy will ſurpriſe vs. A City or an army that is beleagured, hath alwaies ſome ſcouts and eſpials, ſentinels and watchers by night, as it were ſo many eies ſent into ſeuerall places, to obſerue and marke what is intended, and to giue warning thereof, leſt the reſt ſhould be ouertaken vnawares. After the ſame manner, we being ſo beſet and encompaſſed on the right hand, and on the left, ſometimes in danger to be puffed vp with too much confidence, ſometimes to be preſſed downe with deſpaire, and ſo many things giuing occaſion vnto Satan, to further theſe his helliſh purpoſes, the Spirit of God vrgeth vs to an vnintermitted watchfulnes, to be euer, as it were looking about vs, inaſmuch as by how much the more ſuddenly Satan ſhall ſet vpon vs, by ſo much the greater is our danger. It was one of the charges giuen by our Sauiour to his Diſciples, and with them to vs, That (ſaith he) which I ſay vnto you, I ſay vnto all, watch[i]. And indeed common reaſon hath taught euery wiſe man to make that vſe of an enemy: if he know that there is one liuing by him, who lookes and longs to doe him a diſpleaſure, and is euer waiting an occaſion by which to endanger him, he will take heed to himſelfe ſo much the more, and double his owne care, according as the ſpight and malice of his Aduerſary doth increaſe. And ſurely, if either the certenty of the aſſault, or the ſtrength of the enemy, or our owne imbecility and weakneſſe, or the danger of the ouerthrow may perſwade vs any thing, it is very behouefull for vs to be exceeding prouident.

The 1. Vſe.

[i] Mar. 13. 37.

The certenty of the triall I haue ſhewed; the ſtrength of the aſſailing cannot be ſmall: for he is the Prince of this world, ſo the Scripture tearmeth him[k]; our weakeneſſe, though we perhaps feele it not, ſuch, that we are ready naturally to yeeld to whatſoeuer he ſhall endeauour to perſwade vs: the danger or the ouerthrow is no leſſe then the vtter ruine of a mans ſoule. A little matter giueth him a great deale of aduantage: Eue was but a little apart from her husband, and ſtraight this ſubtile enemy found her out to aſſault her. Noah began but to drinke ſomewhat more then ordinary, and that ſinne of drunkennes did intrap him[l]. Iudah went abroad a little more ſecure then it was fit, and let the ſtory tell what ſin he fell into[m]. Dauid ſomewhat idler then his vſe, and Satan caught him by and by[n]. Peter ruſhed in vnaduiſedly into company that was not fit, & the diuel preuailed, and tripped him into a three-fold cord of a treble deniall of his Maſter. Let a man but a little forbeare to watch ouer his ſoule, it cannot be diuiſed how ſoone Satan will hooke him in. He is the great Nimrod, the grand hunter of the world, that makes pits and ſnares to catch ſoules.

[n] 2 Sam. 11.

Here then iuſt occaſion may be taken to complaine, and euen to cry out aloud without ſparing[o], againſt that great ſecurity which doth generally poſſeſſe vs in theſe euill daies. Little would a man thinke, that we are in expectation of an enemy, that obſerues our ordinary faſhion. Euery courſe which we runne, euery ſpeech that falleth from vs, doth in a manner ſauour of a kind of benummednes and fearefulneſſe, which is come vpon vs: farre are we from ſo much as thinking vpon Satans plots: little doe we ſtudy vpon it, how he is perpetually ſetting ſnares; how he doth nothing but range about, ſeeking to deuoure. I pray ſuppoſe there were certain intelligence brought vs of a Wolf come into the Country, which did euery night come into mens puſture, and make ſpoile and hauocke of their ſheepe; what would we doe? would we neglect it? Surely no. We would by our ſelues, or by others, watch night after night, and vntill we knew for a truth that the beaſt were departed or ſlaine, we would neuer ceaſe.

We are told by the ſpirit of Truth, which cannot lie, that Satan is abroad amongſt vs; that he compaſſeth the earth to and fro; that it is his continuall buſines to catch ſoules, that if we belong to God, he deſires to winnow and ſift vs, that by one meanes or other he may preuaile againſt vs? Shal we not now be as watchfull for our ſoules, as in the caſe before named, wee would be for our ſheepe? Would we watch to ſaue our flockes from the wolfe, and yet be aſleepe in the depth of ſecurity, whileſt the diuell makes a booty of our ſoules? How can this be excuſed? We would, I am verily perſwaded, if we were reaſoned with man by man, ſay it were a fault inexcuſable ſo to doe. Yet how are wee able to cleare our ſelues from the guilt of it? Let but our owne hearts ſpeake how ſeldome it commeth into our minds day after day, what a dangerous enemy we are beſet with, who is as full of deuices and ſhifts, as he is out of malice; and as full of malice, as hee is of life. If wee would ſpeake the truth as it is, I know we muſt needs confeſſe, that among millions of our thoughts, and all of them needleſſe in compariſon, this doth ſcarcely euer creepe into vs.

No maruaile if Satan doe euery where make ſuch hauocke and ſpoile, and lead ſo many ſoules captiue after his will: for what greater aduantage can we giue him then ſecurity? he will range at his pleaſure, when there is no watching to reſiſt. Remember we this then to be the firſt vſe, which we muſt make of this doctrine. To perſwade vs to watchfulneſſe. It is an eaſie matter in words to defie the diuell, and to profeſſe hatred to him, and to ſay, we hope to be armed well enough againſt him; the diuell can be well enough contended to endure all this, ſo long as we faile in the principall: namely, that duty of watching, which is neceſſary.

A ſecond vſe is aptly following vpon this. For as the vnwearied deſire of Satan to do miſchiefe, ſhould prouoke vs to watchfulneſſe: ſo to the end we may be the more forward to watch, and know the better how and in what ſort to performe it, it is meet we ſhould take occaſion by this Text, and by the doctrine gathered from it, to conſider a little of the Diuels practiſes. The 2. Vſe.

It would require a great deale of time to lay open all his ſtratagems, neither will I vndertake that, onely I will ſpeake of ſome of thoſe that are the moſt ordinary. The generall end of his courſes with, and againſt the Elect of God, is the eternall deſtruction of their ſoules, He walkes about ſeeking to deuoure p. Now as his end in tempting is deſtruction, ſo his meanes for the aduancing of that end, is to draw them, if it be poſsible, into one of theſe two wofull extremities: preſumption, or deſpaire; either to the ouermuch confident, or elſe to be full of diſtruſt. That he laboureth to worke the children of of God vnto preſumption, appeares by that which Dauid confeſſeth againſt himſelfe, touching the vaine confidence of his owne heart q, and by his prayer, when he felt himſelfe to be ſo aſſaulted; Keepe thy ſeruant from preſumptious ſinnes r. The preſumptions which he laboureth to draw into, are of many ſhapes: as, for a man to thinke that for ſpirituall things he is in eſtate good enough, that his knowledge, and faith, and obedience are as they ought; that he may take liberty to himſelfe to commit now and then ſuch or ſuch ſinnes, or to neglect ſuch and ſuch duties of godlines: that he is able to endure any thing for religions ſake, that his faith is ſo ſtrong that it cannot be ſhaken, that himſelfe is ſo well fenced, that no ill company, or the like ordinary occaſions of euill can miſlead him. Theſe and the like, be the ordinary ſpecialties of preſumption, by which he ſeeketh, as with ſo many gins and ſpringes to entrap Gods children. I may bee bold to ſay, that hee hath little feeling and experience in religion, that doth not at times find the truth hereof in his owne particular. Helpes to further this ſinne of preſumption, the diuell finds out many: hee will tell a man of the mercy of God, which paſſeth by the weakeneſſes of his ſeruants; and in them accepts the will for the deed; of the grace of Gods which abounds according as ſinne abounds; of the certainty of Gods decree, touching the ſaluation of his choſen, which no ſinne is able to make void, of the fals of good men, who committed great ſinnes, and yet were pardoned; of the euidences of Gods fauour, ſuch as health, peace, plenty, which he will make a man beleeue he ſhould not enioy, if his courſe were not pleaſing vnto God: yea, and in this caſe, he will magnifie to a mans ſoule, his gifts, and the many graces which God hath beſtowed, that he may pride himſelfe herein, and lift vp himſelfe in his thoughts aboue that which is fit: he will extenuate and leſſen ſinne; and when it is in it owne nature very haynous, he will yet perſwade, that it is but ſmall and petty, euen a very triſle in compariſon. Varietie of ſuch helpes he finds, by which to puffe vp with preſumption, to make a man careleſſe in watching ouer his owne heart, negligent in tying himſelfe to the ſtraight practiſe of godlineſſe, bold in giuing liberty and freedome to his owne corruptions.

r Pſal. 19. 13.

Many aſſaults thus raiſed, and thus followed, the ſeruants of God doe meete with in their courſes. Well, when he hath tried his helliſh skill this way, ſuddenly (as his faſhion is, to run from one extreame to another) he turneth about, and laboureth on the other ſide to plunge into deſpaire. Here hee laboureth to terrifie and to amaſe the conſcience of a Chriſtian, and put it out of all hope of being ſaued. Hee preſſeth vpon him that hee hath no faith, that hee is none of Gods Elect, that he is but an hypocrite, that there is in him no truth of repentance, no life of grace, no power of godlineſſe, that there is no mercy for him with God, and that he ſhall be as certainly condemned in hell, as if he were already there. Thus Dauid was lifted, thus was hee brought to conclude againſt himſelfe, that he was caſt out from Gods ſight s. That there was no truth in Gods promises[f]; That the Lord would shew no more fauour[t]. And thus many deere seruants of God, are oftentimes grieuously perplexed, troubled in spirit, galled in mind, long seeking and labouring for release, and finding none, condemning themselues, and pronouncing against themselues, that they are the very fierbrands of hell, and cannot be saued: nay, many times they doe euen die with speeches in their mouthes which much sauour of despaire, yea and be brought in the secret iudgement of God for the good of others to bee their owne executioners, hoping thereby to free themselues from this miserable perplexity: nothing doe they vnderstand in religion as they ought, which know not this. Now Satan is not without his aduantages by which to vrge this vpon Gods children. Hee sets before them the many crosses, which God hath laid vpon them, all which he would make them beleeue, are euidences of Gods displeasure and indignation towards them.

[t] Psal. 77. 7.

Thus Dauid was troubled to see how he was daily punished and chastened euery morning: and it made him to doubt of himselfe, whether he were in the fauour of God or no[x]. Hee layeth out before them in exact manner their sinnes past, and maketh them[y] to possesse the iniquity of their youth, hee aggrauates euery particular wherein they haue failed, and laboureth to pull away from them euerie thing by which they should gather any hope of comfort to themselues: hee will steale out of their memories the comfortable sayings of the holy Scripture, and continually thrust into their mindes such speeches, as are touching the iustice and vengeance of God vpon the vngodly: hee will vrge against them euery infirmity, euery straying thought, euery wandring imagination, euery rebellious and disobedient motion, euery cold and vnprofitable performance of any holy seruice vnto God, whether priuate or publicke: And hee which at one time would make all sinnes veniall, will now stand vpon it, to settle a man in this case, that euery offence of his is vnpardonable. It is impossible (I suppose) for the memory of man, at once to deliuer all the seuerall courses which Satan vseth, by which to swallow vp Gods children into despaire, and to bring them to that wofull conclusion in the Psalme, that the mercy of God is cleane gone for euer, and that his promise doth faile for euermore. And strange it is to heare how cunningly hee can teach a wounded soule to dispute and to reason, and multiply arguments against it selfe. Whosoeuer shall bee so happy, either to obserue it in his owne case, or to note it in others, whose great tentations he shall heare or behold, shall plainly see the truth hereof, how the diuill doth winnow the seruants of God, and sift them euen as wheat, and that their estate in regard of the malice and enmity of this aduersary, here in this world, is as the state of those that trauell by the Sea, somtimes (saith the Psalme) they mount vp to heauen, sometimes they descend into the deepe: So one while they are encountred with motions, tending to the lifting of them vp with vaine presumption; another while they are assaulted with thoughts, suggested by the Diuell to drowne them in despaire: and thus (as Dauid speaketh of those passengers by Sea) their soules melteth for troubles, their cunning is gone, and they know not for the present which way to turne themselues for any sound reliefe.

Thus for a briefe suruey of the most ordinary practises of this spirituall aduersary. Let me adde a little touching his attendants and assistants whom hee vseth as his instruments for the promoting and accomplishing of his generall purposes. They are two specially: first, the world; that is rightly tearmed the diuels store-house and his armory of tentations. Out of it hee deriueth many particulars for the endangering of Gods children: from thence hee assaulteth them one while with gaine, the loue and desire whereof is the roote of euill[b], and the lusting whereafter causeth an erring from the faith: and how much are the graces of God euen deaded, and in a manner well neere quenched hereby in many that yet giue some hope, that they haue a seed remaining in them[c]? How do the cares of the world, and the deceitfulnesse of riches choake good things in them [d]? With what a colour doth the Diuell leade many professors of religion into this sinne: forsooth men must follow their callings, and they must be frugall and prouident, and he which is not carefull for his company is worse then an Infidell: thus the enemy poysons them with this bewitching euill, and so carrieth them into a world of intanglements, besotting them so with the seeming sweetnes of the earth, that they can redeeme no time for their soules, neither to bestow abroad, not in their families, nor can chearefully enlarge their hands and hearts to any gratious vse for others comfort. A man may bee euen afraid of many that seeme to haue some sauour of religion, because of this one dangerous euill wherewith Satan layeth continuall siege vnto them.

[d] Math. 13.22.

Againe, from out of the world, he sets vpon the seruants of God with pleasure and delight: Oh, recreation is lawfull, some sport is necessary, and these and these particulars may very well be iustified, and here creepes in stealingly that, which the Apostle calles a louing of pleasure more then a louing of God [e], a spending of more good houres in vnprofitable delights, then in holy duties for God and for our selues.

[e] 2 Tim. 3.4.

Then further there is another baite, and that is preferment, this is a dangerous one, the Diuell kept this to the last place to try Christ withall, thinking if any thing would preuaile, this would be it, All this, &c. and the glory thereof I will giue thee [f]. Oh how doe many men straine, and euen willingly dispense with their owne consciences, or against them rather, and (as we say) borrow a point or two for reputations sake? How are men brought to strain and to force their wits to iustifie this or that? and all becauſe the same hauing some shew of lawfulnesse set vpon it, will make an easier way to their aduantage: yet the Diuell hath more weapons out of the world, he finds subtle Ionadab to enchant and to perswade to that which is euill, cunning worke-men to coole zeale, to encourage vnto liberty, to stay from being too forward, and to aduise to a temper and moderation in religion: these are instructed how to carry the matter handsomly, and with formall reasons and shewes of Scripture to keepe backe from that feruent care that ought to be; nay, the Diuell will goe neere to find some Preachers to set a worke in this businesse to with-draw from forwardnesse (vnder faire pretences to beware of newfangledneſse) and to take heed of being too much of the purity.

[f] Math. 4.8.

Then further there will bee heaped in many discouragements, when one is in a good way: here is losse vpon losse in outward things, going backward in the world, besides little remorse among friends in the day of want: here is trouble, here is reproach and scorne, here is slander and ill will, all manner of euill spoken: with such things as these it appeares by Scripture and experience that Satan fighteth against Gods children, and all to further his generall aime of either lulling them asleepe in security, or swallowing them vp into discouragement.

Now hee hath another aider and instrument, that is the flesh, our owne inborne corruption: out of this spring out incessantly a world of euill motions, and of such lusts, as Saint Peter speaketh of, which doe fight against the Soule [g]. The diuell by long obseruation is growne exceeding skilfull, and hee will soone vnderstand, what bee the things to which wee bee most inclinable, and will worke vpon vs accordingly: and as there is no euill whereto hee shall perswade, but our nature hath a proneneſse to it: so hee will bee sure to assault vs so chiefly as he knoweth it to sort best with our natiue bent; as, if a man be of nature more frugall and sparing, he will ply him with tentations of profit: if hee bee of an ambitious disposition, hee will set him forward with hopes of honour and preferment; if chearefull and pleasant of quality, hee will assaile him with pleasures, with company, with occasions of turning such a nature into careleſ-

neſſe and vanity: if ſad and ſolitary, he will encounter him with frightfull paſſions, and labour to draw by feares and terrours into inconuenience: if ſomewhat affecting faſhion and trimneſſe, hee will feede in that kind too, and furniſh with perwaſions to make all tollerable that leanes that way: if cholerick and eaſily prouoked, he will find occaſions therein alſo, ſuch as ſhall quickly kindle a vnruly heate: if one be ſpecially inclined to the applauding of himſelfe, and to a good opinion of his owne parts and gifts, the Diuell will ſet on ſuch as ſhall praiſe him, and ſooth him, and ſo puffe him vp with folly.

Thus in a legion of particulars, he aduantageth himſelfe in this ſeruice of ſifting the children of God by their owne fleſh, and euen thereby doth as it were carry them captiues oft times, that they cannot doe the good which they both ſhould and would. This fleſh is a falſe traitor within vs, which eaſily lets in that euill which Satan doth deſire to ſetle in our ſoules: there is no argument which the Diuell ſhall vſe, whether it tend to preſumption or deſpaire, but hee will make it to ſeeme in the iudgement of fleſh and bloud to be exceeding reaſonable.

Here then is the ſecond vſe. The firſt was to perſwade watchfulneſſe. The ſecond, to ſhew the great neceſsity of watchfulneſſe, and eſpecially the maine particulars, wherein through this enemy we are in danger. His end is miſchieuous: his meanes to that end are very direct; his helpes for the ſetting an edge vpon thoſe meanes, very ſtrong: the world will furniſh him with many preuailing motiues, whether to make vs ſecure and carleſſe, or to bring vs to bee deſperate, and the fleſh that is in vs, is falſe to vs euery way, and the diuill will not faile to make vſe of both, to the very vtmoſt. Conſider now whether here be not iuſt cauſe of ſpirituall watching: the traines which the Diuell layeth are infinite; we doe nothing, wee goe no where, but ſtill hee is in his courſe, like a wily workeman to ſeduce and ſift, and like a raging Lyon to deuoure. There is nothing out of which he will not take occaſion to entangle. In our callings hee tempts to idleneſſe, to fraud, to couetouſneſſe, to cruelty; in our eatings and drinkings, to exceſſe, in our being in company, hee will ſeeke either to make vs inſtruments to hurt others, or others as meanes to corrupt vs, in our priuacy hee will aſſault vs with vngodly and vnprofitable thoughts, in performing any good exerciſe, he laboureth either to hinder vs from it, or to diſtract vs in it, in proſperity he endeauours to puffe vp, and in aduerſity to diſhearten. I cannot name all particulars, by which, and in which, and out of which hee draweth out matter of tentation, either to leade vs into euill, or to keepe vs in euill; no place is free, no calling is priuiledged, no degree, no age is exempted. His malice is endleſſe, his policies are daily multiplied, his deuiſes and ſleights are without number.

The 3. Vſe. A third vſe yet remaineth: My firſt vſe was, to prouoke to watch: my ſecond, to declare in what particulars wee are in danger: now the third ſhall be to direct how to watch. We reade [b] that there is a certaine armour to bee put on, when we addreſſe our ſelues to this Watching ſeruice, and that is a thing which muſt be euen in reaſon. For what is a watchman without a weapon? well may he deſcrie and diſcouer the ememy, but he cannot withſtand him. It ſhall not be vnprofitable, nor vnfitting to ſpeake ſomewhat touching the armour to be vſed, as it is ſet downe in the particulars by S. Paul; He calleth it the Armour of God: whereas he calleth it armour, the word muſt not be taken litterally or groſſely, but in a ſpirituall ſenſe, according as it is a ſpirituall enemy which wee haue to doe with. It is called Gods armour, becauſe it is he by whom we muſt hope to be furniſhed therewith; out of his armory only we muſt ſeeke ſupply. The particulars are deſcribed in his word, and the manner of putting it on, and of vſing it, is there only to be ſought. The ſpecialties and ſeuerall parcels of it are ſet downe in order: I will name them and open them in a word.

[b] Eph. 6. 11, 12

1 Girdle of Truth. Which is ſincerity of heart, when a mans heart and ſoule is is set and bent in the singlenesse thereof to please God in all that is required. It is a fruit of the Spirit which ought to accompany a mans whole conuersation, that so he may be found without fraud and without hypocrisie, both towards God and towards men. It requires that a man should not be a professor of religion, in shew only and in pretense, but in deed, and in truth, being such an Israelite in deed, in whom there is no guile. He that is but an hollow Christian, formall only, and without, the Diuell will soone preuaile against him: but he which laboureth to proue himselfe to be such an one indeed, as he would seem to be by word and shew, he is sure to stand fast in the euill day.

2. The breast-plate of Righteousnesse, that is holines and vnblameablenes of conuersation: iustly tearmed a Breast-plate, because it beares a man out against the slaunders and false imputations of wicked men. This makes a man bold as a Lyon[i], and not to regard the biting tongues of euill speakers: as Iob knowing his owne innocency, professed not to regard it, though an aduersary should write against him, euen a whole booke of accusations[k]. This gaue Dauid comfort in the middest of troubles, that he could appeale vnto God, in his vprightnesse, respectiuely to the things wherewith men charged him[l]. Oh, where a mans heart is set to walke with God in all the waies of righteousnesse, he not willingly pleasing himselfe in any knowne wickednes, how shall Satan vanquish him, what resolution shall he haue, and what comfort in his soule, when he laboureth to dismay him?

[i] Prou. 28. 1.

3. Shooes shod with the preparation of the Gospell of peace. That is, assurance of acceptation and peace with God through Iesus Christ, according to that holy doctrine which is reuealed to vs in the Gospell. He that hath attained to this, is like one ready to take a iourney, and is fit to go through his pilgrimage amidst all spirituall enemies, knowing that God who is at peace with him, will be his guide and deliuerer from them all.

4. Shield of faith. That is a firme perswasion of the accomplishment of all Gods mercifull promises; in his Sonne for our good. This beates backe all the fiery darts of the Diuell; as, carnall confidence, presumption, security, infidelity, distrust, despaire. This is a victory against them all[m].

[m] 1 Iohn 5. 4.

5. The Helmet of Saluation[n]. A constant desire and expectation of that eternall happinesse which God hath promised. This sustaines, and beares vp the heart against that fainting, which might otherwise dismay it, because of the deferring of Gods promises.

[n] 1 Thes. 5. 8.

6. The Sword of the Spirit. Which is the Word of God. This wounds Satan, and cuts in sunder the knots of those sundry tentations, by the which he seeketh to entangle. This discouereth and bewrayeth all his policies, with this sword: our Sauiour foiled this enemy [o], opposing that which was written vnto whatsoeuer he sought to ensnare him with. And this especially a Christian must seek to be accomplisht with. There is no reason which Satan shall vse, whereby either to draw vnto presuming, or to worke to dismaiednesse, but by the Scripture the weaknes and inualidity thereof shall soone appeare. What colourable reason soeuer shall bee vsed to perswade presumption and security, that one speech of Salomon is enough against it: Blessed is the man that feareth alway [p]. Or of Paul [q]; Worke out your saluation with feare and trembling. And whatsoeuer on the other side shall be produced and pressed to the beating downe of the soule vnto despaire, euen this shall bee sufficient to repell it; Christ died to saue euen the chiefe of sinners [r]: much more shall a man be fenced, that laboureth to store himselfe with that plenty which the Scripture yeelds: which here or there hath somewhat, to meete fully and directly with euery particular perswasion, with which he shall labour to corrupt. Little are men aware, what aduantage they giue vnto the Diuell by their ignorance and rawnesse in the Scripture. How is it possible, but that he shall easily preuaile, when he finds vs without this weapon?

weapon? which as I haue ſhewed, Chriſt eſpecially made vſe of in his grapling with him in the wilderneſſe.

7. Prayer. This is it, which brings a bleſſing vpon all the reſt, and enableth vs through Gods mercy, to the comfortable vſe of all the former.

This then is that which is called the Armour of God, and thus muſt euery Chriſtian labour to furniſh and to prepare himſelfe againſt the Diuell. Firſt, let him look to it that his heart be vpright, and that he bee free from halting in matters that concerne his ſoule. Secondly, let him care to be outwardly fenced with an holy life, making conſcience to walke in all the waies of righteouſneſſe in the ſight of God. Thirdly, let him labour to be ſhod with an aſſurance of peace with God, through the Goſpell. Fourthly, in his left hand, let him get the ſhield of faith, ſtedfaſtly ſtriuing to apprehend and to apply Gods promiſes. Fifthly, in his right hand let him carry the word of God for a ſword. Sixtly, on his head let him weare the helmet of ſaluation, in the patient expectation of the glory to be ſhewed hereafter. Laſtly, let him ioyne to all feruency of prayer, by which all the reſt may be made effectuall.

Thus I haue in a few words opened a large matter, which yet to thoſe that are carefull may be ſufficient, if to this now ſpoken they ſhall ioyne the helpe of priuate meditation. Now, this armour thus deſcribed, is to be put on, and worne continually, we euer conſidering our ſelues how and in what manner we haue the feeling and the vſe thereof. With this we ſhould lie downe, with this we ſhould riſe vp, and cary that euery day, and in all places, and whatſoeuer we goe about, we may haue it with vs, as far as it is poſſible. For as the watch muſt neuer be giuen our; ſo this armour appertaining thereunto, muſt neuer be put off. Here now I could take occaſion to ſhew how vnfit we be generally to grapple with Satan, how vnable to make any comfortable reſiſtance in the day of triall. I am perſwaded, the greateſt part are ſo farre from being thus armed, as hath bin ſaid, that they muſt needs confeſſe it to be a thing which heretofore they haue ſcarcely thought vpon. This matter is euen a myſtery vnto many; and they will (hearing of it) go neere to anſwer as they [ſ] We haue not heard whether there be an holy Ghoſt, or no. This is mens lamentable ignorance in things which concerne their ſoules. Beſides, if we grow into an inquiry for particulars, how rare ſhall we finde ſincerity of heart, holines of conuerſation, feet ſhod with the right vnderſtanding of the Goſpell of peace, the ſhield of faith, to wit, the ſound knowledge, together with the comfortable and liuely apprehenſion of Gods promiſes, a longing and ſetled expectation of the future happineſſe. Where is the ſword of the Spirit, when Gods word is by many ſo little looked into, and ſo many be as great ſtrangers in it, as the children yet vnborne? Where is feruency of prayer, when there is ſuch ſmall feeling of our wants, and ſuch ſlender vnderſtanding of the promiſes of God to heare our ſuits? No marueli if Satan play Rex as himſelfe liſteth. He is cunning, and we ſimple, he ſtrong, we weake; he ſubtile, we ſecure; he furniſhed to make variety of aſſaults, we vtterly naked, without any piece (it is much to be feared) of the Armour of God. If we had one parcell thereof, we had all; if we be without any one, we haue none at all. Let vs pray vnto God to bleſſe our memories, that we may beare away theſe particulars, to bleſſe our meditations, that wee may rightly and profitably digeſt them, and to ſtirre vp and bleſſe our care, that we may diligently practiſe this duty of ſeeking, and labouring to put vpon vs the Armour of God: ſo ſhall Satan be vanquiſhed, our ſelues comforted, and God glorified by our trials.

Thus haue I ended this part, which I termed a word of warning. We ſee we are beſet with a dangerous and an vnplacable enemy: the more religious wee be and the more increaſing in the graces of God, the more againſt vs is his malice. Herehence we haue been exhorted to watchfulneſſe, we cannot be too vigilant

vigilant to ſtand vpon our guard againſt ſuch an Aduerſary. To quicken vs hereto ſomwhat the more, we haue been ſhewed his courſe, and made acquainted with the generality of his practiſes, that we may ſee there is no time or place for careleſneſſe. And now laſtly, becauſe to watch vnarmed were vaine, we haue been taught what armour we muſt put on; which being taken to vs, and kept vpon vs, it is poſſible for vs to be foiled, but we ſhall neuer be vanquiſhed; nay in the end we ſhall be more then conquerors, and the God of peace ſhall tread Satan vnder our feete. And his winnowing, though it were intended on his part, to diſfurniſh vs of all grace, yet ſhall be ſo bleſſed of God vnto vs, that thereby his graces in vs ſhall be brought vnto more perfection.

The ſecond Sermon.

——— But I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith faile not.

IF the word of Admonition hath been ſpoken thus farre. The word of Comfort followeth now next to be enquired into: But I haue prayed that thy faith faile not. The words need no great opening: in handling the doctrine ſpringing from them, I hope to make all as plaine as ſhall be neceſſary.

The Doctrine is thus: That all the practiſes and endeauours of Satan, are not able to ouerthrow the faith of Gods choſen. This point of holy doctrine, I thus collect out of this Text: That faith for the not failing whereof Chriſt hath prayed, the ſame, the diuell can neuer be able to ouerthrow: but for the not failing of the faith of all Gods choſen, Chriſt hath prayed; therefore the diuell doe what he can, ſhall neuer be able to ouerthrow it. The firſt part of this reaſon ſtands vpon this; That which God will vphold, Satan cannot vanquiſh; for Hee is greater then all [a]: but that faith for the not falling whereof Chriſt prayeth, God will vphold. It is vnpoſſible that the prayer of Chriſt ſhould be in vaine, his requeſts cannot but ſpeed. I know, ſaith our Sauiour, directing his ſpeech vnto God the Father, that thou heareſt me alwaies [b]: ſo that thus farre I perſwade my ſelfe there can be no doubt. If it may be once prooued, that Chriſt hath prayed for the faith of all Gods Elect, that it may not faile; then I am aſſured the reſt will be yeelded vnto, namely, that all the power of hell cannot ouerthrow it.

[a] Iohn 10.29.

[b] Iohn 11.42.

So that therein, that being the ſecond branch of my reaſon, I am to beſtow ſome paines to make it cleere, becauſe touching it, there may be ſome queſtion, inaſmuch as both the words of Chriſt, as may ſeeme, are onely to Peter, that his faith is prayed for that it may not faile: and the Papiſts alſo doe labour by all meanes to make them peculiar to Peter, and from thence to raiſe the doctrine of Peters ſupremacy, and chiefly ouer the reſt: Becauſe in the common danger of all, ſay they, Chriſt doth ſtrengthen Peter onely: and withall, by this they ſeeke to eſtabliſh an impoſſibility for the Pope, to erre in office, whom they ſuppoſe to be the ſucceſſor of Saint Peter, and to bee with him intereſſed here in a Priuiledge of not failing in any thing, which by vertue of his office he ſhall performe. Therefore I will ſhew, that whatſoeuer Chriſt did here begge for Peter, by name, the ſame he did requeſt for all the faithfull. To make that firme, this may be a ſufficient reaſon, That which Chriſt asked for all his faithfull disciples, the same did hee craue of God for all true Beleeuers: but looke what he craued here for Peter, the same did he intreate for all his faithfull disciples, therefore he craued it also for all true beleeuers.

for

The first limme of this reason, is confirmed by that speech of our Sauiour, when he saith plainely, That the good things which he asked of God for his Disciples, he asked of him not for them alone, but for all them, which should c Ioh. 17. 20. through the world beleeue in him through their preaching c. If then Christ praied for all his elect Disciples, that their faith might not faile, he prayed the same for all Beleeuers.

Well, how shall it appeare, that Christ meant as much to all his faithfull disciples, as he did here to Peter? First, it is apparant here, that Christ gaue warning of a danger by Satan, to them all, to the rest as well as to Peter; Hee hath desired you. How can any man thinke, considering the great loue of Christ to his Disciples, that hee would put all of them in feare, in regard of the diuels practises, and not also put them all in heart by a word of assurance, touching the perpetuity of their faith. The danger is foretold to all, but the comfort restrained to Peter, what sense is this?

Secondly, if we examine that prayer of Christ, which he made the night before his sufferings, and in which it is out of all question all the rest had equall interest with Peter, we shall find that our Sauiour in it, in sense, though not in words, made the same sute for them all, that he did for Peter here. For what other thing is intended then their perseuerance to the end, in those particular red Ioh. 17. 11. quests; That the Lord would keepe them in his name d: That, hee would sanctifie them e Vers. 17. with his truth e? These are all one in effect with that here, of the not failing of faith: For he whom God keepes in his name, and sanctifieth with his Truth, the same faith cannot be ouerthrowne.

Yea (but will it be said) if this prayer of Christ were not peculiar to Peter, why is it deliuered in such a sort, with such words of restraint, Simon, Simon? Will you haue the reason in a word? Christ fore saw at this time, that Peter was to sinne more then the rest, and so to be in greater hazard then the rest; and therefore would need a more speciall succour then the rest. As then a good father, hauing care of all his children, if he see some one distressed aboue the rest, will tender and cheare vp him more specially: Or as a Physitian wishing good to the whole body, yet applieth his phisicke principally to the parts ill affected: so Christ, though his respects were to all, yet inasmuch as Peters case was like to be such, as would most need comfort, therefore he applied the comfortable salue of Gods assured fauour, to his griefe especially. And therefore it is well noted against the Papists, which thinke this place to be so singular for Peters supremacy, that Stapleton saith: It is impossible to shift it off with any colour of cauils, that these words doe not proue Peter to haue been in any greater dignity then the rest, only they shew it to be true, that he was in greater danger.

I will not spend time now in canuasing this point about Peters head-ship, or in the deriuation thereof, if any such were, from him to his supposed Successors the Roman Bishops; I haue chosen this text for another end, then the debatement of that matter. This onely I say in a word with learned Fulke, in his Confutation of the Rhemists notes, that all the Logick in the world, can neuer proue hence the Popes supremacy, or any such priuiledge of not erring, as is pretended. Papists themselues acknowledge, that a Pope may faile as a man, and bee without faith, and so be damned: but forsooth in office cannot as a Pope: whereas this speech of Christ was more specially touching Peters not failing as a particular Christian, then as an Apostle. For he doth not so much vnderstand here by faith, the doctrine of faith, as who would say, that Peter in matter of teaching should not erre; but here especially was intended, that faith by which Peter was engrafted into the mysticall body of Christ Iesus, which we call a sauing faith, faith, a renuing or a regenerating faith: and Christ meant, that though Satan should endeauour to sift out all goodnes from him, yet he should continue in the state of grace and saluation to the end. So that this can make nothing at all for their purpose, which acknowledge that a Pope may be a reprobate, or an heretique, which yet Christ promised could neuer be true touching Peter.

Thus haue I laboured to remoue all lets, which might hinder in shew the raising of this Doctrine from this Text. The truth is, there is no more reason why this speech thus directed to Peter, should be held peculiar to him, then that which God said to Iosh ua[f], I will not faile thee, should be appropriated to him alone; which yet notwithstanding the Apostle applieth to all Christians [g]. If the Apostle might embolden all Christians to lay hold vpon that speech; why should it not be lawfull to apply this to any child of God, whom Satan desireth to sift, and to shake as he did Peter, Be of good comfort, Christ hath praied for thee that thy faith faile not?

[f] Chap. 1. 5.
[g] Heb. 13. 5.

It is ordinary to apply common comforts to some particular persons, as occasion is, which application to particulars shall not let, but that the matter so applyed, belongeth of right to more then to those, to whom for the present it is applied. When Christ applied the Doctrine of forgiuenesse of sins, to the man sicke of the Palsey, Son thy sins are forgiuen thee [h]: shall that preiudice the liberty that is for euery Beleeuer, to lay hold vpon the Doctrine of the remission of sinnes, for his speciall comfort?

[h] Matth. 9. 2.

Thus still I hope, it appeareth more and more, to be vprightly collected hence, That the faith of all true Beleeuers is vnuanquishable. Christ hath prayed for all his, that their Faith may not faile: neuer was he denied by his Father any sute. I haue been the more diligent in iustifying this place, to be the ground of this Doctrine, because as it is abused by Papists, and ingrossed by them for Peter only, and his imaginary successors; so if this be cleered once, to be the Doctrine of these words, as I hope now it is, it may serue in stead of many proofes, considering the plainnes of it, and that it speakes (as it were) directly to the heart and soule of euery true and sound Beleeuer: Sathan will seeke thee to winnow thee, but I haue prayed that thy faith faile not.

Now next, though this place might be sufficient, yet because the harmony and consent of the Scripture, cannot but be very contenting in a point so exceedingly comfortable as this is, therefore I will adioyne somewhat therein. This then is the effect of that which I will labour to make plaine. That if a man be once through the mercy of God become a true Beleeuer, a man endued with that faith which the Apostles call vnfained[i], and in another place, The faith of Gods Elect [k], sifted by Satan hee may be, but vanquished he can neuer be, his perseuerance is certen, his estate and condition is vnalterable. I may well put here in the front of this proofe, that promise of God made of old vnto his people, I will make an euerlasting couenant with them, that I will neuer turne away from them, to doe them good, but I will put my feare in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me [l]. Vpon which words, that glosse of Austens is excellent: What is this, saith he, but as if God had said, The feare of me which I shall put into their hearts, shall be such and so great, that they shall adhere, and cleaue close to me, euen to the end. This is a notable place, to shew that God will not suffer those euer to decline from him, whom it hath once pleased him truly to conuert vnto him.

How doth the Scripture abound with speeches, directly testifying the perseuerance of the faithfull? They which trust in the Lord, shall be as mount Sion, which cannot be remoued, &c [m]. They are sheepe, which none can plucke out of the hands of my Father, saith our Sauiour [n], they are as a house, which no stormes or waues can ouerthrow [o]; Chosen ones, whom it is impossible to seduce [p]: They are kept by the power of God, through faith vnto saluation [q], They are reserued vnto Iesus Christ [r], They Doe not these things abundantly proue the perseuerance of Beleeuers? Which way should the Elect of God be depriued of their faith? God will not withdraw it, for with him there is no shadow of turning [x]; The mercy wherewith he hath [x] Iam. 2.17. compassion on his Elect, is euerlasting [y]: so is his loue [z]. Those gifts of his which [y] Isa. 54.8. [z] Ier. 31.3. accompany an effectuall calling, are without repentance [a]: that is, they be such, of [a] Rom. 11.29. the conferring whereof, God neuer repenteth: nay, hee rather addes more grace [b] Luke 8.18. to his children, then takes ought from them [b].

Well, as God himselfe will not withdraw that gift of faith, which he hath once bestowed, whereupon the graces of God, which concerne saluation, are [c] Ioh. 4.14. said to be like a liuing water, that can neuer be drawne drie [c], so the Diuell cannot extinguish it. He will indeed endeauour it, as was shewed in the former Sermon, but his power is abridged: Greater is he that is in you, then he that is in the [d] 1 Ioh. 4.4. World [d]. Neither can the corruption of Gods children bee able to put out the light of faith which is in them. Nothing shall seperate from the loue of God, which [e] Rom. 8.39. is in Christ Iesus our Lord [e]. The children of God are taught to pray to bee deliuered from euill: that is, that euill though it assayle them, yet it may not conquer them.

Why is this asked of God, if he be not both able and willing to bestow it? If God will [f] 1 Pet. 5.10. deliuer his children from euill; if he will confirme, strengthen, and stablish them [f], [g] Phil. 1.6. and performe the good worke which he hath begun in them [g], how can it be that they should lose their faith? I know not any one point wherein the Scripture is more plentifull then in this Variety of proofe I haue already alledged: If it were necessary, much more might easily be produced.

[h] Luke 8.13. Thus in a word: It is the marke of hypocrites, that they beleeue but for a while [h]; It must needs then be the portion of those that beleeue aright, that their faith is perpetuall. The wicked indeed passeth as the whirlewinde, and is no more: but the [i] Prou. 10.25. righteous is an euerlasting foundation [i].

Truth it is, that if the children of God stood vpon their owne personall strength, their perseuerance might very well be doubted of: but they are ingraf- [k] Rom. 6.5. fed into Christ [k], and so as the Apostle speaketh vpon another occasion, The roote [l] Rom. 11.18. beareth them, and not they the roote [l]: Their saluation dependeth not on them- [m] 2 Tim. 2.19. selues, but it is built vp in the foundation of the Lord which remaineth sure [m]. They which are planted in the house of the Lord, flourish in the courts of our God, and bring [n] Ps. 92.13,14 forth fruit in their age [n]. Other branches may be pulled away from their stocks either by violence of winde, or force of mans hand, or at last consumed by length of time: With them that are in Christ, it cannot be so, they keepe not him, but are kept by him; and from this stablenesse, which is in him, proceeds their firmnesse. I change not, saith the Lord, and this is the reason, that you sonnes of [o] Mal. 3.6. Iacob are not consumed [o]. How confidently doth S. Paul speake touching his per- [p] Rom. 8.38. seuerance [p]? I know whom I haue beleeued, and I am perswaded that he is able to keepe [q] 2 Tim. 1.12. that which I haue committed to him against that day [q]: The Lord will deliuer me from [r] 2 Tim. 4.18 euery euill worke, and will preserue me vnto his heauenly kingdome [r]. Shall we make Pauls case herein to be singular, and thinke this may be true of him, but yet not the portion of euery true beleeuer? Why? Faith is in all the Elect of God, of the same common nature: and if it be the nature of the faith of one beleeuer, to secure him for the time to come, it is in the nature of euery one that hath faith also: and what comfort were it to vs, to heare of Pauls assurance of his perseuerance, if it be taught vs, that we must still be doubtfull in that behalfe? We may admire Pauls happinesse but with small content, when we are put out of all hope to partake with him therein.

[s] Rom. 8. Paul [s] as he speakes with such confidence touching his future estate, resoluing

ning vpon it, that nothing should bee able to defeat him of that happinesse he waited for: So in the beginning of that discourse, he propounds a generall Doctrine, which concernes all which are in Christ Iesus: Touching whom this he deliuereth, that to them there is no condemnation; now he proues this by his owne example at large, &c[t]. Whereupon I inferre, that whatsoeuer Paul reported there of himselfe is not singular, that is, such as wherein ordinary beleeuers are not interressed with him; for then to what end is his experience and example brought in as a proofe for a Doctrine which concernes all? Certenly, it is the condition and state of all true Beleeuers, That neither height nor depth, nor any other Creatures can seperate them from the loue of God, which is in Christ Iesus our Lord[u]. But I stay my selfe in this; It were no hard thing to be plentifull in the enlargement of this proofe.

[t] Verse 2. &c.

[u] Verse. 39.

There be some things which are vsually obiected by some against this Doctrine: which it shall not be amisse to make answer to.

Obiections against the Doctrine, answered.

1. It is said, that there are diuers speeches in Scripture, where falling, and forsaking, and things of the like nature are threatned to the faithfull, and they are called vpon to feare and care, such as seeme to argue a possibility of finall losing all grace which they haue once receiued. For examples sake, Let him that thinkes he stands, take heed lest he fall[x]. Be not high minded, but feare[y]. Quench not the Spirit[z]. Worke out your Saluation with feare and trembling[a]. Now to what end are these speeches, if the faithfull cannot fall, so as to lose that faith, with which they haue been once endued? I answer thus: That whatsoeuer God workes in, and for the faithfull, he worketh it by meanes. As he will continue them in faith, and keepe them in the state of grace: so he will doe it by a course: and one speciall meanes, by which he preserues the faith of his children, is such exhortatious as this, by which (he blessing them vnto them,) he preuents security, and stirres vp care of vsing all good meanes consecrated by him, by which they may be vpheld in grace, and builded vp in faith. So that these aduertisements doe not presuppose the falling away of Gods Elect: but are purposely vsed in the wisdome of God to preuent the same.

The proue that we in our selues may fall, and had therefore need to resolue with Dauid, That it is good for vs to draw neere to God[b], but they doe not argue the purpose of God to suffer to fall, but rather the contrary: for well may we say, that if God would forsake, he would neuer so often call vpon his children to stand fast.

2. Many true beleeuers haue fallen and failed greatly: as Dauid in the matter of Vriah, Peter in the businesse of denying his Master: shall it be thought that these lost not their faith, when they committed such foule offences? How could faith and such grosse euils, be at once together in the same men? I answere directly; that neither Peter nor Dauid lost their faith quite in those their falles. We must learne to distinguish betwixt the being of faith, and the working of faith: Faith may be, where it doth not worke. There may be life in the root of a tree, though in the winter season the same be without both leafe, and fruit. In a mans body there may be life, although for the present being in a swound, he doth neither moue nor breathe; like to that, which Paul said of Eutichus, falling from the third loft, and taken vp dead: His life is in him[c]. In a dry summer there may be a secret spring of a Well in the earth, though not so much as a drop of water doe flow from it: So there may be a certen seed of faith in a Christian, euen then when by some great temptation he is ouercome and falled into a grieuous sin. So then it is true, faith did not worke in Dauid when he committed adultery. It was not powerfull in Peter, when he denied his Master: but yet the recouery of both argueth that there remained, as Theophilact saith out of Chrysost. touching Peter; the hidden seeds of faith and grace in them both. No sooner was Dauid throughly dealt with by Nathan, but he cried out, I haue sinned[d]. No sooner

e Luke 22.61, 62. did the Lord looke backe vpon Peter, but He went out and wept abundantly e. So then this is the answere, A great sin may smother faith, as ashes may the coles, but it cannot quench it. The working of faith may be stopped, when the being thereof continueth.

3. Obiect. A third obiection. Many that haue giuen great euidence euen of strong faith, and touching whom there is no cause in the world, but to account them true beleeuers, are by the testimony of their owne mouthes, vttering the same with great earnestnes, a testimony of their not dissembling, vtterly without faith: they say they haue no comfort nor taste of any goodnes, they cannot pray, they cannot so much as think comfortably vpon God, or any of his promises. Indeed they will say, it hath bin with them thus & thus heretofore, but all this is vanished, and now there is nothing but deadnes and infidelity come vpon them.

Haue not these lost their faith? And was it not also thus with Dauid, when he f Psal. 51.12. praied that God would restore vnto him the ioy of saluation, &c f. That restoring, argueth a departure and losse of that which his desire was he might again enioy.

Answer. As I said in answering the former obiection, that there is a difference betwixt the being and the working of faith; so say I now, that there is a difference betwixt a man hauing of faith, and his being aware that he hath it. A man may haue faith, euen then when he stands very peremptorily to it, that he hath none at all. Physitians report of men subiect to Melancholly passions, that they haue verily thought themselues dead, when as yet all that haue beheld them, haue knowne them to be liuing, yet haue they not been able to perswade them so: Such like spirituall perturbations are in the minds many times of Gods children, that they conclude directly of themselues, that they haue no faith, and they which come to talke with them, and to comfort them, cannot beate away that opinion from them, who yet see in them plaine and apparant euidences of true faith. Indeed those very complaints, which are made in these distresses, are an argument of the presence of that which yet is lamented as it were not there. No man but a beleeuer can complaine of the lacke of faith. Infidelity cannot be perceiued but by faith. The want of grace cannot be taken notice of without grace. It is in the matter of faith, as it is in the point and case of Gods loue. God alwaies loues his children, though he doe not alwaies shew it, nor they alg Psal. 30.7. waies perceiue it. He hides away his face for a time, and they are troubled g.

4. Obiect. A fourth obiection. We reade in Scripture, that the Spirit of God departed h 1 Sam. 16.14. from Saul h: And Paul saith by the corrupt doctrine of Hymeneus and Philetus, i 2 Tim. 2.18. the faith of certein was destroyed i; and so he speakes of some which haue erred k 1 Tim. 6.10. from the Faith k, and fell away from the Faith l, and made ship-wracke of the l Chap. 4.1. m Chap. 1.19. Faith m: Doe not these things argue a possibility of falling quite from the state of grace, and of an vtter losing the Faith?

Answ. Concerning that of Saul, By that spirit that forsooke him, is not meant that Spirit of regeneration, which workes in the elect: For that dwelleth, where it n Rom. 8.11. once entereth n: but a certein measure of neceſſary giftes; which God vouchsafed Saul, for the enabling him to the duties of his gouernment. Hereupon it is said, that when Saul was first annoynted King by Samuel, God gaue him o 1 Sam. 10.9. another heart o: Now when Saul grew into extremities, then God depriued him of those gifts: Such giftes are tearmed the Spirit of God; I meane, such as concerne a man for the discharge of his personall calling; as we may reade that tearme giuen to that knowledge and vnderstanding to worke in curious p Exod. 31.3. workes which was bestowed vpon Bezaleel and Aholiab p. As for the tearmes of faith in those places where destroying of faith, erring from the Faith, &c. are mentioned, wee must thus conceiue them, partly to betoken the doctrin of q Gal. 1.22. Faith: so faith is taken for that which is beleiued q. Now that is oftentimes fallen from by many, they being corrupted and poysoned with false opinions: Partly for the profession of Faith; and so euen good men may at a time by

weakneſſe in the extremity of perſecution faile in the profeſſion and ſhew of faith, not daring to ſhew themſelues openly to be that which they are: partly alſo it may be taken for that, which is but faith onely in name and in opinion, and which is a meere titular faith; and no more faith indeed, then a coarſe from which the ſoule is departed, is a man.

There be ſome as, Auguſtine ſaith, that doe rather imagine then beleeue. Now of ſuch kind of faith, the doctrine which I haue handled is not; for ſuch may vanish, nay indeed ſuch cannot continue: but when we ſpeake of faith, as it is the grace of God, which makes one with Chriſt, it can neuer be deſtroyed, neither doth any of thoſe places produced ſpeake, of faith in that ſenſe; na, y in one of the places, Paul puts a diſtinction betwixt thoſe whoſe faith he ſpeakes of, and the faith and ſtate of Gods choſen[r], as Himeneus and Philetus doctrine deſtroyed the faith of certaine: it pleaſed God to giue ouer ſome to be deceiued by them: but yet howſoeuer, the foundation of the Lord remaineth ſure, and hath this ſeale, the Lord knoweth who are his; all this while the elect of God were ſafe, they were ſo ſurely built, that it was not poſſible for them to miſcarry.

Cogitant potius quam credunt.

[r] 2 Tim. 2.18, 19.

A fifth obiection. This doctrine is accuſed, to be a doctrine of idleneſſe and preſumption: for if a man hauing faith cannot loſe it, and being once in the ſtate of grace, cannot finally be caſt out of fauour, why ſhould he feare to commit any ſinne? for doe he what he will, God will not reiect him. What need he bind himſelfe to any courſe of holineſſe, or of diligent vſing ſuch things as appertaine to building vp in godlineſſe? inaſmuch as his condition is vnalterable, he is ſure of being ſaued whatſoeuer come.

5. Obiect.

It is true, in the iudgement of corrupted nature, this may be a very good enducement to take liberty of ſinning, inaſmuch as there is no poſſibility of loſing faith; neither will I ſay, but at a time a child of God may be egged on by his own heart, vpon that ground to giue an aduenture. But it is certain, that ſuch a ſinne of preſuming, or of giuing ones ſelfe ouer to a diſſolute courſe, or of neglecting the care of holineſſe, cannot beare ſway there, where faith is. Marke what is ſaid, That ſinne ſhall not haue dominion ouer thoſe, which are by faith engrafted into Chriſt[s]. They which are iuſtified by faith, are called of God into the ſtate of grace[t], and they which are called are ſanctified[u]. How are they ſanctified, if they wallow in ſecurity? How is that a purger of the heart[x], if it leaue behind in a mans bowels ſuch groſſeneſſe? how is it our victory[y], if it ſuffer vs to be detained in bondage of ſuch a diſſolute euill? It is the marke of the worſt men, and ſuch as ſhall be ſwept away with the wrath and vengeance of God at his comming; to be lulled aſleepe in ſecurity, giuing themſelues ouer to the ſeruice of ſinne, eating and drinking, and knowing nothing, vntill they are taken like a bird in a ſnare[z]. How can this then be the ſtate of beleeuers? Will God ſuffer his to fall into that, which they are left vnto, who are of old ordained to deſtruction.

It cannot be denied, but Paul was reſolued of his future eſtate, and of his perſeuerance in grace vnto the end: but who euer more diligent, who more preciſe, who more conſtant in the ſtudy of holineſſe? It was his endeauour to haue alwaies a cleare conſcience toward God, and toward men[a]; it was his manner to beate downe his body, and to bring it into ſubiection[b]; he forgate that which was behind, and endeauoured himſelfe vnto that which was before, and followed hard toward the marke, for the priſe of the high calling of God in Chriſt Ieſus[c]: his manner of liuing was examplar[d]. I haue been large in the handling of this doctrine: first, because it is plentifull: the Word of God abounds with reasons and arguments to confirme it. Secondly, because it is comfortable, it is the ground and storehouse of all true consolation. Thirdly, because there be diuers exceptions made against it, which for the stopping of the mouthes of gain-sayers, and for the satisfaction of al those which feare God, it was necessary to explane. Posse si vellet, sed non velle vt posset. teous man, vnderstanding by a righteous man, a man iustified before God by Christ, is more blessed then Adam: and his reason is, Adam had power, if he would, but not a will to be able to persist in good: but as for them that are by faith engraffed into Christ, they haue both ability and will: they haue a desire giuen them to continue, and are able also to continue to the end. Let vs come to the vse.

The 1. Vse. First hereby is ouerthrowne that Popish opinion, the leauen whereof hath sowred some also which in other maine things do vtterly dissent from Poperie: to wit, that no man in this world, vnlesse it be by some speciall reuelation can be assured of his perseuerance and continuance in the state of grace: That a man may fall from the state of election, into the condition of a reprobate: Being now in Christ, he may be vtterly cut off from Christ, he may fall from grace, he may lose the spirit of God, and be quite and cleane without faith.

Such positions as these are ordinary in the Papists writing: and some others (as I said) differing else from them, yet doe communicate with them in these errors: Errors I may safely call them, being so contrary to that doctrine which hath been handled and prooued out of this Text, touching the perseuerance of the faithfull, and the vnalterable condition of those whom the spirit of God hath once renued.

How can that faith faile, for which Christ hath prayed? May a man know he hath faith indeed? No doubt he may: why else are we exhorted to try our selues
i 2 Cor. 13. 5. whether we are in the faith i. If a man may be assured he hath faith, he may be assured also that his faith shall hold out to the very end: vnlesse he will make doubt of the efficacy of Christs request. And surely, if it were true which is held by some, That a man being once truly in Christ, may be againe quite out of Christ, and so altogether in the state of nature againe, as if he had neuer been conuerted, then there will follow a necessity of a second Baptisme.

Baptisme is the Sacrament of our engraffing into Christ, of our initiation, or entrance into Religion: if then a man fall so farre, that hee is wholly seuered from Christ, shall it not be necessary in his recouery, for him to be baptized? For how else (ordinarily) shall he become a lim of Christ? This is an vnauoiable absurdity which followeth this doctrine.

I may adde hereto, how this weakneth the comfort of a Christian. Much adoe he hath to get faith. Alas I, what a griefe and a heart-breaking to him is it, to be taught that he no sooner hath it, but he may by and by lose it? now hee is in the ſtate of an elect, hee be in as bad a taking as Iudas, or any reprobate to morrow.

What kind of doctrine is this? How doth this ſort with the generall aime of the Scripture; which is, That we through patience and comfort might haue hope[k]? But thus is Popery a doctrine of vnſetledneſſe: it traineth vp the ſoules of men in a perpetuall ſuſpence; they would haue the people to be ſure of nothing, neither of the matter to be beleeued, nor of themſelues, whether or no they doe beleeue as it is neceſſary. A kind of hope they will allow them, which (as they conceiue it) is a kind of blind gueſſe without certainty. [k] Rom. 15.4.

2. Here is an excellent matter of direction for vs, what thing eſpecially to make choiſe of. What ſhould we rather ſeek and deſire, then ſuch a good wherof we cannot be depriued. See how vainely men beſtow all their care about things of no continuance, Honour, Riches, Pleaſure, things of no continuance. The 2. Vſe.

Houour, a meere buble, as we ſee in that glorious Courtier Haman: to day the ſecond in a kingdome; worſe then the verieſt ſlaue, euen one adiudged to the gallowes to morrow. Riches hath wings: either we are taken from them, or they from vs, euen in a moment; This night will they fetch thy ſoule from thee[l]: They cannot preuaile in the day of wrath[m]. As for pleaſure, what more tranſitory? Euen in laughter the heart is ſorrowfull[n]. Why will men be mad vpon thoſe things which are lighter then vanity it ſelfe? They be all as water, vpon which the faſter a man claſpeth his hand, the ſooner it is gone. [l] Luke 12.20. [m] Prou 11.4. [n] Prou. 14.13.

Oh that we might all earneſtly labour after faith, and [o] chuſe the better part. This brings with it all thoſe things which we ſo much affect. Would we Honour? what greater then to be ſonnes of God in Chriſt? And this doth faith[p]. [o] Luke 10.42.

Would we Riches? what comparable to Spirituall bleſſings in heauenly things? and theſe brings faith, inaſmuch as it brings Chriſt, whom he which hath once giuen, cannot but with him giue all things alſo[q]. [p] Gal 3.26.

Would we Pleaſure? what like this, To know ones Name to be written in Heauen? And this is alſo from faith: for faith is accompanied with the preſence of Gods Spirit, which beares witneſſe with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God[r]. Oh that we could ſell all to buy this Iewell; and euen as it were neglect all, till we were ſure we were indeed poſſeſſed of this treaſure. [q] Rom. 8. 32. [r] Rom. 8.16.

Thirdly, out of this doctrine is deriued matter of infinite and vnſpeakable comfort for all that tru'y feare God. How great and how violent, the malice and fury of Satan is againſt all ſuch we heard before. He will not faile to doe the vttermoſt that Hell can either inuent or execute, for the throwing them downe from that happy eſtate to which the Lord hath raiſed them. Well may a man tremble when he thinkes on this ſimply: for who are we, that we ſhould be able to encounter ſuch an enemy? But behold here a Rocke of comfort. This is like that ſtrong Tower, which Salomon ſpeaketh of, to which the righteous flee and are exalted[s]. We haue an Aduocate with the Father, Ieſus Chriſt the righteous; and he maketh continuall requeſt on our behalfe, that our faith may not faile. The 3. Vſe. [s] Prou 18.10. [t] 1 Ioh. 2.1.

Thou wilt (perhaps) ſay to me; I confeſſe this were a notable comfort, if I were ſure that I were one of thoſe for whom Chriſt is a ſuter: but herein I am doubtfull. I demand of thee, Haſt thou any truth of faith? Canſt thou tell whether that begun in thee, yea or no? So farre as faith goeth, ſo farre the intereſt into this priuiledge goeth. But becauſe I know thou wilt not be ſo reſolued, therefore I will declare a ſure courſe, by which thou maieſt be reſolued herein, that the benefit of this prayer, for the not failing of faith pertaines to thee.

Examine thy ſelfe for two things: Firſt, A conſtant vſe of making this requeſt vnto God in prayer for thy ſelfe, That the Lord would vouchſafe ſo to eſtabliſh thee in grace and goodneſſe, that thy faith may neuer faile, but continue firme and ſure vnto the end.

To make good this that I ſay (that I may not giue a falſe direction) this know know, That looke what grace God intends to beſtow vpon any man, vnto him he giues a deſire and care to begge the ſame at his hands in Chriſts Name.

t 1 Ioh. 20. 26. When he intends to giue me knowledge, he will giue me a mind to know[t]. He will make me to pray with Dauid; O giue me vnderſtanding: Teach me good iudgement and knowledge[u]. When he meanes to giue me faith, he will ſtirre me vp to pray for faith. When he will preſerue me from tentation, he will ſecretly prouoke me to cry to him, that my faith may be kept ſafe from tentations.

u Pſal. 119. 34, 66.

Againe, this is alſo a true point, that theſe two things doe ſtill goe together: The interceſſion of Chriſt in heauen; and the worke of his Spirit in our hearts, mouing vs to aske thoſe very things, which he craueth of God on our behalfe.

x Rom 8. y Verſ. 34, 26. And therefore[x] he which in one place is ſaid to make requeſt for vs, is ſaid in another, to giue vs his ſpirit to helpe our infirmities[y]. So then, I aske thee, Doeſt thou conſider often how furiouſly Satan is bent againſt Gods children? doeſt thou recount with thy ſelfe, how vnable thou for thy part art to make reſiſtance? doeſt thou ſee and bemoane the weakneſſe and ſcantneſſe of thy faith? doeſt thou continually pray vnto God, and euen begge of him in Chriſts name, that he would helpe thy vnbeleefe, that he would confirme and ſtabliſh thee ſo, that thy faith may neuer be remoued? This is an euidence to thy ſoule, that the prayer of Chriſt belongeth vnto thee; and that the gates of hell ſhall neuer preuaile againſt thy faith: this is a familiar marke. Doubtleſſe, there is no faith at all, where this ſute is not often euen groned out vnto God, That faith may not be ouercome.

Secondly, diligence in the vſe of the meanes ordained by God, for the ſuſtentation and increaſe of faith. Here is alſo a rule like the former. Will God giue me any ſpirituall good; he will giue me an heart to vſe all good meanes for the attainement of that good[z]. Now the meanes to keepe faith from falling, are eſpecially the Word and Sacraments. The Word builds vp further, and makes to grow vnto more perfection. The Sacraments are ſeales of righteouſneſſe, and ſerue to ſtrengthen our apprehenſion of the loue of God in Chriſt Ieſus. Therefore ſound beleeuers haue been alwaies carefull in the vſe of theſe two. The word hath been deare vnto them, it hath been the ioy and reioycing of their heart; they haue delighted to heare it; it hath been a comfort to them to conferre about it, and to meditate in it. The Sacraments haue been frequented by them: that of Baptiſme, though receiued but once, yet applied often: that of the Lords ſupper, they haue been frequent vſers of.

z Hoſ. 6. 2.

Reade and obſerue the Scripture, and you ſhall find it ſo. So then, art thou a diligent hearer? a reuerent and often repairer to Gods board? delighteſt thou in theſe holy exerciſes of Gods houſe? laboureſt thou to profit by them, and to find ſweetneſſe in them? it is a good ſigne, that the Lord will preſerue thy faith, to whom he hath giuen care to ſeeke and labour to vphold it.

Thus I haue taught, how wee may comfortably apply this comfortable doctrine. There ſhall be no danger of giuing way to preſumption by teaching this point, theſe markes being annexed: for if theſe marks want, thy caſe is dangerous; thou canſt not ſay thou haſt faith, nor promiſe to thy ſelfe any victory againſt the diuell.

To the Worshipfull, Religious, and Vertuous Lady, the Lady Margaret Yeluerton, Wife to the much honoured, Sir Henry Yeluerton Knight, the Kings Atturney Generall, continuance of all happineſſe.

Madam,

NO ſooner came this Sermon vnto my hands, (the Author whereof for his approued zeale, worthily deſerued the Title of an eminent Light and Ornament of our Church) then I vowed the Dedication thereof vnto your Ladiſhip; Nor may it ſeeme vnworthy your fauourable acceptance (the principall aime of my expectance) in regard of that ſingular teſtimony which all men that haue been conuerſant in his works, do giue of the Author, being ſuch a one, as neither affection could corrupt, nor affectation tranſport; but of that Spirit, as he was zealous with a good conſcience, making humility his path to glory. In a word, (Madam) his former Labours (now reduced into one Volume haue been euer countenanced by ſome choice Patrons: Nor may this (being equall with moſt of the reſt) claime leſſe prerogatiue then the reſt. Thus wiſhing you that benefit for which it was intended, to the glory of God, whereto it is directed, I reſt,

To the Christian Reader.

CHristian and curteous Reader, being mooued by such who had interest in bringing to light this Sermon, that I would prefix some small Epistle, I would not withdraw my selfe from performing so small a kindnesse. And two considerations especialy swaied me to write a few lines in this kind. The first whereof is the Authors great desert towards the Church of God; great in teaching, great in writing. Many a man there is who hauing learnedly, iudiciously, and plainly taught the truth of God, hauing taken heed to the Ministery which he receiued in the Lord, to fulfill it, & that in preaching alone; notwithstanding he hath left his memoriall blessed vpon earth, euen in that regard and naked respect. But if there be one man of a great company, who as he taught religiously and powerfully in his life, so besides in his life he did write to the comfortable edification of the Church, yea & also left after his death, other things to be published for the behoofe of Gods Saints, without question such a worthy may wel haue double honor put vpon him. Many such deseruing instrumẽts hath God raised vp in our Church, excelling both for mouth and pen. Among the last of which, the Author of this Sermon neede not to be ranked. His workes praise him in the gates, as Salomon speaketh of the vertuous Womans deeds. The second and third, nay, the fift and sixt Editions of certen Treatises written by him, though in a dumb, neuertheless with a mouing Rhetoricke, spake effectually to his commendation. In the second place, that did not a little incourage me, that this Sermon (if much affection haue not dazled some eyes) may be esteemed amongst one of the chiefe he did deliuer. It was preached in a famous Vniuersity, in a most learned and full Auditory, it was heard with attention (his godly voice, and sanctified gesture enliuening the hearers:) afterwards it was spoken of with reuerence and affection; as both hearing it, and hearing of it, I can truly auouch, it was his farewell Sermon to his Mother Vniuersity, although not (I suppose) in the Authors intent, yet in the euent. Receiue therefore Christian Reader this Sermon, sound for edification, sweet for application, shewing Ministers their duty, shewing people theirs, and therefore not vnwelcome to any good either teachers or learners. Thus wishing thee all blessing from God in this and all other like furtherances of thy deuotion, I recommend thee to the Lords mercy, beseeching him for Christ his sake, to fulfill euery honest desire of thy heart. THE Spirituall Fiſhing.

Text.

Luke 5. Verſ. 10. The laſt words of that verſe,

Hence forth thou ſhalt catch Men.

WHereas heere our Sauiour tranſlates this phraſe of Fiſking, or catching, from an ordinary & inferiour courſe, vnto a more heauenly and ſpirituall buſineſſe, euen to the winning of ſoules, it giues very direct occaſion to handle theſe things:

Firſt, the ſtate of the World, which is as the Sea.

Secondly, the ſtate of the Church, which is as a Ship or Boate in the Sea.

Thirdly, the ſtate of men by nature, who be as Fiſhes, ranging after their owne diſpoſition, vncaught.

Fourthly, the ſtate of Miniſters, who be as fiſhers.

Fiftly, the ſtate of the Goſpell preached, which is the hooke, or baite, or net to take ſoules.

Theſe things are not ſtrained or forced, but ariſe out of the place directly. For ſith Peter and the reſt muſt change their courſe, and fall to a new kind of Fiſhing; what is the Sea which they muſt launch out into, but the World? What is the Boate, but the Church in which they labour, and to which they ſeeke to gather ſoules? What is the booty they muſt ſeeke for, but the ſonnes of men? And what are they but ſo many Fiſhers? Or what is their net, but the Goſpell, the word of Saluation which they preach? Of euery of theſe I will ſpeake ſomething, and that briefly.

That the ſtate of the World, is as the Sea, it is plaine by theſe places: Before the throne there was a Sea of glaſſe like vnto Chryſtall [a]: In that day the Lord with his ſore and great and mighty ſword, ſhall ſlay the Dragon that is in the Sea [b]: And the ſtate of the World is as the Sea, in a fourefold reſpect; firſt becauſe of the generall vnſtableneſſe of the things theteof. The vnſetledneſſe of that vaſt creature the Sea, is well knowne. It is in continuall motion, (it cannot reſt [c]) it ebbes and flowes perpetually: ſometimes (at a ſpring tide) it ſwels to that bigneſſe, that the bankes cannot containe it, ſometimes again it falles back ſo low, that a man muſt go far from the bank before he can come neere

it. It is (vnder God) chiefly gouerned by the Moone, the which there is no one thing more subiect vnto change, it being neuer beheld two nights together in one proportion. Thus is the World, whether wee looke vpon the generall states of Kingdomes, or the personall estates of particular men, either for their goods or for their bodies, we see nothing but a continuall alteration: Crownes are translated from head to head, and Scepters passe from one hand to another: Fenced Cities are made heapes, and walled Townes become as the plowed fields: they which were once fastened as a nayle in a sure place, and hauing set their nests one hie, dreamed of nothing but perpetuities for them and theirs, are suddenly throwne out of all, and rolled and turned like a ball [d]. The great houses are smitten with branches [e], and the wide dwellings and large chambers, filled with Cedar, and painted with vermillion [f], are in a moment left without an inhabitant [g]. Haman is to day the second in the Kingdome, but then stript of all, is hanged vp to morrow [h]. This yeere is Ierusalem the Princesse among the Prouinces, but the next yeere made tributary [i], her Nobles which did ere while Put on scarlet, doe now imbrace the dung [k]. Now doth Nebuchadnezzar walke in his royall pallace of Babell, priding himselfe in his outward state; But while the word was in the Kings mouth, a voice came downe from Heauen, saying; O King Nebuchadnezzar, to thee be it spoken, thy Kingdome is departed from thee [l] &c. Yester day Iobs cattell went out by their thousands, he had both sonnes and daughters to doe him honour, and seruants at his command: to day heere is not a hoofe to bee seen in his ground, not a child to call him blessed, not a ladde left to attend him. This is the vncertainty of this ebbing and flowing world, the fashion of it goeth away [m].

2. Because of the tumultuousnesse of it: Who is ignorant of the stormes and grieuous tempests which are at Sea? There especially men see the workes of the Lord, and his wonders in the deepe: For he commandeth and raiseth the stormie winde, and it lifteth vp the waues thereof [n]. The World is a fit patterne heereof, in respect of the continuall stirs and troubles that are in it: Nation against Nation by War, man against man by diuers kinde of contentions; of euery one that liues therein, is the saying of Iob verified, Man that is born of a woman is full of trouble [o], Man is borne vnto trauaile, as the sparkes fly vpward [p]. It was the punishment which God laid vpon him, that in sorrow he should eate his bread all the dayes of his life [q]: And albeit some haue a more calme passage then some others haue, or like Ionas [r], can lie & sleep, when others are tossed with the storme, yet none can liue without some vexation; he is not alwaies caried with full sailes to the end of his desires.

The world resembles the Sea by the oppression that is in it. At Sea the lesser fishes are a prey to the great ones; and in the world, the rich and mighty swallow vp the poore [s]; one man bites and deuours another [t]; Manasseth, Ephraim; Ephraim, Manasseth [u]. To this pertaines that of the Prophet, That men are made as the fishes of the Sea [x].

4 In respect of the sway the Diuell beares in it. Obserue what is in the Psalme, The Sea is great and wide, there is that Leuiathan whom the Lord hath made to play therein [y]. Now looke how this monster domineers in the Sea, so doth Sathan heere in the World: therefore he is called the God of this world [z], and said to worke in the children of disobedience [*]: And to iustifie this comparison, as the World is called a Sea, so is the Diuell, Leuiathan [a]. Thus wee see how the World is compared to the Sea: The state of the Sea is vncertaine, so is the World; it is tempestuous, so is the world full of tumult: In it the great fishes deuoure the lesse; so in the World the poore and weake are a spoile to the mighty: Leuiathan takes his pleasure in the Sea, so doth Sathan rule and beare sway in the World.

The

The Doctrine now deliuered, affords a strong reason to enforce it: For where there is so much vncertainty, so much confusion and trouble, such oppression and cruelty, where the Diuell beareth such exceeding sway; what is there to be found worth delighting in? A man imagines himselfe sure in respect of his outward estate; at an instant comes as it were a waue and washeth away all: Hee promiseth peace and quietnesse to himselfe; suddenly ariseth a storme, and puts him to a trouble hee thought not of: Much adoe shall hee haue to escape the hands of the oppressor, bee he as he will; nay, the better and holier he is, so much the more that great Leauithan, that old serpent hath him in continuall chase. Marke and consider, oh yee men of the earth, all whose striuing and plotting and plodding is for the world; consider what it is vpon which you dote, and with which you are enamoured so exceedingly, it is euen a very Sea of vncertainties, and bottomlesse Ocean of confused vexation, the very hold and kingdome of the Diuell. Wee hunt after it, but where is our assurance when wee haue got it? Or what haue wee procured to our selues, but vanity and vexation of spirit? The further wee wade into it, the further are we from the Lord: For the amity of the World, is the enmity of God [c], and the more businesse we haue in it, in the greater hazard we are to be drowned in perdition and destruction [d]. Happy were it for vs if the meditation of this point touching the proportion which is betwixt the World and Sea, were able to vnglue and vntwist our affections, which are so neerely tyed vnto it, and to stirre vs vp like passengers by Sea to long for the Hauen, and to striue for that eternall rest, a kingdome not of vncertainty, but which cannot be shaken, a place not of trouble, but Where shall bee no more death, neither sorrow, neyther crying, neither bee any more paine [e]. There the Prince of darknesse cannot endanger, for the Lambe is the light of it [f], and God himselfe shall bee all in all to those that dwell therein [g]. This is the Vse.

[g] 1 Cor.15.28.

THe next thing is touching the Church; The state thereof in the World is like the state of a ship or Boate vpon the Sea; And that especially in this respect: Because it is subiect to continuall tossings.

The state of the Church in this world, compared to a ship or boat vpon the Sea.

Of trauellers by Sea it is said, that they are tossed too and fro, and stagger like drunken men, and all their cunning is gone [h]. Not vnlike to this is the state and condition of Gods Church. It fareth with it, as with the Ship Ionas was in; There was a mighty tempest in the Sea, so that the Ship was like to bee broken [i]: or which the Disciples were in, There arose a great tempest in the Sea, so that the ship was couered with waues [k]. Such was the state of the Church of old, the members whereof complained, how The waters had almost drowned them, and the streame had gone ouer their soule [l]. And Dauid as a man experienced in such stormes, cryeth out to God [m], Saue me, for the waters are entred euen to my soule: and deliuer and take me out of the great waters [n]. And as it was with the shippe in which Paul was so exceedingly hazarded, That they saw neither Sunne nor Starres in many dayes [o]: So the Church of God is often driuen into that extremity, that it is for a time, euen depriued of all ordinary comfort, and seemes to be without all hope of any more refreshing. Hence are these complaints of the Church, O God, why hast thou put vs away for euer? Why is thy wrath kindled against the sheepe of thy pasture? Thinke vpon thy congregation, &c [p], and wilt thou be angry with vs for euer? And wilt thou prolong thy wrath from one generation to another? Wilt thou not turne againe, &c [q]. Thus Dauid as a traueller in this Ship, cryed out, Will the Lord absent himselfe for euer, and will he no more shew fauour [r]? And Haman the Ezrahite; Lord, why doest thou reiect my soule, and hidest thy face from mee [s]? It is a law that cannot bee broken, that the chosen of God Must through many afflictions enter into the kingdome of God [t], God hath so appointed for his owne glory.

The Lord bringeth matters to an exigent, and ſuffereth them to come to the very brinke of hazard, that ſo his might and goodneſſe in the deliuery of his ſeruants may bee the more apparant. 2. For their good: Firſt, It makes them to looke vpward with the greater feruency. Dauid ſaith of ordinary paſſengers by Sea, that when They mount vp to the heauen, and deſcend to the deep, ſo that their ſoule melteth for trouble, &c. then they cry vnto the Lord in their trouble, &c. The Mariners with Ionas when the ſtorme was vp, downe they were vpon their knees, and euery man cryed vnto his God[z]. And ſo the ſwelling waues of afflictions, doe not quench but kindle the deuotion of Gods ſeruants: In their afflictions they will ſeeke mee diligently[a]. Secondly, it makes them long ſo much the more for the Hauen (where they would bee.) Note Pauls daily dying, and the continuall troubles which he was expoſed vnto, made him long to be deſſolued[c], and to bee as glad when his time of departing was at hand[d], as the poore weather-beaten Mariner is to ſee the land. Thirdly, it makes the deliuerance when it comes to be the more eſteemed[e], When they are quieted, they are glad; and double welcome is that refreſhing which comes at the very pinch of neceſſity. This ſerues to admoniſh all that feare God, what they muſt make prouiſion for, if they will bee ſaued. By their profeſſion, they are entred into the Church of God, not as into a Garden of pleaſure, where they may aduenture to ſay euery one to his ſoule, Soule, liue at eaſe, eat, drinke, and take thy paſtime[g], but as into a Ship, a houſe of continuall motion, where though there may bee calmeneſſe for a time, the Sun ſhining out, the windes laid, and the Sea ſmooth, yet it is wiſdome to be in a continuall expectation of a ſtorme. God hath not called vs vnto eaſe and quiet, but to the croſſe. Many things are to bee endured betwixt our ſetting out here, and our arriuall at the Land of Promiſe. Many ſtormes to bee gone through, many rockes and ſands to bee aduentured by, many Pirates ſeeking the ſpoyle of our ſoules to bee grapled with, before the hauen of Reſt can be entred into. The ignorance, or the inconſideration of this point hath deceiued many. They may thus fitly bee ſhaddowed out. Some freſh trauellers ſtanding vpon the ſhore in a faire day, and beholding the Ships in their beauty lie ready rigged and trimmed in the Harbor, thinkes it a gallant thing to goe to Sea, and will needes aduenture, but being out a league or two, and feeling by the rocking of the Ship his ſtomacke beginne to worke and grow ſicke, and his ſoule euen to abhorre all manner of meate, or otherwiſe a ſtorme to ariſe, the wind and the water as it were conſpiring the ouerthrow of the veſſell, and euery ſea carrying in it the face of death; forthwith repents his folly, and makes vowes, that if he can once recouer the ſhore, he will bid an eternall farewell vnto all ſuch voyages. Thus, there bee who in the calme daies of peace, when Religion is not ouerclowded by the times, that will needs ioyne themſelues to the number of Gods people, they will bee as earneſt and forward as the beſt. But when a tempeſt beginnes to appeare, and the Sea to grow rougher then at the firſt entry, the times alter, trouble is raiſed, and many croſſe winds of much oppoſition and gain-ſaying begin to blow, they are weary of their courſe, and will needs be ſet aſhore againe, reſoluing neuer to thruſt themſelues into any more aduentures. How needfull

needfull then is it that Christians should often remember, how by Christs speech here, the Church is necessarily resembled to a Ship? enter not into it, to bee a guide or a passenger, a Minister, or a Professor, vnlesse thou resolutely make prouision for a storme. Till the end of the voyage there is no rest to bee looked for: Wherein notwithstanding this may bee for a comfort, that this Ship (the Church of God) hath a priuiledge which none hath else, no not the greatest Gallioun or Argosy vnder heauen; It may bee tossed, but can neuer be drowned: Though the waters of the Sea rage and bee troubled, and the mountaines shake at the surges thereof, God is in the middest of it, therefore shall it not be moued, God shall helpe it very early [h]. It is as the Arke of Noah, which (because God had shut it vpon Noah) therefore it was borne vp euen amidst the waues [i]; or as the Boate in which Christ was [c], which was wel-neere couered with waters, yet at an instant, by the command of him which is the Lord of the Sea, there followed a gracious calme. Christ is the Pilot, and (as was said of Paul) God hath giuen to him all that sayle with him [l], and hee will giue them eternall life, and they shall neuer perish [m].

The second vse serues to teach vs (because the Church of God is as a Ship in this sea of the world, the necessity of furnishing our selues with such things as appertaine to this spirituall voyage: not to insist vpon many, two things especially must bee looked too. First, That we be diligent in obseruing the direction appointed by God, for the true guidance of our course. The Seamen haue their Card and their Compasse, they haue the Sun and Starres, and the motions of heauen to direct them. That which our course must bee guided by, is the Word of God; it is like the pillar that went before the host of Israel, according to the mouing or standing whereof, they ordered all their iourneys. Hither may be referred that of Peter [n], We haue a most sure word of the Prophets, to which yee doe well that yee take heede, as vnto a light that shineth in a darke place. It is an allusion to a Sea-course: When the the Admirall hangs out a Lanterne, and all that come behind steere to that. Wee cannot wander if we be led by this light: It is that good Spirit which Dauid prayed to bee led by vnto the land of righteousnesse [o]. What other Load-starre of custome, or opinion, or fashion of the times men attend vpon, they must needs runne vpon the rockes, and make shipwrack of the faith. Secondly, That we take with vs the knowledge and faith of Gods promises. It is called the Anchor, Heb. 6. 19. This is our stay in the day of tempest: I know whom I haue beleeued [p]: such an one cannot be moued, for his heart is fixed, and beleeueth in the Lord [q]. The promises being either not knowne, or not applied, the soule is tossed without rest, and must needes be ouerwhelmed with despaire. This Anchor being tyed to the soule by the strong Cable of a liuely faith, giues comfort vnto it in the greatest storme.

THe third thing is concerning the state of men. The fish to be catched out of this Sea, and to bee brought into this Ship, are men, Thou shalt catch men from henceforth. From whence this is gathered:

The state of men by nature, compared to fishes in the sea, ranging after their own disposition, vncaught.

That we are all by nature in the state of condemnation. This is cleere out of this place. By this Fishing, or catching (the very substance of the Ministers office) is meant, A bringing of men into the way of life. Now then, in as much as wee are all by nature vncaught (otherwise why should Christ send out his Apostles to take vs?) it followeth, that wee are all by nature without grace, euen in the very gulfe and iawes of eternall woe. This is easily proued by the Scriptures: All flesh hath corrupted his way vpon the earth [r]. The Lord looked downe from heauen vpon the children of men, to see if there were any that would vnderstand and seeke God. All are gone out of the way; they are all corrupt, there is none that doth good, no not one [s]. All we like sheep haue gone astray: we haue turned euery one to his own way [t].

And well in this are wee compared vnto the fiſh: For as the fiſhes skip and play and take their pleaſure in the ſea, and are vnwillingly taken in the net, and labour to get out, and being in the boate, would faine, if they could, leape backe into the Sea, ſo naturally we take pleaſure in our ſinfull waies. It is a paſtime for a foole to doe wickedly [a], The net of the Goſpell muſt encloſe vs, and being entangled, we deſire ſtill to be looſed, and to returne againe vnto our wonted courſe. This is the very true ſtate of vs all. Wee neither are in the ſtate of grace by nature, neither doe we deſire it. Wee bee plunged into a ſea of miſery, and in our owne diſpoſition we would neuer forſake it.

a Prou. 10. 23.

It were well for vs, if wee could learne by this to ſee our ſelues what wee be, and what we would euer be, if wee were left to the ſwinge of our affections. Nature hath (as it were) ſpawned vs forth into this wordly ſea: and as it ſelfe lieth in wickedneſſe [b], ſo doe we drinke iniquity like water [c]. It is ſweet vnto vs in our mouth, and we hide it vnder the tongue, we fauour it, and will not forſake it, but keepe it cloſe in the mouth [d]. We neither know the meanes of our ſaluation, nor affect it when it is offered. Either the Scripture is falſe, or this is true. How happy were we if this could humble vs; it would make vs afraid of following our owne thoughts, or of being led by the ſway of our owne hearts. Our not knowing the miſery of our owne eſtate, is the cauſe of all the ſecurity, of all the profanene ſſe, of all the boldneſſe in ſinne, of all the contempt of Gods Word which is in the world at this day: This place among others, is as a glaſſe to ſhew vs what we are; ſtrangers from ſaluation, and as farre from any inclination to it, as a fiſh is from a will and deſire to be caught.

The ſtate of Miniſters, who be as fiſhers.

THe fourth thing is of the ſtate of the Miniſter. Here are two things: Firſt, the ſtate of the Miniſter: Secondly, the labour, buſineſſe and worke of the Miniſter. Of the firſt thus wee ſee:

Doctrine. 1.

That it is no ſuperfluous or needleſſe function, but a calling of great neceſſity for the winning and ſauing mens ſoules. This is euident out of this place: The Lord intending the conuerſion of ſome, and being able diuers waies to accompliſh his purpoſe in that behalfe, yet hath thought it good to ſingle out this meanes among all the reſt, euen by man to catch man, and by his Miniſtery to bring ſoules into his Kingdome. This is that which the Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ. 4. 11, 12. He gaue ſome to be Apoſtles and ſome Prophets, and ſome Euangeliſts, and ſome Paſtors and Teachers, for the repairing of the Saints, for the worke of the Miniſtery The Saints which belong to the election of grace, being ſcattered vpon the earth here and there, his pleaſure is by Paul and Timothy, to gather them together vnto himſelfe. They be the Lords Labourers to bring in his Haueſt [e], his Workmen to aduance his Building [f], his Shepheards to take heed vnto his flocke [g], the Starres in his right hand, to giue light vnto his Church [h]. There being thouſands of ſoules to be ſaued in Iury, the Lord will haue them to be brought in by Peters Miniſtery [i]; Philip muſt be ſent to catch the Samaritans and the Eunuch [k]. In Corinthus there was a great draught (I haue much people in this City:) therefore there Paul muſt goe to worke [l]. Heere is the neceſſity of the calling.

The Vſe.

To reproue their profane and wretched opinion, who thinke, that among all the Profeſſions which are at this day in the world, that of the Miniſterie may beſt be ſpared. It is ſtrongly thought by many, that it were no danger or preiudice to mens ſoules, though there were no Miniſter at all to inſtruct them. O ſay ſome, what need they trouble themſelues? Euery man muſt

anſwere

anſwer for his own ſoule; & if we do not as we ſhould, we ſhal beare the blame.

Thus they would ſhift off all dependance vpon the ordinance of God, & lay an imputation of ſuperfluity vpon that calling, by which it is the pleaſure of God to ſaue thoſe that beleeue. This one place is ſufficient to ſtop their mouth: For I may truly auouch it out of the words heere, that (ordinarily) there is no more hope of a mans ſaluation, without an able and induſtrious Miniſter, then there is that the fiſh in the Sea will of it ſelfe come aſhore, and offer it ſelfe vnto vs without the labour of ſome, to go out into the deep with boates and nets to bring them in. Henceforth thou ſhalt catch men.

Secondly, thus: That the calling of the Miniſter is no idle calling, but a calling of labour, a calling of much buſineſſe and of great employment. The 2. doct.

The Miniſters are fiſhers, whether that be not a profeſſion of much labour, iudge you. To make the thing it ſelfe manifeſt, this is worthy to be obſerued; That the moſt names giuen in the Scripture to men of this calling, doe betoken labour: Seers[m], Watchmen[n], Embaſſadours[o], Labourers[p], Diſpoſers[q], Husbandmen[r], Seed-ſmen[s], Shepheards[t], Cryers[u]. There is no title giuen to them, but implyeth action, yea, and induſtry very great. It is a worthy worke[x], their Maintainance is with that condition[y] otherwiſe no title, no name nor ſhew can free them from Comtempt[z].

Vſe. 1. It meeteth with two euils in Miniſters: firſt, the idleneſs which hath ouertaken ſome that are called to this buſie profeſſion: They are ſuch as the Prophet reproueth, Watchmen that are blind, that haue no knowledge, that are dumb dogs, and cannot barke: that lie and ſleepe, and delight in ſleeping[a]. I take no pleaſure in laying open the nakedneſſe of men of mine owne coate: yet God forbid that I ſhould vſe my tongue to the licking of their ſores, wich prooue the very bane of Gods Church, and do make it lie like the field of the ſluggard, or as the garden of the idler. Secondly the ſpirit of greedineſſe which (is to be feared) is in many, They can neuer haue enough, &c[b]. They goe out to catch, yet not ſoules to God, but preferments to themſelues: & are ſtill fiſhing for aduancement. They haue not learned that of the Apoſtle: I ſeeke not yours, but you[c]; It is not your fauour which I doe affect, it is not your wealth which I ſeeke for, it is your ſaluation which I endeuour. This is the honour of a mans Miniſtery, the glory and crowne of his calling.

It ouerthroweth the common fancy of the people, who account the Miniſters calling to be an idle and a lazie calling; we get our liuings eaſily in the conceit of ſome, and is no ſinne nor pitty (in their vnderſtanding) to defraud vs; and how vſefull is it in the mouthes of many, to ſay, We muſt labour for them? I confeſſe, that as ſome vſe it, it is a calling of exceſſiue idleneſſe, if they bee ſuch as feede themſelues, and feede not the flockes[d], ſuch as take away the key of knowledge[e]; but conſider it in it owne nature, and as it ought to bee performed, we ſhall find it to be a ſeruice of greater buſineſſe. Let Peter, or any ſucceſſour of Peter, buſie himſelfe (as he muſt) ſometimes in preparing, ſometimes in mending, ſometimes in caſting abroad, ſometimes in drawing in his net; no man ſhall haue any iuſt cauſe to twit him with idleneſſe; or to ſay, That becauſe he is a Miniſter, therefore he hath an eaſie occupation. Vſe. 2.

Doctrine. The ſtate of the Goſpell Preached, compared to a hooke, bait, or net, to catch mens ſoules.

THe laſt thing is, That the net in which men muſt be taken, is the preaching of the Goſpell.

Chriſt heere acquainting them generally with his purpoſe how to employ them, after changed the phraſe when it came to the point of execution; and he which now ſpake of fiſhing, told them afterwards of preaching, Mat. 10. 7. of Teaching the nations[f]; of Declaring the Goſpell to euery creature[g], of Feeding his ſheepe[h], and Chriſt himſelfe compareth the Goſpell to a net[i]. The compariſon agreeth fitly after this manner.

f Math. 28. 19.
g Mar. 16. 15.
h Iohn 21. 15.
i Math. 13. 47.

The

The preaching of the Goſpell is like to a Net; firſt, in the generall drift and vſe: the vſe of a Net, is to take fiſh, the drift of Preaching is to bring in ſoules. Secondly, in the ordering of it: It is not the net lapped vp together that bringeth in the draught, but haled out at length, and ſpred forth that encloſeth the fiſh; It is the opening and vnfolding of the Goſpell, the ſtretching it out by preaching which doth encompaſſe ſoules. There may a fiſh or two hang in the net, being let down on a heape, but that is a chance, and is no wiſe aduenturing. The word read, and ſo brought in (as it were) in groſſe, may (by the mercy of God) take ſome; but we haue no warrant from hence to make a rule general. Againe, it is need that the net be ſtrong, otherwiſe the greater kind will break through, and make all the labour & charge to be in vaine, ſo it is meete that the Doctrin be wel ſtrengthened out of the Word of God, that it be well proued, that it be well preſſed and applyed, that the conſciences of the hearers may bee conuicted, and that they may ſee it is God, and not man with whom they haue to doe. For a man ſhall meet with many froward and wilfull and violent natures, that wil not be held in, but whē they feele themſelues within the net, wil cry, Let vs breake their bands, and caſt their cords from vs[k]; ſo that euen a kind of violence may be vſed to keepe them from deſtruction. Thirdly, in the ſucceſſe of it: Many a draught the poore Fiſher-man makes and taketh nothing, yet he leaueth not off: Many a time is the net of preaching ſhot forth, and yet none conuerted thereby: ſo it pleaſeth God to exerciſe the patience of his ſeruants: yet ſtil the worke muſt be followed, and the Lords leaſure muſt be waited for. Often doth the net incloſe many, which yet after breake away, and many are at firſt drawn in by the power of the Goſpel, which yet afterwards ſlide backe, and returne againe to their old profaneneſſe. There is much brought in in the Net, which yet is good for nothing when it is got: There come in frogges, and weeds, and a great deale of traſh, which in the end is caſt away, though for the loue of the fiſh there were no little paines in drawing it in: ſo, as it is ſhewed, Math. 13, 47. &c. many Hypocrites, and reprobates are gathered into the outward ſociety of the Church by preaching, and ſo are let alone like weedes vntill the day of harueſt, Math. 13. 30. Thus as our calling is to be fiſhers; ſo our Net is Preaching.

[k] Pſal. 12 3.

The Vſe. It ſhewes plainely, that all the enemies and aduerſaries of Preaching, are enemies to the good and ſaluation of mens ſoules. This is the Net, and without this I will not feare to ſay, that ſurely men ſhall periſh in their ſinnes. The Diuell that great hunter after ſoules, laboureth by his inſtruments, euen with the very ſpirit of his helliſh policy, to diſgrace this courſe, to ſuppreſſe it, to put it downe, to draw men from affecting it. He knoweth it to be the meanes to abridge his kingdome, hee feareth the pulling of ſome ſoule or other out of his clutcher at euery Sermon: Let vs not ſuffer our ſelues to bee cozened by his wiles. Let me that am a Miniſter remember the Seruice I am called to, euen to catch men, to win ſoules: let me be euer plying this buſineſſe; and you (Beloued) when the Lords Net is caſt in among you, runne not from it, grudge not at it, preſſe and ſtriue to be brought within the compaſſe of it, otherwiſe you ſhall continue within the ſea of this world ſtill, and ſhall neuer be ſaued. Fiſhes doe die if they be taken; we cannot eſcape eternall death if wee be not caught. The hooke may be ſharpe, but the baite is ſweet; and it will ſeeme a yoke to our nature, to be knit vp (as in a Net) and to be reſtrained from our owne wonted carnall liberty; but let vs looke to the end, which is the ſaluation of our Soules.

To the Right honourable Lady, the Lady Margaret, Counteſſe of Cumberland.

Right Honourable:

Pardon my boldneſſe (I beſeech you) in aduenturing thus farre, vpon ſo ſlender knowledge, and vpon leſſe deſerts. I could (perhaps) ſay what encouragements I haue raiſed to my ſelfe, (and that out of no ſuppoſals or imaginary ſurmiſes) to preſent you with this little Treatiſe: but that which hath moſt emboldened me, is the conſtant report of the ſincerity of your affection to Gods truth, and of your gracious fruithfulneſſe in a good profeſſion. I thought it therefore not vnmeet (ſetting aſide other more perſonall reſpects) to teſtifie my honouring of Gods graces in you, by craiuing your fauourable acceptance of theſe enſuing leaues. The matter is concerning Death, the very name whereof is a terror to a naturall man, but yet a word of refreſhing to Gods children: it being to them (becauſe they are in Chriſt) a day of entrance to an endleſſe ioy. Touching the manner of treating hereon, I promiſe nothing more then ordinary. My deſire by plainneſſe, to ſpeake to the hid man of the heart, is ſufficiently knowne by my other publiſhings. And though ſome blame vs perhaps for want of queint eloquence, and fineneſſe of phraſe, yet I ſhall bee glad if any one (yea though but one) Nathanael, ſhall acknowledge that his ſoule hath found ſweetneſſe in my homelineſſe. My building, to the viewing whereof, I am here bold to inuite your Honour, is but ſmall: it will be a blemiſh to make my entry into it ouerſpacious. Here I end therefore without further complement, wiſhing to your Ladiſhip the end of Faith, euen the ſaluation of your ſoule; and remaining,

The Chiefe contents of this Tract.

1 First, the most holy amongst Gods children, are notwithstanding their holinesse, subiect to mortality.

2 Secondly, to the children of God, death is a finall discharge from all misery.

3 Thirdly, the thoughts of the godly, in respect of death, are very comfortable.

4 Fourthly, the soule of man remaineth still in being, when the body is by death turned into dust.

5 Fifthly, the soules of the faithfull, presently vpon their separation from the body, are made partakers of a comfortable estate.

Diuers other particulars are handled vpon occasion of these: but these fiue are the maine grounds of the whole that followeth.

Chap. I.

The moſt holy, the moſt zealous, the moſt abounding with grace among the children of God, are yet notwithſtanding ſubiect to mortality.

SAint Paul was a man of extraordinary note; a man endowed with many ſpirituall prerogatiues aboue others, yet did expect a day of diſſolution. The firſt generall Meditation.

Behold the Worthies, whoſe memoriall is bleſſed in the ſtory of the Scripture. Henoch is renowned for walking with God[a]: Noah for being an vpright man in his time[b]: Abraham for beleeuing[c]: Moſes for meekeneſſe[d]: Samuel for integrity[e], Dauid for being a man according to Gods owne heart[f], Iob for ſyncerity[g]. What ſhould I ſpeake in the particular commendation of all the Prophets, and of euery of thoſe gracious men and women, whoſe names ſhall be as an ointment poured forth, ſo long as the Moone endureth: and what was the period and concluſion of them all? was not the graue their houſe; made they not their bed in the darke; and when they had ſerued their time, did they not all ſee corruption? They had all but an appointed time vpon earth[h]: they all knew, they had here no continuing Citie[i], but that their habitation was to depart, and to bee remoued like a Shepheards tent[k]. What man liueth and ſhall not ſee death[l]? It is appointed vnto men once to die[m]. Duſt muſt returne to duſt as it was[n]. Euen the wiſe die as well as the ignorant and fooliſh[o]. Howſoeuer men differ here in the world, yet at the laſt, they all ſleepe in the duſt, and the wormes couer them[p]. Some mens iourneyes in the world are more ſhort, ſome of greater length; but in the end, the graue is as it were the common Inne, where they all lodge; where they muſt ſay to rottenneſſe, Thou art our Father; and to the worme, Thou art our Mother and our Siſter[q]. Some difference there will be betwixt thoſe that are found liuing at the very point of time, in which Chriſt ſhall come to iudge, and others that haue died before: for in them ſhall that ſaying be accompliſht; Wee ſhall not all ſleepe, but we ſhall all be changed[r]: but yet that change ſhall bee in ſtead of death; and looke of what vſe death is to the faithfull, of the ſame ſhall that changing bee to them; euen a meanes of preparing them vnto future glory.

Chap. II.

The quelling of Death by Christ, and his obtaining an absolute victory ouer the graue, is no preiudice to the former truth.

The remouing of that which might occasion doubt touching the former point.

IT is a true saying, and worthy our best imbracing, that Christ Iesus by his death, hath brought life and immortality to light: yet there are speciall causes for which it pleaseth God to leaue the bodies of his deerest children vnder the power of death to bee turned into dust. As, first, for the manifestation of his Truth, in that ancient threat, Thou art dust, and to dust thou shalt returne[f]. Secondly, for the declaration of his power, that by death he may translate his chosen seruants vnto life. Sinne brought death into the world, and God will shew his strength in this, that death shall be the vtter abolishment of that which first caused it. If there had not been sinne, there had not been death; and now by death, God will, that in His, the kingdome and being of sinne shall vtterly bee destroyed. The head of Goliah shall bee cut off by his owne sword, and sinne extinguished euen by that which it selfe first procured. Thirdly, the Lord subiects his children to this course, that by it they may learne the better to conceiue the greatnesse of the benefit, which by Christ they shall enioy. When they thinke vpon death as it is an enemy[t], they cannot but feare it: nature, affecting the continuance and preseruation of it selfe, cannot but abhorre it. Now then, if death being changed, be so fearefull, well may wee conclude, that it would haue exceeded in terror, if it had continued as at first it was: viz. a gate and passage into Hell. If the very sight of this serpent doe affright vs, now the sting is out, what would it haue done if that had still remained? Hereby then God would haue vs learne and gather, how deeply wee are bound to his mercy, who hath deliuered vs by his Sonne from so great a misery. Lastly, the law of death layeth hold vpon Gods Elect, to the end they may bee conformable to their head Christ Iesus. He was as the Wheate-corne, which except it fall into the ground and die, bideth alone[u]; death was his passage into glory, the same must ours be also. The way of the Tree of life, is kept with the blade of a sword shaken[x], vnder the stroke whereof wee must first come before wee can hope for any entrance into Paradise.

Chap. III.

The certeinty of Death ought to weane our affections from the world, and moone to a carefull prouiding for our after state.

Inferences deriued from the generall point.

SIthence it is so, that we haue here no continuing Citie[y], this is not the place of our perpetuall abode: we must remoue hence other-where, without all hope or possibility of returne hither, to liue here againe as we now doe. What more effectuall motiue can there be, to draw our affections from these earthly things? what better inducement to that which is termed an vsing of the world, as if one vsed it not[z]?

For what should wee striue so much for that which we cannot hold? Why doe we fasten our desires still closer vnto that, to the loosing whereof, doe we what we can, wee are still neerer and neerer euery minute? There is no better euidence of true Christianity, then a mans euen careless fashion of vsing the world, out of a serious thinking vpon his daily hastening to his end.

When a man checks himselfe suddenly, in the midst of his hot pursute of earthly earthly things with this thought, What doe I meane to tier out my selfe in this fort, who am but a stranger here, and a soiourner as all my fathers were [a]? why looke I not earnestly for that other Country? This is a good testimony of grace, according as the forgetfulnesse hereof, and the setling of a mans heart to the world, out of a putting far off the latter day, is an euidence of an earthly mind. [a] Psal.39.12.

Seeing wee must bee dissolued, let vs labour daily to ripen our affections to the day of our departure. Beware wee of engulfing our selues too deepe into the world, out of which we are still hastening, much faster then the most swift ships, or the Eagle that flieth to the prey [b]. Withall, the thought of our hence departure, should stirre vs vp to a casting with our selues vpon our after-state: Who thinkes vpon leauing the house where he now dwelleth, at the curtesie of his Lord, without considering where to hide his head, if the worst should come, that hee bee suddenly dismist? Wel-fare the vniust Steward, who being warned by his Master to make vp his accounts and to giue ouer his seruice; began to lay a plot for his entertainement, when he was gone. Hee had the reason to thinke, it would not bee good for him, who could neither digge, nor begge, to bee to seeke of harbour. And why was this Steward commended in this, but to be a patterne to vs, to make prouision before-hand, for an hiding place for the soule when death shall plucke downe that earthly cottage where it dwels? [b] Iob.9.26.

Oh what a wofull taking shall thy poore soule bee in, when it seeth Death come marching furiously, like Iehu, bringing such a Writ of Remoue, as cannot bee reuersed, and yet cannot conceiue nor imagine whither it must? Oh therefore that we could bee wise in this, to make such friends now in time, that wee may be receiued into euerlasting habitations.

What comfort to remember our translating hence, if concerning this particular (where we shall be next) wee haue no assurance? The common resolution of the world herein (all must bee as pleaseth God, &c.) alas, alas, it can giue but small contentment. This then let vs determine: Must wee leaue the world? then let vs not ensnare our affections with the loue of the world. Must wee all first or last bee remoued hence? Oh, let vs prouide for the time to come; for shame, let not a matter of so great importance bee put to a meere aduenture.

Chap. IIII.

To the children of God, Death is a finall discharge from all manner of misery.

The second generall meditation.

PAul tearmeth death a setting of him loose, I desire to bee let loose: and he vseth the same tearme other-where, calling death, the time of his liberty [d]. It is (as it were) the vnfolding of the net, or the breaking open of the prison doore, by which the soule being before detained in a kinde of thraldome, is inlarged. Lord now dismissest thou thy seruant, said old Simeon [e]. Hitherto my soule hath been detained so, as that whilest it was at home in the body, it was absent from thee [f], now I pray thee to giue me my discharge, that I may returne vnto that rest which I haue long desired.

[f] 2 Cor.5.6.

Saint Peter hath a phrase in this matter not vnlike: he calleth his death, the laying downe of a tabernacle [g]; as it were the quitting himselfe of a burthen, by the deposition whereof, the soule is after a sort eased and lightened. And then againe hee stileth it a Departure; vsing the same word by which Hereupon, they which die in the Lord are ſaid to reſt [i]: and of Lazarus it is reported, that he was conueied into Abrahams lap [k]. What is the lap of the father, or the boſome of the mother, but a place of quiet to the infant? It is worth the conſidering, what miſeries the children of God are freed from by death. This life is vnto them a very vale of teares; like to that wilderneſſe through which the Iſraelites iourneyed into Canaan, wherein they were moleſted many waies. The world is in a kind of profeſſed oppoſition to them; and like ſtrangers in an vnknowne Land, they receiue no ſmall diſcurteſies: Satan hath them in continuall chaſe, and hunts them, as Dauid ſaid Saul did him like a Partrich on the Mountaines [l]; and how doth the fleſh in them luſt againſt the ſpirit [m], ſo that many a time (to the great wounding of their ſoules) the good which they would, they cannot doe, and the euill which they would not, they are euen compelled to performe [n], then the which thing there can bee to them none ſo great vexation.

[q] 2 Sam. 1. 20.

Adde hereunto the griefe they conceiue by dwelling in Meſech [r]; the vexation that is occaſioned to their righteous ſoules, in ſeeing and hearing the vncleane conuerſation of the wicked [s]. Theſe things are matter of no ſmall ſorrow and burthen to the elect of God. What an heauineſſe was it to the good Prophet of God Ieremy, when he was forced to wiſh ſome cottage in the wilderneſſe, that he might leaue his owne people, and goe dwell out from among them, they being all adulterers, and an aſſembly of rebels [t]? To the holy ones of God this is no little preſſure: ſo ſmall a number as two graceleſſe people were a grief of mind to Iſaac and Rebecca [u]; and, What auaileth it mee to liue, (ſaid ſhe) if Iacob ſhould come in amongſt vs with ſuch another [x]? Now from all theſe ſorts of grieuances and burdens, are the ſeruants of God freed by death: all teares are wiped from their eyes; Satan hath done his worſt, and they are for euer out of his reach; they are euen in the Hauen where they would bee [y]. In ſtead of the remainders of corruption, and that law in their members rebelling againſt the law of God [z], they haue a full diſcharge from all poſsibility of offending God: and for the company of the wicked, they are ioyned to the ſpirits of iuſt and perfect men [a], looking yet and longing for that fulneſſe of ioy [b], which is prepared for them, but yet eternally and vnchangeably freed from whatſoeuer here aggrieued them, and ſolacing themſelues with the gracious preſence of their Sauiour. Thus is death a looſening to the children of God: here they be (as it were) tyed to a ſtake, to be baited by Satan and his inſtruments: death is the breaking of the chaine, and the ſoule eſcapeth as a bird out of the ſnare of the Fowler: the ſnare is broken, and that is deliuered [c].

Chap. V.

There is much comfort to Gods children, by the conſideration of the former point.

Comfortable matter drawn from this generall head.

THis cannot but ſweeten the remembrance of death, which is in it ſelfe full of bitterneſſe; and to the nature of man, the very King of Feare [d]. Let it be thought vpon ſimply, the torture of a feruent ſickneſſe, the pangs of death, the violent renting aſunder of two ſo well liking and and agreeing the friends as ſoule and body, I ſpeake of them naturally (the parting of whom, is like the ſundring of a louing couple, who haue liued together in a ſweet and amiable league for diuers yeeres;) the lying in the graue, there to embrace corruption, and there to become a prey to ſtench and rottennesse, who can but abhorre to remember theſe things? Who but will bee loth to come to it? Who but would bee ready to pray with Dauid when hee beholds Death approaching, Oh ſtay me a little [e]? Who but would linger like Lot when he was to bee gone from Sodome [f]: and like a malefactor going to execution, gaine as much time as he could?

[f] Gen. 19. 16.

But now this point rightly digeſted, baniſheth this feare, and euen breaketh the necke of it, as the Arke of Iehouah did the Dagon of the Philiſtims [g]. For ſee now what death is where religion is; euen as the aduancement of Ioſeph, from the ſtate of a priſoner, to be the Prince of the people [h].

Chap. VI.

The day of Death is a time of diſcharge onely to thoſe, which haue been ſenſible of the bondage and burden of their owne corruption.

MAny who haue no right at all to this comfort, are apt to lay hold thereon: and they which haue moſt intereſt into it, are moſt doubtfull in applying it. This therefore muſt be knowne; that the day of a mans death, ſhall be to him a day of inlargement, a day of finall diſcharge from all, both following and former miſeries; onely vpon this condition, if in the time of his life here, his being ſubiect to corruption and ſinne, hath ſeemed to him to haue been the greateſt bondage. Hee which hath groned, and mourned vnder his owne naturall corruptions; as the Iſraelites vnder their Epyptian Task-maſters; to him, to him only ſhall the day of death be a day of freedome. If ſinne be not now a burden to thee, if thou doeſt not many times lament and grieue in ſoule, to thinke how thou art carried captiue vnto euil; if thou doeſt not with ſorrow of heart feele how thou art clogged with corruption, and hindered by it from doing that good which thou wouldeſt and ſhouldeſt, certenly death will be the beginning of thy thraldome, thou haſt had thy greateſt happineſſe in this life: after this life, thou ſhalt be a perpetuall bond-ſlaue vnto Satan, in the kingdome of eternall darkneſſe.

Direction how to apply aright the former comfort.

A neceſſary conſideration this is, for thoſe who take delight in euill, to whom it is euen a paſtime to doe wickedly [n], who ſeeke rather how to ſatisfie, then how to ſuppreſſe their owne corruptions, and repute it a kinde of happineſſe to follow the ſwinge of their owne luſts: when they die, this ſhall be their reward, euen a moſt miſerable and endleſſe captiuity vnder Satan: him they haue ſerued in the luſts of ſinne while they liued; his vaſſals ſhall they be without hope of releaſment, world without end.

[n] Prou. 10. 23.

I may not then aduenture to promiſe my ſelfe any diſcharge from miſery by death, when my heart cannot teſtifie with mee in the ſight of God, that I feele ſinne and corruption to bee ſuch a burthen to mee, that in my ſincereſt thoughts, I account my ſelfe an happy man, if I might once bee freed. If ſinne be vnto me now no encombrance, death ſhall hereafter be vnto mee no releaſe.

Chap. VI.

The thoughts of the godly, in respect of Death, are very comfortable.

The third generall Meditation.

IN Paul, a man may see the true disposition of a religious man. So farre was hee from endeauouring to put death out of his minde; as who would say, it were a terror and a griefe to thinke thereon, that hee tooke comfort in remembring it: so farre hee was from fearing lest it should come too soone vpon him, that the delaying thereof, was irksome to him.

As the workeman longeth for the shadow, or as the hierling looketh for the end of his worke [o]; so did his soule for the day of his departure. Neither was it in any desperate mood that hee thus desired to bee gone; as if hee had been possessed with some such spirit as Ahitophel, when hee hanged himselfe [p], (for euen life also was a matter not vnwelcome to him, in respect of the good hee might doe to the Church of God) but his desire was vpon iust ground, as knowing the happines which awaited him: euen a Being with Christ, which is best of all. This is an argument that Pauls thoughts respectiuely to death, were very comfortable, when as that which man naturally feareth, he desired with all speed to come vnto.

[p] 2 Sam.17.23.

The like may bee seen in that aged Simeon, when hee did euen in a manner, begge of God to bee dismissed. And to assure vs, that his desire herein proceeded not from any kind of carnall or fleshly discontent, such as is in some men at times, when they are crossed in their designes, and matters in the world succeede not as they would (some spice of which weakenesse seemeth to haue been in that worthy Prophet Eliah, when in passion hee cried, Lord take away my soule [q]): to assure vs (I say) it was not so with Simeon, he speakes of a departure in peace, as an euidence of some feeling of peace betwixt God and his soule: and giueth his reason of it; For my eyes haue seen thy saluation. Hee had now as much spirituall comfort and contentment as in this world could bee hoped for; and was therefore now desirous (if it might stand with Gods good pleasure) to end his daies, and euen to breathe out his last breath in the midst of that sweet peace, which he felt in great abundance in his soule.

[q] 1 King. 19.4.

It was the blessing which God promised to Abraham, that he should goe to his fathers in peace [r]: which is to be referred, not only to the rest which God meant to giue him before his death from all his former trauels; but also to the comfortable disposition of his soule, towards the entertainement of his last departure. It is the priuiledge of the righteous, To haue hope in his death [s]: namely, first or last, to haue his affections calmed in regard of his end.

[r] Gen.15.15.

[s] Prou.14.32.

Chap. VII.

There are two speciall reasons, of this comfortable disposition of the godly towards their end.

Confirmation of the former Truth.

NEither is it thus with the children of God without cause. First, it fareth so with them, through the assurance which they haue of reconciliation with God, through Iesus Christ. How can this but breed quietnesse, when I am perswaded in my soule and conscience, that all cause of danger after death is vtterly remooued; and that God both is, and and euer will be gracious vnto me in his Sonne? What cauſe of feare is left, or can bee where this is? What occaſion or matter of perplexity? This was the ground of the Apoſtles confidence, hee knew that ſo ſoone as hee was gone hence, he ſhould be with Chriſt. He that felt himſelfe now in Chriſt, could not but be aſſured, that he ſhould bee afterwards with Chriſt: and how could hee but thinke contentedly vpon death, who by the eye of faith ſaw (like Steuen) heauen open, and Chriſt ſtanding at the right hand of the Father[r] ready to receiue him. Now if it bee queſtioned, whether the ſeruants of God haue this aſſurance? it is certaine, that ſooner or later they all haue it in ſome gracious meaſure.

[r] Acts 7.56.

It is ſaid plainely, that they which are Chriſts, haue the ſpirit of Chriſt[u], and within a few verſes, that, that ſpirit where it is, beareth witneſſe of Adoption[x]. Secondly, this proceedeth from the comfortable teſtimony of their conſcience touching their former care to glorifie God in an holy courſe.

[u] Rom.8.9. [x] verſ.16.

Hence came Pauls comfort; I haue fought a good fight[y]: this encouraged him to expect that crowne of righteouſneſſe, which the Lord reſerues for all which loue his appearing. Thus Hezekiah, though the ſudden newes of death ſomewhat appalled him at the firſt; yet herein he had comfort, that hee found vpon the examination of his by-paſt courſe, that hee had walked before God in truth, and with a perfect heart[z]. Neither is this ſo, becauſe Gods children build their hopes vpon deſerts, but becauſe they know good workes to bee the way[a], and find by the Scripture, that an holy life here, is the firſt fruits of a glorified life hereafter.

[y] 2 Tim.4.8.

[z] Eſay 38.3.

[a] Epheſ. 2.10.

Chap. VIII.

The obiections which are and may be made againſt this, are of no force to ouerthrow it.

The cleering thereof, by anſwere to obiections.

THere bee ſome particulars, which may ſeeme to impeach this truth. Firſt, we ſee many worthy perſons, who haue made a great, and euen an extraordinary profeſſion of religion, and who haue alſo liued vnblameably, yet haue had great feares in themſelues, in reſpect of death; yea, and that ſpecially at the time of death, and in their ſicknes, when (if euer) they ſhould haue made their comfortable expectation of it to appeare. Here firſt the rule muſt bee remembred, not to iudge according to appearance[b].

It is a feeble kind of reaſoning to ſay, that this or that man is vtterly without peace and comfort, becauſe in his ſicke fits, to the eies of the ſtanders by he makes no ſhew thereof. Certaine it is, that as a man may haue peace with God, and yet himſelfe for the preſent, by reaſon of ſome great tentation, not feele it: ſo he may either feele it, or be in the way of attainement to it; when as yet others that behold him, be not able to perceiue it.

Againe, it muſt be knowne, that the outward diſturbances, which doe many times accompany ſickneſſe, doe happen as well, and as ordinarily to the godly, as to the moſt profane; ſuch as are rauings, idle-talkings, and ſuch like. God hath made no promiſe that ſuch as ſerue him faithfully, ſhall be freed from ſuch fits. Did not Dauid ſay, that the Lords arrowes had light vpon him, ſo that there was no reſt in his bones? he did euen roare for the griefe of his heart[c].

[c] Pſal.38.2, 3,8.

Conſider further, that with the beſt of Gods ſeruants, Satan is vſually moſt buſie, when their end is neereſt. It is his manner to haue great wrath, when he hath but ſhort time[d]. Note it in the holy ſtory[e], how violent hee was againſt a poſſeſſed perſon, when he ſaw there was no remedy but hee muſt needs depart; depart; then he ſet himſelfe to doe as much miſchiefe as hee could. Now theſe laſt tentations, though they be extreame, ſo that the party exerciſed with them, may (haply) vtter out ſome words and ſpeeches ſauouring of diſpaire; yet they can bee no finall preiudice to the inward peace. Interrupt it they may; but that they ſhould vtterly quench it, it is vnpoſsible; becauſe the power of God is made perfect hrough weakneſſe[f]: ſo that in fine, the diuell doth then receiue the greateſt foile, when hee thinkes to get the greateſt victory. It is true then, that many a deere ſeruant of God, both in the time of his life, and about his death, is much affrighted with the feare of death; and is caſting many doubts and perils with himſelfe, what ſhall become of him, when hee is gone (and indeed it is ſcarſely to bee thought that his heart is vpright, or his eſtate good, that ſhall alwaies profeſſe herein ſo much confidence): yet this is certein, that the child of God (firſt) is perſwaded, that Religion and Faith, make death comfortable: then, next, hee ſtriues to thriue in Religion, and to grow ſtrong in faith; to the end he may thinke vpon Death with contentment, and embrace it with chearfulneſſe: he laboureth alſo with himſelfe to ouercome his naturall diſtruſt: he ſeeketh to furniſh himſelf with all helpes out of Gods Word, by which he may attaine to an holy reſolution in this point.

[d] Reuel.12.12

[e] Mark.9.26. Luke 4.35.

f 2 Cor. 12. 9.

In this courſe (no doubt) he hath many combats, and ſometimes he is indifferently acheered; ſometimes againe diſmaied and diſheartned not a little: and it is poſsible, that hauing had in his life-time ſome good ſetledneſſe, hee may ſeeme very comfortleſſe in his laſt act: yet wee muſt learne to meaſure a Chriſtian, not by that which hee apprehendeth himſelfe to feele at this or that inſtant, vpon this or that ſpeciall occaſion: but by that which he ſtriues to, and in the truth of his deſire reacheth after, and laboureth to attaine. God commands light to ſhine out darkneſſe[g]: and out of ſorrow, and anguiſh, and tentation, he raiſeth out for his the greateſt quiet. It may be their portion not to be fully ſenſible of that comfort which they affect, and aime at, vntill the very point of their diſſoluing: and they may then ſecretly and ſweetly feele it, when they haue no ſtrength in them, to giue thereof an outward teſtimony. It is a ſpeciall matter, to know how to conceiue of the manner of Gods dealing with his children. Hee giueth the ſame graces appertaining to life eternall to them all, but not to all in the ſame meaſure, at the ſame time, and after the ſame faſhion. Some man is able (like Paul) to deſire his diſſolution; ſome other againe, as it were ſhaketh his head, when he heareth this, and dares not ſay, that he deſireth it; yet he approueth the ſo doing in Paul, and deſireth to attaine to the like and grieueth at his ſcantneſſe: ſhall we not now leaue a roome of comfort for ſuch an one? Oh, God forbid. Some againe, neuer in his life, but hath been much affraid of death, his heart hath been ſtill euen ready to quake, when he hath thought vpon it; and yet when it commeth to the point, he is ſuddenly ſtrenghtened beyond expectation, to a laying downe his head in peace, and to a going to his graue as to a bed of doune.

g 2 Cor. 4. 6.

Some other on the other ſide, who in his life-time hath felt himſelfe well addreſſed, and hath ſetled himſelfe for his diſſolution; yet when hee commeth to grapple with Death, is wonderfully caſt downe: yea, ſo much, that his friends and well-willers, ſcarſely can perceiue any ſignes of his recouery. The concluſion then is this, that notwithſtanding many ſtormes of no ſmall perplexities, yet comfortable thoughts concerning death, are the portion of thoſe that are religious.

A ſecond doubt now offereth it ſelfe on this wiſe. If peaceable, quiet, comfortable and contented thoughts of death be the portion and the priuiledge of thoſe which feare the Lord; then we muſt thinke them all to feare God, that make ſhew of willingneſſe in this buſineſſe. Now if this bee true, it will iuſtifie many, who haue euer giuen ſmall ſignes of any great religion: ſuch ſhall wee

heare talking very confidently, touching death; Oh, they are ready for God when he is ready for them, and the sooner, the better, &c. and so, many such end their daies with great shew of much setledness. Aske them in their sickness, you shall neuer heare them in any other tune, but that they (forsooth) are most willing to be gone; and so doe they depart, without any manner of vexation at all; without any troublesome thoughts, or perplexed motions. Indeed, this which is thus alleadged is most true. But we must say to it first, that we are not bound to beleeue euery one that professeth such a willingness for death, and such a resolution to depart. Salomon saith of profane mirth, that euen in laughing the heart is sory[h]; and so no doubt, many a mans heart giueth his mouth the lye: so that when he saith, he is willing to die, yet, his owne soule knoweth well it is not so. Then besides there may be a kinde of desire of death, out of worldly discontent, as we see in many how pouerty and sickness, when it is tedious, and the failing in some other purposes, maketh them to bee euen greedy of their end. [h] Prou. 14.13.

The ground then of willingness must be looked into; whether to be freed of somewhat which lieth heauy vpon me, as an outward burden, or of somewhat wherein I perceiue how I offend God: there is the trial. Thirdly, outward calmeness is an ordinary consequent of some diseases, and is no signe of inward peace. Euen some very wicked men haue no bands in their death[i]. Fourthly, we must distinguish betwixt security and peace, betwixt carnall senslesness, and true spirituall quietness. Nabals death was quiet enough[k]; yet he were but a foole who would aduenture his soule with Nabals. [i] Psal. 73.4. [k] 1 Sa. 25.37.

We see many ignorant persons, many of heathenish and brutish conuersation, very quiet in their sickness, without any apparant feare either of hell, or iudgement; making no doubts, casting no perils, asking no questions, complaining of no sins, and so they depart. What shall we say? they are dead in peace and comfort? we cannot. When we compare together their ignorant, secure, benummed, hardned kind of life, with their drousie death, we must needs account these to be most wofull signes, though we must leaue the things which are secret vnto God.

Thus to cleere these two obiections: touching both wee may conclude with the Scripture; howsoeuer it fall out, yet it shall be well with them that feare the Lord[l]: but to the wicked, there is no peace[m]. [l] Eccl. 8.12. [m] Esay 57.21.

Chap. IX.

The power of religion must be laboured for, if we desire indeed that our death may be comfortable.

NOw seeing it is so, that religion begets in a mans affections, the liking and the loue of death, we may not thinke our selues religious, vntill wee haue laboured (and doe still) to gather as much strength as we possibly may to this purpose. First we must labour for assurance of reconciliation with God, by Iesus Christ. The vrging of the matter of this meditation to the right vse.

Vncertainty and doubtfulness herein, must needs ouerthrow all solide comfort. I am going out of the world, I thinke vpon it, that there are two places of receit for the soule, when it is seuered from the body, hell and heauen. I know I haue deserued hell: what comfort can I haue to bee gone, when I haue no assurance of my soules admittance into rest? I may flatter my selfe, and the diuell may teach me to beguile my soule with a vaine conceit: but that true comfort I should haue, it is vnpossible.

Secondly, we must make conscience of our waies, and striue to keepe our selues vnspotted of the world. This is that which will bring a man peace

at the last. Hee which goeth this way, though it be with much weakneſſe: with many falles, and ſundry imperfections, yet he cannot miſſe of comfort.

Who ſo would haue peace in death, let him labour to haue grace in life. Wouldeſt thou end thy daies happily? make conſcience then to ſpend them holily. It is but onely a matter of (it may bee) when we ſpeake of the comfortable end of an irreligious and ill-liuing man: but it is a matter of (it muſt bee, and it cannot but be) when we ſpeake of the bleſſed departure of a man, who hath alwaies endeauoured to keepe a good conſcience, both towards God, and towards man.

Chap. X.

The ſoule of man remaineth ſtill in Beeing, when the body by death is turned into duſt.

The fourth generall meditation.

THe bleſſed Apoſtle did not thinke by death to bee cleane extinguiſhed; nay, his expectation was to bee tranſlated hence ſome otherwhere.

Now, his body he knew well was to ſleepe in the duſt, and to ſee corruption: therefore it was that other part of him, which we call (the Soule), which he was aſſured ſhould ſubſiſt and remaine in Being ſtill, capable of happineſſe, by the ſociety and fruition of his Sauiour.

What plainer euidence of the vndying condition of the ſoule, and that God hath endowed it with immortality? The body returneth to earth, as it was: the ſoule liueth ſtill, and ſo ſhall for euer. Indeed there is a death to which the n Ezek. 18. 4. ſoule is ſubiect: That ſoule which ſinneth, it ſhall die [n]; and this death ſeized
o Geneſ. 2. 17 vpon all our ſoules in Adam, by vertue of that ſentence, In the day that thou eateſt, thou ſhalt die the death [o]: but this is a death of another kinde; namely, the loſſe of God, who is the true life of the ſoule; and ſuch an immortall death, the ſoules of all the damned ſhall bee iudged to. But that death, (the freedome whereof in regard of the ſoule is hence concluded) is that which brings an aboliſhment, or deſtruction of the ſubſtance; ſo that that which dieth, doth from thenceforth ceaſe to be, vnleſſe God bee pleaſed to manifeſt his power in reſtoring it.

Now, this coninuall Beeing of the ſoule, notwithſtanding its diuiding from the body, the word of God beares witneſſe to. The ſpirit returneth to God that gaue

Can this with any colour of reaſon, be vnderſtood of the Theeues whole perſon, conſidering his body was crucified by the Romans, and by them taken downe and diſpoſed of after, as they pleaſed? Sure, it was his ſoule, which ſubſiſted ſtill, though his body became a prey to rottenneſſe. Steuen prayed, Lord t Acts 7. 59. Ieſus receiue my ſpirit [t]; as knowing his ſoule was not ſubiect to extinguiſhment by the ſame meanes, by which his body was then to bee deſtroyed. Our Sauiours argument to refell the Saduces, denying the Reſurrection, is not to bee let ſlip; conſidering that to proue the certainty of the Reſurrection, hee laieth for his ground the doctrine of the ſoules immortality.

God ſaith of Abraham, &c. I am the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob; and this many yeeres after their tranſlating from the world by death. Now (ſaith Chriſt) they whoſe God the Lord is, muſt needs bee in Beeing; but of Abraham, ham, &c. God is the Lord (his owne words doe make it plaine) and therefore Abraham, &c. though they liue not here visible before men, yet they are aliue to God, and there is a part of them remaineth vnextinguisht, of which the Lord is God [u]. I know (saith Paul) that no death shall be able to separate vs from God [x]. Feare not them that can kill the body, but are not able to kill the soule [y]. What doe this argue, but that death as it betokeneth an abolishment of that which is, hath no power vpon the soule?

[u] Mat.22.32
[x] Rom. 8. 38, 39.
[y] Mat.10.28.

To these euidences of Scripture, might bee ioyned those reasons, which learned men, touching this point haue collected together; not a few.

First, it might be shewed how this Truth is engrauen as with a pen of Iron in Nature; in that in all ages, by men of iudgement, the immortality of the soule hath been acknowledged, and the persons still reputed (as it were) Heretiques, and euen detested as monsters amongst men, that haue denied it. Secondly, it might bee pressed out of the doctrine of Gods prouidence and iustice: For if we beleeue a God, by whom all things are disposed, and who measureth all his courses by a rule of Right; euen thence the immortality of the soule may be strongly gathered. We see here a kind of confusion (as may be thought) the Euill tyrannize ouer the Good; and men of the worst fashion, beare out their lewde courses euen with an high hand. How shall it bee beleeued that God taketh care of all things, and is iust to recompence euery man according to his deedes, if these particulars should still bee suffered to goe on? and if the soule should bee extinguisht with the body, when should this declaration of Gods gouernment and iustice bee? sith here in the World there is so little shew thereof, that euen good men (as wee may see by Dauid [z], and by Ieremy [a]) are sometimes much perplexed thereabout.

[a] Ier.12.1.&c,

Thirdly, it might bee to this end also vrged, how that amongst all men, euen by the very instinct of nature, there is a religion: which what is it, but a dependance vpon some God, accompanied with an expectation of an estate after this life? vntill which, that which is called Religion, hath not receiued that, which is chiefly aimed at: so that all Religion whatsoeuer, is vtterly vaine, and to no end, if the soule with the body should haue ioynt extinguishment.

Well then might that Epicurious and desperate speech preuaile, Let vs eat and drink, for to morrow we shall die [b].

[b] 1 Cor.15.32.

Fourthly, it might further be alleaged, how ill it agrees with Gods infinite Wisdome, to make the end of men and beasts alike, sith man is one of his most noble Creatures, and one for the seruice of whom the beasts and other things were ordained. What likelihood, that man should haue a priuiledge aboue other creatures, in regard of a command ouer them, and a power to vse them for his delight and comfort, and yet in the end should perish and come to nothing, euen as they? Nay, take away the hope of Immortality, the estate of man is made much worse then the beasts: in regard that man in this life is subiect to no more maladies and diseases then the beasts, and exercised with a world of cares, and thought-takings, which the other creatures here on earth are not acquainted with. Besides that, in this also his case would bee the worse, hee being assured of death, and liuing in an expectation of death; a thing which the beasts haue no manner of conceit of, nor can attaine vnto. Now, if man amidst all this, should be depriued of all hope of an after state, and should receiue by death an vtter abolition, better a beast then a man, by many degrees.

Lastly, many things might bee noted of the nature and workings of mans soule, to proue that it is immortall. That light of knowledge which it hath, by which it is able to comprehend in some measure euen God himselfe: that light of conscience, putting a difference betwixt good and euill, and arraigning it ſelfe (as it were) before Gods Tribunall, in the apprehenſion of an account to bee yeelded to him, euen theſe things might be made vſe of to confirme this point. But where Moſes and the Prophets cannot bee heard, other arguments may preſſe, but can neuer perſwade [c]: ſhould there come a meſſenger on purpoſe from the dead, to aſſure ſuch as reſt not on the Scriptures, that the ſoules departed are as yet in being, it would not ſatisfie, but they would ſtill deuiſe how to make ſome further queſtion.

[c] Luke 16.29

CHAP. XI.

There is ſpeciall reaſon why Chriſtians ſhould labour to bee well aſſured of this point.

The neceſſity of being well ſetled in the foregoing point.

THis point is euen the ground of all Religion. For if man did by death receiue a finall end, ſo that hee were neuer any more to come in Being, what ſhould let the giuing of the reines by euery one to his owne vnruly luſts? why ſhould not each man euen deuiſe and ſtudy with himſelfe, which way he might be moſt profane?

Beſides this, as there be certaine naturall ſeeds of Atheiſme in vs, tending to the putting out of that common light touching the being of God: ſo euen in this point alſo Satan will labour to corrupt, and to breed doubts touching the ſoule, and the perpetuall continuance thereof, after the diſſolution and aboliſhment of the body.

Salomon ſheweth in his owne experience, how a man, if we will giue way to his owne heart, when it is ſet on worke by the Diuell, may furniſh himſelfe with probabilities herein, for denying the immortality of the ſoule [d]. Man may thinke with himſelfe, that to the eye of man, there is no difference betwixt the end of a man, and of a beaſt: the life of both lieth in their breath; the death of both is by the expiration thereof; both were made of duſt, and both are diſſolued into duſt. Folke may talke of the aſcent of the ſpirit of a man after death, when the ſpirit of a beaſt deſcendeth to the earth and vaniſheth: but who euer ſaw it ſo? Or who is able, out of his certen knowledge to auouch it to bee ſo. On this manner Salomon ſheweth how the diuell may teach Atheiſme to diſpute, and to conclude thereupon, that it is in vaine to expect any after happineſſe, but to giue ones ſelfe to the full fruition of all earthly contentments, without reſtraint; looking for no other portion.

Hence hath it come, that in all ages there hath been ſome, who haue ſtood vp to maintaine the periſhing of the ſoule: yea, euen among the people of God ſuch haue bin found: as among the Iewes, it was the opinion of the Sadduces; they acknowledged no reſurrection, no Angell, no ſpirit [e]; and this laſt Age of the world, ſo fertile in other wickedneſſes, hath bin herein alſo fruitfull, affording ſome, who haue vſed the gifts of the ſoule, and that power of diſcourſe, and argumentation, with which God hath endowed it, to the diſprouing of the ſubſtance and immortall condition of the ſoule. Theſe turne all religion into a ſcoffe, imagining it to be no other but a wiſe inuention, for the keeping of the common people in ſubiection.

[e] Act. 23.8.

Others there are, who haue broached another opinion, not denying the ſoules immortality ſimply and wholly; but yet maintaining I know not what drowſie and ſleeping eſtate thereof, betwixt the time of death, and the day of riſing; thinking the ſoule in all that time, to taſte (as wee ſay) of neither weale nor woe, but to lie in ſome abſtruſe and hidden corner, like the flies in the winter ſeaſon, vntil the time that all ſhal be reſtored. Is not this point needful to be well well digested, that wee may strengthen our selues against these misconceits? When then we feele what power and working that which is called the Word of God hath vpon our hearts, and how mighty it is in operation, then let vs learne to relie vpon the authority thereof, and let one syllable of it preuaile more with vs, then a world of cauils produced to the contrary. What if an ordinary beleeuer cannot tell on the sudden, how to shift of euery subtle allegation, brought by some wily workman against this, or some other part of Gods sacred Truth; yet when by experience in his owne soule, hee hath found the truth of the Scripture in other things, let him stand stiffe and firme vnto it in this also. Wee will not teach men (like Papists) to bee wilfull, when they haue no ground at all, but selfe-opinion; or this, that (forsooth) it is the doctrine of the Church: but this we would bring them to, to rest confidently vpon the plaine euidence of the Scripture, whatsoeuer shall be argued or opposed to the contrary. As for example, when Paul, speaking of his death, speaketh so directly, that he looketh to be somewhere after, what shall I care for the cunning opposition of an Army of Atheists?

Dauid, though he haue but a staffe and a sling; yet, comming in the name of the Lord his God, shall be able to make his party good euen against the Goliab, armed throughout[f]. Now, as this point is behouefull for the setling of our iudgements; so no lesse for the quickning of our care, to make due prouision for the time to come. We must die; this we all acknowledge. Now, if (to die) were for euer to leaue off to haue any manner of Beeing, then there were no reason in the world wee should trouble our selues so much, as to cast for a place of entertainement: but in asmuch as when the body goeth to the graue, the soule is neither quite put out, nor falleth on sleepe with it in the dust, but remaineth still capable of some either ioy vnspeakable, or misery intollerable, what can concerne vs more, then to follow that course now, by which we may arriue at that Rest which is prouided by God, for the soules of those that loue his Name. Mee thinks the very light of common reason, should bind a man to the hauing of some more then ordinary care in this matter.

[f] 1 Sam. 17.

What comfort can be taken in vncertainty herein? especially, when as there is a certainty of dying first or last: so there is an assurance also, that a mans owne desert is the very quintessence of misery. Is it not a wonder, that men can so much delude themselues, as to confesse they must die, and that they know not how soone; and withall, that they haue deserued to bee damned, if God should deale against them in extremity; and yet should labour no more then they do, to be assured, that when their soules are departed hence, they shall be conueyed into Abrahams bosome, there to inioy that gracious rest, which the Lord hath prepared for his chosen? If it were in a case that concernes our outward estate, no man of any ordinary vnderstanding would be halfe so venturous. Oh that we should loue our better part so ill, as not to consider and prouide, where and how it shall be bestowed, when it shall be once discharged of this earthly Tabernacle.

Chap. XII.

The soules of the Faithfull presently vpon their seperation from the body, are made a partakers of an happie and comfortable estate.

The fifth generall meditation.

OVr Apostle is an euidence to vs, of the condition and state of all true Beleeuers; now he maketh no middle, betwixt his dissolution, and his being with his Sauiour; he speaketh of the latter, as the certen and immediate consequent of the former. No sooner should his soule bee from his body, but it ſhould be by and by with Chriſt: Death ſhould bee but as a doore opening vnto him a ſpeedy admittance into the ſociety and preſence of the Lord. There can be no colour of exception made againſt this collection ſaue onely this. It may be imagined, that Pauls caſe was ſingular; and that albeit it might bee his portion to bee thus ſpeedily vpon his death conueied vnto Chriſt; yet it cannot bee ſo with euery Chriſtian. But what true ground can bee alleaged, why Pauls caſe herein, ſhould not bee the caſe of all the faithfull?

Perhaps a Papiſt may ſay, Paul was to bee a Martyr, and to ſuffer death for the Truth; and we hold (ſay they of the Romiſh Church) that Martyrs go immediately to heauen when they die.

This may thus be anſwered: Suppoſe this were a certen truth concerning Martyrs, that they are ſtraight with Chriſt when they are diſſolued; yet who can ſay, that Paul was aſſured when he ſpake theſe words, hee ſhould offer his life for the cauſe of God? It was indeed not vnlikely, conſidering Paul was then in bands [g], yet abſolutely certen we cannot ſay it was.

[g] Phil. 1.12, 13

[b] Iohn 21.19. 2 Pet. 1.14. [i] Acts 21.11. [k] verſe 13.

Peter (it is knowne) had a reuelation from the mouth of Chriſt, by what kind of death he ſhould glorifie God [h]; but it doth not appeare, that Paul had any. Truth is, Agabus foretold, that Paul ſhould be bound at Ieruſalem [i]: and his reſolution was not to forbeare going to Ieruſalem, though hee were ſure there to ſuffer death [k]. But ſtill it is hard to ſay, that Paul, iuſt at the time of writing this Epiſtle, and theſe words, knew for certen that hee ſhould die as a Martyr, after ſome violent manner, and not an ordinary death in his bed. The generality, to wit, that Bands and afflictions remained in euery citie, hee knew [l]; but the particularity of the manner of his death, it cannot be prooued he vnderſtood.

That ſtory which reports his beheading at Rome, doth not bind vs to beleeue it, but giues rather cauſe of doubting it: in as much as it reports the crucifying of Peter the ſame day: which, by the many probabilities brought to proue him neuer to haue been at Rome, is made to be vnlikely.

Thus, though it ſhould bee pretended, that this immediate being with Chriſt after death, was his lot, becauſe a Martyr, yet could it be of no force to proue the ſingularity of his caſe; but for all that it ſtill remaines good, that in him we may behold the common ſtate of all Beleeuers. But to put it out of all queſtion, that Paul, in this comfortableneſſe of his eſtate after death, did not thinke himſelfe exempt from others, we may obſerue his owne words. When he had ſpoken of ſuch afflictions, as happen vnto Gods Elect in this life, in all which they haue comfort, ſo long as they faſten their eyes and thoughts vpon that eternall waight of glory which commeth after), immediately hee addeth (ſpeaking in the plurall number, as accounting himſelfe intereſſed therein with others) Wee know that if our earthly houſe, &c. be deſtroyed, wee haue a building giuen of God, &c. [m].

[m] 2 Cor. 5.1.

This then by Pauls plaine words is the lot of all true Chriſtians, that inſtantly, vpon the diſſolution of their earthly houſes, which their ſoules here inhabit, they ſhall bee admitted into a more excellent kind of dwelling, euen ſuch an one, wherein, being remooued from the body, they ſhall dwell with the Lord [n].

[n] Verſe 8.

Needs muſt it be acknowledged, that this place is ſpoken, not of ſome ſpeciall ones among Beleeuers, but of all beleeuers, euen of all, to whom God hath giuen the earneſt of his ſpirit [o], and that is a common fauour beſtowed vpon all the Elect [p].

[o] Verſe 5. [p] 2 Cor. 1.22. Eph 1.13, 14.

How plaine to this purpoſe are thoſe other euidences which may bee produced from the Scripture.

[q] Luk. 16.22.

Lazarus was conueied by Angels into Abrahams beſome [q]; that is, hee was gathered gathered to the ſoule of Abraham the Father of the faithfull, there to inioy the ſame quiet which he enioyed.

The ſtate of heauen is compared to a Banquet[r]: and that, of being in Abrahams boſome, is an alluſion thereto, conſidering the Iewes manner of leaning along at meate: according to which was that of Iohns leaning, or lying in the lap or boſome of our Sauiour[s]. Certaine it is, that Lazarus was in a comfortable eſtate: He is comforted (ſaid Abraham to the Rich man) and thou art tormented[t]. To the penitent Theefe, Paradiſe was promiſed, yea to bee enioyed that very Day wherein it was promiſed[u]; what reaſon to thinke otherwiſe of any faithfull Chriſtian? Why ſhould this remorſefull malefactor be tranſlated immediatly into Paradiſe, and not alſo euery one that ſo repenteth, and ſo beleeueth as he did. If it ſhall be pretended, that the torments which he ſuffered, being crucified, ſtood him in ſtead of ſome other ſufferings, which had it not been for that he ſhould haue paſſed before his entrance into Paradiſe; It may be anſwered, that by their owne doctrine (meaning the Papiſts, who it is ſuppoſed thus obiect) it cannot ſtand: becauſe that ſufferings in this world, which muſt preuent after ſufferings in their deuiſed Purgatory, muſt be voluntary, and vndertaken with an intent of making ſatisfaction vnto God. Now this Thiefe came to his puniſhment againſt his will, and had no thought of ſatisfying: and therefore that pretext cannot auoide the force of the reaſon drawne from that example. But aboue all, how pregnant is that ſpeech, Bleſſed are the dead that die in the Lord, they reſt from their labours[x].

Here is a Reſt preſently vpon death to all the faithfull; and albeit there is an endeauour to elude this worthy teſtimony, by reſtraining it to Martyrs; yet to any, reading the Chapter, it will ſoone appeare, that there is no ſhew nor ſhadow of reaſon ſo to limit it; Martyrs being not ſo much as once made mention of in that place: but it is ſpoken of all, who keepe the Commandements of God, and the faith of Ieſus[y], and then the Phraſe is of Dying in the Lord: which tearme if it be made peculiar to Martyrs, in whom ſhal we ſay that other Chriſtians die? But not to ſay ſo much herein as might be heaped vp, this is certaine, that it cannot be found in Scripture, that there is any manner of ſuffering, after this life ended, reſerued for thoſe, whoſe ſinnes in Chriſt God hath pardoned, and vpon whom he will beſtow the Ioyes of heauen.

God hath promiſed to thoſe that repent, that he will forgiue their iniquities, and remember their ſinnes no more[z], and that in Chriſt he remitteth freely[a]. Now what a ſtrange imputation of mocking ſhall it be to God, that hee ſhould be ſaid to puniſh, after he hath pardoned the offence; that he ſhould acquit of the debt, but not of the paiment? Wee are commanded to forgiue, as God doth[b]. If now it ſhall not bee ſuppoſed, that God when he forgiues the fault, he forgiues the puniſhment too; what a window, or wide gate rather, is opened for reuenge?

A man may pretend to haue forgiuen the offence of his neighbour, but he will ſtill (forſooth) runne a courſe whereby to puniſh him for the ſame; what kind of forgiuing ſhall this be called?

This then is a certainety, that God neuer requireth any ſatisfactory ſufferings of thoſe, whom he hach once forgiuen in Chriſt Ieſus. He correcteth ſometimes as a Father, but neuer inflicteth any thing as a Iudge. God hath ſo fully cleared his in Chriſt, that there is no reckoning behind, to hinder their immediat ioyning vnto Chriſt, when they are once remooued from the World.

Chap. XIII.

Two things are neceſſarily to be added, touching the former point.

An addition for the better vnderſtanding of the matter of the former Chapter. See Caluins Inſtit. lib. 3. c. 25. ſ. 6.

TO the end that which hath been ſaid, may be the better and the more profitably vnderſtood, it is meete to adioyne two particulars. The one, a reſtraint to our naturall curioſity; that contenting our ſelues with ſo much as the Scripture hath reuealed, to wit, that the Faithfull departed, reſt with God in Chriſt, we make no further enquiries touching the particularity of the place. Many trouble themſelues much in diſputing of the place of the departed ſoules, and the kind and quality of the glory they enioy. But it is fooliſh and raſh, to enquire further about things vnknowne, then God doth giue vs to vnderſtand. It is enough that the Scripture aſſureth vs, that Chriſt is preſent with them, and that hee receiueth them into Paradiſe, there to inioy comfort. Beyond this the Scripture doth not reach. Who ſhall be able to diſcouer the reſt, which God hath ſecreted? This is ſufficient to know that the ſoule is with God that gaue it, and in an eſtate of quietneſſe.

The other ſpecialty, is, that we muſt know, that the happineſſe of the ſoule is not complete, nor will be, vntill the time of re-uniting to the body. And there is and will bee, a kind of longing in the faithfull ſoules, for their ioyning againe to thoſe bodies from which death hath parted them; as conceiuing their felicity not to be perfect vntill then. That ſaying of Paul is worth obſeruing, Wee ſigh, &c. becauſe we would not be vnclothed, but would bee clothed vpon, that mortality might be ſwallowed vp of Life [c]. It proueth, that euen in the faithfull, notwithſtanding their aſſurance of going inſtantly vnto Chriſt, yet there is a kind of lothneſſe of leauing the body, and a willingneſſe rather (if it might ſo be) that there might be a preſent enioying of that bliſſe which is after expected, without any laying downe of the body. This is the ſumme: The ſoule is in reſt, but not in perfection of bliſſe, neither ſhall it be vntill the end of all.

c 2 Cor. 5. 4.

Cap. XIV.

The doctrine of Purgatory is but an idle fancy.

An vrging of what hath bin ſaid againſt Popiſh Purgatory.

WHere is now that Purgatory fier, for which the Church of Rome ſo much ſtriueth? It diuideth that Region which is ſuppoſed to be vnder ground, into foure roomes; the loweſt whereof is Hell, where the damned are tormented with eternall flames: the next aboue that Purgatory: the third, a certaine peculiar receptacle for ſuch Infants ſoules, as depart the world without Babtiſme: the fourth, was for the ſoules of the beleeuing Fathers till the death of Chriſt; and this is now ſuppoſed to ſtand empty. Now Purgatory is held to be of this vſe; To purge their ſoules by fier, which here in this life were not thorowly clenſed and cleered from thoſe ſinnes which they committed after their baptizing. This Purgatory is held to bee a place in vſe vntill the day of Iudgement; and the fier thereof, to exceed all ordinary fier: yea, not to differ any thing from the fier of Hell, but onely in this, that this ſhall haue an end; whereas that of Hell is vndeterminable.

Now, for the meanes of deliuery from theſe Purgatory paines, they appoint next the mercy of the Pope (who is able, euen at once, to rid it, if he would) the prayers and offerings of thoſe that are aliue, by whoſe inſtance and feruency, others others may bee either finally freed, or at the least much relieued. Hence haue ſtremed all thoſe ſeruices for the dead, of Maſſes, Dirges, Trentals, & ſuchlike: together with the large legacies giuen for the buying out of the torment there; though it is held, that ſeuen yeeres ſpace, is the ordinary rate of ſuffering for euery particular ſinne, for which there was not made in this life a plenary ſatisfaction. This is the briefe of Popiſh doctrine touching this; a point in their holding ſo materiall, that he is adiudged to be no Chriſtian that denieth it.

Strange and many are the fables and tales for the colouring of this opinion; it being a doctrine to the purſe ſo exceeding profitable: neither hath any one thing ſo much enriched Rome, as the feare of Purgatory.

When men are poſſeſſed with an opinion, of the vnauoidable neceſsity of paſsing thorow purgatory into Heauen, and when they are taught, the paines thereof to be ſo vnſpeakable, what will they not giue to be deliuered thence?

Who would not part with the very beſt of his outward eſtate, when hee is now to leaue the world, to the end hee might be aſſured, to make but a ſhort cut through ſuch a burning lake, as this is ſuppoſed to be, vnto the place of eternall quiet; and to be landed quickly in that flowry field, imagined to bee by Purgatory; in which the poore roſted ſoules are thought to bee refreſhed after their ended paines, before their entrance into Paradiſe.

Now, how agreeth this with the doctrine of the Scripture, maintaining, the ſoules departed, inſtantly vpon their death to be with Chriſt, and to reſt from labour? How be they with Chriſt, if they be in Purgatory? how doe they reſt, if they be ſtill tormented ſo vnmeaſurably? Strange it is, that a matter wherein the Profeſſors of it are ſo confident, and which is reputed to be little leſſe then an Article of the Faith, ſhould yet haue ſlender euidence from the Scripture. A wonder, that God, who in his Law of old, appointed ſacrifices, and expiations for all ſorts of ſinnes and pollutions (euen for leproſies, iſſues of bloud, touchings of the dead, &c.) ſhould yet neuer, that wee can find, ordaine any for the ſoules in Purgatory. The Beleeuers of old wept for the dead: neuer doe wee read that they mingled their teares with prayers for deliuerance from theſe flames. There was then no Church-treaſury, into which to gather the ſatisfactions of ſuch worthy men, as Noah and Abraham, to giue out ſome part thereof for the ſatisfaction of tormented ſoules.

Foure thouſand yeeres had the Church continued before our Sauiour came: and yet all that while, there was nothing tending to this doctrine. Neither in the ſtory of the Goſpell, nor yet in the writings of the Apoſtles, is there any ſhew hereof: no indulgence granted for the dead; no prayer for departed ſoules; nothing ſo much as to make it probable, that they are yet in torment.

Thus is Purgatory proued to bee but a meere fiction. No ſuch place, no ſuch fier for ſcouring of ſoules, as is there imagined.

Chap. XV.

The doctrine touching the comfortable eſtate of the Soule after death, and the poſsibility of being aſſured therof, maketh a maine difference betwixt true Religion and Popery.

BY that which hath been ſaid, wee may behold a materiall difference betwixt our true Religion, and that of Popery. An eſpeciall difference betwixt true Religion and Popery.

Ours, giues aſſurance of going immediatly vnto Chriſt. That, teacheth a man can neuer in this life be aſſured of ſaluation. Only this is he ſure, that in caſe he be ſaued, he muſt remaine for a time in a paine as great as helles; where, if the matter bee not well plyed by thoſe which are left here in truſt (as who knoweth what they will doe when hee is gone?) hee may lie frying many yeeres; perhaps till the day of Reſurrection.

How is it poſsible for a Papiſt to die in peace, who is not ſure of being ſaued; but yet ſure (if hee be ſaued) he muſt into Purgatory, there to remaine in an vnſpeakable torment, hee cannot tell how long? Oh that we could learne to ſee, and to value the worth of true Religion, which will enable a man to ſay to his ſoule: When I am diſſolued, I ſhall be with Chriſt, which is beſt of all. Would we know how wee may come to be aſſured hereof? Behold a Rule. Life eternall is begun in this world: he who would be with Chriſt when hee dieth, muſt labour to be with him while he liues. Where I am, there ſhall my ſeruant bee, ſaith Chriſt [d]. He muſt bee a ſeruant of Chriſt now, who hath a deſire to be with Chriſt hereafter. Now he ſaith withall; If any man ſerue mee, let him follow mee. Let vs looke what way of Faith, of Holineſſe, of Obedience hee hath chalked out vnto vs in his word, and in it let vs goe. This will bring a man peace at the laſt; this will guide vnto Chriſt, which is beſt of all. And well may it bee ſaid to bee beſt of all. For if Ieſus Chriſt be beſt of all, what can be better then to be with him? This indeed ſhould bee the end and ſcope of all our deſires: yea, albeit Saluation and Being with Chriſt, cannot bee ſeuered; yet we ſhould ſtriue to haue an eye to this, more then to any thing elſe whatſoeuer it bee. Though it be not poſsible either to find Chriſt in Hell, or to miſſe him in Heauen, yet a man ſhould labour to bring his thoughts to this, that hee would rather bee in Hell with Chriſt, then in Heauen without him.

An Aduertiſement to the Reader.

I Offer here vnto thee (good Reader) this ſhort Catechiſme, neither preferring it before other the like briefes of Religion, neither yet equalling it to any, but I willingly ſubmit it to thy iudgement, to place it in what ranke thou wilt. Onely this, if thou art diſpoſed after thou haſt viewed the Title, to looke further into the thing it ſelfe, then I pray thee by the way to take notice of this mine acquainting thee with the order and manner of that which followeth.

For order, it ſheweth the, firſt, what was the excellency of thy firſt making by the eternall Trinity. Secondly, it diſcouereth the depth of miſery, into which thou haſt plunged thy ſelfe, by communicating with Adams diſobedience, together with thy vtter diſability, ſo much as by a thought to deſire, or to deſerue thine owne recouery. Thirdly, it pointeth out Chriſt vnto thee, whom God the Father had ſealed[a] to ſaue his people from their ſinnes[b]. Fourthly, it makes knowne vnto thee the ſufficiency of his ſacrifice, and the meanes of applying it to thine owne ſoule. Fiftly, it teacheth thee whence to expect faith, what meanes to vſe for the attainement of it, and how to be aſſured that it is vnfained. Sixthly becauſe the end of the appearing of grace is, that we ſhould deny vngodlines[c], therefore it vrgeth vpon thee the neceſſity of good workes, that ſo thou maieſt bee neither idle, nor vnfruitfull in the knowledge of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt[d]. Seuenthly, foraſmuch as the way of the Righteous ſhineth, as the light that ſhineth more and more vnto the perfect day[e]; therefore alſo it calleth vpon thee to grow in grace[f]; and enformeth thee by what helps thou maieſt be led forward vnto perfection[g]. Eightly, leſt in this good courſe being encountred with vnexpected tribulations, thou ſhouldeſt be wearied and faint in thy minde[h], it fore-aduiſeth thee of the certenty of diuers afflictions; and teacheth thee both how to frame thy ſelfe to the taking vp of thy Croſſe, aud withall, what quiet fruit of righteouſneſſe to expect, by being exerciſed thereby[i]; In the middeſt of all, full looking for the bleſſed hope and appearing of the glory of the mighty God, and of our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt[k]. Ninthly and laſtly, the generall direction of holines and righteouſneſſe, it applyeth to particulars, both to thy daily carriage in the vſe of things indifferent, as apparrell, meate, recreation, reſt; and to thine

Now for the manner of it, I haue as neere as I could possible, in each answere kept my selfe to the words of the holy Text: Thou shalt finde me to haue failed in a very few: and yet in those if thou conferre with that place to which I referre thee, thou shalt finde me not to haue erred from the meaning of the Spirit of God therein. The reason of this course is, first, to acquaint thee with the language of the Scripture. Secondly, that each point may haue the more credit, when thy conscience shall see and heare, as it were, God himselfe speaking in euery answere.

Thirdly, that thou maiest acknowledge, that (which many in their ignorance will not beleeue) the Scripture is a rich store-house, affording directions for euery particular.

Now, where I haue supposed some word or speech to bee such as might breed thee trouble, not being rightly vnderstood, I haue in the margine (as it were) reached thee a light for the cleering of all such darker places: that thou mightest both know the sense, and acknowledge the certenty of those things[n], wherein my desire is thou maiest be instructed. This is all, whereof I haue to admonish thee: Proceede now, in Gods name, to the perusing of the thing it selfe: and the Lord giue thee vnderstanding in all things[o]. All that I desire of thee (by the way of recompence) for my endeauour to doe thee good, is, that thou wouldest striue with me by prayers to God for[p] me, that I may fulfill the Ministery which I haue receiued in the Lord[q] And so I commend thee to him, and to the Word of his grace, wishing thee an inheritance among them that are sanctified[r].

THE DOCTRINE OF the beginning of Christ.

Question.

WHo made man?

A. The Lord God [a], Gen. 2. 7.

Q. VVhat is God?

A. The Almighty [b], which is, which was, and which is to come [c], Reuel. 1. 8.

Q. How many [d] Persons bee there in the God-head?

A. Three: the Father, the Word [e], and the holy Ghost, 1 Ioh. 5. 7.

Q. Are there then three Gods?

A. To vs [f] there is but one God, [g] Cor. 8. 6.

Q. Wherefore did God make man?

A. For his owne sake [g], Pro. 16. 4.

Q. VVhereof was man made?

A. Of the dust of the ground [h], Gen. 2. 7.

Q. After what fashion did God make man?

A. In his owne Image, Gen. 1. 27.

Q. VVhat was this Image especially?

A. Righteousnesse and true holinesse. Ephes. 4. 24.

Q. Doth this Image of God abide still in our nature?

A. Wee all haue sinned, and are depriued of the glory [i] of God, Rom. 3. 23.

Q. VVhat is sinne?

A. The transgression of Gods Law, 1 Ioh. 3. 4.

Q. What was the first sinne by which came this spirituall nakednesse [k]?

A. Adams [l] eating the forbidden fruit, Gen. 3. 7.

Q. VVho drew Adam to that sin?

A. The old Serpent the Diuell: he was the murtherer from the beginning, Reu. 12. 9. Gen. 3. 1 Ioh. 8. 44.

Q. VVhat entred into the world thereby?

A. Death [m] came ouer all men, Rom. 5. 12.

Q. VVhy? there was but one man sinned?

A. Yet by the offence of one; the guilt came vpon all [n], Rom. 5. 18.

Q. In what estate are wee then of our selues?

A. Borne in iniquity [o], and the children of wrath, Eph. 2. 3. Psal. 51. 5.

Q. And what is belonging to vs?

A. Except wee repent [p], wee shall all perish, Luke 13. 3.

Q. Can we by no meanes remedy this?

A. No: for what can a man giue for recompence of his soule? Mat. 16. 26.

Q. What is then the onely name [q] giuen vnder Heauen, whereby we must be saued?

A. Iesus Christ, Acts 4. 12.

Q. VVhat is Iesus Christ?

A. A holy thing [r], borne of a woman, and called the Son of God, Luke 1. 35.

Q. VVhat hath he done for vs?

A. Hee hath giuen himselfe [s] for vs, Eph. 5. 2.

Q. Wherefore hath God sent him to doe this for vs?

A. That we should not perish but haue life euerlasting. Io. 3. 16

Q. How doth he bring this to a Therefore ought we to be chearfull in the seruice of God Psal. 100. 1, 2, 3.

b Able to doe whatsoeuer he will, Psal. 135. 6.
c To this agrees Gods name, I AM, Exod. 3. 14.

passe for vs?

A. By being our redemption, [t] and our righteousnes [u], 1 *Cor.*1. 30.

t That saueth vs from perishing.
u Thereby we haue life euerlasting.

Q. How is he our redemption?

A. Because hee hath bought vs with the price of his owne blood, 1 *Cor.*6.20. 1 *Pet.*1.19.

Q. How is he our righteousnesse?

A. Bacause hee doth present vs without fault in Gods sight, *Col.*1.22.

Q. How are wee made righteous through Christ?

A. As he was made sinne for vs [x], 2 *Cor.*5.21.

x Our sinne was imputed to him, and so is his righteousnesse to vs, which is also accompanied with sanctification, as a testimony to our soules of our discharge before God.

Q. How come wee to the knowledge of all this?

A. By the word of Truth, which is the Gospell, *Col.*1.5.

Q. What is the Gospell?

A. Glad tidings to all Gods people*, Luke 2.10.

So much is meant by (the people) THEIR is a word of distinction, compare Mat.1.21.

Q. To whom doe these benefits of Christ appertaine?

A. Euen to those which beleeue in his name [y], *Ioh.*1.12.

y Faith is the condition of the new Couenant

Q. What is Faith?

A. To know [z], that Iesus is the Christ [a], the Sonne of the liuing God, Ioh 6.69.

z By proofe of Scripture, and by comfortable experience in a mans own soule,

Q. Is it not in our power to beleeue?

a Besides whom no other is to be looked for.

A. No man can come [b] to Christ, except God the Father draw him [c], *Ioh.*6.44.

b That is, beleeue in him, Iohn.6.35

Q. What is the outward meanes by which Faith commeth?

c Worke faith in him by his Spirit, and of vnwilling make him willing.

A. The hearing of a Preacher which is sent [d], *Rom.*10.14,15.

d That is, who is endued with gifts to teach: for God sends no other.

Q. What is the inward meanes?

A. The opening of the heart [e], Acts 16.14.

e To listen, and to bee able to make a good vse of things taught.

Q. When doth the Word preached worke best with the hearers?

A. When it is receiued not as the word of man, but as it is indeed the Word of God, 1. *Thess.*2.13.

Q. What is especially to be cared for by those which thinke they haue faith?

f Because it is an easie and dangerous thing therein to be deceiued.

A. To proone [f] themselues whether they are in the faith or no. 2 *Cor.*13.5.

Q. What is the principall fruit of Faith by which it is known?

A. The purifying of the heart, Acts 15.9.

g The heart is wicked aboue all things *Ier.*17 9 & the thoghts of it are onely euill euery day, *Gen.*6.5.

Q. What is the surest note of a purified heart?

A. A desire in all things to liue honestly [h], *Heb.*13.18.

h A making conscience to auoid euery sinne.

Q. What is chiefly to bee vrged vpon those which beleeue?

i For the glory of God, & the example of others Mat.5 16. for the crediting their profession, Tit. 2.10. and sealing vp to themselues their election, 2 *Pet.*1. 10.

Q. What workes be good?

A. Such as God requireth [k], *Mich.*6.8.

k The will of God is the rule of all good:

Q. When are our workes called good?

A. When wee haue respect to all [l] Gods Commandements, *Psal.*119.6.

l Not seeking a dispensation for any one sinne, & doing good duties for the commanders sake.

Q. How many bee the Commandements of God?

A. Ten, Exod. 34.28.

Q. What is the briefe summe of them all?

A. Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soule, and with all thy mind [m], and thy neighbour as thy selfe, *Mat.*22.37.39.

m Thus is the Law of God spirituall, binding euen the most secret thoughts, *Rom.*7.14.

Q. Are wee of our selues sufficient to doe good workes?

A. No: our sufficiency is of God [n], 2 Cor.3.5.

n He worketh both the wil and the deed, *Phil.*2. 13.

Q. Are wee then saued by our workes?

A. No: but by grace [o], Eph. 2.8,9.

o For euen our righteousnesse is as filthy cloutes, *Isa.*64.6.

Q. Is not our salnation partly by workes, partly by grace? [p] p The Papists diuide our salnation betweene these two.

A. Then grace were no grace, *Rom.*11.6.

Q. What is further required of a Christian?

A. To encrease [q] more and more [r], 1 *Thess.*4.1.

Q. How

Q. How many waies be there of vsing the word?

A. Foure.

Q. What is the first?

A. A publike hearing with an honest & good heart[f], Luk.8.15.

Q. What is the second?

A. Daily searching the Scriptures, whether those things which we hear are so[t], Ac.17.11

Q. What is the third?

A. To let it be our meditation[u], Psal.119.97.

Q. What is the fourth?

A. To talke of it, Deu.6.7.

Q. What is the second meanes to edifie vs in our holy Faith?

A. Praying in the Holy Ghost[x], Iude 20.

Q. What is Prayer?

A. A pouring out of the very soule before the Lord[y], 1.Sa.1.15. Psal.62.8.

Q. Who is the only Mediator by whom we must pray?

A. There is one[z] Mediator, Iesus Christ, 1 Tim.2.5.

Q. Know wee how to pray as we ought?

A. No: yet Gods Spirit helpeth our infirmities[a] Rom.8.26.

Q. What is the best rule of praier?

A. That which Christ taught, Mat.6.9.

Q. What is the third meanes for our spirituall increase?

A. The vse of the seales[b] of Righteousnesse, the two Sacraments, Rom.4.11.

Q. What be they?

A. Baptisme, and the Lords Supper[c], Ma.28.19. 1 Co.11.23:

Q. How doth Baptisme strengthen our faith, and further our obedience?

A. When wee doe duly consider the nature and end of Baptisme.

Q. What is the nature of Baptisme?

A. It is the washing[d] of the new birth. Tit.3.5.

Q. Can the washing of the flesh saue vs?

A. Baptisme is but a figure[e]: it is the bloud of Christ which purgeth the conscience[f], 1 Pet.3.21. Heb.9.14.

Q. What is the end of our washing in Baptisme?

A. That we should be holy, & without blame, zealous of good workes[g], Eph.5.27. Tit.2.14.

Q. How doth the Sacrament of the Lords supper increase our faith?

A. Because it shewes the Lords death vntil he come[h], Co.11.26.

Q. How must this Sacrament be vsed?

A. Euery man must examine himselfe[i], and so let him eate of the bread and drinke of the cup, 1 Cor.11.28.

Q. What must euery Christian make account of, that holdeth this course?

A. That hee must through many afflictions enter into the Kingdome of God, Acts 14.22.

Q. Is it good for vs to be afflicted?

A. Yea, in sundry respects, Psal.119.71.

Q. What is one?

A. Before wee bee afflicted[k] we goe astray, Psal.119.67.

Q. What is another?

A. In our affliction wee will seeke God diligently, Hos.5.15.

Q. What is a third?

A. Affliction maketh our faith much more precious then gold[l], 1 Pet.1.7.

Q. How many sorts of afflictions be there?

A. Two: inward and outward.

Q. What be inward afflictions?

A. Satans buffetings, and the drewing by our owne concupiscence[m], 2 Cor.12.7. Iam.1.14.

Q. How doth Satan deale with Gods children?

A. He doth winnow them as[n] wheate, Luk.22.31.

Q. What is our duty therefore?

A. To be sober[o] & watching[p], putting on the whole armour of God, 1 Pet.5.8. Eph.6.11.

Q. What is our comfort herein?

A. Christ hath prayed that our

A. Where Christ is [x], there shall they be also, *Ioh.*14.3.

x In his presence is the fulnesse of ioy. Psal. 16. 12.

Q. What shall happen to the goates?

A. Euerlasting perdition [y], 2 *Thess.*1.9.

y They shall bee euer dying, yet neuer die.

Q. What must we doe till that day commeth?

A. Looke for it [z], and hasten to it, praying daily: Euen so; Come Lord Iesus, 2 *Pet.*3.12. *Reu.*22.20.

z Not putting it farre off, but still expecting it.

A direction for a mans daily cariage.

Q. What must our worke bee in the morning?

A. To let our prayer come before the Lord, and to praise his mercy [a], Psalme 88.13. Psal. 59.16.

a Which hee sheweth in our continuall preseruation: and thus to do, is to awake with God.

Q. What must our apparrell bee?

A. Such as becommeth those which professe the feare of God [b] 1 *Tim.*2.10.

b Therfore neither costly beyond ability, nor garish beyond modesty.

Q. What is the next to bee done?

A. We must follow our owne businesse with quietnes [c], 1 Thess. 4.11. 2 *Thess.*3.12.

c Euery man ought to haue an honest calling, Gen. 3.19.

Q. What must chiefly bee cared for in our businesse?

A. To walke with God [d], *Gen.*5.22.

d To remember his alseeing presence, and to seek to approue our selues vnto him.

Q. What must our speech be?

A. Gracious alwaies [e], Col. 4.6.

e Such as may be a witnesse of the grace of the heart.

Q. What things must chiefly be auoided in speaking?

A. Lying, swearing, filthines, foolish talking, iesting, railing [f], *Eph.*4.25.5.4. *Iam.*5.12. 1 Cor. 5.11.

f This is called rotten communication: bewraying a corrupt heart, Eph. 4.29.

Q. What company must wee keepe?

A. All our [g] delight must bee to the Saints [h] in earth, Psalme 16.3.

g Wee may and must shew to others a loue of pitty, but not of delight.

h Which make conscience of a holy life.

Q. What must wee doe when wee come to our meate?

A. Wee must looke [i] vp to Heauen, and giue thankes, Mat. 14.19.

i Lift vp our hearts.

Q. How many things must chiefly be looked vnto in our diet?

A. Three.

Q. What is the first?

A. That our hearts bee not oppressed with surfetting and drunkennesse, Luke 21.34.

Q. What is the second?

A. That wee forget not the worke [k] of the Lord, *Isa.*5.12.

k The end why the Lord giueth vs foode.

Q. What is the third?

A. That of that which remaineth, nothing bee loste, *Ioh.*6.12.

Q. Ought not some time of euery day bee set apart for spirituall vses?

A. Wee must redeeme the time becaus the daies are euill, [l] *Eph.*5.16.

l Make the best vse of our time.

Q. May not recreation be sometime vsed?

A. Yes, there is a time to laugh, *Eccl.*3.4.

Q. What kind of sports may wee vse?

A. Such as bee of good report [m], *Phil.*4.8.

m Such are none of those sports, which beget lightnesse and impudency, or stand only vpon hazard, being no exercise, either of wit or body. These haue the good report, neither of the cripture nor of the godly wise.

Q. How many things must bee looked to in the vse of our delights?

A. Two.

Q. What is the first?

A. That our reioycing hinder not better duties [n], 1 *Thess.*5 16,17.

n Paul ioyneth reioycing with prayer, to teach that mirth is euill when it hindreth prayer.

Q. What is the second?

A. That wee cause not our commodity [o] to be euill spoken of [p], *Rom.*14.16.

o Our Christian liberty to vse delights.

p As though it were the ground of licentiousnes.

Q. What is the euening duty?

A. To examine our ſelues [q] vpon our bed, and euery man to ſay to himſelf, what haue I done? *Pſal.*4.4. *Ier.*8.6.

[q] What hath been our behauiour that day.

Q. VVhat muſt we doe elſe?

A. Pray [r], *Pſal.*55.17.

[r] That the ſinne of the day paſt may be pardoned, and in the night following we may be preſerued.

Q. How many things make ſleep comfortable?

A. Two.

Q. VVhat is the one?

A. Honeſt labour. [ſ] *Eccl.*5.11.

[ſ] In the duties of a mans lawfull calling.

Q. What is the other?

A. A godly care to thriue in Religion, *Pron.*3.13.21.24 [t].

[t] Reade the place, and ſo much ſhall appeare.

Q. How muſt ſleepe be vſed?

A. Loue it not leſt thou come to pouerty, *Pron.*20.13.

The Magiſtrates duty.

Perſonall duties

Q. What is the principall duty of the Magiſtrate?

A. To beautifie the houſe of God [u], *Ezra.*7.27.

[u] To aduance true religion: and this belongs to euery one in authority according to his place, euen from the King to the loweſt officer.

Q. How muſt he carry himſelfe among the people?

A. As a Miniſter of God for the peoples wealth, Romanes 13.4.

Q. How ſhall he procure the peoples wealth?

A. If hee bee for the praiſe of them that doe well, and the puniſhment of euill doers: 1 *Pet.*2.14.

Q. VVhat kind of men are fit to be Magiſtrates?

A. Men of courage, fearing God, dealing truely, and hating couetouſneſſe, *Exod.*18.21.

The ſubiects duty.

Q. VVhat is the Subiects duty?

A. To bee ſubiect for conſcience ſake *, *Rom.*13.5.

* Knowing magiſtracy to bee Gods ordinance

Q. VVhat elſe?

[x] If they bee good, that they may be ſtrengthened, if euill, that they may bereformed.

Q. VVhat beſides?

A. Not to curſe the Magiſtrate ſo much as in a thought, Eccleſiaſtes 10.20.

Q. Is there any other duty?

A. We muſt not ioine with thē that are ſedicious [y], *Pron.*24.21.

[y] Theſe three latter duties flow from the former, of ſubiection for conſcience ſake: he that is ſo will pray, wil neither in heart curſe, nor in act rebell.

The Miniſters duty.

Q. VVhat is the Miniſters duty?

A. To take heed to his Miniſtery which hee hath receiued, that he fulfill it, *Col.*4.17.

Q. How may that be done?

1 By watching continually ouer the flocke [z], *Iſa.*62.6. Acts 20.28.

[z] For Satan ſeeketh continually to deuoure.

2 By beeing diligent to know the eſtate of his flocke [a], Pron. 27.23.

[a] This rule of Salomon may be fitly applied to this matter, ſeeing euery Miniſter is a ſhepheard.

3 By giuing attendance to reading [b], 1 *Tim.*4.13.

[b] He muſt be ſtudious, that hee may be full of matter.

4 By not being intangled with the affaires of this life, 2 *Tim.*2.4

5 By beeing inſtant in preaching the word [c], 2 *Tim.*4.2.

[c] With this muſt go adminiſtring the Sacraments as occaſion ſhall require.

6 By Catechiſing [d], *Gal.*6.6.

[d] The word in the Greeke ſignifies ſo much

7 By beeing an example to them that beleeue, 1 *Tim.*4.12.

Q. What is the puniſhment of a negligent Miniſter?

A. God wil require the peoples bloud at his hand, *Ezech.*33.8.

Q. How many things are chiefly neceſſary for him that is to be a Miniſter?

A. Two.

Q. What is one?

A. That he hold faſt the faithfull word [e], *Tit.*1.9.

[e] He muſt be a man of ſound iudgement.

Q. What is the other?

A. That he be able to exhort with wholeſome doctrine, and improue them which ſay againſt it [f], *Tit.*1.10.

[f] He muſt haue alſo the gift of teaching.

The Peoples duty.

Q. VVhat is the peoples duty in regard of ſuch a Miniſter?

A. The peoples duty hath fiue branches.

Q. VVhat is the firſt.

A. To obey and ſubmit themſelues [g], *Heb.*13.17.

[g] To the ſoundnes of doctrine and power of exhortation.

Q. What is the ſecond?

A. To haue him in ſingular loue, and to know him [h], 1 Theſ. 5.13.

[h] To reuerence him.

Q. What is the third?

A. To make him partaker of all their goods, Gal.6.6.

Q. What is the fourth?

A. To pray for him that vtterance may bee giuen him, Eph. 6.19.

Q. What is the fift?

A. To receiue no accusation suddenly against him[i], 1 Tim.5.19.

i It was a direction giuen specially to Church rulers, but may be applied to priuat men.

Q. Why must the people thus cary themselues to their Minister?

A. For three causes.

Q. What is the first?

A. Because hee worketh the Lords worke[k], 1 Cor.16.10.

k He is imployed in the gathering together of the Saints, Eph.4.12. Therefore they are their owne foes that withstand him.

Q. What is the second?

A. Because he watcheth ouer their soules, and must giue account thereof[m], Heb.13.17.

l

Q. What is the third?

A. Because otherwise he shall doe his duty with griefe, which is vnprofitable for the people. [m] Heb.13.17.

m He is bound in conscience to doe that which hee doth. m The Lord seeing the griefe of his soule, will punish those which caused it.

Housholde duties.

Q. What is the duty of the Master of the family for matters of Religion?

A. To command his household to keepe the way of the Lord[n], Gen.18.19.

n For this end he must haue religious exercises in his house, as prayer, catechising, reading the Scriptures, and must also bring his people to the congregation.

Q. What is his duty for outward things?

A. To make prouision [o] for those of his owne household, 1 Tim.5.8.

y With consent of Parents, and with care had of Religion.

The duty of neighbours each to other.

Q. What is required of neighbors that liue and conuerse together?

A. To consider one another to prouoke vnto loue, and to good workes: Heb.10.24.

Q. How must wee bee affected in respect of those things which happen to our neighbours?

A. Wee must reioyce with them which reioyce, and weepe with them that weep [z], Ro.12.5.

z Be ready to relieue their miseries as wee are able, yea, and in some cases aboue ability, 2 Cor.8.3.

Q. What is the benefit of a good neighbour?

A. He is better then a brother a farre off [a], Prou.27.10.

a Either in place or in kind affection.

Q. What is the best meanes to preserue good neighbours?

A. He that hath friends must shew himselfe friendly, Pro 18.24

Q. But how if there be iarring sometime?

A. Let not the Sun go downe vpon your wrath, Eph.4.26.

Q. Put case a man be daily prouoked?

A. Be not ouercome with euill, but ouercome euill with goodneſſe, Rom. 12.21.

Q. When a man hath many enemies, what is the beſt way to haue peace?

A. If a mans waies pleaſe God, he will make alſo his enemies be at peace with him [b], Prou. 16.7.

[b] Namely, vnles the Lord in his wiſdome know it to bee better for vs to bee exerciſed with the malice of euill men.

Q. How if a man line in a place ſo wicked that it is not ſafe for him almoſt to be familiar with any?

A. He muſt ſtriue to ſhine like a light in a naughty and crooked generation, Phil. 2.15.

A direction for matters of contract.

Q. How muſt we carry our ſelues in our dealings with men?

A. We muſt neither oppreſſe [c] nor defraud [d] any man in any thing, 1 Theſ. 4.6.

[c] By hard and extreame dealing, as rackings, vſury, taking aduantages, &c.

[d] By cunning and ſubtill courſes, as falſe weights, &c.

Q. What is the rule by which all our contracts muſt be guided?

A. Whatſoeuer we would that men ſhould do to vs, we muſt do euen ſo to them, Mat. 7.12.

The rich mans duty.

Q. What is the rich mans duty?

HELPE UNTO DEVOTION.

To the Right Worshipfull, the Lady Mary Stode, of Newingham in Deuonshire.

Madam, if I should vndertake a discourse of the worth and excellency of Prayer, it would bee much harder for me to keepe measure, then to be furnished with matter. How it is commanded by God, and commended by the frequent practise of all the faithfull, there is no man reading the Scripture can be ignorant: and what sweetnesse it brings to the Soule and Conscience, by hauing such a continuall entercourse and communion with the Lord, I hope your Ladishipcan witnes from your owne experience. This is all I will say on the behalfe of Prayer, that as it is one of Gods titles of honour to be stiled, The hearer of Prayers [a], so to call vpon the name of the Lord, is put for the whole duty, and as it were the life and substance of a Christian [b]. Prayer is that which seasoneth all other seruices which wee offer vnto God, it is an argument of a mans effectuall profiting by other exercises of godlinesse, it is a thing which the persecutors of the Saints, when they violently cause all publike acts of worshipping God to be intermitted, cannot abridge vntill life it selfe be extinguished. Much talking there is of prayer in the World: but if, setting aside mens lip-deuotion, enquiry be made into them, what apprehension they haue of their owne wants, what conceit of the Maiesty and presence of God, what knowledge and vnderstanding of his promises, what care (when they come to pray) to watch ouer their owne stragling thoughts, and to tie their hearts to that businesse of deuotion, wee shall finde such an vniuersall scarcity of these things, that it may bee safely affirmed, that albeit there be many kneelers and speakers, and repeaters of words, yet there are few true Petioners vnto God. Now among those few which make conscience to performe this duty as they ought, I haue obserued a great defect: namely, that for want of exercised wits of knowledge in the Scriptures, and especially of experience in the power of Godlinesse, and of a liuely sense and distinct conceiuing of their owne personall necessities, they are not able to be their owne messengers, not to doe their owne errand, in presenting the sacrifice of prayer before the Lord. They would pray with their Families, but they know not how: they haue a willingnesse vpon other occasions to become suters vnto God, but they cannot deuise which way to beginne. To helpe these, I haue lately taken a little paines: not with an intent to binde their deuotions to my words, (for who am I, that I should take vpon mee to limit the motions of another mans heart to a forme of my deuising?) neither yet to cherish any in this their insufficiency, to deliuer their owne apprehensions and particular cases vnto God: but that by seeing the order and course of Prayer, and by acquainting themselues with words and formes of speech agreeing to the nature of such an exercise, they may at last, like little children, who by creeping, and by the leading of others, learne to goe, bee able to performe this holy duty with contentment to themselues, and with comfort also to others vpon occasion.

[a] Psal. 65. 2.
[b] 1 Cor. 1. 2. 2 Tim. 2. 19.

Hauing

Having ended this little labour; I emboldened my selfe to offer it to your Ladiship: not so much for your owne need (who I hope are able with Hannah, out of the abundance of inward feeling, to powre out your Soule before the Lord[c]:) but as a pledge of my loue, and as a witnesse of my thankfulnesse vnto God for his graces in you. And so leauing this Manuel with you, as a memoriall of that respect which your Ladiship may many wayes challenge from me, I pray God in Christ to keepe you by his mighty power, through faith, vnto saluation.

SAM. HIERON.

TO

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER.

I Am not ignorant (good Reader) that set formes of prayer are very distastfull vnto many: they are adiudged to be kinde of confining & limiting of Gods Spirit. And some which do allow them a lawfull vse in the Congregation, doe yet not so well approue them for priuate purposes. For mine owne part, as I fauour neither their fondnesse, who scarce account it praying, vnlesse it be by a Booke; nor their carelesnesse, who labour not to attaine to an ability of commending their personall occasions (euen in words of their owne conceiuing) vnto God: so I could neuer see good reason, why platformes of direction for those, who are yet but beginners in this spirituall exercise of Prayer, should be thought any way conuenient or needlesse amongst Christians. There is a great deale more art in the carriage of a sute to bee put vp vnto God (especially when a man is to bee the mouth of others, as in a Family, or in visiting the sicke, or the like occasion) then euery one, though perhaps he haue some good feeling and vnderstanding in Religion, can at the first attaine vnto. Neither is it (as is pretended) any straightning or bounding of Gods Spirit; but a meanes rather of quickning and stirring vp of the Spirit of him that prayeth, when he shall see the necessity of of bemoning some corruptions, or of crauing some graces, or of giuing thankes for some blessings receiued, which himselfe did not so much as thinke vpon before. Besides, that we may, according as his spirituall feeling shall encrease, enlarge any particular request, if it be not so full to his present case, or insert his owne more personall concernements, which he who went about onely to giue him some generall directions, was not able to coniecture.

And touching that which I doe here offer to the World, I professe sincerely, that in my first vndertaking it, I had no meaning to take vpon mee to set downe lawes for other mens deuotions, or to prescribe any man in his particular occasions of going to the Lord, to speake so or so, and no otherwise, as though I would reduce all supplications to be put vp into the high Court of Heauen, vnto a proportion, and scantling of my conceiuing: He shall wrong me very much, whosoeuer shall so imagine: Onely this was it I intended and thought; I saw the ignorance of that place, where I liued: I had often and earnestly commended Prayer: I had many times, with the best reasons I could, perswaded the vse of it in priuate Families: I perceiued withall in some, a better inclination to it, then power to performe it. Hereupon I thought with my selfe, that as familiar Catechismes and plaine Treatises haue their vse, being ioyned to the publike Ministry, to bring those, which are yet but Babes in Christ [a], vnto knowledge; so also some helpe in this kind might be good, to beget feeling, and to be a guide to those which haue as yet but stammering and lisping tongues, vntill they shall bee able, hauing tongues as fined filuer [b], plainly and distinctly to speake the language of Canaan [c]. For this cause I gaue my Booke no greater title then A Helpe vnto Deuotion, because I would not be mistaken, or thought to intend any thing else, but onely to further their religious purpose, who would faine learne to pray orderly and effectually vnto God. And in this course I am sure, that I am not without exam- ples. Worthie Diuines in these latter times haue bestowed their pains this way: Master Iohn Bradford, Master Edward Dearing, Master Henry Smith, Master R. Rogers, (page 431. of his seuen Treatises) Master Brinsley (in the second part of The true Watch) and others whom I need not name.

I might tell thee of the words of prayer: which the Prophet bade the people to take vpon them, and to say vnto the Lord, of the forme which Habakuck was wont to vse for the ignorances of the people: Of the many Psalmes which are stiled; Psalmes of instruction, not only because the matter was of vse to instruct Christians, but also because the very mould it self might remaine as a help in Praier for those, who should at any time fal into the like occasion, which the Enditer of the particular Psalmes was exercised with. These and other things I might insist vpon: But I find a title giuen to one Psalme, which shall be vnto me in stead of many proofes: Ps. 102. It is this: A praier of the afflicted when he shall be in distresse, and poure forth his meditation before the Lord. Which Psalme, though ayming perhaps at some more speciall affliction, in which the seruants of God then were; yet inasmuch as it is reported in the title to be for the generall vse of an afflicted person (as indeed it is excellent for such an occasion) it seemeth to me abundantly to satisfie all those who shall doubt of the conueniencie of such set directions.

Thus hauing acquainted thee with my whole intent, and laboured (least thou shouldest be forestalled by any mis-opinion) to shew warrant for my doing, I commend my endeauours to thee, and thee to the Lord, praying him to furnish thee with the Spirit of supplication, that thou maiest be ful of holy matter, and so abounding with gracious speech, that thine ability to vtter thine owne feeling vnto God, may bring much sweetnesse to thy soule, and no lesse comfort to others, if thou be at any time occasioned to speak in the name of others, to his Maiesty: Adding this withall, that if thou ayme not at this grace, but content thy selfe still to speake no other words but such as are put into thy mouth, thou wrongest thy selfe greatly, and all those who haue laboured to bring thee vnto more perfection. Farewell.

Thine in the Lord,

THE neceſſity of Preparation may appeare many wayes.

1 By our Sauiours platforme, in which the Petitions are not ſet downe abruptly, but a ſolemne Preface is prefixed, like a faire porch to a beautifull houſe; to teach vs to frame our affections, and ſet them in due order, before we draw neere to ſpeake vnto the Lord.

2 By expreſſe commandement. Be not raſh with thy mouth, nor let thine heart be haſtie to vtter a thing before God. It is a dangerous thing, ſo babble out vndigeſted and vnadviſed words in his eares. [a] Eccleſ. 5.1.

3 By example. O God (ſaith Dauid) my heart is prepared, ſo is my tongue, [b] &c. It was the difference betwixt him and hypocrites, that he waſhed his hands in innocency, before he would compaſſe the Altar [c].

[b] Pſal. 108.1.

4 By due proportion from outward things. If a man goe before a Prince, or a man of authority, he will thinke vpon his carriage, he will ſet his tale in order, and meditate what to ſay: how much more then ſhould we prepare when we come to ſpeake to God, who is higher then the Kings of the earth? [c] Pſal. 26.6.

2. The manner of preparation ſtands, in { Praying. Meditating.

1 Praying. Maruell not that I make Praying a preparatiue to Prayer. A little eating prepareth a weake ſtomacke, and ſetteth an edge vpon the appetite to eate more; ſo in Prayer: Therefore Dauid before prayer, prayed; Let my praier be directed in thy ſight as incenſe, &c. Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, and keep the doore of my lips [d]. A lifting vp of the ſoule to heauen, with a deſire of direction, is a good preparatiue.

2 Meditating vpon three things: 1 Gods Maieſty. 2 Gods promiſes. 3 Our owne vileneſſe. The reaſon is this: There are three things chiefly requiſite in praier, which are helped by this threefold meditation. 1 Humility and lowlineſſe of ſpirit, begotten by the due conſideration of Gods Maieſty; 2 Confidence and aſſurance to be heard, bred by the knowledge of Gods promiſes: 3 Feruencie of affection ſpringing from the apprehenſion of our owne vileneſſe. [d] Pſ. 141.2,3.

That the Maieſtie of God muſt be thought vpon, is proued. Eccl. 5. He that ſpeakes to God, is bidden to remember, that God is in Heauen.

That the promiſes muſt be muſed vpon, appeares, 2 Sam. 7.27. Thou haſt reuealed vnto thy ſeruant, &c. Therefore hath thy ſeruant been bold to pray, &c. Geneſis 32.11, 12. I pray thee deliuer me, &c. for thou ſayedſt, I will ſurelie doe thee good. What courage can wee haue to goe to the throne of grace, without the warrant of promiſe?

That our owne vileneſſe muſt be remembred, it is euident, Gen. 32.10. I am leſſe then the leaſt of thy mercies, Ezra 9.6. O my God, I am aſhamed and confounded to lift vp mine eyes, &c. for our iniquities are increaſed, &c. Thus then prepare thy ſelfe to pray: Exerciſe thy thoughts before hand vpon theſe three things: 1. what a preſence full of maieſtie thou muſt come into: 2. What ſweet promiſes he hath made to encourage thee: 3. What need thou haſt to flie to his mercie. This will furniſh thee with humility tempered with cheerefulneſſe, and both whetted on and quickned by the feeling of thy owne neceſsity.

To helpe thy meditations of Gods Maieſty, remember Pſalme 104. 1. O Lord my God, thou art exceeding great, thou art clothed with glory and honour,&c. 1 *Tim.*6.16. Who onely hath immortality,and dwelleth in a light that none can attaine vnto,&c. and ſuch like places.

To ſupply thee with words of promiſe, conſider Pſalme 50.15. Call vpon me,&c.ſo will I deliuer thee,&c. *Iſa.*65. 24. Yea, before they call, I will anſwer, and whiles they ſpeake,I will heare. Iohn 14.13. Whatſoeuer you aske in my name, that will I doe: and many ſuch teſtimonies.

*To bring thee to ſee thine owne vileneſſe, ponder Iob.*15.16. Man drinkes iniquity like water. *Chap.*25.4. He cannot be cleane that is borne of a woman. *Pſal.*51.5. I was borne in iniquity, *&c. Rom.*7.18. I know that in my fleſh there dwelleth no good thing.

Gather account of thy particular ſinnes, as Iob *did, Chap.*9.3. View thy ſelfe often in the glaſſe of the Law

A Prayer to be prepared and enabled to pray.

Almightie and eternall God, the alone giuer and bestower of all good, without whose speciall enabling, no man hath power to performe any spirituall duty as hee ought: I beseech thee bee pleased to prepare my heart, and to quicken my affections to this holy seruice of calling vpon thy Name: Make me to remember both who thou art, into whose presence I am come, and with whom I haue to doe, euen a God exceeding great, clothed with glorie and honour: and what I my selfe am, euen dust and ashes, and a most vile and vnworthy sinner. By this, I pray thee to strike an awfull reuerence in my soule, that I may watch ouer my thoughts, and take good heed to my behauiour here before thee, lest my presumption and want of due respect vnto thy Maiesty, should turne my prayers into sinne. Giue mee a liuely sense of mine owne personall wants, and a distinct vnderstanding, both of those good things which I haue receiued from thee, and of those rich mercies which in thy word thou hast promised to bestow: that so I may bee furnished with matter, both for request, and for thankefulnesse, and may become able by degrees out of mine owne feeling, to poure out my soule abundantly before thee. Alwaies let thy Spirit of supplication bee with mee, to assist mee, to sanctifie my thoughts, to guide my tongue, and to helpe mine infirmities.

Indue mee with faith in thy promises, that I may come boldly vnto thy throne of grace, and may learne both to trust vnto, and awaite for thy saluation: not daring to limit thy Maiesty, or to prescribe vnto thee, how or when to supply me,

Let this exercise of praying be a delight vnto mee, make mee constant in the vse of it, knowing what speedy accesse the prayers of Faith haue into thy presence, and what a priuiledge it is for a mortall man, to haue free liberty of vnfolding his wants, and laying open his desires and griefes before the immortall God. Euer (O Lord) let the end of my praying bee thy glorie, and let me make conscience to bee still as plentifull in thanksgiuing, for mercies receiued, as I shall bee earnest in suing for those good things I stand in need of. Grant me these graces, for my only Sauiour and Mediators sake Iesus Christ. Amen.

A morning Prayer for priuate Families.

MOst gracious God and louing Father, in all humility of soule, and vnfained acknowledgment of our bounden duty, we present our selues here before thy throne of Maiesty and glory, desiring in some measure to shew our thankfulnesse for the multitude of thy mercies heaped vpon vs thy most vnworthy seruants. By thee at the first we were fearefully and wonderfully made, thou couerdst vs in our Mothers wombe, thou gauest vs the shape of men and women, when it was free for thee to haue equalled vs vnto thy basest creatures: since, it hath pleased thee to preserue vs, to watch ouer vs, and to gard vs by thy prouidence, to open thy hand, and to repleniish vs with good things, to giue vs food and raiment, health, liberty and peace. O Lord, thy compassions faile not, but they are renewed euery morning: euen in this night past we haue receiued an apparant euidence of thy loue. For whereas, for the ſinnes committed the day before, thou mighteſt euen in the dead of ſleepe haue taken our ſoules from vs, and ſo ſuddenlie haue brought vs to our account, it hath been thy pleaſure yet to ſpare vs: and not onely ſo, but to refreſh vs with quiet reſt, and to bring vs in ſafetie to the beginning of this day. Grant (O Lord) we pray thee, that the ordinarie vſe of theſe thy kindneſſes, may not make vs the leſſe to eſteeme them: but to affect our hearts with the apprehenſion of them; that wee may learne to admire thy mercie, which dealeſt ſo graciouſlie which ſuch vnthankfull perſons as wee haue alwaies been, and may euen binde our ſelues to ſtriue to ſhew all obedience and dutie to thee, which doſt ſo enlarge thy goodneſſe vnto vs. But chiefly (O Lord) raiſe vp (wee beſeech thee) our hearts and our affections from theſe outward fauours (the leaſt of which notwithſtanding is greater then the beſt of our deſeruings) and draw vs to the ſerious conſideration of thoſe bleſſings, which doe more directly concerne a better life. Make vs thankfullie mindfull of the grace of election, by which thou freely chooſeſt vs in Chriſt to bee veſſels of mercie, before wee were: of thy ſending thy Sonne out of thine own boſome, being in thine own forme, to take on him the forme of a ſeruant, and to become obedient vnto the death, euen the death of the croſſe for our ſakes: of thy calling vs out of the kingdome of darknes by the power of the Goſpell preached: of thy ſhining in our hearts by the enlightning of thy Spirit: of quickning vs when we were dead in treſpaſſes and ſinnes: of thy begetting vs againe vnto a liuely hope: of the firſt fruits of the Spirit, and of that earneſt of our inheritance which thou haſt giuen vs: of the daily free vſe and liberty of thy word, whereby that great myſterie of godlineſſe, yea euen thy whole counſell is clearly reuealed to vs.

O Lord teach vs to conſider what miſerable creatures wee were in our ſelues, and what a feareful caſe we had yet been in, if thou hadſt left vs to our ſelues: that ſo the view of theſe vnſpeakable and vndeſerued fauors may euen rauiſh our ſpirits, and ſo poſſeſſe our hearts, that we may conſtantly reſolue, henceforth to giue vp our ſelues as a liuing ſacrifice, holy and acceptable vnto thee, and to deuote all our powers both of ſoule and body to the glory and honour of thy Name.

And (Lord) enable vs heereunto we pray thee: for we are not ſufficient of our ſelues to thinke any thing, as of our ſelues, we are naturally reprobate to euery good worke. Open therefore the eies of our mind, that we may ſee what is good, and what thou requireſt of vs: teach vs to make thy word our delight and counſellor: that by it wee may be informed in thy paths: put thy ſpirit within vs, and cauſe vs to walke in thy ſtatutes: let our eares continuallie heare a word behind vs, ſaying, This is the way: giue vs hearts of fleſh, yeelding, and pliable affections: ſubdue the crookednes of our nature, and bring it vnder the obedience of Chriſt. And when thou haſt entred vs into a good courſe, vphold vs therein, by thy all-ſufficient grace, ſtabliſh vs in euery word and good worke, fill vs with the fruits of righteouſneſſe, let vs not bee idle nor vnfruitfull in our profeſsion: but grant that wee may be euen rich in good workes, and ſo may adorne the doctrine of thee our Sauiour in all things, making the aduerſaries of thy truth aſhamed, when they ſhall haue nothing concerning vs to ſpeake euill of. And ſhield vs (O Lord) we earneſtlie intreat thee, againſt the malice rage and furie of the Diuell: giue vs wiſdome to diſcerne his policies, and courage to reſiſt euen his moſt firie aſſaults: make vs wiſe againſt the beguiling entiſements of this ſinfull world: let vs not be carried away with the ſtreame of theſe corrupt times: harden our faces againſt the reproches and enmities of euill men: ſuffer vs not to bee wearied, nor to faint in our mindes for any tribulations; ſanctifie vnto vs euery affliction, that it may be a meanes to purge out our corruptions. Draw our minds from the loue of this preſent World, teach vs to vſe it as if we vſed it not, grant that we may euer remember, that we haue here no continuing City: that ſo wee may ſeeke for that Kingdome that cannot bee ſhaken, but is eternall in the Heauens: Cauſe vs to depend vpon thy prouidence, and to caſt our care and burden vpon thee: aſſuring our ſelues that thou which haſt giuen vs Chriſt, canſt not but with him giue vs all things alſo.

And (Lord) if at any time wee fall by occaſion into a fault (as who are we that wee ſhould preſume? put vnder thy hand we beſeech thee, deliuer vs out of the mire that wee ſinke not, let not ſinne ſwallow vs vp, let it not grow ſtrong vpon vs, leſt wee periſh.

Enable vs vnto diligence, and faithfulneſſe in our ſeuerall callings, teach vs to lift vp our hearts to thee for a bleſsing vpon our endeauours, and to remember that we are alwaies in thy preſence: that ſo wee may ſtudy to walke with thee, and to approue our very thoughts vnto thee. Giue vs a ſober vſe of thy Creatures: make vs readie to reach out our hands vnto the wants of others: beget in vs a godly iealouſie ouer our ſelues, that we walke circumſpectly, taking heed to our ſelues in our eatings, in our apparrell, in our company, in our recreations, often conſidering our waies, and labouring quickly after euery errour, to turne our feete into thy Teſtimonies. And (Lord) cauſe vs to bee earneſtly mindefull of the eſtate of thy whole Church; bleſſe all Kingdomes and States profeſsing thy truth, bee gracious, eſpecially to this our Kingdome, forgiue the crying ſinnes of the times, continue thy Goſpell, diſappoint the hope and expectation of all Papiſts, let them periſh as many as haue euill will at Sion, diſcouer Antichriſt more and more, enlarge the territories of thy Church, ſtabliſh thy kingdome of grace, haſten the Kingdome of glory.

Heape thy bleſsings vpon our gracious King, make him a further Inſtrument of much good vnto thy choſen: proſper the worke of thine owne hands begun in the young Prince: ſhew mercy to the reſt of the royall Progenie. Bee gracious to the Councell, to the Court, the Nobles, the Gentrie of the Realme, grant that they may all aime at the honouring of thee, by whom they haue receiued honour amongſt men. Be with the Magiſtracy and Miniſtry of the Realme; make thy word to grow by the labors of thoſe whom thou haſt appointed to the ſeruice of thy Church: Containe the ſubiects in their due obedience to authority, bring to nought all tumultuous and rebellious practiſes: comfort all thine afflicted ſeruants, refreſh them with a ſweet feeling of thy fauour.

Giue vs compaſsionate hearts, and a fellow-feeling of others miſeries: prepare vs vnto the day of triall: and keepe vs by thy mighty power, thorow Faith vnto ſaluation. Grant vs theſe good things, for Chriſtes ſake: in whoſe name we commend our ſelues and our ſutes vnto thee, ſaying as hee hath taught vs.

Our Father &c.

An Euening Prayer for priuate Families.

O Lord our God moſt mercifull and gracious in Ieſus Chriſt, among other thy mercies, with which thou doeſt euen follow vs thy moſt vnthankfull ſeruants, wee acknowledge this to bee none of the leaſt, that wee haue this comfortable freedome of comming into thy preſence, there to powre out our ſoules before thee, and to lay open our neceſsities vnto thee.

Wee pray thee teach vs to value this priuiledge according to the true worth thereof: that wee may come together to the performance of this dutie with glad hearts and cheerfull Spirits, reioycing in it that wee haue opportunitie giuen vs, to teſtifie ſome part of that great duty, which in many reſpects wee owe vnto thy Maieſty.

And now (Lord) being come before thee, wee cannot but confeſſe the vileneſſe of our eſtate, wee were conceiued in ſinne, and in ſinne we haue continued all our dayes, wee haue euen drunke iniquity like water, wee haue drawne it after vs, and tied it vnto vs as with cart-ropes; wickedneſſe hath been ſweet in our mouth, wee haue fauoured it, and would not forſake it: wee haue euen made a mocke of ſinne, and it hath been a paſtime to vs to doe wickedly. Thou haſt often called vs, but we haue ſtill refuſed: thou haſt againe and againe ſtretched out thine hand, but wee haue not regarded: thou haſt ſought to reclaime vs, but wee haue hardned our neckes, as it were Iron ſinewes, and haue hated to be reformed. Thou haſt waited to haue mercy vpon vs, thy Spirit hath ſtriuen with vs, thy very bowels haue been troubled for vs; and how graciouſly haſt thou called vpon vs by thy word? ſaying, Returne yee Sonnes of Adam: why will yee dye? Come vnto me, and yee ſhall find reſt for your ſoules. Yet we notwithſtanding haue deſpiſed thy patience, wee haue abuſed thy goodneſſe, wee haue turned thy graces into wantonnes, and haue giuen thee cauſe to heape vpon vs all thoſe fearefull plagues and puniſhments, which in the extremity of thy law are belonging to the wicked.

When we looke into our hearts, we ſee nothing but a confuſed heape of groſſe corruptions, vanity, ignorance, frowardneſſe, vnteachableneſſe, dulneſſe, vnwillingneſſe, and vnaptneſſe vnto good, proneneſſe and readineſſe to any manner of euill; ſecure, irreligious, profane, vncleane, enuious, couetous, and greedie thoughts, peruerſe and diſordered affections, all theſe (as it were) marching together to rebell againſt thee, and leading vs captiue vnto ſinne. The very wiſdome of our fleſh is death, and the ſpirits of our mindes are defiled: when wee looke forth into our liues, wee behold ſinnes more in number then the haires of our head: when we take view of our ſelues in the Glaſſe of thy law, wee can ſee in our bodies and ſoules, in our outward and inward man, nothing but vglineſſe and deformity. Yea, the ſinnes of this one day are ſufficient to bring downe vpon vs the eternall weight of thy diſpleaſure. How negligent haue wee been in our callings? How haue we yeelded to our vnbirdled luſts in the vſe of thy Creatures? How haue wee cheriſhed in our ſelues worldlie, carnall, and voluptuous thoughts? How many bleſsings haue we vnthankfully enioyed, neuer thinking vpon thee which dideſt beſtow them? How haue wee miſſpent this precious time which thou vouchſafeſt vs? How many good opportunities haue wee let ſlip, by which we might haue edified our ſelues, and done good to others? How negligently haue we kept our hearts? By meanes whereof, Satan hath got great vantage againſt vs: how ſlenderly haue wee bewailed the iniquities of the times? how poorely haue wee ſtriuen againſt our owne corruptions?

O Lord, if thou ſhouldeſt ſtraightly marke our iniquities, O Lord, how ſhall we ſtand, where ſhall we appeare, what ſhall become of vs? What anſwere ſhall we be able to make thee to one of a thouſand? And yet (moſt gracious God) which is worſt of all, cuſtome in euill hath bred ſuch a hardneſſe in vs, and hath brought ſuch a cruſt vpon our conſciences, that wee cannot bee perſwaded that thy wrath is ſo terrible, or our ſinne ſo grieuous, or our eſtate ſo wofull, as indeed it is. Hence it commeth, that wee doe not ſtand in ſuch awe of thy Maieſty as wee ſhould; we doe not ſo tremble at thy Iuſtice, nor eſteeme thy promiſes and mercies as we ought to doe: Wee beſeech thee therefore to take the ſtonie hearts out of our bodies, and to put new ſpirits into our bowels, that we may with feeling, and with a liuely and ſenſible apprehenſion confeſſe our ſelues to be, as we are, poore, and wretched, and miſerable, and blind, and and naked, ſuch as in whom there is no goodneſſe, ſuch as to whom there is nothing due but ſhame and confuſion of face for euer. And here (Lord) according to that meaſure of ſpirituall feeling which by thy grace we haue attained to, wee doe vtterly renounce our ſelues, we doe wholie diſclaime all hope of helpe by our ſelues, wee account all that is in vs but as droſſe and dung, and doe moſt earneſtly entreat thee to looke vpon vs in thy Sonne Ieſus Chriſt: Accepting his death and paſsion as a ſufficient, abſolute and compleat diſcharge for all our ſinnes whatſoeuer. O Lord, let the chaſtiſement of our peace be vpon him, and let vs be healed with his ſtripes: we haue no other name vnder heauen in which we can be ſaued: and wee know that thou haſt ſealed him, and ſent him into the world, to ſaue thy people from their ſinnes: we beſeech thee therefore for his ſake to be at peace with vs, put away our tranſgreſsions like a cloud, and our ſinnes as a myſt, forgiue our iniquities, and remember our offences no more. And withall ſeale vp to our ſoules and conſciences the feeling of this thy loue by the gracious teſtimonie of thy Spirit, that we may know that there is peace in Heauen for vs, and that Chriſt is made of thee vnto vs Wiſdome, Righteouſneſſe, Sanctification, and Redemption, and that nothing ſhall euer bee able to ſeparate vs from thy loue in him. We doe beg this at thy hands, ſo much the rather, becauſe we ſee the vanitie of all things in this world: all things in it are ſubiect to vncertaintie: they are all lighter then vanity it ſelfe: But thy loue in Chriſt is firme and perpetual. For with thee there is no ſhadow of change, thy calling and gifts are without repentance: and therefore we pray thee ſettle vs in the aſſured perſwaſion of thy loue, to the end that we may haue ſome comfortable vnderſtanding, that whatſoeuer doth befall vs here, howſoeuer we be tried, yet after al, we ſhall lay down our heads in thy peace, and bee made partakers of thy glory. In the meane ſpace, ſo long as thou ſhalt bee pleaſed to reſpite the dayes of our pilgrimage vpon this earth, we pray thee doe not leaue vs to our ſelues, neither forſake vs: but giue vs as pledges of thy loue, thoſe ſpirituall bleſsings in heauenlie things, wherewith thou art wont to furniſh thy choſen: that ſo we may make our conuerſation ſuch as becommeth the Goſpell, we may neuer diſcredit our profeſsion, or bee a ſcandall and offence vnto others, but rather by our holy cariage may prouoke and winne others vnto thee. Helpe vs to this end, wee beſeech thee, againſt our manifold infirmities, againſt thoſe euils to which our natures doe moſt incline, enable vs to ſhake off that ſinne that hangeth ſo faſt on, ſtrengthen vs to euery good and honeſt duty, make vs perfect in good workes, ſanctifie vs throughout, and keepe our whole ſpirits, ſoules and bodies blameleſſe vnto the comming of Ieſus Chriſt.

Make vs thankfull (as becommeth vs) for thy many fauours, for that continuall preſeruation which thou affordeſt vs, for the comforts of this day, both to our ſoules and bodies, for thy enlarging our time and opportunitie to repent: grant, wee pray thee, that our thankfulnes may not ſtand onely in outward ſhewes, but that wee may bee thankfull indeed and in truth, labouring to be dutifull vnto thee, which art ſo mercifull vnto vs.

And inaſmuch as, O Lord, we doe profeſſe to beleeue the Communion of Saints, therefore it becommeth vs to be mindfull of others in our prayers beſides our ſelues: wee are ſuters to thee in the behalfe of all thy people, ſperſed ouer the face of the earth: thou (O Lord) art priuy to their ſeuerall wants: thou art only able to make a gracious ſupply: we beſeech thee for them as for our own ſoules. More particularly, we poure out our ſoules before thee, for thoſe Churches which amongſt vs thou haſt planted and vnited vnder one gouernement: Our ſinnes (O Lord) chiefly our contempt of thy glorious Goſpell, doe deſerue a curſe

a curſe, euen that thou ſhouldeſt remooue our candleſticke, and clean put out the light of thy holie word; withal make vs a by-word to the world, by ſome extraordinary iudgement: But, wee pray thee in Chriſt vouchſafe to reuerſe thoſe plagues which wee haue deſerued, continue thoſe fauours which wee haue hitherto enioyed, continue and enlarge the freedome of thy word, ſtabliſh the truth of religion amongſt vs by a perpetuall decree, both for vs, and for our poſterity after vs: To this end bleſſe all good meanes: aboue others our Soueraign and King, enable him euerie day more & more to the diſcharge of that great dutie wherewith thou haſt entruſted him: lengthen his daies, proſper his raigne, defeat his enemies: giue him and vs ioy in his poſteritie: Encreaſe wiſdome in his Councell, faithfulnes in his ſeruants, loyaltie and true-heartedneſſe in his Subiects. Stir vp Magiſtrates and men in authority, to ſeeke the aduancement of thy glorie, and the wealth of thy people. Make thy Miniſters able and willing to publiſh the ſecret of thy Goſpell, water their endeauours with the dewe of heauen, that dailie ſuch as belong vnto life eternall may bee added to the Church: And ſeeing thou art pleaſed to exerciſe diuers of thy ſeruants with the croſſe, ſome with ſickneſſe of bodie, ſome with perplexitie of ſpirit, ſome with loſſe of goods, ſome with reſtraint of libertie, ſome in one kind, ſome in another, we pray thee to ſweeten their afflictions, and to ſeaſon their ſorrowes with the comfort of thy Spirit: furniſh them with a meaſure of patience agreeing to the proportion of their triall, and put an end to their grieuances when thou ſhalt ſee it fit.

And (O Lord) make vs readie for affliction: teach vs to remember, that we muſt through many tribulations enter into thy bleſſed Kingdome. In our health, make vs mindfull of ſickneſſe, of death, and of our laſt account: that theſe things may not come vpon vs as a ſnare, but that we may be prepared alwaies in ſome good meaſure, to ſubmit our ſelues vnto thy moſt wiſe and holy appointments.

And now, O Lord our God, wee pray thee, to beare with the weaknes and coldnes of our praiers. Take vs this night into thy bleſſed tuition: we know that thou doſt neither ſlumber nor ſleepe, keep vs from euill, keep vs from the malice of Satan, from ſecurity and careleſnes, from dulnes, and drowſines of ſpirit, that if it ſhall bee thy pleaſure to let vs liue vntill the morning, we may become ſo much the fitter to ſerue thee in our ſeuerall callings, ſo as may be moſt for the glorie of thy great Name, through Ieſus Chriſt: in whoſe name wee commend our ſelues and our vnworthie praiers vnto thee, ſaying as he hath directed vs in the Goſpell, Our Father, &c.

A Morning Prayer for a priuate Perſon.

O Almightie Father, the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and in him my Father alſo, how vnworthie and wretched a creature were I, if receiuing ſo many bleſsings from thee, I ſhould not ſtirre vp my ſelfe to returne ſome thankfulneſſe vnto thee for the ſame? It is euen thou (O Lord) which from my firſt being vntill now, haſt couered me vnder thy wings, and vnder thy feathers I haue been ſure. My body and ſoule, my health, my ſtrength, my maintenance, whence haue I theſe things but from thee? The ſafety of this night, the quiet reſt wherewith I haue been refreſhed, to whom can I aſcribe it but onely vnto thee? That I haue liued hitherto, that I haue not been ſwallowed vp with ſome ſuddaine iudgement, that Satan hath not had his will vpon mee, that I know the way and the meanes vnto a better life, that I am deliuered from the power of darkenes, and tranſlated into the kingdome of thy deare Sonne, that I haue daylie acceſſe into thy glorious preſence: Whence are all theſe, but from the freedome of thy grace? If thou hadſt giuen mee my deſert, I ſhould haue

periſhed long agoe: it is from thy mercie alone that I am not conſumed.

O Lord make mee aſhamed of my vnthankfulneſſe, wound my heart with the conſideration of my owne dulneſſe, whom ſo many kindneſſes haue not wrought vnto more obedience. And vouchſafe, I pray thee, notwithſtanding the ſmalneſſe of my deſeruing, yet to looke graciouſlie vpon this my morning ſacrifice of praiſe, which I doe here tender vnto thy Maieſtie: let not I beſeech thee, the ſcantneſſe and barrenneſſe of my ſeruice, make thee to turne away thine eies, and to haue no regard vnto mine offering. But as thou art wont to ſpare thy Seruants, euen as a man ſpareth his owne Sonne that ſerueth him, and in them to accept the will for the full performance: ſo bee pleaſed to looke vpon mee in Ieſus Chriſt, and for his ſake to remit my former vngratefulneſſe, and to ſtrengthen mee by thy grace for the time to come, in ſome good meaſure to reforme the ſame: And to the end (O Lord) that I may manifeſt the truth of my deſire to bee thankfull, I beſeech thee to beget in me a holie care both this day and for euer, to walke worthy of that calling whereunto I am called, to ſtudie to pleaſe thee with reuerence and feare, and by a blameleſſe, pure, and vnrebukeable conuerſation, to ſhine as a light amongſt men. I cannot, I confeſſe doe this of my ſelfe, I haue in me the ſame corruption of nature which the moſt wicked hath: I intreate thee therefore to work in me that which is pleaſant in thy ſight: Giue me a cleane heart and a right ſpirit: make mee to vnderſtand aright the way of thy precepts, direct mee in the path of thy commandements, knit my ſoule vnto thee, and make it to cleaue vnto thy teſtimonies: ſtay me and ſtabliſh me, that my foote-ſteppes may not ſlide. Crucifie my fleſh with the affections and luſts: mortifie my members, which are on earth: ſuppreſſe and ſubdue the law in my members, which leades me captiue vnto the law of ſinne.

Grant that I may ſenſiblie feele the power of Chriſts death, killing corruption in me; and the power of his reſurrection, raiſing me vp into newneſſe of life: make me to reſolue to renounce euen my ſweeteſt and beſt-pleaſing ſins, and not to take liberty to my ſelfe to continue in any knowne vngodlineſſe.

Let it be enough that I haue hitherto giuen the raines vnto my own luſts: grant that hereafter I may take no thought for the fleſh, to content it, but may ſtriue rather to curbe and ſubdue obedience. And (good Lord) increaſe my faith, and better my feeling and apprehenſion of thy loue, that I may with courage and cheerfulnes run the race which is ſet before mee: Bleſſe me alſo this day in the duties of my calling.

Idleneſſe and godlineſſe cannot agree: and it is thy will, that in the ſweat of my face I ſhould eate my bread: preſerue me from all fraudulent, guilefull, oppreſsing, greedie courſes: Draw my affections from the loue of the world: Fixe my heart vpon the things which are aboue; if things ſucceed according to my minde, make mee thankfull to thee which haſt giuen the bleſsing: if any croſſe come, make me patient and carefull to profit by euerie chaſtiſement.

And becauſe the daily occaſions of danger to my ſoule are infinite, teach me to put on thy whole Armor, and to keepe my heart with all diligence, to furniſh my ſelf with holy meditations to make a couenant with mine eies, to keepe my mouth with a bridle for the auoiding of all filthie communication, to vſe ſuch words as may miniſter grace vnto the hearers, to be ſober in diet, wary in diſports, moderate in apparell, choiſe in my company, and euer to practiſe that continuall feare which hath a promiſe of bleſſednes. Finally (Lord) ſo guide me through the courſe of this whole day, both in my priuate and more publike imployments, that if I liue by thy ſufferance vntill night, I may haue much comfort in the taking notice of thy grace and and goodneſſe towards mee: and all this for Chriſt Ieſus ſake, thy onely Sonne, and my alone Sauiour.

An Euening Prayer for a priuate perſon.

MOſt mercifull God and gracious Father in Ieſus Chriſt, were it not that thou haſt made a gracious promiſe in thy word, that whatſoeuer is asked of thee in the name of thy Sonne, ſhall be beſtowed, I ſhould not dare to preſſe into thy preſence, being guilty to my ſelf of ſo many ſinnes which I haue heaped vp in thy ſight, from the beginning of my daies vntill this preſent.

I am by nature (O Lord) the childe of wrath, a vaſſall of Satan, no better then a very fierbrand of Hell. It is thy great mercy that I eſcaped the fury of thy wrath, due vnto mee at the very inſtant of my birth, in reſpect of that maſſe of corruption which I brought with mee from my mothers wombe. Neither haue I, ſince I am come to vnderſtanding, any whit amended or bettered my firſt eſtate: but I haue added to it a numberleſſe number of tranſgreſsions, breaking euery of thy commandements, by thought, word, and deed, ſinning in many things againſt knowledge, againſt conſcience, and againſt that light which thou haſt giuen mee: yea, cleane againſt many vowes and promiſes of better obedience. I haue no colour of excuſe, nothing haue I to plead in the defence of my many ſlippes: If I diſpute with thee, I muſt needes lay my hand vpon my mouth, and learne to abhorre my ſelfe in duſt and aſhes. And (Lord) giue me, I beſeech thee, a fleſhy and melting heart, that nothing may more affect mee, or touch mee more deepely, then to ſee my owne vileneſſe, and how diſſobedient and ſtubborne I haue been towards thee, which haſt euen heaped vpon me ſo many fauours.

Make mee aſhamed of my barrenneſſe and vnfruitfulneſſe in my profeſsion, who haue giuen thee iuſt cauſe to range mee among theſe hypocrites which make a ſhew of godlineſſe, but yet deny the power thereof. Beget in mee that godly ſorrow which cauſeth true repentance neuer to be repented of: that I may bee grieued in my very ſoule for my ſins, not ſo much becauſe of the danger of Hell that followeth, as becauſe I haue offended thee, the loue of whoſe Maieſty ought to bee a ſufficient motiue to obedience. And for the furtherance of my humiliation and ſorrow, cauſe me O Lord, to ſearch and to trie my waies, to call my ſelfe to a ſtraight account, that I may ſee my ſins in particular, the vanity of my heart, my extreame deadneſſe and ſecurity, my pride and haughtineſſe of ſpirit, my backwardnes to al good ſeruices, my worldly mindedneſſe, my ambitious riſing & crauing thoughts, my want of charity and mercy to others, my miſcarriage in my place and calling, my idle and vnbeſeeming ſpeeches, my offenſiue and ſcandalous behauiour: thus (O Lord) make mee careful to rip vp my heart and life, that ſo I may ſet my ſinnes in order before mee, and may thereby become the more humble and the more forward to caſt down my ſelfe before thee, and to iudge my ſelfe, that I may not bee iudged of thee. Yet withall (moſt gracious God) make me able in the midſt of all this, to reach out the hand of Faith, and to lay hold vpon Ieſus Chriſt, whom thou haſt ordained to bee the reconciliation of my ſinnes. I know (O Lord) the vertue of his bloud, that it can make my ſinnes, though they were as crimſon, yet to become as white as ſnow. O then (I beſeech thee) couer my filthy nakednes with his glorious righteouſneſſe: cloath mee with the garments of his ſaluation, that ſo thereby I may bee holy and vnblameable, and without fault in thy ſight. Speake peace vnto my conſcience by thy holy Spirit. Say vnto my ſoule, I am thy ſaluation. My faith (O Lord) is but weake and poore: ſtrengthen it, I beſeech thee, and bring it forward by thy mighty working vnto more perfection.

Thou

Thou haſt promiſed, not to quench the ſmoaking flaxe, nor to breake the bruſed reede: beare then, I pray thee, with my ſcantnes, and helpe my vnbeleefe, perfit the worke of thy owne hands, performe it vntill the day of Ieſus Chriſt. My faith is that I muſt liue by: it is my victory: thou (O Lord) in mercy haſt begun it: cheriſh it (I beſeech thee) together with all thoſe graces which accompany ſaluation, that they may be in me, as a well of water, ſpringing vp into euerlaſting life. And grant that I may not be preſumingly ſecure touching mine owne eſtate, but may euer and anon bee prooving and examining my ſelfe, whether I am in the faith or no: and that I may alſo ſtudy and ſtriue to giue euidence of my faith, by ſhewing forth good workes, and by bringing forth good fruit, euen fruit worthy amendment of life. I am compaſſed about with many weakeneſſes, and (as I haue found by the experience of this one day) Satan is full of malicious cunning to worke vpon all aduantages: O Lord, ſtrengthen me to reſiſt him, giue me holy wiſdome to diſcouer his ſleights, & grace to withſtand his moſt ſharpe aſſaults. Arme me alſo againſt the reproaches and obloquies of the world. I haue learned in thy word, that if I ſerue thee in ſincerity, my name ſhall be put out as euill amongſt men: giue mee both care to carry my ſelfe out of the reach of iuſt exception, and reſolution alſo to ſacrifice my credit and eſtimation, yea, euen my life it ſelfe if need bee, to thy glory.

Teach mee to learne of the Author and finiſher of my faith, to deſpiſe the ſhame, and to endure the ſpeaking againſt of ſinners, in reſpect of that eternall weight of ioy and glory which is ſet before me. And now (Lord) with the bowing of my Soule, I bleſſe thy name for this dayes preſeruation. How many euils haue I eſcaped, to which I was ſubiect by nature, and to which I had made my ſelfe ſubiect through ſinne? It is thou (Lord) onely which makeſt me to dwel in ſafety. Stretch out the wings of thy grace and protection ouer mee this night: though ſleep ſeize vpon the eies of my body, yet let not ſecurity oppreſſe my ſoule: keep me from idle fancies, and from vaine dreames: giue me a ſober and ſanctified vſe of all outward refreſhings, that I may alwaies in all things aime at this one thing, namely, how I may be the better fitted to ſerue thee faithfully in my place and calling: and that for Chriſt Ieſus his ſake, thy only Sonne, and through thy mercy, my louing Sauiour, Amen.

A more particular Morning Prayer on the beginning of a Sabbath day.

MAnifold (O Lord) are thy mercies, and thy goodneſſe is infinite. In euery particular which befalleth mee, I haue abundant experience of thy loue. It is much (moſt gracious God) that I, which haue ſo many wayes prouoked thee, ſhould bee let to liue to behold the light and comfort of the day: But much more is it, that hauing beene heretofore a prophaner of thy holie day, a barren and an hypocriticall Profeſſour of thy Word, a fruitleſſe and vnprofitable hearer, I ſhould yet enioy the bleſſed opportunity of another Sabbath. How iuſtly mighteſt thou long ſince haue fatted vp my heart, and giuen mee ouer vnto a reprobate minde, taking from mee the comfortable and happy freedome of going into thy houſe, & of giuing attendance vpon the poſtes of thy doores? O teach me (I pray thee) to value thy mercy in this behalfe, according to the true worth thereof: Suffer mee not ſleightly to entertaine either this or any other of thy fauours. And, as thou haſt brought mee to the beginning of this holy reſt, ſo inable mee (I beſeech thee) to the ſanctifying it, and to ſuch a kinde of ſpending the ſame as thou requireſt. Teach me to remember that it is thine owne ordinance, euen one of thoſe vnchangeable lawes, which thou wroteſt with thine owne finger, that this day ſhould after a more speciall maner be diuerted and deuoted to thy seruice, and that thou hast not therefore restrained outward imploiments in our callings because idlenesse pleaseth thee, or because ease giuen to the flesh, is a part of thy worshipbut that thou hast in thy infinite wisdome so appointed it, that being freed from all other incumbrances, we might wholy apply our selues either to the publike or priuate exercises of godlinesse. Giue me therefore grace (I most humbly intreate thee) that I may call thy Sabbath a delight, to consecrate it as glorious vnto thee, and that I may beware of doing mine owne waies, or of seeking mine owne will, or of speaking vaine words, and may euen bind my selfe to a serious and a continued course of seruing thee in the practise of such duties as belong to the halowing of this day. I know, O Lord, that herein I shal meet with many lets: mine own corrupt nature wil repine and think this a yoake and burden that cannot be endured: abroad in the world, I shall see many vaine fashions, followed by great troupes, making thy day a day of carnall pleasure, I shall be derided and scorned, if I refuse to do as others doe. I shall meete also with many cunning perswaders, which will seeke by plausible reasons to draw mee from diligence and constancy in this course. O Lord (I beseech thee) with the bowing of my heart, to make mee strong against all these withdrawmēts: grant that I may more esteeme obedience to thee, then either the contenting of mine owne sensuall affections, or the auoiding of reproach among profane persons, or the satisfying of men, bee their pretences what they may bee. I am taught (O Lord) and I doe beleeue it, that thy yoke is easie, and that thy commandements are not grieuous: and I know that by a holy vse in these religious seruices, I shal make them so familiar vnto me, and shall also finde that exceeding sweetnes in them, that I shall euen long for thy Sabbath before it comes, and the time will seeme short vnto mee that is so bestowed. And for this day (most louing Father) I pray thee blesse vnto mee the particular businesse therof. In praying giue me reuerence to thy Maiesty, sense of mine own wants, faith in thy promises, fresh remembrance of thy former kindnesses, charitable & compassionate, and yeelding affections towards others. In hearing, vouchsafe mee an vnlocked and an vnderstanding heart, a right iudgement, meekenesse of spirit, liuelinesse of affection, fastnesse of memory. In communicating at thy table, bestow on mee an humbled soule, a hungring heart, a conscience purged from dead workes, power of sweet meditation vpon the death of Christ.

In looking vpon the administration of Baptisme, afford mee mindfulnesse of mine owne vow, remorse for my often failing in that solemne promise, earnestnesse of desire for the good of the baptized, ioy for the increase of thy Church. In singing, take from mee all both dulnesse and vanity, make me to sing with a grace in my heart, still striuing to lift vp my soule vnto thee. Enlarge my heart towards other, as occasion shall be offered, that I may bee ready to giue to those that want, forward in euery good worke, comfortable to the sick, tender-hearted to those whom thou hast humbled, apt to make peace where discord is. Let al works of mercy bee a delight vnto mee, and make mee carefull not to stay till I am prouoked, but to seeke occasions to doe good. And when I am priuate (O Lord) sanctifie my thoughts, that I may meditate on good things, and may hide thy Word in my secret parts, and may loue it, and especially that I may shew the fruit of it in al my conuersation. Finally, I humbly pray thee, so to guide mee both in publike and priuate duties, that when it commeth to euening, I may feele my knowledge too be encreased, my faith strengthened, my soule and conscience abundantly refreshed, and all this for Christ Iesus his sake, and for thine owne Names sake. Amen.

Another

Another Prayer, something more speciall, respecting the hearing of Gods Word.

ETernall God, most gracious and mercifull in Iesus Christ, euerie good giuing and euerie perfect gift commeth downe from thee: thou hast commaunded that if anie man lacke wisedome, hee should aske of thee, and thou hast promised to denie nothing that is asked of thee in thy Sonnes name: In obedience vnto this thy commandement, and in assurance of thy readinesse to make good thy promise, I doe here cast down my selfe before thee, praying thee, as at all other times, so now especially to bee good vnto me. I am now (O Lord) by thy gracious prouidence, to be a partaker of thy holie word, the preaching whereof is the ordinarie meanes appointed by thee to saue my soule, and to draw me out of the power of Satan vnto thine owne selfe. I for my part, am vnworthy of so great a fauour as to be admitted to heare it, and I am euery way vnfit and vnable to heare it with profit. My heart is full of blindnesse and ignorance, my affections are froward and vntractable. I am euen reprobate by nature vnto euery good duty: I am dull of hearing, slow of conceit, backward to entertaine, but apt to let slip any good instruction. I beseech thee in Iesus Christ, by the working of thy spirit, to reform within mee these corruptions: Make mee as a new borne babe, to desire the sincere milke of thy most sacred Word: Grant that I may reioyce at it, as one that findeth a great spoile, let it bee better vnto mee, then thousands of gold and siluer: Open my heart, as thou didst the heart of Lydea, that I may euen with a kind of hunger and greedinesse attend vnto the things which are deliuered: cleere the eies of my minde, and annoint them with that precious salue of thy Spirit, that the scales of ignorance may fall from them, and that I may see the wonders of thy Law, euen thy hid wisedome, which my nature of it selfe is not able to discerne. And because thou hast promised to guide the humble in thy way, and to reueale thy secret to the meeke, take from mee, I pray thee, a proud heart, teach mee to become a foole in my selfe, that I may be wise in thee: Suffer me not to measure the mysteries of thy kingdome by mine owne blind reason and corrupt affection: but giue me grace to deny my selfe, and to labour to bring mine owne thoughts into captiuity vnder Christ, that I may not dare to oppose mine owne conceits and fancies vnto the Maiestie of thy truth reuealed in thy Word. Giue vnto the Preacher, a doore of vtterance, that he may open his mouth boldly to publish the secret of thy Gospell. Direct his tongue that hee may speake vnto my conscience, and that if there bee any close corruption lurking in me (as Lord, Who can vnderstand his faults?) the searching power of thy word may discouer it, & rippe it vp euen to the very bottome. And vouchsafe vnto mee that meekenes of spirit, and such calme and yeelding affections, that I may not repine nor murmure at reproofe, but may loue him rather that rebuketh, & may take it, as a speciall fauour from thee that I am not suffered to goe on in sin, nor giuen ouer to mine own corruptions. In euery point of holy Doctrine taught me, make me to remember who it is that speaketh by the mouth of man, that I may receiue the word as a messenger from thee, whether it bee comfort, or reproofe or instruction. and so may giue it that reuerence and that awefull respect which is due vnto thy holy oracles. And because O Lord as I am naturally forgetfull, so the Diuell watcheth to catch away the word as soone as it is deliuered, therefore I pray thee to establish my memory, that I may holde fast thy blessed truth, and may alwaies haue it in store against the time of neede.

To this end, make mee carefull in the vse of all good priuate meanes, such as are Prayer, Meditation, Conference with others, as occasion shall require. Beget in me a godly discretion, that I may diligentlie search the Scriptures, whether the things I heare, are so, and may try all things: neither rashly reiecting, nor suddenly believing whatsoeuer is deliuered. And whē I haue found thy truth, so stablish my heart, that I may not wauer nor be caried about with euery wind of doctrin, but may cōtinue in the things which I haue learned, labouring daily to be led forward vnto more perfection. And sith hearing and knowing without practise, do but increase vnto more condemnation, therefore (O Lord) do thou so water that which I heare, with thy heauenlie dew, that it may bring forth much fruit in my life, and that I may be a credit to my profession, and no disgrace nor slander to thy truth: Grant all these things for thy deare Sonnes sake Iesus Christ: to whom with thee and thy blessed Spirit, I desire to ascribe all honour and glorie, now and for euer, Amen.

After the hearing of the Word.

STirre mee vp (O Lord) I humbly pray thee, to an vnfained and sincere acknowledgement of thy kindnesse, who hast now been pleased, notwithstanding my former vnprofitablenes, and sleight estimation of thy holy Word, yet to vouchsafe mee the comfortable libertie of inioying it. How iustly mightest thou long since for my great contempt, haue made my heart fat, giuing mee ouer into a reprobate sense? What other thing haue I deserued of thee, who haue from time to time been such an vnreuerent, negligent, and careless hearer? Yea (Lord) euen my last carriage in that holy exercise which I haue now been at, hath been so farre different from that became mee, that thou maiest iustly make thy Word to be a sauour of death vnto mee: But (O gracious God) thou which art good vnto mee, in making me to see my owne defects, be mercifull also in giuing mee a heart to lament them, and suffer thy selfe in Iesus Christ to be intreated of mee freely and finally to remit them. Let neither them, nor any other of my sinnes stand at this time betwixt me and thy blessing: but vouchsafe to water the seed of thy Word cast into my heart, with the deaw of thy heauenlie blessing, that it may not bee made vnfruitful, but may worke mightily in mee, to the inlightning of my minde, to the setling of my iudgement, to the comforting of my heart, to the reformation of my corrupt affections, and to the leading mee on vnto more and more perfection.

To that end, make me both mindfull and carefull to vse all those good helpes, which thou hast sanctified to the rubbing vp of our memories, and to the quickning of our dull and slow affections: such as are busie and serious meditation in the closet of mine owne heart, humble conference with others, diligent searching the Scriptures, to find out the ground and certen proofe of things deliuered.

And when matters are made plaine vnto mee, and proued to mee to bee thy expresse reuealed will, grant that I may yeeld my full assent vnto them, not once daring to measure them by the crooked rule of mine owne corrupted reason: and not onely so, but that I may loue them, and embrace them, and hide them, and lay them vp euen in the midst of my heart, & may likewise binde my selfe to the speedie and constant practise of them: that so I may not bee in the number of those which make a shew of godlinesse, but deny the power therof, & which beare much, but reforme nothing, and so doe but disgrace Religion, and heape vp wrath against themselues: but that I may haue my fruit in holinesse, beeing both an ornament to my profession, & a means of winning others by my pure and blamelesse conuersation.

I know (O Lord) that to performe this, will bee a seruice of no little difficultie. My flesh which is euer lusting against thy Spirit, will rebell, I shall bee apt to grow weary of weldoing, euill euill men will deride me, and I ſhall be a matter of ſcorne to the vngodly: Sathan will find out manie hinderances, and manie meanes by which to make good duties irkeſome vnto mee. I beſeech thee therfore to furniſh me with that holie reſolution & with that ſpirit of courage, that I may neither delay to begin, when thou commandeſt to ſet forward, nor yet may breake of where thou requireſt continuance of obedience: but that my courſe may bee like the way of the righteous, which like the light, ſhineth more and more vnto the perfect day: ſo ſhal thy Name be glorified, mine owne ſoule comforted, and others edefied by my good example, and I more and more occaſioned to bleſſe and praiſe thy Name in Ieſus Chriſt thy Sonne, and my Sauiour, Amen.

Another of the like nature, reſpecting the Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

I Am taught (O Lord) that without thee I can doe nothing, and that all mine endeauours are in vaine without thy bleſsing. In due regard whereof, I am become an humble ſuter vnto thy Maieſty, that thou wouldeſt bee pleaſed to proſper and to direct my preſent purpoſe of communicating at thy Table. It is thy will that I ſhould often come vnto this holie banquet, for the ſtrengthening of my Faith, and for the preſeruation of the memorie of Chriſts death. O Lord, ſtrike my heart with reuerence vnto it, as vnto thy ordinance, and as to a feaſt to which thou haſt tied thy more eſpeciall preſence, that I may not dare to preſſe in before thee vnprepared. Before I come, teach me to grow into a very ſtrict examination of mine owne ſoule, that I may ſee how I haue liued, and in what meaſure I am furniſhed for ſo waightie a ſeruice. And becauſe I know that the more I looke into my ſelfe, the more I ſhall ſee mine owne nakedneſſe and deformitie, therefore I pray thee to ſupply me from thy infinite fulneſſe: Giue mee a thorow vnderſtanding of the miſery of my eſtate, who am by nature a childe of wrath as well as others. Make mee to ſee the hainouſneſſe of thoſe innumerable euils, and groſſe ſinnes, which I haue multiplied before thee from time to time: nay, which I haue runne into ſince my laſt preſenting my ſelfe before thee at thy board, when I promiſed better obedience. O cauſe my ſtonie heart to bleede within mee, when I thinke vpon mine owne ſcantneſſe in good duties; and vpon my delight and forwardneſſe to tranſgreſſe. Make mee to bee aſhamed and euen confounded in my ſelfe, for thoſe manie enormities which from my corrupt and vnreformed heart, doe continually breake forth into my outward man, euery member beeing a very weapon of vnrighteouſneſſe to doe ſeruice vnto Sathan. Thus (O Lord) ſhall thy mercies in Chriſt be ſweet vnto mee, and I ſhall come with an hungring and thirſting ſoule vnto thy Table. And I pray thee to increaſe in mee that gift of faith, that I may both come to this thine ordinance with a deſire to inlarge it, and may alſo feele it to receiue ſtrength and growth of aſſurance of mine owne perſonall and particular intereſt into the death of Chriſt. Remoue far from me all ſwelling, diſdainfull, and vncharitable affections: O Lord this is a feaſt of loue, and to it a malicious & reuengefull heart can bee no welcome gueſt. And when I haue preſented my ſelfe at thy Table, I beſeech thee to reſtraine my idle and gadding thoughts, draw them to the earneſt and ſerious meditation of that which is the life of the Sacrament, the death of my Sauiour. Rauiſh my ſoule with the admiration of his loue, that ſhuld giue himſelfe to die for me a moſt vile vnworthie, & ſinful creature. Stir me vp euen to vow and conſecrate my ſelfe for euer vnto him, that hath vouchſafed himſelfe to bee a ſacrifice for mee. And after I haue receiued theſe pledges of thy loue, and ſeales of thy fauour in thy deareſt Sonne, O make me truly thankfull to thy maieſtie, and carefull both at the preſent, and euer after, to ſhew forth the fruits of thankfulneſſe in an holy and religious conuerſation, to thy glorie, the good of others, and mine own eternall comfort, in Ieſus Chriſt my Sauiour. Amen.

Preſently after Receiuing, before the Thankeſgiuing of the whole Congregation, a man may ſecretly lift vp his ſoule on this faſhion.

AFfect my heart (O Lord) with this euidence of thy loue, teach me in it to ſee the riches of thy grace, who art pleaſed for my weakeneſſe ſake, by ſuch familiar meanes to figure out before mee, and to ſeale vp vnto my ſoule a treaſure of that infinite worth, as is thy fauour in Ieſus Chriſt. Oh that I may as ſenſibly feele his death to be ſweete vnto my ſoule, as I doe theſe creatures of bread and wine to afford a pleaſing taſt and refreſhing to my bodie. O Lord, euermore giue me ſuch a feeling. And now (Oh heauenly Father) ſuffer me not to depart hence forgetfull of thy kindneſſe: But grant that I may now at this inſtant, euen couenant with mine owne ſoule, to walke in a better courſe of holie obedience then heretofore, reſpecting all thy commandements, and endeauouring alwaies to haue a cleare conſcience before thee, and before all men: that ſo, glorifying thee in this life, I may bee glorified with thee in thy kingdome, through Ieſus Chriſt, Amen.

Before a Iourney.

O LORD, thou haſt graciouſly promiſed in thy Word, to bee with mee whither ſoeuer I goe, and that thoſe miniſtring ſpirits, thy holy Angels, ſhall pitch round about mee, and beare mee in their hands. A glorious and a comfortable priuiledge I confeſſe this is, that I who am by nature a childe of wrath, and a very vaſſall of Sathan, ſhould be aſſured of ſo high a hand of heauenly protection. I pray thee now at this time to make good this thy mercie to mee, being by neceſſarie buſineſſe to trauell from mine owne place. Marke bee the perils, to which both by nature and by deſert, I am ſubiect: no man is able to number them, or by his own ſtrength and policy to auoid them. Compaſſe thou mee with thy fauour as with a ſhield, goe before me as thou didſt of old before thy people in the wildernesſe; it is onlie thou which canſt make mee to goe and come in ſafetie. Some put their truſt in outward helps: but cauſe thou mee to remember thy Name, and to make thy truth to be my ſhield and buckler. A horſe is a vaine helpe, and ſhall not deliuer anie by his great ſtrength, neither is the mightie man ſaued by his power. It is better to truſt in the Lord, then to haue confidence euen in Princes.

If thou (O Lord) bee my light and my ſaluation, whom ſhall I feare? If thou bee the ſtrength of my life, of whom ſhall I bee afraid? Let this (I pray thee) be the Anchor of my ſoule, both ſure and ſtedfaſt: ſuffer no power of Sathan to remoue my faith from this foundation. Howbeit (moſt holie Father) if it ſhall be thy pleaſure, in this my iournie, to bring ſome croſſe vpon mee, either by making mee a prey to ſpoilers, or by ſome other hazard: I beſeech thee prepare me to it, giue me patience and comfort in it, and an holie aſſurance, that no outward inconuenience can ſeparate mee from thy loue in Chriſt Ieſus.

Make me alwaies mindfull of this, that thy fauour muſt not be meaſured by theſe outward accidents: and cauſe mee euer to hold faſt this rule, that, All things ſhall work together for the beſt vnto thy ſeruants. And (Oh good God) as in my trauels, I am deſirous of thy fauour, ſo teach mee (I deſire thee) to make conſcience of thy feare: that as I expect and craue protection from thee, ſo I may applie my ſelfe to yeeld obedience to thee. Wherefore when I am alone, graunt that I may poſſeſſe my heart with holy thoughts, and may diligentlie watch watch ouer my ſelfe, for the preuenting of all corrupt and vncleane cogitations. Let me neuer preſume vpon the aduantage of ſecrecie, or of my being not knowne by face, in the places where I come, to doe any thing that ſhall bee contrarie to the profeſsion of a Chriſtian.

And if I light into the companie of others, make mee carefull to ſeeke opportunities of doing good, and that I may neuer frame my ſelfe to the humors of prophane perſons; but in a godlie diſcretion may ſo carie my ſelf, as that I may neither wilfullie make my ſelfe a ſcorne vnto the wicked, neither yet may for any reſpects do ought which may either wound mine owne ſoule, or make them thinke that I am of the ſame vnreformed diſpoſition with themſelues.

Thus (Lord) in an aſſured expectation of thy gracious guidance, I betake my ſelfe to mine intended courſe, and commend both it, and theſe my requeſts vnto thee, in the name and worthineſſe of Ieſus Chriſt, my onelie Mediatour and redeemer, Amen.

After a Iourney.

FArre be it from mee (O Lord) that I ſhould craue Mercies of thee in my neceſsities, and then forget to ſhew my thankfulneſſe for them when they are beſtowed. Gracious haſt thou been vnto mee, from the beginning of my life euen vntill now. As ſoone may I number the ſand of the ſea, as make an exact rehearſall of all thy fauours. There is no day, or houre of the day, or minute of the houre, in which thy bleſſings are not renewed towards me. Oh that I could be ſo trulie and effectualie thankfull as becomes me: Oh that my heart within mee might euen melt for grief, that I haue paſſed ouer ſo manie of thy kindneſſes without regard. Beholde, how now alſo thou prouokeſt me to this dutie, O quicken me (I humblie pray thee) thereunto. Make mee diligentlie to looke backe into the courſe & order of this whole iournie, and to obſerue by degrees, how thou haſt been good vnto mee: how thou haſt bleſſed my going out, & my coming in, and brought mee in peace to mine own home. Manie dangers might haue ſwallowed mee vp, which yet (through thy goodneſſe) I haue eſcaped. Sundrie times hath there been (ſuch is the bitterneſſe of this houſe of clay, which I beare about me) but euen a ſteppe betwixt me and death, out of the iawes whereof, thy right hand and thine arme hath ſaued mee. I can aſcribe nothing to mine owne prouidence, neither can I ſay that my ſafetie is the reward of mine own deſeruing. Not vnto mee, O Lord, not vnto mee, but to thy name doth the glorie belong And now grant (I beſeech thee) that the ſenſe of thy loue, may beget in me ſuch a loue of thee, and of that which thou commandeſt, that I may willinglie and chearefullie, and with full purpoſe of heart, deuote my ſelfe to thy ſeruice, accounting (as my dutie is) euerie new kindneſſe to be (as it were) a new bond, and a freſh encouragement thereunto. Grant mee both this and all other needfull mercies, for Chriſt Ieſus ſake, Amen.

The Chriſtians ſuite for grace to liue vprightly in his perſonall calling.

IT is thine ordinance, O thou the wiſeſt God, that euery Son of Adam in the ſweate of his face ſhould eate his bread: thou haſt fitted euerie man to glorifie thee in ſome ſpeciall calling, thou wouldeſt not that any ſhould liue like an vnprofitable burden of the earth, miſſpending his gracious time, and waſting away the creatures, doing no good to humane ſocietie. Herein thou haſt giuen vs thine own example: for euen thou worke ſt hitherto: and albeit that thy great buſineſſe of creating all things, ended with thoſe ſixe firſt daies, in which euery particular was brought forth by thee in his proper kinde, yet thy prouidence is neuer intermitted; in it neither ſleepe nor ſlumber ouertaketh thee: And thy Sonne Chriſt Ieſus, whiles in the daies of his fleſh, hee humbled himſelfe to liue as a man vpon this earth, both in his priuate life attended vpon a painfull Trade, and when the time came of his publishing himselfe to the World, went about doing good, yea, and with that chearfulnesse, that it was meate vnto him, to doe the will, and to finish the worke of him that sent him. And are not thy holie Angels also in continuall action? obeying the voice of thy Word, and ministering for their sakes which shall be heires of life? Who am I then (O my God) that I should not reioyce, that it hath seemed good vnto thee, to ranke mee amongst other thy seruants, and to set mee (as it were) my propper taske, vpon which to giue my best attendance?

Grant, I pray thee, that I may not grudge thereat, as at some vneasie burden put vpon mee, but that I may contentedly and comfortably vndergo it, euē like that glorious creature the sun, who haning his tabernacle set him in the heauens, reioyceth like a mighty man to runne his race. And seeing, O Lord, thou hast not placed me in this calling for mine owne priuate good alone, but also for a more publike and common benefit, giue me such an honest, sincere, and charitable heart, that I may determine with my selfe, neuer to seek, no nor yet willingly to receiue that gaine which comes by the wronging, or wringing, or losse of others.

Let me euer remember that golden rule: whatsoeuer I would that men should doe to me, of doing euen so to them. Let it neuer slippe out of my minde, that the wages of vnrighteousnesse, is put into a broken bag, and that as the good man shall giue inheritance vnto childrens children, so the riches of vanity shall diminish, and that thou wilt draw euen out of the bellie of the oppressor, the substance which he hath deuoured: or if it doe continue with him, it shall be for his greater hurt, his owne ease shall slay him, and his prosperity shal destroy him. Let me therefore I pray thee, choose rather a little with thy blessing, then great reuenews with thy curse and iudgement attending thereupon.

And if so bee it shall be thy pleasure to blesse my basket and my store, and to encrease my portion by my honest industry, O keepe mee, I humbly intreat thee, that I may not set my heart vpon it, let not my riches be my strong citie, or as an high wal in my imagination: but grant that as my lot is enlarged, so I may be more and more afraid of my selfe, lest the care of this world and the deceitfulnesse of riches, should choake in mee the seeds of grace, and steale away my minde from better things. And therefore make it my care good Lord I beseech thee, to follow my calling with that holy measure, as that I may not so far ingulfe my selfe into the businesse of it, that I should abridge and scant my selfe of conuenient opportunities for heauenly & spirituall purposes: and as I shall feele thy hand to be opened toward me, so open my heart & my hand towards others, knowing, that as he which scattereth shall be more encreased, so he that spareth more then is right, shall surelie come to pouertie. Euer make mee to consider thy all-beholding presence, that all things are naked in thy sight, & that thou wilt surelie bring forth to iudgement euery secret thing: that so I knowing thee to be a witnes to al my courses, my care may be to walke as in thy sight, and to approue my selfe vnto thee by an euen and vpright behauiour. Vnlocke, O Lord, the treasures of thy rich mercies, and afford vnto mee both these, and all other conuenient and needfull graces, in and for Christ Iesus sake, Amen.

His Petition to be armed and prepared for afflictions.

I Am taught (O heauenly Father) by thy holie Word, which thou hast left vnto mee to be my counsellor, and to make me wise vnto saluation, that I must through manie afflictions enter into thy kingdome.

When I meditate vpon the liues and courses of thy holie ones, which haue now ended the daies of their pilgrimage, and are entred into rest, I finde that that they all paſſed through gueat tribulation: Nay, Chriſt himſelf the Author and finiſher of my Faith, did firſt ſuffer before he entred into glory.

Of this bitter Cup therefore muſt I alſo drinke, O Lord, if I belong to the number of thy choſen.

Thoſe whom thou haſt ordained to bee veſſels of honour for thine owne vſe, thou wilt purge and ſcoure, and make cleane by varietie of croſſes.

This I know (O my God) and am perſwaded of. But now, when I looke into mine owne heart, and conſider mine owne ſtrength, I find ſuch a baſe ſpirit of fearfulneſſe, ſuch a ſtrong affection vnto peace and quietnes, and ſuch a lothneſſe and willingneſſe to beare the yoke, that I cannot but euen doubt with my ſelf, what will become of me in the day of triall: when I heare of reproaches in good name, loſſes in goods, paines and tortures in bodie, vexations, and horrors and perplexities in minde, tentations by Sathan, combats and conflicts with the feare of death and of iudgement, my fleſh doth euen tremble therat, and O Lord (thinke I) who or what am I, that I ſhould endure the very leaſt of theſe? Whither now ſhall I go to gather hart and courage, but vnto thee O thou preſeruer of man? and how happy were I if I could rightly eſteeme this happineſſe of hauing ſuch a freedome of acceſſe vnto thy throne of grace? Heere therefore doe I proſtrate my ſoule before thee, earneſtly beſeeching thee, in the name of Chtiſt, to be mercifull vnto me in this behalfe. And firſt of all, O moſt tender Father, becauſe ſudden euils do bring with them ſo much the greater griefe, grant that I may often (and that ſeriouſly) think vpon the certenty of afflictions, and how vaine a thing it is for mee, in the ſurging waues of this worldly ſea, to promiſe vnto my ſelfe continuall peace.

Thus (thou bleſsing this meditation vnto mee) the croſſe ſhall neuer come vpon mee at vnawares, my thoughts being taken vp with continuall expecting it. And then O Lord, when hou haſt thus framed me to liue as a man alwaies waiting for ſome trial, let it be thy pleaſure alſo, to furniſh & to ſupplie me with ſuch graces as belong to the comfortable enduring it.

Giue me a readineſſe of heart, to ſubmit my ſelf alwaies to thy appointments, that I may neuer dare to repine or grudge at thy proceedings; giue me a portion of ſtrength proportionably to that weight which thou wilt lay vpon mee, that I droup not vnder the burthen, that I faint not in my minde: Giue me feeling of thy loue in Chriſt, that that may preuaile againſt all diſcouragements, and that I may interpret it to bee a fruit of thy loue that thou doeſt afflict me.

Giue me faith in thy promiſes, ſo firme that it may not be ſhaken by the ſtorme, nor I grow weary or wauering in waiting for thy mercy to releaſe me. Giue me wiſedome to iudge aright of the reaſons of thy trying me, and to make a holy vſe of euery chaſtiſement: giue mee care to ſtore vp in the middeſt of my heart, ſuch comforts as thou in thy Word haſt reuealed for ſeuerall viſitations, that I may not be then to ſeeke for comfort, when I ſhal chiefly want it: finally, giue mee a ſtedfaſtneſſe of reſolution to caſt my burden vpon thee, and to hold this faſt that thou art bound by thine own promiſe, neuer to forſake me. Being O Lord, thus armed, out of the ſtore-houſe of thy rich grace, I ſhall enter the combate with courage, I ſhall goe through it with conſtancy, and end it with ioy, looking for that crowne of life which thou haſt promiſed to thoſe that loue thee, and whom it was thy good pleaſure, before all worlds, freely to loue in Chriſt Ieſus, to whom be praiſe for euer, Amen.

A Prayer for the afflicted in what kinde ſoeuer.

O Gracious GOD, how happie am I, who haue ſo ſtrong a tower as thy great Name to runne vnto, eſpecially now in this ſad and heauy day of tribulation? I ſee (O Lord) by continuall experience, that the help of

of man is vaine, and that all earthly contentments, notwithstanding the flattering shew they make, yet are but as a staffe of reed, vpon which if a man leane, it will runne into his hand and pierce it. If I turne me to my ancient louers and friends, it may be they will stand aside from my plague, and mine old acquaintance wil hide themselues, and I shall bee euen as a stranger in the sight of my familiars. If I seeke to my neighbours, alasse, what refreshing shall I finde? Truth it is, O God, and thou hast so ordained, that he which is in misery, should be comforted by his neighbour: but men haue forsaken the feare of the Almightie: So that hee which is ready to fall, is as a despised lampe, and few are apt to weepe with him that is in trouble: Besides, the greatest part are so ouercome with grosse ignorance, that they are miserable comforters, and Physitians of no value, not able to minister a word in time to him that is weary. Whither then, or to whom shall I goe but vnto thee, O most gracious and tender Father? Thou art a pittifull God, thy compassions are great, thou art the father of mercies; & the God of all comfort; thou makest the wound, and bindest it vp; thou smitest, and thy hands doe make whole: thou hast commanded to call vpon thee in the day of trouble, and thou art a helpe ready to be found. To thee therefore doe I lift vp my soule: Encline thine eare, O Lord, and heare; open thine eies, O Lord, and see, looke mercifully vpon thine afflicted seruant: the daies of sorrow are come vpon me, euen changes and armies of miseries are against me. If my grief were weighed, it would be heauier then the sand of the Sea: I am broken with one breaking vpon another. Make me (I pray thee) to consider seriously, that it is euen thou which hast done all this, that these things come not by chance, but by thy prouidence and certaine appointment, that so I may be dumbe, and not open my mouth to murmure or repine. Open mine eies that I may see mine own deseruings, and what cause I haue giuen thee euen to crush mee to peeces with thy heauy iudgements, yea, to cause the pittie of thy eternall vengeance to shut her mouth vpon me. What cause haue I left vnto me to complain when I am lesse then thy smallest mercy, and my sinnes greater then the greatest sorrow thou hast laid vpon mee? It is thy loue, O Lord, from whence this proceedeth. In this course thou doest offer thy selfe vnto mee as to a sonne: thou knowest my corruptions, the rebellion of my heart, the crookednes & vnreformednesse of my nature, thou seest before some great euill that I am like to fall into, if I be left vnto mine owne course: thou findest me to be forgetfull of my duty to thee, cold in praier, backward and lumpish in holy seruices, well-neere lulled a sleep in the common security of the times: it is thy wisdome to rouse me vp, and to put thy hooke of affliction into my nostrils, to bring me back into that good way from which I am falling. I know thou doest therefore chasten me, that I may not bee condemned with the World. O teach mee (I pray thee) to learne to iudge my selfe, to search and to try my waies, to pry into my course by-past, that I may finde out those euils which beare in mee the greatest sway, and may in some measure vnderstand what it is which thou aimest at in afflicting me. And enable me withal to reforme mine errors, to recouer my wandring, and to get a happy victory ouer my rebellious flesh: That I may be able to say hereafter, It is good for me that I was in trouble, blessed be the time that the Lord afflicted me: and how sweet is the quiet fruit of righteousnesse, which springeth forth from the bitter root of tribulation?

In the meane space (O Lord) vntill it shall please thee to put an end to my present grieuances, teach mee, not to make haste, or to seeke by vile and vnwarrantable courses to wind my selfe out of thy hands, but grant that I may tarry thy leisure with patience, not daring to prescribe vnto thee what to do. And when this storme is over, and the sorrow past, O keepe me from securitie, curity, make mee to remember the vows & promiſes of obedience which I now make vnto thee, prepare me to a freſh triall, that my care may be to be prouided for whatſoeuer thy pleaſure ſhall be to lay vpon me. Heare me in this, and in all other my ſuits, for his ſake in whom thou art beſt pleaſed, euen Ieſus Chriſt the righteous, Amen.

A Prayer in reſpect of ſome loſſe receiued, as of honour, or goods, &c.

O Eternall God, the God of prouidence, the orderer and the diſpoſer of all things both in heauen and earth: be ready (I beſeech thee) to heare the praier of thy diſtreſſed ſeruant. Helpe my weakneſſe, I entreate thee, and to quicken mee to the performance of this duty of calling vpon thy Name. I am euen aſhamed of my ſelfe to ſee mine owne faintneſſe, how ſoone I am caſt down vpon euery occaſion. O raiſe mee vp (I pray thee) & make me to lift vp my hart towards thee, according to whoſe good pleaſure all things come to paſſe. It is not thou (O Lord) which haſt laide theſe things vpon me? Art not thou he who both giueſt and takeſt at thy will? art not thou the Iudge which makeſt lowe, and which makeſt high? Shall I murmure againſt thee, which haſt ſuch an abſolute and vncontrolable ſouereignty ouer all? Shall I receiue good at thy hand, and not euill? O keepe down my repining, and mutinous, and diſcontented thoghts, allay the height and hautineſſe of my ſpirit, teach mee how to be abaſed, and to haue want, make mee to ſee the vanity of that which I was wont euen to admire, and to ſet my heart vpon. Let this abridgment bee a ſchoole-maſter vnto mee, that I may learne by it to draw mine affections from theſe fading and tranſitory commodities. O Lord, what is honour? Is it not a blaſt, or a ſmoake which quickly vaniſheth? What is wealth? Is it not lighter then vanity it ſelfe? Doth it not take her to her wings as an Eagle, and flie into the heauen? O knit my heart hence forth vnto thee: O bleſſed Father, faſten my affections on the things which are aboue, where Chriſt ſitteth at thy right hand: make mee to lay vp treaſure in Heauen, and to ſeeke after that kingdome of thine, which cannot bee ſhaken: frame my heart to the choice of the better part, of which I can neuer be depriued. Let me affect the true honor which ſtands in the faithfull ſeruice of my Sauiour. Let me labour for that enduring and durable riches, which conſiſts in the knowledge of thee, and in the feeling of thy gracious fauour. Suffer me not (I pray thee) ſo to limit thy power, as to thinke that thou art not now able to ſupply me, ſith the means which I was wont to enioy, is taken from me: but make mee faithfully to cõſider, that thy hand is not ſhortned, but that thou haſt enough in ſtore for thoſe that loue thee. Thou art able to giue me a great deale more, and after thou haſt exerciſed me a while, to bleſs my laſt dayes with more abundance then the firſt; thou canſt make the little meale in the barrel not to waſte, & the ſmall quantity of oyle not to diminiſh: thou canſt cauſe a ſmall thing to be better vnto me then great riches to the mighty, and a dinner of greene hearbs to be more ſauory to me, then a ſtalled Oxe to them. O therefore, I beſeech thee reſtrain my deſires, make me willingly to ſubmit my ſelfe to thy wiſdome: Let thy prouidence & promiſe be my ſtore-houſe, and the ſtocke that I relie vnto: let this ſatisfie mee, that though I loſe all that I haue, yet in as much as thou haſt once loued mee in Chriſt, I ſhall neuer loſe thy fauour. And let not the beholding of my children & family diſhearten me, or make me to caſt perils, and to ſay, Wherewith ſhall I feed them? How ſhall I cloath them? O Lord, they are better then many ſparrows, & dearer vnto thee then the lillies of the field: thy promiſe of mercy is entailed to my poſterity: O let my faith reſt vpon this foundation. Prepare me (I pray thee) to further trials, make mee ready by degrees to loſe euen my life it ſelf, if it may be for thy glory. And thus, O Lord, deſiring

to

to reckon euen this crosse (though my vnreformed nature doth gaine-say it) among thy chiefest fauours, I commend my selfe and my poore prayers vnto thee, in Christ Iesus thy beloued Sonne, and my beloued Sauiour, Amen.

A Prayer, fitted to the losse of an especiall friend, as a Father, or Husband, &c.

O Almighty LORD God, whose Glorie is aboue the Heauens, and which hast thy dwelling on high, but yet abasest thy self to behold the things in the earth, be pleased, euen for thy deerest Sons sake, to cast down thy cõpassionate eye vpon my afflicted and grieued case. Comfort (Lord) comfort, I pray thee, thy seruants soule, suffer me not to bee swallowed vp of discouragement. Thou hast taken from mee the very staffe of mine estate, one, vpon whom (in the eye of flesh and bloud) al my comfort did depend: He is now gone the way of all flesh, and hath made his bed in the darke: yet thou, O Lord, still liuest, thou art alwaies the same, and thy yeeres shall not faile. O raise vp, I beseech thee, my languishing and discouraged hart, my drouping thoghts: make me to looke towards thee, from whom alone all comfort comes. Hast thou done this, and shal I controll it? Is death thy messenger, & shall I murmure at his comming? Is my deerest friend, whom I loued as mine owne heart, gathered vnto thee, his appointed moneths being now expired, and shall I lament his happinesse? Doest thou still hold mee with thy hand, and euen cõpasse me about with thy gracious prouidence, and shall I distrust? Is thy purpose & promise, and power to bee my God, the same yet that it was, and shall I bee doubtfull, as though I had made flesh mine arme, or as if thou O al-sufficient God, wert tied vnto outward meanes? Must not I also ere it bee long, make the graue my house, and lie downe with others in the dust? Is there not an assured hope that all that liue and die in the Lord Iesus shall bee ioyned together after death, and at the last day be caught vp in the cloudes, to meete the iudge in the aire, and after that to bee euer with the Lord? I most earnestly beseech thee therefore, O my most gracious God, to moderate my passionate and vnruly thoughts, to bring my violent affections into a holy compasse: Let me not be sorrowfull like those which haue no hope, make mee to reioyce on his behalfe, whose pilgrimage is at an end, & whose Christian and holy course doth euen assure me, that thou hast receiued him into euerlasting habitations. Teach mee to haue a holy and prepared longing for the day of my dissolution: And grant me that grace and wisdome, so to loue those whom both nature and Religion bind me to respect, that I may alwaies conforme and submit my affections to thy most wise and soueraign disposings. To be without apprehension of such losses, I know by thy word, that it is impious: to be extreame & without measure in passion, is desperate. Keepe me, I beseech thee, in the mean, that my sorrowes may be tempered with comfort, and my heart may alwaies be fixed surely vpon thee: Afford me both this and all other needfull fauours, in and for the merits of my alone Sauiour Iesus Christ, Amen.

The Orphans Lamentation.

THy Word (O Lord) which is the word of Truth, and cannot lie, hath testified of thee, that thou art The helper of the Fatherlesse: Hereby haue I (poore forsaken wretch) taken heart vnto my selfe, to flie vnto thy mercy-seate, and (as it were) into thy lap, freely to powre out my lamentations. Left I am to the mercilesse mercy of this cruell world: and death hauing closed the eyes of my deerest Parents, in whose sight I was not a little tender, my estate in common vnderstanding is very miserable.

Some

Some there are which will ſeeme to pitty mee, and who will ſprinkle ſome common words of compaſsion on me, but no truth of comfort commeth from them. Nay, euen thoſe of neereſt acquaintance, and who during the life of my Parents, did profeſſe the greateſt loue, doe now looke ſtrangely on mee, and their behauiour and faſhion is, as if they did not know mee. Moſt true doe I find the ſaying of Salomon, that the friends of the rich are many, and that the poore is hated euen of his owne Neighbours, his friends will depart farre from him, and though he be inſtant with words, yet they will not regard him. When in feare of oppreſſion, I flie vnto them which are armed with authority to relieue mee, though I ſpeake with prayers, they anſwere roughly, and ſo are their hearts ſet vpon bribes, that nothing but a gift in the boſome will perſwade them. Thus is affliction added to my miſerie, but no man careth for my ſorrow. All this is through thy prouidence (O thou which ſitteſt at the ſterne, and diſpoſeſt all things:) I know that out of thy mouth, and from thy decree, proceeds both good and euill. Whither then ſhall I looke, but vnto thee that haſt ſmitten mee? Who can bind vp my wound, but onely thou that makeſt it? I lift vp therefore my heart, with mine eyes, and hands, to thee that dwelleſt in the heauens: As the eyes of ſeruants looke vnto the hand of their Maſters, ſo ſhall my eyes waite vpon thee, vntill thou haue mercy vpon me. I am ſure (becauſe thy word hath ſo aſſured me) that thou wilt not forſake for euer, but though thou ſend affliction, yet thou wilt haue compaſſion, according to the multitude of thy mercies: Thou putteſt my teares in a bottell, all my grieuances are noted in thy Regiſter: My ſoule ſhall therefore cleaue vnto thee, and vnder the ſhadow of thy wings will I reioyce. To thee doe I commit my ſelfe, vpon thee alone doe I caſt my care (O I beſeech thee) caſt not off my ſoule: Vpon thee haue I been ſtayed from the wombe, thou art he which tooke me out of my Mothers bowels: Whom haue I in Heauen but thee? and I haue deſired none in earth with thee. Thou ſhalt be the ſtrength of mine heart, and my portion for euer. I ſee more and more how good it is for mee to draw neere to thee: My friends haue deceiued me as a Brooke, and as the riſing of the Riuers they paſſe away, but with thee there is no ſhadow of change. No man did euer truſt vpon thee, and was deceiued.

Friends may die, and returne to their earth, but thy yeeres indure from generation to generation. Thou giueſt to beaſts their food, and to the yong Rauens that cry: Thou clotheſt the graſſe of the field, the very ſparrowes are reſpected by thee. Am not I (O Lord) much better then they? O make me to depend vpon thy goodneſſe, and to know that if I ſeeke thee, I ſhall want nothing that is good: Thy eye is vpon them that feare thee, and vpon them that truſt in thy mercy. The hearts of all men are in thy hands, thou madeſt euen the Egyptians to fauour thy people: and as thou cauſedſt the very rock to yeeld water for the thirſty, and the deuourer to affoord food for Sampſon; ſo thou canſt turne the hearts of thoſe that moſt neglect mee, and make euen ſtrangers and men vnknowne to become kind vnto me.

Let it be my care to ſerue thee, and to walke before thee in vprightneſſe, and then I am ſure with thee there is enough in ſtore, and thy prouiding cannot faile me. Stirre me vp to ſeeke thy Kingdome, and the righteouſneſſe thereof, and all things elſe ſhall be ſupplied to my comfort. Aſſure my ſoule that thou art my Father in Ieſus Chriſt, then ſhall I be ſure that thou hauing prouided for mee a better inheritance, wilt not forſake mee for theſe outward things. Hearken (I beſeech thee) to theſe deſires of my ſoule, and breed in mee a ſtedfaſt expectation both of theſe, and all other needfull graces, for the merits of Ieſus Chriſt my Sauiour, Amen.

The captiues Prayer, taken by a forraine Enemy, or otherwiſe impriſoned for debt, or vpon any like occaſion.

OVt of the deepe places doe I call vnto thee (O Lord) let thine eares attend vnto the voyce of my prayers. Behold here I dwell in darkneſſe and in the ſhadow of death, being bound in miſery & iron, and feeding vpon the bread and water of affliction. Cloſed I am in priſon, and cannot get forth; I doe know and confeſſe that thy iudgements are aright, and that thou haſt afflicted me iuſtly. Full idlely and vainely did I ſpend my precious time in the day of my liberty, walking in the way of mine owne heart, ſeruing luſts and diuers pleaſures. To be tied to the duties of my calling, or otherwiſe earneſtly and buſily to follow any courſe that might be for thy glory, it was a burthen and a griefe vnto me. Many other ſinnes there are, of which I am guilty before thee, which haue deſerued both this, and a farre greater puniſhment, yea, euen to bee held vnder darkneſſe in euerlaſting chaines, and to bee plunged with Sathan and his Angels into the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone world without end. But (Lord) there is plenty of mercy with thee, and thy compaſsions faile not, thou art good and gracious, and of great kindneſſe vnto all them that call vpon thee. Giue eare (I beſeech thee) to my prayer, and hearken to the voyce of my ſupplication: Let the beames of thy fauour ſhine into this deſolate and comfortleſſe place, with which I am encloſed: Refreſh and reioyce my diſtreſſed and grieued ſoule, for vnto thee doe I lift vp my ſoule. Looke down from the height of thy Sanctuary, and heare the mourning of the priſoner. Sanctifie this great croſſe vnto me, that it may be a meanes to humble mee, and to bring mee to a through ſight and ſenſe of mine owne deſeruings: Sweeten it alſo with the comfortable taſte of thy fauour and loue in Chriſt. And although my body be ſtraitned, yet enlarge my ſpirit, that I may now bee more feruent in prayer, more ſtrong in the deſire and longing for thy grace then heretofore. Suffer mee not to grow weary with waiting vpon thee, or with looking or expecting for thy mercifull goodneſſe in my deliuery.

Let mee not preſume ſo farre as to take vpon mee to preſcribe thee how to deale with me, or when & by what meanes to enlarge me: But grant that I may both contentedly & buietly tarry thy appointment, aſſuring my ſelfe that when thou ſeeſt me to be more fit for liberty then for reſtraint, thou wilt beſtow it on mee. In the meane time, proportion (I pray thee) my deſires & affections to my preſent meanes: As I haue but little, ſo make mee contented with a little, & as my diet is but courſe, my lodging but vneaſie, and the aire not ſo ſweete as I was wont to enioy, ſo frame my minde and body to a patient bearing of all theſe vnpleaſing inconueniences: Make me often to meditate and thinke with my ſelfe, that if ſuch a priſon as this, in which a man may find ſome intermiſsion of ſorrow, and out of which hee may conceiue hope of deliuery, be ſo irkſome to me, then how woefull is that dungeon of hell, whereof the Prince of darkneſſe is the Keeper; and where, as the torment is eaſeleſſe, without all intercourſe of any refreſhing, ſo it is endleſſe, without all poſsibility of getting from it; And then, O Lord, let this meditation worke with mee, both to the humbling of my ſoule, whoſe deſert it is to be eternally ſhut vp in that loathſome pit, aud to the enlarging of my thankefulneſſe vnto thee the God of mercy, who haſt ſent thy Son to free mee from that intollerable captiuity. Cauſe me withall (I beſeech thee) to bee as ſenſible of my bondage vnder the tyranny of ſinne and Sathan, as I am of my detainement in this preſent thraldome, and as deſirous to bee drawne out of it into the glorious liberty of thy children, as I now am, to bee freed from this impriſonment: and if it ſhall hereafter bee thy pleaſure to reſtore mee to my deſired freedome freedome, O make me euer mindfull of the vowes and promises of good things, with which I am now readie to binde my selfe vnto thee: that so thy mercie may neuer be forgotten by me, but may bee euer fresh in memorie to quicken me to the diligent and faithfull seruice of thee, who art the onelie God, in three persons, the Father, the Sonne and the holie Ghost, to whom be honour and glorie, might, maiestie, and dominion, world without end, Amen.

The slandered person, laden with vniust reproches, thus commendeth his case to God.

GReat is my griefe (O Lord) neither is it to me a small vexation, to see how wicked men haue sharpened their tongues against mee. They doe shoote out bitter words like arrowes, and wound me with their multiplied lies, as with a razour that cutteth deceitfullie: and as dead flies doe cause to stinke and putrifie the ointment of the Apothecarie, so doe they make my good name to become euen vnsauorie amongst men. O how bitter is this vnto me, euen as gall, and how doth my soule euen pine away within mee to consider it? Yet (O gracious God) why should my spirit be so perplexed in me, hauing such freedome of accesse vnto thy Maiestie? Thou art set in the throne of righteous iudgement, these clouds and mysts of foule reproaches, cannot hide the truth of my cause from thy all-seeing eyes. To thee therefore doe I appeale, and in thee doe I put my trust: iudge thou me according to thy righteousnesse, and according to mine innocencie that is in me. I confesse (O Lord) that in thy sight I am a most vile and wretched sinner, and that if I should dispute with thee, I could not answer thee one of a thousand. Therefore in the case betwixt thee and my soule, I will lay my hand vpon my mouth, and abhorre my selfe in dust and ashes.

But as for these mine aduersaries, whose tongues are as the coales of Iuniper, in respect of them, thou knowest mine vprightnesse, and how vntrue these things are which they put vpon me. And indeed this witnesse of my conscience is my chiefe reioycing, and with it I doe secretlie solace my selfe against all their most bitter and poysonfull accusations.

This maketh mee to haue boldnesse toward thee, and with comfort to trust vnder the shadow of thy wings, vntill these afflictions ouer-passe. Send thou from Heauen, and saue me from the reproofe of these that would swallow mee vp: Keepe mee secretlie in thy Tabernacle from the strife of tongues.

Furnish me with patience (I beseech thee) vntill thou pleade my cause, and execute iudgement for me; represse my tumultuous and swelling spirits, that I may not render euill for euill, nor rebuke for rebuke, but that I may heartilie pray to thee, euen for my most vehement accusers. And (O Lord) if they belong to thee, open their eies that they may see their error, touch their hearts, that they may be sorrie for their bitternesse: Otherwise, if they be such, whom thou who vnderstandest all things) doest know to be incurable, represse their rage (I pray thee) let their lying lippes be made dumbe, which cruelie, proudlie, and spightfullie speake against the righteous. As for me, vphold me in my integritie, stablish mee in euerie word and good worke, enable me to such an holie and blameless conuersation, that those which reproach mee as an euill doer, may be either wonne vnto thee by my good example, or else may be made ashamed when they bee not able to blame my behauiour in Christ. Teach mee to remember that this is not the one halfe of that which I must suffer for thy sake, if I will be faithfull, that so I may resolue to sacrifice not my good name onelie, but euen my life it selfe for thy glorie.

Thus, O Lord, relying vpon thy promised readinesse to heare the prayers of thy seruants, that I here pow-poured out my ſoule before thee, beſeeching thee to vouchſafe a gracious audience, both to theſe and all other my humble ſutes, not for mine owne ſake, but for thy Sonne and my Sauiours ſake, Chriſt Ieſus, Amen.

The Proſecuted for a good and righteous Cauſe, and brought into hazard, both of his liberty and life, is directed thus.

I See now, O moſt gracious God, and in Ieſus Chriſt moſt kinde and louing Father, the truth of that which thou thy ſelfe haſt reuealed in thy bleſſed Word, euen that all that will liue godly in Chriſt, ſhall ſuffer perſecution: Thy beloued Son told his Diſciples, that they ſhould haue in the world much trouble, and be vexed and hated, and continuallie moleſted for his ſake. And now (Lord) it is thy good pleaſure to call me vnto this ſeruice, euen to beare witnes to thy truth by my ſuffering. Much weakeneſſe I acknowledge, that I finde in my ſelfe, to ſtand out in ſo iuſt a quarrell, much vnworthineſſe to be aduanced to ſuch an honour. Before thee therefore doe I caſt downe my ſelfe (for from thee is euery perfect gift) beſeeching thee to make thy power apparant in mine infirmitie, and to ſtrengthen me poore wretch, that I may cheerfullie take vp my croſſe, and follow thee.

Breathe into mee, by thy Spirit, the ſauing knowledge of thine vndoubted truth, that I may bee firmelie ſetled therein, and fullie aſſured of the goodneſſe of that cauſe, which I am called to maintaine.

Out of the mouth of babes thou haſt ordained ſtrength, thou canſt make euen the vnlearned, and the men without knowledge to ſpeake, to the aſtoniſhing and amazement of the mightie: It is thy inſpiration that giueth vnderſtanding. Endue mee with courage, that I may ſpeake of thy teſtimonies before Kings, and may not be aſhamed: Season withall, my zeale and boldneſſe, with ſuch meekeneſſe and reuerence, that there may bee in my behauiour no appearance of vaine glorie, but that all may ſee, that it is the honour of thy Name, and the defence of thy truth which I ſeeke for. Ground me ſo ſure vpon the rocke of truth, ſhed ſo abroad thy loue, and the feeling thereof into my inward parts, giue me that earneſt of my future inheritance, and the taſte of the powers of the world to come, that no winds, or ſtormes, either of plauſible perſwaſions, or of a hard and cruell vſage, or of varietie of torments ſet before me, may bee of any force or power to remooue me.

Draw my meditations often, vnto the Prince of my ſaluation, Ieſus Chriſt, who was alſo conſecrated through afflictions. Enable mee to learne by his example, to endure the croſſe, and to deſpiſe the ſhame for the ioy which is ſet before mee. Let mee neuer forget it, that if I ſuffer as a chriſtian, I am a partaker of his ſufferings, I beare his marke vpon mee, and that this light affliction which is but for a moment, ſhall cauſe vnto me (it being the way which thou haſt ſanded out to heauen) a farre moſt excellent, and an eternall weight of glorie. And when I feele any cowardlie feare to ſurpriſe mee, and my ſelfe almoſt readie to faint in my minde, then bring it to my remembrance, that if I denie thee, thou wilt denie mee alſo; if I caſt away my confidence, thou wilt alſo caſt me off at the laſt day. And ſeeing without thee I can doe nothing, make me earneſt in Praier, and a continuall petitioner to thy Maieſtie, from thee to be ſupplyed with all neceſſarie graces, ſuch as thou knoweſt to bee fit for my preſent caſe. Take from me all truſting to mine own ſufficiency: open mine eies, that I may more and more ſee mine owne ſcantneſſe, and the weakeneſſe that is in me for weightie ſeruices: Make mee to know that my full dependance vpon thee, ſhall bee my chiefe ſtay: and that as without thee, I cannot ſtand, ſo being vpheld by thee, I cannot miſcarie. And if it ſhall be thy pleaſure to deliuer me from this queſtion which I am now come into, and to restore me to my wonted peace, preserue mee, I pray thee, from security, stirre me vp to make prouision for some greater storme, remembring still, that without being faithfull and constant vnto death, there is no hope to receiue the Crowne of life. All these mercies, and whatsoeuer else thou knowest to be needfull, reach out vnto me, I humbly pray thee, euen by those promises of grace which thou hast made, and offered in the Mediatour of grace and glory, Iesus Christ, Amen.

into,

Some barren Hannah, or childlesse Elizabeth, desiring to be blessed with fruit of body, prayeth thus.

NEither am I the first (O most mercifull Lord God) whom thou hast thus afflicted, neither am I without examples of holy persons, who haue both sued vnto thee for comfort in such an occasion, and haue been heard also of thee in that they desired. This is no little ioy vnto my grieued heart: for as I am certified hereby, that I may thus be chastened, and yet be deare and precious in thy sight: so I doe also thence conclude, that thou both art able to release me, and wilt likewise, if thou see it in thy wisdome to be conuenient for me. To thee therfore doe I make my moane (O Father of mercies, and God of comfort) bee not deafe, I beseech thee, to my prayers. Looke fauourably, and with a compassionate eye vpon the trouble of thy handmaide. It hath hitherto bin thy pleasure to shut vp my womb, and to denie me that comfort by children which thou hast vouchsafed vnto others. Humble mee (I pray thee) vnder thy hand, and grant that I may trulie, and sincerelie, and feelinglie acknowledge, that though this bee no little crosse, yet it is nothing to that wich I haue deserued: It is iust, I confesse, with thee, to punish my barrennesse in grace, and my fruitlesnesse in holy things, with this want of outward encrease.

Make mee (O good God) as sensible of my spirituall defects, as I am of these bodilie inflictions. And as it is reported of thee in thy Word, that thou makest the barren woman to dwell with a familie, and to be a ioyfull mother of children, so make me (I humbly craue of thee in Iesus Christ) an example of thy mercie heerein. Let mee bee as the fruitfull Vine on the walles of my husbands house, and let (at the least) one Oliue plant spring out from mee, to stand about his table. The fruit of the womb is thy reward, of thee alone doe I desire it, from thy mercy onely doe I expect it.

And good Lord bee pleased so to order and to direct my desire herein, as that I may not in this seeke some outward contentment onelie, but that my chiefe respect may bee, that by mee thy Church may bee encreased, and that out of mee, may proceede such an one by whom thy glorie may be furthered, and the honour of thy Name aduanced amongst men.

Teach mee withall, so to referre my desires to thy wisdome, and to submit them to thy gracious disposing, that if it shall seeme good to thee, not to grant this my request, I may not murmure against thee, but may patientlie and quietlie beare whatsoeuer either in this, or in any other kind thou shalt lay vpon mee. Let mee consider that though this which I now craue, bee a fauour not to bee despised, yet that thou hast in store better blessings for thy seruants, euen spirituall blessings in heauenlie things: stirre mee vp to seeke these especiallie, and with Marie, to chuse the better part, which shall neuer bee taken from those which once enioy it. And because I haue so great a desire of encrease, let it be my care, both in mine own particular, to vse all good meanes by which I may encrease in grace, and touching others also to labour the encrease of thy Kingdome, by prouoking, perswading, and through my good example, winning and drawing them vnto thee. So (Lord) being (by reason of this crosse) a woman troubled in Spirit, out of the abundance of my complaint I haue poured out my soule before thee, submitting my selfe in all humility to thy appointment, who makest all things to worke together for the good of those whom thou doest loue in Iesus Christ, to whom be praise both now and euer, Amen.

A Prayer applied to the state of a man inwardly perplexed with the horror of sinne, with doubtings of Gods fauour, and with the tentations of Satan, tending to despaire.

O Thou most pitifull God, and to those whom thou louest in Iesus Christ, most tender Father, neuer did there any poore chased Hart bray after the riuers of water, so as my distressed and amazed soule panteth after thee. Oh that I had faith to lay hold vpon that most sweet promise, by which thou calleſt all that are wearie and laden to come vnto thee. Faine I would, O Lord approach into thy gracious presence, and happy seeme I to my selfe, if I might taste, though but (as it were) some crummes of thy rich mercie. Me thinks that all things which I see in the world, and which the sonnes of men doe dote vpon so exceedingly, are but dung and drosse in comparison of thy fauour: O that I might bee but one of the lowest of thy Saints, or (as it were) a seruitor or doore-keeper among thy holie ones. Thus I see thy mercie, I admire it, I preferre it in my choice before the greatest treasure: but when I would applie it to mine owne particular case, Oh what a world of discouragements doe I meet with? My sinnes doe take such hold vpon me, that I am not able to looke vp: they are so many, yea, more in number then the haires of my head, that my heart doth euen faile me to consider them.

When I thinke how my soule and spirit is fraughted & defiled euen with whole millions of profane, hardned, secure, vicious, worldlie, and vnsanctified thoughts, how many offers of grace I haue neglected, how thy forbearance hath been abused by mee, how I haue been a reproach and slander to thy Gospell, how dead and lumpish and false-hearted I haue been in thy seruice, how barren in good works, and what little proceedings I haue made, going rather backward, then striuing vnto more perfection, how I haue contented my selfe with shews of godlines: when (I say) I think vpon these and other my grosse and palpable enormities, I cannot but vtterlie condemne my selfe, neither can I beleeue that it is possible for so vile a wretch as I, to bee admitted into thy fauour. Sometimes I conceiue some little hope, and I seeme to my selfe to haue some taste of thy fauor, and some kind of assurance, that I am deare vnto thee in thy Sonne: but suddenlie my comfort vanisheth, my hope is ouerclouded with perplexed doubtings, and I am well neere swallowed vp with meere despaire. Can any mortall man (think I) know the mind of God: or if some holie person may be so farre graced, as to vnderstand Gods purpose touching himselfe; is it possible that so vile a creature as I should come to such a high prerogatiue?

Can the Lords Spirit dwell in such a stinking and polluted soule as mine? Will hee vouchsafe to giue mee an assurance of Gods fauour? Or if I might know now that I am in the state of grace, what assurance can I haue, that I shall so continue, beeing beset with manie imperfections? Thus, O Lord, mine owne thoughts oppresse me, and mine owne soule doth pleade the case against it selfe; Neither is Satan, the ancient enemie of thine elect, waiting to adde afflictions to my miserie.

Heretofore his manner hath been, to incite and to prouoke me vnto sin, by hiding and couering the vglie and most loathsome face thereof, and to beare me in hand, that it was a very easie thing to repent, and that also thy fauour (O Lord) might bee procured by and by.

Now

Now hee enlargeth my euils, and makes my ſins to appeare before my conſcience in moſt terrible and hideous ſhapes: he telleth me, that my hypocriſie is apparant, that the guile of my heart is written in great letters and cannot be denied, that it is now in vaine for me to ſue for grace, there being no hope of mercie left for ſuch offenders; that it is to no purpoſe for me to pray: for as I cannot pray as I ſhould, otherwiſe then in hypocriſie, ſo neither (if I could pray aright) can there bee any acceſſe vnto the throne of grace for the requeſts of ſuch a treſpaſſer.

Notwithſtanding (O moſt gracious God) euen in deſpite of his ſuggeſtions, and amidſt all thoſe diſcouragements which mine owne heart muſtereth againſt me, I doe here aduenture my ſelf to thy moſt glorious preſence. If I ſhall finde fauour in thine eyes, ſhew me the light of thy countenance and I ſhall be ſafe. If thou ſay, I haue no delight in thee, behold, here I am, doe to mee as ſeemeth good in thine owne eies. I know what thou haſt ſpoken in thy word, namely, that if I draw neer vnto thee, thou wilt draw neere vnto mee, and that thou wilt fulfill the deſires, and accept the vnexpreſſable groanes and ſighings of thy ſeruants: Truth it is, O Lord, I dare not ſay that I draw neere vnto thee as I ſhould, or that my deſires are ſuch as they ought to be, or that I groane vnder my ſins with ſuch an effectuall and piercing feeling as is fit.

All that I am able to doe, and that in much weakeneſſe, is to cry faintlie vnto thee, Oh draw mee, and I will runne after thee, make me to deſire thy mercie in ſinceritie, bruiſe my heart, that I may yeeld out manie vndiſſembled ſighings after thee. Yet (O Lord) though there be in mee but ſuch poore beginnings of grace, ſuffer me not (I beſeech thee) to caſt away my confidence. I am well aſſured that thou haſt not forgotten thy promiſe of not breking the bruiſed reede, nor putting out the ſmoaking flaxe, and of giuing a bleſsing vnto thoſe which hunger after righteouſneſſe.

It is poſsible, O Lord, that thou ſhouldeſt leaue off to be gracious, and ſhut vp thy tender mercies in diſpleaſure? Didſt not thou ſend thy Sonne into the world, to die euen for chiefe ſinners? Is it not true, that where ſin abounds, there thy grace aboundeth much more? Could I euer ſo much as truelie deſire reconciliation with thee, vnleſſe thou didſt worke it in mee?

Is not this requeſt, Lord helpe my vnbeliefe, the verie voice of thy Spirit within me? Could I complaine of the hardnes of my hart, or ſincerely loath mine owne corruptions, as being diſpleaſing to thy Maieſtie, if thine owne finger had not effected it? Should I feele ſuch a combat in my ſoule, and ſuch a tumult within me, if thou hadſt not trulie begun to draw mee to thy ſelfe? Would Satan ſo continuallie moleſt me, and ſo eagerlie purſue me with varietie of moſt malicious and ſharpe aſſaults, if I were ſtill held captiue by him at his will?

Raiſe mee vp therefore (O Lord) I pray thee, refreſh my deiected and caſt-downe ſoule, perfect the work of grace which thou haſt begun within me, make me to heare of ioy and gladneſſe, that the bones which thou haſt broken may reioyce. Thou haſt ſet me as a marke vnto thy ſelfe, thou haſt written bitter things againſt mee, and made mee to poſſeſſe my former iniquities; thou haſt hidden thy face from mee, and taken me for thine enemie: comfort mee now according to the daies that thou haſt afflicted mee, let mee behold thy face in righteouſnes, and reſtore vnto mee the ioy of thy ſaluation. Rebuke Satan, I moſt humblie beſeech thee: though thou pleaſe to buffet me with his meſſengers, yet let thy grace be ſufficient for me, and make thine owne power in reuiuing me, perfect and manifeſt by my weakneſſe, which of it ſelfe is readie to bee preſſed downe with euerie tentation. Giue me that holie wiſedome, not to beleeue Satan, no, though he ſpeake the truth; inaſmuch as he is the Father of lies, and neuer ſpeaketh truth but for a wicked purpoſe. And (O Lord) as thou encreaſeſt my comfort, ſo withall encreaſe my care, that I may not fall from perplexitie to ſecuritie, but that I may alwaies keep my hart with all diligence, prouing my faith, & ſearching may waies, and exerciſing my ſelfe vnto godlineſſe. Make me a carefull and an vnderſtanding hearer of thy word, ſith it is the word of life, a quickening word, a word which doth reioyce the heart: and becauſe except that be my delight, I ſhall vtterlie periſh in mine afflictions.

Make mee circumſpect to preuent ſinne, and fearefull ouer my ſelfe, that ſinne may not grow ſtrong vpon mee: and grant that I may ſtudie to preſerue the peace of my conſcience aboue all things, taking heed of wounding it with preſumptuous ſins. And, O Lord, ſtabliſh me with thy free ſpirit, that albeit Satan ſeeke to ſift mee, and to winnow me as Wheat, yet my faith may neuer faile, but may bee as mount Zion which cannot be remooued, but remaineth for euermore.

Thus, O my gracious God, hauing through thy mercie, peace in beleeuing, and ioy in thy holy ſpirit, I ſhall finiſh my courſe in comfort: which I pray thee grant me for his ſake who is the Prince of peace, euen Ieſus Chriſt, to whom with thee and the holy Ghoſt, be all honour and glorie, now and for euer, Amen.

A Prayer, then needfull, when a man hath ſome ſpeciall combate with ſome one or moe ſpeciall ſinnes, againſt which hee deſireth victorie.

O Louing Father in Ieſus Chriſt, it hath pleaſed thee of thine abundant mercie to giue leaue to euery humbled and diſtreſſed ſinner, to poure out his ſoule before thee, and thou haſt bound thy ſelfe by a promiſe, both to heare and to helpe all thoſe which ſeeke thee with an vnfained heart: The confident aſſurance hereof hath giuen me courage (albeit moſt vnworthie) to preſent my ſelfe here before thee, and to conceiue hope that thou wilt not ſend me empty away.

Wounded, O Lord, I am with mine owne hainous ſinnes, my vntamed fleſh doth alwaies rebell and luſt againſt my ſpirit: ſome good motions and purpoſes I ſometimes haue, but (alas) they are quickly quenched, and the law of my members ſo preuaileth, that I cannot doe the good which I would. I haue in mee (I confeſſe) the ſeed of euerie ſinne, and my nature is apt to bee wrought vnto any kinde of euill. But (O God) there are ſome principall corruptions which do beare in me the greateſt ſway, and they doe ſo euen raigne in my mortall bodie, that I am forced to obey them in the luſts thereof: The diuell alſo is full of moſt malicious policie, and hee ſtill worketh vpon all aduantages, and out of all things almoſt taketh occaſion to adde fuell to my wicked deſires, and by pleaſing and delightfull baites to leade them on vnto helliſh perfection. The more I ſtriue, the ſtronger (mee thinketh) theſe corruptions grow: which maketh mee to feare the vtter quenching of thy graces, and the grieuing of thy holie Spirit. Hereby my Prayers are interrupted, my meditations perplexed, and robbed of their wonted ſweetnes, my hearing and reading of thy word is made vnprofitable: my faith is encountred with grieuous doubtings, becauſe I cannot feele that ſtrength and power of thy Spirit which I would. O Lord, if thy mercie bee not my ſtay, I muſt needs be ouercome: whom haue I in heauen but thee? Whither ſhall I flie but to thy gracious aſſiſtance? I beſeech thee to haue compaſſion on mee, crucifie and kill theſe vnrulie luſts, abate the ſtrength of theſe violent and wicked deſires: weaken them I pray thee, and ſuffer them not to haue dominion ouer me. Let thy Spirit guide me, and lead me into the land of righteouſnes. Or if it be thy pleaſure, O Lord, ſtill to exerciſe mee, yet leaue mee not deſtitute ſtitute of thy grace: but encreaſe it in mee, that I may grow vnto a larger meaſure of ſanctification: make mee hereby the more feruent and frequent in Prayer, the more ſtrait to preuent all occaſions leading vnto euill, the more iealous ouer my waies, the more humble and vile in mine owne ſight: That ſo euen out of euill there may ſpring good vnto mee, and that I may ſee the fulfilling of that holie promiſe, that all things worke together for the beſt vnto thy Seruants. Heare mee (I intreat thee) in this, and in all other my requeſts, for Chriſt Ieſus ſake thy beſt beloued Sonne, and the onelie Sauiour of thy choſen, Amen.

A Prayer againſt worldly-mindedneſſe, diſtruſt of Gods prouidence, and the too cloſe cleauing of the affections vnto earthly things.

MAnifold are the corruptions (O moſt gracious God) with which my heart is fullie fraughted, and ſundrie are the euils, which (like ſtreames) doe flow from this hidden ſpring into my outward man. Among others, I ſtill ſee (and bleſſed bee thy name, who haſt made mee to ſee) how my ſoule is altogether enſnared, and my affections, as it were taken captiue with the immoderate loue of earthlie things. Oh how am I bewitched with the ſeeming ſweetneſſe of them, who am I euen with a kind of violence caried away to the ſetting of my minde and all the powers of it thereupon? When I am to pray either priuatelie by my ſelfe, or with others in common, when I am called to heare thy Word, or am otherwiſe to bee buſied in any godlie exerciſe, my heart is roiling, and my affections wandring here and there about the matters of the world; ſo that in theſe diuine imployments, it ſeemeth to mee that I finde no contentment, but all the time is too long in my conceit which is ſo beſtowed. Thus my ſpirits are quite dulled, and mee thinkes I haue no life within me, when matters of Religion, and the things which concerne thy kingdome are in hand. Often haue I heard of thy prouidence, and of the promiſes which thou haſt made, to with-hold no good thing from thoſe that feare thee: neither can I denie, but that I my ſelfe of mine owne particular haue had great experience of thy goodneſſe: but yet, when I goe about to worke my heart to a dependance thereupon, and to a holie reſting and relying vpon thee, Oh what ſtubbornneſſe doe I meet with, what infidelity, what woefull diſtreſtfulneſſe? What a combat haue I with my tumultuous thoughts, how do they reſiſt and gainſay, and euen ſmother and ſuppreſſe euerie motion in mee, which tendeth to waiting vpon thee? What feares are by and by raiſed vp, of future want, what perils am I taught to caſt, and what plauſible reaſons doth my heart frame, by which to make it ſeeme a vaine and idle, yea, and a ridiculous thing vpon mee, to truſt to thy prouiding? Thus doe I nothing but euen vexe and teare my ſoule, beate my braines, and ſpend my ſpirits, how to get that which I deſire, and how to keepe and preſerue that which I haue gotten. My very ſleepe, with theſe immoderate cares, is oft times taken from mee, and ſo doubtfull am I for the time to come, that I dare not vſe that portion which I haue, for my preſent comfort. Euen the moſt behouefull expences to thoſe of my familie, to the poore that dwell about mee, to the maintenance of the Miniſterie, are a death vnto me. And albeit thou bleſſeſt my basket and my ſtore, and encreaſeſt mine eſtate by continuall adding thereunto, yet ſtill I ſeeme to heare within, the voice of the horſeleaches daughter, Giue, Giue, neither can I perſwade my inſatiable heart to ſay, It is enough.

Now (Lord) I beſeech thee to be mercifull vnto me in this thing: Heale in mee this dangerous and increaſing ſickneſſe; bridle theſe vnruhie and miſguided paſſions; Suppreſſe theſe tormenting and heart-dividing cares; diſſolue this glue, by which my affections

are,

are ſo cloſe faſtened vnto thoſe earthly things. Open mine eies, that I may plainelie ſee the true nature of thoſe things which I ſo much deſire: how fickle they are, and how vncertein, what hinderances, yea, what enemies, to the good and proſperity of my ſoule, what coolers of zeale, what clogges in the way that leadeth vnto life. Teach me then to ſay to my ſelfe; Oh why doe I weary my ſelf for that, which when I haue, I cannot keepe, which ſooner or later, I am ſure I muſt forgoe: why doe I ſo loue that, which is ſo great an aduerſary to my ſoule, which will choake good things in me, and make it a matter of ſo much the more difficulty for me to be ſaued? And to the end the heat of my affections after this baſer traſh, may bee the ſooner and the more throughlie allaied, make me to feele the ſweetnes of the things which are aboue: enlighten mine vnderſtanding, that I may know what the hope is of thy calling, and what the riches of thy glorious inheritance is in the Saints, and what a ſurpaſsing, exceeding, eternall weight of glorie it is, which ſhall bee ſhewed vnto vs: that the meditation thereof may make all things elſe become euen as vile as dung before me. Worke my euill and vnbeleeuing heart, to a ſtedfaſt faith in thy promiſes, and to a firme perſwaſion of the certaintie of that which thy word hath teſtified, namelie, that if I delight my ſelfe in thee, I ſhall be fed aſſuredlie, and thou ſhalt giue my hearts deſire. Oh, why ſhould I doubt of this through vnbeleefe? why ſhould I not be fully aſſured, that thou which haſt promiſed art able alſo to doe it? and that as a father hath compaſsion on his children, euen ſo haſt thou alſo vpon them that feare thee: Thou keepeſt their bones, thou numberſt their hairs, thou obſerueſt their groanings, thou putteſt their teares into a bottell: though a Mother ſhould forget the fruit of her wombe, yet thou canſt not forſake them. O thou the Father of lights, from whom commeth euerie perfit gift, make mee to beleeue this: ſo ſhall my care hereafter bee more for the light of thy countenance, for ioy in the holie Ghoſt, and for peace in beleeuing, then for any of theſe fading commodities: ſo ſhall I be more ſtudious how to grow in grace, then to encreaſe in wealth, more earneſt for ſpirituall bleſsings, then for outward things.

O then I beſeech thee, denie mee not this requeſt, ſend mee not away emptie from thy throne of grace: I aske not ſo importunatelie, in any opinion of mine owne deſeruing, I renounce my ſelfe, I flie to the promiſes, I looke for nothing but for thy wordes ſake, for thy names ſake, for Chriſt Ieſus ſake, in whom thy ſoule is pleaſed, to whom with thee and thine eternall Spirit, with the bowing of my heart, I yeeld all honour and glorie, world without end, Amen.

Againſt Hypocriſie.

I Remember O LORD, the ſaying of thy Seruant Dauid touching the bleſſedneſſe of that man in whoſe ſpirit there is no guile: and that alſo which thy Son, my Sauior ſpake, that the Hypocrites portion ſhall bee weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. In due regard whereof, Oh moſt gracious God, being in ſome meaſure priuie to my ſelfe of mine owne corruption, I am become an humble ſuter to thy Maieſtie, vtterlie to purge mee from the ſowre leauen of hypocriſie.

A ſinne I finde it to bee which hanged faſt on, and which cleaueth ſo cloſe, that it is a matter of no little difficultie to ſhake it off. When I examine my ſelfe touching it, I ſee plainelie that I am not able to cleere my ſelfe thereof before thee. Manie a time haue I in religious ſeruices, ſought more to gaine an opinion of holineſſe with men, then to approue the ſinceritie of my heart in thy ſight: and full often haue I made a ſhew of zeale and feruencie in things that concerne thy worſhip and glorie, when my ſoule hath been euen deaded in mee, and without all life of affection thereunto. How haue I ſeemed to others to heare with reuerent attention, and to pray with no ſmall meaſure of deuotion, when my inward parts haue beene wandring, and my thoughts either wholly ſtraying, or at leaſt farre from all ſerious thinking vpon the preſent buſineſſe?

How many duties of godlineſſe haue I vndertaken, more with a deſire to be ſeene of men, and to be well eſteemed in the world, then for any truth of loue to the things themſelues, or for any ſtrength of care to glorifie thee? I am not able (O Lord) to lay open to the full the hypocriſie of my heart, and that whole body of guile, which lyeth lurking in me. Euen now, me thinketh, I faile, neither is this acknowledgement which I make, ſo ſincere, and ſo free from fraud as it ought to be: neither doe I feele my ſelfe ſo deeply affected with my preſent caſe as I deſire: Loth is my ſtout heart to yeeld ſo much to the accuſing and debaſing of it ſelfe: faine would it ſhift off euen this vndeniable imputation which I put vpon it. What hope then haue I, (O thou the Father of all mercies) but in thee?

This taſte of thy goodneſſe, who haſt not giuen me ouer to mine owne hypocriſie, but haſt made me both to ſee it, and in ſome little meaſure alſo to lament it, hath emboldned mee to caſt my ſelfe downe here before thee.

Let it be thy pleaſure, I beſeech thee, to create in mee a new and an vpright ſpirit, pluck vp euen all the very ſmalleſt ſprigs of this poiſoned root of ſecret hypocriſie: Make me to become a true Iſraelite, a perfit Nathanael. Thou art the God of truth, thou takeſt no delight in lying: O ſtirre vp in me an vnfained deteſtation of all doubling, and an earneſt loue of inward ſinceritie.

Let mee neuer forget, how vnpoſſible it is to blinde thine eies with outward ſhewes, or to delude thee with faire pretences: thou ſeeſt not as man ſeeth, for man looketh on the outward appearance, but thou beholdeſt the heart. Suffer me not to content my ſelfe with a profeſſion of godlineſſe, and to neglect the power thereof, or to be like a whited Tombe, which appeareth beautifull outward, but within is full of all filthineſſe: but circumciſe my heart (I pray thee) and renew it by the purging Spirit, that what good thing ſoeuer I make ſhew of, the ſame my ſoule within may loue vnfainedly: and that in all exerciſes of pietie, I may not onely draw neere vnto thee with my lips and eares, and outward man: but aboue all, with all the ſtrength and power of my minde, deſiring more to approue the ſingleneſſe and ſinceritie of my heart vnto thee, who ſeeſt in ſecret, then to purchaſe an opinion with men, who can ſee but the out-ſide alone, and may ſoone be deceiued with ſhewes. This inward truth vouchſafe vnto mee (O holy Father) not for mine owne ſake, but for his ſake, who both is Truth, and came alſo into the world to beare witneſſe to the Truth, euen Ieſus Chriſt, thy Sonne and my gracious Sauiour, Amen.

Againſt backe ſliding in Religion, and for increaſe of Faith.

O Eternall and Almightie God, thou haſt in thy Word commanded, that we ſhould take heede of falling from thy grace; and thou haſt there teſtified alſo, that the end of thoſe which go backe from their ſtedfaſtneſſe, after they haue once knowne and profeſſed the way of righteouſneſſe, will be exceeding fearefull.

Be mercifull therefore vnto me (O Lord) I moſt humbly pray thee, concerning this. I finde in my ſelfe great weakneſſe, no power haue I of my ſelfe to perſiſt in goodneſſe: Many meanes alſo doe theſe euill daies afford, by which to draw me backward: corruption in opinion, wickedneſſe of example, all manner of reproach and ſcorne caſt vpon ſinceritie, ſubtile perſwaſions of politicke and carnall friends.

By theſe and the like, me thinkes I feele in my ſelfe a great ſlaking and an abatement of that zeale and care which I was wont to haue. I begin to waxe in my iudgement, and to grow doubt-doubtfull euen of thoſe things which I ſometimes imbraced with fulneſſe of perſwaſion: The exerciſes of godlineſſe, hearing, praying, receiuing, meditation, conference, are not ſo ſweet vnto me as they haue beene. A ſtrange kinde of dulneſſe creepeth vpon mee, and I haue no ſuch life and ſpirit in matters of Religion, as formerly I haue had: and to what a wofull paſſe theſe things may come, though I haue much hope when I thinke vpon thy mercy, yet well may I feare when I look into my ſelfe. Great is thy goodneſſe euen in this I acknowledge, that thou makeſt my heart within mee to ſmite me for theſe things, and doeſt not ſuffer me to runne without ſtay into that helliſh downefall, in which I ſhould be ſoone plunged, if thou ſhouldeſt once forſake me. Goe on, I beſeech thee, in thy goodneſſe towards me. Quicken vp my dull heart, enliue my too much decaying and deaded affections, re-enkindle thoſe ſparkes which are euen vpon quenching, and like vtterly to goe out, vnleſſe it ſhall pleaſe thee to reuiue them. Settle my iudgment, ſtabliſh my thoughts, make firme my conſcience. Enable me more and more to ſee the truth in matters of Religion, and to diſcerne things that differ: giue me an exerciſed wit, to know both good and euill.

And together with an increaſe of knowledge, giue mee alſo an increaſe of zeale, that I may grow in grace, and thriue in godlineſſe, and goe from ſtrength to ſtrength, vntill I come to that meaſure which thou haſt appointed mee to come in Chriſt Ieſus.

Let me not in theſe halting and decaying times, be carried away with euery wind of doctrine, through the craftineſſe of thoſe which lie in wait to deceiue. Suffer neither the cares of the world to choake thy graces in me, nor vaine pleaſures to inſnare me, nor euill examples to miſleade mee, nor plauſible perſwaſions to enchant mee, nor the contempt of the times to diſcourage mee, nor mine owne ſlothfull and ſluggiſh nature to make me grow weary of well doing: but cauſe mee ſo to be in loue with heauenly things, that I may neuer ſatisfie my ſelfe with any meaſure either of knowledge, or of practiſe, but may rather ſtill be aſhamed of my ſelfe, that I make no better proceedings, and ſo may euer aime and ſtriue vnto more perfection.

To this end beget in me a holy care of vſing all good meanes, by which to be eſtabliſhed in iudgement, and more and more enkindled in affection: ſuch as are the hearing and reading of thy bleſſed Word, earneſt praying, intentiue and buſie Meditation, carefull watching ouer mine owne ſoule; marking and obſeruing thoſe who walke as becommeth the Goſpell, following their faith, and imitating their holy and gracious conuerſation.

And when I looke vpon worldlie Men, ſuch as minde onely earthly things, and behold how they trauaile to increaſe in wealth, and to adde more & more to their outward ſtate: and vpon godleſſe perſons, and ſee how they fall away more and more, waxing worſe & worſe, adding drunkenneſſe vnto thirſt; let euen this be a ſpurre vnto me, to egge me onward in the wayes of godlineſſe, that I may thinke it a ſhame for mee, that carnall men ſhould bee more in loue with the World, then I with Heauen, and profane ones more eager in the ſeruice of the diuell, then I in the aduancing and promoting of thy glory. As thy promiſes O Lord haue encouraged mee thus to praie, ſo let it be thy gracious pleaſure to accept my ſute, ſo ſhal my ſoule praiſe thee, and my tongue exalt thy Name with ioyful lips, and that in Ieſus Chriſt, thy Sonne and my Sauiour, Amen.

Againſt hardneſſe of heart.

WHen I recount with my ſelfe (O God of all grace) the ſundrie puniſhments wherewith thou haſt in thy moſt bleſſed Word threatned to afflict the children of diſobedience: among them all, a hardned heart, a ſeared conſcience, ſeemeth

vnto mee the moſt wofull. Surely, not all the plagues of Egypt, not all the botches of Iob, are worthy therewith to be compared. Who can tremble at thy iudgements, or value thy mercies, who is able to profit by the vſe of thy word, or to reape any benefit by the exerciſes of thy ſeruice, if this fearefull cruſt be growne vpon his ſecret parts? Take away from a man, a tender and an apprehenſiue ſoule, a ſoft and a yeelding hart, wherein is he better then the Horſe or the Mule, which haue no vnderſtanding? Lamentable is the ſtate of theſe euill times, and miſerable the condition of the greateſt part now-adaies, ouer whom this dreadfull ſickneſſe hath ſpread it ſelfe ſo vniuerſally: and wretched, O Lord, ſhould I become, if thou ſhouldſt leaue me to my ſelfe, and giue me ouer to this raging euil. Weak I am in mine owne nature, and cannot withſtand it: nay, my heart is in it ſelfe prone vnto it, and many, no ſmall touches of it haue I often felt, and perceiued in mine owne ſoule: ſo that I cannot but euen quake to thinke what a miſery it were, if thou ſhouldeſt (as thou iuſtly mighteſt) ſuffer theſe beginnings of ſpirituall ſenſeleſneſſe to increaſe, and this curſe of inward hardneſſe, in the extremity thereof to haue dominion ouer mee. To thee therefore, O heauenly Father, who only canſt know, and who alone canſt ſupply thy Childrens wants, doe I lift vp my ſoule, to thee in this needfull time doe I make my prayer. Thou art my ſtrong rocke, to whom I may in Chriſt Ieſus boldly reſort, heare the voyce of my petition, and be not deafe towards mee. Preſerue mee by thy mighty power, as from all euils, ſo from this eſpecially: put it to my bowels, a fleſhly and melting hart, giue me a tender and a feeling Spirit. When I heare of the power of thy wrath, let it ſtrike an awe in me: when thy great mercies, and the fulneſſe of thy grace are made mention of, ſtirre me vp to affect them, to hunger after them, and euen to long to enioy them. When I commit any ſinne againſt thee, though it be neuer ſo ſmall, let my conſcience ſmite mee, let it bee a cauſe of ſorrow and griefe vnto me: when I conſider and behold the ſins of the times, and ſee what ſwarmes of people will needs be damned, O let it make my ſoule to weepe in ſecret, and my ſpirit within me to be full of heauineſſe.

When thy word is preached, make it vnto mee a word of power, that I may feele how it entreth through, euen to the diuiding of the ioynts and the marrow, and how it is a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart: and ſo that I may receiue it with all reuerence, and with meekneſſe, and may perceiue my naturall ſtubborneneſſe to bee more and more beaten downe and ſubdued by it. Suffer mee not ſlightly to paſſe ouer any euidences either of thy iuſtice or of thy grace, but grant mee to endeuour to make vnto my ſelfe a holy vſe of euery accident.

Let me neuer ſtop my eares to the words of holy aduice, nor harden my necke when I am reproued: rather let me deſire to be admoniſhed, knowing that if the righteous ſmite, it ſhall be a benefit vnto mee: make mee to feare and reſiſt euen the beginnings of ſinne, remembring how ſuddenly a hardned heart will creepe vpon me, if euill be wilfully giuen way to.

Euery ſmall taſte of grace, cauſe me to make much of it, and to labour to increaſe it: let me euer feare my ſelfe, leſt I ſhould be hardned through the deceitfulneſſe of ſin, and ſtill pray vnto thee, to bee ſhielded and preſerued from it. There is not ſo great an enemy to the ſoule, as is ſecurity; neither is a reprobate ſenſe at any time ſo neere, as when it is leaſt ſuſpected, or leaſt thought on. Oh then I beſeech thee, remooue farre away from me this ſpirit of neglect, and grant that I may ſtand vpon a continuall watch, for the preuenting of this pleaſing, but yet killing miſery: and make me to grow more and more in the feeling and bewailing of mine owne corruptions, and in the deſire and taſte and apprehenſion of thy heauenly mercies?

and that in and for Christ Iesus sake, whose bloud is the alone purger of the conscience, and the principall softner of the heart: to whom, Oh thou my soule, doe thou striue with thy selfe to giue praise and glory, now and for euer, Amen.

Against vncleane lusts, and for the suppressing of all vicious and vnchaste affections.

MOst true, O Lord, doe I finde that by continuall experience, which thy word hath said, namely, that the heart of man is wicked aboue all things, and that the imaginations thereof are onely euill: out of it doe proceede many defilements of the outward man. This haue I felt, and doe yet feele in many particulars, euen how the Law in my members, rebelling against the law of my mind, leadeth me captiue vnto the Law of sinne, so that I am both hindred from the good which I affect, and drawne euen headlong into that euill which I most abhorre. Neither haue I in any one thing more cause to acknowledge and complaine of this, then in those inordinate and vnruly motions, which are directly contrary to that holinesse and honour in which euery one of vs is bound by thy sacred word to possesse his vessell. The lusts of concupiscence are exceeding violent, and do euen consume and waite within me (like some raging fire) all religious and holy motions.

Much adoe haue I to temper my selfe from actuall filthinesse: many a time hath the diuel, who knoweth my weakenesse, and lieth in waite to deuoure, much endangered mee: nay, O my most gracious God, had it not been for thy restraining hand, doubtlesse this sinne, euen in the extremity thereof, had long since preuailed ouer me. It is thy great mercy, which haue stopped mee, when I haue beene almost foiled in the combate, with this loathsome sinne. And great cause I yet haue, to bee iealous of my selfe, perceiuing such an army, and euen a very legion of vncleane desires to fight against my Soule. But, in thee is my hope. O thou most holy Lord, to thee doe I cry, and from thee doe I expect releefe in this great necessity.

Mortifie my flesh (I humbly pray thee) by thy mighty Spirit, crucifie my lusts, suppresse my boiling and vnruly motions, slake and quench in me this vnlawfull heate, sanctifie mee throughout; that my whole spirit, and soule, and body, may be kept blamelesse to the end. Plant in mee a deepe detestation of this abominable euill: let me euer remember that thou seest in secret, and that all things, though neuer so closely carried before Men, are naked in thy sight, and that according to thy Word) Whoremongers and adulterers thou wilt surely iudge, and for such things make the fulnesse of thy wrath to breake forth vpon the children of disobedience.

And whereas, O Lord, I haue some times in my priuate thoughts emboldened my selfe to this sinne, in a hope of liberty and opportunity for repentance after it, restraine in me this intollerable presumption, and cause mee to know that the sinne of whoredome hath this speciall effect, euen to take away the heart, and to leade a man on who is once ensnared, like an oxe that goeth to the slaughter, & as a foole to the stockes of correction, without any knowledge or thought that he is in danger. Make mee also carefull and diligent, and constant in the vse of all good meanes, for the preuenting of this inticing wickednesse: let me be industrious and painfull in the place and calling wherein thou hast set me, idlenesse being such a breeder of vncleannesse.

Teach me to make a couenant with my eyes, that lust may not creepe in by those windowes into my inner man: to be gracious in my speech; forbearing all filthy and wanton talke, sober in my attire, moderate in my diet, carefull to cut off all superfluous pampering of the flesh, choice of my company, watchfull ouer mine

owne heart, taking heed of cherishing or entertaining the smallest motion, mindfull of my profession, and of him to whom I am coupled by faith, remembring what an indignity it shall be to take the member of Christ, and to make it the member of an harlot.

Giue me a reuerent respect, and a sober vse of the honourable estate of marriage, which thou hast ordained as a remedy against this shamelesse iniquity. And aboue all, let my soule neuer cease to cry vnto thee, who art ready to be found, and who neuer deniest the sutes of those, who present their prayers vnto thee, in the mediation of that vndefiled and spotlesse Lambe Christ Iesus, to whom with thee and thy all-sanctifying Spirit, bee glory and praise throughout all generations for euer, Amen.

Against malicious sufferance, hardnesse to bee reconciled, and desire of reuenge.

O Almighty Lord God, when I looke into thy word, I therein doe plainely see it to bee thy will, that in as much as lieth in vs, wee should haue peace with all men, and that vnity should bee so deare vnto vs, and so precious in our eyes, that wee ought to seeke it, and to ensue it, and euen to vndergoe some hard conditions to obtaine it: but when I returne backe to the view and beholding of mine owne heart, I find there an absolute, and a very stiffe resistance hereunto, I cannot perswade my selfe to passe by offences, or to breake off strife or to be pacified towards those from whom I haue receiued wrong. The hope of reuenge is euen sweete vnto me, and it seemeth to me, that I could be content to be at any charge, or to endure any paines for the wreaking of my displeasure vpon my aduersaries. My very sleepe departeth from mee, and I forget euen my profit and ease, while I am casting and studying with my selfe how to reuenge. The offers of peace are loathsome vnto mee, neither am I well pleased when I am perswaded and moued to desist.

Truth it is (O Lord) that I cannot iustifie this my implacable and reuengefull disposition: albeit it is sometimes pleasing to mee, so that I take thought, and plot how to accomplish it, yet when I call my selfe to account, I cannot approue it. Thus I am much distracted: Religion vrgeth mee to suppresse it, corruption eggeth mee forward to aduance it. So often as I thinke vpon thy reuealed will, I feele my selfe bound to reforme it: but when I againe consult with flesh and blood, me thinketh I see many reasons to maintaine it. One while I thinke, Oh how shall I answere the Lord if I doe not forgiue? Another while againe, imagine, How shall I liue among Men, if I shew my selfe so easie to put vp wrongs? Let not the Sunne goe downe vpon thy wrath, Saith the Spirit: Suffer not thy selfe to be abused, saith the flesh. Forgiue, and thou shalt be forgiuen, saith the Lord: Requite one wrong, and be sure of many, saith the World. Whither now shall I turne mee, being thus tossed vpon the waues of such contradicting thoughts? Where should I hope to finde succour, but with thee (O Lord) who art the God of peace, and whose spirit is the spirit of peace? Doe thou, I beseech thee, determine this combate, giue victory to thy truth: and let the loue of peace be strong, and preuaile against the desire of contention. Let mee euer looke more what thou commaundest, then what my own corrupted heart affecteth: what mine owne offences are against thee, then what the trespasses of others are against my selfe: what shall be acceptable in thy sight, then what shall vphold my supposed credit before men. Enable mee to serious meditation of the freedome of thy great loue in Christ Iesus. Wee, O Lord, had offended thy Maiesty, and thou mightest haue gotten glory to thy selfe by our eternall condemnation: yet it pleased thee to offer thy grace vnto vs, and euen to seeke vs, and to beseech vs by thy Ministers to bee reconciled, and to tarry and wait for our repentance, and to beare with our ſtubbornnes, though we haue often euen with ſcorne reiected thy kindnes.

Who am I then (O moſt gracious God) that I ſhould be ſo ſtiffe towards men, hauing found in thee towards mine owne ſoule, ſuch an vnſpeakeable readineſſe to forgiue? What bed all the iniuries that man can doe to mee, in reſpect of one of my ſmalleſt ſinnes againſt thy Maieſty? Or, how can I come vnto thee with a hope of mercy, to mine owne ſoule, when I find ſuch an implacable diſpoſition in me towards my brother?

Oh then, I beſeech thee, abate in me theſe ſwelling ſpirits, repreſſe theſe motions and inclinations tending to reuenge, ſtay mee from encroaching vpon thy office, to whom onely vengeance doth belong: giue me a calme, a courteous, and a gentle heart. Let the ſame minde be in me, which was in Chriſt, who when he was reuiled, reuiled not againe, but prayed for his Perſecutors, and laid downe his life for his enemies: ſo teach mee, I pray thee, to beware of rendring euill for euill: make me rather to ſeeke how to ouercome euill with goodneſſe, knowing and perſwading my ſelfe, that howſoeuer the world may thinke it baſeneſſe or ſimplicity in mee, to bee thus eaſie to forgiue, and patient to endure, yet it ſhall bee a pledge to my ſoule, that my ſins are pardoned with thee, and that I am made like to the Image of Chriſt.

And among other things, neuer let me forget, how odious all my prayers and deuotions, of what kind ſoeuer, will be in thy ſight, ſo long as my hart is full of vnreconciled thoughts againſt my Neighbour: that ſo, euen in loue to my ſelfe, and in deſire of my owne good, I may put on the bowels of mercy, chuſing rather to be a loſer heere among men, then to make my prayers lothſome vnto thee.

Looke (O Lord) vpon the prayer of my lips, and fulfill, I beſeech thee, the deſire of my Soule both in this, and in all other needfull things, euen for his ſake, who gaue himſelfe to be the propitiation for our ſinnes, and to make peace betwixt thee and our ſoules, Ieſus Chriſt thy Sonne, and my Sauiour, Amen.

Againſt Pride, and the affectation of exceſſe and nouelties in Apparell.

INfinite, O Lord, are the beguiling inticements of this exceſſiue Age, and many be the bewitchings of theſe wanton times: diuers things are there very effectuall and powerable to corrupt; but hard it is to finde whom to follow, or in whoſe ſteps to tread, for ones better furtherance vnto godlineſſe. Among other the farre-ſpreading euils of theſe ſinfull dayes, Oh intollerable is the pride and vanity of all eſtates? How exceſſiue and how toyiſh are the habit and the apparrell of the greateſt part? Who keepeth himſelfe within the liſts of his ability, or within the limits of his calling? How are our men, as it were transformed into women, by their laciuious and effeminate attire? and how be our women quite degenerate from their ſexe, and from the modeſty thereof, by their manniſh complements? This thou ſeeſt, O Lord, and forbeareſt, not becauſe thou art ſlacke, but becauſe thou art patient.

Doubtleſſe, thy ſoule ſhall in time be auenged on this ſin, and thou wilt puniſh it, euen as of old thou didſt the pride of Sodom, and the haughtineſſe and vanity of Ieruſalem. How much then the more wofull is my caſe, and the more abominable my ſinne, who knowing the lothſomnes of this ſoule diſeaſe, doe yet ioyne with the times therein, and run into the ſame exceſſe that others doe?

O Lord, how apt am I to faſhion my ſelfe to the common courſe? how eaſily am I ouer-caried with this humour of new-fangledneſſe? How much haue I waſted vpon the ſuperfluous decking of this earthly Tabernacle, by which the bowels of many of thy poore diſtreſſed ſaints might haue haue been greatly comforted?

How many good houres haue I spent in trimming this outward sheath, which might haue been much better bestowed vpon the adorning and beautifying of my soule? How often haue I been more busied how to set out my selfe before men, then how to become gracious before thee? O Lord, if thou shouldest be straight to marke, and to punish these things, what am I that I should endure it?

Blessed bee thy Name, who hast dealt thus mercifully with me, as not to giue me ouer to this vanity, or to leaue me to the practise of it without remorse. I beseech thee humble mee with beholding it, make my heart to mourne within me, that being a Professor of godlinesse, I should yet liue and take delight in such a grosse enormity. Make me to vow against it, and to cast it from me euen with indignation, as a menstruous cloth: stirre me vp, more to seeke the decking of my inner man with grace, then the pranking of my bodie with gay attire: encline my heart to looke rather after the robe of righteousnesse, then the garments of excesse: for the cloake of zeale, the girdle of verity, the shooes of the preparation of the Gospell of peace, and that holy instruction which shall bee a comely ornament to my head, and a chaine to my necke, then these painted trinkets, which shall perish with their vse, and are nothing but the badges of pride, the baits of lusts, and the cherishers of idlenesse. Make mee to remember, that the shame of sinne did first beget the necessitie of clothes, and that therefore apparell should rather be a matter of humiliation, then an occasion of pride.

Draw my eies from looking vpon my selfe, to the serious beholding of others wants, and let it be my practise to clothe the naked, and to giue their loines occasion to blesse mee, because they haue been warmed by my charitie.

Let me euer, not cast mine eie vpon the generall fashion of the times, but vpon those which are of the most religious and sober carriage, following their grauity, and framing my selfe to their example.

Cause me to thinke often vpon my naked entry into the world, and my naked departure out of the world, vpon my lying downe in the graue, and my making my bed in the darke, vpon my naked standing before the tribunall seat of Christ; that so my minde may more and more bee estranged from these outward garnishings, and may chiefely seeke for that white raiment, the innocency of thy Sonne, by which the filthy nakednesse of my soule may be couered, and I presented without spot before thee.

Oh lift vp my soule to affect this happinesse, and that for his onely sake, who being the brightnesse of thy glory, was yet pleased to become without beauty, and to hang naked on the Crosse, to the end that he might hide our sinnes from thy sight, euen Iesus Christ, Amen.

A Prayer of humiliation and sorrow, after some speciall sinne committed.

O My God, I am ashamed and confounded to lift vp mine eies vnto thee: mine iniquities are increased ouer my head, and my trespasses are growne vp vnto the heauen. I must needs wonder at thy great forbearance, that I am not euen swallowed vp, or swept away with some extraordinary iudgement.

And now, O Lord, especially hauing so grossely sinned against thee, and done so great an euill in thy sight: How haue I (vile Wretch that I am) wounded mine owne conscience? How haue I laid my selfe open to the malice and mischiefe of the Diuell? What a disgrace and slander haue I brought vpon my profession? What an offence and scandall haue I giuen vnto others? What a ioy will this be to the wicked, that they haue now by mee gotten something to speake euill of? But (aboue all, O Lord) how haue I dishonoured thee, whose fauours haue been ſo many, and ſo continuall towards mee? I know not with what names and termes to ſet out my ſinne, ſufficient to expreſſe the hainous and hideous nature thereof. When I thinke vpon thy patience, vpon the meanes of grace which thou haſt affoorded mee, vpon the light of knowledge which thou haſt giuen me, vpon the good motions (as it were ſo many gracious aduertiſements) which thou haſt from time to time ſtirred vp in mee, vpon the profeſsion which I make, vpon the ſundry promiſes and vowes of better obedience, with which I haue tied my ſelfe vnto thy Maieſtie, vpon the diuers admonitions which (by thy prouidence I know) haue been vſed to mee by thy Seruants, purpoſely to preuent and to ſtop this euill in mee: mee thinketh I may call it rebellion (which is as the ſinne of witch-craft) or preſumption in the higheſt degree. And yet (O Lord) I feele ſuch a benummednesſe to creepe vpon mee, ſuch a hardned cruſt to grow vpon my ſecret parts, that albeit I ſee my ſinne, and know it to bee exceeding great, neuertheleſſe, I cannot bemoane it, ſo lament it, ſo grieue for it, ſo deteſt and abhorre it as I ſhould.

Smite (O gracious God) ſmite, I beſeech thee, my flinty hearty, make it euen to melt within me, at the ſight of mine owne tranſgreſsions: Settle in it that godly ſorrow, which cauſeth repentance vnto ſaluation: Humble my Soule vnder thy mighty hand, and ſuffer mee not to freeze in the Dregges of mine owne corruptions.

Make mine head full of water, and mine eies a fountaine of teares, which may runne downe like a Riuer day and night. Oh let mee take no reſt, nor ſuffer the apple of mine eye to ceaſe: cauſe me to poure out my heart like water before thy face, that I may by all meanes, teſtifie the vnfained griefe of my ſoule, that I haue ſo diſpleaſed thee. And grant (O Lord) that I may not ſorrow ſo much, becauſe of hell and condemnation, which I haue made to be due vnto me: but that my chiefe vexation may bee to thinke how I haue abuſed thy mercy, and requited thy exceeding loue with ſo foule a treſpaſſe.

Withall (O moſt gracious Father) ſeeing there is mercy with thee, and that thou haſt no deſire that the wicked ſhould die, giue me leaue to become a ſuter vnto thy grace, not in mine owne name (for what am I that I ſhould preſſe into thy preſence?) but in the name of thy deareſt Sonne, the alone Mediatour, and the onely Peace-maker of his choſen. I moſt humbly beſeech thee for his ſake to haue mercy on me, O Lord, a plaiſter of his bloud ſhall be a moſt ſoueraigne medicine to cure my running and rotten and feſtered ſore. His ſtripes and wounds are of an healing nature: no Sope nor Nitre of mine owne tempering can purge away my filthineſſe; onely his bloud hath that ſcouring force, that it can make Scarlet and Crimſon ſin as white as wooll. O then, I pray thee, waſh mee thorowly from mine iniquitie, and according to the multitude of thy compaſsions, cleanſe me from my ſinne.

Turne thy face from me, and from my hatefull and enormious courſe, and looke vpon the perfect and vnſpotted righteouſneſſe of thy Sonne. Supply my emptineſſe out of his infinite fulneſſe, the depth whereof cannot be ſadomed, nor the ſtore thereof conſumed. Couer my vncleanneſſe with the robe of his holineſſe, euen with the garment of ſaluation, with which thou deckeſt and tireſt thine Elect. And albeit I am of all others which either haue bin, are, or ſhall be, the moſt vnworthy: yet vouchſafe to certifie my ſoule of thy grace and fauour: by the ſecret teaching of thy holy Spirit, make me to feele inwardly the ioy of thy ſaluation, reſtore to mee that ſweet taſte of thy loue, which I was wont to haue, and which I now haue robbed my ſelfe of, by this my diſobedience towards thee.

Let the apprehenſion of my ſinne be tempered with a comfortable application plication of thy mercy, that I may hold an euen course betwixt feareleſſe ſecurity and faithleſſe deſpaire: beholding at once, both my vileneſſe to humble mee, and the riches of thy grace to reuiue me.

And, as an euidence of thy loue in this behalfe, ſtrengthen mee by thy grace, to the making of the beſt vſe of mine owne corruptions. Grant that the thought of them may kill in me all pride of heart, and may make me to abaſe my ſelfe; and to become euen vile in mine owne ſight. Grant mee to bee hereupon the more watchfull ouer my courſe, the more diligent to auoide all inducements, and intiſements vnto theſe or the like euils, the more apt to be taught, the more willing to be admoniſhed, the more forward to begge thy aſsiſtance, and the more charitably compaſsionate towards others, rather pitying and bemoning and praying for, then cenſuring their infirmities.

And, Lord, ſuffer me not, I beſeech thee, to ſatisfie my ſelfe with this, that I haue once made ſome ſhew of humiliation and ſorrow for my falles: but grant I may increaſe in the performance of theſe duties, and may euery day renue and enlarge my repentance for particular ſlips, growing ſtill into a deeper deteſtation of my ſinnes, and deſiring with more and more earneſtnes, and ſtriuing to be renewed in the ſpirit of my minde: that ſo being cleanſed from all filthineſſe both of the fleſh and ſpirit, I may grow vp vnto full holineſſe in thy feare, through Chriſt Ieſus. In whoſe name onely I commend vnto thee my requeſts, and for whoſe ſake thou haſt promiſed to deny nothing to thy Seruants. So bee it.

A Praier in reſpect of Death, needfull at all times, but eſpecially in ſickneſſe.

O God, the God of the Spirits of all fleſh, and which haſt the keyes of Hell and of Death: thou haſt prepared them both, and thou ruleſt them both at thine owne pleaſure: I beſeech thee bee mercifull to a poore trembling and weake hearted ſinner, and vouchſafe to preſerue mee from the horror and extreamity of dread, into which I am euen now ready to fall.

When I conſider (O Lord) how that I dwell in a houſe of Clay, my foundation being in the Duſt, and that I muſt ere long make my bed in the darke, ſaying to corruption, Thou art my Father; and to the Worme, Thou art my Mother and my Sister: O how my belly trembleth, and what a kinde of rottenneſſe commeth into my bones? My ſpirit ſeemeth to faile me, and my heart within me being filled with diſmaiedneſſe. Eſpecially, when I thinke vpon the iudgement that commeth after it, and the ſtraitneſſe of that account which I am inſtantly to be called to, and vpon thoſe euerlaſting chaines vnder darkneſſe, in which the wicked are reſerued vnto the laſt Seſsions, I am then ſo euen ouerwhelmed with amazednes, that I ſeeme to my ſelfe for the preſent, not to know where to finde any true refreſhing. I am told by thy bleſſed and not deceiuing Word, that the ſting of death is mine owne ſinne, and with it I daily feele my ſelfe goared and galled, and wounded ſo exceedingly, that (me thinketh) to me (poore wretch) there can be no hope of recouery, but death muſt needs bee as a paſſage to leade me into the bottomleſſe priſon of hell.

Raiſe vp (O Lord, I beſeech thee) theſe my ſad and vnquiet thoughts, teach me how to ouercome theſe diſcouraging and killing perplexities, that death may not be vnto mee as a king of feare: nor I, as one of the wicked, whoſe hope doth periſh with their breath, and the Candle of whoſe comfort is put out, when thou art pleſed to take away their ſoule. Reuiue my memory, that I may call to minde, and comfortably ponder thoſe things which thy ſacred Word hath taught me, namely, how the nature of death is cleane altered to thy Seruants, the

ſting is plucked out, and it ſelf is ſwallowed vp in victory. To them the comming thereof ſhall bee a time of diſcharge, they ſhall by it bee freed from ſickneſſes of body, from anguiſhes of ſpirit, from all poſsibility of ſinning againſt their God, from the tedious and diſcontenting ſociety of the vngodly: their fleſh ſhall reſt in hope, their graues ſhall be vnto them as beds of eaſe, being ſweetned and ſeaſoned by the buriall of their Sauiour: the Angels ſhall giue attendance vpon their ſoules, to conuey them into Abrahams boſome, to the fellowſhip of beleeuers, to the Spirits of iuſt and perfit men: ſo ſhall they bee with Chriſt, which is beſt of all.

This (O Lord) is the happineſſe which commeth by death vnto thy choſen: Oh what are all the moſt tormenting ſickneſſes, the bitter pangs and ſorrowes of the graue, vnto ſuch a glorious exchange? Who would feare corruption, for a neuer fading crowne of righteouſneſſe? What is a momentany yeelding of the body to conſumption in the duſt, in compariſon of the euerlaſting preſeruation of the ſoule, with aſſurance alſo, that in the time appointed, theſe vile bodies ſhall by the mighty working of thy beloued Sonne, be faſhioned like vnto his owne glorious body, and ſo both bodies and ſoules be for euer with him in his Kingdome?

Teach me, O Lord, effectually to apply theſe things to mine owne comfort, that ſo this timorouſneſſe proceeding from the guilt of ſin, may be turned into a cheerefull expectation, and euen a longing for the day of my diſſolution.

And, leſt I ſhould beguile my owne ſoule, in laying claime to that ſpirituall refreſhing which belongs not to me, make me to labour for thoſe aſſured euidences and vndeceiuing forerunners of a happy departure.

I know, O Lord, that if I liue here without conſcience, I ſhall ſurely die without comfort. Holineſſe heere is the way and path to future happineſſe. I muſt ſeeke to glorifie thee, if I deſire to be glorified with thee. I muſt fight the good fight againſt Satan, againſt the World, againſt mine owne corruption; I muſt faithfully fulfill my courſe, and performe the ſeruice to which thou haſt appointed me; I muſt know thy truth, and keepe the faith in ſoundneſſe and ſinceritie to the end: otherwiſe it will be in vaine to expect a crowne of righteouſneſſe.

I muſt come to the firſt reſurrection, or elſe I ſhall neuer eſcape the ſecond death. Grant me therefore grace (I humbly pray thee) to ſerue thee in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe all my daies, and to endeauour alwaies to haue a cleere conſcience towards thee, and towards all men. Kill my corruption in me, that I may be euen dead to ſin, but aliue to thee in Ieſus Chriſt.

And becauſe if I liue after the fleſh, taking thought for it to fulfill it, I ſhall die: therefore, I beſeech thee, to mortifie the deeds of the body by thy ſpirit, that ſo I may haue my fruit in holineſſe, and my end eternall life.

Teach mee often to number my daies, and to conſider the vncertaine certainty of my end, that I may die euen euery day, ſtill looking and ſtill preparing for my change, and making account that each day may bee the day of my diſſolution.

Strengthen alſo my weak and faint faith, make me ſtrong in thee, and in the power of thy might; ſeale me with the holy Spirit of promiſe, as with the earneſt of my heauenly inheritance: that ſo no anguiſh of ſickneſſe may diſcourage me, no pangs of death diſmay me, no aſſault of Satan ouercome me: but that, come death when it wil, or in what manner it ſhall pleaſe thee, I may boldly (through Chriſt) commit my ſoule to thee as vnto a faithfull Creator. Grant me this comfortable bleſsing, for his ſake, who died to free me from death, and from him that had the power of death, euen for Chriſt Ieſus ſake, Amen.

A Prayer more ſpecially fitted to the ſtate and occaſions of a ſicke perſon.

OMoſt mercifull and gracious God, thou, whoſe prouidence reacheth into the moſt with-drawne and ſolitary places, and which cauſeſt the beames of thy fauour to ſhine euen vpon chiefe ſinners, vouchſafe to caſt thy compaſsionate eye vpon thine afflicted creature, whom thou haſt laid vpon this bed of ſickneſs. Iuſt, O Lord, it is with thee thus to chaſten me: nay, if thou ſhouldeſt cruſh my body into many peeces, and ſuddenly plunge me into hell, it were no more then my due deſert. What a ſtained ſinner am I by nature, ſtript of all goodneſſe, and eaſie to bee wrought vnto any, euen the vileſt euill?

What a world of treſpaſſes haue been ſince committed by mee, notwithſtanding the greatneſſe of thy patience, and the variety of good meanes which thou haſt vſed both to informe and guide me vnto godlineſſe? I will not therefore (O Lord) I dare not, I cannot pleade againſt thee. It is my duty rather to magnifie thy mercy, who art pleaſed ſo mildly and ſo fatherly to correct me: it being free to thy iuſtice, to cut me off as an eare of Corne, and to giue me ouer to the prince of darkeneſſe, and to leaue me for euer to that wofull kingdome of eternall miſery.

Vnworthy I am (I moſt willingly confeſſe) becauſe of my former ſlackneſſe, and coldneſſe in this duty of calling vpon thy Name, to haue any ſmall acceſſe into thy preſence. Yet ſeeing thou art wont euer more to reſpect the truth of thine owne promiſe, then the deſerts of thoſe which pray vnto thee; therefore I beſeech thee, which art pleaſed to call thy ſelfe The hearer of Prayers, to hearken vnto the harty and vnfained deſire of my ſoule. Sanctifie vnto mee (O Lord) this preſent ſickneſſe, let it be as thy ſchoole, in which I may truely learne to know my ſelfe more effectually then I eere tofore.

Make me to conſider ſeriouſly, that all paine and griefe is but the fruit of ſinne, and that as all ſickneſſe naturally makes way for death, ſo death (in it ſelfe) is the fore-runner of eternall condemnation. Bleſſe this thought and this meditation ſo vnto mee, that I may make it my firſt care (now in this viſitation) to ſeeke peace and aſſurance of reconcilement with thy Maieſty: To this end giue me a deepe touch and a ſenſible vnderſtanding of my ſinnes by-paſt, take from mee all guile of ſpirit, all diſpoſition to flatter or to ſooth vp my ſelfe, or to leſſen either the number or quality of mine iniquities. Cauſe me euen to break and plough vp my heart, to ſearch and to try my wayes, that ſo out of the abundance of my feeling, I may poure out a moſt plentifull and ſincere confeſsion before thee. Let mee remember it to be in vaine, to ſeeke to hide that from thee, which thou (before whom all things are naked and open) doeſt know more fully and more directly then my ſelfe; and that the diſcouery and laying open of my ſinnes, is the next way to find thy mercy in forgiuing them.

Adde withall that ſtrength vnto my ſcant and ſmoaking Faith, that I may, amid the ſight of mine owne tranſgreſsions, lay hold vpon the merit and fulneſſe of my Sauiour. Make mee heartily to diſclaime all hope of helpe by my ſelfe, or any other Creature in heauen or Earth whomſoeuer, and to caſt all my burden vpon him, who by himſelfe hath purged ſinne, and whoſe death is an abſolute and an all-ſufficient ſacrifice for the guilt of all beleeuers. Oh that I may feele my ſelfe knit and vnited vnto him: ſo ſhall I, in and by him, bee preſented blameleſſe to thy Maieſtie.

And becauſe (O Lord) I am full of imperfections, and there is in my nature much weakeneſſe, and a great deale of frowardneſſe and readineſſe to repine and rebell againſt thy ordinance, therefore furniſh mee with neceſſary ceſſary graces, and with all ſuch gifts as thou knoweſt to be fit for my preſent caſe. Endue me with patience to beare whatſoeuer it ſhall bee thy pleaſure to lay vpon me, and meekely to ſubmit my ſelfe to thy moſt wiſe appointments: Aſſure mee that thou which knoweſt whereof I am made, and that I am but duſt, wilt not oppreſſe mee with more then thou ſhalt giue mee ſtrength and power to endure. Let me not deſire life, otherwiſe then for the further aduancement of thy glory. Subdue in mee all loue and liking of this preſent world, grant that the hope of the glory which ſhall bee ſhewed heereafter, may be ſo ſtrong within mee, that all things may ſeeme vile vnto mee in compariſon thereof. Make me comfortably capable of the aduice and counſell of my Chriſtian friends, which in their loue ſhall goe about to refreſh my ſoule.

Make me able alſo to ſpeake profitably and for good to thoſe that belong vnto me. Put vpon mee, and in me, charitable affections & thoughts, to, and concerning others, being ready to ſatisfie where I haue failed, and to remit, euen where I haue receiued the greateſt wrong.

Prepare me to my laſt conflict, and ſtrengthen me againſt Satans aſſaults, that in deſpight of his malice, yet I may ſtill hold mee faſt by thee, and reſolue, though thou ſlay me, yet to truſt vpon thee.

And becauſe (ſuch is thy great goodneſſe to vs thy poore Creatures) ſickneſſe doth not alwayes exerciſe his full ſtrength vpon our bodies: therefore giue mee (I beſeeeh thee) that wiſedome to make vſe of euery breathing, and of euery little time of eaſe which thou doeſt afford mee, that in it I may gather ſtrength againſt the times of greater anguiſh.

Bring ſtill into my minde, thoſe things which I haue from time to time learned by thy word, that thereby I may be quickned, and finde comfort in my greateſt need. And alwaies (O Lord) as the time of departure ſhal approach, ſo let my ſoule draw neerer vnto thee, my heart powerfully crying, when ſickneſſe ſhal take away the vſe of my tongue, Into thy hands I commend my Spirit. Come Lord Ieſu, come quickly. And when death hath parted my ſoule from my body, let thy Angels (which doe alwaies by thy appointment, pitch their Tents about thy Seruants) conuey it into that place of reſt, which the blood of thy Sonne hath prouided and purchaſed for thy choſen. To which thy Sonne, with thy ſelfe and thy bleſſed Spirit, be praiſe and thankſgiuing, now and euermore, Amen.

At the very point of death.

O Lord God of my ſaluation, who haſt thy dwelling on high, and yet abaſeſt thy ſelfe to behold the things in heauen and earth, vouchſafe (I moſt humbly pray thee) to take notice of the ſighes and groanes of thy poore vnworthy Seruant. The ſnares of death haue compaſſed mee, and the griefes of the graue haue caught mee. I am weakened, and ſore broken, mine eye is ſorrowfull through mine affliction, my bones are vexed, my heart panteth, my ſtrength faileth mee, and is dried vp like a pot-ſheard, my tongue cleaueth to my iawes, thine arrowes haue light vpon mee, and haue euen drunke vp my Spirit. I am brought to the Gates of the pit, and to the duſt of death; I ſee that mine habitation is departing, and is in remoouing from mee like a Shepheards Tent, thou art euer ready to cut off my life like a Weauer. The pangs which are vpon mee are vnſpeakable: if my ſtrength were the ſtrength of ſtones, or my fleſh of braſſe, I could not continue to endure them.

Before thee therefore, O thou moſt gracious Father, doe I poure out my whole deſire, for to thee do I declare my paine: forſake me not, O Lord, be not thou farre from mee, my God, my hope is euen in thee. Thou makeſt the wound, and bindeſt it vp: thou ſmiteſt, teſt, and thy hands make whole: thou bringeſt downe to the graue, and thou raiſeſt vp.

Oh ponder my words, and looke vpon the ſorrowfull ſighings of mine afflicted ſoule: poure the oile of gladneſſe into my bruiſed ſpirit: as the ſtrength of my body doth decreaſe, ſo make the feeling of thy loue in Chriſt Ieſus to encreaſe: aſſure my ſoule that thou haſt caſt all my ſinnes behind thy backe; and that there is a firme and vnalterable peace made betwixt thee and me, by thy deare Son, who is the Prince of peace. Let thy ſpirit witnes to my ſpirit, that the ſting of death is puld out, and the head of him who had the dower of death, that is the diuell, ſo bruiſed, that neither of theſe ſhall bring any the leaſt annoyance to my ſoule: that I may, in a kind of holy manner, triumph ouer them both, and ſay, O death, where is thy ſting? Oh graue, Oh hell, where is thy victory?

Rebuke Satan, I beſeech thee, that he may not interrupt my comfort, nor ſteale from mee thoſe gracious pledges of thy loue which thou haſt giuen me. Cleare the eies of my faith, that I may euen ſee (with Stephen) the heauens open, and the Sonne of man ſtanding at thy right hand ready to receiue me. Giue me that inward ioy in the holy Ghoſt, and that comfortable taſte of the powers of the world to come, that I may euen forget my preſent anguiſh, and may quietly endure all, for that infinite happineſſe which is ſet before me. Let me euen long for my appointed time, as the Seruant longeth for the ſhadow, and as the Hireling looketh for the end of his worke: let this life be vile before me in compariſon of eternall life: and although the ſocietie of my friends hath beene, and yet is ſweet vnto me, yet ſo fixe my heart, I pray thee, vpon the fellowſhip of the Spirits of iuſt and perfit men, which are in heauen, that my whole deſire may be towards it. And when theſe increaſing throes and pangs, theſe faint and conſuming fits which are now come vpon mee, ſhall haue enfeebled my tongue, and depriued mee of ſpeech, yet then let thy ſpirit within me make requeſt for me with ſighes and grones, which cannot be expreſſed, euer crying, Lord Ieſu receiue my ſoule, O Lord receiue my ſpirit. And ſo (Lord) let death bee to me, euen as the Angell was to Peter, a guide to leade me out of priſon into liberty, a meſſenger ſent from thee to conuey mee from this vale of teares, into eternall bliſſe: and that for his ſake, who hath ſweetned the graue with his owne body, and deſtroyed death, by ſubiecting himſelfe vnto mortalitie, and now ſits at the right hand of thy throne, euen Ieſus Chriſt, the very anchor of my ſoule, and the foundation and ſtaffe of my hope, Amen.

A direction for thoſe who deſire to perform the Chriſtian duty of Prayer, on the behalfe of a ſicke friend or neighbor whom they come to viſit.

WE are vnworthy (O Lord) to ſpeak vnto thy Maieſty, either for our ſelues or others: yet this duty lying vpon vs by command, and hauing a promiſe of hearing annexed thereunto, we are bold in Ieſus Chriſt to commend vnto thee the weake eſtate of this thy Seruant.

All ſickneſs is from thee, and to thee belong the iſſues of death. Thou killeſt, and thou makeſt aliue; thou bringeſt downe to the graue, and thou raiſeſt vp: to whom ſhal we go in this and other our neceſsities, but onely vnto thee? we could wiſh (O gracious God) the continuance of his Chriſtian fellowſhip, the lengthning and enlarging of his daies: but we willingly ſubiect our wills to thy determining. Thou, Lord, knoweſt what is beſt, and thereunto make vs, we beſeech thee, willingly & readily to ſubſcribe, and to deſire both his life and our owne, only ſo far forth as may bee for his and our further good in the more diligent and zealous aduancement of thy glory. Frame him alſo, we pray thee, vnto the like yeelding: and ſo bleſſe to him this this visitation, that by it he may bee more and more humbled in the sight of his owne sinnes, and may increase withall in an vnfained and longing desire after Christ.

Enlighten his eies, that hee may know what is the hope of his calling, and what is the exceeding greatnesse of thy mercy and power towards all beleeuers. Stengthen his faith, that he may with it (vtterly renouncing himselfe) lay fast hold vpon the merits of our onely Sauiour.

Protect him against Satan, blunt the edge of his assaults, that they may neuer wound him to despaire. Remoue from him a dull spirit, and all secure and hardned thoughts, all worldly desires, all lingring after the deceiuing sweetnes of these earthly things. Giue him patience to beare, and constancy to endure whatsoeuer it shall be thy pleasure to inflict. Vouchsafe him comfort in conscience, ioy in the spirit, peace in beleeuing, together with a setled and well grounded expectation of eternall life and saluation by thy Sonne.

Grant to vs tender and feeling hearts, that both his sorrowes and the griefes of other thy Seruants, may be apprehended by vs, as if they were our owne. Let the word of grace be in our lips, that we may be able to speak holily, soundly, and cheerefully to the comfort of his soule.

Teach vs in him, and in this house of mourning, to see the end of vs all, and to lay it to our hearts, that so we may labour to be prepared for our last departure. All these graces, both for him and for our selues, wee beg in all humility at thy mercifull hands, in the name and worthinesse of thy beloued Sonne, calling further on thee, as hee hath taught vs in his word: Our Father, &c.

A Thankesgiuing for a sicke man, if God be pleased to send recouery.

SVffer me not, O Lord, to bee in the number of those, who are forward to aske in the time of need, but careless to shew themselues thankfull when mercy is bestowed. Make mee as desirous to come vnto thee with this sacrifice of praise, as I was ready to beg ease and refreshing in the day of my great necessity.

Thou hast chastned mee (O gracious God) and corrected me, but thou hast not giuen me ouer vnto death. I looked to haue beene cleane depriued of the residue of my yeeres, and thought I should haue seene man no more among the Inhabitants of the world: but it was thy pleasure to deliuer my soule from the pit of corruption. Oh what shall I render vnto thee for this and all other thy benefits towards mee? Oh how and by what meanes shall I shew my selfe thankfull to thy Maiesty?

I haue nothing (O Lord) to render thee but the calues of my lippes: accept my seruice (I beseech thee) in Iesus Christ: and let not the memory of this thy kindnesse die within mee, but grant that I may often recount thy mercy, working therewith vpon mine owne heart, and applying it as an effectuall motiue to obedience.

Make mee euer mindfull of the vowes and promises which I made in my sicknesse, to serue thee more faithfully then heretofore, that I may make conscience to performe them, knowing that thou delightest not in fooles: and that by my neglect herein, I shall lay my selfe open vnto a greater iudgement. Teach me also to remember this, that albeit thou hast now giuen vnto me some little respite, yet I must not deceiue my selfe in putting farre off the day of my death, but that I ought rather to vse my health and strength to the better fitting, and more effectuall preparing my selfe thereunto. Together, with the increase of bodily and outward strength, increase in me strength of care to walke with thee, and to approue my selfe vnto thee in all holy conuersation and godlinesse, being more zealous in Religion, more watchfull ouer my waies, more earnest in Prayer, more feruent

in Spirit, more careful to profit by thy Word, more faithfull in my place and calling then heretofore, alwaies looking for the blessed hope and appearing of Iesus Christ my Sauiour: to whom with thee and the holy Ghost, let my heart feelingly and effectually giue all honour, praise, might, Maiesty and dominion, both now and for euer, Amen.

A Prayer for a woman in the time of her trauaile.

O Lord, I now find by experience the truth and certainty of thy Word, & the smart of the punishment which thou laidst vpon mee being in the loynes of my Grandmother Eue for my disobedience toward thee: Thou hast greatly increased the sorrowes of our sexe, and our bearing of children is full of paine. Teach mee by this, to see the desert of sinne, and to grow into the hatred of that which hath brought into the world such store of misery. Giue mee true repentance and pardon for my sinnes past, that they may not stand at this time, and in this my need, betwixt me and thy mercy. Giue me a comfortable feeling of thy loue in Christ, which may sweeten all other pangs, though neuer so violent or extreame: Make mee still to lift vp my Soule vnto thee in my greatest anguish, knowing that thou alone must giue a blessing to the ordinary meanes for my safe deliuery. Strengthen my weake body to the bearing of what sorrow soeuer, by which it shall seeme good vnto thee to take triall of me.

Make me to remember, that howsoeuer it be with me, yet I am alwaies in thy hand, whose mercies faile not, and which canst giue issue to the greatest paine. And when thou hast safely giuen mee the expected fruit of my wombe, make mee with a thankefull heart to consecrate both it and the residue of thy life to my seruice, through Iesus Christ my Sauiour and Redeemer, Amen.

A Thanksgiuing after deliuery.

Blessed be thy great name, O my most deare and louing Father, for thy large mercy to mee most weake and sinfull woman.

Thou hast shewed thy power in my frailty, and thy louing kindnesse hath preuailed against my vnworthinesse. Thou mightest for my sinnes haue left mee to perish in my great extreamity: but thou hast compassed mee about with ioyfull deliuerance. Maruailous (O Lord) are thy workes, infinite are thy mercies, and my Soule by present experience knoweth it well. O my soule, praise thou the Lord, and all that is within me praise his holy name My soule, praise thou the Lord, and forget not all his benefits: hee hath heard thy prayers, he hath looked vpon thy sorrow, hee hath forgiuen thine iniquities, hee hath healed thine infirmities, he hath redeemed thy life from the graue, hee hath euen crowned thee with compassions.

Oh giue me, I beseech thee, a thankfull heart, not onely now, while the memory and sense of thy fauour is fresh before me, but continually, euen so long as I haue my being.

Grant that I may learne by this euidence of thy mercy and might, for euer hereafter to depend vpon thee: Quicken me vp to all holy duties, that my thankfulnesse may appeare in my pure and Christian cariage.

Make me a kinde and carefull Mother, willing to vndergoe the paines and trouble of education; let no niceneſſe or curiositie hinder mee from those seruices to which both Nature and Religion haue appointed mee. Let me also be carefull hereafter, when time shall require, to season that which thou hast giuen mee, with the knowledge of thee, and of thy Sonne: that my desire may manifestly appeare to bee set for the increasing of thy kingdome. Vouchsafe so to order my affections, and to bring them into obedience vnder thee, that if it ſhould bee thy pleaſure either now or hereafter to take this infant from me, I may patiently ſubmit my ſelfe to thy appointment.

And now, O good GOD, perfit in me that ſtrength which thou haſt begun, make me to grow in care to ſerue thee faithfully, both in the duties of piety, and in other buſineſſes of my place and calling, that I may bee a comfott to my husband, an example to my neighbour, a grace to my profeſsion, and a meanes of glory to thy Name, through Ieſus Chriſt my Lord and Sauiour, Amen.

A Prayer for thoſe which are imployed in the aſſiſtance and helpe of a trauailing woman.

IT is not our diligence (O Lord) or paines which can doe any thing without thy bleſsing, and our ſins are ſufficient to bring thy curſe vpon whatſoeuer we vndertake.

Be pleaſed, we pray thee, to bee reconciled to vs in the bloud of thy Son: Make vs to remember that wee are here in thy preſence, and that all our thoughts, words, and actions are open to thy ſight: proſper the buſines for which we are come together: put far from vs all ſuperſtitious conceits, and idle fancies, and teach vs to ſeeke helpe only from thy grace.

Enable vs to ſpeake comfortably vnto this pained woman, that we may further her dependance vpon thy holy Maieſty, and may bee a meanes vnder thee of her true refreſhing in her ſharpeſt fittes. Furniſh vs with skill, and her with ſtrength, patiently to waite the appointed time of her deliuerance: and knit all our hearts vnto thee, that wee may feare thy Name, noting and obſeruing thy Mercy and power in all thy workes, and ſtudying to giue thee praiſe and glory for the ſame, through Ieſus Chriſt our only Lord and Sauiour, Amen.

A Thankeſgiuing after, when God hath bleſſed their paines in the womans deliuery.

O Lord, wee haue ſeene thy goodneſſe, and haue receiued an apparant token of thy readineſſe to heare the prayers of thoſe which call vpon thee, and to ſuccour thoſe which flie vnto thee for thy helpe.

Thou haſt giuen eaſe and deliuerance to the woman, light and life to the infant, ioy and gladneſſe to vs all. The glory and praiſe is thine alone: fill our harts with thankfulnes, and make vs forward both now and hereafter to prouoke & ſtir vp one another therevnto. And let not our thankfulneſſe ſtand in words onely or outward ſhewes, but cauſe it to appeare in our whole courſe: that the obedience, the ſobriety, the modeſty, the vertue of our liues, may witneſſe the thankfull feeling of our hearts. Goe on in thy mercy (we pray thee) both to the Mother and her babe, continue and increaſe their ſtrength, ſo as may ſerue beſt for thy glory. And as thou haſt added one vnto the number of mankinde, ſhewing thy wonderfull wiſedome and power both in the framing of him in the wombe, and in bringing him forth into this light: ſo in thy time adde him alſo to thy Church, and beget him againe vnto a liuely hope, by the immortall ſeede of thy holy Word, deliuering him from the power of darkneſſe, (in which by nature wee are all) into the glorious liberty of thy choſen.

And if it ſhall ſeeme ſo good to thee, to lay any further triall either of ſickneſſe, or death vpon this thy ſeruant, or vpon the fruit of her wombe, prepare vs al to a patient & quiet bearing of thy hand, & to a contended & comfortable reſting vpon thy gracious prouidence: aſſuring our ſelues, that all things ſhall turne to the good and benefit of thy choſen. Heare vs, O Lord, and accept vs: & forgiuing the weaknes of our prayers, grant vs all needful graces, out of the rich ſtore-houſe of thy thy bottomleſſe bountie, and that for Ieſus Chriſt our gracious Redeemer, Amen.

A Prayer for a Souldier, fighting for his Countrey or the Confederates thereof.

O Lord, it is thy glory to bee called The Lord of hoſts: and it is thou alone, from whom, when men haue made their moſt politicke and puiſſant preparations, the victory muſt be looked for. Draw my heart, I beſeech thee from all relying vpon my owne valor, or vpon the ſtrength of the battell in which I ſtand: and teach me to looke vpward, and to waite and truſt onely vpon thee.

Thou giueſt conqueſt, and thou giueſt courage: thou deliuereſt from the perill of the ſword, or elſe makeſt death a meanes of happineſſe to thy ſeruants. Forgiue my ſinnes, I pray thee, and aſſure me of pardon by the witneſſe of thy Spirit, that the gilt thereof make not my heart to tremble in mee, and to behold death as a meſſenger to conuey me into hell. If thou (O Lord) bee on my ſide, peace being made betwixt thee and my ſoule through Chriſt, what can bee againſt me, what hazard can befall my ſoule? Nothing ſhall bee able to depriue mee of thy loue. Let not ſpoile, or bloud, or mine own aduancement bee the ends of mine attempts, but make mee to aime onely at thy glory in the defence of thy truth, and in the good and ſafety of the State wherein I liue.

The iſſue of all things to thee (Oh Lord) is knowne, but to man it is hidden: prepare me therefore indifferently to whatſoeuer ſhall befall mee. If I die, giue mee comfort in my laſt breathing, and take my ſoule into thy gracious hands: If I be taken captiue, giue mee patience, giue mee wiſedome and godly courage to doe nothing contrary to the honour of my Countrey, or preiudicial to the profeſſion of a faithfull Chriſtian. If I return with life and victory, make mee thankfull: keepe me from taking from thee any part of thy glory. Preſerue mee from thoſe riotous, laſciuious, and blaſpheming courſes, which are the vſuall fruits of good ſucceſſe: Let mee not think deuotion to be an enemy to reſolution, or that a religious feare of thy Maieſty doth abate the ſpirit that ſhould be in a Souldier: but ſettle mee in this, that the aſſurãce of a lawfull cauſe, the hope and confidence of a better life by the merits of Chriſt, the care to pleaſe the and to depend vpon thy power, are the onely true grounds of valour, which can giue a man boldnes and life in the day of battaile. Vouchſafe me theſe & all other needful fauors in and for Chriſt Ieſus ſake, Amen.

A Prayer for a man trauelling by Sea, about his lawfull buſineſſe.

O Heauenly Father, vnto whoſe eares the prayers of humbled ſinners haue freedome of acceſſe out of euery place: Let it pleaſe thee to encline to mee, who being prouoked by mine owne preſent neede, and taking heart vnto my ſelfe by thy liberall and large promiſes, doe deſire to poure out my ſoule before thy Maieſty: Here, O Lord, by reaſon of the calling and place, in which it hath bin thy prouidence to ranke mee, I am come downe to the ſea in a ſhip, and I doe now ſee thy works, and continually behold thy wonders in the deep. How eaſie a thing it is vnto thee, when thou raiſeſt a ſtorme, and lifteſt vp the waues, not only to toſſe vs too & fro, and to make vs ſtagget like a drunken man, but vtterly to ſwallow vs vp, and to turne vpon our heads in a moment, the bottome of theſe mooning houſes in which we are? It is thy great and exceeding mercy, that theſe ſwelling billowes, and foaming ſurges doe not drinke vs in; and ſo make our bodies to become as a prey, either to that great Leuiathan, the Whale, whom thou haſt made to play heere, or to ſome other of thy creatures, with infinite variety and troupes whereof this vaſt body is repleniſhed. But it is euen thou (O mighty Lord) which laydſt the foundations of the earth, and which didſt ſhut vp the ſea with doores: thou didſt firſt gather theſe waters together as vpon an heap, and ſtoredſt vp the depths in thy treaſures: though the waues are maruailous, though the flouds lift vp their voyce, though the waters rage and be troubled, and the very mountaines ſhake at the ſurges of the ſame, yet thou art much more mighty, thou ſoone appeaſeſt the noiſe, and turneſt the ſtorme into a calme.

Looke graciouſly therefore vpon me, I beſeech thee, teach me to vnderſtand the greatneſſe of thy terrour, by that fearefulneſſe of thy Creatures which I doe ſtill behold: Cauſe mee to reſt my hope and comfort vpon the power of thy mercy, let that bee the anchor of my ſoule both ſure and ſtedfaſt. And leſt my ſins not being pardoned, ſhould be a hinderance & ſtoppage of thy fauour, I pray thee, ſettle in me a hearty and vnfained deteſtation of them, a godly griefe and ſorrow for them, a ſtedfaſt reſolution and purpoſe in the whole courſe of my life to ſtriue againſt them. Open my heart, that I may often and earneſtly ſue and entreate for thy grace in thy Sonne, and may neuer giue ouer, till I feele in my conſcience ſome comfortable aſſurance that thou haſt forgiuen me. Fit and prepare mee to thine owne appointments: If it be thy pleaſure that I ſhould here end my dayes, I know well, that the ſoule which thou keepeſt, cannot miſcarry: To thee therefore I commend my ſpirit, forſake me not, I pray thee, in my laſt breathing. Albeit theſe waues may ouerwhelme my body, yet let them not bee able to quench my comfort, or plunge me downe into deſpaire.

Grant me euer to lay faſt hold vpon my Sauiour, that neither ſea, death, nor hell may ſeparate mee from his grace. And if it ſhall ſeeme good vnto thee, to bring me ſafe vnto that hauen where I ſhould be; O that I may neuer forget thy kindnes, but may make conſcience to performe that obedience which I am now ready to vow in my neceſsity. Make me alwaies to take as great delight to ſeru thee, as I am now forward to aske, and deſirous to receiue life and ſafety from thee. Heare me O Lord, in theſe and other my petitions, forgiuing my vnworthineſſe in the merits of Ieſus Chriſt thy bleſſed Son, and my great Redeemer, Amen.

A Prayer applyed to the ſtate and condition of a malefactor, condemned by law to die, and drawing neere to the time of his execution.

VOuchſafe (O thou GOD of all Mercy and compaſsion) to looke with pitty vpon the moſt woefull caſe of a poore wretch, ready by the ſword of Iuſtice to be cut off, as vnworthy to liue amongſt men, and like alſo without thy ſpeedy fauour to be ſhut out of heauen, and to haue my part in the ſecond death: Truth, it is O Lord, that all this, though it bee grieuous, yet is no more then my deſert: and touching that bodily death, whereto I am adiudged, I muſt confeſs it to bee thy mercy and goodneſſe toward me, that I haue bin found out by the eye of the Magiſtrate, and ſtopped by the power of authority from going on into further euill. I beſeech thee, that my death may bee both a chaſtiſement to me, and an aduertiſement to others, to containe themſelues within the liſts of ciuill obedience.

But concerning my ſoule, which is now ere long to appeare before the Tribunall ſeate of thy great Maieſty, I humbly pray thee to be merciſull thereunto. I cannot but acknowledge, that if thou giue me my due recompence, I muſt needs be thruſt into that dreadfull place of infinite and eternall torment, which thou haſt prepared for the wicked, the burning whereof is fier & much wood, & which thy breath like a riuer of brimſtone doth kindle: neither ſee I in my ſelfe or in any creature, any means or poſsibility to eſcape. Fearefull vnto me hath bin the face of an earthly Iudge, & the ſentence of death to bee inflicted vpon this my house of clay, hath made my heart to quake within me: What then will become of me, when I shall be arraigned before thee, at whose rebuking the very foundations of the earth are discouered, and before whom no man liuing can be iustified? Thou (O Lord) knowest all mine iniquities, they are sealed vp with thee, as in a bagge, they are all noted in thy registers: although I haue many times sought for the couering of my euill wayes, to hide my selfe in the darkenesse of the night, supposing that no eye should see mee, yet thou hast still compassed my paths, and been accustomed to all my waies, there hath not been a thought in my heart, or a word in my tongue, but thou hast wholly knowne it: Often haue I said in my heart, God will not regard, hee hath forgotten, hee hideth away his face and will neuer see, I shal neuer bee mooued nor bee in danger: Thy word I had no delight to heare, I hated knowledge, I would none of thy counsel, I sought to dam vp the mouth of my conscience, that it might not checke mee: when my friends admonished me, I hated & scorned their reproofe: Thus it was a pastime to mee to do naughtily, wickednes was sweet in my mouth, I fauoured it, and would not be perswaded to forsake it. Iustly therefore, O Lord hast thou thus ouertaken me, and made me to eate the fruit of mine owne way, bringing mee to bee a spectacle to the world, to die as one of the fooles of the people: Yet, O gracious God, sith there is mercy with thee, and that thou art very ready to forgiue, be fauourable I intreat thee, to mee a most vnworthy sinner.

Manasses being put in fetters, and bound in chaines, prayed vnto thee, and humbled himselfe very greatly before thee in his tribulation, and thou wast entreated of him: the woman of Canaan, whom thou termest to bee no better then a dogge, yet thou didst afford her some crummes of thy mercy, and didst cause it to be vnto her as shee desired.

The theefe, at his execution, confessed his sinne, and prayed to be remembred in thy kingdome, and thou didst promise him an entrance into paradise. Oh Lord, are not these things written for my learning, that I thorow the comfort of these examples might haue hope? Hath thy Word spoken it in vain, that at what time soeuer a sinner sigheth vnto thee, thou wilt put all his wickednesse from before thee? Shal I thinke that thou wilt call mee being laden with my sins, to come vnto thee, and then when I come wilt not accept me? Make (mee I pray thee) to see the depth of my sin, that I may not beguile my soule, by lessening either the weight or number of mine iniquities. Worke me to a true & vndissembled acknowledgement & confession of them, euen before others, and they which see my end and know my euill, may haue some euidence of my repentance, and may learne by mee to beware of the deceitfulnesse of sinne. Enable mee to looke with the eye of my faith vpon my crucified Sauiour, casting my selfe wholly vpon him, and desiring by him to be hidden from thy wrath. Giue me some taste of thy loue, and some inward and secret pledge of thy beeing reconciled to me for his sake.

Strengthen mee against the feare of death: that albeit I haue euery way iust cause to tremble at it, being both the desert of my offence to men, and the wages of my sin against thee: yet hauing some assurance in my soule, that the sting thereof is plucked out, I may embrace it in my bosome, and entertaine it as an end appointed for my misery, and as a meanes to bring me vnto happinesse.

Thus, O Lord, with fulnesse of desire (out of the bottome of this misery, and shame which I am fallen into) to flye vnto thy mercy, and to bee shrouded vnder the shadow of thy grace, I commend my selfe, my soule and my body into thy hands, praying thee not to cast off him, which hath no hope but onely in thee, and that alone, in and by Iesus Christ my onely Lord and Sauiour, Amen.

A Prayer out of the ſerious Meditations of the laſt Iudgement.

O Lord, thou haſt reuealed it in thy holy Word, that the faſhion and figure of this World muſt paſſe away, and that as by appointment we muſt all die, ſo alſo wee muſt all appeare before the iudgement ſeat of Chriſt, and that from thence ſome ſhall goe into euerlaſting paine, and ſome into life eternall. This the Atheiſts and Epicures, and Libertines of the World, doe thinke to bee but a meere fable, They ſay in their hearts, The Lord will doe neither good nor euill. But yet, O Lord, as thou haſt deliuered this in thy Word, (of which one iote or tittle ſhall not periſh) ſo thou haſt not left it without a ſufficient proofe in the very boſome of euery man: The accuſing or excuſing of our owne thoughts, the ſecret checkes accompanying thoſe euils to which none is priuy, the feares of wicked men, who are continually as one that trauaileth of childe, flying oft-times when none purſueth them, and being chaſed at the very ſhaking of a leafe, are an euident proofe of thy prouidence, and a certaine aſſurance written as with the point of a Diamond (which can neuer be done out) that verily there is fruit for the righteous, and doubtleſſe there is a God that iudgeth the earth. This truth (O Lord my God) thou haſt taught mee to beleeue, and I make no doubt, but it ſhall ſhortly come to paſſe. It was ſaid long ſince, that the Iudge did ſtand before the doore, and that hee which ſhould come, would come and would not tarry: and now the height of iniquity is ſuch, and ſinne is grown to that perfection, that it cannot ſtand with thy Iuſtice much longer to forbeare. Teach me (I pray thee) as I doe know and beleeue this, ſo to make a true and profitable vſe of my knowledge. Let it be euer in my thoughts, and in my beſt and moſt ſerious meditations, when I am about the proneneſſe of my corrupt nature to doe euill, let the remembrance hereof bee a bridle to me to reſtraine mee when I am like by the iniquity of the times to ſuffer euill among men, let the expectation of the right which thou wilt then doe to the oppreſſed, bee a comfort to me to refreſh me. Eſpecially, O Lord, grant mee to keepe daily (as it were) a priuy Seſſions in the cloſet of mine owne heart, arraigning my ſelfe before thy Iudgement ſeat, ſearching and trying my waies, accuſing my ſelfe before thee, from whom nothing can be hid, confeſſing my vnworthineſſe, bewailing my corruptions, ſuing with all inſtant earneſtnes for thy grace and fauour in thy Son. O that I may learn thus to iudge my ſelfe, that I may not be iudged of thee in that day.

Suffer mee not to flatter my ſelfe, or to bleſſe my ſoule in any euill way, or to goe about to finde hidings and couerts for my ſinnes: in as much as all things are naked in thy ſight, and that in that great terrible day thou wilt lighten the things which are hid in darknes and make manifeſt the counſell of all mens hearts.

Let mee not imagine this thy great Seſſion to bee like the courſes among men, in which oft-times by vniuſt meanes the vileſt offenders doe procure eſcape: but make me to know, as the truth is, that with thee there is no hope by corruption, or fauor, or fraud or importunity of ſute, to finde euaſions. Thou art the Iudge of the world, and thou wilt doe right, euery man ſhall receiue the things which haue bin done in his body, according to that hee hath done, whether it bee good or euill. And whereas O Lord, it is a great griefe to thy ſeruants, to liue among the vngodly, and muſt needes vexe their righteous ſoules to heare and ſee their vnlawfull deeds; let this bee my comfort, that thogh it be thy pleaſure to ſuffer with long patience the veſſels of wrath, and to permit the tares to grow vp with the Wheate vntill the Harueſt, yet then thy Angell ſhall come, & ſhal gather out of thy Church all things that offend, and bring the iuſt into the kingdom of their Father.

Seeing

Seeing alſo (O gracious God) that whoſoeuer in this world will liue godly, ſhall ſuffer, and lye open to the wrongs and iniuries, and reproches of the wicked: Grant that if at any time either my name be put out as euill, or otherwiſe my eſtate and profeſsion, or life, for the Truths ſake be called into queſtion, I may poſſeſſe my ſoule with patience, looking for the bleſſed hope and appearing of thy glory, knowing that then the iuſt, what diſgraces ſoeuer are now caſt vpon them, ſhal ſhine as the light in thy preſence.

Finally, O Lord, make me daily to grow ſo weary of this vaine and wretched world, and of the heauy load of mine own corruptions, and of this body of death which is vpon me, and to ſtriue to gather that aſſurance of an intereſt in that glory which ſhall bee ſhewed hereafter, that I may looke for this great day, and in my deſires may ſigh for it, and haſten to it: and that whenſoeuer it commeth, I being found waking, with my Lampe of oyle in my hand, may haue cauſe to lift vp my head, not doubting but to haue a gracious admittance into my maſters ioy.

Grant me this for his ſake, which ſitteth at thy right hand, to make requeſt for me, Ieſus Chriſt the Mediator of thy choſen, Amen.

A Prayer fitted for the time of Warre.

O Almightie GOD, who art High aboue all Nations, and whoſe glory is aboue the Heauens, the comfortable ſucceſſe of all enterprifes, is from thee onely to be looked for: Thou art he which giueſt victory vnto Kings, to thee it is all one to ſaue by many or by few, thou canſt make one to chaſe a thouſand, thou canſt cauſe the hearts euen of the moſt valiant to melt, their hands to be weake, their minds to faint, and their knees to fal away like to water. If thou fight for vs, we cannot miſcarry: if thou fauour vs not, we muſt needs be diſcomfited. O be gracious vnto vs, and be on our ſide, now that men are riſen vp againſt vs. They take crafty counſell againſt thy Church, and conſult how to cut vs off from being a Nation, and by what meanes to quench the light of thy truth, which ſhines in our ſtreets.

Their deſire is to embrue their hands in our bloud, and to aduance their own ambition by our ouerthrow. O turne their counſels into fooliſhneſſe, let not their miſchieuous imaginations proſper, leſt they be too proud: O our God make them like vnto a wheele, and as the ſtubble before the wind, ſcatter the people that delight in warre.

Go out, O Lord, with our Armies, giue wiſdome and courage to our Captaines, gird them with ſtrength vnto the battell, be without Souldiers, teaching their hands to warre, and their fingers to fight: Aſsiſt all the conſultations, proſper the policies, crowne thoſe enterpriſes with good ſucceſſe, which are vndertaken for the common good and comfort of the State. Doubtleſſe, O Lord, we haue deſerued thine anger, and our ſinnes doe cry loud in thine eares for vengeance: and it were but iuſt with thee, if thou ſholdeſt make vs a prey & ſpoile vnto our enemies: But, O gracious God, let vs fall now into thy hands, for thy mercies are great, and let vs not fall into the hands of men, whoſe diſpleaſure at vs is not for our ſins, but for our profeſsion and religions ſake, & that they may fill their own enlarged and vnſatiable deſires with thoſe bleſsings of wealth which thou haſt giuen vs: Put therefore thy hook into their noſtrils, and bring them back by the ſame way they came. Let it appeare that thou art in the midſt of vs, and that we ſhall not be moued, that thou wilt help vs, and that very early: Let there be none inuaſion, nor going out, nor no crying in our ſtreets: But ſet thou peace in our borders; make ſtrong the bars of our gates, eſpecially let the Goſpell of thy Sonne ſound yet louder amongſt vs, that by it many ſoules may be gathered vnto thee. So we thy people, & the ſheep of thy paſture, ſhall praiſe thee for euer, and from generation to generation we will ſet forth thy glory,

through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, and onely Sauiour, Amen.

Another of the like nature, reſpecting the time of dearth and famine.

CLeanneſſe of teeth (O Lord) and ſcarceneſſe of bread, haue beene anciently threatned by thee, as iudgements vpon the Sonnes of men for their ſinnes. Many waies alſo thou haſt to turne a fruitfull Land into barrenneſſe, for the wickednes of the Inhabitants: Thou canſt make the heauen ouer our head as braſſe, and the earth vnder vs as iron, by bringing a drought vpon the Land. Or elſe thou canſt cauſe the ſeed to rot vnder the clods, by commanding the bottels of heauen to poure out raine in too great abundance: or when the corne is come vp, thou art able to ſmite it with blaſting and mildew, or to ſend among vs thy great hoſt, the Graſhopper, the Canker, the Caterpiller, the Palmer Worme, ſo that although much be ſowen, yet little ſhall be brought into the barne. Or if the corne doe grow ripe vnto the harueſt, it is in thy power ſuddenly to ſend in an enemy, to eate the fruit of the land, and to deuour the labour of the people. And though the bread doe come to be ſet in plenty before vs, yet thy hand is not ſhortned, thou canſt take away the ſtaffe thereof, ſo that we ſhall eate and not be ſatisfied. Thus, O Lord, thou haſt euen ſtore-houſes of puniſhments: ſo that our hearts cannot endure, nor our hands be ſtrong in the day that thou ſhalt haue to doe with vs. And hereof we haue now already ſome experiẽce. For now thou haſt in part begun to puniſh our abuſe of thy creatures, our fulneſſe of bread, our contempt of the ſpirituall food of our ſoules, with outward ſcarcity. The time is come, by greedy worldlings long expected, in which they may make the meaſure ſmall, and the prices great, ſelling euen the very refuſe of the Wheat: Their trading is vpon the poore, their deſire is to ſwallow vp the needy of the land. Looke mercifully, O Lord, vpon vs, we beſeech thee, lift vp thine hand, forget not the poore.

Thou prepareſt for the Rauen his meat, when his Birds cry vnto thee, wandring for lacke of food; thou takeſt no delight in the confuſion of thy Creatures, thou haſt promiſed, that if we ſeek to thee, we ſhall want nothing that is good, thou wilt preſerue vs in the time of dearth, and in the daies of famine we ſhall haue enough. Accompliſh (we beſeech thee) theſe thy gracious promiſes: Saue vs from this encreaſing miſery, and deliuer vs from their crueltie, which being without all bowels of mercy, doe reſpect nothing but their owne commoditie. And becauſe, O Lord, our ſins do ſeparate betwixt thee and vs, and do hinder good things from vs; therefore humble our ſoules vnder thy mighty hand, make vs to ſee and to conſider our owne deſerungs, draw from vs an hearty and ſincere acknowledgement, how great cauſe we haue giuen thee to affamiſh both our bodies and ſoules for euer.

Giue vs an vnderſtanding of our particular groſſe ſins, which do lay vs open to this iudgement aboue others: Namely, our wantonneſſe, our pride, our luxurioufnes, our riot, our feaſting without feare, our want of mercy to the poore, our ſpurning with the heele againſt thee, our forgetting thee in the daies of our plenty, but chiefly our lothing of that ſpirituall Manna, that heauenly diet of thy ſacred word, prouided in thy abundant mercy for our ſoules.

O make vs aſhamed for theſe and other our monſtrous ſinnes, beſides thoſe perſonal euils wherewith weare each of vs iuſtly to be charged. Beget in vs a care to renounce and forſake our ſinnes, equall to our deſire for the putting away of thy iudgements. Forgiue vs in Ieſus Chriſt, and vouchſafe vs (as a pledge of thy loue) ſtrength & grace to walk in a greater meaſure of obedience then heretofore. And now (O Lord) teach vs to relie vpon thy prouiding, and to know that when all things faile, yet thy mercies are the

the ſame, and thy power to help is not diminiſhed. Thou canſt ſuddenly by meanes to man vnknowne, turne the greateſt penury into plenty, thou canſt make a little to ſtretch farre, and canſt proportion our appetites to our ſtore.

O make vs to depend on thee, and to ſtudy more how to profit by thy hand, then to haue thy rod remoued from vs. And when thou ſhalt ſhew thy ſelfe to haue heard our praiers, by ſending greater plenty, let vs not forget our preſent want: but grant that we may labour to be thankful, and endeuour after a more ſober vſe of thy bleſsings then heretofore. Heare vs in this, and in all other our requeſts, for Chriſts ſake, and for thine owne promiſe ſake, Amen.

Another like, applied to the time of ſome great contagion.

WHither ſhall wee goe, O Lord, in the day of our affliction, but onely vnto thee? Thou alone canſt ſaue, and out of thy hands none is able to giue deliuerance.

Heauy at this time is thy hand vpon vs, and fearefull is the diſeaſe with which thou haſt afflicted vs: We are afraid one friend and neighbour of another, and nothing is before vs but preſent death. Scarcely can we looke forth, but we ſee ſome one or other amongſt vs carried away to the graue, and the mourners going about the ſtreets.

Wee muſt needs confeſſe, that though this be grieuous, yet is it the ſmalleſt part of our deſert: It is iuſt with thee, to ſmite vs with botches and ſcabs that cannot be healed, and to make the peſtilence euen to cleaue vnto our loines, and to ſweep vs away from off the earth, euen as a man ſweepeth away dung till all be gone. For, how haue we multiplied our iniquities before thee, and to what a ſhameleſſe and intollerable meaſure are our ſins increaſed? Many warnings haue bin giuen by thy Miniſters, thou haſt riſen early and late, and ſent vnto vs by them: yet wee haue made our hearts as an Adamant ſtone, and haue put far from vs the euill day, perſwading our ſelues, that their ſermõs were but wind, and that they did but commend vnto vs their own fancies. Thus haue we encouraged our ſelues in euill, and haue ſet thy iudgement at nought, euery one turning to his owne courſe, as the horſe ruſheth to the battell, adding drunkennes to thirſt, and falling away from thee more and more. But (O Lord) giue vs now at the laſt, remorſefull and repentant hearts, make vs (as it were) to ſmite vpon our thigh, as a ſigne that we ſee our wandrings, and that we are aſhamed of our ſins. Embolden vs in the name of Chriſt to come into thy preſence, and in all earneſtnes of ſpirit to cry vnto thee, Take away our iniquities, and receiue vs graciouſly. Teach vs as well to feare ſin, the cauſe of this waſting ſicknes, as we do the ſickne it ſelfe, which is the fruit of ſin. Comfort vs according to the day that thou haſt afflicted vs: and let the ſweet feeling of the gracious teſtimony of thy Spirit, ſpeaking peace vnto our ſoules, preuaile againſt all other ſadneſſe or cauſe of griefe, or ſorrow whatſoeuer. Say (O Lord) vnto thy deſtroying Angell, It is ſufficient, hold thy hand: Or if it be thy pleaſure to ſtretch thine hand yet further, and to take vs away alſo, O prepare vs to thine owne purpoſe, endue vs with a holy patience to endure the vtmoſt triall: and grant that whatſoeuer befal our earthly Tabernacles, yet our ſoules may be alwaies acceptable vnto thee, and all for Chriſt Ieſus ſake, who hath loued vs, and giuen himſelfe to be a ſacrifice of a ſweet ſmelling ſauor vnto thee, Amen.

A Prayer in the time of tempeſt, as thunder, lightning, &c.

OAlmighty GOD, excellent in power and in iudgement, thou haſt made the earth by thy power, and ſtabliſhed the World by thy wiſdome, and haſt ſtretched out the heauen by thy diſcretion: thou cauſedſt the Cloudes to aſcend from the ends of the earth: thou draweſt the wind winde out of thy treasures, and makest the stormes to breake forth in thy wrath: Thou art that God of glory which commandest it to thunder, and diuidest the way for the lightning of the thunder.

Thy voice maketh the wildernesse to tremble, and the foundations of the mountaines to moove: Yea, and the pillars of heauen to quake at thy reproofe. Oh how easie a thing were it for thee, euen at this instant, to send out thine arrowes & scatter vs, to increase thy lightnings, and destroy vs? The very blasting of the breath of thy nostrils, is enough to consume vs: our hearts could not endure, nor our hands be strong, if thou shouldest proceed against vs in displeasure, and giue leaue vnto these instruments of thy vengeance to preuaile vpon vs.

And, O Lord, what is there which we haue not deserued? The deadnesse of our hearts, our want of awe to thy Maiesty, our abuse of thy patience, our contempt of thy Word, our sleight regard of thy former iudgements, these and other our crying sinnes, what else is due vnto them, then the very vials of thy wrath, and the height of thine indignation? Humble our soules (we pray thee) here before thee, make our bellies to tremble, and a kinde of rottennesse to enter into our bones, to thinke vpon the glory of thy Maiestie, and the greatnesse and vglinesse of our owne most grosse and inexcusable iniquities. Make vs to thinke with our selues, that if these stormes, which are yet but as a taste & touch of thy power, be so full of terror, Oh then how fearefull will thy presence bee, when thou commest in thy glory, shewing thy selfe from heauen with thy mightie Angels, inflaming fire, rendring vengeance vpon the Children of disobedience? Surely then the heauens shall passe away with a noise, and the Elements shall melt with heat, and mens hearts shall faile them for feare, and for looking after those things which shall come vpon the world.

Let this, O heauenly Father, worke in vs that blessed feare, which is the beginning of wisdome, & which causeth a departure from euill: that so all these euidences of thy power and glory may be as so many alarums to rouse vs from the bed of securitie, and as summons from heauen to prouoke vs to repentance: Oh make vs to wake to liue righteously, and to be diligent that we may bee without spot and blamelesse, going on, & increasing in all holy conuersation and godlinesse: And now, O gracious God, at this time, shew thy mercy in restraining the rage and fury of this dreadfull storme, couer vs vnder thy wings, and let vs be sure vnder thy feathers, oh let vs abide in the secret and shaddow of thee which art Almighty. The sea is calme by thy power, by thy vnderstanding thou smitest the pride thereof, thou stoppest the spouts of the raine at thy pleasure: if thou rebuke the winds, they are strait allaied, the thunder is quiet and still, at thy command. This we beleeue, because thy Word of truth hath reuealed it: and this thy power and mercy we presume to craue, because thou hast promised, that if we call vpon thee in the day of trouble, thou wilt deliuer vs.

Furthermore, O Lord, vouchsafe vs this grace, that when by thy goodnesse this terror and danger shall bee past & ouer-blowne, we may not then forget thy kindnesse in our preseruation, nor be vnmindful of the vowes and promises which we now make of better obedience: but that we may thankfully take vp that speech of gratefulnes, and say, Praise we the Lord, because he is good, for his mercy endureth for euer: and may also let it appeare in our liues and courses, how sensible we are of thy loue, and how carefull to walke worthy of thy fauour. Heare vs, O Lord, and helpe vs both now and euer in Christ Iesus, without whom, none can come vnto thee, and by faith in whom we haue boldnesse, and entrance with confidence into thy presence: to whom with thy selfe, and thine eternall Spirit, one onely and immortall God, we desire to giue all glory and praise for euer, Amen.

A Me-

A Meditation or Praier necessary for a poore man.

TRuth it is, O Lord, that to my mutinous and repining nature, want is of all things most distastefull, and pouerty is a burden euen intollerable. Sometimes I am ready to call thy iustice in question, who measurest out so large and ouer-flowing a portion vnto some, and yet are so strait and sparing towards mee. Sometimes I doe almost condemne Religion to bee meerely vanitie, the louers whereof lie open to so great extremity. Otherwhiles, my owne heart chargeth me with hypocrisie, telling mee that no man euer perished being an innocent; and that if I did so feare thee as I should, thou couldest not thus forsake me. And much adoe haue I to master my owne affections, and to restraine my selfe from putting forth my hand to wickednesse, and from taking some strange course for my owne supply.

Thus, O Lord, I am straitned, thus I am euen haunted with whole troupes of vnquiet thoughts: all which by the continuance and enlargement of my owne scarcity, and by the vncompassionatenesse which I finde among the men of this iron age, are rather multiplied and encreased in me, then any way slaked or diminished.

But eternally blessed bee thy great Name, which hast opened the gates of thy mercy, and giuen hope of hearing and of helpe, to the basest and poorest amongst men. Thou acceptest not the persons, no not of Princes, thou regardest not the rich sooner then the poore. Behold therefore (O louing Father in Iesus Christ) to thee doe I cry, to thy mercy seat doe I stretch out my feeble hands. I haue learned, O Lord, that misery comes not forth of the dust, neither doth affliction spring out of the earth: the pillars of the world are thine, thou openest or shuttest thy hand at thine owne pleasure.

Thy wisdome also is infinite, and thy iudgments are vnsearchable; who shall pleade with thee, to aske thee a reason of thy waies? Let it be enough for me, that it is thy pleasure thus to debase me. Am I not in thy hand as clay in the Potters? If thou doe giue me a larger portion, it is thy bounty: if thou do abridge me, what haue I to complaine, or what challenge can I make to that which thou keepest from me? Teach me (I beseech thee) not to looke so much vpon this, what others haue, as to consider well, how little I for my part doe deserue to haue.

If I doe but breathe vpon the face of the earth, if I had no house but the open aire, no garments but rags, no food but the bread and the water of affliction, or the crums that fall from some rich mans table, it were infinitely more then my best desert. A sinfull and vnthankfull wretch, as I haue alwaies been, what can I say is due vnto mee but perpetuall shame? When I iudge rightly of all things, so farre am I from being able to say that thou hast wronged me, or dealt too straitly with me, that I must rather stir vp my selfe to magnifie thy mercy, which hast not laid vpon me the vtmost of thy wrath, but hast giuen me a time & an opportunitie to repent. Let these things, I pray thee, the soueraignty of thy power, the depth of thy wisdom, the foulenes of mine owne desert, the kindnesse which (notwithstāding some outward hardship) thou hast vouchsafed to my soule, moderate my violent affections, curbe my raging and discontented thoughts, bring my ranging passions into order, that I may alwaies say, It is the Lord, let him doe what seemeth him good. This is my sorrow, and I will beare it.

Open mine eies withall, that I may see thy power, who canst raise the needy from the dust, and lift the poore out of the dung, and make him families like a flocke of sheep; who canst command euen the very Rauens to bring bread and flesh vnto thy seruants, the heauens to drop downe food, and the rocke of stone to yeeld streames of waters, to refresh those whom thou art pleased to prouide for. Shall I thinke thy power to be abated, or is thy thy mercy lesse then it was wont to be? Haste thou not made a promise neuer to forsake me? Am I not alwaies with thee, and doest thou not hold mee by my right hand? Shall I imagine thee to be like the bird whom thou hast depriued of wisdome, and to whom thou hast giuen no part of vnderstanding, who sheweth himselfe cruell vnto his yong ones, as they were not his, or as if he had trauailed in vaine? No, I am assured, that though a woman should forget her childe, and forbeare to haue compassion on the son of her wombe, yet thou canst not forget those whom thou loueſt in thy Sonne.

Thou knoweſt my wants, thou art able to supply my wants; thy loue will not suffer thee to leaue me destitute, in that which thy wisdome knowes to be conuenient for me. Encrease my faith, that I may depend more vpon thee, make me diligent in the place and calling in which thou hast set mee, frame my minde and my desires to that rate which thou hast allotted me, keepe me from vniust and vnlawfull courses, from enuying the abundance which others doe enioy: possesse me with this perswasion, that this my present state is the fittest for mee, and that when it shall be good for me to haue more, thy hand shall instantly bee enlarged toward me: Stir me vp to seek thy kingdome, and to labour for the meate which endureth vnto life eternall. Enrich my soule with spirituall blessings in heauenly things: perswade my conscience of thy loue in Christ Iesus, that the feeling thereof may make al things sweet vnto mee. Cause mee both to trust and to wait for thy saluation, and in all things to striue to giue thee thy deserued glory, and all this in and for thy Sonnes sake, my onely Mediator and Redeemer, Amen.

Another of like nature, fit for one whom God hath enriched with outward things,

IT hath pleased thee (O LORD) out of the freedome of thy bountie, to deale more largely with mee then with many of thy seruants, and to furnish mee with store of those outward blessings, which others (euery way as good by nature as my selfe) doe not enioy.

My heart is fraughted with much corruption: and though riches be in themselues a blessing, yet without thy especiall grace, they will bee vnto me an occasion of many euils. Apt I shall bee to lift vp my heart, to pride my selfe in my owne conceit, to trust vnto my wealth, to despise others, to grow in loue with this present world, to become cold and remisse in the best seruices. To conclude, I am highly in thy fauour, because thou hast enriched me. These be the diseases, which through the poison of our nature, doe rise by these outward hauings, neither can I say, that my heart is cleane from these corruptions. Purge them out of mee, I beseech thee, by the fiery power of thy Spirit. Giue me pouerty of spirit, and humblenesse of minde, amid this outward fulnes, with which thou hast endued mee. Make me to remember, that the more I haue, the greater shall be mine account, and the harder for me to be saued: that by that meanes, my wealth may be so far from puffing me vp with secure presumption, that it may moue me the rather euen with feare and trembling to worke out my Saluation.

Cause me to thinke often vpon the words of my Sauiour, that riches are deceitful, and of a thorny nature, choking the good seed of the word, and making it to become vnfruitfull; that so I may learne carefully to handle them, and to vse them with great heedinesse & circumspection, lest I should by them gall and wound my conscience, or be pierced thorow with many sorrowes.

It is said (O Lord) that these high places of the world are slipery places, in which it is hard to goe with a right foot, and to keep strait and euen steps: Oh, stirre me vp to so much the more care to ponder my paths, and to take diligent heede vnto my waies: suffer me not to iustifie my selfe to my owne soule,

ſoule, or to make my ſelfe beleeue that I am as I ought to be, becauſe waters of a full cup are wrung vnto me: but teach me ſeriouſly to conſider, that as many of thy beloued ſeruants doe feele the ſmart of pouerty, ſo euen the moſt wicked, and thoſe which rebelliouſly tranſgreſſe, haue a large portion in this life, liuing, waxing old, and growing in wealth, their goods oftentimes exceeding the very deſires of their harts. Grant therfore that I may labor for ſome better & more certaine aſſurance of thy grace, not grounding my hope vpon my wealth: but reioycing in this, if the due conſideration of the danger and vanity of abundance may worke by thy bleſsing, to the abaſing and humbling of my hart.

Oh let not mine eyes be dazled, nor my heart bewitched with the glorie and ſweetneſſe of theſe worldly treaſures, which may be taken from me, or I from them euen in the twinkling of an eye: draw my affection to the loue of that durable riches, and to that fruit of heauenly wiſdome, which is better then gold, and the reuenewes whereof doe ſurpaſſe the ſiluer, that may chief care may be to haue a ſoule enriched and furniſhed with thy grace, fulfilled with the knowledge of thy will, in all wiſdome and ſpirituall vnderſtanding.

And becauſe (O Lord) in hauing much, I am but a Steward vnder thee, and a diſpoſer of thy gifts, enlarge my bowels towards others, make me rich and fruitfull in good workes, being a father to the poore, and cauſing the heart of the widow to reioyce, warming the loines of the naked with the fleece of my ſheepe, nor eating my morſels alone, but dealing my bread to the hungrie, and neuer hiding my ſelfe from mine owne fleſh.

For why ſhould I make gold my hope? or wherefore ſhould I ſtriue to lade my ſelfe with this thicke clay, ſtill plotting to ſet my neaſt on high, when all that haue or can haue, is in a moment turned into vanity? Quicken mee vp therefore to good duties, that the hearts of thy Saints may bee comforted by me, and that in the place where I liue, I may by my forwardnes draw on and prouoke others to all the offices of neceſſarie beneuolence. Let the bowels of the needie bee my treaſurie, and let it bee my deſire and care there to lay vp in ſtore a good foundation for my ſelfe againſt the time to come, not truſting to be crowned for the worth of my liberality (for what can that bee to a weight of glory?) but aſſuring my ſelfe, that the mercie ſhewed by me vnto others, is a beame of that loue which ſhines from thee vpon my ſoule.

Thus, O Lord, ſhall I by thy goodneſſe haue the true vſe of thy bleſsings, together with a daily increaſe of much matter of thankſgiuing for thy great goodneſſe to mee ſo vile and vnworthy: and all for Chriſt, and in his moſt glorious and holy Name. To whom with thee and thy Spirit one true, euerlaſting, and onely wiſe God, be all praiſe, and power, might, maieſty, and dominion, now and euermore, Amen.

The Magiſtrates or Iudges Prayer.

IT hath ſeemed good vnto thy wiſedome (O thou who art the diſpoſer of all things both in heauen and earth) to call me (though vnworthy) to an office and place of ſpeciall truſt: euen to be one of the Heads and Iudges of thy people, euen to ſit in thine owne ſeate, and to be (as it were) a God amongſt men.

Magiſtracy and gouernment is thine owne ordinance, and great is the obedience, and reſpect which thou commandeſt to it: thou haſt honoured thoſe who are entruſted with it, with titles of no little dignitie: thou haſt communicated thine owne name vnto them. Let not, O Lord, this greatnes puffe me vp with pride, but let it fill my heart with feare: aſſuring my ſelfe by this, that as the place in which I ſtand is eminent, ſo the burden is weighty, and the buſineſſe much, yea, and that the account for neglect will be exceeding fearefull. Stirre mee vp therefore I beseech thee, to looke vp in all humility towards thee, and to beg earnestly of thee in Christs name, to be enabled to that seruice to which thou hast appointed me. Let it be my care to make thy word my counseller, not suffering the booke of thy Law to depart out of my mouth, that so I may obserue and do according to all that is written therein. Let the aime of al my endeauours, be the glory of thy name, in the peoples good, & not mine own, either graine, or credit before men.

Clad mee with zeale as with a cloake, that I may haue courage for the truth, and administer iustice without feare, and doe right without respect of persons.

Make it euen a ioy vnto me, to deliuer the poore that crieth, and the fatherlesse, and him that hath none to helpe him: that the blessing of them which are ready to perish, may come vpon mee; and that I may cause the heart of the widow to reioyce.

Farre bee it from mee to peruert iudgement, or to wrest the lawes for by-respects. Oh let my soule abhorre all couetousnesse, keepe mee from louing of gifts, or from following rewards, knowing that these doe blind the eyes of the wisest, and make them to forget the decree, and to change the iudgement of the children of affliction. Suffer me not to vse my authoritie, either as a meanes to recompence and pleasure my friends, or as an instrument by which to be auenged vpon mine enemies: but frame my heart to dealing truely, according to the truth of the cause, and not according to the state of the persons.

And because there is much subtilty in these euill daies, and many meanes vsed by which to wrap vp matters and to make bad causes to beare a shew of goodnesse, therefore giue me, I heartily pray thee, a wise and an vnderstanding heart, a sharp and discerning spirit, that I may be able to finde out the truth, in those things that come before me, and may bee diligent and willing, when I know not the cause, to seeke it out, and so may do all things in thy feare faithfully, and with a perfit heart. Aboue all things, O Lord, let my heart be set, for the aduancement of Religion, and for the promoting of thy glorious Gospel. Grant that I may account it my greatest honour, to giue countenance to it, and to those who preach it faithfully, and professe it in sincerity. Let me be a terror to Papists and Atheists, and godlesse persons: make mee to looke vnto my selfe, and to my family, that no such may come neere me, nor receiue any little grace, or fauour, or protection from mee, but that I may further (as much as in mee lieth) that necessary worke of destroying the wicked of the land, and of cutting off the workers of iniquity.

In all these things make mee constant and bold, knowing that it is thy businesse, and that thou wilt be with mee in the cause and iudgement, and wilt remember me in thy goodnesse.

All these necessary graces vouchsafe vnto me with a plentifull hand, O thou which art the God of grace, euen for his sake, who is the Mediatour of grace, Christ Iesus, Amen.

The peoples Prayer for their Gouernour.

MOst gracious GOD, and louing Father in Christ Iesus, thou hast commanded in thy sacred Word, that we should make intercessions and praiers for those that are in authority: and it is said there also, that by thee, Princes rule, by thee the Nobles and Iudges of the earth decree iustice. To thee therfore do we pray, and vpon thy great Name do we cal, humbly beseeching thee in the name of thy Sonne (in whom onely thy eares are open to our prayers) to poure out thy graces in a large measure, vpon all those whom thou hast set ouer vs, and to whom thou hast giuen the power of gouernment amongst vs. Giue them zeale for thy glory, that they may study the aduancement of thy truth, and the speedie suppressing of whatsoeuer is contrary to wholesome Doctrine: Giue them the eye of prouiprouidence, that they may ſtand vpon a continuall watch, for the preuenting of all dangers and miſchiefes, ſecretly plotted againſt the Church and Common-wealth. Giue them wiſdome to ordaine, and courage and reſolution to execute good lawes, for the protection of thy people, and the cutting off of thoſe which will not bee reformed. Take from them all pride of heart, all inſolent and tyrannous affections, all emulation and ſecret enuy one againſt another, all couetous and greedy deſires, that they may not bee as roaring Lions among vs, or as hungry Beares, but may carrie the mindes of Fathers towards vs: ſo ſhall wee leade a quiet and peaceable life, in all godlineſſe and honeſtie. And, O Lord, ſtirre vs vp to bee thankfull to thy Maieſty, for that thou haſt giuen vs to enioy the benefit of gouernment: Teach vs to conſider, what confuſion and miſery would come vpon vs, and euen ouerwhelme vs, if there were no Magiſtrats to protect vs. Who ſhould be free from the wrongs & robberies, from the ſpoiles and vexations of the children of Belial? who ſhould bee ſure of ought that he hath, or of his own life, if there were no ſword of ciuill authority to defend vs? The people ſhould bee oppreſſed one of another, euery one by his neighbour; the children would preſume againſt the ancient: and the vile againſt the honourable, if there wanted lawes and Magiſtrates, to keepe them which be tumultuouſly diſpoſed, within compaſſe. The enemy would ſoone ſtretch out his hand vpon all our pleaſant things, there would be crying & complayning in our ſtreetes, cruelty and ſtrife in our Cities, iniquity and miſchiefe would neuer depart from our Townes, if thou ſhouldeſt take away the King and the Counſeller, the prudent Iudge, and the honourable Magiſtrate from vs: Oh make vs aſhamed of our ſelues, who haue been ſo ſlenderly thankfull for ſo great a bleſsing: And giue vs we pray thee, humble and obedient hearts, true and loyall affections, willingneſſe to performe all ſeruices, and to pay all duties which belong to thoſe who are the very watchmen ouer our States, and the Keepers and Gardians of our peace: nay, make vs ready with all cheerefulneſſe, euen to ſacrifice our liues for their ſafety.

And as we do deſire the hauing and the countenance of godly Gouernors, ſo teach vs to make conſcience of liuing holily & righteouſly before thee, knowing that for the tranſgreſsions of the people, a Land is ſubiect to many changes, and that for the ſubiects ſins, thou art wont to take away ſuch Gouernors, who iudge the poore in truth, and chaſe away all euil with their eies: and to ſuffer follie to be ſet in great excellency, and ſuch to bee aduanced to places of authority, whoſe preferment ſhall make the people to ſigh, and euen to hide themſelues for feare of oppreſſion.

As therefore wee deſire thy fauour in this thing, ſo grant vs grace, to liue in thy feare, aſſuring our ſelues, that if we doe wickedly, we ſhall periſh, both we and our Gouernors, thou wilt euen kindle a fier in the gates of our chiefeſt cities, which ſhall deuoure our palaces, and ſhall not bee quenched. But (O Lord) turne away from vs al ſuch heauie iudgements (which yet our great ſinnes haue long ſince deſerued) and ſtill begirt vs with thy fauour, making faſt the bars of our gates, ſetting peace in our borders, and aboue all, continuing and enlarging the paſſage of thy Goſpell, and all for his ſake, who is the very life and ſubſtance of the Goſpell, euen Ieſus Chriſt our ſole Sauiour, Amen.

The Paſtors ſute.

HOly (O LORD) and honourable is that ſeruice to which it hath been thy gracious pleaſure to depute mee. The matter I am chiefly to bee buſied in, is thine owne Counſell: they be thy Oracles, and the ſeales of righteouſneſſe, the diſpenſation whereof, thou haſt committed to mee. Thou haſt made mee an Ouerſeer of a part of that flocke, which thou didſt purchaſe with thine owne moſt precious bloud. Thou haſt called me to be a meſſenger, and an interpreter, to declare vnto men thy righteouſneſſe, to watch for their ſoules, among them to diſpoſe thy ſecrets, and to pray them euen in Chriſts ſtead to be reconciled vnto thee. What man among all the ſonnes of Adam, is worthy of this honour, and who is ſufficient for theſe things? When as, O moſt mercifull Father, I thinke vpon the weight of that charge which thou haſt put vpon me, and conſider again mine own weakneſſe and inſufficiency, who am a man of polluted lips, and euen as a childe, vnable to ſpeake the ſecret of thy Goſpell as becommeth mee; mee thinkes I may well crie out with the Prophet; Woe is me, I am euen vndone, how ſhall I ſtand vpright vnder ſuch a burden? But when I looke backe into my owne conſcience, and find there a comfortable witneſſe that I haue not thruſt in my ſelfe for a Paſtor, and remember alſo what is regiſtred in thy Word, how thou makeſt thy power perfit through weakneſſe, and choſeſt the feeble things of the World, for weighty purpoſes, it is a kinde of enliuing to my ſpirits, and a refreſhing to my diſcouraged & drouping thoughts: and I am thereby emboldned to preſſe neerer to thy throne of grace. O thou who both calleſt whom thou pleaſeſt, and makeſt thoſe able whom thou calleſt. Be mercifull vnto me (euen with the ſtrength and intention of my deſires, I moſt humbly pray thee) make my heart a very treaſury of of ſauing knowledge, fill it with ſoundneſſe of iudgement, and with a large meaſure of ſpirituall vnderſtanding, that I may both holde faſt the patterne of wholeſome doctrine, and be able to improue thoſe that ſay againſt it: Kindle in my affections a holy zeale, that my whole drift may be, to take heed to, and to fulfill that Miniſtery which I haue receiued: Let my lippes preſerue knowledge, and let them be as the lippes of the righteous, by which many be fed: giue me a doore of vtterance, that I may open my mouth boldly, and that my tongue may be as the fined ſiluer, that ſo I may both ſhew the people their ſinnes, and bee able to miniſter a word in time to him that is wearie.

And in my preaching (O LORD) vouchſafe mee both diligence and humility: diligence, that I may ſtill be inſtant, neuer fainting in my mind, either for the ſmall ſucceſſe of my labours, or for the oppoſition of corrupted minds, or for thoſe ſtormes which Satan raiſeth vp againſt the faithfull, diſpenſing of thy truth: and humility alſo, that I may not ſeeke mine owne glorie and applauſe with men, but the bringing in of ſheaues into thy barnes, and the gathering of thy Saints into thy folde. For this cauſe, teach mee to take heed of the affectation of words, and of ſeeking to abound with the enticing ſpeech of mans wiſdome, chuſing rather by the plaine euidence of the ſpirit, to approue my ſelfe to mens conſciences in thy ſight, then by a vain blaſt of words, to gaine an opinion of eloquence and learning before men.

And for the better furtherance of this great worke, make mee carefull to know the ſtate of my flocke, and to harken after their courſes, to obſerue their carriages, to note their opinions, and to find out their eſpeciall ſinnes, that ſo my ſpeeches may be as words in ſeaſon, euen like apples of gold with pictures of ſiluer.

Make me wiſe in iudging, skilfull in ſeparating the precious from the vile, bold, but yet pittifull and compaſſionate in reproouing, reſolute in thoſe things which are meete to bee vrged, and farre from yeelding in the ſmalleſt things which may ſtrengthen them in euill, and be a ſtop in their ſpeedy reformation.

Let it be euen my whole buſineſſe to ſeeke that which is loſt, and to ſtudy how to bring thoſe out of the ſnares of the diuell, which are taken by him at his will.

Make my face ſtrong, and my forehead as the Adamant againſt their faces, which ſhall either ſcorne or withſtand thy truth. Let me make ready my backe for the ſmiters, & my cheeks

for

for the nippers, and not hide my face from shame and spetting, making no account, no not of life it selfe, so that I may fulfill my course with ioy, and the Ministration which I haue receiued of thee, to testifie the Gospell of thy grace.

Frame me to diligence and painfulnesse in my priuat employments, in reading, in studie, in meditation and praier, that I may be a workman, not needing to be ashamed, and that men may see how I go on, and profit in my calling.

Let my life be a patterne of holines to my stocke, let there bee no fighting betwixt my behauiour and my doctrine: but grant that my very course and cariage, and ordinarie speeches, may sauour of grace, that so I may giue no offence, either to those that depend vpon mee, or to them who desire to haue some occasion and matter of reproach.

Make mee also circumspect in my family, in my wife, children, seruants, ouerseeing the waies of my houshold, knowing how many eies are cast vpon mee and mine, and how soone (by Satans teaching) men will make the worst of euery little trespasse. And because (O Lord) the businesses of this world are a great withdrawment, and the pretence of caring for posteritie, doth kill the zeale of many, and leade them into many foolish and noisome lusts: therefore (I beseech thee) suppresse within mee all earthly-mindednesse, keepe me from entangling my selfe with the affaires of this life, restraine me from seeking vnto my selfe great things, let it be enough for mee that I haue euen a naile in thy holy place, and a roome among the seruitors of thy Church.

As for those which belong vnto me, let me neither bee without care (for that were worse then infidelitie), nor yet so taken vp with care, that I should forget my chiefest businesse: But let me assure my selfe that thou wilt bee my God, and the God of my seed: and wilt not leaue them destitute of earthly blessings, for whom thou hast prouided an eternall inheritance. With this hope, make mee to goe on with cheerefulnes, doing that whereto thou hast called mee, and leauing thee to prouide and care for the residue. Thou O Lord, knowest the desires of my soule, thou best vnderstandest what things are fittest for mee in respect of that great calling to which thou hast ordained me, and what I most stand in need of: Supply mee, I beseech thee, out of thy fulnesse, and crowne my labours in the Ministery, with the conuersion of such soules, as are ordained vnto life, and that for thy Sonnes sake, who is the chiefe Shepheard: to whom let my soule and spirit, giue honour, glorie, and praise, now and for euer, Amen.

READER, let mee signifie to thee by the way, that I did not pen this Praier out of an opinion, that any of my brethren need a direction, or wanted skill, to do their owne message to the Lord: but for an exercise or meditation for my selfe; whereof notwithstanding, my fellow labourers may make this vse, to be remembred hereby of the weight of their calling, and of the many graces appertaining thereunto. The Lord make vs all, both faithfull and profitable.

The prayer of the flocke, for their faithfull Shepheard.

OHow gracious hast thou beene vnto vs (most bountifull God, in giuing vs a Pastor after thine own) heart, able and willing to feed vs with knowledge and with vnderstanding, and to to reueale vnto vs faithfully thy whole counsell; one who hath skill to resolue vs in our doubts, to comfort vs in our perplexities, to recall our wandrings, to instruct our ignorance, and to goe before vs as a guide in the way that leads vnto peace: surely, thou hast not so delt with euery place, neither is there any desert in vs, for which thou shouldst affoord vs such a fauor. If thou hadst still left vs in our naturall darknesse, and hadst suffered vs to be perpetually plunged into that region of the ſhadow of death, in which wee ſate of our ſelues, it had been but iuſtice in thee, it was euen free to thee to haue finally forſaken vs.

O Lord, make vs thankefull, and quicken vs vp, that wee may euen fill our mouthes, with the praiſes of thy Name, who haſt cauſed the light of thy Goſpell, thus to riſe among vs, and to ſhine vnto vs for our comfort. O make vs carefull to walke while we haue light, that we may be the children of light, and to beware how wee receiue thy grace in vaine, or neglect ſo great ſaluation.

Let vs euer remember, that to whom much is giuen, of them there will bee much required, and that our ſinne will be greater, and our condemnation the more heauy, if we make not the right vſe of this thy mercy. And concerning that man, whom thou haſt made a watchman ouer our ſoules, we beſeech thee to enlarge his hart, to encreaſe his gifts, and to endue him yet with a fuller meaſure of thy graces. Giue him the ſpirit and zeale of Paul, that he may with all boldnes of ſpeech deale vnto vs thy Goſpell, and publiſh euen the ſecret therof, for the edifying of our ſoules. Make him mighty in the Scriptures, like Apollos, that by the power thereof, hee may both conuict our conſciences, and ſtop the mouthes of all gain-ſayers.

Vouchſafe him the Word of wiſedome and knowledge, that hee may rightly iudge of our eſtate, and vnderſtand what things are moſt expedient and fitting for vs, and ſo may ſpeak to our conſciences, finding vs out in our ſpeciall ſinnes, and guiding vs in thoſe holy courſes from which wee haue chiefly gone aſtray. Let his words bee like goades, pricking our hearts, that we may not bee hardned through the deceitfulneſſe of ſinne: let them bee as faſtned nailes, not ſoone forgotten, but fixed in our inward parts, that they may be euer ready at hand, as counſellers to direct vs in the way which wee muſt chuſe. Make him ſtable and conſtant in the beſt courſes, that hee may not bee as a reed ſhaken with the winde, but as a firme foundation, that by his perſeuerance in good, our harts may the better be eſtabliſhed. And we beſeech thee, O Chriſt, who holdeſt the ſtars (the Angels of thy Churches) in thy right hand, that thou wouldeſt be pleaſed to protect him from vnreaſonable and euill men, and from the wrongs and iniuries of all the wicked enemies of thy bleſſed truth.

Doubtleſſe Elymas will not ceaſe to peruert the ſtrait waies of the Lord, and Alexander wil withſtand his preaching ſore, and men of corrupt mindes will reſiſt the truth with all their power: Therefore make thou the weapons of his warfare mighty through thee to caſt downe holdes, and bleſſe the labours of his Miniſtery, to the calling and conuerting of thoſe which are ordained vnto life.

Bend our hearts to yeeld obedience to thy word ſpoken by his mouth, that we may receiue it, not as the word of a man, but as it is indeed, thy Word: and make it alſo effectuall in vs, that we may not bee onely profeſſors and hearers of thy will, but doers, and practiſers, and continuall performers of the ſame. And teach vs to reuerence him (we beſeech thee) and to haue him in ſingular loue for his workes ſake, miniſtring vnto him cheerefully with our goods, knowing that it is a ſmall thing for him to reape our carnall things, who ſoweth amongſt vs ſpirituall commodities.

In all our prayers make vs mindfull of him without ceaſing, that his ſtudies may be directed, his endeauours guided, and his labours in thy worke bleſſed, to the glory of thy Name, and to the ſaluation both of him, and of vs which heare him: all which we craue of thee with all earſtneſſe and humility, for thy deare Sonnes ſake, who hath ordained Paſtours and Teachers for the collection of his Saints, and who is the ſupreame & ſoueraign Biſhop of all our ſoules, to whom bee praiſe without ceaſing, now and for euermore, Amen.

The Students Praye.

O Thou the Father of Lights, from whom commeth downe euery good and perfit giuing: It is by thy holy prouidence, that I am heere placed in the Shooles of the Prophets to bee trayned vp in the knowledge of good letters, and it is thy goodneſſe onely which muſt giue a bleſsing to my labours, otherwiſe all my ſtudies and vndertakings will bee in vaine.

To thee therefore doe I make my prayer, to thee (O Lord) doe I lift vp my ſoule: Thou giueſt ſharpneſſe of wit, knowledge and diſcretion are thy beſtowings, thou art the enlightner of the minde, thou makeſt to apprehend thoſe things, which the ſhallowneſſe of nature, of it ſelfe is vnable to conceiue. I beſeech thee therefore, euen for his ſake who is thy Wiſdome, whom thou didſt poſſeſſe in the beginning of thy way, hee being before thy workes of old, that thou wouldſt vouchſafe to furniſh mee with ſuch a competencie of gifts, as thou in the depth of thy wiſdome knoweſt to bee conuenient for mee. Order my deſires, direct my choice, ſeaſon and ſanctifie my heart, that I may couet the beſt gifts, & that my ſtudies may not bee led and caried by a vaine affectation of knowledge, and curious inquirie into hidden ſciences, for oſtentations ſake, that ſo I may purchaſe admiration and credit, accuteneſſe and learning before men, but that I may aime at the publike good, how I may bring glorie to thy name, and comfort to my ſoule, by the promoting of the common benefit of humane ſocietie. And becauſe Authors are infinite, and much reading is a wearineſſe to the fleſh, & will ſoone cauſe diſtraction, and breede rather varietie of endleſſe and vnprofitable queſtions, then any ſoundnes of knowledge: For this cauſe, I beſeech thee ſo to direct me, that I may wiſely diſcern whom to follow, and whom to auoide, and may conſtantly apply my ſelfe to that courſe, by which I may beſt attaine to my deſired end. Preſerue thou mee alſo from the poyſon of vnſound opinions, and from the ſoure leauen of all erroneous fancies: And for that end, teach mee not to leane to mine owne wiſedome, or to truſt to any ſufficiency of mine owne, for the diſcerning of things that differ: but grant that I may giue vp my ſelfe to be guided by thy Spirit, which is the alone teacher of that way which we muſt chuſe. And ſeeing (O Lord) thy holy Word, which thou thy ſelfe haſt inſpired, is the treaſury of all true knowledge, where only that wiſdome is to bee found, whoſe fruit is better then gold, and the reuenewes whereof doe farre exceed the fineſt ſiluer: therefore, make mee a diligent and a buſie ſearcher of that ſacred booke, that it may bee a familiar vnto mee, and dwell plenteouſly in my inward parts, and that ſo I may feele the ſweetneſſe of it in my ſoule. The times alſo, O moſt gracious Father, being ſo full of perill, and ſo abounding with many dangerons allurements vnto euill, partly by wicked companie, and partly by vaine delights; I am a neareſt petitioner to thy goodneſſe, to make mee warie and circumſpect for preuenting of theſe creeping and bewitching miſchiefes.

Giue mee wiſdome to make choice of the ſociety of thoſe, by whoſe ſobrietie, and grauitie, and good example, I may be bettered; and to haue an eye to thoſe who are vpright in their way, ſtriuing to tread in their ſteppes, and to be a follower of their courſes.

Cauſe me to be alwaies euen afraid of my ſelfe in the vſe of delights, knowing how hard a thing it is not to exceede, and how ſoone a mans affections ſhall be enſnared. Let my care therefore bee to finde meanes rather for redeeming, then for paſsing away my precious time, my thoughts being ſtill buſied vpon the long iourney which I haue to go, before I can come vnto due perfection.

In other things alſo, O good God, guide me by thy holy hand, that I may keepe my ſelfe within the liſts of Chri-Christianitie, being modest in apparell, moderate in diet, chaste and temperate in speech, sober in fashion and my ordinary deportment, respective to my superious, amiable to my equals, without pride and insolency towards those that are below mee, curteous and affable, and yet without vanity and popularity towards all. Among all let me be steady in my courses, both of scholasticall exercise for the polishing of the minde, and of diuine and spirituall imployments, for the adorning and garnishing of the soule, that as I grow in yeers, and standing, so I may also thriue in knowledge and in grace, and that in Iesus Christ, in whom onely I expect the granting of my requests, who breathe vpon me with his spirit, making my soule forward and willing to depend vpon thee, and to returne vnto thee all due praise and glory, world without end, So be it.

The person intending marriage, may bee thus directed.

MAriage, O Lord, is thine owne holy and sacred ordinance: euen before our Grandfather Adam had sinned against thee, and thereby depriued himselfe and all his posterity of that happinesse in which thou hadst at first created him. Thou sawest in thy wisdome, that it was not fit for mankinde to bee alone. Vpon this, it was thy pleasure to appoint this blessed knot, yea, and thy selfe also to bee as a principall agent, in the first conioyning it. To this estate, thou hast annexed great prerogatiues, as a meanes of much good and comfort vnto man.

Being therefore by thee in thy good prouidence, called to the linking of my selfe into this wedlocke band, I embolden my soule, by those promises which thou hast made of hearing those suters which come vnto thee in Christs name, to cast downe my selfe here before thee, and to intreate thy gracious direction in this waighty enterprise.

Sanctifie my heart (I beseech thee) and bring my affections into an holy temper, that I may neither like a brute beast bee led by mine owne vnbridled lusts: neither yet may, like one that mindeth onely earthly things, dote onely or chiefely vpon worldly wealth: but that my maine desire and drift may be to finde out such a yokefellow, by whose sweete society I may bee furthered vnto godlinesse, and helped onward in my voyage towards heauen. For this end, make mee, O Lord, diligent and circumspect before hand, carefull to vse the aduice and counsell of Christian friends, fearefull of my selfe, lest affection should preuaile in me before iudgement; feruent in praier vnto thee, by whom all things are disposed, and to whom the hearts of all men are directly knowne. Restraine in mee all violence of passion, all rashnesse of affection, that I may not suddenly bee ensnared with outward beautie, or bewitched with the glorious shewes of parentage or of portion, but that still my desire may bee after the hid man of the heart, and after those spirituall ornaments without which the greatest among the sonnes of men are but vile and base in thy sight.

Make mee euen to be precise in the obseruing of all conuenient circumstances: such as are the consent of those which haue any interest in mee by thy Word, a reuerent betrothing, and such like, still caring to follow those things which are of good report. And when I shall by thy prouidence bee brought to the sight and knowledge of that partie which thou hast appointed for mee, O then knit our soules together in a neuer to bee broken league of holy loue, that so we may in a gracious manner be a ioy and delight either to other, and may euen studie betwixt that and our marriage day, so to informe our selues with each others dispositions, & with those duties which are appertaining to the maried life, that our vnion being begun in thy feare, may bee continually blessed with thy fauour, and so all may bee to the glory of thy glorious name, to our mutuall comfort and building vp in grace, and to the good example of those which shal behold our course, through Iesus Christ, Amen.

The married persons their ioynt request vnto GOD.

THou (O most blessed God) didst first ordaine the married state: and it is thy prouidence, by which wee which were two, are now made one flesh, hauing mutually resigned our selues either to other, by our entrance into this holy league.

It is the desire of our soules, to liue together to thy glory, and to the comfort and contentment each of other. This we cannot doe without thee, (for of our selues besides sinne we can doe nothing:) vnto thee therefore doe we commend our most earnest and humble sute, that it may please thee so to besprinkle our soules with the deaw of thy grace, that from thence may spring a plentifull increase of sobriety, of righteousnesse, and of holinesse in our liues.

Allay in vs all sensuall and brutish loue, purifying and sanctifying our affections one toward another, that we may in nothing dishonour this honourable state, nor pollute the bed of marriage, which thou thy selfe in thy word hast called vndefiled: but may vse this thine ordinance in that holy sort, that carnall lustes may bee slaked and subdued, not increased or inflamed thereby.

Endue vs with a godly care to acquaint our selues with thy blessed word, that by it wee may know and vnderstand what duty is required at our hands: what authoritie tempered with loue and compassion, and freed from all bitternesse, is committed to the Husband: what obedience, and submission with reuerence is commended in the wife; what faithfulnesse to matrimoniall duties either to other is enioyned: what prouidence and care is expected of the man, and what assistance and helpe of the woman.

And when we know and haue learned these things, grant that it may be our study to practise them, that so the husband may be as a faithfull guide to his wife, and the wife a crowne and credit to her Husband.

Make vs wise to obserue the natures and dispositions one of another, that in all lawfull things, the one may seeke to please and content the other: the one may know how to beare with, and to forbeare the other, not winking at any euill in one another, but discreetly chusing the fittest opportunities for mutuall admonishing, [illegible]out all shewes of tyranny in the one, or of presumption in the other. Open our hearts, that wee may faithfully and cheerefully communicate one to the other, that sweetnesse which we finde in heauenly things, that so we may goe hand in hand towards Heauen, and that our chiefe loue and delight either in other, may bee grounded vpon the hope wee haue, that wee are heires together of the grace of life. In our Family linke vs together in one common care to ouersee the wayes of our household, to seeke the promoting and aduancing of thy Kingdome, the good instruction and education of our children and seruants.

Finally, O Lord, so vnite and combine vs together in fidelity of affection, that we may euen deuote our selues to the procuring of the present and eternall good one of another: that so liuing here comfortably, wee may raigne with thee perpetually, in that thy kingdome, which the bloud of thy Sonne hath prepared for those that loue and feare thy name: vnto which Kingdome, O Lord, reserue vs, euen for thy Sonnes sake, and for thy mercies sake, Amen.

A direction for him whom God hath made a Father, or Gouernour of a Family.

I Bow the knees of my heart here before thy throne of glory (O Almightie and euerliuing God) not presuming ming vpon my ſelfe, but grounding my hope of being heard, vpon thoſe rich and gracious promiſes which thou haſt made vnto vs in thy beſt beloued Sonne.

In him I beſeech thee, to affoord me thy grace, and to ſupply me with ſuch ſpirituall helps, as are needfull for this degree and place to which thou haſt appointed me.

Thou haſt made mee the guide and foundation of a Family, thou haſt furniſhed me with children, and giuen me ſeruants to bee ordered and commanded by me: Wherein thou haſt not only called me to be a prouider for their bodies, that by them, and by their paines and outward thriuing, I might receiue to my ſelfe an outward benefit, but to be euen a watchman for their ſoules, that as much as in me is, I may winne them vnto thee.

O Lord, as thou haſt called me to this ſeruice, ſo giue me both conſcience and ability to diſcharge it. Teach mee to looke vpon Abraham, the Father of the faithfull, and to learne of him, to command my ſonnes and my houſehold, to keepe thy way, and to reſolue with Ioſhua, that whatſoeuer others doe, yet I and my houſe will ſerue the Lord.

To this end, make me carefull in the vſe of all good meanes, in bringing my company with mee on thy Sabbaths, to the publike Miniſtery, in the ſteady and conſtant vſing of priuate exerciſes, as praying, reading, and ſuch like, in ouerſeeing their wayes, in admoniſhing the vnruly, incouraging the forward, in quitting my houſe of thoſe which hate to be reformed, and in ſhewing my ſelfe a patterne and an example of holineſſe vnto them. Touching my children in particular, remember mee, I pray thee, to make conſcience of bringing them vp in thy feare, in the knowledge and vnderſtanding of thy Word, in all ſobrietie and comelineſſe of behauiour, and in ſome profitable courſe, by which they may after liue to the ſeruice either of the Church or the Commonwealth.

Let me bee wiſe to ſuppeſſe euill in them whiles it is yet young, chaſtening them betimes: but yet with taking heede to keepe a middle courſe betwixt two extremities of too much indulgence, which might imbolden them to ſinne: and of too much ſeuerity, which might prouoke them to wrath, and driue them to ſome deſperate inconuenience.

And, O Lord, bleſſe thoſe vnto mee which thou haſt giuen me, ſeaſon them with grace, and plant in them a loue and taſte of the beſt things, keep them from the dangerous corruptions of theſe leprous times, grant that vertue may grow vp in them with their yeeres, that as the World is increaſed by their number, ſo by them there may be an addition to thy Church.

Concerning my ſeruants alſo, let it be my deſire to ſort my ſelfe with ſuch as feare thy name, knowing that mine affaires ſhall ſucceede the better for their ſakes: and for the ordering of them; teach me wiſdome, to keep them from idleneſſe, by a diligent, but yet not too grieuous and cruell imploying them: giue me a reſpect of equity, in rewarding them according to their paines, neuer abridging the labourer of his deſerued hire: giue me mercy alſo, that in their ſickneſſes and infirmities I may regard them as my ſonnes, and be as willing to ſupply them with neceſſaries, as if my ſelfe ſuſtained their encombrances.

Theſe duties, O Lord, as thy word hath reuealed them vnto my ſoule, ſo doe thou vouchſafe to engraue them in my heart, and to make mee a conſcionable performer of them in my courſe, that ſo I may haue (like the beleeuers of old) a Church in mine houſe: So, Lord, ſhall I be a credit to my profeſſion, and my account alſo at the great day of reckoning ſhall bee comfortable: to which day (O good Father I beſeech thee) to prepare me, that after my few daies ſpent in this earthly houſhold, I may liue for euer with thee in thy heauenly Family, through Ieſus Chriſt my bleſſed Lord and Sauiour, Amen.

The

The ſonnes or daughters petition in reſpect of Parents.

GReat is the Honour (O Lord) which by thy pure and vndefiled Word, is due from children to their parents: Great bleſsings haſt thou promiſed to thoſe which make conſcience to performe it: and fearefull and heauie are the curſes threatned againſt thoſe that doe neglect it. O therefore beget in mee, I beſeech thee, a holy care, both to know and to practiſe that gracious dutie, wich is required of mee in this behalfe. Draw mee into the ſerious conſideration of thoſe many bonds of obedience and thankfulneſſe, by which I am tied vnto my parents, of the longing affection which they haue euer caried towards me: of the care and paines which they haue taken in the bringing of me vp vntill now: what were the ſorrowes of my mother in her firſt conceiuing me, what anguiſh and paines ſhe ſuſtained in bringing mee forth, what labours and watchings ſhee hath ſince endured, in cheriſhing and attending my infants eſtate: Wretched were I if theſe things ſhould euer bee by me committed to forgetfulneſſe, or if I ſhould but ſlightly remember theſe many kindneſſes. Make me willing (O Lord) to returne faithfulneſſe and duty, for ſo much loue: Giue me a tractable and a yeelding heart, that I may cheerefully and with delight ſubmit my ſelfe vnto them, to performe their appointments, in all things which may bee done without the manifeſt breach of thy reuealed will. And, O good Father, ſo direct them with thy holy Spirit that they may neuer impoſe ought vpon mee, but that which ſhall be right in thine eyes, and for thy glory, in the good and comfort of me thy ſeruant: that they may not tyrannouſly abuſe that authoritie which thou haſt giuen them in reſpect of me: Or, if they ſhall be too rigorous or too ſeuere vnto me, yet keepe me (I humbly intreate thee) from repining, vouchſafe me patience and meeknes of ſpirit, that I may neuer thinke, or ſpeake, or do ought, that may ſo much as ſauour of contempt, or rebellion againſt them: And when they ſhall (as O Lord, aboue all things open their hearts, and their mouthes that way) giue wholeſome and godly admonitions to me, how to feare thee, and by what meanes to keep my ſelfe vnſpotted of the world; then affoord mee, O moſt mercifull God, an attentiue and an obedient eare, that I may lay vp all ſuch gracious inſtructions in my hart, and may reioyce and make glad their ſoules, by my religions conformity to their precepts.

Withall, O Lord, cauſe mee in geſture and ordinary behauiour, to vſe all reuerence to their perſons, and to take heed of blaſing their infirmities, or of deſpiſing their age: and if it ſhould pleaſe thee to lay want and pouerty vpon them, let it bee my care to be a helpe and comfort to them, and to make prouiſion by all good meanes to ſuſtaine them, knowing that I am neuer able, by all I can doe, to make them a full and compleate requitall: Furthermore alſo, I pray thee to quicken mee to the duty of prayer on their behalfe. Lengthen their dayes to thy glory, let thy graces grow and increaſe in them with their yeeres, perſit in them what good ſoeuer thou haſt begun, and make me carefull, euer to giue them that contentment in thee, that I may neuer iuſtly make heauy their hearts, or bring their gray heads with ſorrow to the graue: O thou, by whoſe good ſpirit it is that I haue thus prayed, vouchſafe my ſutes a gracious entrance into thy moſt holy and glorious preſence, and heare them in him, who in the daies of his fleſh, was a moſt exact patterne, as of all holy duties, ſo of child-like obedience vnto Parents, euen Ieſus Chriſt thy eternall Sonne, the alone hope of the ſaluation of my Soule, Amen.

The seruants supplication in respect of his place.

THy prouidence, O LORD, and thy wisedome, doe wonderfully appeare by thy disposing all things in any exact and certain order. Some thou hast ordained to rule, and some to obey: some thou hast entrusted with the gouernment of Kingdomes, some with the ordering of priuate families: It is thy pleasure to lift vp some to bee commanders and masters of others, and to keepe some in a lower ranke, to bee seruants vnto others. All are appointed by thee in some set course of life to serue thee and thou respectest dutie, and prouidest for thy glory out of the most inferiour, as well as from those of highest degree. And me, O gracious God, amongst others, thou hast reached vnto, by that thy gouerning Spirit, whereby most sweetly thou directest all things: and here thou hast called mee to the condition of a seruant in this family. Let me not murmure, I pray thee, that I am not aduanced (as others) to a higher state, but remember me of my small deserts, who cannot challenge at thy hands so much as a place to breathe in vpon earth. O let me thinke me happy, who haue liberty, though in a low estate, to learne to know thee, and to bee brought out of the base bondage of my nature vnto Sathan, to bee thy free-man, and a partaker of the glorious libertie of thy children.

And concerning the dutie belonging to my place, teach me to account my Master worthie of all honour, and to behaue my selfe withall respect vnto his person, knowing that euen hee, in regard of his gouernment, beareth the image of thy soueraignetie: and that the contempt against him, doth reach so high, to become a contempt against thy Maiestie.

Enable mee to the shewing of all faithfulnesse and diligence: make me carefull to please in all things, to beware of murmuring, and answering againe when I am reproued, to flie falshood and picking as a serpent, to abhor all eye-seruice and men-pleasing.

Let it be euer in my hart, that whersoeuer I am, I am still in thy sight: that so the consideration of thy beholding me, may be a spurre vnto fidelity, and a restraint from all sloath and vntrusty carriage in my businesses.

Make the credit of Religion precious vnto mee: that so by my truth and vprightnesse in my course, I may adorne thy Gospell, and may neuer giue iust cause to make thy holy and glorious Name which I professe, to be euill spoken off. And, O Lord, inasmuch as thou hast the hearts of all men in thine hands, turne the heart of my master towards mee, that hee may deale louingly and mercifully with me; and not with my body onely, but especially with my soule, teaching me in those things wherein I am ignorant, and admonishing me there where I go astray: To mee also giue a mild spirit, and a pliable disposition, that I may listen gladly to the words of instruction, and may reioyce to liue where the meanes is vsed to conuert and win my soule to thy kingdome. And though it should so fall out for my triall, that my master should bee more froward, and hard to please, more straite towards me, and more without respect of mee then is fit: Yet, O Lord, let not this make me to remit ought of my dutie, but grant me to remember, that whatsoeuer I shall doe in singlenes of heart, as vnto thee, the same I shall receiue of thee, yea, with an infinit recompence, euen a reward of inheritance, in thy kingdome. O heare me thy poore vnworthy seruant, not for my owne sake (for my best desert is the depth of hell) but for his sake, who to free me from the slauery of the Diuell, euen on him the forme of a seruant, tooke Iesus Christ, who is now highly exalted, to raign with thee, and thine eternall Spirit, one onely God, throughout all generations for euer, Amen.

The Prayer of the Aged.

THou (O Lord) art the Ancient of dayes, and from euerlasting to euerlasting, thou art God: thou wast yesterday, and to day, thy yeeres faile not, but thou art the same for euer: Thou counteſt heauen with thy ſpan, and comprehendeſt the duſt of the earth in a meaſure: thou diſpoſeſt the times, and thou determineſt each mans dayes, the number of his moneths is with the, thou appointeſt his bounds, to which hee ſhall come, and beyond which he cannot paſſe. It hath pleaſed thee to draw out the thread of my life, further then thou haſt many others, and haſt granted me to fill vp the tale of many yeeres. Thou mighteſt haue turned mee to my duſt long agoe, yea, thou mighteſt haue ſtopped my breath as ſoone as I firſt receiued it, and haue preſentlie condemned me to euerlaſting chaines, there to be kept vnto the laſt day. O make me thankfull for thy goodneſſe, who haſt vouchſafed to multiplie my daies vpon this earth: and that not ſimply, O Lord, becauſe I haue liued ſo long (for what can long life auaile if I loſe my ſoule?) but becauſe I haue had a long time of repentance, and haue ſo plentifullie enioyed the good meanes of knowing thee in Chriſt.

Forgiue vnto me (notwithſtanding) my great neglect, and paſſe by the infinite vanities and offences of my youth. I confeſſe, O Lord, that I haue not ſo carefully taken the opportunities which thou haſt giuen me, nor attained to that meaſure of knowledge and of repentance, which I might haue done, the time of my life conſidered: neither hath my growth in grace been anſwerable to the many helpes which thy great mercy hath afforded mee: ſo that when I looke backe into the daies that are paſt, and conſider how much time hath been conſumed in carnall contentments appertaining to the body, and how ſmall a portion hath been ſpent in ſpirituall things belonging to the ſoule, and doe reade in the records of my conſcience, the many ſlips, yea groſſe faults, which I am guilty of, I am euen aſhamed and confounded in my ſelfe: neither can I ſay ought for my ſelfe, but euen with many ſighes and ſobs of ſoule cry out vnto thee, O remember not the ſinnes of my youth, nor my rebellions, but according to thy kindneſſe remember thou me euen for thy goodnes ſake, O Lord. And I beſeech thee make mee yet more humble, and more vile in mine owne ſight, for theſe my long ſince committed euils, that ſo my repentance may bee more vnfained, and my longing for thy mercy in Ieſus Chriſt, the more ſtrong and vehement.

And now (Lord) withall I beſeech thee, together with increaſe of yeeres, giue me an increaſe of faith, and an increaſe of ſtedfaſt aſſurance of thy loue. Let not thy graces in mee wither with mine age, or my zeale for thy glory, coole, with that decay of bodily heat, which accompanieth this my declining time: But make me, as thoſe Trees which bee planted in thy houſe, & flouriſh in thy courts, which in their age doe bring forth fruit, and are then fat, and flouriſhing: That now chiefely I may bee fruitfull in all good works, knowing that vnleſſe my age be found in the way of righteouſneſſe, it cannot be vnto me a crown of glory. Let mee bee a patterne of grace and godlineſſe vnto thoſe that are young: cauſe mee, by ſoundneſſe in the Faith, and by a ſober, honeſt, and diſcreet behauiour, to bee a teacher to them of good things. And eſtrange my minde, more and more from worldly things: ſuffer me not to delude my ſelfe with a vaine hope of liuing yet a little and little while: but let me like Paul, die euery day, and be a continuall prouider for my laſt departure: which time when it ſhall come, as I know it cannot bee far hence, O I beſeech thee doe not then forſake me, but ſo ſtabliſh me with thy free ſpirit, and fill my heart with the ioyfull feeling of thy mercy in the pardon of my ſins, that I may ſleep in peace, and may comfortably yeeld back my ſoule into thy hands which gaue it me: and that for Ieſus Chriſt, who is my life, with whom I deſire and hope and pray to appeare in glory, at the day of his great appearance, and then for this vile body, to receiue a more glorious body, like to his owne, cloathed with immortality, and euerlaſtingly freed from corruption, Amen.

The Prayer of Youth.

GReat is thy mercy, O Lord, in that thou haſt vouchſafed to all humbled ſinners, liberty of acceſſe into thy glorious preſence, and promiſe alſo of ſucceſſe in thoſe things which they ſhall craue of thee in Chriſts name.

Teach mee, I beſeech thee, to take comfort in this freedome, and to be an often and an ordinary ſuter vnto thy Maieſty. And that ſo much the rather (O Lord) becauſe of the danger of theſe wicked and infecting times, and of the aptneſſe which is in me, now in my tender yeers eſpeciallie, to fal euen into the greateſt ſins. Heere therefore doe I proſtrate my ſelfe before thy throne of glory, humblie beſeeching thee, to ſeaſon my heart with thy heauenlie grace, & to ſettle in me a deſire to feare thee, and to walke in holineſſe before thee aboue all things.

Suppreſſe the Rebellion and Pride of my nature, bring my vnruly affections into order, ſubdue thoſe luſts which the heat of youth enkindleth in me. Frame me to the reſpectiue entertainement of their godly aduice, who are able to inſtruct me.

Make mee to bee euen fearefull of my ſelfe, and iealous ouer thoſe waies which my own heart moſt affects, and verie wary & circumſpect with whom I doe conuerſe. Teach me to remember thee my Creator now in my youth, and to reſolue to conſecrate theſe my freſh and greene yeeres, to thy glorie, to learne betimes to ſtand in awe of thy iudgments, and to make conſcience of euerie little ſinne, knowing the deceitfulneſſe thereof, how it will enſnare by degrees, and how hard it will bee hereafter to reforme thoſe euils, which are growne ſtrong and mighty by continuance.

And to the end, I may both direct and redreſſe my waies the better, oh let mee take heed vnto them by thy word, let that bee my counſellor to inſtruct me, thy Spirit alſo ſecretlie informing mee in the way that I ſhall chuſe. Plant in mee obedience to my Gouernours, and a care of ſhewing all due reuerence to thoſe which in age or in authority are before me.

Roote out of mee all ſelfe-loue, all good opinion of my ſelfe, all pride and hautineſſe of ſpirit, all ſtoutneſſe and ſtubbornneſſe of diſpoſition, all affection of the follies and vanities of the times, all wantonneſſe of thoughts, all vncleanneſſe either of ſpeech or behauiour: all which be the common ſickneſſes of our younger daies, from none of which I am able to ſay, My heart is cleane: and to crucifie my fleſh with the luſtes thereof, that I may feele with growth in yeers, a growing on in grace, and daily decaying of my in-bred wickedneſſe, together with a proceeding on into full holineſſe in thy feare. Bee mercifull, O Lord, vnto me in this, and in all other things, which thy wiſdome knoweth to bee conuenient, for thy bleſſed Sonnes ſake, Ieſus Chriſt, vpon whoſe only interceſsion I depend. So be it.

A Prayer for the whole State.

EXtraordinary, O LORD, haue thy fauours beene vnto this Kingdome. When wee recount our long continued peace, our victories, our plentie, our comfort by religious and prudent Gouernours, eſpeciallie, the glorious light of thy Goſpell, which hath ſhined amongſt vs, our freedome from the miſerable bondage of Romiſh and Antichriſtian tyranny: wee muſt needs ſay, that thou haſt not dealt ſo with euery nation. Indeed the cry of our ſins is great, the very heauens may bluſh to looke vpon vs, and the Earth is wearie to beare our groſſe, our ſhameleſſe, our preſumptuous tuous euils, Thou thy selfe. O patient God art pressed vnder vs, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaues: Long hast thou waited for our repentance, and often hast thou vrged vs by the Ministers of thy Word, to breake off our sinnes, and euen besought vs by them to be reconciled vnto thee. But wee haue hated to bee reformed, and haue cast thy word behind vs, thou hast stretched out thy hand, and we would not regard it: we haue despised and mocked thy messengers, our hearts within vs haue been fully set to doe euill. Mercie hath been offered, we haue not esteemed it: iudgement hath been threatned, we haue not feared it: the very triall of our countenances testifieth against vs, wee declare our sins as Sodome, we hide them not: all manner of foule enormities do march openly and confidently, and without feare in our streets. How iustly mightest thou poure out euen the vials of thy wrath vpon vs, making vs to bee a detestation, and a curse, and an astonishment, and a reproch to other Nations, forcing vs to wring out, and to drink the very dregs of that mixt wine of thy fierce and terrible indignation. If thou shouldest bring an vtter dissolution and desolation vpon our State, making our enemies to ride ouer our heads, to clime aboue vs vp on high, and vs to come downe beneath below: If thou shouldst take away from vs the Iudge and the Prophet, the Honourable and the Counseller, and appoint children to bee our Princes: If thou shouldest make heapes of our Cities, and leaue our Townes without inhabitants: If thou shouldest at once quench the light of thy blessed Word, and giue vs ouer to the seruice of dumb idols, and our soules to be swallowed vp in the darknesse of popish ignorance and superstition: If thou shouldest make vs by thy iudgements, a prouerb and a spectacle to the whole world, it were no other then we haue deserued: nay, it is thy great mercy, that these things, and more heauy then these, haue not alreadie ouertaken vs. But, O Lord, be mercifull to our sinnes, for thy Names sake: O thou which art the God of grace, looke graciously vpon vs in the Mediator of grace, Christ Iesus. We haue nothing to pleade but his merit, nothing can wash away the foulenes of our sinnes, but his most precious blood. Make (wee pray thee) our hearts to mourne within vs, both for our owne personall sinnes, and for all the abominations which are done in the midst of the Land; Oh that wee might turne vnto thee with all our heart; with fasting, with weeping, and with sorrowing: Oh that we could see the things that belong vnto our peace, and might euery man turne from his euill way, and from the wickednesse that is in his hand, and make his way and his workes good. Let it bee thy good pleasure (wee humbly beseech thee) to continue and to enlarge thy wonted fauours towards vs: Stablish this our peaceable gouernment, by a perpetuall and vnchangeable decree: Compasse in this Iland with thy fauour as with a shield: Let neuer thine and our aduersarie, roare in the midst of thy Congregation, or set vp their banners as signes of victorie and conquest ouer vs. Aboue all, O Lord, vouchsafe the comfort of thy Gospell, and the liberty of thy blessed truth: Grant that that may still be faithfully and soundly preached in our Churches. Oh remoue not our Candlestick, though our falling from our first loue, and the vniuersall slaking of our zeale hath deserued it. Lengthen out the vse of it (we entreate then) euen so long as the Sunne and Moone endureth, that by it those that are yet vnborne, and shall come out of our loines, may be guided and directed in the way of peace. And to this end, wee are most humble and instant suiters to thy Maiesty, euen to thee by whom Kings raigne, and whose dominion and soueraignty reacheth ouer all, that thou wouldest multiply thy blessings vpon the King, euen thine Annointed (King Iames) whose head thou hast lifted vp aboue others, and into whose hands thou hast committed the raines of these vnited Kingdomes, domes. O Lord when we remember the dayes by-past, euen the dayes of our feare, how that after the death of our late renowned Queene, wee looked for nothing but confusion, supposing that the times of our peace must needs haue died with her, and haue euen been buried in her graue; and consider withall, how thou then, without any so much as drawing of a sword, or colour of commotion, placedst in Her Throne a King of the same Royall blood, and of the same loue and affection to thy holy truth, vnder whose shadow, we enioy all the accustomed comforts of our ancient peace; we are like to them that dreame, we are euen stricken with astonishment, so far haue all things gone beyond our hopes, and exceeded our expectations. O pardon our great vngratefulnesse, that passe ouer thy mercies so superficially, and doe so seldome and so sleightly meditate vpon thy kindnesse.

Let not our vnthankfulnesse turne away thy intended blessings from vs: Stablish his Throne (we beseech thee) let his soule be bound in the bundle of life with thee, and cast out the soule of his enemies, as out of the middle of a sling. As thou hast preuented him with liberall blessings, and set a crown of pure gold vpon his head: so let his glory bee great in thy saluation, and make him glad with the ioy of thy countenance. Goe on to giue him thy iudgements, that the righteous may flourish in his daies, and that hee may iudge the poore of the people, and saue the children of the needie, and subdue the oppressor: Let him not want a man of his owne line to sit vpon his seate: but continue the Kingdome in his posterity, vntill the time, in which all earthly Kingdomes must bee determined.

Let his children be as chosen shafts in thy quiuer: make them as the plants growing vp in their youth, and as the corner stones, grauen after the similitude of a pallace.

Chiefely we beseech thee to poure out a large measure of thy blessings vpon our most hopefull young Prince, Charles, Prince of Wales: enrich him with all Princely vertues: water him so with thy heauenly deaw, that the knowledge of thy truth, and zeale for thy glorie, and loue to thy Church, and perfit hatred of Popish idolatrie, may in him grow vp with his yeeres; that so he may also in his appointed time become another instrument vnder thee, for the further enlargement of thy Gospell, and the prosperity and happinesse of these Realmes.

Alwaies affoord thy gracious presence to those honourable Lords of his Maiesties most honourable Priuie Councell: bee thou the President at their Table; direct all their consultations; sanctifie their policies, order their purposes, and guide all their courses to such conclusions, as may bee most for thy glorie, the honour of our Royall King, and the peace and well gouernment of these his Kingdomes, and the comfort of all them that truly feare thee.

Blesse all the Iudges, Sages, and Magistrates of the State, make them as hiding places from the wind, and as a refuge from the tempest for the oppressed: cause them euer to remember, that they are thy Ministers for the peoples wealth, and that they execute not the iudgements of man, but of the Lord: and that although thou hast honoured them with thine own name, calling them Gods, yet they shal die as men, and fall like others: that so iudgement may not be turned into all, nor the fruit of righteousnes into wormewood, but that iustice may bee executed truly and vprightly in the gates, and all things may be to the praise of them that doe well, and to the punishment of those that are workers of iniquitie.

Neither may wee, O Lord forget those whom thou hast put in the seruice of thy Church, to feede the flocke which dependeth on them, to rule them, and to goe in and out before them, and to labour in the Word and doctrine. Thou, O Christ, art the chief Shepheard and Bishop of our soules, thou art the Lord of the haruest: build vp (we beſeech thee) the breaches of thy Church, make the righteouſneſſe thereof to breake forth (yet more) as the light, and the ſaluation thereof as a burning Lampe. Continue the ſtanding, and increaſe the number of thoſe ſeeing Watchmen, whom thou haſt placed vpon the Walles of Ieruſalem: Stirre them vp, that they ceaſe not, day nor night, working the worke with which thou haſt entruſted them, and faithfully diſpenſing the word of reconciliation which thou haſt committed to them.

Kindle in them the zeale of Samuel, that they may ſay, God forbid that we ſhould ſin againſt the Lord, and ceaſe praying for the people, & ſhewing them the good and the right way. Make them with Paul to ſay, Woe vnto vs if wee preach not the Goſpell. And bee pleaſed alſo to bleſſe their endeauours, and to proſper their labours, by giuing them a doore of vtterance, and by preſeruing them from vnreaſonable and euill men, that they may from euery part of the land bring many ſheaues into thy barne, and that daily thoſe that are ordained vnto life eternall may beleeue. And for a continual ſupply and nurſery to thy Churches amongſt vs, bleſſe the Vniuerſities and Schooles of learning: let not thoſe fountaines, O Lord, be poiſoned with any popiſh leauen: but grant that the doctrine which is according to godlineſſe, being taught and profeſſed in them in ſincerity, by the young plants there ſpringing vp, the decaies of Congregrations abroad may be renued, and euery place may be furniſhed with a Paſtour after thy own heart, which may feede the people with knowledge, and with vnderſtanding. And (Lord) reſtraine and reforme the greedines of thoſe which muzzle their mouthes which ſhould tread out the corne, and bring forth the food of life vnto the people, which reſpect not the Leuite, but abridge the hier of the labourer, and ſay one to another: Let vs take to our poſſeſſions the habitations of God. Throughout the Land, & among all the inhabitants thereof, plant the true knowledge and feare of thee, loyaltie to their Soueraigne, obedience to all ſubordinate authority, loue and reuerence to their ſpirituall guides, vnity of affection, mercy and compaſsion either to other. And inaſmuch as (O Lord) we haue continuall experience of the malice of the diuell, in ſowing the ſeeds of ſedition and treaſon in mens hearts, and in raiſing vp the ſons of Belial to ouer-caſt, (if it might be) the faire-day of our peace, with a cloude of helliſh confuſion: wee pray thee, without whom no enterpriſes can be eſtabliſhed, to make void their hopes, and to diſcouer their practiſes, and (as thou haſt hitherto euen miraculouſly done) to turne their deuices vpon their owne heads for their owne confuſion. There come daily out of that pit of Rome, many Locuſts; and from that Sea, there is ſent among vs a continuall ſpawne of new conſpirators: theſe encourage themſelues in wicked purpoſes, they commune together to lay ſnares, miſchiefe they imagine againſt the quiet of the Land. It vexeth them to ſee the thriuing of the Goſpell, and the growth of thy truth, and they doe euen breathe out threatnings and ſlaughters againſt the profeſſours thereof. Let not, O Lord, their imaginations proſper, let their eies fall out with looking for that day which they haue long deſired: Let thy hand, euen thy right hand find them out; and if they belong not vnto thee, make them like a fiery ouen in the time of thine anger, deſtroy their fruit from the earth, and their ſeed from the children of men, put them apart, and make ready the ſtrings of thy bowe againſt their faces. And as for vs, O Lord, ſuffer vs not to waxe wanton with the bleſsings of peace, nor to forget to render to thee according to thy rewards beſtowed: but grant that thy kindneſſes may bind vs more ſtrongly vnto thee, and that we may reſolue by thy grace to ſerue thee faithfully, who with vs dealeſt ſo graciouſly, and that in and for Chriſt Ieſus ſake, thy Sonne and our Sauiour, Amen.

A Prayer before meate.

SAnctifie, O Lord, vnto vs the vse of these thy creatures, of which by our sinnes wee haue made our selues vnworthie: Make vs sober and thankfull partakers of them; grant that the end of our eating and drinking, may be to be better enabled to serue thee in our seuerall places, through Iesus Christ, Amen.

Another of like nature.

O Lord, it is not bread which wee liue by, but the word that proceedeth from thy mouth; lift vp our hearts, to looke vnto thee for a blessing vpon our meates, and vouchsafe vs the gracious assurance of thy loue in Christ, that wee may comfortably vse thy creatures as pledges of thy fauour, and bee prouoked by them to giue vp our selues to thy glorie, to serue thee in sincerity all our daies, through Iesus Christ our Sauiour, Amen.

Another.

HVmble our soules before thee (O Lord) and cause vs to see the smalnesse of our desert, euen in respect of the least of thy mercies; Make vs to hunger after Christ, by whom onely the free vse of thy creatures is restored to vs: and giue vs to enioy these blessings here prouided for vs, with that reuerence and sobrietie as in thy presence: that our bodies being refreshed, our soules may praise thee, who art the giuer of all good, and that in Iesus Christ the righteous, Amen.

Another.

TEach vs to remember, O mercifull God, that it is thou, which to vs and to all thy creatures, giuest foode in due season: that so wee may take heede of all vnthankfull and brutish vsing of these good things which in thy prouidence thou hast ordained for vs. Raise vp our affections, to long for that foode which Iesus Christ hath promised to giue vs, who is thy onely Sonne, and our alone Sauiour, Amen.

Another.

TAke from vs (O gracious Father) all gluttony and excesse, all carnall feeding without feare, all minding of none but earthly things, all seruing our bellies, without prouiding for our soules: Make vs mindfull of thy presence, and carefull so to behaue our selues in receiuing these creatures set before vs, that all that wee doe may bee to thy glory, and the comfort of our soules, through Iesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

A Thanksgiuing after meat.

VVEE magnifie thy name, O Lord for all thy mercies, for the comfortable refreshing which thou hast now vouchsafed vs. Pardon, we beseech thee, our great vnthankfulnesse, make vs to bee more thankfull then heretofore, and carefull to shew the truth of our thankfulnesse in the duties of obedience to thy blessed will. Saue all thy Church, protect and blesse our gracious King and his Realmes, our most hopefull Prince, and the rest of the Royall Progeny: grant passage to thy Gospell, comfort to thy seruants, and peace of conscience to vs all in Iesus Christ, Amen.

Another of the same nature.

BLessed be thou (O Lord) for these and for all thy gifts, Let thy mercie to our bodies; stirre vp thankfulnesse in our soules: and let our care to please the in our liues, be a witnes of the feeling we haue of thy rich and abundant mercies towards vs: Bee gracious to all thy people, thorow the world, forget not these Realmes nor thine Annointed, or Soueraigne Lord and King, the hopefull Prince, and and the royall progeny; diſappoint the enemies of thy Goſpell, and make it to grow in deſpite of Sathan, to the glory of thy Name, and to the reioycing of the ſoules of all thy Seruants, for Ieſus ſake; Amen.

Another.

WEe returne vnto thee with the bowing of our hearts, all poſſible thankes (O gracious God) for thy loue and bounty towards vs, thy vnworthie ſeruants, for electing vs, for ſending thy ſonne to die for vs, for calling vs vnto a liuely hope by the Goſpell, for creating, for preſeruing, for feeding vs at this preſent. O ſtirre vs vp to giue our ſelues vnto thee, and to conſecrate our whole ſpirits, ſoules, and bodies to thy glorie, all our daies. Saue all thy Church, &c. As in the firſt Thankeſgiuing.

Another.

AS thou haſt filled our bodies (O Lord) with thy good Creatures, farre aboue our beſt deſeruing, ſo bee pleaſed wee pray thee, to reaſon our ſoules, and to endue vs with all ſpirituall blaſsings in heauenlie things, that in all our life that yet remaineth, wee may be meanes of glorie to thy name, of credit to thy Goſpell, and of much comfort to thy Seruants. Preſerue thy Church, protect this whole State, and the chiefe head thereof King Iames, his Heire, and whole Poſteritie; the Councell, the Nobles, the Magiſtrates, the Miniſters of thy Word, comfort the hearts of all thy Seruants, ſtabliſh vs all in thy truth, and keep vs for euer to thy ſelf, Amen.

Another.

ACcept wee pray thee, (moſt louing Father) this our ſacrifice of praiſe, which for theſe and all thy fauours, wee here offer vp vnto thy Maieſtie. Looke vpon it in the worthineſſe of thy Sonne, and for his ſake enable vs to a cheerefull ſeruing thee in ſingleneſſe of heart, and in vprightnes of conuerſation all our daies. And looke mercifullie vpon the whole body of thine elect, liuing vpon this earth whereſoeuer. Multiplie thy mercies vpon the ſeuerall Churches vnited vnder the gouernment of our gracious King, poure out thy graces vpon him and his, continue the truth of religion to vs and our poſterity, enlarge the Kingdome of grace, and haſten the Kingdom of glorie, and preſerue vs by thy power thereunto, through Ieſus Chriſt our onely Sauiour, Amen.

FINIS.

A Relation of the manner of Mr. Hierons death, sent by his Phisition to a Friend of his.

SIR

Doubt not but ere this time you haue heard of Mr. HIERONS departure. I was with him most part of his sicknes, which was one whole Moneth: He had the Stone; but died of a Cardialegia, a disease in Orificio Ventriculi. Hee lay most part of his sicknes exceeding Silent, oftentimes not answering when he was asked a question; and sometimes weeping bitterly: vpon this occasion, a faithfull Minister tendering vnto him some words of comfort, his answer was, There was a great myst betwixt him and that happinesse he had looked after, in that he had been a partiall Iudge of his own estate, and had thought better of himself then he deserued: And at that time hee would not be vrged to speake any more. M. D.

But the Thursday night before the Sabbath on which he died, he began to be somewhat liberall in his speech, expressing great peace and inward consolation;

I asked him how hee did, hee answered mee; A very weake man. By how much weaker you are in body, (said I) by so much the more you must labour to bee strong in the spirit, as I presume you doe: I thanke God (said he) I haue laboured, and doe labour, and I finde my labour is not in vaine: I haue many things to speake that way, but now I want a tongue to vtter them, yet something I must speake: I would not haue it thought (saith he) that my death is hopelesse, for though I haue lyen all this while silent, as you haue seene, yet my thoughts haue beene token vp with matter of greater consequence; and now I thanke my God my soule is full of comfort, I doe verily beleeue I shall see the light of the Lord in the Land of the liuing, But what am I, or what is my fathers house, that God should deale so graciously with my soule? hee hath called mee vnto the State of grace, fitted mee in my education for the Ministerie of his Word, brought mee in his appointed time to the practise thereof, giuen mee some reputation in it, and blessed my Labours in some measure vnto his people: Hee hath not dealt thus with euery one, no not of his own chosen: I speake not boastinglie, but comfortably; not to extoll my selfe, but to magnifie the goodnesse of my God: I know whom I haue professed, whom I haue preached, whom I haue beleeued, and now I see heauen open and readie to receiue mee; Being freed from all care, except for my people after mee: I wish, if God were so pleased, that nothing I haue taught them, might bee the sauour of death vnto death to any of them; But my owne sinne hath been the cause that I haue seene no more fruit of my Labour in their Conuersion; yet it may be, another may come after me (as the Apostle saith of himselfe) and reape that I haue sowen. I confesse that in publike I haue been somewhat full in reproofe, in admonition, in instruction; but in priuate, my backward-nesse,

neſſe, my baſhfulneſſe, my daſtardlineſſe hath beene intollerable, and I may trulie ſay, that if anie thing lies as a burthen vpon my conſcience, this is it. But I praiſe my God, I know vpon Whoſe ſhoulders to caſt it, with the reſt of my tranſgreſſions Many things more hee ſpake very comfortably at that time, which for breuities ſake I omit.

TO

HAuing gathered together (right reuerend, and my ſingular good Lord) theſe ſeuerall Works of that moſt learned Gentleman and famous Diuine, Maſter Samuel Hieron, and brought them into one whole and entire Volume, in ſuch ſort as hee left them diſperſed in the world, and vnder the ſame Titles and Patronage to which he had formerly bequeathed them; A worke, which (had not death preuented) no doubt, himſelfe had done in a more exact and excellent manner: and finding, by his loſſe, the mayne and entire Booke had

loſt the hope of that honourable ſupport and Patronage, which his greater worth might haue beſtowed vpon it, I thought it my dutie (hauing the care and charge of ſo diuine an Infant) to ſee it ſupplyed with all things that might any way giue grace to the perfection of the ſame: Hence I humbly flie to your Lordſhip, both for grace and protection, that you will bee pleaſed to couer it vnder the reuerend wings of your Iudgement, and to giue it that comfort which belongs to the monument of ſo worthy and religious a Perſon, both in reſpect of the goodneſſe, which Vertue owes to the memorie of ſo good a Man, and in reſpect of my humble Petition, which only beggs, that ſo worthy a labour as this, may not walke in the world without thoſe faire glories, which are due to ſo generall a benefit, which granted, you ſhall both adorne his memorie with your pious and religious fauours, and bind mee in my powers and prayers euer to acknowledge my ſelfe at your ſeruice, and remayne

Your Lordſhips in all reſpectiue ſeruices to be commanded,

TO THE READER.

CHRISTIAN READER. That which was once said of, & by the Prophet AMOS; I am no Prophet, nor the sonne of a Prophet, it cannot be said of all the Prophets of God. Jeremie was a Prophet, and the sonne of a Prophet, and such were many in the times of the Law: and if that in these times of the Gospell, our Naioths, and Bethels were not furnished with the sonnes of our Prophets (I meane the children of the Preachers of the Word) there would be a great want of true prophecying. Indeed, our Vniuersities are greatly replenish-ed: and now men of all sorts send children vnto them. But to the end they might proue seruiceable in the Church, few of good sort fit their sonnes for that seruice. For albeit the Lord say by the Prophet MALACHY, Cursed be the deceiuer that hath in his flocke a Male, and voweth and sacrificeth to the Lord a corrupt thing; yet the halt and the blind are the sacri-fices, which the rich and great ones of the World, offer to God. With how many worthy and admirable Pastors this Church of ours is furnished at this day, who haue beene the sonnes of excellent Diuines, I need not to relate; onely know, that this is the honour of our married Clergie, that whilst the Popes by their Nephewes, or rather their base children, childr en, doe furniſh the high places of their idolatrous Temples, we (bleſſed be God for holy Matrimonie) labour to bring vp our children in ſuch ſort, as that they being ſucceſſors of their fathers vertues, may alſo (as many ancient Biſhops did) ſucceed them in their parents either Places or Callings.

Amongſt many worthy of euerlaſting memorie, the Author of this worke is not the leaſt worthy. Hee was the ſonne of a moſt worthy Paſtor, who being much reſpected by that true Saint of God, Maſter Fox, was perſwaded to leaue teaching of children, in which arte he was one of the worthies of his time, to take vpon him the teaching of men. And being placed at Epping in the Countie of Eſſex, did for many yeeres together ſo labour in his Calling, that it pleaſed God by his Miniſterie to adde vnto the Church many that ſhould bee ſaued. I know not how many children he left behind him, this one, was in ſtead of, and aboue many. And as though that good Elkanah would euen from the Cradle dedicate him to God, he called his name Samuel, that is, heard or appointed of God; and, as if God himſelfe would aſſigne him for the ſacrifice of his people, hee appointed he ſhould be ſurnamed Hieron, that is, one fit for this ſpirituall ſacrifice. To the end he might proue a profitable Teacher, he was firſt educated by his learned Father, and from him conueyed to the Kings Schoole neare Windſore, from whence hee was choſen to Kings Colledge in Cambridge; where hee made ſuch progreſſe in few yeares, that at his firſt ſhewing of himſelfe in that Colledge, hee preached with ſuch approbation and applauſe, that to mee, who heard him often in his yong yeares, hee ſeemed rather a Bachelor in Diuinitie, then a Bachelor of Artes, and rather a Diuine of fortie, then foure and twentie yeares age: yea, hee was ſo much admired, that hee became of ſuch note, whilſt he ſtayed in London, that many Congregations, yea and the Innes of Court greatly deſired to enioy his Miniſterie. But being by that moſt learned and worthy Prouoſt, Sir Henrie Sauil, called to a charge in the gift of Eaton Colledge, hee following that Call, did ſo demeane himſelfe in that that place till he dyed, that not only the people of Modbury in Deuon, but many other places of that Countie and Countrie were much comforted by his paynes in preaching. He was reuerenced of the poore, admired of the rich, countenanced of the great ones, and respected of all. He was not so vaine-glorious, as to publish Bookes for his owne glorie, but being importuned by such as heard him, was constrayned to offer that to thine eye, which was preached to their eares. In which hee hath so behaued himselfe, that whosoeuer acquainted with the language of Canaan, shall reade his Works, may easily see that it was not he that spake, but the holy Ghost speaking in him. And howsoeuer, finding many friends in his place, hee was able only to repay their loue with Dedications of his labours, yet made hee such choice of Patrons for his paynes, that hee would choose none but some worthy Theophilus, which is a thing much neglected of the Writers of our age. It pleased God to take him away in his best time to doe good to the Church, and blessed be those worthy ones of that Countrie that take care for his children, now that hee is dead. Is hee now with the Lord? canst thou not (especially you of his charge) heare him speaking in the name of the Lord? now then, conferre with him in these printed Papers: in the which you shall find such varietie of good Doctrine, as will build you vp further in the course of godlinesse, and cause you to blesse God for these learned labours.

COLLEDGE IN CAMBRIDGE.

SIR, as a pledge of the reſpect I owe you, I haue made my ſelfe bold, vnder your name, to ſet forth this Sermon. The old prouerbe, which forbiddeth to ſend Owles to Athens, hath taught me not to ſend this to you, as a matter of ſupply: you (now) liue at the Well-head (from whence I confeſſe, and reioyce, my ſelfe to haue drawne that little, by which it hath ſince pleaſed God to enable me to the doing of ſome ſeruice in his Church) and were (long ſince) one of thoſe iudicious and painefull Diuines, at whoſe feete I ſate (with many others) in the dayes of my preparation to that worke, worke, wherein I now (by the aſsignement of the Lord of the Vine-yard) am imployed. In this therefore, I deſire rather to be thought to preſent you with an account of mine owne courſes, then with any direction for yours: The two Verſes before this, I haue preached on, and the Sermons are abroad. As I held it neceſſarie to treate on this alſo, ſo I thought it fitting to publiſh that, which concerning it was giuen me to deliuer. There is no one thing (I thinke) in which our ordinarie Hearers, are either more vnskilfull or more backward, then this dutie of trying Doctrines: what vnſettledneſſe in opinion, what vnſoundneſſe in iudgement, this hath cauſed, I doubt not, your ſelfe in your long experience haue obſerued. If I ſhall preuaile ought to the curing of this Epidemicall diſeaſe, I ſhall glorifie God in that behalfe. My endeuour that way, I haue ſhewed in this ſmall Sermon: which (here) from your hand, I commend to the common vſe of Gods Iſrael:

THE DOCTRINES TRIALL.

1. THES. 5. 21.

Try all things : and keepe that which is good.

I Will not enter into any course of repeating that which I taught in my former Sermon. This in briefe, to manifest the connexion and order of both; both my two Texts, and Lectures. In the former we were taught the necessitie of diligent and respective dependance vpon the preaching of the Word, vnlesse we will presumptuously and vnwarrantably aduenture our selues vpon the neglect of the ordinarie way, by which God is pleased to collect and gather his, vnto himselfe. We are now to be informed, with what wisedome it becommeth vs to behaue our selues in awayting vpon this Ordinance of God; that so we may reape that good by it, which in the purpose of God is intended in it. A seruice, in it selfe, and in it owne nature, wholesome and profitable, may yet in the manner of vsing it be depraued. Hearing is a very necessarie and an important dutie: and yet, a man through his owne default may be constant and continuall in it to his hurt, rather then to his benefit. To the end therefore we may so attend vpon this exercise of Prophecying, as that thereby we may be edified in our holy Faith, Paul commendeth here vnto vs, two necessarie Vertues: First, Discretion: Secondly, Constancy. Discretion, to trie all things. Constancy, to hold fast that, which is found vpon triall to be good. To retayne ought in Religion stifly, before a man haue tryed it thorowly, what greater folly? This is wilfulnesse rather and Pertinacy, then true Constancy. Againe, to examine points diligently, and then to neglect them carelesly, what greater vanitie? It is a great deale of labour to no vse. But to sift and scanne that which is heard, exactly, and to maintayne that which is found, to hold at the touch resolutely, this is the glorie and credit of Christianitie. Of these two points I am now in order to intreat.

The first Doctrine.

Concerning the first, this is the Doctrine: That it is the dutie of those which honor Preaching as the meanes appointed for saluation, To trie things taught, before they giue their full and absolute yeelding thereunto: Who that lookes vpon the place, but he will forthwith conceiue this to be the Doctrine? The aduice of the Spirit of God is, that our honouring of Prophecying, should be accompanyed with trying it. So respect it, as that you binde not your selues to a receiuing without enquirie, hand ouer head, whatsoeuer is commended by it. Hereto is that charge to be referred, Of * trying the Spirits, that is, Of examining their Persons and Doctrines, who professe to speake vnto vs by the Spirit. It remayneth vpon Record, as an honour to the Nobles of Berea, and it is a rule for vs, that hearing Paul and Silas preach, [a] They were diligent in searching, whether the things they spake were so.

* 1.Ioh.4.1.

The course of seeking holy Knowledge, at the mouthes of those, whose lips by their calling ought to preserue it [b], is termed by Solomon, [c] A buying of the Truth. As therefore in buying, it is euery mans wisedome to consider the Wares which are tendered to him, how they are conditioned, and (as Chrysostome saith pithily to this purpose) To goe from Shop to Shop, and from Chapman to Chapman, to looke where he may haue the best, before he make a through bargaine: so it ought to be the care of a prudent Christian, to consider of particulars, which are taught, before hee giue them entertaynement. [d] Take heede how you heare, said our Sauiour; Doth not this Take heede in hearing, intend a triall of things heard? Consider two things with me; and the Truth, Equitie, and Necessitie of this Doctrine will soone bee yeelded to. The one is, The possibilitie of being deceiued in our dependance vpon Prophecying. The other is, The danger of mistaking. The possibilitie of being deceiued, proceeds from two things: First, Somewhat in them, which Prophecy: Secondly, Somewhat in our selues, who listen thereunto. Touching them which prophecy, there are two sorts by whom there is danger of deceit. First, Some purpose to deceiue: Secondly, Some casually may deceiue. Some purpose to deceiue, whom the Apostle termeth, [e] Lyers in wait to deceiue, and whom he compares (according to the nature of the Greeke word vsed) to Cheaters and false Gamesters, who haue deuices by cogging Dice, to deceiue the vnskilfull. These [f] speake peruerse things, and [g] priuily bring in damnable Heresies. It hath beene an ancient practice of the Deuill, [h] To be a lying spirit in the mouthes of some prophets: There haue beene euer some [i] misse-leading Leaders; [k] Causers of the people to erre by their lyes; and Saint Peter hath assured vs, that in this particular, the latter times will hold proportion with the [l] former: Still there will be some seedsmen of Tares amongst them that sow the purer Wheate; some temperers of Leauen, with the sweet lumpe of Gods

Gods ſacred Truth. Others there are againe, which may caſually deceiue, and they are alſo of two ſorts. The one ſort are ſuch as may leade the people into errour (though perhaps it be not their purpoſe) through their inſufficiency, their rawneſſe, their vnskilfulneſſe, their negligence, for, and in the diſcharge of this great ſeruice of inſtructing. Too many ſuch there be, who wanting [m] the tongue of the Learned, who lacking [n] Iudgement, and skill of [o] right diuiding the Word of Truth, and being no [p] well-taught Scribes to the Kingdome of Heauen, and then withall being careleſſe of that charge, touching [q] taking heede to Doctrine, doe vent many things vnſound and vnſauourie, ſometimes things vaine and fooliſh, as the Scripture termeth them [r] ordinarily, [ſ] ſuch as God neuer commanded, nor ſpake, neither euer came into his minde, whereby [t] the minds of the ſimple are deceiued, and [u] the hearts of the Righteous made ſad. Theſe bee ſuch as Paul calleth [x] Deceiued deceiuers. They are beguiled themſelues, and ſo beguile others. I will not be ſo vncharitable as to range ſuch among purpoſed Deceiuers: yet this I ſay, they themſelues, being through vnskilfulneſſe and negligence miſtaken, and doing the Lords worke more remiſly then is fit, they become an occaſion of erring vnto others. When men come to the handling of holy things, not well inſtructed themſelues, and then doe that which they doe, without any great conſcience (it may be they doe it for forme, and binde themſelues to ſpeake according to the Times) it cannot bee auoided (though it may bee, their hearts are not ſo naught as to meane deceit) but ſomtimes others by them ſhall be in danger to be miſſeled. The ſecond ſort of ſuch as caſually may deceiue, are euen the beſt, the moſt ſufficient and faithfull Teachers. It is poſſible, that euen ſuch, notwithſtanding all their care, may at a time deliuer that which is not ſafe to entertayne. None ſince Chriſt, neither companies of Men, nor particular perſons, haue had the infallible aſſiſtance of the holy Ghoſt, except the Apoſtles. [y] Our knowledge here is but in part. In ſundrie things (as men) we are many times much miſtaken. And it falleth out many times, through Gods wiſe diſpenſing, that ſomewhat is reuealed to him which ſitteth by, which he, who occupieth the roome of the Teacher, doth not vnderſtand; as is gatherable out of that ſaying of the Apoſtle, (1. Cor. 14. 30.) This is the firſt thing out of which there ſprings a poſſibilitie of being deceiued. The ſecond is, from out of our ſelues which come to heare. Wee are naturally in matters of Religion eaſily miſſe-carried, by reaſon of the vanitie of minde, and darkneſſe of cogitation, which wee haue brought with vs from the [a] Wombe: [b] We are vnwiſe by nature and deceiued. And then what through preſumption, truſting too much to our ſelues, what through a kinde of natiue lothneſſe to endure the paynes of Trying, what through an affectation of Noueltie, we are very lyable to deceit, apt to drinke-in errour as water, and to bee [c] carried vp and downe with euery winde of Doctrine. As it is ſaid of vs in the generall, that wee are Clay to God, and Waxe to the Deuill: ſo may it be applyed to vs in the particular, that we are hardly wrought to an entertaynement of a Truth, but ſoone wonne to the embracing of an Errour. The Iewes, in regard of their vntowardneſſe

to good, were termed [d] ſtiffe-necked, and [e] a gainesaying people, and [f] ſoone turned out of the way which God commanded them; and the [g] Galatians were ſoone remoued to another Goſpell, and the paynes [h] of forming Chriſt in them, was as a trauailing in birth. Euer ſince the razing out of vs the Image of the God of Truth, there hath beene in our nature ſuch an affinitie with falſhood, that that which Saint Paul cals [i] the deceiueableneſſe of vnrighteouſneſſe, is very preuailing, ſpeedily to entangle vs. That ſame Canker or Gangrene of vntruth doth ſoone ſeize vpon vs, and [k] it fretteth apace when it hath once begun. Hereupon, the Bringers in of Hereſies haue many to follow their damnable wayes: and Antichriſt [m] hath ſmall and great, rich and poore, to receiue his marke. Now for the danger of erring in matters of this kinde, it is not hard to diſcouer it. Religion is a matter which concernes the ſoule, and the euerlaſting happineſſe thereof. A miſtaking therefore muſt needs be followed, with a more then ordinarie hurt. I know there are differences and degrees of errours in matters of Religion. Some doe ſtrike more directly to the heart of Pietie, and weaken the very mayne foundation of Faith. Some are not altogether of ſo dangerous a nature; being in points of leſſe importance. The former are as mortall diſeaſes in the body: the other are but as ſuperfluous humours within, or ſwelling tumours without. But yet as in the body, ſmaller griefes, when they are multiplyed and continued, become preiudiciall to the life of the whole: ſo theſe * kinds of miſtakings, when they are ordinarie and increaſed, grow dangerous to the Mayne. [n] A little Leauen doth leauen the whole lumpe: It is applyed by the Apoſtle, to ſhew what inconuenience followes the entertaynment of (as it may ſeeme) a petty errour in the things of God. Then withall in the day of temptation, when a man is either before the World called into queſtion for that which he doth profeſſe, or elſe is ſifted and winnowed by Satan, about that which hee beleeues; how wofull and hazzardous ſhall his caſe be, if he haue taken vp his Religion only (as I may ſo ſpeake) vpon truſt, or rayſed it vp out of his owne ſurmiſe! There is neither of theſe, but will bee a poore ground for him to relye vpon, in the time of Triall. Small courage ſhall one haue, to engage his life for that, for which his beſt proofe is the authoritie of him from whom he receiued it: and it will not be eaſie to anſwere the Deuill, by alleadging the name of a Man, vnleſſe he be able to iuſtifie his Tenent by diuine Authoritie. So then, if either wee conſider the eaſineſſe of erring in matters of Religion, or the perill of miſtaking therein, wee muſt needs acknowledge this Doctrine, touching the Triall of Doctrines, to be true. How ſhall this eaſineſſe to erre be preuented? How ſhall this danger of not going aright be auoided? but by this one courſe of conſidering all things, and of examining each point, before wee build vpon it as a certaintie.

The Deuill labours to poyſon the Fountayne of Truth (the publike Miniſtrie) ſo that oft-times there ſtreame euen from it very dangerous conceits: and the old ſaying may bee well applyed to our Profeſſion, Many goad inches, but few good Plough-men: So, many Aduenturers to ſpeake from from the Pulpit; not ſo many who obſerue the Rule, of ſpeaking ° as the Words of God, and then the beſt ſometimes are ouerſhot. I remember what we learned when wee were Boyes; How one Cannius was coozened in the buying of a Garden in an Iland. The Seller firſt inuited him to it, and for that day hired diuers Fiſhermen, to attend the Banks with Boats and Nets, and to bring in plentie of Fiſh, and to lay it at his feet, making Cannius beleeue (who wondered at it) that it was the Royaltie of the place, and that that ſeruice was due to him, as Lord of the Garden, whenſoeuer hee came thither. Cannius beleeuing him, and being much in loue with ſuch a commoditie, would needs haue the Garden, and paid for it to the purpoſe. Shortly after, hee had a diſpoſition, to let ſome of his friends ſee what a purchaſe he had made, and brought them to the Garden to be merry, making full account that the Fiſhermen would bee there, both to ſhew him paſtime, and to preſent him with a tribute of Fiſh. When hee ſaw neither Boate, nor Fiſherman, nor Net, he asked his Neighbours whether it were Holy-day with Fiſhermen? They anſwered, None that they knew of; and added withall, that they wondred at the late reſort of Fiſhermen there, as a thing vnvſuall in that place. Vpon this, Cannius perceiued he was coozened: but it was too late; he could not helpe it. And thus may an heedleſſe perſon bee deceiued in his dependance vpon Gods Ordinance: Hee may meet with ſome craftie Pythius (for ſo was hee called who deceiued Cannius) who may commend a Doctrine to him, and ſet it out with many plauſible termes, as if it were of ſuch and ſuch excellent vſe for a mans ſoule; which yet, when it is brought to triall, ſhall bee found to yeeld out no ſuch matter as was promiſed. Thus ſtill may this point bee amplified, touching the poſſibilitie to receiue infection, euen by preaching: to which when we ſhall ioyne our owne aptneſſe to bee miſſe-led, and the perill of going awry, the generall point muſt needs bee yeelded to; namely, that in receiuing of Doctrines, Trying ought to goe before Truſting; wee muſt labour to be ſure that that which we intend to keepe is good, before we ſet vpon the keeping of it as good.

° 1. Pet. 4. 11.

Cicero Offic. l. 3.

This point of Doctrine makes to the diſcouerie (I wiſh alſo it may ſo pleaſe God, to the recouerie) of three great euils, which are very preuailing, and very vniuerſall in theſe our Times. Firſt, Wilfulneſſe. Secondly, Careleſneſſe. Thirdly, Vnskilfulneſſe. The firſt of theſe is a froward humour. The ſecond, a negligent humour. The third, a ſottiſh humour. They are ouercomne with the firſt, who plead for their excuſe, in either not hearing, or not crediting any whom they heare; the varietie of opinions to be found among Preachers, and the poſſibilitie of being deceiued by dependance on them; ſcarcely two of them of a minde (ſay ſome) and therefore my reſolution is, I will beleeue none. How doth this agree with the Rule of Trying all things? It is not the counſell of the holy Ghoſt, becauſe there is a ſpirit of errour in the mouthes of many, and the beſt learned may miſtake, therefore ceaſe to heare; but becauſe it is thus, be ſure to trie. This binds to iudiciall hearing, it giues no warrant to deſiſt from hearing. Wilt thou rather ſtarue, becauſe of a poſſibilitie to bee poyſoned? or or goe naked and neere the winde, becauſe in the ſhops of them that ſell, thou mayſt bee coozened? or lye downe in the ſtreet, or by the hedge, becauſe (perhaps) thou mayſt either goe wrong, or ſtumble on the way? Our Sauiour would haue his Diſciples learne and inquire, and ſeeke to be ſure p what he was, though ſome ſaid one thing, ſome another, touching him. That I may be deceiued, muſt increaſe my care, not ouerthrow my diligence.

Now touching the ſecond euill, of Careleſneſſe, it is to be ſeene in thoſe, who are apt to take all for ſound and good, which is deliuered. If they can countenance that which they ſeeme to maintayne, with the name of a Teacher, or ſay, it was deliuered at a Sermon, they thinke it is enough. Eſpecially there is euen a kinde of Idolatrie committed by ſome, in ſelling themſelues ſo to ſome mens iudgements, that they doe in a manner repute euery word an Oracle which they ſpeake. It is ſufficient for them, if ſuch or ſuch a man hath ſaid it. This is euen a ſpice of that which Saint Paul termes q a being ſeruants to men. It is r to haue ones faith more in the wiſedome of man, then in the power of God. ſ Let a man eſteeme of vs, as the Miniſters of God, but yet, not as men, in whom, but t by whom, you beleeue. u Were he an Angell from heauen, yet his Goſpell muſt bee looked into. Harken to a matter becauſe we ſay it; ſo much wee may challenge by our place: but doe not beleeue it, vntill you know vpon what ground we haue ſpoken it. Could we once worke a conſcience of this dutie in our Hearers, many who doe now deſpiſe our Doctrine, would then approoue it; and they which doe approoue it, would finde ten times more ſweetneſſe in it then they doe.

But now commeth the third euill, at the leaſt as bad as the two former, and that is Vnskilfulneſſe. This reacheth farre. For, beſides, that they who are guiltie of the two before named, are alſo chargeable with this; euen they who are better diſpoſed, and haue a kinde of inclination to the dutie of Triall, yet want that skill, and ableneſſe for it, which is neceſſarie. It is not eaſie, no not among the beſt Profeſſors, to finde a man x that hath an exerciſed wit, to diſcerne both good and euill. A witty and ingenious man, well ſpoken, and able to carry a matter handſomely, and to ſet it out with a ſmooth and pleaſing phraſe, would ſoone deceiue euen a great many of thoſe which meane well.

Quickly might a man of Arts and Parts, make many of vs to ſtagger, euen touching thoſe very things which hitherto haue gone with vs for currant, and wherein we haue ſeemed very confident. A man might ſo lap vp the poyſonous drugs of Poperie, and ſo gild them ouer with the ſeeming allowance of Scripture, and of hore-headed Antiquitie, that euen the greateſt part would ſoone ſwallow them downe without ſuſpicion. This is a truth, but a lamentable truth. What pitty is it, that after this long Sunneſhine of the Goſpell in this Land, there ſhould bee ſo many, who but (as Saint Peters terme is) ſee glimmeringly, and vncertainely, like one y who cannot ſee a-farre off, in matters of Religion; and like Zebut in the holy Storie, either take Men to be but the ſhaddowes of Mountaynes, z or the ſhaddowes of Mountaynes to be Men. They know not what to make of many many things, what to conceiue, or how to determine. And as Absolom and the Elders of Israel, at the first gaue a generall approbation to Achitophels aduice, and were readie to follow it, but by and by said, The counsell of HVSHAI the Archite was a great deale better, and so did [a] accordingly: so they who now say; Surely, this is the Truth which wee must bide by; within a while are apt to crie out; Nay, but this is the better; and like the Lystrians in the Storie, bee readie to cast him out, whom in the beginning [b] they did magnifie. Now, happy might I account my selfe, if the Doctrine which I haue framed out of this Text, might become a purgatiue receit, for the remouing of these three malignant Humours; then the which, I professe I know none, which doe more preiudice the good concoction of that heauenly and wholesome Doctrine which is taught vs. If we can say, this Text is not the Word of God, or that it hath no Authoritie to binde vs, or that it doth not directly make against these three corruptions, I see no cause but we may cherish them, and maintayne our selues in them: but otherwise, it becommeth vs, vpon the paine of the most High his displeasure, to cast aside all either frowardnesse, or neglect in this matter, and to labour to haue skill in the performance of this Trying dutie. [d] We disclaime all Lordship ouer your faith, we are set on worke [e] for the seruice of your faith, not for commanding it. We leaue it to Papists, to tyrannize ouer mens thoughts in matters of Religion, and to require the people to lap vp their faith in the generall beleeuing of the Church. We desire you to Trie, we beseech you to enquire, we would faine bring you [f] to stand in the wayes and aske, we know, you can neuer till then haue [g] stablished hearts; you can neuer attayne to that of being [h] fully perswaded euery man in his owne minde: and when you shall doe this, you will say to vs, who haue preached to you, as the Samaritane said to the Woman, Now we beleeue not, because of your sayings, for wee haue found it our selues, and know that this and this is so [i] indeed: or after some such sort, as the Queene of the South said to Solomon; The sweetnesse which we now feele in Religion, [k] farre exceedeth your report.

Now because, if I should winne you all to a resolution of Trying Doctrines, and then leaue you doubtfull, how and which way to performe it, my course would bee vnprofitable: therefore you shall giue mee leaue to bestow some paynes that way, and to giue some necessarie directions in that behalfe. That there is a meanes to attayne to some sufficiency for the discharge of this seruice, why should I goe about to proue? God would neuer bid vs Trie, if it were not possible for vs to be able to Trie. Now all Triall of Doctrine must be by some Rule. The Greeke word here translated Trie, betokens, such a triall as Gold-smiths vse touching metall; for the discerning whereof they haue a touch-stone, at which that which will not hold, is reiected and laid by as counterfeit. A touch-stone there must be sought, for this businesse. And when we haue found it, we must vnderstand how to make vse of it, to that end. The mayne Touch by which all Doctrine Doctrine must be tryed, and by which it must either stand or fall, is the Wil of God reuealed in the Scriptures. [l] Bring them to the Law, and to the Testimonie (said the Oracle of God of old) and consider whether they speake according to that Word. By this our Sauiour himselfe was content to bee [m] tryed; By this the preaching of Paul and Silas at Thessalonica was [n] tryed. Religious Doctrines are Gods matters: and shall we haue a better then God to be tryed by, in the things of God? and how shall we know what is Gods minde in a matter of Doctrine, but by the Scripture? Excellently spake he, who called the Scripture the Heart and Soule of God; and he who affirmed, that God hath left for vs in the Scriptures, A Fortresse against errours. Let Papists (if they will needs) persist in their blasphemous disclayming the triall of the Scripture, accounting Traditions to be the Touch-stone of Doctrine, and the Foundation of Faith, and reputing the Scriptures to be rather a kind of Store-house for aduice in matters of Religion; yet we will euer account them the Diuine Beame, and the most exact Ballance, and approue that course of That great Constantine, exhorting the Fathers assembled in the Nicene Councell, to take the resolution of things in question, out of the diuinely inspired Writings. And let men learne here by the way, how necessarie it is for them, if they would bee rightly grounded in Religion, to be well acquainted with the Scriptures. Our Sauiours rule can neuer faile: [o] You are deceiued, not knowing the Scriptures. God forbid, wee should vnder any pretext dishearten you in your care to turne ouer Gods Booke. Let profaneneſse and Poperie cast reproches vpon diligence and ordinarineſse; herein, we the Ministers of Christ, shall rather call vpon you, as Chrysostome of old did vpon his Hearers, Heare, O you men of the World, get you Bibles. It is, saith another of the Ancients, of all torments, the greatest to the Deuils, if they see a man giuen to the reading of the Scriptures. We would reioyce to see those dayes spoken of in Storie, wherein the secrets of the Scriptures should be familiarly knowne to Taylors, Smithes, Weauers, Seamsters, Deluers, Neat-herds, &c. and of which Hierome speaks, Wherein euen silly Women were wont to contend, who should learne without booke most Scripture.

Neuer will we hold with that blasphemous Papist, That it was the inuention of the Deuill, to permit the people to reade the Bible: but wee will still presse you with that of the Apostle, [p] Let the Word of Christ dwell plenteously in you.

Thus haue we found the Touch-stone: let vs now enquire how it must be vsed. A little Child, or a Foole may easily finde a Touch-stone, and yet when he hath it, not know what to doe with it, more then with another ordinarie pibble. Though the Scripture bee not so common as it should, yet it is conuersed with by more, then can tell how to turne it vnto good. This then shall bee the next part of my taske, to shew how the Scripture may be made vse of, for the Triall of Doctrines.

And here there are two things considerable. First, How he must be qualified, who aduentureth to meddle with the Scripture. Secondly, How being so qualified as is necessarie, he may be able to apply it to this vse. First, whoso puts puts his hand to the Scripture in desire to get skill by it, so, as that by the helpe thereof, he may be able to examine Doctrines, it is meete especially that he be a man of an humble spirit. [q] They be the humble, to whom the Lord giueth grace; [r] He dwelleth with such; [s] He teacheth his way to such; to them he reuealeth his secrets: [t] A man must humble himselfe, that he may walke with his God. It is a good speech of AVGVSTINES, The Doctrine of the Scripture is so tempered, that there is no man but may draw thence sufficient for himselfe, prouided that he come vnto it with Deuotion. Now, that which the Scripture meaneth by humblenesse of Spirit in this case, and Augustine by Deuotion, is this; A yeelding of a mans selfe ouer to be taught of God, out of a resolued and strong opinion, that he is of himselfe but a Foole in the things of God. This is that which the Apostle calleth a being a Foole, [u] to the end that he may be wise. [x] They be the simple, to whom the Word of the Lord giues sharpnesse of wit. The summe is this in a word (that I may not dwell vpon this particular;) Except a man bee sensible in himselfe of mans natiue dulnesse in the matters of God, of the vnfitnesse of his reason, to iudge and to determine in points of that nature, and so resolue to submit himselfe wholly to bee taught of God, and to conforme himselfe, and to subdue his thoughts, and to frame them to that which he shall reueale, it is vnpossible that he should euer bee by the Scriptures made wise vnto saluation. Now, the best euidence of ones being furnished with this worthy qualitie, is his binding himselfe not to looke into the Scripture without prayer. Thus did Dauid bewray the meekenesse of his Spirit, by begging of God to open his eyes, to [y] see the wonders of the Law, by praying him to [z] giue him vnderstanding, to [a] teach him good iudgement and knowledge. This shewed Dauid to haue renounced all opinion of his owne sufficiency, and to haue resigned himselfe ouer wholly to the Lords guidance. He would not trust himselfe in wading into these depths: but in more then a iealousie ouer himselfe, he cast himselfe altogether vpon God. It is but as Paul calleth it, [b] vaine iangling, and [c] science falsly so called, a kinde of frothy knowledge, whatsoeuer men get out of the Scripture, aduenturing on it, without this qualitie. Determine if thou wouldest get ought out of Gods Booke, by which thy soule may bee satisfied as with marrow and fatnesse, neuer to betake thy selfe to the vse of it, but to vrge that vpon thy selfe, which the Woman of Samaria scoffingly said to Christ, [d] Thou hast nothing to draw with, and the Well is deepe, without thee, O Lord, I shall depart emptie away. God must bee prayed vnto, and wee must say with the Apostles, Lord, shew vs this Parable.

Now, when a man is thus addressed and prepared with an humble, yeelding, and resigned Spirit, his next care must be, to be furnished out of the Scripture with some matter of Rule, by which hee may still in his hearing course, make that triall which is necessarie. This matter of Rule, I may thus distinguish; It is either more generall, or more speciall and particular. The more generall matter of Rule, is the Doctrine of Catechisme. I will shew you what I meane hereby. There is a thing, which Paul in one place calleth [e] the Forme of Doctrine; in another, [f] the Patterne of wholesome words;

g Heb.6.1. words; elſewhere, g The Doctrine of the beginning of Chriſt. It is a certayne frame of ſacred Truth, raiſed out of plaine, direct, and vnqueſtiond Texts of holy Scripture, manifeſting by the way of abridgement, the order and courſe of mans ſaluation, to whom he muſt looke vp for it, and by what way and meanes hee muſt come to it. Hee which doth not begin at this, ſhall neuer come vnto that in Religion, which is called h the Certainty. There was a courſe of teaching this in the Apoſtles dayes, as may bee gathered out of *Heb.*6. 1. and hath beene continued in all well-gouerned Churches euer ſince. And I am verily perſwaded, that one ſpeciall reaſon, why both many, who are for Profeſſion Diuines, are ſtaggering and vncertaine, and various in points of Diuinitie, and ſubiect to drawing this way, and that way, either by the Times, or by ſuch Authors as they meet with; and diuers alſo of our people, of all ranks, are ſo vnſettled, and ſo by and by puzzled, vpon the raiſing vp of a new or ſtrange point of Doctrine, is, they were neuer well brought vp in the grounds of Catechiſme. And it is a great errour both amongſt vs Miniſters, that this kind of Teaching is ſo little in our practice; and amongſt the people, that where it is vſed, it is ſo little in eſteeme. Neuer ſhall a man be other then raw in Religion, that was not well ſeaſoned with the firſt rudiments. Theſe muſt be to him like the Patternes which ſome Craftſmen haue, by which they proportion out their worke: That which they heare, if it hold not agreement with theſe Principles, it muſt be reiected as vnſound. Theſe our dayes affoord many helps in this kind, and our neglect herein is the more without excuſe. If you ſhall giue this point but a little time and roome in your thoughts, to be here conſidered of, I make no doubt, but you will all confeſſe it to bee true.

h *Luk.*1.4.

Now, the more ſpeciall and particular Rule, is either for the deciding of the great Queſtion betwixt Vs and Papiſts, or for our direction and ſettlement in that ordinary Preaching which is amongſt our ſelues. Touching Poperie, we ſhall finde that courſe which Solomon tooke for the trying of the two Harlots which came before him, whether was the true Mother, when both were therein very i confident, to be of very ſpeciall vſe for the triall thereof, and for the confirming of a mans determination touching it, that it is but counterfeit. Shee, vvho could bee content the liuing Child ſhould be diuided, Solomon gaue his verdict vpon her, that ſurely ſhee was not the Mother. Vnitie is a matter much boaſted of by Papiſts, yet there is nothing ſo pregnant againſt them as this point of Diuiſion. For whereas God vvill haue all reſerued to himſelfe, and vvill admit no Coparcinory (k I will not giue my glorie to another) vve ſhall find Poperie, in the points of Chriſtian Religion, to admit (cleane contrary to the fundamentall Lawes of Heauen) as it vvere a Gauel-kind cuſtome, and to allow Sharers vvith God, in the things vvherein he vvill endure no Partners; as for example: Adoration is diuided betwixt God and Images. The ſeruice of Prayer betwixt God and Creatures. Mediation to the diuine Maieſtie, betwixt Chriſt and Saints. The headſhip of the Church, betwixt Chriſt and the Pope. The conuerſion of a Sinner, betwixt the freedome of Gods Grace, and the freedome of mans Will. Iuſtification, betwixt Faith and Works. The ground of a Chriſtian mans faith, betwixt Scriptures and Traditions. Abſolute obedience betwixt Gods Commandements, and the Precepts of the Church. And ſo in other things: for I giue you but a taſte. Take we this for a certaine Rule, by which to iudge of the Doctrine of Poperie. It is content, like the pretended Mother, to diuide thoſe things betwixt two, or moe, which ought of right to be reſerued vnto one. I dare vndertake, that in the mayne points of that Religion, there is a making ouer, more or leſſe, from God to ſomewhat elſe, all that glorie, that reſpect, that dependance vpon, that reuerence, that acknowledgement, which by vertue of the firſt Commandement is his peculiar. I would faine ſee, how the Doctrine of the Church of Rome can bee freed from diſperſing thoſe affections and powers of the Heart vnto ſundrie particulars, which the Lord requireth to be giuen wholly vnto him. Let the matter bee thorowly examined: and if the ſeuerall points of that Religion, which we profeſſe and preach in the Church of England at this day, be not like the lines in a Circumference, which all meete in this one Centre of Gods glorie, and of that mayne ayme of God in all his proceedings, [l] He that reioyceth, let him reioyce in the Lord, we may freely allow you to diſclaime it. We will neuer feare to ioyne iſſue with Papiſts in this: wee will neuer decline, nay, we will entreat and ſue for this Triall.

Gods

l 1.*Cor.*1.31.

Now, for direction in dependance vpon our ordinarie preaching, I commend this eſpecially to the obſeruation and vſe of common men. For I now labour not ſo much to giue Precepts for thoſe that bee learned, and haue helps by Arts and Tongues and Reading, to ſcan the things which are preſented to them: but I endeuour to guide thoſe, who haue no more for their aide in this ſeruice, then common education hath afforded them. I remember a ſaying of Pauls, Iudge you (ſaid he) what I ſay. Me thinks I may thence conclude, that there is ſomewhat within the Soule and Conſcience of the Hearer, by which hee muſt determine touching that which commeth to him, whether it be meet to giue it entertaynment, yea or no. There is a [n] certayne hid man of the heart, which muſt bee Iudge in this caſe. Thou muſt trie that which thou heareſt, by the worke which it hath vpon thy ſoule. There be three ſpeciall things which I may terme the ayme of the whole Scripture. That Doctrine which tends to the furtherance of all, or either of theſe three, a man may ſafely build vpon it, that it is true: That which is a let or an impediment to any of theſe three, it muſt be reiected as vnſound. The three things, are; Firſt, Humilitie. Secondly, Comfort. Thirdly, Conſcience of obedience. The whole Scripture driues to theſe three: Firſt, To abaſe man in his owne eyes, and to lay him in the duſt. Secondly, To refreſh his ſoule, and to bring his bones which haue beene broken, to reioyce. Thirdly, To frame his heart to a conſtant deſire and care of pleaſing God. Theſe be three things ſimply neceſſarie to the compoſition of a right Chriſtian. Hereupon the Scripture is ſo exact in laying open the corruption of mans naturall eſtate, in ſetting out the foulenеſſe, and haynouſneſſe of ſinne, in deſcribing the rigour of Gods iuſtice,

n 1.*Pet.*3.4.

iuſtice, in declaring the terror of that which is the beſt of mans deſert. Hereupon (ſecondly) it is, that it ſo graciouſly diſcouereth the myſterie of Chriſt, the fulneſſe of the Grace which is in him, the riches of Gods mercy through him, euery way anſwering a mans ſpirituall neceſſitie. Hereupon (thirdly) it is, that it ſo preciſely and ſtraightly preſſeth the duties of holineſſe, giuing no manner of libertie to mans owne naturall inclination, but binding him to a finiſhing his ſaluation with feare and trembling, and to a cauſing his heart to be in the feare of God continually. Marke thou this then: Examine thine owne ſoule, how that which thou heareſt, helpeth thee onwards in either of theſe three; how it beates downe the naturall pride and preſumption of thy heart, ſtriuing to make thee vile in thine owne eyes; how it acquaints thee with the Fulneſſe of Chriſt, and directs thee for the ſettling of thine abaſed and trembling ſoule vpon him; how it hedgeth thee in, in thoſe exceſſes thou art inclinable to; how it limits and ſtints thee in the things wherein thou wouldeſt faine haue libertie; how it tyeth thee vp, and vrgeth thee to a kinde of ſtrict and circumſpect walking. If thou finde it thus to worke, embrace it, reſt vpon it, lay it vp, hide it in the midſt of thy Heart, it ſhall be health to thy Nauill, and marrow to thy Bones. If thou heareſt a Doctrine taught, which thou findeſt to extenuate the corruption of mans nature, or to darken and obſcure that aboundant mercy which is in Chriſt, weakning that aſſurance which an afflicted ſoule deſireth by him, or to hearten the euill inclination of the heart, and to giue ſome libertie to the fleſh, and to ſeeme to make ſome of thoſe courſes tolerable, which thou (as a man) art readie to affect; beware thereof, as of poyſon to thy ſoule. It is not that truth which thou muſt hearken to. I haue ſet you downe a Rule, which if you pleaſe to obſerue and practiſe, you ſhall finde to be exceeding vſefull. That which thou heareſt, if thou perceiue that it humbleth and checketh thee in thy ſecuritie, comforts thee in thy perplexitie, curbs thee in, in thy deſired libertie, thou maiſt be bold to ſay, It is the Truth of God. All the falſhood which in theſe dayes generally we are in danger of, faileth in one of theſe three particulars. If I ſhall ſhew you an experiment of this Rule, it will be the better vnderſtood, and the better credited. I pray be pleaſed to ioyne a little with mee in the trying of the Doctrine which my ſelfe haue here taught in my former Sermon vpon the precedent Verſe, and vpon this, thus farre. I taught in that, the neceſſitie of dependance vpon preaching, if we would bee ſaued: I vrged the ſeeking to enioy this meanes, eſpecially on the Sabbath day, though it were with ſome charge or hazzard. I haue perſwaded (in this) diligence to Trie the Doctrines which are taught, and care to be furniſhed with skill to that end. Now it may be, all are not in theſe particulars of the ſame opinion; perhaps, you may heare that taught ſometime, which is ſomewhat differing: as, that other meanes may ſerue without preaching, that there needeth not be ſuch labouring and ſeeking after it, now and then may ſuffice; and that it is not for ordinarie perſons, to ſeeke to bee ſo skilfull and buſie, as to fall to the examining of Doctrines. It may bee (I ſay) ſuch things as theſe may bee deliuered plauſibly, and with ſome ſhew of truth.

To

To resolue vs therefore herein, let vs make vse of our Rule: you shall find that this Doctrine which so presseth an attendance vpon preaching, makes most for mans humbling, most for his comfort, most for his restraint. First, Most for his humbling. For, what can put a man downe more then the binding of him (whatsoeuer he be, Noble, Wise, Learned, and howsoeuer else outwardly qualified) to sit him downe as a Disciple in the Learners forme? Hee shall not thinke to worke out a path to Heauen by his owne industrie: but he must seeke sauing knowledge at the mouth of another, and goe as he is led by anothers hand. This cuts the very heart of mans naturall pride, according as indeed it is onely out of the haughtinesse of their spirits, and their lothnesse to stoope, and the good opinion of their owne sufficiency, which maketh a great many to gainesay this Doctrine. What is the reason that Paul of old called it [x] the foolishnesse of preaching, but because men in their seeming wisedome scorned it, and esteemed it for little better then euen a very ridiculous and childish course? Oh, if man by some course of his owne inuenting, might bee permitted to seeke out Heauen, it would please him a great deale better: but, to require him to giue attendance vpon a Teacher, to sit at the foote of a poore Minister, and to heare what he shall say, and to suffer him to controll and checke him in his courses, and with meekenesse and silence, yea euen with thankfulnesse to endure it, what a very death is this? what a base thing in the eyes of flesh and bloud? You see plainely this makes most for a mans humbling: I am much deceiued, if it doe not also make most for his comfort. First, this I am sure, that the mysterie of Christ (the ground of comfort) can neuer so worke vpon a mans affections any way, as when it is effectually discouered by a liuely voyce. There is a certayne efficacy in the voyce of man to put life into the inward parts. But this is not all: Here is the chiefe; A mans comfort in Christ is then such as he may haue best assurance of, when hee can say, hee hath not therein beene his owne caruer, but the same hath beene applyed to him by the hand of Gods Minister, who is the Steward of the Lords House, to giue to euery one his portion of meate in season. The faithfull Pastor in the Congregation, [y] is in Christs stead, and [z] hath power to binde and loose. I say vnto thee plainely, thou canst neuer take that true, sound, and solid comfort in Christ, which is fit, till thou hast the authoritie of Gods Minister to seale it vp vnto thee. That which hee putteth on thee, and applyeth to thee, (thy heart being rightly prepared beforehand) that same is it whereupon thou maist rest. [a] Hee is that one man of a thousand, which must declare thy righteousnesse vnto thee, that God may haue mercy on thee. Loth would I bee to preiudice any mans or womans comfort. Let euery one looke to himselfe vpon what ground he stands: this I am sure, that he stands vpon the best and safest termes, who can say touching his hope and comfort in Christ Iesus, This I haue gotten by awayting vpon Gods Ordinance; The Minister who hath authoritie from God, thus and thus hath he spoken to my soule.

Let vs now see in the third place, whether this course be not also (as I said) most for mans restraint. What man is there, but if he were left vnto himselfe, himselfe, to take his owne choice, would not rather sit still warme and quiet at home, and keepe his money in his purse for his owne priuate occasions, and take his ease on the Sabbath day, and satisfie himselfe with a reading Minister, then paine his body, straine his purse, hazzard his peace, tie vp himselfe short from those Sunday-delights, which the men of these Times are accustomed to, and all this for preachings sake? Certainely, there is more content to the flesh by the other still course, then by that kinde of dependance vpon preaching, which I haue laboured to perswade. A man must resolue to cut himselfe short in many things, or else he shall neuer profit by it as is meet. I may thus discouer the truth of this Rule, in that other point also touching Triall. How doth this make to a mans humbling, when hee is not permitted to trust his owne first apprehensions, but is required (in a kinde of iealousie ouer himselfe, and in the disclayming of his owne iudgement) to seeke a Rule out of himselfe, by which to examine that which he must make vse of for himselfe? How doth it againe adde to a mans comfort? By this meanes hee attaynes to that sweetnesse in Religion, and to that vnderstanding, which without this, he should neuer haue perceiued. This will enable him to say, [b] Thy Word is proued to be pure, and thy seruant loueth it. How (lastly) doth this curbe a man in his owne naturall desire? For, whereas of himselfe hee would gladly end his taske with the act of hearing, and so betake himselfe to some freer course; this calls him to an after-reckoning, and bindes him to a second labour of recounting and viewing all particulars, and making diligent inquirie into them for their certaintie. And thus haue I giuen an instance or two for the application of this Rule: and therein I end this first part of my Text touching the first vertue therein required, which I called Discretion.

b *Psal.*119.140.

The second Doctrine.

The next now followeth, which is concerning constancy (Keepe that which is good.) The Doctrine is, That that, which diligence of triall hath discouered to vs to bee sound, must with all faithfulnesse and perseuerance bee kept and retayned to the end. The very first view of the words will acquit me from strayning this Collection: Keepe that which is good: Neuer leaue sifting of Doctrines, till you haue found the good: when you haue found it, be sure to preserue it; a shame to haue taken such a deale of paynes for it, and then to forsake it. The truth of this point will be the more profitably discouered, if wee shall bee pleased to vnderstand and consider, that there is a three-fold keeping, which may very well bee thought to bee here intended. First, A keeping in Memorie. Secondly, A keeping in Affection. Thirdly, A keeping in Practice. The first of these makes way for the second; the second for the third. Good must be remembred, that it may be loued: and it must be loued, that it may be practised. Touching keeping of good and holy things in memorie, these Texts are plaine. [c] Hide my Commandements within thee; [d] Keepe them in the midst of thy heart; [e] Take heede, keepe thy soule diligently that thou forget not. [f] These words shall be in thy heart. [g] Remember the words which I said vnto you (said our Sauiour.) [h] Remember the words which were spoken of the Apostles, [i] Giue heede to the things which we haue heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. The memorie morie is, as it were, the Treasurie of the Soule: what more worthy to bee laid vp in it, then that wherewith the things of the greatest worth are not meet to be [k] compared? Holy Doctrine is (as I may call it) the food of the Soule. It is the portion of meat spoken of in the [l] Gospell. Now what good will a mans meate doe him, if he void it vp, through weakenesse of stomake, as fast as it is eaten? the body thereby can receiue no nourishment. Elsewhere that which is commended to vs by preaching, is compared to [m] Seed. Now when the seed is cast into the ground, if the Birds doe by and by pick it vp, or the Swine straitway deuoure it vp, is there any hope of Harueſt? It is so in this. Be that, which we haue gotten by hearing, neuer so excellent, if it tarry not with vs, it cannot auaile vs. It may bring a man to some smell of Religion; neuer to any truth or power of godlinesse. Well, as it must be kept in Memorie, so in Affection too; my meaning is, a man must persist in the earnest loue and zealous profession thereof. There must bee no declining nor going backe, no slaking of that first eagrenesse with which he seemed in the beginning to embrace it. This is that holding fast, commended by Christ to the Church of [n] Philadelphia, and the want hereof was the blemish of Ephesus; it is taxed in her by the termes [o] of losing her first Loue. There may be an entertayning of good things with ioy, which yet vanisheth like a morning cloud; and as it commeth to nothing, so it is worth nothing. [p] It is good to loue alwaies earnestly in a good thing. When the beginnings be hot, and the proceedings but warme, the conclusion generally is cold, and the end of such is [q] fearefull. The children of God must rather [r] increase and [s] grow, and [t] goe from strength to strength, and [u] shine more and more, and [x] follow hard toward the marke. Then (thirdly) there must be also a keeping in practice. That good which is found, must be obeyed. This is that keeping, to which Christ promiseth a [y] blessing, which Saint Iames [z] commends, and which Dauid aymeth at in that affectionate speech, [a] Oh that my wayes were directed, that I may keepe thy Statutes! There is no such keeping here meant, as that of the greedy men of the world, in hoording vp their treasure, euen vntill the cankering and rusting [b] thereof be readie to witnesse against them, and as a fire to eate their flesh: but this is a keeping for vse. Such a keeping Dauid speaks of, [c] I haue hid thy promise in my heart, that I might not sinne against thee; he so kept the knowledge of holy things in his minde, that he might produce them into practice. The truth is, if a man doe hold fast the truth of God in his affection, he cannot but shew forth the fruits of obedience to it in his practice: The abundance which is in his heart, cannot but breake forth into his outward man. This is like that [d] oyle in a mans right hand which vttereth it selfe. It is as the Wine, which will sooner breake the vessels in which it is, then it will want [e] vent. The sweetnesse which a man finds and feeles in it, by giuing it louing entertaynement in his heart, will so rauish him, that he cannot but bewray the contentment which he finds therein, by his outward carriage. His whole life and course will proclaime and testifie the zealous affection of his soule. Can a man loue the truth in his heart, and not tender the credit thereof? And is it possible to bring more credit to it, then to be bold and resolute in obeying it? to be careless of credit, peace, profit, and whatsoeuer else by nature man affects, so that he may walke therein? It is in vaine for a man to professe to loue Religion in his heart, if he disclaime the rule, and authoritie, and power of it in his life. As if a man should protest he loues me, but when I come to trie him, he will doe nothing for me; will I beleeue his protestations? So then, this may satisfie vs for this point; If I would keepe life in the graces of Gods Spirit which I haue receiued, I must honour prophecying: My honouring of prophecying must be tempered with trying that which is deliuered by it: when by triall I haue found out that which I am sure is good, I must resolue vpon keeping it, I must keepe it in memorie, and striue not to forget it. I must keepe it in affection, and labour not to lose my first loue to it. I must keepe it in practice, that all my whole life and carriage may adorne it. To labour to finde out good, and when it is found, not to remember it, is ridiculous: to remember it, and yet to make no account of it, is vaine: to say, I make account of it, and yet doe not practise it, is absurd: I striue to remember it, I labour to affect it, I make conscience to obey it, this is excellent.

The Vse. Thinke you, whether this be not a very necessarie point to be remembred to vs, considering what ill Keepers generally we be in matters of this nature. For, touching the first kinde of keeping, which is Memorie; besides that naturall debilitie which is in vs in things of this kinde, how iustly are we chargeable with a kinde of willing forgetfulnesse? It is not our purpose nor our care to remember, wee are euen very well content to lose these particulars. We, who can whine and fret for other losses, and be angrie with our selues, and say, What a Beast was I to forget this, and not to remember that? are yet neuer troubled, though multitudes of good points of Doctrine runne thorow vs, as thorow a Pipe, or fall from vs, as water from a Swannes backe, leauing behind within vs no impression. Doe but speake soothly (I pray you) betwixt God and your Soules, and say, When did you solemnely in prayer lament your forgetfulnesse, and intreate the Lord to pardon it? This sheweth we are guiltie of a kind of affected forgetfulnesse. I would this were all our sayling (though this be bad enough) but, behold, yet more abominations; Alas, how loose are we in our affections to holy things? There is (I confesse) a kind of sodaine heate, which ariseth in some, somewhat violent at the first, like the flushings in the face of a man, who is inwardly distempered. Oh, what will not they doe? they march as furiously as Iehu, in their first onset; They will heare, they will reade, they will sanctifie the Sabbath, they will reforme their Families, they will sweare no more, &c. but (wo is me) what is more ordinarie then to see euery day many such [f] passe away, as the rising of Riuers? their great heat is soone asswaged, they are quickly weary of that seruice, which they seemed to vndertake with a great deale of feruency. How full are our dayes, of such, vpon whom when a man lookes, hee may with a kinde of mournefull indignation say, Are all their great shewes come to this? Nay, let the best Professors (if they be wise) consider themselues touching this, and

and compare together their preſent courſe with their firſt beginnings, and ſee whether they haue not let goe a great deale of their firſt hold, and are euen come the very next ſtep to a Laodicean temper. I know nothing wherein a wiſe Chriſtian hath more cauſe to feare himſelfe then this, that his loue is not ſo earneſt, nor his zeale ſo feruent as it hath beene. This ſame decaying in affection, it is like a conſumption, it ſteales vpon a man, and is farre growne vpon him many times, yea euen well-neere to an incurable pitch before it be perceiued. Fearing it, will be a meanes to preuent it. We liue in a cooling Climate, and we ſhall find it as hard to keepe this heate in vs, as it was to maintayne Dauids naturall heate when he was g old. I haue ſhewed our defect in the two firſt kindes of keeping: let vs ſee what may be found in vs touching the third, Keeping in practice. And here (me ſeemeth) I am ſodainely ſtriken with aſtoniſhment, and know not what to ſay: not for lacke of matter, but for lacke of skill to draw into few words, ſuch a world of matter, as this particularitie doth affoord. Here a man might fill euen h a roll of a Booke within and without, with accuſations, cenſures, complaints, threatnings, againſt all degrees, ages, conditions, ſexes. Somewhat haply we remember, ſomewhat wee ſeeme to eſteeme and to profeſſe: but what is our practice? I ſpeake not now touching thoſe, which are at a kinde of enmitie with all Religion, and care not though they be noted and knowne to be of none: but let vs looke to our ſelues, who would be thought to haue a regard to goodneſſe, and ſome reſpect to the beſt things, who come to heare, and will needs be thought to loue that courſe, to approue it, to vphold it, and ſee how poore and barren is our practice. Alas, that we ſhould not only giue cauſe to Papiſts to ſpeake euill of our Religion and Faith, through our barrenneſſe, but (which is worſe) ſhould open the mouthes of profane wretches amongſt our ſelues, to taxe Profeſſion and Hearing, as the Nurſery of Licentiouſneſſe. The truth is, the liues and courſes of many, i who yet will come and ſit, as Gods people vſeth to come, are very ſcandalous. For my owne part, though I will not ioyne with thoſe, who vrge this to the diſ-reputation of all that are affected well, yet I will neuer ſeeke to excuſe their euils, but ſay rather with the Apoſtle, k They ſhall beare their iudgement whoſoeuer they be. I haue almoſt done: I will now draw to an exhortation, and I beſeech you that I may preuaile with you for this Keeping dutie. It is ſuch a keeping, as by which your ſelues ſhall be kept vnto ſaluation. I perſwade entertainment for ſuch a Gueſt, at whoſe entrance into thy ſoule, thou mayſt ſay, as Chriſt did at his comming to Zacheus his houſe, This day is ſaluation come to l thee. It ſhall bee to thy ſoule, as the preſence of the Arke of Obed-edoms m houſe. Loſe not all your labour (I pray you) in repayring hither; you cannot beſtow an houre worſe, then by going to a Sermon and get nothing. Harken what we ſay: we may ſay with an humble boldneſſe, we are the Embaſſadours of Chriſt, we are the Meſſengers of the Lord of Hoſts, we ſpeake words vnto you, by which you and yours may bee ſaued: Yet, heare vs as men ſubiect to infirmities, heare vs with diſcretion: Bring vs to the touch. Oh, that you would once doe vs that honour, honour, to Trie our Doctrine. If you finde any thing to be good (as no doubt you shall) what will you doe to it? looke vpon it awhile, and (as it were) play with it, as little children with a new-bought toy, which within awhile they cast away? God forbid. God will not bee so answered. Labour to locke it vp in your memories: resolue with DAVID, [n] I will not forget thy Words; pray the God of Peace to write his Law in your hearts, striue to loue it, and that will bee a good helpe to remember it. [o] Can a Maid forget her ornament, and a Bride her attyre? Her loue to it, makes her not to forget it. I neuer heard (saith the Orator) of any man so old, as that he forgot where he laid his treasure. When you remember it, striue to worke your affections to embrace it more and more. [p] Bee constant to the death, and you shall receiue the Crowne of life. Resolue touching that which you haue found to be true, and so accordingly haue begun to professe, as that worthy Thebane Souldier did touching his Buckler, I will either defend thee, or die vpon thee. Say to the Truth, when thou hast once met with it, as RVTH did to NAOMI, [q] The Lord doe so to me and more also, if ought but death depart thee and mee. And when you haue thus fastned your affections to it, then let me say to you, as Iehoshaphat did to his Officers, when he sent them on the circuit, [r] Be of courage and doe it, and the Lord shall be with that good. Let your vertue and your knowledge goe [s] together. Thus doe, and the God of Peace shall be with you. Especially remember to be practitioners of good in your particular places, Magistrates in yours, Ministers in yours, Masters of Families in yours. In your ranks and standings make your care of obedience to appeare. This is that course which shall bring you peace and comfort at the last. God [t] will be good vnto those that are good: such as turne aside by their crooked wayes, them shall the Lord leade with the workers of iniquitie. [u] Wo vnto their soules, for they haue rewarded euill to themselues.

THE CHRISTIANS LIVE-LOODE.

MATTH. 6. 33.

But seeke yee first the Kingdome of God and his Righteousnesse, and all these things shall be ministred vnto you.

IT is a common guise at Marriages, that the friends of the married, do present them with gifts, to hansell (as they call it) their entrance into that estate, and to furnish them with some necessaries towards house. Being therefore inuited as a friend to these Nuptials, and withall intreated as a Minister, to season the businesse with some word of exhortation, I thought it best to conforme my selfe (in this) to custome; and to come in with my gift also, not of siluer and gold, but of such matter and metall (as Solomon speaks of) which is [a] more precious than pearles, and with which all that can be desired, doth not deserue to be compared. And whereas the best things which men vsually bestow, be such as perish with the vse, are subiect to moths and cankers and theeues, and are not able to protect a man from that necessitie which is wont to [b] surprize like an armed man; I shall recommend vnto you who are now entring vpon the world (if you please to entertaine it) such an Implement, which shall (like the Arke to [c] Obed-edom) bring a blessing vpon you and all yours, and assure you of that which all the wealth in the world cannot ascertayne, namely, that although you should double the age of Methuselah, yet you should neuer want a competency to maintayne you. Seeke yee first the Kingdome of God and his Righteousnesse, and all these things shall bee ministred vnto you. This in briefe for the reason inducing mee to choose this Text. Out of which as I shall deliuer that which will bee most for your good, and the surest stocke for you to begin vpon, so I shall also teach that which shall be for the best behoofe of euery one in this Assembly, that so none may goe away vnspoken to. For the Verse it selfe (as it stands here in this Chapter, ter, and is to be viewed as a limme thereof) it is a Direction following vpon a Correction. The correction, was for the abatement of a distracting and heart-diuiding care for outward things. The direction, is for the ordering of euery mans ayme and indeuour towards that, which is the mayne of all. The thoughts of a man will be euer working, and they will bee alwaies actiue vpon some subiect. It was not inough therefore for our Sauiour to take them off, and (as it were) to vnhang them from the world, vnlesse he did also fixe them other-where; Therefore lifting them from the world and the things thereof, hee sets them to worke vpon the kingdome of God and his righteousnesse; as honorable a remoue as was that of Iosephs, from seruing in a prison, to command as the second in a kingdome. Thus in teaching, Inhibitions and Iniunctions must be coupled: Inhibitions, to pull backe from euill: Iniunctions, to quicken to a better course. There were two voyces to Paul, the one, SAVL, SAVL, [d] why persecutest thou me? the other, [e] Goe into the City, and it shall be told thee what thou shalt doe; not this, but this: to these two heads may a man refer all preaching. This for the connexion. Now for the Text: in euery mans eye and apprehension it diuides it selfe into two parts: The first I may call a Charge, binding vs to an heauenly care. The second a Discharge, because it tends to the freeing of vs from a worldly care. In the Charge we are first to take notice of the substance of that dutie which is pressed, and then next, of a mayne Circumstance in performing it. The substance of the dutie is, to seeke the Kingdome of God and his Righteousnesse. Here touching the action required, I shall not neede to say much; I suppose wee are none of vs to seeke, what it is to seeke: Who doth not apprehend it, to be a very diligent and busie kinde of enquirie; such as was his in the parable for his Sheepe, or hers for her [f] Groat? Concerning the matter to bee sought, it requires more opening, it is Gods Kingdome, and his Righteousnesse. For Gods Kingdome, it is a terme in Scripture: sometimes more largely taken, sometimes more straitly: more largely, it is that ample authoritie, and vnlimited soueraignty, which God hath and exerciseth ouer all his Creatures, both in Heauen and in Earth; whereof is mention, *Psal.*103.19. The Lord hath prepared his Throne in the heauens: and his Kingdome ruleth ouer all: more straitly, it is that command ouer his Church, ouer his chosen Generation, his peculiar People; which is so often ascribed to Christ, as he is the Mediator betwixt God and vs: of this spake the Angell, bringing tydings of Christs birth, [g] Hee shall reigne ouer the house of IACOB for euer, and of his Kingdome there shall be no end: of this did Dauid prophecy, in terming Christ [h] the King set vp by God, vpon his holy Mountayne Zion. God, according to the election of grace, hath called out some from the rest of mankind, whom hee will saue: all that is done for the good of these, is the Kingdome of Christ. This Kingdome is considerable, either as it is in gathering and fitting in this life, (and is termed so the Kingdome of Grace) or as it is in accomplishment in the life to come, (and so is called the Kingdome of Glorie.) And this is the Kingdome of God

h *Psal.*2.6.

God properly intended here; so that to seeke the Kingdome of God, is, to endeuour by an entrance into grace, to gather assurance of an interest into glorie. Now concerning that, which is called the Righteousnesse of God, which is here annexed as a thing to bee sought for with this Kingdome; Know we this briefely, that by it here, is not meant that essentiall righteousnesse, whereby God is in himselfe righteous, which righteousnesse somerime betokeneth his Truth and Fidelitie in the performance of his Promises (as 2.Tim.4.8. 1.Ioh. 1.9.) sometimes his Iustnesse and Vprightnesse in the administration of the World, which is that doing right which Abraham [i] spake of, but here the Righteousnesse of God is taken much after the same sense, as it is Rom.1.17. and Phil.3.9. namely, for that righteousnesse, by which man, who is a base, vile, and polluted sinner in himselfe, is accepted righteous before God, and is iustified in his sight. This is called Gods Righteousnesse, because as it is acceptable to God, so it is wholly wrought in man by God through Christ, man conferring nothing thereunto. Now out of this righteousnesse, by which a man is iustified before God, streameth another which discouereth it selfe by the fruits of righteousnesse before men; For those whom the Lord by the righteousnesse of Faith dischargeth from the damnation of sinne, the same he sets at libertie by his Spirit from the dominion of sinne; so that they haue their fruit in holinesse, so many as are in the end to haue eternall life. This phrase then touching the Righteousnesse of this Kingdome, is added but as an illustration of the former. For, to seeke the Kingdome of God, is to seeke the Righteousnesse of God, that is, to seeke a passage through Grace into Glorie, is to endeuour to be accepted as righteous before God by Iesus Christ, and to shine as a light in the way of Righteousnesse among men. And this interpretation wipeth away that base calumny, which Maldonate the Iesuit, in his Comment vpon this place, vseth against Caluin. Caluin saith, that Righteousnesse may indifferently be referred either to God or to Kingdome; whereupon the Iesuites triumph, because (his) in the Greeke is of the Masculine Gender, whereas Kingdome is the Feminine, whereof Caluin could not be ignorant; and therefore went not about to make a Grammaticall agreement betwixt the words, but to declare a concord of sense; and to shew (that which is true) that the Righteousnesse of Gods Kingdome, and Gods Righteousnesse are all one; as indeed it is. For, that Righteousnesse which becomes a Subiect of this Kingdome is such, as by which there is iustification before God, and fruit of Sanctification before men. God, and the Kingdome of God require one and the same Righteousnesse. And now hauing (as it were) paued a way for that which I am to deliuer, by giuing the sense of the words, I come to that which is the Doctrine of this place; which is:

What it is to seeke the Kingdome of God. What is the Righteousnes of God.

i Gen.18.25.

That the things which concerne the soule, both for the present and future good thereof, must be enquired after and sought for with especiall care. This is the very pith and marrow of this charge. Wee may suppose that wee heard our Sauiour saying thus: You are full of care and thoughtfulnesse about many things, your plots and proiects are spred, and stretched, and enlarged

largeed many wayes, what you shall eate, what you shall drinke, wherewith you shall be clothed, you extend your desires like Hell which cannot bee satisfied, and so that you might haue your full lading of the things of this present world, it seemes as if you would no more; one thing is truely and simply necessarie, and in it you be pitifully negligent; Behold, God offers you a Kingdome, the glorie whereof (if you had eyes to see it) is able to dimme and to obscure all the glittering pompe of all earthly Kingdomes, to the meaneſt Subiect thereof: not SALOMON in all his Royaltie is meete to be compared, the appurtenances whereto, and the priuiledges whereof are such as passe vnderstanding, and doe exceede all that you can aske or thinke; there is righteousnesse and peace, and ioy in the holy Ghost; pull away your ouer-eager and too violent indeuours from these baser things, and fixe them vpon this; this is that onely thing which is worth the seeking for: Thus is the purpose of the Place, thus is the Doctrine. Now for the Point it selfe, it shall bee no hard taske for mee, to confirme it by the Scripture; what else, but this endeuour and care for heauenly things, can bee intended in these termes of seeking for [k] Wisedome and knowledge, as siluer, of searching for it as for treasure; [l] Of taking the Kingdome of heauen by force; [m] Of pressing into it; [n] Of labouring for the meate which endureth to euerlasting life; [o] Of striuing to enter in at the strait gate; [p] Of running to obtayne; [q] Of following hard toward the mark, for the price of the high calling of God, &c. [r] Of giuing all diligence? what is here meant in all these, but that seeking for the Kingdome of God and his Righteousnesse, which is here perswaded? Is not this that [s] Treasure hid in the field, that Pearle of great price, for the purchase whereof all is sold? was not this it which Moses valued more [t] then the treasures of Egypt, and which Dauid chose rather [u] then the abundance of Wheat and Wine, which the men of the World so much affected, and which PAVL [x] did account as losse, and iudge as dung, that hee might winne? And why are the Elect of God called a [y] Generation of seekers, but in respect of their inquiries after this, according as it is the brand of the vngodly that they [z] seeke not? And surely, if either the excellency of a matter, or the necessitie thereof, may bee of force to perswade inquirie, and to stirre vp care, neither of them is wanting, in the things which Christ here commends vnto our seeking. For excellency; The very name of a Kingdome argueth worth: the Deuill had hope to preuaile euen with Christ with the offer of [a] Kingdomes, the addition of, God, (the Kingdome of God) addeth to the dignitie: what thoughts are able to reach to the excellency of such a Kingdome, to which God is entitled? The Kingdomes of the earth will endure no partners, there is one onely King, all the rest be Subiects. The limmes of this Kingdome are Kings all. Christ Iesus [b] hath made vs Kings vnto God, euen his Father: euen in this life they are all through him [c] more then Conquerors, and they shall each haue a [d] crowne of Righteousnesse at the day of his appearing. Let vs looke a little vpon the particular excellency of each degree of this Kingdome. The Kingdome of Grace, which is his Church here on earth, gathered by the preaching of the Gospell; [e] Glorious things are spoken of thee thee (saith DAVID) thou Citie of God; [f] It is the ioy of the whole earth, the Citie of the great King, in the Palaces whereof God is knowne for a refuge, the members of it, [g] are an holy Nation, a selected company, the people that dwell therein shall [h] haue their iniquitie forgiuen, they are as [i] the first fruits of his Creatures, they which wrong them, [k] euill shall come vpon them, saith the Lord, [l] God giueth his Angels charge ouer them, and [m] is vnto them as a wall of fire round about; It is the honour of Kings to be nourcing Fathers, and of Queenes [n] to be nourcing Mothers vnto it. Thus and more then thus, is the Kingdome of Grace. Now for the Kingdome of Glorie, which way shall I begin to declare the excellency of it, when as [o] the things, which neither eye hath seene, nor eare heard, neither haue entred into the heart of man, God hath prepared for them that loue him? This I may say in a word, that, looke what difference there is in proportion betwixt the Cope of Heauen and the Earth, which respectiuely to it, is but as a Pricke in the midst of a Centre, the same and much more there is betwixt the glorie of all the Kingdomes of the world vnited together (if it were possible) into one, and that which the Apostle calleth [p] the glorie which shall be shewed hereafter. Better with a kind of silent astonishment to admire it, then to take on vs either to describe it, or to comprehend it in particular. Now, shall not such a thing as this be reputed worthy of our best care? What doe men many times to obtayne a [q] corruptible crowne? Strange things are done out of the desire and hope of Kingdomes. It is said in Storie, that when Nero his Mother being with child with him; asked of the Astrologers what her sonne should come vnto, and was told that hee should reigne, but kill his Mother; said shee, Let him kill me, so he may be King: thus ambitious was shee of a Kingdome for her sonne. This for the excellency of the Kingdome. Now, the Righteousnesse here spoken of, it is excellent too, else why doth the holy Ghost call it a Robe of righteousnesse, and a Garment of saluation, with which whoso is clad, [r] is decked like a Bridegrome, and tyred as a Bride with Iewels: and how can that be other then excellent, by which an vgly sinner [s] is made holy and vnblameable, and without fault in Gods sight? I haue briefly pointed you to the excellency of the thing commended to our seeking; Now let mee shew you the necessitie too. The necessitie in a word is such, that without admittance into this Kingdome, without partaking of this Righteousnesse, there is no possibilitie for a mans soule to be saued in the day of Christ. For vpon all those that are without the pale of this Kingdome, shall bee executed that sentence, [t] Bring them hither and slay them before me: and, Know yee not (saith the Apostle) that the vnrighteous, such as haue no righteousnesse, [u] shall not inherit the Kingdome of God? And now, what saith Christ? [x] What shall it profit a man, though he should win the whole world, and lose his owne soule? were it not better for a man that he had neuer beene borne, then to haue his portion in the Lake which burneth with [y] fire and brimstone, which is the second death? Looke then, of what necessitie saluation, and happinesse, and life eternall is, of the same is this Kingdome of God, and this Righteousnesse here spoken of. If it be necessarie for a man to seeke to be saued, it is necessary to seeke the present and future good of his soule, by laying the foundation of his hope of Glorie, vpon his now being in the state of Grace. What can deserue the very best, and as it were the very quintessence of a mans care, if not this? Thus is the Doctrine. I come now to the Vse.

The Vse. The Vse of this Doctrine, I will begin with a Reproofe; goe on with an Exhortation, and perfit with a Direction. The Reproofe is of the generall, yea and the intolerable neglect of that, in which (according as hath beene shewed) there ought to be such an especiall care. Mens ordinarie carriage in and about the matters of the soule, in and about this Kingdome of God, and his Righteousnesse, sauoureth of an opinion, that either it is one of the most neediest, or one of the most easie things that is, to be saued. If it were indeed the most superfluous businesse, and such as did aske the least labour for performance, I doe not see how there could be lesse diligence, and more cold endeuours bestowed about it then there is. Truth is, these are seeking Times: euery man is busie in seeking something or other; Here is one seekes for Profit, another for Delight, another for Reuenge, another for a new Fashion; but how may a man runne (with Ieremie) to and fro by our streets and inquire, before hee can meet with one, who thorowly and to the purpose seekes the Kingdome of God, and the appurtenances thereunto? For one serious and deepe thought, about matters of an heauenly Nature, we haue euen thousands about these three worldly specialties, mentioned by Saint IOHN, [z] The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. Not a man among many, but would rather omit an oportunitie for his soule, then not embrace an occasion falling in at the same time, for the improuement of his commoditie, for the tickling and feeding of his delight, for the vpholding of that which he termes his reputation among men. It is a rare thing, when an earthly businesse, especially when it carrieth an appearance and a probable shew of some quicke and sensible aduantage, is made to giue place, that so a meanes of good and edifying to the soule, may be entertained: but it is an ordinarie thing to see spirituall occurrences, in which God offereth his Kingdome and his Righteousnesse vnto vs, iustled aside, and made to stand by, for the sake of a present contentment to the outward man; In one word, matters of the soule are so followed with that sleightnesse, with that seldomnesse, with that remissenesse, as if they were onely of the By; and matters of the world are plyed with that eagernesse, with that industrie, with that intention both of minde and body, as if they were the maine, or as if God had made man onely to that end to haue a portion in this life, and to grasse in as much of the world as it is possible. Doth not this deserue reproofe? If in any thing a Preacher should make [a] his words like goads, it may well be in this; Folly is too gentle a terme to call it by, madnesse in the highest degree, is not so foule a name as it deserues: a man to bestirre himselfe with the strength of his whole endeuours, for that which cannot adde so much as a dramme to his happinesse, nay, which may quickly hazzard him in the principall, and in the meane time to put that to an aduenture which concernes the eternall good of his soule and body, can we deuise what one name to giue it, which may serue to expresse the grossenesse of it as it is? vnderstand yee vnwise among the people, and yee fooles, when will you be wise? with what charme might a man deuise to coniure out this retch-lesse and vnworthie spirit, which makes Hell to enlarge it selfe, by daily carrying headlong into it such a world of soules? Let me entreat you, to doe your selues euery one that right, as to consider your selues concerning this, to see whether this bee not your very fault, that you faile in care for the things that concerne the Kingdom of God, and that in you a base hungrie care for terrene commodities, doth euen eate vp and deuoure the care of heaueuly things, euen as the leane Kine, in Pharaohs dreame [b] swallowed vp the fat: and if it be so, then say not to me, as AHAB to ELIAH, Hast thou found mee, O mine enemie? but rather as DAVID did to ABIGAIL, [c] Blessed bee the Lord God of Israel, which hath sent thee this day to reproue me. Behold, I am here present before God, to heare whatsoeuer thou hast to say vnto me from God, for the speedy reforming of this great neglect. And so I come to the second thing in my Vse; the Exhortation; And here, I could wish, that I had some speciall gift and power to perswade, and that some such law of grace were in my lips, that I might be among you this day as was Barnabas at [d] Antioch, vpon whose words of exhortation much people ioyned themselues vnto the Lord. And yet is it not strange and pitifull, that in such a case as this is, a man should so much neede a perswasiue facultie? It were wonderfull, if there needed much Rhetorique, to worke a sicke man to be willing to haue health, a poore man to be willing to be made rich, a condemned man to be willing to receiue a pardon; And yet such an auersnesse is in our nature vnto good, and so senseleſse are we of the best things, that a Preacher in his meditations, is in no one thing driuen to so great a straight, as to find out arguments and motiues, such as may bee forcible inough to worke vs to this, that we would bee saued; and that we would embrace the offer of a Kingdome. If thou knewest (said Christ to the woman at the Well) [e] the gift of God, and so if wee were aware of the worth of that which is tendred to vs, and how much the happinesse of the soule exceedeth all things else; a few words should perswade vs, Preachers should haue small neede to importune vs and call to vs as Paul to them at Listra, [f] O men, why doe ye these things? [g] O ye house of Israel, why will ye dye? Nay, we would neuer leaue pressing and vrging the Ministers of God with that question of the perplexed Iaylor, Sirs, [h] what must we doe to be saued? Let vs therefore bee stirred vp, I beseech you, on all hands concerning this; you that haue beene vtterly careleſse herein, and haue scarse bestowed one earnest thought vpon the things that concerne your soules, beginne now at the last to be more aduised, doe not any longer leaue this businesse to an hazzard, as if it were a matter of nothing to be damned;

Betwixt the not finding of this Kingdome, and the falling irrecouerably into the Kingdome of eternall darkneſſe, with the Deuill and his Angels, there is no third. And you that haue beſtowed ſome care this way, be perſwaded to be iealous ouer your care, that it hath not beene ſo earneſt, ſo conſtant, ſo intentiue as it ought to be, learne now from henceforth to double your care; and know, that vnleſſe you bee well acquainted with this, what a deale of buſineſſe, what inquirie, what ſtriuing doth accompany Religion, you are yet far from the Kingdome of God. He that cannot ſay out of perſonall experience, what an hard and laborious taske it is to be a Chriſtian, he ſhal neuer make me beleeue that he hath any thing in him, ſaue a forme of godlineſſe. Seeking, requires a care and an endeuour more then ordinarie. Redeeme we as much time as poſſibly wee may for this one thing, let vs abridge our ſelues rather in our outward profits and the purſuit of them, let vs rather want oportunities for our ſports, let all other things goe to wracke, rather then this one buſineſſe ſhould not be forwarded. Fie vpon it, that ſo baſe a ſpirit ſhould poſſeſſe men, that they ſhould haue more minde to bee ſlaues to the world, and ſeruants to vile affections, then to be Heires of a Kingdome. And thus is the ſecond thing in my Vſe, the Exhortation; of which becauſe I conceiue ſome hope in the mercie of God, that it ſhall not vtterly bee in vaine, therefore I now come to the third thing, the Direction. To exhort to ſeeking, and not to inſtruct how to ſeeke, were vnprofitable; My direction therefore ſhall be reached out to two things, firſt, Where to ſeeke this Kingdome, this Righteouſneſſe. Secondly, How to know and bee aſſured that wee haue found it. Theſe two things I truſt of your ſelues and out of your owne reaſon you will conceiue to be very vſefull, and of great neceſſitie, ſo that I ſhall not neede to perſwade you to attention touching them. If you are affected with the loue of the commoditie ſpoken of hitherto, you will bee glad to vnderſtand where to inquire it, and how to be reſolued that you haue attained it. Concerning the firſt, where this Kingdome, this Righteouſneſſe muſt be ſought: both the one and the other muſt bee ſought in the preaching of the Goſpell, which is proued by this, that the Goſpell is called [i] the Goſpell of the Kingdome, becauſe it declares both the nature of this Kingdome and the way leading to it: and then Paul giues this as a reaſon, why he was not aſhamed of the Goſpell of Chriſt; becauſe by [k] it the Righteouſneſſe of God is reuealed, which two Texts (not to inſiſt vpon any more) ſhew plainely that he who aymes at the Kingdome of God, and at the Righteouſneſſe of God, muſt ſeeke it in the Goſpell. The diſpenſation of this Goſpell, God hath committed to his Miniſters; it is their office, like IOHN BAPTIST, [l] to prepare by repentance to a Kingdome, and [m] to declare to a man his Righteouſneſſe, viz. how being vile in himſelfe, he may ſtand and be preſented righteous before God. Theſe things are plaine: God intending to call his Elect out of the power of darkneſſe, into the Kingdome of his deare Son, [n] hath appointed Paſtors and Teachers for their gathering, and meaning to make them to become the righteouſneſſe of God through Chriſt, hath ſent sent them as Embassadors to beseech, to pray, to treat with them in this [o] businesse; Behold, then art thou perswaded to seeke the Kingdome of God and his Righteousnesse, either seeke it in the preaching of the Word, or else there is no hope for thee to obtaine it: when I mention this meanes, I exclude not prayer (as some account those that are so much for preaching to be enemies vnto prayer) I shut not out the Sacrament, I perswade not a neglect of Reading, nay, I intend and inioyne these rather; No hope of good and comfort by a Preacher, had he the tongue of Men and Angels, if there be not ioyned Prayer to prepare to preaching, and to bee as the showres vpon the mowne grasse, after preaching: Sacraments to seale vp the comfort, which is got by Preaching: Reading and Meditation to confirme and digest that knowledge which is deriued through Preaching: these things must not bee seuered: God hath ioyned them, and Man may not sunder them. But whosoeuer he is, that thinks he may well enough find out the Kingdome of God and his Righteousnesse, in the neglect or dis-regard of the Word preached, accounting That of no simple necessitie to that end, and so neuer striues to enioy it, when he wants it; nor cares to make the best vse of it when hee enioyeth it; let that man make what shew he will of Deuotion, of respect to Prayer, of honour to the Sacrament, of reuerence to Reading, he doth vtterly beguile his owne soule, and shall bee but as SOLOMONS [p] Sluggard, who lusteth, but his soule hath nought; or as the Prophets [q] hungrie Dreamer, who in a dreame is eating, but is emptie when he awakes; it was truely deliuered of him, who said, that it is impossible to finde out that which is sought by a wrong way; and I am sure, the mouth of the Lord hath sanctified besides this no way: but of this I may boldly say, This is the way, walke in it, and you shall finde rest to your soules; and against the forsakers of this Path, I may as boldly denounce that of the Psalme; Such as [r] doe turne aside by their crooked wayes, them shall the Lord leade with the workers of iniquitie; [s] They doe but wait vpon lying vanities, and forsake their owne mercy. And this for the first thing in the Direction; where to seeke. Now for the next, how wee may know that wee haue found, and that our labour in seeking hath not beene in vaine. Touching the Kingdome of God: first, this is a sure testimonie and a certayne euidence, that a man hath found it. A Kingdome erected in a mans owne brest; I taught before how all that are admitted into this Kingdome, are Kings themselues; that Oile of gladnesse which was powred vpon Christ, by which hee was made the King ouer Gods Elect, is like the Oile powred vpon Aaron, which streamed thence to his Beard, and to the skirts of his Garments: so is that dispersed from him (the Head) vnto all his Members; and they are partakers with him of his Royall dignitie; and are Kings, not only in respect of Triumphing with him ouer Satan, but in respect of a Conquest they haue ouer themselues, their flesh with the affections and lusts being crucified, and they hauing by the power of Gods Spirit gotten some command and masterie ouer their owne hearts. Euery man naturally is a [t] seruant vnto lusts, and yeelding obedience vnto sinne in the the concupiſcence thereof, and is a ſlaue vnto vile affections. He that is brought within the compaſſe of this Kingdome by the power of the Goſpell, is in ſome meaſure diſcharged from this ſeruitude ([u] for, where the Spirit of God is, there is libertie) and though he be not ſtraightway come to that abſoluteneſſe of ſoueraignetie ouer himſelfe, that there is in him no rebellion of the Law of his fleſh againſt God, yet, hee maintayneth a continuall and an implacable warre againſt his owne corruptions; ſo that by that meanes, as it is ſaid of the houſe of SAVL and DAVID, There [x] was long warre betwixt the two, but DAVID waxed ſtronger, and the houſe of SAVL waxed weaker: ſo the old man continually decayeth, and the new man becomes more potent. Here then haſt thou beene a long and a diligent ſeeker of the Kingdome of God, by dependance vpon the Goſpell of the Kingdome? and wouldeſt thou know, whether thou haſt found that which thou intendeſt? and ſo mayſt with comfort ſay with Deborah, to thy ſelfe, O my ſoule, thou haſt marched valiantly; ſee and inquire into thy ſelfe, how thou canſt rule thy thoughts, thy will, thy affections, by the Word of God, and by the Spirit of God. It may be, in many things thou faileſt: but here is the queſtion; Art thou dragged and drawne into euill as a captiue, or doeſt thou follow as a willing ſeruant? Canſt thou truely ſay before God, with whom there is no diſſembling, that the euill thou doeſt, is that which thou wouldeſt not doe, and which thy heart is cleane againſt, and for which thou carrieſt a kinde of indignation againſt thy ſelfe, and art therefore ſtill wraſtling and combating with thine owne vnruly motions, ſtriuing if by any meanes thou mayeſt bee able to ouer-maſter them? I ſay to thee, The Kingdom of God is within thee, and thou haſt found the thing which thou haſt ſought for. Otherwiſe, if thou be a ſeruant vnto thine owne luſts, and art willingly and deſirouſly taking thought for the fleſh to content it, ſo that thine owne corruption is no burthen to thee, thou maintayneſt no quarrell againſt it, thou contendeſt not with it; I ſay to thee, Thou art a ſtranger from this Kingdome: thou art a vaſſall of Satan: and all thy profeſſion of Religion is but meere hypocriſie. I haue giuen thee a marke, one of many, by which thou mayeſt know whether thou haſt found that Kingdome. Let me deliuer thee another; by which thou mayſt vnderſtand whether thou haſt found the Righteouſneſſe of God, yea or no. I could here inſiſt vpon that perpetuall Companion of being accepted righteous before God through Chriſt, which is called [y] peace towards God, by which is meant inward comfort in the aſſurance of reconciliation with God through Ieſus Chriſt. But I commend this rather now for breuities ſake; viz. that the Kingdome of God lookes two wayes; to God and to Man: to God, ſo as there it preſents a man faultleſſe in his ſight; to men, ſo as it makes a man like Zachariah and Elizabeth in the eye of the world, to liue [z] without reproofe: what is that? to liue without iuſt challenge; I ſay iuſt challenge; for the moſt blameleſſe are liable to vniuſt exceptions: Cruell witneſſes riſe vp, who lay to their charge, things which they neuer knew: but yet he which hath found the Righteouſneſſe of God (ſuch is the inſepa-rable vnion betwixt Iustification and Sanctification) liues so, and by the Grace of God, so hath his conuersation in the world, that he is not found to liue in the ordinarie practice of any one knowne speciall sinne. Let euery one therefore that would know touching himselfe, whether hee hath obtained to that Righteousnesse by which a Sinner is acquitted before the Tribunall seate of God; inquire into himselfe for this, whether out of conscience towards God, and in desire to adorne the Doctrine of God, and to saue it from being ill spoken of; hee careth to walke in the waies of Righteousnesse before men; He who bindes himselfe to such a circumspect walking, as that hee may keepe himselfe vnspotted of the world, and may shine like a light in these naughtie times, that man hath found the Righteousnesse of God. He that is altogether dissolute, walking in the waies of his owne heart, or else contents himselfe with a formall carriage, thinking (as the most doe) that it is not good to bee too precise, and so vnder a colour thereof takes ordinarie libertie to himselfe in some things, which are not iustifiable; that man is yet in his sinnes, and hee is no other then a lothsome sinner in the sight of God. And thus I haue at last ended this vse, and so the first point touching the substance of the dutie giuen in charge, Seeke yee first the Kingdome of God and his Righteousnesse.

The next is touching the manner or order of seeking: Seeke it first. Concerning which, this is the Doctrine:

That the matters of God, appertaining to his Glorie and the saluation of our owne soules, ought in all things to haue the preeminence. — Doct. 2.

Seeke first; This before all things, this aboue all things. The truth hereof shall best appeare, if we take view of it on this fashion, viz. That heauenly things ought to be first in each mans life, first in each day, and first in euery businesse. First, in each mans life. Remember [a] thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth. [b] It is good for a man to haue borne the yoke in his youth, euen [c] a child must be taught the trade of his way. Was it not commendable in Iosiah, that his heart was vpright before the Lord, when he was but eight yeeres [d] old? was it not well that Timothy was [e] trayned vp in the knowledge of the Scripture from a child? If the first fruits be holy, is there not hope, that [f] the whole lumpe will be so? Haue you neuer heard of that obseruation touching Aarons Rod, that it was of an Almond Tree? and an Almond Tree as appeares, by *Ier.*1.11,12. is of the Trees which doe first put out. He that will be for Gods purposes, must begin to blow and bud betimes. A base thing to reserue the yeeres for the Lord, in which a man shall say, I haue no pleasure in them. The putting off till then, is ordinarily punished either with a not caring to seeke, or with a not preuailing to finde.

Secondly, It must be first in each day. [g] In the morning I will direct me vnto thee. [h] I preuented the morning light, and cryed, for I wayted on thy Word. k *Mic.*2.1. drunkennesse, and euill men imagine [k] wickednesse on their beds, that as soone as the morning light is come, they may practise it. As they giue their first endeuours to the Deuill, so should Gods seruants deuote and diuert their first and their freshest Meditations to his glorie.

Thirdly, It must be first in each businesse. Our Sauiour would none of him, that would doe something else before he would giue attendance vpon his [l] seruice. The Magistrate must make this the first in his function: so Dauid comming to the crowne, resolued to [m] destroy all the wicked of the Land, and to cut off the Workers of iniquitie from the Citie of the Lord betimes: and he was ashamed of himselfe, that he had beene so carefull of a conuenient house for his owne estate, before he had prouided a better place for the [n] Arke of God to rest in. The Minister must make this first in his calling, preferring Gods Matters and his Businesse, before the aduancement of his owne personall [o] affaires, nay, before his owne [p] life. The seruing of his owne turne must not be his mayne end in entring into that seruice, but that which the Apostle speaks of, euen that [q] by all meanes hee may saue some. Hee that sets on with the Mastership and gouernment of a Family, by entring into the state of Wedlocke, must make this first in his proceeding. His first ayme must be, as Gods in the first institution of Marriage, the increasing of Gods Kingdome, the aduancement of Gods glorie, [r] by a godly seede, and that [s] he may keepe his vessell in holinesse and in honour. When Lust and Couetousnesse be the Leaders, a Marriage is like an [t] heritage hastily gotten, the end whereof shall not be blessed. In a word, it must be thus in all things; for, [u] whether yee eate or drinke, or whatsoeuer yee doe, doe all to the glorie of God. And is there not reason why it should be thus! who by so good right may challenge the precedence, as God may? [x] In him we liue and moue, and haue our being, is it not of him that we are able to seeke, and to whom is all due, if not to him from whom all comes? Shall not he haue the prime of our dayes, the flowre of our wit, the best and strength of all that is within vs, out of whose bountie wee haue all that wee enioy? Well is it said, that God being the Ancient of dayes, may pleade a kinde of Senioritie, and by it require to be first serued. Then besides, the things that concerne the eternall good and happinesse of the soule, are our chiefest businesse, and the following and procuring of them, is the mayne errand for which we are come into this world. God sent no man into this world, properly to make himselfe rich, to come to honour, or to sate himselfe with the vanishing contentments of this life, but the end of euery mans comming into the world is, that by glorifying of God here, he may lay vp in store a good foundation for the time to come. Now, what man of ordinarie vnderstanding, but if hee iourney into any place, hee will bee sure to doe that first which is of most moment? Suppose a man were occasioned to trauell vp to London to the Terme vpon some triall of his estate, haply he is requested being there, to performe some kindnesses for others, and it may bee hee hath a meaning to buy some such commodities as the place affords; but what doth hee doe first? whereunto doth hee principally set himselfe?

himselfe? will he not first attend that, for which he vndertooke the iourney, resoluing to set that in some forwardnesse, before he stirreth so much as a foot about ought else? when that is once done, then if any leisure time fall out, he will bestow that vpon his by-occasions. Is there not the like reason in this? A man is come here into the world, where in a small scantling of time he hath many things to accomplish, but yet such as are not all of like importance; some are but like seeing of friends, or deliuerie of letters, or buying of trifles, or the like, falling into such a iourney, as before I spake of; there is one mayne imployment, and that concernes the soule, it is like a grand Triall at the Law, whereon hangs a mans whole estate; Is it not now agreeing to wisedome, that this should be first followed, and applyed with the first endeuour, that so, if a man bee ouertaken by time, if any of his errands bee left vnfinished, it may not bee, that the not doing whereof may turne to his vndoing, and to his casting away for euer and euer? What should I labour to say more concerning this? Surely, if matters of this kinde must bee sought and cared for at all, they must be sought and cared for, and intended first of all: and therefore forbearing to make any further discourse in so manifest a point, I will hasten to the Vse.

The Vse.

Here is matter inough for a large discourse; it is euen inough to vexe the righteous soule of a Lot, to see what indignitie is offered to the things of God, and what folly is committed in reiourning these important businesses, into the hindermost place. To equall Hagar with Sarah, is iniurious, but to giue Hagar the place, and to make Sarah to come behinde as an attendant, is intolerable. What saith our Sauiour? Is the seruant that hath beene abroad all day at worke, bid sit downe, and waited on assoone as he is come home? Is he not commanded to attend first vpon his Master, and so to tarrie till his turne [y] comes? How angry was God with the people, who tooke their owne contentment first, in seeling them houses, before they tooke in hand the repairing of his [z] House? and how was the Prophet to exclaime vpon those, who were wont to offer the lame and the sicke among their cattel [a] for a sacrifice, as if any thing had beene good inough for God? These things are types and shaddowes of that base vsage which is to be seene in men towards God, who seeme to account the very dregs and refuse of all, to be good inough for him, of whom the best and the principall is not worthie. In stead of seeking the Kingdome of God and his Righteousnesse in the first part of life, what more vsuall then to prorogue and to put off this dutie vntill the last act? That to which the dawning of a mans age is due, is posted off vntill the euening, men not considering how that Folly (which as Salomon saith, Prouerb. 22. 15.) is bound in the heart of a childe, will, if it be suffred to gather strength, by continuance prooue such a huge and vnruly lumpe, as will not soone bee ouer-mastered: hard is it to plucke vp that plant of corruption, which hath taken roote downewards. Me thinks when I espie an old man, that hath spent his younger dayes in seeking of any thing rather then the things belonging to his soule, to be to seeke how how and which way to serue God aright and to be saued, he is like one, who hauing run out his youth in iollitie, is in the end put to his shifts, and glad to begge for his liuing when he is old. What a miserie, when one shall bring his hoare head in such extremitie to the graue? and farre greater it is when one (through the iust hand of God) shall, as hee hath liued in vanitie, so conclude in impenitencie, and goe out of the world as blindly, as he hath gone on in the world aduenturously. This is the issue mostly of shuffling the things of God and of our soules from the right place. Well; next, for seeking the Kingdome of God in euery day; I omit to vrge that which is best knowne to each mans owne soule, touching priuate communings with the Lord, and lifting vp the heart constantly towards him euery morning; I doe note only the things that are obuious and apparant. Let the most Houses and Families be a testimonie, how rare a thing it is to beginne the day with a seeking of the Lord by prayer. Surely, if the Lord should send an Angell of his wrath into so many houses, as where this euidence of seeking the Kingdome of God iust doth want, I beleeue it would fare with many Townes as it did with Egypt, in the night that Israel did depart, not an house (saith the Text) in which there was not one [b] dead. Thinke on it, all you Masters of Families for your parts, and if you be faultie, thinke whether to neglect this, can bee to seeke Gods Kingdome first, and resolue that there shall not a day passe more before you doe reforme it. Gods curse attends you in whatsoeuer you put your hands vnto, if you leaue out this. Well, what say wee to seeking this Kingdome, first in euery businesse? Let me beginne with you Magistrates; whereto doe you principally and mainely leuell your authoritie? I cannot accuse you in particular, but this is the generall guise, vpholding of credit, aduancing of profit, pleasuring of friends, spiting of opposites, such things as those march in the foremost ranke, it is well if any thing, that concernes God and his seruice, come in dropping at the latter end; haply for forme and custome, or to get a name, or to satisfie the importunitie of a Preacher, some little matter is done that way: but where is he that makes this his first and chiefe businesse? For one such Magistrate as Nehemiah, that will lay all at the stake, that God may bee glorified by his gouernement, an hundred such as Gallio, that doe not care for such things. There is as much iniurie offered to God, in our businesse of the Ministerie. Many an one there is amongst vs, who if he were demanded, Friend, why camest thou hither? What first moued thee to become a Minister? I beleeue if hee should tell (as we say) Gods Truth, he must confesse, it was more to liue then to labour, rather to gather Sheaues into his owne Barne, then to fill vp the Lords Garner; Surely, that which hath the chiefetie in a mans desire, will preuaile most in his endeuour: hee that is more busie to feather his owne nest, then to draw the people of Christ, as so many Chickens vnder his Wings, it cannot be thought that in his putting his hand to the Lords Plough, he sought for his Righteousnesse and his Kingdome first of all. What should I say of other callings and of other businesses? what thinke wee (because

[b] Exod. 12.30.

(because of the present occasion, of Marriage businesse) what if a man should presse vpon all here that are married, and in particular vpon the now newly married, what was the first sought for matter in our seuerall choyces? what was the first question? what was the first inquirie? was it goods, or goodnesse, was it with what Religion is the woman endewed, or with what portion is shee endowed? Surely, that which most moones both Parents in their direction, and parties to be married in their election, is rather portion and proportion, then sinceritie of heart and well grounded pietie towards God. Hence comes that roote of bitternesse which groweth vp betwixt the most couples; where Religion was not the first motioner, the issue of the marriage without great repentance can neuer bee comfortable. A wofull thing, a Woman to haue a Husband, that cannot dwell with her as a man of knowledge: a lamentable thing, a man to haue a Wife, whom he cannot comfortably loue not only as a woman, but as an Heire together with him of the grace of life. I will conclude this vse. It is not inough (you see) that wee take care for heauen, but we must giue it our first, our best, our strongest care. I wish this to you all that heare me, but especially let me commend it to those whose Nuptials wee are here met together to solemnize; you are both young, and as your education hath beene, I trust, in the feare of God, so be sure still to consecrate these your first and flourishing dayes to Gods glorie, and to the things which concerne your soules. Be not now first for profit and delight, meaning to reserue your grauer yeeres for grauer matters. You know not what a day may bring foorth; euen childhood and youth are vanitie; and for euery particular day, remember to beginne it priuately with the Lord; and if God giue you a Family, let all your businesses take their beginning at some such ioynt-seruice, as may witnesse for you, that the glorie of God and the pleasing of him is your chiefest ayme. If euer God shall raise you to some higher place, in which to gouerne publikely, then call to mind the Precept giuen you on your Marriage day, and bind your selfe to bee more for Gods glorie and for the vpholding of his honor, then for any other respect whatsoeuer; and if you haue failed in your proceedings hitherto, not being so carefull, touching the Religion either of other as was fit, desire God that it may not bee layed to your charge, and stirre vp your selues to make a kinde of recompence therein by a constant care, more to seeke and more to esteeme a dramme of grace and a mite of sinceritie, then all that euer else the world is able to afford you. And the more to encourage you to this; I come from the first part of my Text, the Charge; to the second, the Discharge; And all these things shall be added vnto you.

The plaine point of Doctrine thus stands: That they which labour and seeke for heauenly things, shall not be left vnsupplyed of earthly things. Here is a stirre (saith our Sauiour) for the things of the World, and you lay about you, as if the dust of the earth should not suffice for euery man to take an handfull, and all your drift is, that you may haue inough for present maintenance; Behold, I will shew you a more excellent way, I preach ordinarily to Doct. 3.

you of a Kingdome, I tell you of the Righteousnesse of God, seeke you that in such sort and manner as you ought; Lo, all these things will come in of themselues, it may be, not in the measure you would; but in such a proportion, as your heauenly Father knowes to be conuenient. Looke as the shaddow followeth a man still, which turneth his face toward the Sunne, so these things neuer but attend vpon those that set their thoughts vpon heauenly things. What a world is there for this in holy Scripture? God long agoe made a promise vnto Abraham, that if hee would walke with him and be vpright (which is all one with that seeking here made mention of,) [d] he would be a God to him, and to his Seede after him. Now, how can a man bee left destitute, whose God the Lord is? who both knowes ones need (for, [e] all things are naked and open vnto his eyes) and is all-sufficient; [f] The earth is his and all that therein is, and whose loue passeth the loue of naturall Parents. It is possible for a Woman [g] to forget her child, and not to haue compassion on the sonne of her wombe, but hee cannot forget, [h] his compassions faile not. The like promise was after renued vnto [i] Ioshua, and the Apostle teacheth euery Beleeuer to account himselfe to haue an interest in it, [k] I will not faile thee, nor forsake thee. How often doe we reade such things as these? [l] The eye of the Lord is vpon them that feare him, and vpon them that trust in his mercy, to deliuer their soules from death, and to preserue them in famine. [m] The Lyons doe lacke and suffer hunger, but they which seeke the Lord, shall want nothing that is good. [n] No good thing shall he with-hold from them that walke vprightly. [o] The Lord will not famish the soule of the Righteous. [p] The good man shall giue inheritance vnto his childrens children. That speech of the Prophet Habakkuk, three times repeated in the New Testament; The iust shall liue by his faith, hath reference as well to the life of the body in this world, as well as to the spirituall life of the soule. Faith is, as it were, the liuely-hood of a Christian; It is the stocke whereon hee liues, inasmuch as it giueth him an assurance not to bee cast off. Christ had a meaning to teach this, euen in the course and order of the Lords Prayer, in setting that of Hallowed be thy Name, Thy Kingdome come, &c. before that concerning daily bread, that we might build our expectation of being heard in the latter, vpon the truth of our desire for the former. And indeed if we enter into a due consideration of the point, wee must needs acknowledge it to be a truth. He that seekes the Kingdome of God and his Righteousnesse, shall not misse of the end of his desire in that heauenly benefit. For, [q] God will fulfill the desires of them that feare him. If God will giue the more excellent, will hee deny the things of lesser value? [r] Feare not, saith Christ, your Fathers will is to giue you a Kingdome: will he who will bestow a Kingdome, not bestow necessarie comforts for the outward man? Will hee who [s] giues Christ, not giue with him all things also? Whom thinke we to be respected by God, he that seekes his Kingdome, or the Fowles of the ayre, the Beasts of the Forrest, the Lillies of the field, to day fresh, to morrow in the Fornace? Surely, the Seekers of his Kingdome [t] are his chiefe treasure. [u] Hee delights in them. [x] Hee dwels dwels with them. y Hee keepes their bones, z their haires, a their feete. Considering then, b Hee giues Beasts food, and the young Rauens that cry, c Hee lookes after the Sparrowes, d Hee takes care for Oxen, e Hee clotheth the grasse: how is it possible that hee should neglect those whom his soule loueth, yea for whose sakes euen f Kings are reproued, and which g are to him as the apple of his eye? Strange, but yet comfortable are the euidences and examples, which the Scripture affords, of Gods prouiding for his in outward things. The Rauens first and last, at morning and euening, brought Bread and Flesh to h Elias; by him and for him God made that small portion of Oile and Meale, which the Widdow had, to last out to the end of the famine. He prouided strangely for the Widdow of the Prophet, when the cruell Creditor was come to take her sonnes to be his i bond-men. He found a meanes for Iacob and his Family in the dearth; k he had sent a man before. It is memorable which befell our Sauiour, and is, doubtlesse, written for our learning. Hee was borne in a poore estate, his Mother could finde no roome in the Inne, it seemes shee was in want, otherwise money would haue commanded more respect. The home-borne people (as it is likely) tooke no notice of her want. Now see, how God, who is a God at a pinch, brought the Wise men from farre with their presents, l Gold, Incense, and Myrrhe! A notable example of Gods prouiding, when it is least expected, and where there is the smallest likelihood. When Dauid fled from Absolom and went for his life, and had small leisure to take prouision with him; see how God prouided! m SHOBI the sonne of NAHASH, and MACHIR the sonne of AMMIEL, and BARZELAI brought Wheat, and Barley, and Flower, and Beanes, and parched Corne. I remember what Christ said to his Disciples, n When as I sent you without bagge and scrip, lacked yee any thing? And they said, Nothing. What meant our Sauiour in feeding those miraculously, that followed him from place to place to heare his preaching, but to giue assurance thereby, that they which seeke heauen as they ought, shall neuer be forsaken here on earth? They shall neuer be oppressed with wants for their bodies, who are carefull to make prouision for their soules. But now, this Doctrine may seeme not to be generally and vniuersally true without exception. For, many deare children of God, and many forward men in Religion, haue beene and are in great want, and may so bee, as is gatherable out of the Parable of o Lazarus, who would haue beene glad of a few Crums, or to haue licked a Trencher; and, I doe not see, saith the Worldling, any of them all a penny the richer for all their earnestnesse. It is answered, The matter and point vndertaken here to bee proued, is not, that they which seeke the Kingdome of God and his Righteousnesse, shall neuer bee poore, shall neuer bee scanted for outward things, shall neuer bee brought euen to a morsell of bread. I know how the Prophets of God were glad of Bread and Water in a hole vnder ground, when the Prophets of Baal were fed at Iezabels p Table. Many deare seruants of God doe with Michaiah feed vpon the Bread and Water of affliction; when as they who walke on in their sinnes, drinke Wine in Boules, eate the Lambs of the Flocke, and the Calues out of the Stall, and haue as much as heart can wish. So the poore [q] Iewes in Shusan were in perplexitie, when the KING and HAMAN sate drinking in the Palace; and diuers of the Lords Worthies were destitute and [r] afflicted. But here is that, which is hence proued, that hee whose heart is set to seeke the Kingdome of God first and his Righteousnesse, though he may be afflicted, yet he cannot be straitned; though he may be in pouertie, yet he cannot be ouercome of pouertie; [s] though he may be cast downe, yet he shall not perish; [t] he shall neuer be left comfortlesse, he shall alwayes haue a secret comfort to sweeten all his outward burdens. When hee hath a small proportion, hee shall bee taught [u] how to want, he shall euer [x] eate to the contentation of his minde. His little, his pulse, his dinner of greene herbs shall relish better with him, then their plentie, to whom euery day is a day of slaughter. Gods countenance being lift vp ouer him, puts more ioy into his heart, then the smalnesse of his portion can giue discouragement. Once, he is sure he shall haue inough for the present, I meane, inough for the necessitie of nature, and comfort with it, and greater plentie when the Lord doth see it to bee more expedient. Thus then we must vnderstand it. All these things shall be ministred vnto you, foode, rayment, &c. Christ meaneth not, that God will clothe euery such one in Silke, or feede him with Dainties, or giue him a house of Cedar with pillars of Marble to inhabite in, but he will measure him such a portion of these, as he shall know to be expedient, and euen the scantest portion shall bee sweetned with the gracious feeling of his fauour. Thus is the Doctrine.

Vse. Me thinks, in this point I should haue euery mans attention. Who would not be glad to heare of such a stocke for his maintenance here in the world, as shall neuer bee consumed? Euery man affecteth perpetuities. He who hath a lease for yeeres, thinks himselfe well; hee who hath an estate for his owne life and his childs, is in his owne opinion better; but he who hath got the Fee simple estate, hee (hee imagineth) needs not care. These be things whereon men build their hopes, but (alas) is it not possible that for all this a man may fall into an extremitie? what though a man hath ioyned house to house, and field to field, vntill there be no roome? what though his grounds bring forth fruit plenteously, his Barnes bee filled with abundance, his Sheepe yeeld out thousands and ten thousands in the streets? what if hee haue so much Stocke, so many Ships trading here and there, so much certayne comming in? what though, in a word, he were as rich as Constantine the Emperour, of whom Austen reports, that God had filled him with so many and so great earthly commodities, that no man might dare to wish the like? is such an estate so fenced in, or so established by any perpetuall decree that it cannot bee dissolued? Is not the trust in these things [y] like the house of a Spider, which though it doe take hold vpon the Rafters, yet is suddenly swept downe with a Broome. [z] The Lord sometimes looseth the coller of Kings, and powreth contempt vpon Princes, and sweeps away euen great houses, as a man [a] sweeps away dung till all bee gone. All the wiſeſt Lawyers in a Kingdome, cannot deuiſe how to ſecure a man for hereafter. See here a new Leſſon, how to be made ſure of meate, and drinke, and clothing while we liue. Here is a portion like that which the King of Babel gaue to IEHOIACHIM, [b] a continuall portion, euery day a certayne, all the dayes of his life vntill he dyed; Seeke yee firſt the Kingdome of God, &c. This deed was drawne vp in Heauen, engroſſed by the Pen of the Euangeliſt in the Goſpell, ſealed by the bloud of the Lord Ieſus, who witneſſed a good confeſſion vnder Pontius Pilate, who neuer yet did, neither euer will beare witneſſe to a falſhood; and, let all the world bee examined, it ſhall not be able to afford one inſtance of the failing of this aſſurance. How glad men bee when their Lords haue ſealed their Leaſes, how precious be their Euidences and Tenures of Land, how ſafely they are kept that they may not bee embezeled? How all you Merchants reioyce at the ſafe arriuall of a ſhip, and at the report of a boone voyage? how ſecure begin we to be in our thoughts, when we ſee ſomewhat vnder hand? Why ſhould we not with ioy lay that vp in the midſt of our hearts, which ſhall ſecure vs of a better portion, then the greateſt King of the earth is able to beſtow? If the King ſhould giue thee a Penſion or Annuitie out of his Exchequer for thy life, it were much; yet becauſe of it thou canſt not ſurely ſay, Thou ſhalt not want. This promiſe cannot miſſe: his Word, who made it, doth endure for euer, becauſe Himſelfe liueth euer to make good his Word, and it is impoſſible for him to denie himſelfe. And here ſee (I pray you) how farre the thoughts of God are differing from our thoughts, and his wayes from our wayes. Mens common thoughts are, that if Religion ſhould be thus cared for before all other things; if they ſhould preferre matters appertayning thereunto, before things of this preſent life, it were the next way for them to be quite vndone. For what is mens ordinarie reaſon, why they doe redeeme ſo little time from the world for holy Purpoſes, and why they take ſo much euen of the Lords Day, to giue vnto themſelues? Is it not this? Elſe (ſay they) we cannot liue. Hence is it that the Kingdome of God, which ought to be firſt ſought, is (as I haue ſhewed) caſt backe into the loweſt place. Men thinke it wiſedome, firſt to be ſure of the World, before they looke after Heauen; firſt prouide for the Body, then for the Soule; firſt ſeeke an eſtate here, then caſt for an eſtate hereafter. This is the common courſe: whereupon it is, that there be many who haue liued long in the World, and haue laboured hard, and toyled infinitely to get a portion in the World, are yet ignorant which way to ſeeke for the Kingdome of God; nay, they haue ſcarce ſo much as a thought of it, or a conceit or knowledge what it meanes: what is the Kingdome of God; what is the Righteouſneſſe of God. How many old men, how many rich men, how many painefull men, who haue euen worne out themſelues with catching for the World, if they were put vnto it, know not what to anſwere? Let vs yet at the laſt, all of vs, and you eſpecially, for whoſe ſakes principally this dayes labour is, learne this wiſedome, from the God of wiſedome, out of the Booke of Wisedome, which is able to make vs wise vnto saluation. Begin we not still at the wrong end; first the World, then Heauen; first Gaine, then Godlinesse; first Riches, then Religion; first the Backe and the Belly, and then the Soule; but let vs take the true course both for contentment here, and for saluation hereafter: make it your first care, your chiefe care, and in comparison your onely care, how to become members of Gods Kingdome, how to attaine to that Righteousnesse, without which the Kingdome cannot bee enioyed; Either we must denie the truth of God speaking in his Word, and say, that hee feeds and foades vs off with vaine words not to be beleeued, or else yeeld this to be a truth, that this is the alone way to get a comfortable securitie for outward things. Thus it is, as Nazianzene saith, It is profit indeed to get gaine to a mans soule. This is that wealth, which (as one saith) can neither be betrayed nor lost. Hee, who hath it not, is a miserable and an accursed Begger in the midst of abundance; and hee who hath but as much of it as a graine of Mustard-seed, is an absolute rich man, euen when he hath nothing. The World will not beleeue this, yet is Wisedome iustified of her Children.

THE RIGHT HONORABLE WILLIAM, EARLE OF PEMBROKE, LORD HERBERT OF CARDIFFE, MARMION, AND St. QVINTIN, KNIGHT OF THE MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER, Lord Chamberlaine of his Maiesties Houſhold, Lord Warden of the Stanneryes of DEVON and CORNWALL, one of his HIGHNESSE moſt Honorable Priuie Councell, my very good Lord.

RIGHT HONOVRABLE, That which I lately preſented to your Honour at London in writing, and which it pleaſed you to accept, at ſuch time as you vouchſafed to admit mee into your Seruice, is now returned backe in Print, in a manner glorying in it, that it may come abroade into the world, vnder the protection of your worthie Name. Well may I thinke it needs, I dare not ſay, it deſerues ſo high a Patronage. And ſurely, had I not beene much heartened by the conſtant Fame of your Honours ſincere affection to Religion, I

I should neuer haue made such a bold aduenture, as to offer these my Endeuours vpon this Psalme, vnto your Noble view. I knew the matter I had in hand, to bee such as needed not to shun the greatest presence, being the Penitentiall acknowledgement to God and the world, of one of the most potent and pious Kings that euer was (the sweet Singer of Israel, the man after Gods owne heart) drawne vp by his owne pen, not without the speciall assistance of Gods Spirit. But my plaine and Country-course of handling it, bred some doubt, hauing heard, your Honour to be not meanely accomplisht with (that which the Poets of old were wont to terme, The Phisician of the minde,) Good Learning. Yet hoped I, that your Honour knew well (and that out of personall experience) what kinde of Language, in the things of God, is vnto the hid man of the heart most pleasing; and therefore would not reiect (as rude) such Lectures, in which there was both a labour for such plainenesse as might best affect the conscience, and a purposed auoiding of that ouer-abundant artificialnesse, which might make them like those Spiders webs, to which one once compared Logicke, which are said to be much in VVorkemanship, but in profit nothing. Neither hath my hope herein vtterly deceiued me; your Honour not onely receiuing this from me when I brought it to you, but after some fortnights detainement with you for perusall, returning it backe vnto me with acceptance. If now at some of those vacations from the great affaires of State, in which I hope your Honour is wont to bee more retired for foule foule occasions, it shall happen you to looke into this Booke, wherefore should I doubt, but that (by the mercie of God) your Honour may here and there meete with some passages, which may yeeld out some content, and may further you in that way of Holinesse, in which I trust it is your care to walke, and without which no man shall euer see the Lord? which if it shall so bee, how much shall my soule reioyce; and how shall I labour with my selfe to glorifie God in that behalfe? But I know to whom I speake, and it is against good manners for mee to bee long. The Lord both settle and increase your Honour in this life, and reserue you to the Glorie of the next; so prayeth still

Your Honours Seruant,

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER.

THere are alreadie, I confeſſe (good Reader) who haue profitably written in our Engliſh tongue, vpon this Pſalme; ſo that I may ſeeme to haue vndertaken a needleſſe taske. The truth is, I doe not profeſſe, to preſent thee with ſomewhat of more worth, then thou haſt receiued from their hands: yet as in our Countrey-worke of Threſhing, no man beateth out the Corne ſo cleane, but that ſome one comming after, may here and there find a Graine remayning in the Straw; ſo it is hard for a man, in treating vpon Scripture, ſo to ſift out all things that deſerue obſeruing, but that another labouring in the ſame Text, may worke that out, which he notwithſtanding all his diligence, did omit. How much are wee bound to God, for the diuers Comments of learned men vpon the ſame Books! Now, whether this which I here offer to thee, ſhall yeeld thee that which in the reſt thou ſhalt not meete with, it is not ſo fit for mee to promiſe, as to leaue it to thy triall. I confeſſe my ſelfe to haue receiued helpe from others paynes, and to haue borrowed light from others, for the making of mine owne Candle burne; yet haue I ſtriuen withall, to make the things for which I may ſeeme beholding vnto others, as vſefull for thee, by enlargement, and by effectuall application, as I could. One ſpeciall thing which moued me to ſet on with the opening of this Pſalme, in the course of my Home-Ministrie, was the common abuse which I obserued of Dauids fall. It is ordinarie for some to conclude thence, Adulterie to be, if not simply lawfull, yet something tolerable. Whereas the true vse of his, and the like examples, is not to be encouragements to sinne, but Caueats beforehand to preuent sinne, and preseruatiues from despairing after sinne. Now (alas) who can promise to himselfe with assurance, the like mercies of God after he hath sinned, which were vouchsafed vnto Dauid? such as, a Time to repent, a Nathan to stirre vp to Repentance, a Heart to entertayne the Doctrine of Repentance. What knowest thou, O thou presumptuous sinner, but that either in the very act of Euill, the Lord may cut thee off like an eare of Corne; or else giue thee a reprobate heart that cannot repent! Seeke not therefore to shrowd thy sinne vnder the veile of Dauids fall, vnlesse thou wert sure to rise as Dauid did. Let his offence be vnto thee an occasion of Feare, not of Boldnesse. If it please thee to peruse that, which God gaue me to deliuer vpon this Psalme, and which I haue here commended to thee for thy vse, thou shalt see the deceitfulnesse of sinne, to make thee wise; the easinesse to fall, to make thee wary; the begetting of Euill by Euill, to make thee both feare and shun the first occasions, and (as it were) the very Threshold of vngodlinesse; the hauocke of the graces of God, by giuing way to vile affections, to make thee euen to tremble in thy thoughts, with the apprehension of a fall. Then if thou haue (through want of due circumspection) beene ouertaken by some speciall sinne, by meanes whereof thy Faith is shaken, thy Comfort gone, thy feeling changed, into either an hardned dulnesse, or a perplexed distressednes, thy wonted peace swallowed vp into confusion, thou shalt here be instructed what to doe, to whom to goe, what to desire, what to plead, how to await, which way to releeue thy drooping spirits, from whence to gather hope of mercy, and vpon what termes to binde thy selfe to more obedience. These points all worthy of thee, all expedient for thee, thou shalt either be taught, if thou know not; or put in mind of, if thou before haue learned them; or at least some way helped forward in them in these Lectures. I cannot say, these things things are new, or by me first discouered, as if no mans writings could afford them for thy vse but only mine. No, blessed be God, they be profitably taught by diuers others. But euery Booke commeth not to each mans hand; and as in meats, the differing kind of dressing helps the appetite, and the same meate cated one way, may content the stomake, which in some other fashion would not please; so in Books, the very selfe-same subiect may better satisfie in one speciall way of handling it, then another. As for mine owne course of handling, I promise now no more, nor other, then hath beene in my former Publishings. This which is here, was so preached, as it is now written: and in preaching my desire hath euer beene, and I trust shall be, as not to be ouer-homely (which were ill befitting the Oracles of God;) so, not to exceed (either by affectation of words, or by a too-exact couching and carriage of the particulars to bee treated on, with that concealement of Arte which in other things is commendable,) the reach of the meanest and least-gifted Hearer, the good of whose soule I am bound to seeke, as well as the bests in the whole Assembly. And if thou be one, who wilt desire such a Diuine for thy soule, as thou wouldst a Physician for thy body, to wit, one who may rather releeue thee with an wholesome Dose, then please thine eare with some neate discourse, I may say to thee, as IEHV did to IONADAB, Giue me thy hand, thou and I shall agree quickly; thou shalt be a fit and welcome Reader for my writing, and I haue written that, which I hope shall (at the least) not displease thee. Now, in case thou reape any good to thy soule, by my indeuour to leade thee into the secrets of this heauenly Psalme, let God haue the glorie, and me thy prayers, that I may be the same indeed, which I would seeme to bee in writing, and that my Pen may neuer condemne my Person for an Hypocrite. So, wishing to thee, that thy priuate Reading may confirme thy publique Hearing, and that both (seasoned with Prayer) may helpe thee on-wards in Obedience, I remayne

Medicus non mundior, sed vtilior eligatur.

Euer ready to doe thee my best seruice in this kinde,

THE DOCTRINES HANDLED IN THE SEVERALL Lectures vpon this PSALME.

LECTVRE I.

THe singing of Psalmes, is of very ancient and commendable vse in Gods publique worship.

It is possible for a man, after he is called of God into the state of grace, yet to fall into a great sinne.

LECTVRE II.

Where there is any true remorse for sinne, there is a readinesse (as farre forth as is meete) both before God and the world, to make confession of sinne.

Not the greatest amongst men, ought to be forborne and spared in their sinnes.

There is no man, of what gifts and graces soeuer hee bee, but in some respect or other, hee hath neede of helpe and direction by a faithfull Minister.

Words of reproofe are neuer in vaine to a religious heart.

LECTVRE III.

To flie vnto God, is the onely true way to finde comfort in the time of spirituall distresse.

The mercy of God in the pardon of sinne, is a blessing of exceeding worth.

In forgiuing sinne, there is an vtter abolishment (on Gods part) of the guilt of sinne.

Man hath no plea but the freedome of Gods grace, in making suite for the pardon of his sinnes.

LEC-

LECTVRE IIII.

The goodneſſe and mercy of God, in euery reſpect, and which way ſoeuer we conſider it, is exceeding great.

Sinne, of all things elſe, is one of the moſt foule and the moſt dangerous.

LECTVRE V.

By how much the more fully any man vnderſtands his owne eſtate, in regard of ſinne, by ſo much the more will he be earneſt and importunate to finde grace and mercy with the Lord.

It is a great bleſſing of God, to haue a tender and a wakefull Conſcience.

LECTVRE VI.

To the children of God in the day of their Repentance, ſinne, in reſpect that it is an offence againſt God, is the greateſt burthen.

To ſinne, without due reſpect to the ſight of God in ſinning, is ſo much the greater ſinne, and ought to be a cauſe of greater ſorrow.

In the confeſſion of ſinne, it is neceſſary, as much as poſſibly one may, to deſcend into particulars.

Sinne, rightly conſidered, is to be termed Euill.

LECTVRE VII.

The Children of God, throughly conuicted of ſinne, are forward to ſubmit themſelues, euen to Gods ſeuereſt courſes towards them, without repining.

That which Gods Miniſters ſpeake by vertue of their office, is to be taken as the Word and Speech of God himſelfe.

Whatſoeuer the meanes is, or inſtrument of any manner of affliction, or bitterneſſe befalling, it is beſt for Gods Children to acknowledge all to be wholly from the Lord.

LECTVRE VIII.

Where there is true Repentance, there is alſo a diſpoſition to lay to a mans owne charge as much as it is poſſible.

The whole nature of Man, is from the very firſt Beginning and being thereof infected with Corruption.

LECTVRE IX.

Vprightneſſe and ſinceritie of the heart, is a matter very pleaſing vnto God, and without which, all outward conformity is abominable.

LECTVRE X.

The knowledge of heauenly things appertayning to the right way of pleaſing God, and of ſauing our owne ſoules, is the true wiſedome.

The Lord himſelfe is the proper Teacher of that ſpirituall and heauenly Wiſedome which is accompanyed with ſaluation.

When God beſtoweth vpon any man ſpirituall wiſedome and religious knowledge, hee giues ſuch a bleſſing as deſerues acknowledgement.

By how much the more any man knoweth, in matters of Religion and Godlineſſe, by ſo much the fouler is his ſinne, when he falleth into any great offence.

LECTVRE XI.

Such outward things as God hath ordayned as helps in matters of Religion, as they are not to be neglected, ſo neither ſo to be reſted in, as if any good could come from them ſimply, without a ſpeciall bleſſing from the Lord.

The blood of Ieſus Chriſt is the thing ordayned by God for the purging and waſhing of our ſinnes.

The purging of a ſinner by the blood of Chriſt, is ſuch an abſolute worke, that it doth not leaue a man guiltie before God of the ſmalleſt ſinne.

LECTVRE XII.

That contentment which the ſoule doth feele in the aſſurance of Gods fauour in the pardon of ſinne, is that which deſerues indeede to be termed ioy.

It is no vnpoſsible thing for a man to haue ioy and gladneſſe in his ſoule, out of the gracious aſſurance that his ſinnes are pardoned.

Hearing is the meanes which God hath ſanctified, for the begetting of that ioy which proceeds from the aſſurance of Gods fauour in the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes.

Though hearing bee the meanes of ſpirituall Ioy: yet it can neuer uer worke it, vnleſſe the Lord ſhall giue a bleſsing thereunto.

Albeit ſinne, while it is in act and in performance, pleaſeth: yet when the conſcience is awakened, it will proue exceeding terrible.

LECTVRE XIII.

Spirituall diſtreſſe and anguiſh of the ſoule, occaſioned by the ſenſe of ſinne, is no certaine ſigne of a deſperate and forſaken ſtate.

Albeit the committing of a great ſinne bee a matter ſoone done, yet the obtayning of pardon for it, after it is paſt, is no eaſie ſuite.

The anger and diſpleaſure of Almighty God is exceeding terrible.

The children of God being truely touched with and for ſome one or two ſpeciall ſinnes, doe thereby take an occaſion to conſider and examine themſelues thorowout.

LECTVRE XIIII.

The true and ſincere deſire of the ſoule to haue ſinne pardoned, is and muſt be accompanyed with crauing and caring to be preſerued from the power and ſeruice of corruption.

The falling of a child of God into ſome great and ſpeciall ſinne, doth rob him, in his owne feeling, of all former graces whatſoeuer.

A cleane heart is a Iewell of great price, and eſpecially to be deſired and ſought by euery Chriſtian.

LECTVRE XV.

The graces of God euen in the beſt, are ſubiect to ſuch a kinde of abatement and decreaſe, that they ſtand in neede of oft renuing.

A conſtant purpoſe in the heart, and a ſteady endeuour in the life and courſe to walke ſo as may pleaſe God, is a matter much to be deſired by euery one that would be ſaued.

LECTVRE XVI.

It is a grieuous thing to be debarred the liberty of Gods houſe, and the freedome of worſhipping him there with the reſt of his Seruants.

It is a great Iudgement of God, when a man is not followed with the fauour and bleſsing of God, in that calling and place which hee doth ſuſtayne.

Gods Iudgements vpon others, ought to be matter of feare to vs, leſt wee ſo offending God, ſhould alſo ſo be puniſhed.

LEC-

LECTVRE XVII.

To be depriued of ſpirituall gifts and graces, hauing once receiued them, is a grieuous iudgement.

LECTVRE XVIII.

It is the nature and propertie of ſinne, to rob a mans ſoule of all true comfort.

It is not vnpoſsible, but that the ioy and comfort which ſome great ſinne hath taken away, may againe by true repentance bee reſtored.

Without Gods vpholding, man hath of himſelfe no power to withſtand any the leaſt occaſion or tentation tending vnto ſinne.

LECTVRE XIX.

To be freely, willingly, and cheerefully diſpoſed in the wayes of holy obedience towards God, is a ſpeciall bleſsing, and ſuch as wee ought all earneſtly to deſire.

True Repentance and conuerſion vnto God, breeds in a mans heart a ſincere deſire of being an inſtrument of the like good, by all meanes poſsible, vnto others.

The act of teaching others in the things which doe concerne ſaluation, is no vile or vnworthy ſeruice.

LECTVRE XX.

The mayne and principall matter of all Teaching, by thoſe that intend the good of others ſoules, muſt be the things of God reueiled in his Word.

It is not vnpoſsible but that by the meanes of Teaching, euen they which are moſt vngodly may be reclaymed.

He is moſt fit to teach the way of ſaluation vnto others, who hath had experience of the mercy of God therein for his owne particular.

LECTVRE XXI.

The turning of ſinners vnto God, is the ordinarie iſſue of faithfull teaching, and ſuch as may comfortably bee expected where that is vſed.

No man can aſſure himſelfe that he hath truly profited by dependance vpon Teaching, vnleſſe he be indeed conuerted vnto God.

LEC-

LECTVRE XXII.

It is a wofull thing to ſtand guiltie of bloud before the Lord.

LECTVRE XXIII.

Great ſinnes are not wont to goe alone, but one being yeelded vnto, makes way for another, as bad or worſe then it ſelfe.

It is poſsible for a man to be guiltie of a ſinne before God, though he himſelfe hath no apparant hand therein.

The whole matter of mans ſaluation is to bee aſcribed onely vnto God.

The generall acknowledgement of Gods grace and goodneſſe can neuer afford to a mans ſoule any true comfort, till hee is able vpon ſome good ground to apply the ſame to his owne particular.

LECTVRE XXIIII.

Whoſo receiues or expects any mercy or fauour from God, muſt know himſelfe bound to returne ſomething backe by way of thankefulneſſe vnto God.

The exerciſe and act of ſinging, is a duty well becomming Gods people, for the declaration of their due acknowledgement of Gods kindneſſe.

The tongue and voice of man ought to be vſed by him for the declaring of Gods praiſes.

It is a matter agreeable euen to iuſtice with God, that he ſhould be gracious and mercifull vnto thoſe who doe truely repent them of their ſinnes.

All ſeruices tending to the teſtification of our duty and thankefulneſſe vnto God, ought to be performed with cheerefulneſſe.

LECTVRE XXV.

No man can performe the ſeruice of praiſing God, except God doe by his grace ſtrengthen him thereunto.

When God is pleaſed to enable, there neuer wants ſufficiency.

The praiſing of God is no eaſie ſeruice.

LECTVRE XXVI.

It is poſsible for a man to doe the very thing which God commands, and yet therein not pleaſe God.

God

God requires no ſuch ſeruice in Religion, as hath no more in it then an outward forme.

An outward dutie pertayning to the worſhip of God, may ſometime be omitted without ſinne.

In worſhipping God, wee muſt not ſo much looke what kinde of worſhip is pleaſing to vs, as what it is which the Lord delighteth in.

LECTVRE XXVII.

Of all other ſeruices to be preſented vnto God, a broken heart and a contrite ſpirit, is in his account the principall.

LECTVRE XXVIII.

The proſperitie and happineſſe of Gods Church, is a matter very deare and precious vnto thoſe that are Gods children.

True repentance makes a man deſirous and carefull to repaire ſuch more ſpeciall hurts and wrongs as hee hath done, either by his generall euill courſe before his calling, or by falling into ſome great offence after his calling.

We muſt not expect or craue any good thing from God, either for our ſelues or others, but onely out of the freedome of his grace.

In all our prayers we muſt referre the ſucceſſe of our Petitions vnto Gods diſpoſe.

LECTVRE XXIX.

Euen outward things appertayning to this life, and to our ſtate and welfare in this preſent world, are to be reputed the gifts of God, and his goodneſſe for them is to be depended on.

He who is a good man, is alſo well and carefully affected to the common good.

LECTVRE XXX.

It is a great bleſſing, when the ſeruices which men preſent and tender vnto God, doe finde acceptance with him, and are approued by him.

It is a great mercy of God, when there is a generall freedome and forwardneſſe in the people, in reſpect of the publique acts and exerciſes of deuotion.

PENANCE FOR SINNE,

OR

DAVIDS PENITENTIALL PSALME OPENED.

THE FIRST LECTVRE.

PSALME LI.

THE ARGVMENT.

To him that excelleth. A Pſalme of DAVID, when the Prophet NATHAN came vnto him, after hee had gone in to BATH-SHEBA.

I Will not entertaine the firſt and freſheſt of your attention, with commendations either of the whole Booke of Pſalmes in generall, or of this preſent Pſalme in particular. Let this ſuffice, that this is a part of that Scripture, which by Saint Pauls teſtimonie, is giuen by inſpiration of God: and is therefore both with all meete reuerence to bee reſpected, and withall not to bee doubted of, but by Gods good bleſſing vpon our paynes, it ſhall returne much vnto our profit.

The generall diuiſion.

Without any further Preamble, I come to the Pſalme. In handling whereof, we are firſt to take notice of the Title, and then of the whole bodie of the Pſalme. The Title was of Dauids owne prefixing, and is no leſſe to be reputed a branch of holy Scripture, then the reſt of the enſuing Pſalme. In the Title, wee haue to obſerue, Firſt, the Dedication of the Pſalme.

Pſalme. Secondly, the Occaſion of inditing it. Touching the Dedication of it, (vnderſtanding thereby the diſpoſition and order for the vſe of this Pſalme being framed) it is in the firſt words, To him that excelleth, A Pſalme of Dauid. For the ſhewing the ſenſe whereof, I will walke in the moſt beaten path, and ioyne with the common iudgement of the moſt Interpreters. It is manifeſt by the ſacred [a] Hiſtorie, that whereas in the publike and ſolemne worſhip of God, (in vſe vnder thoſe memorable Kings, Dauid and Salomon) there was much muſicke, and many which were therein imployed: the perſons ſo imployed, were ranged into certaine companies or courſes: among which companies, there was one chiefe, who was as it were the Maſter of the Quire: we reade the names of ſome of theſe chiefe ones, as Heman, Aſaph, Corah, Ieduthun, &c. By him which excelleth, DAVID then intends him that was the principall Muſician, and had moſt to doe in diſpoſing and ordering of that part of Gods publike worſhip, which ſtood in ſinging. Now to him this Pſalme was committed, to the end that there mght be an apt note by him put to it, and ſo it might be of vſe for the benefit and comfort of the people in Gods ſeruice: It was put into his hands as vpon truſt; Dauid framed the Dittie: his meaning was, this partie ſhould ſet the Muſicke to it, that ſo it might remaine for the publike edifying. This one thing in one word, is to be obſerued hence;

a 1.*Chro.*9.33. & 15,16. & 25.1.

The firſt Doctrine.

That the ſinging of Pſalmes is of very ancient and commendable vſe in Gods publike worſhip. This is rightly gathered out of Dauids commending this Dittie to him that had skill, to make it fit and readie for the common vſe. Dauids intent was, it ſhould bee ſung in the Tabernacle. How many teſtimonies might be produced out of this booke of Pſalmes, in which by earneſt exhortations, the people of God are prouoked, and quickned, and ſtirred vp to this dutie: [b] Come let vs ſing aloud, &c. [c] Let vs ſing loud vnto him with Pſalmes. And in the Pſalme ſpecially deſtined for the Sabbath; [d] It is good to praiſe the Lord, and to ſing vnto thy name, O moſt High. Speeches of this kind are ſo ordinarie in this booke, that it were a needleſſe taske to bee exact in the ſetting downe of particulars. There were certaine ſpeciall Pſalmes which the Iewes were wont to ſing ſtill at the Paſſeouer; which gaue occaſion to our Sauiour, in the inſtitution of the Sacrament of his laſt Supper, (brought by him into the roome of the ancient Paſſeouer) to annexe the ſinging of a Pſalme to that [e] ſeruice. Had not the Apoſtle Paul a purpoſe of the continuance of this vſe in Gods worſhip, when hee gaue charge to Chriſtians, to ſpeake vnto themſelues; that is, (as it is well interpreted) [f] among themſelues in Pſalmes? It is a notable meanes for the enliuing and ſtirring vp of our dull ſpirits, and for the breeding of a kind of cheerfulneſſe in vs in holy ſeruices; which was the reaſon of Paul and Silas coupling this kind of exerciſe with their praying vnto God, when they were clapt vp in Priſon at Philippi, [g] They prayed and ſung a Pſalme vnto God. They made vſe of that holy kinde of action for the cheering of their ſpirits, and for the teſtification of their ioy, which they conceiued in being accounted worthy thy to ſuffer for the Truth, and for the Name of the Lord Ieſus. I doe willingly ayme at breuitie in this point. This little I haue ſaid is ſufficient to make good the Doctrine. The vſe of ſinging Pſalmes is ancient; we ſee it was in requeſt in the daies of Dauid. It is commendable, Chriſt himſelfe with his Diſciples practiſed it: the Apoſtle gaue order for it: and the feeling of thoſe which make conſcience of a right way of vſing it, doth abundantly prooue it to be comfortable.

The 1. Vſe. Firſt, to ſettle our iudgements herein, that wee may carrie our ſelues in this, as in all other parts of Gods worſhip, like men of knowledge, not doing this out of a cuſtome, or becauſe we perceiue it is a faſhion; but as being aſſured, that God requires it of vs, and that it is his will to bee ſo ſerued. We can haue no true comfort in our deuotions, ſo long as they are but limmes of that which Paul termes [h] voluntarie religion: ſo long as they are onely taken vp by vs, and not preſcribed to vs, make we neuer ſo great a ſhew of zeale in the performance of them, yet it is nothing; nay, put caſe the things we doe, be preſcribed of God, yet if it be more then wee know, or care to vnderſtand, ſo that that which wee build vpon, is rather either the precept of man or our owne priuate diſpoſition, then the knowne Commandement and Will of God; it is not any the moſt formall and glorious ſemblance of deuotion that can make it acceptable. This may well be eſteemed a branch of that which Paul calleth our [i] reaſonable ſeruice of God: when a man is able to ſhew vpon what ground he doth that he doth in Gods worſhip. Here then wee haue a warrant for this particular.

h Col.2.23.

i Rom.12.1.

The 2. Vſe. Secondly, this is to prouoke vs to the cheerefull ſetting of our ſelues to this kinde of dutie in the Congregation. No doubt it makes a ſweet noiſe in the eares of God, when a whole aſſembly ioynes together as one man, in the ſounding out of his praiſe; and when there is an vnion of hearts and voyces in one common act of pietie. The dulneſſe of many cannot be ſufficiently taxed, who notwithſtanding they can diſcouer too much liuelineſſe of affection, either in the hearkning to, or in the vſe of idle and immodeſt Sonnets, which are of little vſe, ſaue to bee the very fuell of luſts: yet in the Church they behaue themſelues in a kind of blockiſh and ſenſleſſe manner, neuer ſtriuing to awake their tongues (as Dauids phraſe is,) or to frame their voyces to that heauenly exerciſe: or (if they haue ſome naturall diſabling that way) to make it to appeare, that their hearts take comfort in it, and that their ſpirits are forward to ioyne, when by reaſon of ſome inſufficiencie they cannot bring their voyces to concurre.

The 3. Vſe. Thirdly, this Doctrine ought alſo to moue vs to an inquirie, and that with care, how this ſeruice may bee performed by vs aright. Many a good dutie is marred in the performance: Hearing, Praying, Communicating, they are all good duties; but to doe them ſimply, is not ſufficient: there may be ſuch an hearing, as may be a ſauour of death vnto him that heares; ſuch a praying, as may be turned into ſinne; ſuch a communicating, as may increaſe vnto greater iudgement; and ſo alſo ſuch a singing, as may be rather a vaine iangling, then any pleasant seruice vnto God. Not euery one, who openeth his mouth in the Congregation to sing with others, doth that which is truely right in the sight of God. The mayne thing required, is that which Paul calleth Singing [k] with a grace in the heart to the Lord.

k Col.3.16.

What it is to sing with a grace in the heart.

First, here must bee an especiall care had herein of the heart, vnderstanding thereby the inward man; for to it, that God (who is a Spirit, and must be worshipped in spirit) looketh directly. The grace of the heart herein is partly in a right vnderstanding of that which is sung, partly in a right esteeming thereof. It is meete that the heart should vnderstand what the lips [l] vtter: I will sing with the [m] vnderstanding, saith Paul. It is a strange seruing of God, when there is no concurrence of the vnderstanding with that which is outwardly performed. Hee that sings so, wherein, or in what respect doth hee praise God, better then a sounding brasse, or a tinckling Cymball? This condemnes the Latine chaunting in the Popish Seruice, and the careleſſe ignorance of the common sort with vs; who neuer seeke to know the meaning of that which they sound out in their singing; as though a noise could please God, where the Spirit is not edified.

Secondly, When the matter sung, is in some measure conceiued, there is yet a defect of the full grace of the heart, if there bee not a labouring to suite the disposition thereof to the nature and qualitie of the song. It is all to be done reuerently, because it is a part of Gods worship, and it must be done to the Lord, more for his glorie and honour, then for the pleasing of our selues: but then more particularly, a man should endeuour to proportion his inward thoughts to the matter: that if the words of the Psalme be of praise, his spirit may bee cheerefull; if of Petitions, his affections may bee feruent; if of threatning against Gods enemies, and the enemies of his Church and people, his soule may bee stricken with an awe of God; if of prophesie, he may be possest with a kinde of attentiue admiration of Gods Wisedome. Thus shall that be attained to, which Paul termeth a grace in the heart; and so shall our singing become not a lip-seruice, but a spirituall; it shall not bee (as many times it prooues to be) an exercise of vanitie, but of pietie; and the heart being thus set in order, which is the key of the worke, it shall bring the whole man in frame, and make the outward carriage such, as the grauitie of such a sacred seruice doth require. Thus is there a three-fold vse of this Doctrine: First, To assure vs of the lawfulnesse of singing, that wee doe it not at randome or aduenture, but vpon certaintie. Secondly, To prouoke vs to doe it in the assemblies, that that which God hath ordained as necessarie, we may not dare to vse as arbitrary. Thirdly, To direct vs in doing it, that wee may not by the lacke of grace bring so gracious a dutie into disgrace.

The occasion of enditing followeth, A Psalme of DAVID, when, &c. There be no words here of difficultie, wee all conceiue this meaning; That after Dauid had beene in the name of the Lord reprooued by Nathan than a Prophet, for that foule act of his, in committing adulterie with Bathſheba, in teſtimonie of his humiliation, and for an euidence of his repentance vnto all poſterities, hee compiled this Pſalme. Thus is the ſenſe. The particulars here are thus: Firſt, that Dauid did goe in to Bathſheba. Secondly, That for a declaration of his repentance for it, he made and publiſhed this Pſalme. Thirdly, That hee did ſo, vpon occaſion of the comming to him of the Prophet Nathan. Out of theſe three ſeuerall brookes, we ſhall ſee there will ſtreame forth much matter. Here firſt I collect;

The ſecond Doctrine.

That it is poſsible for a man, after that hee is called of God into the ſtate of grace, yet to fall into a great ſinne. This is very euident out of this preſent example. That DAVID fell into a great ſinne, nothing better known: who hath not heard of the [o] ſtorie, how he being idle and ſecure, fell into an vnlawfull liking with a beautifull woman, whom hee ſaw from the top of his Towre, waſhing of her ſelfe; and for the ſecreting of the euill committed with her, after ſome other practices, deuiſed a courſe to make away her husband, that himſelfe might haue her? Here was a fall into a great ſinne; a ſinne wrapt vp and compounded of diuers ſins. Adulterie cannot bee committed, without endangering the ſoule of another, as far forth as our owne; neither could this be performed without the aſſiſtance of ſome euill inſtruments, who were neceſſarily to negotiate and trauell to and fro in this buſineſſe betwixt Dauid and Bathſheba, and were vſed either for feare or fauour to further the fact, and to conceale it alſo: ſome bodie was alſo ſet on by Dauid to make Vriah drunke, when Dauid would haue had him to goe home, and to lie with his wife: and in the murder of Vriah, was not Ioab brought in to haue a hand? So, I ſay, the ſinne was great euery way; verie like [p] that roote of bitterneſſe by which many be defiled. It was not confined to Dauids perſon, but was as a running leproſie ſpreading farre. It annoyed the whole Kingdome, in regard that it was to ſome godly ones, a matter of griefe; to ſome profane ones, a matter of reioycing; to ſome wicked ones, a matter of emboldening. Now as it was a great ſinne, ſo it was after his being called into the ſtate of grace. Many excellent things are reported of Dauid before this fall, which are apparant teſtimonies of his true conuerſion. The words of the 12. Verſe of this Pſalme plainly ſhew, that he had felt the ioy of ſaluation before he thus fell; for there hee doth deſire the reſtoring thereof. Reſtoring is properly the rendring backe of a thing loſt. Dauid had formerly felt the ioy of ſaluation, but now hee had depriued himſelfe of the feeling of it, and deſires to recouer it. Hee that felt the ioy of ſaluation (vnderſtanding thereby the ſpirituall refreſhing which a Child of God finds in the aſſured hope of being ſaued) ſhall wee not thinke him to haue beene called? After that Noah was conuerted and called, and God had teſtified of him, that [q] hee was a iuſt and an vpright man, hee was ouertaken with [r] drunkenneſſe. LOT, who had a [ſ] righteous ſoule, and was vexed with the vncleane conuerſation of the wicked, (an argument that hee was a man religious indeede) yet who hath not heard of his doubled [t] inceſt? Whom ſhall wee account in the ſtate of grace, if not Peter, who witneſſed ſo good confeſſion, that Chriſt profeſſed thereon to build his [u] Church; yet how grieuouſly fell hee, when hee denied his Maſter, not once but three times; not with ordinarie and naked denials, but euen with the curſing of himſelfe? The matter is plaine by example. Let vs conſider a little of it how it commeth to paſſe, that in perſons called vnto grace, there is ſuch a poſſibilitie of falling euen into grieuous ſinnes. To make this manifeſt, we muſt conſider three ſeuerall Actors in theſe caſes: Firſt, the Deuill endeuouring it: Secondly, Man in his corruption yeelding to it: Thirdly, God in his great Wiſedome ordering it.

Whence it is, that euen the Children of God fall ſometimes into great ſinnes.

Firſt, The Deuill being in the generall a profeſſed enemie to all mankinde, is much more ſpitefully bent againſt thoſe who haue beleeued through grace. We haue heard lately * of his practices for the peruerting of thoſe that haue beene called of God by his Word, to the right way. He ſeekes, as Chriſt ſaid to Peter, [x] to winnow them as Wheate; and like a roring Lyon, he hath them in a continuall chaſe. He leaues no meanes vnaſſayed, by which hee may worke them to ſome euill, thereby to hazzard their ſoules, to impaire their comfort, and to bring a diſgrace vpon that which they haue beene called to profeſſe. He layeth baits and ſnares in their way, and in euery thing which they vndertake, or goe about, he ſeeketh to entangle them.

Secondly, There is none of Gods Children but this is his eſtate, that though hee bee wholly iuſtified before God through Chriſt at the firſt moment of his true conuerſion, yet he is not wholly ſanctified. There is a continuall fight in him betwixt the Fleſh and the Spirit, betwixt Nature and Grace, [y] ſo that hee cannot doe the things which he would. It is in the ſoule of a called Chriſtian, as in a State where there be two Claymers of the Crowne, each of which ſtriuing to make his part ſtrong againſt the other, ſometimes the one hath the vpper hand, ſometimes the other: ſo theſe two, Fleſh and Spirit, are at a perpetuall variance, ſometimes the good motions of the Spirit preuaile, ſometimes the corrupt affections of the fleſh are more ſtrong, by meanes whereof the Chriſtian is (as it were) compelled to [z] doe euen the very euill which he hates. Satan, he cunningly obſerues a mans courſe, and by it concludes touching his diſpoſition, and takes aduantage by thoſe things to which hee perceiues his natiue corruption to leane moſt, to draw him into miſchiefe. No doubt he ſaw and vnderſtood whereunto Dauid at this time was moſt apt, in regard of his eaſe and idleneſſe; and where he found him to be moſt weake, there did he make his batterie moſt ſtrong, and his aſſaults moſt violent.

Thirdly, God in his Wiſedome looking on (as I may ſo ſpeake) and beholding his Children in the combate, Satan ſeeking to ſeduce, the World labouring to bewitch, and the Fleſh being euer readie to betray, ſuffereth them now and then to take a foyle; yea and in ſuch a meaſure, as that Satan may ſeeme euen to triumph in their conqueſt, and the limmes of Satan to reioyce greatly in their weakeneſſes.

This he doth for iuſt cauſes, as namely, Firſt, to humble them, and to abate their naturall pride, by bringing them to an vnderſtanding and ſence of their infirmities. The ſcarre which remaines after a great ſinne committed, notwithſtanding that it be healed by repentance, yet it can no oftner bee looked vpon, but it will fill a mans heart with ſhame, and bee a perpetuall remembrancer to him of his owne weakeneſſe: how can hee chooſe but worke out his ſaluation with feare and trembling, whenſoeuer hee conſidereth it? That which Dauid ſpeaks in this Pſalme of the [a] breaking of his bones, and a [b] broken heart; is an argument that Dauid was exceedingly auiled and caſt downe in himſelfe with this ſinne: we may well thinke, it was a meanes to bring him to a more humble and lowly deportment of himſelfe euer after. Secondly, To teach them to cleaue more cloſe vnto the Lord, when they haue found in experience, what becommeth of them ſtrait, when they bee left to their owne ſtrength. Thus the Mother leading her little one by the hand, and perceiuing it to bee wanton and careleſſe, and apt to play with euery toy and feather as it goeth, lets it fall into the durt, and take a knocke; ſhee goeth away from it, and makes ſhew to leaue it there, ſeeming to bee altogether careleſſe of the crie thereof: and why this? but that it may learne to be more tractable, and more eaſie to bee led. Euen ſo God, ſeeing his to forget themſelues, and ſo much (haply) to preſume vpon the leading of his Spirit, that they are dallying with the enticements and witcheries of the world, ſuffereth them to ſlip into ſome grieuous inconuenience, wherewith they are ſtained and ſoiled out of meaſure to their ſhame. Theſe he ſuffereth alſo (it may be) a while to lie in the vexation thereof, as if they ſhould bee forſaken there, and neuer get againe their wonted feeling: and why this? but to bring them to a more frameableneſſe to his owne will, and more watchfulneſſe ouer themſelues to make ſtrait ſteps to their feete, and a more due eſtimation of that hand from an high, by which they muſt be eſtabliſhed. This made this Dauid hauing in another particular beene miſtaken, to determine out of the ſenſe of his owne aptneſſe to miſcarrie, and to conclude, that it was [c] good for him to hold him faſt to God. And I doubt not but this was it that cauſed thoſe frequent ſuits from him, [d] Stabliſh me according to thy promiſe: [e] Stay thou me, and I ſhall be ſafe: [f] Let thy good Spirit leade me into the land of righteouſneſſe: [g] Conſider if there be any way of wickedneſſe in me, and leade me in the way for euer. Other cauſes there bee of Gods thus diſpoſing theſe things, which (I doubt not, but) there will come iuſt occaſion to diſcouer in the proſecution of this Pſalme: as to make more diligent in the vſing of the ſanctified meanes for their vpholding, more charitable to others, and more compaſſionate to them in their falls, when they haue felt the like or worſe in their owne particular. Theſe things, I thinke, I haue once handled afore in part, in the treating vpon that place of Luke. Our Sauiours ſpeech to Peter touching Satans winnowings, and this Pſalme, will giue plentifull occaſion to fall againe into a more full manifeſtation of this point. It is neceſſarie notwithſtanding

Why God ſuffereth his ſometimes to fall.

An Obiect on or Queſtion anſwered.

ſtanding before I come to the Vſe, to giue an anſwere briefly to an obiection or queſtion touching this matter. I haue ſaid, that a man called may thus fall. Now whoſoeuer is truely called and conuerted indeede, the ſame hath alſo the Spirit of God: for how elſe may wee account him a right Chriſtian? If then, hee hauing once receiued the Spirit of God, may thus fall as Dauid did, what becommeth of the Spirit of God therewhile? Is it loſt? or if not, how can the Spirit of God agree and ſtand with ſuch falls? I anſwere briefly: It is true, whoſo is rightly and truely called, the ſame hath the Spirit of God: for whoſo is called to bee a Chriſtian, is therefore a Chriſtian, becauſe he is Chriſts, and is in Chriſt. Now no man is Chriſts, but he who hath the [h] Spirit. As hee hath the Spirit of Chriſt, ſo hauing once receiued it, he hath it euer. For as wee vnderſtand by the Spirit (when wee ſpeake of hauing the Spirit of God) the gifts and graces of the Spirit, ſuch as concerne ſaluation: ſo the Scripture is plaine, that ſuch gifts, they [i] are without repentance. God doth not withdraw them when he hath once beſtowed them. How then can it be, that a man hauing the Spirit of God, ſhould fall into ſo great a ſinne, as this of Adulterie, and the ſame accompanyed with Murder, or into Periurie and falſe-ſwearing, which was Peters fault? ſhall it bee thought, Dauid had the Spirit of God while hee committed this act; or Peter when hee ſo denyed his Maſter? Indeed I know, Papiſts maintaine an vtter loſſe of the Spirit to haue beene befalne them both: but it is againſt all true Diuinitie. Dauids yeelding ſo much vpon Nathans words, is an euidence that Gods Spirit remained ſtill in him; and Peter ſo ſoone weeping, and that with bitterneſſe, vpon our Sauiours looking backe, is an argument of the ſame touching him. We muſt learne to diſtinguiſh, betwixt the being of the Spirit of God, and the working thereof. It alwaies is where it workes, but it doth not perpetually worke where it is. The ſoule of man being in the bodie, doth not alwaies manifeſt the operations thereof. A man weakned in his braine, and not maſter of himſelfe for the time, we will repute a reaſonable creature notwithſtanding; the faculties remaines ſtill, though the exerciſe of it for the preſent is reſtrained. And ſo is it in ſome diſeaſes (as the palſey.) In euery mans vnderſtanding, the being and working of the ſoule in ſome ſpeciall power of it are diſtinguiſhed. Euen thus is it in a regenerate man. The ſpirit which he hath receiued at his firſt acceſſe or entrance into grace, neuer departs; yet it ſometime ceaſeth to worke ſo effectually as it did. It is not becauſe the Spirit of God giuen to the Children of God, is weaker then the fleſh ſimply, and is by that meanes ouer-ruled (as it were) and ſuppreſſed by it; but becauſe (for the cauſes before mentioned) God is pleaſed to exerciſe thoſe which are his, that his power may bee made perfect by their weakneſſe, and that he may in the end after ſundry conflicts, and ſome foyles taken, make the victorie of the Spirit againſt the Fleſh to become the more glorious. This is that which may bee framed as a ſufficient anſwere to this doubt. If there ſhall bee a further doubt yet made, How Dauid falling thus, may be reputed a man truely regenerate,

rate, ſith it is ſaid, [k] that hee which is borne of God, ſinneth not? The matter is ſoone cleered by the ordinarie, and indeede true opening of that place; which is, that by ſinning there, is not meant a falling or failing in ſome one particular, but a becomming as [l] a ſeruant to ſinne, to make as it were a common trade or practice of it, without any ſtriuing or labouring, or making conſcience to reſiſt it. Thus did not Dauid ſinne: wee doe not find that he went on in this kind of euill: nay, we ſhall ſee in this Pſalme his repentance for it, his deteſtation of it, his reſolution to walke in more holineſſe and vnblameableneſſe of life before God, then he had done formerly. And thus is this Doctrine cleered, touching the poſſibilitie for a man called, to fall into a grieuous ſinne.

k 2.Ioh.3.9.

l Rom.6.17.

Firſt, this is a neceſſarie admonition for thoſe that are called of God by the preaching of the Goſpell, out of the ſtate of nature into grace. Though thou haue neuer ſo great, neuer ſo certaine euidence of thy being a conuerted Chriſtian; though thou haue receiued neuer ſo many graces of the Spirit, ſuch as are wont to be pledges vnto the Choſen of God of their election; yet there is no place for ſecuritie; thou ſtandeſt not vpon ſuch ſure ground, but that thou maieſt through thine owne preſuming, bee ouertaken with ſome grieuous ſinne: beleagred with an enemie that will trie thee euery way, and thou haſt a Traytor in thy boſome, which is readie to ioyne with this enemie, for the drawing of thee into danger. Thou canſt neuer thinke thy ſelfe of better parts then Dauid, a man after Gods owne heart; and if hee were ouertaken, can it bee ſafe for thee to bee ſecure? ſhalt thou truſt to thine owne ſtrength, when ſuch an one as he was ſhaken? Bleſſed is hee, whom the fall of ſuch a worthy man as Dauid ſhall make to quake, and which ſhall learne by his foyle to ſtand ſo much the more vpon his guard.

1. Vſe.

If any man ſhall be ſo impious, as to ſay; Why, what needs a man to feare ſo much? what if he doe fall? by your owne Doctrine hee ſhall riſe againe, neither ſhall it bee any hazzard to his finall ſtate: wherefore then ſhould a man bee nice to forbeare ſome ſweet or gainefull ſinne, when it can be no vtter preiudice to him in the mayne? I anſwere: The Spirit of God neuer teacheth to make ſuch inferences; I will not ſay but Satan may ſuggeſt ſuch a motion to the minde of a ſpirituall man, and may labour and endeuour to worke him vnder colour thereof, to giue an aduenture vpon ſome ſpeciall euill; but out of all doubt, it is not out of Gods Spirit ſo to conclude: and hee who ſhall finde himſelfe to agree to ſuch an argument as reaſonable and iuſt, and ſo obey ſinne in the luſts thereof, his thought and opinion of himſelfe, that hee hath the Spirit of God, is but a meere ſurmiſe. And he who knew what it were to be exerciſed with thoſe pangs and paſſions which Dauid had after his great ſinne, of which wee ſhall haue cauſe to treate in this Pſalme, he would be loth to pay ſo deare for the ſweet of ſuch a ſinne, notwithſtanding the generall truth of the Doctrine of a finall recouerie. Thus is the firſt Vſe.

Obiect.

Anſw.

Secondly, this is a comfort when it is conceiued aright, for thoſe who

2. Vſe.

are

are ouer-taken at times with ſome euils of infirmitie. No man muſt by any Doctrine of Scripture, either haue heart giuen him, or take heart to commit an euill: that is a turning of the Grace of God into wantonneſſe; as if a man ſhould willingly wound himſelfe, becauſe he hath an oyle readie in his houſe, which is able to ſtench bloud preſently, and to cure a cut at once, though it bee neuer ſo deepe. But when the Children of God haue beene aſſaulted, and in ſome particular miſſe-led, then out of ſuch examples as this is, there is comfort to bee had for the releeuing of their grieued ſoules, and the refreſhing of their drooping ſpirits. There is no iuſt cauſe to deſpaire, when wee looke vpon ſuch a man as Dauid ſinning ſuch a ſinne, and yet receiued after it into fauour. I know well, men are too apt to apply thus ſuch examples, and ſo to ſtrengthen their hands vnto wickedneſſe; but yet though ſome vſe the libertie which we haue in Chriſt, as an occaſion to the Fleſh, the Truth it ſelfe muſt bee taught, for the comfort of their ſoules to whom of right it appertaines. Though the Swine tread the Pearles vnder foote, yet the children of the marriage Chamber will value them according to their worth, and lay them vp as they doe deſerue: yet notwithſtanding that if any doe gather heart by this Doctrine, it may appeare the offence is rather taken by them, then giuen and offered to them: this in a word know wee, that the comfort of this Doctrine appertaines onely to ſinnes of infirmitie. I know, infirmitie is a common word, in the mouth euen of the moſt diſſolute, and it is the cuſtomary pretext of thoſe that make no manner of conſcience of their wayes, when they are blamed for their vngodly courſes, to excuſe themſelues by this, that forſooth they are their infirmities. Therefore it is worthy the conſideration, how a ſinne of infirmitie may be knowne. Thus then.

When a man ſinneth vpon infirmitie.

First, To the end a man may bee ſaid truely to ſinne vpon infirmitie, hee muſt be one, the reſolued deſire of whoſe ſoule it is, to haue reſpect to all Gods Commandements, and to pleaſe him in all things. The Apoſtle calleth a ſinne of infirmitie, [m] a falling by occaſion into a fault: meaning, that that is properly a ſinne of infirmitie, when a man is ouertaken by an euill beſide his mayne purpoſe; as when one trauelling vpon the way, and intending no other but to goe on right, and to goe ſteadily, is notwithſtanding againſt his minde, out of his way at vnawares, or elſe at ſome hidden ſtone or ſtub ſtumbleth ſo, that he receiues a fall. If a man want this reſolution, and be not ſuch an one as maketh conſcience of his courſe, and watcheth ouer his waies, and ſtriueth to approoue himſelfe in all things vnto God, his ſinnes are no ſinnes of infirmitie, neither can hee haue any manner of comfort by this Doctrine. When a man willingly giues himſelfe ouer to his owne luſts, and hath no meaning to doe otherwiſe, but goeth on ſtill in his voluptuous way; betwixt his ſinne and this of Dauids here, there is no agreement.

Secondly, A ſinne of infirmitie is diſcouerable by the conſequences of it. When a man offends out of weakneſſe, it leaues behind it a deepe impreſſion, and begets ſorrow in a large and exceeding meaſure; yea, and and proceeds to that indignation [n] noted there as a ſpeciall euidence of Repentance: which makes a man, euen (as it were) to fall out with himſelfe, that he ſhould commit ſo foule a treſpaſſe. So that when a man is apt to ſlight ouer a great euill, as if it were no great matter, imagining that ſome ſuch ſmall ſprinkling, as, Lord, haue mercy on me, ſhall waſh it out, his ſinne is no ſinne of infirmitie. It is a raigning ſinne. Then there is another thing comes after it, and that is an earneſt care and labouring to recouer that which a man hath loſt by offending: as when a man being in a iourney caſt behind the companie by ſome accident, is no ſooner gotten vp againe, but immediately hee makes after with a redoubled pace: ſo this is a teſtimonie of a ſinne of infirmitie, when a man is made by it, ſo much the more forward, ſtriuing to make a kind of recompence for his former going backe, by increaſing his endeuour and care to preſſe onward to perfection. If then a man cannot find any ſuch diſpoſition as this is of being bettered by a fault, and of becomming thereby the more carefull to auoid ſinne, his euill is not infirmitie, but obſtinacie; and Dauids ſinne ſhall be for him no defence. Thus is the Vſe of this Doctrine, and thus is the right applying of this point. It is a watch-word to all: it is a comfort to thoſe who fall by occaſion into ſinne.

[n] 2. Cor. 7. 11.

The ſecond Lecture.

The Argvment.

To him that excelleth. A Pſalme of David, when the Prophet Nathan came vnto him, &c.

NOw followeth the ſecond generall thing in the Title, viz. Dauids diſcouerie and laying open of this his fault with his owne Pen, to the view of the whole World: that both the preſent Age in which he liued, and the ſucceeding Times, euen vnto the generall end of all, might vnderſtand it. It was hee himſelfe which compiled this Pſalme: hee it was which prefixed this Title, (A Pſalme of David, after he had gone in to Bathsheba.) The Doctrine is thus:

The firſt Doctrine.

That where there is any true remorſe for ſinne, there is a readineſſe (as farre forth as it is meete) both before God and the World, to make confeſſion of ſinne. David is here a Patterne to vs of a wounded ſpirit, of a man deepely ſtrooken euen to the very heart, for a great offence. See now how forward hee is himſelfe to make a ſolemne publication of his owne fall, acknowledging it at large before God, and making the world a witneſſe of what he doth in this behalfe. Verily, whereſoeuer there is the

the like Touch, there will alſo bee the like minde: where there is ſuch a feeling as Dauid had, there will be an aptneſſe to make ſuch a confeſſion as Dauid made. This may briefly giue vs ſome ſatisfaction touching the raiſing of this Doctrine from this place. The compunction of heart for his ſinne, makes Dauid reſolute and plentifull in the acknowledgement of his ſinne. Now, leſt I ſhould be thought to bind euery Chriſtian, feeling himſelfe a ſinner, and affected with the apprehenſion and ſence of ſome particular fall, to the making of ſuch a publike acknowledgement as this of Dauids is; therefore I ſaid in the Doctrine, that there is a readineſſe (as far forth as it is meete) both before God, and the World, to make confeſsion of ſinne. There was a more ſpeciall reaſon for Dauids diſcouerie of his ſinne on this manner, then doth ordinarily binde euery Chriſtian. Dauid was a publike perſon, and his ſinne was very both notorious and ſcandalous: no doubt it was a great griefe and an heart-breaking to many, who ſorrowed much for the diſgrace that came to Profeſſion by this meanes. It was a great emboldening to many, who tooke heart to euill by this example: the enemies of God triumphed not a little, and ſpake their pleaſure againſt God, and againſt his holy Truth vpon this [a] occaſion. Theſe things conſidered, it was neceſſarie that Dauid ſhould deale in ſuch a publike manner as hee did: that, as many had beene offended by his Fall, ſo many alſo might be ſatisfied by his Repentance: and that as his Treſpaſſe had beene publike, ſo might his Acknowledgement alſo be. Now euery Chriſtians caſe is not alike: and therefore the like publikeneſſe in confeſſion, is not required of euery one. Where there ſhall be a like manner of offending, there ought to bee a like manner of confeſſing. This then is the generalitie of the Doctrine, that a true and an effectuall touch of ſinne, frames the heart to a readineſſe to make all meete acknowledgement, to God ſimply and abſolutely, without all manner of limitation or exception, to man alſo ſo farre forth, as any due and important circumſtance ſhall make it to be neceſſarie. Touching confeſſion of ſinnes to God, there is no one thing more ordinarie in Dauids Pſalmes. I had rather referre it to your owne obſeruation, then fall into particulars. Indeede this was it wherein he found moſt eaſe, and which made the way to his greateſt comfort: he ſaith [b] that he had ſometimes a diſpoſition of keeping in his ſinnes; hoping well inough to ouercome the ſtirring of his priuate thoughts, by ſuppreſſing them; but he found by experience, that this was nothing but an addition to his vexation, and an improuement of his griefe. He neuer could finde any true eaſe, till he reſolued vpon a diſburdening of himſelfe by confeſſion; [c] Then I acknowledged my ſinne vnto thee, neither hid I mine iniquitie: for I thought, I will confeſſe againſt my ſelfe my wickednesſe vnto the Lord, and thou forgaueſt the puniſhment of my ſinne. It is not hard to manifeſt the truth of this Doctrine by examples. We reade of Iobs confeſſion: [d] Behold, Lord, I am vile, &c. [e] I haue ſpoken things too wonderfull for me, and which I knew not: therefore I abhor my ſelfe. How full and how feeling a Confeſſion is that which Ezra made made on the behalfe of the people, immediately vpon their returne from the Babylonian bondage: [f] Our iniquities are increased ouer our head, and our trespasse is growne vp vnto the heauen. From the dayes of our Fathers haue we beene in a great trespasse vnto this day, &c. How ample is that which fell out about the same time, and is vpon record, when the [g] children of Israel assembled with fasting, and with sack-cloth, and earth vpon them! They stood (saith the Text) and confessed their sinnes, and the iniquities of their fathers. What shall we terme that but a Confession of sinne, which wee finde in the Prophet? [h] Wee haue all beene as an vncleane thing, and all our righteousnesse is as filthy clouts, and we doe all fade like a leafe, and our iniquities like the winde haue taken vs away. No other is that, [i] We haue sinned, and haue committed iniquitie, &c. DANIEL is very exact that way in that Chapter. [k] They were baptized of IOHN in Iordan, confessing their sinnes: and of the Conuerts at Ephesus, it is said, [l] Many that beleeued, came and confessed, &c. Was not a confession couched vnder that short forme vsed by the remorcefull [m] Publican? The very action and gesture of the Woman in the Gospell, that came into our Sauiours presence in the Pharises house, sauoureth altogether of [n] confession: what meant her casting her selfe at Christs feete, her weeping, her applying of her haire to the wiping of his feete? what were these things but silent, (why say I silent?) they were rather indeed loud and speaking representations of the sincere acknowledgement of her heart, that shee was a most vile and wretched sinner before the Lord. Our Sauiour purposed, the Parable of the prodigall sonne should bee vnto vs the picture of a Penitent, and the liuely resemblance of a reclaymed and conuerted sinner: now, what was his resolution, but to returne to his offended father, and to labour to make his peace by confession? [o] I will arise, and goe to my father, and say vnto him, Father, I haue sinned against heauen, and before thee, &c. and according to his resolution was his practice. [p] Hee no sooner came into the presence of his father, but immediately hee brake forth into words of acknowledgement: out of the abundance of his heart, he could not but rip vp all that he could against himselfe. What more exact confession can wee thinke then that of Pauls, acknowledging himselfe [q] the chiefe of sinners, and blazing himselfe with his owne Pen to haue beene [r] a Blasphemer, a Persecuter, and an Oppressor? I suppose these particulars to bee very direct for this purpose. True repentance cannot be silent: when the heart is pricked, the tongue cannot forbeare: there will be confession absolutely to God, and a readinesse to performe it also before men, so farre forth as there is occasion. A truely humbled sinner neuer stands vpon termes of priuate reputation, where God may be glorified, and any such good office done, by which the soules of others may haue benefit. What cared Dauid for the censure of the world now, when together with the knowledge of his euill, it should reade the manifestation of his Repentance? Though some haply would deride it, yet he knew well, there were that would reioyce for it, and be as much comforted for his recouerie, as euer they had mourned and sorrowed for his fall.

We can haue no ſurer marke then this by which to iudge our ſelues, whether we haue receiued any ſuch thorow-touch, as is the companion and fruit of true Repentance. If we be nice and backward in this point of acknowledgement, it is a plaine euidence, we are farre from that liuely feeling which betokeneth Grace. Remember I doe not vrge hence, that euery man ſhould, like Dauid here, make publication of all his perſonall faults; that is a ſeruice which God doth ſimply require at no mans hands. Whoſo ſhall fall into any open ſcandall, and commit ſome ſuch ſpeciall ſinne, which falleth out to bee to the common diſgrace of Religion, and to the grieuing of the ſoules to the Godly, ought to manifeſt his Repentance, by making his confeſſion, euen as publike, if it bee poſſible, as his fault: and thereunto tends the diſcipline of the Church, in the right execution thereof, to bring publike treſpaſſers, to the making of a publique ſatisfaction by acknowledgement. And he who ſhould be backward in ſuch a caſe, there were ſmall hope to bee had of his repentance. The mayne thing is, that euery man ſhould binde himſelfe to be very exact in this dutie, betwixt the Lord and himſelfe. He that doth not ſtriue herein to finde out matter againſt himſelfe, by the ſearch of his heart, and by the triall of his wayes, that ſo he may be plentifull in powring out his ſoule before the Lord, and may be euer readie to put vp many plaints, and to commence (as it were) many actions againſt himſelfe; let that man neuer thinke himſelfe to bee in the way of true repentance. When Dauids repentance is vnfayned, ſurely, Dauid will deale thorowly and effectually with himſelfe. There is nothing more contrarie to a mans natiue diſpoſition, then this diſcouery of himſelfe by a direct acknowledgement. Euer ſince Gods firſt dealing with Adam in Paradiſe aſſoone as he had ſinned, this lothneſſe hath beene in the nature of man, to make a plaine confeſſion. See Gen. 3. how vnwilling Adam was to come directly to the point concerning himſelfe: he would faine haue had it thought, that his turning to hide in the Thicket of the Garden, came from ſome kind of reſpectiue feare in him to Gods Maieſtie, rather then from any ſecret guilt: then, when that could not auaile him, but he was preſſed by a queſtion touching eating of the forbidden Tree, whereby he began to feele himſelfe as it were taken, and that he could not eſcape, yet hee ſought how to ſhift it off, by talking of the Woman; yea, the Woman which God gaue vnto him, ſhee, forſooth, had beguiled him. Somewhat there was to doe to bring him to a plaine confeſſion. It is ſtill in the nature of man, this humour to deſire to make the beſt of it ſelfe, and rather to hide and conceale, then to lay open its owne blemiſhes. Know we therefore, that he hath made a good progreſſe in Religion, that loues to rip vp his heart, and to diue deepe into his owne boſome, and to ſcan the particularities of his life and courſe, that ſo he may be furniſhed with matter of acknowledgement, and may not ſpare himſelfe when he commeth to deale betwixt the Lord and his owne ſoule. And withall, it is no little euidence of grace, when one is apt and readie to communicate his infirmities to and with others, by whoſe aduice and prayers hee may may be comforted: which is the effect of that councell of [f] Saint Iames. The Papists drew the people into an extremitie, in binding them to a reckoning vp of their faults in the eare of a Priest. We are now falne as much vpon the other side: that seldome or neuer either to a Minister, or any other wise and faithfull Christian, we lay open our speciall infirmities; by fayling wherein, little doe wee know what wee lose: [t] Our wounds stinke, because of our foolishnesse. [u] Hee that hideth his sinnes, shall not prosper. There is, I acknowledge, a kind of publication of sinne, which it might bee wished were abated: That which Isay laid to the charge of the people of his time, is now verified; The triall of their countenance testifieth against them: yea, they declare their sinnes as Sodom: [x] they hide them not. The wicked (saith DAVID) [y] maketh boast of his owne hearts desire: [z] They speake wickedly of their oppression, they talke presumptuously. Thus our dayes are too forward in the proclaiming of euill. Many are growne to that height, that they respect little who seeth them, it neuer troubleth them that such or such grosse things are noted in them. But when it commeth to such a laying open of a sin, as should testifie humiliation, and should be an euidence of the affliction and compunction of the heart, and of the griefe of the soule for offending God, that is one of the most bitter and vnpleasing seruices: yet that which wee must endeuour too, if wee would bee thought to haue receiued any life, or truth of grace. This, concerning that Dauid is the publisher of his owne trespasse. True repentance is alwaies accompanied with a readinesse of acknowledgement. He that feeles the sting of sinne, will bee large and euen curious in this businesse of confession betwixt God and himselfe: and when it shall appeare to bee of any vse, for the promoting of Gods glorie, or the furtherance of the common good of Gods people, or for the procuring of ease and comfort to himselfe, hee will not sticke to doe it vnto men. This is the summe. There will be occasion againe to treate hereof in the prosecution of this Psalme.

The third followeth: when the Prophet NATHAN came vnto him, &c. This was the meanes by which Dauid was wrought to this acknowledgement. Here three particulars: First, Nathan the Prophet came to Dauid: Secondly, Nathans comming was necessary euen for Dauid: Thirdly, Nathans comming was not without successe with Dauid. Concerning the first, it is [a] apparant. The Doctrine is thus:

[a] 2.Sam.12.

That not the greatest among men, ought to bee forborne and spared in their sinnes. Euen to Dauid must Nathan come. The chaire of Estate, the Scepter, the Diademe, none of these things could exempt Dauid from reproofe. Sith he would sinne as others, euen hee as others by Nathan must bee dealt withall. The maiesty of his place must bee reuerenced, yet the state of his Soule must be pitied, and it must not bee feared to say euen plainely to him, Thou art the man. How faithfull and how resolute were the Prophets of God in this course in their times! Elias feared not to tell Ahab to his face, [b] Thou hast sold thy selfe to worke wickednes in the sight of the Lord: [c] It is thou and thy fathers house that haue troubled

The charge to [m] improoue, rebuke, &c. it hath no such exception, as thus; If he be but an ordinarie man, be plaine with him; but if he bee a great man, beware; doe not meddle with him. There is no such limitation put in by the Spirit of God. What warrant haue we to dispense in the execution of the Law, without the authoritie of him that n Tit.1.13. made the Law, [n] Rebuke them sharply that they may bee sound in the Faith? (them) which them? What, onely the lowest of the people, and not also those which are in higher place? what can be more absurd, then o Isa.58.1. so to interpret, [o] Shew my people their transgressions? They must single themselues out from the number of Gods people, that will claime any priuiledge in this case. Nay, to say the right of it, there was more cause Nathan should come to Dauid vpon this reproouing errand, then vnto another: inasmuch as the sinne of Dauid was more exemplar. Dauids fault was many times more dangerous then another ordinary mans: such an one as he could not so sinne without much company: who would not bee readie to aduenture vpon such a president? I remember what the Prophet saith of the licentious and Epicurious people of his time, p Amos 6.5. [p] that they inuented instruments of musike like DAVID. They fell into an amorous and lasciuious vse of musike; and then they would seeke to patronize it with Dauids name: What, did not Dauid loue musike? An argument that Dauids example was such as by which many would receiue emboldening. We see euen to this day how far this act of Dauid is stretched: they which know little else of holy Scripture, can yet take vp Dauids adulterie as a couert for their wantonnesse: so that it was necessarie that of all men else, Dauid should be dealt with. Better to passe ouer the sins of a thousand others, then to let his goe vncensured. And so the same reason still holds: so far must it be that great ones must be spared in their euils, that of all others they must be specially reproued. Their falls ouerthrow others, and by their enormities no small number is endangered.

1. Vse. First, this is for all vs who are called to Nathans office, that we should put vpon vs Nathans courage. Paul saith, by our place we be the Lords q 1.Cor.4.1,2. Stewards: and of the Steward [q] it is required that hee bee faithfull:

and

and this is a ſpeciall branch of his faithfulneſſe, that hee giue to thoſe of the Houſhold, to each his portion, and that in [r] ſeaſon. Looke what is fit for euery one, that he muſt haue. Let him haue reproofe, to whom it appertaynes; and he iudgement, to whom iudgement doth belong. Let no man be forborne for his greatneſſe, nor more ouerly proceeded with becauſe of his authoritie. I will not ſay, that wee are alwayes bound to ſuch a direct and perſonall ſpeaking, as out of the Pulpit, to ſay to euery great man that doth amiſſe (Thou art hee.) It ſeemeth it was in priuate that Nathan ſpake to Dauid as he did; and I am apt (for my part) to thinke it was betwixt them two, that Iohn told that to Herod which hee did: and beſides, we cannot warrant to our ſelues an imitation of the ancient Prophets, euen in the particulars of their behauiour: the generall dutie is that onely which wee are to make vſe of. I could beleeue eaſily that Nathan had particular direction for his ſpeech now to Dauid, and ſo might ſo ſpeake vnto him as he did. It is poſſible for a Miniſter to carry the matter ſo with that wiſedome and power, as that euery guiltie perſon preſent may find and perceiue himſelfe as directly ſpoken to, as if he ſhould, like PAVL to ELYMAS, [f] ſet his eyes full vpon him, and ſay vnto him with NATHAN, Thou art the man. We ſee in experience how men take themſelues many times to bee ſpecially meant and aymed at, and are ſtrongly of opinion, that the Preacher had a purpoſe to taxe them aboue others, when as yet there was no ſuch thing: an argument that the Word of God well handled, will find men out, and will creepe into the boſome of the Hearers, though it be not alwayes carryed in appearance with any ſpeciall leuell. It is a miſerable thing then, when wee ſhall be ſo poſſeſſed with a cowardly ſpirit, as not to dare to reproue apparant ſinnes; or if we doe, to ſhew our ſelues bold onely with the vulgar, and to be afraid of thoſe who are like to ſtrike againe. Why ſhould wee feare the high lookes of any, when God hath promiſed that albeit they fight againſt vs, yet they ſhall not preuaile? [t] I will be with thee to deliuer thee, ſaith the Lord. God forbid, the Pulpit ſhould bee made a place of rayling, or a Theater for inuectiues, and for bitterneſſe of ſpirit to ſhew it ſelfe on; yet farre let it be from baſe flatterie, and from dawbing vp the ſinnes of greatneſſe with vntempered mortar. Let the King on the Throne heare of his fayling, as well as the Maid at the Mill: the Gentleman that ſitteth in the Quire, as well as the poore that is ranged in the Belfry. Let not our Sermons be as the Spiders web, thorow which doe breake the greater Flies, while onely the leſſer Gnats are taken; but let them be as a true looking Glaſſe, wherein euery one which looks, may behold the iuſt feature of his heart, and the right ſtate and condition of his life. Of all Theſts, that which Ieremie calleth [u] The ſtealing of the Word from men, is the worſt: viz. when there is a with-holding, and a keeping that backe from men which is their due. They which will needs walke in the way of their owne hearts, and hate to be reformed, let them be made to know that the end of ſuch things is death. If they will needs periſh, yet let not vs periſh with them: let vs be ſure to deliuer our owne ſoules soules, by leauing them quite without excuse, that they may not be able to say in the Day of the Lord to our shame, they would haue beene better if we had told them. This is the first Vse: sith Nathan came to Dauid, why should we feare to admonish any? Nay, the greater any man is, the sooner let him be dealt with, if he goe awry; not out of contempt of his greatnesse, but out of feare, that his fault, by how much the more great he is, will be the more infectious.

2. Vse.

Secondly, This must teach euery man to [x] suffer the words of Exhortation, and with [y] meeknesse to receiue the Word. The Apostle there perswading swiftnesse to heare, aduiseth withall [z] to be slow to wrath: meaning, that euery man should striue to restraine the repining of his thoughts, and that tumultuousnesse of his disposition, which is apt to bewray it selfe, when the Word is pressed neere to his soule, and the finger comes to be put vpon his particular sore. Who are wee, that wee should swell at reproofe, when euen Dauid a King, a Prophet, was so to be dealt with? what is thy Fathers House, that thou shouldest snuffe at the aduertisement of a Prophet, when hee which swayeth the Scepter must not be dispensed with? And yet see how flesh and bloud forgets it selfe; and if it be but a little set vp aboue others, forsooth, beware how you come neere it: why should men, because of their place, assume to themselues both more libertie of life, and more exemption from reproofe? so, what a stirre there is with many, many degrees behind Dauid euery way, that they be meant, pointed at, flung at? &c. Alas, if thy soule were sensible of the want of spirituall comfort, thou wouldest then be glad to haue it applyed to thee in particular. Wilt thou haue the sweet of Gods Word, and not the sowre? wouldest thou bee glad of a mild plaister to heale thy rawnesse, and shall not a corsiue for the eating out of thy dead flesh bee welcome to thee? Cast not thou thy thoughts vpon him that speaks, neither be rash to examine his heart, and to iudge of his intents. If he doe that he doth out of by-respects, let him answer it: see thou what thine owne desert is, and what the Word of God is by which thou art spoken to: thou mayst make vse with these circumstances euen of an enemie, and get good by that which is spoken with an ill meaning to despite thee.

x *Heb.*13.22.
y *Matt.*15.23.
z Rom 12.19.

Of the second it followeth. Euen Dauid needed Nathans helpe. The Doctrine is thus,

The third Doctrine.

That there is no man, of what gifts and graces soeuer he be, but in some respect or other, he hath neede of helpe and direction by a faithfull Minister. This is apparant by this present instance. Wee all know what Dauid was; a man of an extraordinarie spirit, a man after Gods owne heart, wiser in many things then his Teachers, the very Mirror of the times wherein he liued; his deeds recorded in holy Scripture, and his writings which wee haue among vs at this day, are pregnant euidences of his speciall worth: yet notwithstanding this, wee see it was necessarie for him to haue a Nathan sent vnto him, to bring him vnto repentance. One might thinke that such an one as Dauid, should haue beene able by his his owne ſtrength and vnderſtanding, to haue recouered the hurt he receiued by this ſinne: but yet Nathans miniſtery was the meanes, and hee himſelfe here (for all ages to enſue) makes that acknowledgement: that we might all know that he was beholding to Nathan for this, and that if it had not beene for him, and the mercie of God, working by him, (to ſpeake of an ordinarie courſe) hee muſt needes haue periſhed in his ſinne. Why (will ſome man ſay) is it likely that Dauid repented not himſelfe of his ſinne, vntill this time that Nathan came vnto him? I anſwere, There is no probabilitie that Dauid ſhould continue, from the time of committing it, vntill this preſent, without any manner of feeling thereof, or without any kinde of remorſe: his conſcience wrought vpon him vpon ſmaller occaſions then this was; as, for the cutting off the [a] lap of SAVLS coate, and for numbring the [b] people. Is it likely that his heart ſhould touch him (as is ſaid) and ſmite him for theſe ſmaller things, and yet that hee ſhould ſwallow vp ſuch a foule matter as this without compunction? No doubt there were moneths betwixt the act, and this reproofe by Nathan. Can it be thought that Dauid vſed not the exerciſe of prayer all that while? and how could he pray, without acknowledgement of ſinne, without begging for forgiueneſſe? and how could he doe this without remembrance of this particular? Why then, if Dauid had remorſe for it, what needed this of Nathan? I anſwere. Firſt, It may well be that Dauid, notwithſtanding ſome feeling and apprehenſion of this euill, yet ſlighted the matter ouer too much, and ſearched not into the depth of it as was meete: hee forgot it too ſoone, and was not ſo thorowly humbled for it, as the caſe required. Secondly, The fault being as it was ſo publique, and ſo ſcandalous; it was neceſſarie, that Dauid ſhould be brought to a more publike acknowledgement; that the ſatisfaction giuen, might bee proportioned to the hurt: many had beene offended, and therefore it was reaſon many ſhould bee ſatisfied. Now to bring Dauid to theſe two ſpecialties: Firſt, of thorow-humbling himſelfe; Secondly, of making an acknowledgement for publike ſatisfaction, Nathans miniſtery was neceſſarie: neither for ought we know, could this haue euer beene effected but by this inſtrument. Gods ſending Nathan to Dauid is an argument, that God would not otherwiſe perfit his repentance. Thus though Dauid knew much, and was himſelfe endewed with a ſpirit of Prophecie, and perhaps in many particulars of ſpirituall vnderſtanding farre exceeded Nathan; yet in this hee ſtood in neede of Nathans helpe: there was a neceſſitie of his hand to plucke him out of this pit. And ſurely, the knowledge which Dauid had hereof, made him to bee ſuch a louer of Gods houſe, and to deſire aboue all things, [c] that all the dayes of his life he might viſite his holy Temple: becauſe hee was ſenſible of this, that albeit he knew much, and read much, and meditated, and wrote much for others vſe, yet hee needed quickning and calling vpon by the publike meanes. And why ſhall we thinke hee kept about him ordinarily this Nathan and Gad (who is termed Dauids Seer) but that they might watch ouer him, and take care of his ſoule, and

ſpeake vnto him from time to time in the name of the Lord. So that it is plaine by this example, that no man can iuſtly pleade any manner of exemption from miniſteriall helpe. In ſome reſpect or other there will bee neede: either to informe one in that hee knoweth not, or to reuiue the memory of that which is forgotten, or to explaine that which is not cleere, or to prouoke to the practice of that which is neglected, or to quicken, or to comfort: ſome vſe or other there will be, be a man neuer ſo excellent, and his gifts neuer ſo exceeding. The commandement of hearing is generall: [d] Let euery man bee ſwift to heare: [e] Let him that hath an eare, heare, &c. there is no manner of limitation, or exception. Paul was perſwaded of the Romans, [f] that they were full of goodneſſe, and filled with all knowledge, and able to admoniſh one another: yet hee thought they had neede of the helpe of his miniſtery: and he commended hearing vnto them, as the meanes for their building vp in [g] faith. The ſame Apoſtle commended the Coloſsians for [h] their faith in Chriſt, and loue towards all Saints: yet euen among them he vrged Archippus to take [i] heede to his miniſtry: an argument that hee thought his miniſtry vſefull euen for them, notwithſtanding their large proceedings in a good profeſſion. And though the [k] Philippians had had fellowſhip in the Goſpell from that very firſt day of their hearing it; yet was Paul carefull to haſten to them their Miniſter Epaphroditus, and willed them that they ſhould [m] receiue him with all gladneſſe, and make much of ſuch. It is a token that their great growth in Religion and Grace, had not freed them from the neceſſitie of dependance vpon that meanes. The mayne reaſon hereof is, Gods ſanctifying of this helpe to this end. God will haue euen the beſt, and the moſt abſolute, to wait vpon his Ordinance, both for their firſt gathering them into the number of his Saints, and for the leading them on along vnto perfection, and vnto the meaſure to which hee hath appointed them to come in Chriſt Ieſus. This being a truth ſo plaine out of the Scripture; it muſt needs bee, that all, ſo long as they liue, ſhall haue cauſe to wait vpon this courſe, yea then when they are come to be [n] of age, and to haue, through long cuſtome, exerciſed wits to diſcerne both good and euill.

The Vſe.

This makes directly againſt their pride, who are ſo well opinioned of their owne good parts, that they thinke they haue no neede of a Miniſtrie to aduertiſe them. There is nothing can be ſaid, but they, forſooth, if you will take their owne words, doe alreadie both fully and ſufficiently vnderſtand it. Sometimes they compare their learning and ſcholerſhip, their reading and wit, with his whole miniſtrie they enioy: and becauſe they imagine, that theirs is the leaſt equall vnto his, therefore howſoeuer for forme and faſhion they may heare, yet it is quite without any deſire, or thought, or purpoſe to bee bettered. I would they would aduiſe well and ſeriouſly vpon this place. Let them aske themſelues, whether they dare any way compare with Dauid, either for learning, or skill in the holy Scripture, or for knowledge in Diuinitie, or for Grace. If they will not preſume to equall themſelues with him, let them learne of him to acknowledge an vſe of a faithfull miniſterie. I doubt not but Dauid thanked God in his time, as much for Nathans comming to him in this caſe, as he euer did for any one particular benefit: and yet out of all queſtion he knew he had ſinned, and that it was not poſſible for him without repentance to be pardoned. Securitie began to ſeyze vpon him, and a wofull deadneſſe had vtterly ouertaken him, had hee not beene quickned and rowzed by this meanes. And it is to bee ſeene in experience, what ſtrange and vnwarrantable courſes, euen many of good gifts and knowledge, runne in their ordinarie conuerſation, whiles they reſt vpon their owne guidance, and relie not in humilitie vpon that hand that God hath ordained for their direction.

This is it wee learne out of this, that it is put downe that Dauid fell to this ſolemne acknowledgement, after Nathan came vnto him: queſtionleſſe it was that we might know, that euen the beſt Chriſtian muſt bee beholding to the helpe and care of a Miniſter, for his ſpirituall furtherance. Somewhat it is like Dauid had done in this matter, but it was nothing to the purpoſe, vntill Nathan had reproued him. Euen the wiſe muſt haue admonition giuen him, [o] that he may be the more wiſe. And whoſo thinks to ſwimme well enough without this Miniſteriall corke, for my part, I can promiſe him no hope not to bee drowned in his owne preſumption. I know no reaſon but Dauid might haue done as well as any man, without this helpe, yet he ſhamed not to acknowledge it, that by it hee was reſcued from that euill which might otherwiſe haue carried him headlong to deſtruction. Thus we haue ſeene, Nathan the Prophet muſt reprooue euen Dauid the King: and it was neceſſarie euen for Dauid to haue ſuch an admoniſher.

o Prou.9.9.

Now followeth the third, That this comming of Nathan was profitable vnto Dauid. The Doctrine here is thus,

The fourth Doctrine.

That words of reproofe are neuer in vaine to a religious heart. In Dauid a man famous for Religion, we may behold the truth of this point. It was much for a King to beare it, that a ſubiect ſhould come vnto him, and tell him to his face, he was a murtherer, and an adulterer, and that God would iudge him. Ahab at the very conceit of ſomewhat likely to be ſpoken to him by Eliah, began to breake out into termes of paſſion, and of diſcontentment; [p] Haſt thou found me, O mine enemie? and for leſſe by farre then this which Nathan ſaid to Dauid, clapt vp poore Micheah into [q] priſon. Dauid other-wiſe: Nathan had no ſooner ended his reproouing, but Dauid began his [r] confeſſing. Thus is the ſaying true: [ſ] Rebuke a wiſe man, and he will loue thee. [t] Teach a righteous man, and he will increaſe in learning. [u] A reproofe entreth more into him that hath vnderſtanding, then a hundred ſtripes into a foole. Such an one conſidereth, that [x] the blueneſſe of the wound, ſerueth to purge away the euill: and that theſe [y] wounds are faithfull. Hee knoweth, that the Miniſter doth by his calling, [z] watch for his ſoule, as one that muſt giue an account: his charge is, and hee is bound to it, [a] to rebuke euen ſharply, [b] and with authoritie. Hee that is perſwaded of this neceſſitie of of rebuking that lieth vpon a Minister, if he doe desire to bee free from the bloud of all men, cannot but with patience entertaine the words of admonition: If hee must doe it (so will his thoughts bee) surely, I must beare it. Hee will also further ponder with himselfe, how as it is true which Dauid saith, that [c] no man can vnderstand all his owne faults, so others, especially a godly Pastor, conscionably obseruing his flocke, may see them better then hee himselfe can. Wee are blind many times in our owne cases, and are not aware of our owne infirmities. It is possible that our Minister may behold more in vs, then wee thinke. It is oftentimes so with vs, that [d] we know not that we doe euill: he that vnderstands this out of the Scripture, and hath found the truth of it in his owne experience, how can he but be glad of an obseruer, and delight in him, that will not suffer sinne to rest vpon him, but will euen plucke him speedily out of the fire into which hee is falling? A man subiect to a disease, though in the generalitie he is desirous and carefull to auoid it, yet in particulars is many times led by his appetite, to eate that which will bring his griefe vpon him, and increase his paine: wisedome now will make him tractable to the aduice of his learned Phisician that sitteth by, and aduiseth him to forbeare. It may be he may be a little tender at the first, being loth to bee withdrawne from that which his appetite is strong to, and which he feeleth to be toothsome; but vpon better aduice, hee will con him thanks that would not suffer him in his owne course. Vpon the same termes, a wise Christian embraceth the counsell of his spirituall Phisician: perhaps it is something harsh at first, because the pleasures of sinne are very bewitching; as euen Asa, numbred among the better Kings of Iudah, was [e] yet wroth with the Seer, and put him in prison: yet at the last, vpon colder bloud, [f] hee shall finde more fauour with him, then he that flattereth with his tongue. Thus I haue giuen sufficient light to this Doctrine.

The Vse.

Here is now an vse for all that heare, that they may know what a notable euidence of wisedome it is, to loue a powerfull and a rebuking Ministry. An excellent thing when a man reioyceth in the hearing of such a Sermon, which is to him like the voice of Nathan here to Dauid (Thou art the man.) When a man in this case goeth away with thankefulnesse to God, that directed the Preachers tongue so to speake to his conscience, it is an argument of much grace, it is a signe euen of the power of Godlinesse. It is a searching, a piercing Ministerie, it speakes to the hid man of mine heart, it is so carried many times, as if it were all on purpose about mee, a very ripping vp of my heart and life; oh I do euen loue it the rather because of this: this is wisedome indeede. It is a token that a man is able to iudge indeede, what is good, what is profitable. How shall wee thinke of them, that doe purposely shrinke and slinke from some preachings, for this cause chiefly, (as their owne soules know) whatsoeuer is pretended, because they are afraid of some touch to their particular sores, they doubt there will bee somewhat brought home something neerer vnto them, then they willingly would. Their profaneneſſe, faneneſſe, their ſenſualitie, their licentiouſneſſe, will be taxed. Thus they had rather their hurt ſhould feſter and corrupt, to their vtter ſpoyle, then to ſtand ſtill a while with patience to endure the dreſſing. Nay, what ſhall bee ſaid of them, whom this faith ull dealing in the diſpenſation of the Word, though it bee carried with neuer ſo great modeſtie and diſcretion, doth turne into a kind of rage, that they become, as Salomon ſaith, like Beares robbed of their whelps? that they become as violent as Ahab to Michaiah, or as Herod to Iohn Baptiſt? they are out of all patience, if there be once a dealing with the maſter ſinne. They bee like a pot ouer the fire, which if it bee not ſtopped, rewards the fire that is put vnder it to make it boyle, with caſting it ſelfe into the face thereof, euen to the putting of it out: ſo they labour to extinguiſh their heate, which ſeeke to kindle in them ſome life of grace. Now if the former bee wiſedome, then ſurely this is folly in the Lords account. No veryer foole, then hee that cannot loue him, by whom hee is holily rebuked for his ſinne. Let vs bee perſwaded then all that heare, to labour for calme and quiet ſpirits, that with meekeneſſe we may receiue the Word, euen then when it ſeemes, becauſe of the carriage of it to vs-ward, to bee moſt ſharpe. Thanke God that did not ſuffer thee to grow careleſſe in thy euill. Pray to God that hee whom thou heareſt, may ſo ſpeake, as that if there bee any ſecret corruption in thee, which thou art not ware of, he may lay it open to thee; or any knowne euill, of which thou haſt not throughly repented thee, hee may preſſe thee to it more effectually. When wee feele our thoughts beginne to be troubled hereabouts, and an aptneſſe to conceiue it as a wrong done to vs to bee ſo vſed, let vs ſtriue to ſuppreſſe that humour: remember, the Speaker doth but his dutie, why ſhould wee not loue him for his faithfulneſſe. It is a faſhion among earthly Princes, when an Herald commeth from another Prince (an enemie) with a meſſage of defiance, with words of challenge, with termes of reproch and obloquie, yet not to vſe violence to the meſſenger, but to commend him for his confidence rather, and not to ſend him away without reward. Hee is but a meſſenger, it is ſaid; and his fidelitie is approued and applauded, though his errand were diſtaſtfull. Why ſhould it not be ſo in this caſe alſo? Remember we are but Embaſſadors, wee muſt neceſſarily deliuer that we are entruſted with, Thus and thus, ſaith God, to ſuch and ſuch. Shall we not bee ſuffered to come and goe with quietneſſe, eſpecially when it is remembred from whom we come, and to what good it tends which is deliuered?

VERS. 1, 2.

Haue merey vpon me, O God, according to thy louing kindneſſe: according to the multitude of thy compaſsions put away mine iniquities.
Waſh me thorowly from mine iniquitie, and clenſe me from my ſinne.

A generall ſuruey of the whole body of the Pſalme.

WE now paſſe from the Title, vnto the bodie of the Pſalme, as from a beautifull Porch, into that goodly building whereunto it appertaines. The Pſalme for the generall nature of it, is a Pſalme of petition. In it Dauid is a ſuter, firſt, for himſelfe in particular, vnto Verſ. 18. then, for the whole Church and people of God in generall. In his ſuite for himſelfe, wee are to conſider, firſt, what he craues; ſecondly, what he promiſeth, in caſe he ſhall be heard in his crauing. Touching the things which he craues, I obſerue them to bee theſe ſixe eſpecially: Firſt, Forgiueneſſe of this particular ſinne, whereof Nathan had reproued him, and ſo of all manner of corruption which was in him, vnto Verſ. 8. Secondly, Aſſurance of this forgiueneſſe, comfortably ſealed vp vnto his ſoule. Thirdly, Sanctification, and an enablement to abſtaine from ſuch ſinnes. Fourthly, Deliuerance from ſuch fearefull teſtimonies of Gods indignation, as were ſometimes inflicted vpon Saul. Fiftly, Reſtitution to that ancient comfort, which hee was wont to feele before hee thus tranſgreſſed. Sixtly, confirmation in good vnto the end. Dauids requeſts here for himſelfe, may very well bee referred to theſe heads. Wee ſhall find theſe things to bee lapt and entwined one within the other. A paſſionate and an affected heart, ſuch as Dauid had in the enditing of this Pſalme, doth not alwaies tie it ſelfe to preciſe rules of method; one particular is ſometimes often inculcated, and the ſame things are againe and againe ſet downe in diuers formes; and one thing is enterlaced with another, and that thing ſpecially inſiſted vpon, towards which the deſire, in reſpect of ſome preſent feeling, is moſt feruent. Let vs ſet our ſelues to follow Dauid in the ſeuerall branches of this Pſalme: and if wee meete with the ſame things once and againe, as wee proceede, let vs impute it to the fulneſſe and feruencie of Dauids ſpirit, and know it to be the Wiſedome of God, by this meanes to make them to ſtrike into our hearts a more deepe impreſſion. Beginne we with the firſt requeſt, propounded in the two firſt Verſes, renued in the 7. and amplified in the 3,4,5,6. with an effectuall acknowledgement of that, which makes him ſo earneſt, and ſo importunate a Petitioner for this thing. The ſubſtance of the firſt requeſt, is the obtaining of Gods gracious fauour, in the full and finall ſinall forgiueneſſe of his ſinnes. In handling whereof, I will draw all to theſe two heads: Firſt, That Dauid ſeekes to God. Secondly, What Dauid ſeekes of God. That he ſeekes to God, it is apparant; the whole Pſalme is a petition directed to his Maieſtie: and it doth very plainely yeeld out vnto vs this Doctrine,

That to flie vnto God, is the onely true way to find comfort, in the time of ſpirituall diſtreſſe. That Dauid was now in ſpirituall diſtreſſe, nothing more manifeſt: euery word in this Pſalme ſauoureth thereof. It was now with him, no doubt, as at another time, when hee ſaith, [a] His heart was vexed, and he was pricked in his reines. His ſoule was ſore troubled, the Lord had wrote bitter things againſt him, and cauſed his ſpirit within him to be full of heauineſſe: He felt nothing but horror in himſelfe, all his ancient feeling of Gods goodneſſe being euen ſwallowed vp with diſmayedneſſe. If euer Dauid was, as Iob ſpeakes of himſelfe, [b] like a leafe driuen to and fro, changes and armies of ſorrowes comming on, ſurely, now it was; neuer at any time in his life was hee more ſenſible of ſinne, and more perplexed with himſelfe what would become of him. Now, who doth not ſee to whom hee turnes himſelfe in this ſtreight; Haue mercy vpon me, O God? &c. as if he had ſaid, To whom ſhall I goe but vnto thee? whither ſhall I conuert mine eyes and mine heart, but vnto thee which dwelleſt in the heauens? to thee, euen to thee will I powre out my meditation, and declare my affliction in thy preſence. And ſhall we thinke that Dauids courſe here was not the true courſe? Is it poſſible that a better ſhould bee thought on? Why then ſhall not this Doctrine bee inforced hence, That the boſome of the Lord, is the only beſt refuge in the day of ſpirituall calamitie? I might by many particular inſtances fetched out of this booke of the Pſalmes, make it plaine, that this was Dauids ordinarie courſe: that one ſpeech of his, [c] I called vpon the Lord in my trouble, is a ſufficient euidence of his conſtancy herein. We may ioyne that to it, Whom haue I in heauen but thee? and I haue deſired none in the earth with [d] thee: my fleſh faileth, and my heart alſo; but God is the ſtrength of my heart, and my portion for euer. [e] It is good for me to draw neere to God. Theſe words teſtifie, that this was ſtill his courſe, to ſeeke the Lord in the time of affliction. Thus Paul being buffeted by the meſſenger of Satan, betooke himſelfe to a beſeeching the [f] Lord: and the word (thrice) is an argument of his frequencie in that dutie, yea euen then, when he felt no preſent ſupply of that comfort which he longed for. Yea, and Chriſt himſelfe in the dayes of his fleſh, bearing the weight of our ſinnes, ſought reliefe, by offering vp prayers and ſupplications with ſtrong cryes and teares vnto [g] God. Conſider wee a little how many motiues and encouragements there bee for this dutie.

doe exceeding aboundantly aboue all that wee aske, &c. Fourthly, [m] Hee is readie both to bee found, and to afford that which is desired: [n] Mercy pleaseth him. [o] Hee is neere vnto all that call vpon him. Fiftly, Because hee would haue all his diligent in this course, hee hath furnished them with the Spirit of prayer; [p] Because they are sonnes, hee hath sent forth the Spirit of his Sonne into their hearts, which crieth, Abba, Father: and hath appointed that [q] Spirit to be an helpe to their infirmities. What can be more strong to confirme the necessitie of a dutie then these things? If God will haue it so, God will certainely giue a blessing to it when it is so: [r] They shall not be ashamed that wait for him. As, the Lord himselfe neither fainteth, [s] nor is wearie; so [t] he giues strength vnto him that fainteth; and vnto him that hath no strength, hee increaseth power. Wee shall bee neuer able to find an example, of so much as one that tooke this course in vaine: rather, when we haue viewed all that haue gone this way, we shall haue cause to take vp the words of the Psalme, [u] These called vpon the Lord, and hee heard them. Indeede who is it, but the Lord, by whose holy prouidence come to passe all, whether outward or spirituall afflictions? [x] These things come not out of the dust, neither spring they from the earth: doth not both euill and good, in their kinds, [y] proceede from out of the mouth of the most High? Now what greater error, then not to [z] turne vnto him that smites? and who shall bind vp the wound, but hee [a] which made it? It is hee which hath spoyled, [b] and it is hee which must heale: hee brings downe to the graue; and [c] hee must raise vp againe. These things may suffice for the cleering of this Doctrine.

The 1. Vse.

First, this is to reproue the common neglect of this dutie. It should be of right the first thing in practice, when sorrowes and griefes assaile: but it is most vnworthily reiourned into the last place, and scarsly done, till a kind of necessitie and failing in other courses hath enforced vs. Men haue a fooliſh hope to deceiue their inward anguish, by I know not what by-imployments; as Saul thought to allay the vexation of his soule by [d] musike. Thus gaming, and taling, and reading of merry stories, are supposed to bee excellent medicines against spirituall qualmes. But (alas) they are but as the [e] reede of Egypt, spoken of, which doth not onely breake into pieces when it is leaned on, but in breaking flieth into splinters, to the piercing of the hand of him that trusted to it. These things doe both disappoint the hope of him that relieth on them, and in the end tend to the improouement of his woe; in as much as the distresse of the soule, being a little put by therewith for the present, returneth againe with the greater force. A draught of cold water, taken by a man heated with the violence of a burning feuer, seemeth in the tasting thereof, somewhat to allay his inward fire; but scarcely is the cup gone from his mouth, before he feeleth an increase of his broyling drought. Thus are these outward comforts to an agrieued soule, for all the world like money taken vp vpon hard conditions, to discharge some present debt vpon an arrest; which howsoeuer it deliuereth e 2.Kin.18.21.

uereth at the preſent from the hand of the Baylifs, and from going to the Priſon; yet it bites deeper at the laſt, and makes the wound to which it was applyed as a plaiſter, to gape a great deale wider then at firſt. A man in hazzard of drowning, catcheth at euery thing hee feeles; the very ſtrawes and looſe reede that ſwimmeth on the water, he layeth hand on, out of an hope thereby to ſaue his life: what getteth hee in the end but matter of entanglement? both he and his imaginarie helps are ſuddenly deuoured of the waues. Thus is the vanitie of all courſes, ſaue of this of ſeeking God. All truſting in them is but like confidence in an vnfaithfull man, as [f] a broken tooth: things which doe then deceiue, when they ſhould doe moſt ſeruice. Thus is the firſt Vſe for reproofe. The true courſe is leaſt thought vpon. Men therein ſhew themſelues as fooliſh as hee, of whom the Orator, His head is diſtempered, and hee neglecting that, is very buſie about a ſmall wheale, or blind puſh in his finger.

f Pro.25.19.

Qui cum capiti mederi debeat, reliquam curat.

Secondly, to prouoke to an imitation of Dauid in this. Art thou in Dauids caſe, caſt downe with the feeling of thy ſinnes? haue the arrowes of the Lord light vpon thee, ſo that the venom thereof doe euen drinke vp [g] thy ſpirit, and doe the terrors of God fight againſt thee? Art thou ſo oppreſſed, that it ſeemeth to thee that if thy ſtrength were the ſtrength of ſtones, or thy fleſh as braſſe, yet thou ſhouldeſt haue no power to endure? What ſhalt thou now doe in this caſe, but with Dauid turne thy ſelfe towards heauen, and ſay, [h] Heare, O Lord, and haue mercie vpon me, Lord be thou mine helper. [i] Be vnto me a ſtrong rocke, and an houſe of defence to ſaue me. [k] Make thy Face to ſhine vpon thy ſeruant, and ſaue me through thy mercie. Surely, this is the onely way, which will bring a man peace at the laſt. There is no ſurer argument of the worth of this courſe then this, that the Deuill laboureth by all meanes with Gods Children in the day of temptation, to breede in them a lothneſſe and vntowardneſſe to this dutie. He will muſter together many diſcouragements, to auert the minde from this important ſeruice. He will make a man beleeue, that becauſe of the dulneſſe of his ſpirits, and the confuſion of his thoughts, and the wandring of his imaginations, and the corruption of his heart, hee ought not to come into the preſence of God: God will not heare him whiles his eſtate is thus. And then, if (as it ſometimes falls out) hee hath prayed, and findes no preſent eaſe thereby, but (perhaps) is more perplexed then before; then he takes aduantage thereby, the more to alienate and eſtrange the affection from this duty: and all becauſe hee knowes, what a remedie this is againſt the ſoules diſtreſſe, and what great redemption there is with the Lord for all that waite vpon him. Whoſoeuer therefore thou art, whoſe ſoule God either now hath, or hereafter ſhall humble, with the apprehenſion and feeling of thy ſinnes, ſo that thou art ſenſible of the want of ſpirituall refreſhing, and of inward ſettlement, let nothing hinder from this dutie. Bee aſſured that all thoſe reaſons which preſent themſelues vnto thee, to keepe thee back herein they are the very ſuggeſtions of the Deuill, and thou pleaſeſt none but him in yeelding to them: ſay thou doe it (as thou thinkeſt) abruptly, and confuſedly, and with the comming betweene of many euill and vnfitting motions, yet doe it ſtill: wherefore hath God promiſed his Spirit but to helpe infirmities? It is poſſible that the more thou prayeſt, the more thou mayeſt bee vexed.

l Pſal.77.3. I thought vpon God, and was troubled, ſaith the Pſalmiſt: and, l I prayed, and my ſpirit was full of anguiſh: here the meanes of comfort wrought (as might ſeeme) diſcomfort, yet he went on notwithſtanding. Get thee therefore to the Lord howſoeuer it bee; and as Hezekiah, when hee had receiued the rayling Letter brought by Rabſhakeh from the King of Aſſyria, m 2.Kin.19.14. m went into the Houſe of the Lord, and ſpred it there before the Lord: ſo doe thou out of the abundance of thy griefe powre out thy ſoule, and what thou art not able to expreſſe in words, make it vp by ſighes and p Pſal.66.20. Dauid, p Praiſed be the Lord, which hath not put backe my prayer, nor kept his mercy from me. Only let me adioyne this, that in ſeeking the Lord for comfort, thou be carefull withall to vſe all meanes which God hath ſanctified, to bring to paſſe that which thou prayeſt for: otherwiſe thy prayers are but mockery. With praying thou muſt couple a dependance vpon the Word and the Miniſtrie thereof, as Dauid wayted vpon the mouth of Nathan, that by whom hee had beene reproued, by him hee

q Iſa.57.19. might alſo be releeued. q God hath created the fruit of the lips to be peace, and hath giuen to his Miniſters a tongue of the learned, that they ſhould

r Iſa.50.4. know how r to miniſter a word in time to him that is weary. God is not ſought aright, if this meanes be neglected: neither will he heare the prayers which are offered to him in the careleſſe vſe of this helpe. Moſes at the comming of the Amalekites fell to prayer, yet he commanded Ioſhua, to s Exod.17.9. choole out men to fight with s Amalek: and ſo it muſt bee in ſpirituall things. God muſt be ſought by prayer, and the courſe followed in obedience, which he hath ordayned for the conuaying of that to vs, to which our prayers ayme. And thus of the firſt; Dauid in his ſpirituall diſtreſſe ſought the Lord. This is the true courſe, if wee deſire comfort: other courſes may put by the violence of our inward anguiſh for a time, but all will turne to greater bitterneſſe in the end.

Now it followeth more ſpecially what Dauid ſought: It is manifeſt, that his ſinnes might be pardoned. Here wee haue theſe points to treate vpon, Firſt, The excellency of pardon. Secondly, The nature of it. Thirdly, The ground of it. Fourthly, The condition of that which muſt be pardoned. Of the firſt, thus I ſet downe,

The ſecond Doctrine. That the mercy of God in the pardon of ſinne, is a bleſſing of exceeding worth. We may conclude this out of the earneſtneſſe of Dauid in deſiring it. Hee is exceeding paſſionate and importunate, both here in the beginning, and after in the courſe of the Pſalme, for the obtayning of this grace: as if he thought all things elſe to bee but vile and baſe in reſpect of this one thing: O Lord, I am now in great diſtreſſe, my fleſh trem- trembleth for feare of thee, and I am afraid of thy iudgements: Oh, that thou wouldest haue mercy vpon me in the washing away of mine iniquities, and in the blotting out of my sinnes! what can I take contentment in whiles I want this, or what shall be able to discourage me when I haue this? Take notice, I pray you, of a few particulars tending to the declaration of this truth, touching the valuing of Forgiuenesse. There be foure speciall prerogatiues with which God hath endowed his Church; and they are, as it were, the Royalties of it, and by them the Church of Christ is far more glorious and excellent, then any other societie, or company whatsoeuer. These foure priuiledges are set downe together in the latter end of the Creede, and the forgiuenesse of sinnes, is one of them. Hereto agreeth the Scripture. Concerning the Church: [t] The people that dwell therein, saith the Prophet, shall haue their iniquitie forgiuen. So among the fauours conferred vpon Iacob and Israel (by which termes the Church of God is meant) this is reckoned: [u] I haue put away thy transgressions like a cloud, and thy sinnes as a mist. It is one speciall branch of the new Couenant betwixt God and his people: [x] I will forgiue their iniquitie, and will remember their sinnes no more. DAVID placeth the happinesse of man in the pardon of sinne: [y] Blessed is he whose wickednesse is forgiuen, and whose sinne is couered. Saluation stands [z] in the remission of sinnes. Nothing so hatefull in the sight of God, as the man whose sinnes are vnpardoned: were he as beautifull as Absalom, in [a] whose body there was no blemish: as rich as Nabal, who [b] made a feast at his sheepe-shearing like a King: as gloriously apparelled as [c] Herod: as absolute in command as AHASHVEROSH, [d] who ruled ouer an hundred and seuen and twentie Prouinces: as stately seated for dwelling, as [e] NEBVCHADNEZZER in his royall Palace in Babel: as politike as Achitophel, who [f] counselled like as one had asked counsell at the Oracle of God: as gracious in Court as HAMAN, [g] the second in a Kingdome; yet wanting this grace of the pardon of sinne, [h] He shall perish like the beasts: he [i] shall be kept vnto the day of destruction, and be brought forth vnto the day of wrath. On the other side, were one as much afflicted as Iob, who was [k] smitten with sore byles from the sole of his foote vnto his crowne: as hard bestead as Lazarus, who lay looking for the reuersion of anothers [l] Trencher: as much perplexed as he, who [m] ate ashes as bread, and mingled his drinke with weeping: as much scorned as Dauid, when [n] the drunkards sang of him; yet hauing his sinnes forgiuen him, [o] God the Father, and his Sonne Christ will come vnto him, and dwell with him: his [p] conscience within him shall be a continuall feast: during his life here, he shall be to the Lord, as [q] the apple of his eye: his very [r] haires shall be numbred: in the end, his [s] death shall be precious: his [t] soule shall be conueyed by Angels into ABRAHAMS bosome: that [u] where Christ is, there he may be also: [x] euen at Gods right hand, where there is fulnesse of ioy, and pleasures for euermore. No maruell that Christ told this to the poore palsie-man, who was brought before him vpon the backs of foure men; [y] Man, thy sinnes are forgiuen thee: as if he had said, Thou camest to me for a blessing; behold, here here the greateſt that God can beſtow: with this hee would alſo reward the z Luk.7.48. humiliation of her that waſhed his feete with her teares, z Thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee. Doubtleſſe the gift of that which the Deuill offered vnto Chriſt, all the Kingdomes of the world, and the glorie of them, could not haue giuen her halfe the contentment that this did: her ſoule was ſatisfied, as with marrow and fatneſſe, at this word: and Dauid at this time, mought he haue had his choiſe what to aske, and what to obtaine, no doubt he would rather haue had one little drop of mercy, and one ſyllable of aſſurance that his ſinne was forgiuen him, then all that euer the world was able to afford. Thus may wee bee ſatisfied in ſome meaſure concerning this point, The worth and dignitie of forgiueneſſe. The ſoule of Dauid at this preſent, valued this one thing aboue all. All things elſe were euen vile and baſe before him, in regard of this one bleſſing. The addition of a new Kingdome to his preſent greatneſſe, the ſetting of ſuch another crowne vpon his head; as that which Ioab tooke from the b 1.Sam.18.25. would giue him his b daughter: I ſay, no ſuch things would haue ſauoured ought with him, reſpectiuely to this. Neuer did he ſo long for the water of the Well of Bethlehem, as for this: neuer did any poore Hart bray for the Riuers of waters, as his ſoule panted for this fauour.

The Vſe. Wherefore is this ſpoken, or to what vſe ſhould all this be put, but to kindle in vs a deſire of this bleſſing? Oh, that we could feelingly grone out this requeſt euery day at the Throne of grace; Haue mercy vpon me, O God, according to thy louing kindeneſſe, &c. Lord, how much adoe is here in the world for many things! one would bee rich, another would bee honourable, another would be braue: this is for pleaſure, and that for profit: vouchſafe me this one bleſsing, and let them take all the reſt for mee. Let mee be poore, deſpiſed, ſcorned, the very off-ſcouring of men, let mee liue like a Pellican in the wilderneſſe, or like an Owle in the Deſart: any thing, good Lord, ſo that my ſinnes may bee pardoned. How are our ſoules acquainted with theſe deſires, what are our affections, and what is our feeling when this is ſpoken of? If wee labour not to come after Dauid in this kind of petitioning, ſurely, better it had beene for vs, if wee had neuer beene borne. I remember the challenge made of old, c Iſa.55.2. Why doe wee lay out ſiluer, and not for bread? and our labour without being ſatisfied? why are we ſo eager about thoſe baſer things, and ſo careleſſe about that which moſt concernes vs? Wee ſeeke the things which can auaile vs little, vnleſſe it be to make it a matter of more hardneſſe for vs to be ſaued: but wee regard not that which alone of it ſelfe can make vs happie. Wealth is laboured for, Pleaſure is hunted after, Sinne is taken thought for how it may be cheriſhed, Reuenge is ſtudied about how it may bee furthered, Pride is cared for how it may bee maintayned; but among all, forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is ſcarſly thought vpon. Our owne hearts ſhall be iudges of the truth of that I ſay, how ſeldome this comes into our minds with any ſeriouſneſſe, and how little it is laboured in: what ſhould wee thinke to bee the reaſon of this neglect? Surely, it is eaſie to determine: men are not aware of the grieuouſneſſe and danger of their ſinnes. If men knew what it were, to haue many bills of particular ſinnes, hanging vpon record againſt them, as it were vpon the file, in the Lords high Court of Iuſtice, and what a terrible matter it is, to be arraigned at the barre, and out of a ſtraight reckoning of iniquities to be called to a ſtrict account; oh, how their bellies would tremble, in their ignorance and ſuſpence of pardon! how they would like the entangled ſuretie, to whom Salomon giues aduice, [d] giue no ſleepe to their eyes, nor ſlumber to their eye-lids, till they had againe and againe plyed the Mercy-ſeat of God with this reiterated requeſt, Haue mercie vpon mee, O God, according to thy louing kindneſſe: according to the multitude of thy compaſsions, put away mine iniquities! Waſh mee thorowly from mine iniquitie, and cleanſe me from my ſinne. Me thinks a man ſhould euen feare to let the temples of his head take any reſt in the omiſſion of this dutie, leſt his breath ſhould depart, and he returne vnto his earth, before hee had made his peace with God by petition of pardon. Let vs reſolue now to labour with our ſelues, to value this bleſſing as it is. Wee would eaſily bee perſwaded, if wee vnderſtood out of perſonall experience, what it were to haue a wounded ſpirit. He that feeles the ſting of ſinne, oh, what would hee giue for a pardon! hee that can ſay with DAVID, [e] Mine iniquities are gone ouer mine head, and as a waightie burthen, they are too heauie for me; hee will ſoone fall vpon his knees with Dauid, and ſmite on his breſt with the Publican, [f] God bee mercifull to mee a ſinner. In harkning to this exhortation, touching ſeeking for the mercy of God in the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, I pray let vs beware how wee deceiue our ſelues, in imagining that by ſome formall and curſorie words and geſtures, wee ſhall doe that which is now perſwaded. I know there is a generall deſire of Gods mercy herein among men: and what more ordinary, then for men to beſprinkle ouer their groſſe ſinnes with ſome ſuch words of courſe, as, Lord, forgiue me; I crie God mercy, what a beaſt am I to doe ſo, &c? which when they haue done, they thinke themſelues as ſafe as Salomons ſtrumpet, [g] That hath wiped her mouth, and ſaith, ſhee hath committed no iniquitie. No, it is another manner of piece of ſeruice, this which I now perſwade. The true valuing of forgiueneſſe and mercy, proceeds out of a liuely vnderſtanding of ones owne guilt, out of a feeling knowledge of the fouleneſſe of ſinne, out of a ſenſible apprehenſion of the Maieſtie of GOD. Theſe flaſhing motions which breede no care to auoid ſinne, nor conſtancie in vſing the meanes to obtaine forgiueneſſe, are farre from that which we are taught out of Dauids practice. It is the hungrie ſoule that can beſt iudge of the worth of foode. It is he which lyeth ſicke vpon his couch, and not able to ſtirre for weakeneſſe, that can tell the worth of health. When thy ſoule is payned with the horror of ſinne, then thou wilt be fit to apprehend the truth of this Doctrine, and then thou wilt neede but little quickning to this kind of ſuite. Thus is the firſt thing obſeruable out of that which Dauid ſought. The ſumme of his requeſt is the pardon of ſinne: no doubt, an excellent thing, which Dauid in this caſe made choiſe to begge aboue all: when wee come once to feele what Dauid did, our requeſt will bee the ſame that Dauids was. To a ſoule feeling the ſmart of ſinne, nothing ſo ſweet as the forgiueneſſe of ſinne. If wee bee dull in this particular, wee haue cauſe to ſuſpect our ſelues to haue but little grace. Thus in generall: now more ſpecially touching this that wee call forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, what it is: thus is the Doctrine,

The third Doctrine.

That in forgiuing of ſinne, there is an vtter aboliſhment on Gods part, of the guilt of ſinne. I gather this thus; Dauid crauing forgiueneſſe, craueth it vnder the termes of putting away, of waſhing thorowly, and of clenſing. The firſt word, is, Put away, or as it is now in our reuiewed Tranſlations more preciſely out of the Originall, Blot out: ſo that forgiueneſſe of ſins is, as it were, the wiping out of a Score, or the croſſing of a debt-Booke: all is quite razed out, as if it had neuer beene. The ſecond is, Waſh thorowly: ſuch a rinſing and ſcouring Dauid prayed for, as may leaue behinde no remembrance of the fouleneſſe; and the ſame is in the intent of the word cleanſe. All together ſhew, that ſinne is then pardoned, when God ſo accounts it, as if it had neuer beene committed: the Booke is croſt, the Reckoning is cleered, the Spot is ſcoured quite out, there is no more to be laid to the charge of him that is diſcharged.

To confirme this, we may obſerue, how that in Scripture, where forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is ſpoken of, ſuch phraſes of ſpeech are vſed, as betoken the ſame that I haue ſaid, euen an abſolute riddance, and a finall aboliſhment. Dauid [h] termes it a couering of ſinne: that is, a hiding it out of the way, in ſuch ſort as that it ſhall neuer come to light: againe, a not imputing it; that is, an accounting it, as if the party offending neuer had committed it. Iſaiah calls it, [i] a putting tranſgreſſion away like a cloud, and ſinnes as a miſt: when a miſt or cloud is diſpelled and diſperſed with the winde, it is ſo diſſipated and diſſolued, that it appeares no more, and can neuer come againe together as it was. Hezekiah in his prayer phraſeth it, [k] a caſting all our ſinnes behind the backe: as if they were ſo purpoſely diſpoſed, as they neuer after ſhould be looked vpon. Micah,* to make the matter full, calls it, a ſubduing of iniquities, a kind of treading them vnder foote, and a caſting them into the bottome of the Sea, where they are quite buried, neuer to be brought into any further queſtion. [l] I will forgiue their iniquitie, and remember their ſinnes no more: there the latter clauſe expounds the former: to forgiue, is to remember no more: that is, neuer to call that to account which is once remitted. [m] The iniquitie of Iſrael ſhall be ſought for, and there ſhall be none, &c. ſo is forgiueneſſe deſcribed. All theſe places confirme this point. Now, I ſaid in ſetting downe the Doctrine, that this aboliſhment is only of the guilt of ſin: for, as for ſinne it ſelfe, God leaues it in part to remayne euen in the beſt, and the worke of Sanctification is not ſtraight-way perfited; but Iuſtification, cation, which by the Apoſtles doctrine ſtands [n] in forgiueneſſe, that is a thorow-worke. Where God forgiues, he remits wholly, and will neuer puniſh for that which is once remitted.

n Rom.4.6.

This is firſt, againſt Papiſts, who albeit they acknowledge ſuch a matter as the pardon of ſinne, and doe teach their Penitents ſometimes the vſe of ſome part of this Pſalme, yet they imagine and maintayne Forgiueneſſe to be ſuch a thing, in which God remitteth but in part: the fault he is content to diſcharge, but the penaltie, they ſay, not ſo; but he reſerues that to be ſatisfied for here in part, and part in Purgatorie. This to them hath proued a gainefull Doctrine: for, vnder a pretext of ſatisfying for the temporall puniſhment of ſinne, creepe in all thoſe gifts and offerings, and large bequeaths, by which their Reuenues are augmented, and their purſes filled. How can this opinion ſtand with the nature of Forgiueneſſe, according as it is deſcribed in the Scripture? If all bee pardoned, what is there behind to bee ſatisfied for? If there bee ſome ſatisfaction expected on our part, how is that forgiueneſſe abſolute? How doth God remember the ſinne no more, if after his remitting it, hee ſhall call it againe to a new account? The maine thing which is ſtood vpon for the vpholding of this opinion, is, that wee find in experience, how men whom God pardoneth, are notwithſtanding exerciſed with many croſſes and afflictions of diuers kinds, which they account to bee inflicted by God, that they who endure them, may make thereby ſome kind of ſatisfaction to his Maieſty: and they vrge in particular that which befell him of whom we now treat (euen Dauid) who howſoeuer he was receiued into grace vpon his repentance for his great offence, yet there was ſomewhat behind for him to endure: the child begotten in adultery dyed, and he was plagued many waies, as in the inceſt of Amnon and Abſalom, and was a man full of ſorrowes all his dayes. But the anſwer hereunto is eaſie: by learning to put a difference betwixt a puniſhment, and a correction. It is true, that God layeth many things on his deareſt children, notwithſtanding he hath pardoned them; but yet they are no puniſhments or curſes properly, but rather ſuch chaſtiſements wherein God offereth himſelfe vnto them as vnto [o] children. Death ſeizeth vpon the Elect of God after their admiſſion into grace, yet not as a iudgement or penaltie, as it was firſt inflicted, but as a paſſage vnto life: ſo they are liable to afflictions, but not as to curſes, but as to trials for the perfiting of their repentance, and for the exerciſing of their faith, and for the preuenting of their after-falls: God inflicts them rather as furtherances of ſanctification, then as meanes of ſatisfaction. When God iudgeth his in this world, It is more, ſaith CHRYSOSTOME, for a medicine, then for a puniſhment, more for a correction, then a penaltie. Thus this Doctrine may ſhew vs the failing of Popery in a maine point touching the nature of Faith. The Scripture teſtifieth plainely that God remits all, both guilt and penaltie; they ſay, God reſerues the temporall puniſhment to be ſatisfied for by our ſelues. Surely, Dauids ayme in this ſute was, that God would not at all count with him either for

for this or any ſinne. He knew well, that if he ſhould bee once vrged to giue ſatisfaction to the Iuſtice of God out of his owne performances, he ſhould neuer be able to endure it. The Popiſh opinion of ſatisfaction cleaues cloſe to our nature, and there is an aptneſſe in vs, to thinke by ſome act of ours, to make ſome kind of amends for the things wee haue done amiſſe in: wee can ſoone perſwade our ſelues to bee able to outwaigh, as it were, our euill deeds by our better; whereas all that euer we can doe, is not the halfe of that which we are bound to performe: and it were ſtrange, if one by paying one debt, ſhould be able to diſcharge another. What good can I doe, which I am not abſolutely and peremptorily bound to doe? and if it be my duty, how ſhall that bee of force to ſatisfie the Iuſtice of God for the things wherein I haue miſcarried? Thoſe errours both in Popery, and in common opinion, proceeded from the ignorance of the true nature of Forgiueneſſe. Let the pardon of ſinne be rightly vnderſtood, there is nothing remaines for man to ſatisfie, where God hath giuen a diſcharge.

2. Vſe. Secondly, this Doctrine is of great comfort to that ſoule, which out of the feeling of ſinne, hath beene brought to a deſire and a longing for Forgiueneſſe: what better newes to him that trembleth in his heart to thinke vpon his account, and quakes at the remembrance of Gods Iuſtice, then to be told that as God, to whom he is perſwaded to returne, is ready to forgiue, ſo the Forgiueneſſe which hee grants is abſolute? there are no more after-callings when he hath once wiped out the Score in the bloud of his Sonne: there is not the leaſt ſcrip of the Bill kept in hand for any ſecond demand, when once the Bond is cancelled. Gods dealing is not like ſome cruell Creditors, who when they haue receiued all that is due, yet keepe backe the Obligation, and put the poore Debter in feare to bee taken at aduantage, notwithſtanding his payment. No, his courſes herein are effectuall: he neuer entreth an Action againſt him, for whom he hath once accepted the ſatisfaction of his Sonne: I ſay not but God is pleaſed to carry the matter ſo towards his, as that they are mooued to be ſuters for Forgiueneſſe often; not becauſe he hath a meaning to recall that which he hath once done, but hee may thereby make their humiliation perfit, and their aſſurance of his fauour in forgiuing them more complete. Dauid, no doubt, knew ere this, the ſweetneſſe and comfort of Forgiueneſſe; yet now a new ſinne gaue a new wound to his ſoule: and the Lord brought him afreſh to bee a petitioner for this grace, to the end that hee might eſteeme yet more, and feele the benefit of it more effectually. Hereupon is it, that though our Creede teach a poſſibilitie to be aſſured of Forgiueneſſe in the words, I beleeue, which imploy more then a conceit of ſuch a thing; yet the Lords Prayer binds to be petitioners for it euery day: not becauſe it is poſſible for it to bee reuoked, but becauſe it is neceſſary for vs to haue it more and more confirmed, and to increaſe in the certainty of it euery day. Thus touching the nature of Forgiueneſſe: and ſo this ſecond point giues light to the former: for by how much the more abſolute and finall Forgiueneſſe is, by ſo much the more doth it deſerue account. Now

Now followeth the ground of Forgiueneſſe: Mercy, louing kindneſſe, multitude of compaſsion. Here two things: Firſt, Gods mercy is the ground of Forgiueneſſe. Secondly, The condition and qualitie of this mercy. Concerning the firſt, thus is the Doctrine,

The fourth Doctrine.

That man hath no plea, but the freedome of Gods grace, in making ſute for the pardon of his ſinnes. DAVID, wee ſee, mentioneth nothing of his owne, either paſt or to come, by which to perſwade the Lord to that which he intreats. Among men, a man hauing offended, may ſay ſomething in this kinde for himſelfe; as, Though I haue done you wrong in this, yet you may remember that in ſuch or ſuch a particular, you haue beene beholding to mee: I haue done you theſe and theſe good offices, and I may (you know) hereafter make you amends with aduantage. And thus Paul in perſwading Philemon to entertayne Oneſimus, and to remit his running away, and his theft, might plead, that howſoeuer hee had beene vnprofitable, yet for hereafter he might be more for his [p] behoofe. There is no ſuch pleading with God. Dauid dares not mention any of his former good carriages, as an inducement to God, to ſhew fauour to him; neither doth hee giue hope of any future ſatisfaction; but all his whole plea is mercy, he hath no hope but in the louing kindneſſe of God; without the multitude of the Lords compaſsion, hee hath no manner of conceit to be forgiuen: Dauid acknowledgeth himſelfe to lye wholly at the mercy of God: Lord, I know, that if thou ſhouldeſt adiudge me preſently to hell for this fact, I ſhould haue no cauſe to complaine: it were but right with thee ſo to vſe me. I dare not ſtand to the triall of thy Iuſtice. It is thy mercy, Lord, euen the multitude of thy mercy I appeale to. It is thy gracious Court of Chancery and mitigation which I flie vnto: I am afraid to appeare at the Bench of Iuſtice. Thus in Dauid we ſee what is the plea of a ſinner; Mercy, Lord, according to thy louing kindneſſe, according to the multitude of thy compaſsions. The prodigall ſonne in his returne to his Father, what was he but the patterne of a ſinner ſuing here, like Dauid, for Forgiueneſſe? And doth he make any little ſhew of relying vpon any thing, but the kindneſſe of his father? he doth not ſo much as ſtudie the mitigation of his fault, or goe about to feede his father with faire promiſes of applying himſelfe to his ſeruice for the time to come, though (no doubt) he was apt enough in that behalfe; but he caſts himſelfe vpon his fathers fauour, he ſaith the worſt he can againſt himſelfe, and hath no hope, but that the affection of his father ſhall preuaile againſt his ſinne. How excellent and how full are the words of the Pſalmiſt to this purpoſe: [q] If thou, O Lord, ſtraightly marke ſt iniquities, O Lord, who ſhall ſtand? But mercy is with thee: ſo if thou take vs to the hardeſt, there is no poſſibilitie for vs to eſcape: what then, where is the hope? Oh, there is mercy with thee. This is our comfort. Of this truth was Ezra ſenſible in that memorable confeſſion of his (often made [r] vſe of;) all his whole prayer argueth, as a deſire of Forgiueneſſe, ſo a hopeleſneſſe to obtaine it but in mercy: Our Iniquities (ſaith hee) [ſ] are increaſed ouer our head, &c. and now, our God, [t] what ſhall wee ſay after this? As if he had ſaid, We haue

haue nothing to alledge for our selues, why thou shouldest shew fauour to vs, [u] we are before thee in our trespasse, and we cannot stand before thee, because of it. Here is altogether a renouncing of all hope at home. Note wee Daniel in his prayer for the returne of the people from captiuity: [x] Wee doe not present our supplication before thee for our owne righteousnesse, but for thy great tender mercies. O Lord heare, O Lord forgiue, O Lord consider and doe it: [y] deferre not for thine owne sake. What obtestations are here, what importunate intreaties, and all grounded vpon grace, all accompanied with an absolute disclayming of all, sauing only the goodnesse of the Lords Nature? I remember how Paul handling the point of the freedome of the iustification of a sinner onely out of grace, confirmes it by that speech of [z] Dauid: as who would say, The very nature of Forgiuenesse is such, as it argueth the whole that is done, to proceed from the grace, and kindnesse, and compassion of the Pardoner. It is not properly Forgiuenesse, if it flow not wholly out of fauour. Indeed suppose man had this offer made him, to deuise some other thing besides the Mercie and Grace of God, by which to further his suite for pardon; what can we imagine it should bee? It must necessarily be somewhat either in himselfe, or in some other creature. In himselfe what shall he find, for the sake whereof hee may looke for respect? His naturall estate, what is it but corruption? [a] His heart is wicked: [b] his mind and conscience is defiled. There is not an imagination in him, that is other then [c] onely-euill; nor a member about him which is better then a very [d] weapon of vnrighteousnesse. His case, in respect of his customary practice, wherein is it better; considering that [e] he drinks iniquitie like water? [f] How can he bring any cleane thing out of his naturall filthinesse? Take him at the best, being conuerted and turned to the state of grace, yet euen then [g] the flesh lusteth in him against the Spirit: and that righteousnesse which is in him being mingled with so much corruption, is [h] but as a filthy clout: [i] when he hath done all, he is but an vnprofitable seruant; he hath done no more then his duty. Shall hee now find any thing in himselfe, and in his owne store, which he may bee bold to present vnto God, and say, Lord, I pray thee for the sake of this, yet be kind vnto me? Well, when he is put out of all hope by any thing of his owne, shall he be able to supply himselfe else-where, or contest with God by the name and merit of others, the regard of whom may preuaile with God as much or more then his owne goodnesse? The condition of the Angels is happy, their perfection great, their fauour with God as full as they can desire: but where haue we warrant to plead in their names? what word of promise, that for their sakes God will cast vpon vs an eye of grace? or what haue they done, or can they doe more then they are bound vnto?

The same may be said touching those spirits of iust and perfit men, who now rest from their labours, hauing serued their time. Where hath God said, that being importuned by vs, either by his regard to them, or by the worth of their deeds, he will be the rather mooued to respect vs?

So

So then, when all is well considered, to this wee shall bee driuen in the end, euen to catch (as it were) at the hornes of the Altar, and in the renouncing of all else, to make the multitude of compassions to become our only plea.

This point, as it ouerthroweth all Doctrine of Merit, (for what of ours shall come in plea, when kindnesse and compassion are the onely hope euen of the best?) so it specially teacheth vs how to demeane our selues in our petitions for Forgiuenesse. It is a commendable vse amongst vs, to haue books of Presidents for Law cases; and to haue formes according to which to draw vp Declarations, Petitions, and such like Bils. Behold here a notable President, for him that hath a Sute into the great Court of Requests, and purposeth to frame a Petition for a Pardon. A man cannot doe better, then to cast his purpose herein into this mould; it will surely please the Lord best, when it is presented to him in this shape. The more thou accusest thy selfe, the more thou disclaymest thy selfe, the more thou shewest thy selfe hopelesse in regard of thy selfe, the more thou doest, as it were, adiure and importune God by his louing kindnesse, and by the multitude of his compassions, as witnessing thy hopelesnesse without it; the sooner shalt thou bee heard, the more speedy accesse shall thy prayers haue, and the more gracious successe. If wee would sue aright for Pardon, labour wee to know the neede of mercy, labour wee to vnderstand the depth and infiniteness of mercy, that wee may euer cast our selues into that bottomelesse gulfe, our being swallowed vp wherein, shall be our onely sauegard. Let mercy bee the maine ground of our whole petition: our Introduction and inducement to bee Suters, mercy, the substance of our Request, mercy, and the conclusion and scope, mercy: we are bold to come before him, because hee is mercifull; wee are earnest Petitioners to him, that to our feeling and sense he would be mercifull; and our drift is, that wee may bee able to his glorie to declare him to bee mercifull. Thus mercy being our plea, mercy will bee our recompence: God cannot but shew mercy, where the need of mercy is felt, and the desire of mercy is vnfayned, and when the sute for mercy is importunate. And thus this point makes way to the next, touching the nature of Gods Mercy, that we may conceiue aright how to relie vpon it in our neede.

The

The fourth Lecture.

According to thy louing kindneſſe: according to the multitude of thy compaſsions.

The firſt Doctrine.

IT is next to be conſidered, the nature of Gods mercy: concerning which, this I ſet downe as the Doctrine: That the Goodneſſe and Mercy of God in euery reſpect, and which way ſo euer we conſider it, is exceeding great. Two termes here vſed by Dauid, doe giue occaſion to this note. Firſt, Louing kindneſſe. It is but one word in the Hebrew, and it betokeneth a kind of free inclination, and forward readineſſe to afford fauour: which is meant by that Iſaiah ſaith of God, [a] He is verie ready to forgiue: and Micah, [b] that mercy pleaſeth him: and that is the meaning of that title, Gracious, which God among others made himſelfe knowne by vnto [c] Moſes: he is therefore gracious, becauſe he hath a certaine ſpeciall diſpoſition to gratifie and to doe good. Secondly, Multitude of compaſſions: The word here Engliſhed compaſsions, is noted, to ſignifie ſuch tenderneſſe of the affections, as is in mothers towards the fruit of their bodies; which is ſuch as may bee better felt by thoſe that haue experience of it in themſelues, then expreſſed by the tongue of any; [d] Can a woman forget her child, and not haue compaſsion on the ſonne of her wombe? as though it were euen a thing impoſſible, that any thing ſhould be able to maſter or to kill this affection: ſhee were to bee reckoned as a monſter among women that ſhould want it. This was therefore it by which the wiſe Salomon would trie the queſtion betwixt the two harlots, which pretended to bee the mother to the liuing child; her whom hee perceiued to bewray the moſt compaſſion, and to be chiefely mooued at the command for the diuiding of the child into twaine, he determined to be the true [e] mother. This affection then which is in mothers towards their little ones, making them to bee in loue with them, euen before they ſee them, whiles they are yet incloſed in the wombe, and to both tend and tender them when they are moſt way-ward, and in a manner to bee careleſſe of their owne eaſe and content, to further their good, is that which Dauid hath made choiſe of here, to ſhaddow out Gods Goodneſſe by: neither doth hee ſo reſt, but hee addes an Epithete vnto it, (multitude, or muchneſſe;) both becauſe the meaſure of it is great, and the terme of it large, it laſts alwaies: for his mercy indureth for euer, it is repeated in one Pſalme [f] twenty ſixe times. Thus the very ſole view of this place, may giue vs iuſt cauſe to take vp the words of the Pſalme, [g] How excellent is thy mercy, O God! Thou art louing and kind of thy ſelfe without vrging, without compulſion; thou doeſt euen take take a delight in being gracious; thou art exceeding tender; the affection of a mother is but a ſhaddow of thy pity: All this doth euen abound in thee, and thy compaſsions faile not. Let vs now caſt our eyes a little further, and gather vp here and there ſomewhat out of that plenty which the Scripture affords for this matter. And herein that I may not roue and wander, but may containe my ſelfe within a fitting compaſſe, I will declare the goodneſſe and mercy of God, as it is ſeene in two things eſpecially: Firſt, Giuing. Secondly, Forgiuing. The mercy of God in giuing is vniuerſall: nothing that is, but for the being thereof it is beholding vnto God. Whereupon Dauid calleth vpon all [h] the Creatures to praiſe God: and reports [i] God to be good to all, and his mercies ouer all: whereby hee meanes, that there is nothing vnder the Cope of heauen, but it enioyeth the great mercy of God. Hee it is which cauſed it to bee, and hee it is by whoſe gracious hand it is vpheld and continued as it is. [k] He ſaues both man and beaſt. [l] The eyes of all wait vpon him; hee openeth his hand, and filleth all things liuing, &c. [m] He giueth to beaſts their food, and to the young Rauens that cry. Of this mercy of God, euen the wicked taſte: For [n] as in him all liue, and moue, and haue their being: ſo, ſuch is the Lords louing kindneſſe, that he [o] maketh his Sunne to ariſe on the euill, and the good; and ſendeth rayne on the iuſt, and vniuſt. God had pitie euen vpon Iſmael, by opening the eyes of Hagar to ſee a Well of water, when in the Wilderneſſe of Beer-ſheba, ſhee thought there was no remedie, but he muſt periſh for want of [p] drinke; euen with him, though appointed to be caſt out, [q] God was, and made him to grow. Euen in this generall mercy of God, is this Doctrine verified. Herein God ſheweth his readineſſe to doe good; herein hee diſcouereth the compaſſionateneſſe of his nature; herein the largeneſſe and abundance of his grace. But becauſe this was not it at which Dauid did ſo mainely ayme in this place, therefore though in paſſage it deſerue our note, and ought to be a iuſt ground of prayſing God, yet will I not ſo much inſiſt on it, but haſte rather to the ſecond, of Forgiuing. And here two things; Firſt, Gods louing kindneſſe in forgiuing. Secondly, His louing kindneſſe continued and heaped to and vpon thoſe whom he forgiues. Touching the firſt. So forward is he to forgiue, that whereas it might ſeeme inough, and is indeed more then can be challenged from him, if vpon Petition he ſhould ſhew grace, yet he doth vrge men herein, and as it were maruell at their ſlackneſſe, yea and euen ſue to them, which haue much more cauſe to be Petitioners vnto him. Wherefore elſe is that ſpeech, Why will yee die? I deſire not the death of him that dyeth: [r] Cauſe therefore one another to returne, and liue yee. Doth not this ſpeech ſauour of a readineſſe to remit? and why hath he committed to men a Miniſtrie and Word of reconciliation, beſeeching through his Ambaſſadors, [ſ] that men would be reconciled: is it not becauſe hee is forward to bee gracious, and euen loth (as it were) that men ſhould periſh in their ſinnes? He is willing to diſpute the matter with the ſonnes of men, and debate the caſe with them, why they ſhould imagine, that any ſinne ſhould be found ſo great, ſo foule, ſo haynous,

Two things, in which Gods mercy is to be ſeene.

nous, against which, his mercy in forgiuing should not bee able to preuaile. What? though your sinnes were of as deepe a die as Crimson, or wrought in, like the colour of Scarlet into cloth, yet there is in mee, neither want of will, nor power to make them as pure as the driuen Snow, or as white as the cleerest Wooll: [u] My thoughts are not as your thoughts, neither are your wayes my wayes, saith the Lord. Indeed you are one towards another, of a stiffe, sturdie, stubborne, and implacable disposition; and where you haue once conceiued a displeasure, you are hardly euer to bee reconciled: it is not so with me, you shall doe mee wrong to conceiue so of me: whatsoeuer your transgressions be, in case you turne from them, [x] Iniquitie shall not bee your destruction. Excellent to this purpose is that place and speech, by which God described himselfe to Moses; [y] forgiuing iniquitie, transgression, and sinne: the Learned account, that in that place all kinds of sinnes are comprehended: the first word betokening the vniuersall corruption of nature; the second, euery actuall offence, euery swaying in dutie towards his Maiestie; the third, settledness in euill, when one is growne to a kind of impudency and custome therein: so whatsoeuer it is, yet it cannot goe beyond his readinesse and abilitie to forgiue. It is neither the foulenesse of sinne, nor the multitude of sinne, nor the long continuance in sinne, that can preiudice his goodnesse in this case. Vnto Dauid hee forgaue a grieuous sinne, euen this Adulterie coupled with Murther. Vnto the Woman that fell downe at our Sauiours feete in the Pharises house, he [z] forgaue many sinnes. Vnto the Thiefe that was crucified with Christ, hee remitted euen an habit, and a very life of [a] sinne. Peter would neither put them out of hope hereof, who had [b] preferred a Murtherer before the holy One and the Iust, and had killed the Lord of Life: no, nor yet Simon Magus, when hee saw [c] him to be in the gall of bitternesse, and bond of iniquitie. Euen Paul, [d] a chiefe sinner, was receiued to mercy: a man that breathed out threatnings and slaughters against the Disciples of the Lord, and was zealous and earnest in destroying the Faith, and thinking he did God seruice in shedding the bloud of his Saints. Euen Rahab the Harlot, and Manasses the Idolater, and Zache the Extortioner, and the Corinthians which had beene seruants to lusts; such as these, the louing kindnesse of the Lord receiued into fauour, and vouchsafed a blessing to them all, in turning euery one of them from their Iniquities. Thus is Gods Forgiuing; and herein is that saying verified, [e] Mercy reioyceth against condemnation. The goodnesse and mercy of God doth in a manner triumph ouer the rigour of his Iustice, inasmuch as [f] where sin abounds, there grace abounderh much more: and the arme of Gods Iustice is as it were ouer-mastred by his Mercy, that he breaks not out into extremitie as hee might, but turnes his furie into fauour; and where hee might adiudge to Hell, there hee giues an assured hope of entrance into Heauen. And thanks be to God for this vnspeakable gift.

Now, for his louing kindnesse to those whom hee forgiues: [g] His compassions faile not, saith the Prophet, [h] they are renued euery day:

ſo farre are they from decaying or languiſhing, that they become daily more freſh, and there is a continuall addition to them: God neuer repealeth the Act of Remiſſion. Forgiueneſſe granted once, is irreuokable: it is one of thoſe gifts of God which is without Repentance. Thoſe, to whom the Lord affords this grace, [i] Hee bleſſeth with all ſpirituall bleſſings in heauenly things: hee [k] comforteth them in all their tribulations. [l] If they be ſicke, he makes their bed. If they be poore, he teacheth them how to be [m] abaſed. If they fall, he cuts them not off, but puts [n] vnder his hand. In a word, he [o] reſerues them to Ieſus Chriſt: he [p] keeps them by his power through faith vnto ſaluation: he [q] guides them by his counſell, and will afterwards receiue them into glorie. Thus is the multitude of the Lords compaſsions towards thoſe, whom he hath once beene pleaſed in his louing kindneſſe to forgiue. He [r] reſerues mercy. He hath a ſtore-houſe of mercy. Paul calleth it [ſ] the riches of his bountifulneſſe. There is no occaſion of commiſeration that can befall any of his Elect ones, but he hath vnder-hand a particular compaſsion for it: hee is neuer wearied in lading them daily with his benefits; hee is neuer tyred out in adding continually to his owne mercies; [t] Whoſoeuer hath, to him ſhall bee giuen, and he ſhall haue aboundance. In treating of a matter ſo ample and large, as the Lords louing kindneſſe, it is not eaſie to keepe meaſure: it is a kind of alluring ſubiect, and cannot but tye ones thoughts vnto it. Me thinks, when I am about to leaue ſpeaking of it, I am, as it were, carryed backe againe, as if I ſhould adde to that I haue ſpoken, ſomewhat more. It ſeemed to mee euen an hard matter, to looke into my Bible, without beholding ſome ſupply of new proofe. Indeed euery Page, Line, Word therein doth accord with this Point, and proffer it ſelfe to teſtifie this Truth, that Gods kindneſſe is exceeding, and his compaſsions manifold. Euen where wee reade of fearefull iudgements, wee may behold prints, yea more then prints of mercy: mercy, in that hee alwayes puniſheth nothing ſo ſeuerely as he might: mercy, in that hee leaues his dealings in it on record, that we might learne by his ſeuerity vnto others, to labour for his mercy to our ſelues. And thus for the Doctrine.

This Doctrine, touching the greatneſſe of Gods mercy, and concerning the graciouſneſſe of his diſpoſition, is as neceſſary to be well known as any other point whatſoeuer. For howſoeuer [That God is mercifull] is in the mouth of euery wretch, and nothing is more ordinarie then to turne this, which is euen the ſweeteſt proprietie of this nature, into wantonneſſe, and to vſe it as an occaſion to the fleſh; yet to apply and lay hold vpon the Compaſsions of the Lord, in the very right time of needing them, is a matter of exceeding difficultie. It is an eaſie thing in the day of ſenſleſneſſe to preſume, but it is an hard matter when the ſoule within is wounded indeede, not to deſpaire. Dauid had no ſmall adoe to ouercome his owne diſtruſtfulneſſe, and to worke himſelfe to a confident dependance vpon the grace of God: ſuch concluſions againſt himſelfe, as, [u] I am caſt out of thy ſight, were ordinary with him: hee was faine euen to challenge his owne heart for being ſo vncomfortably (euen) ouer-

But what ſpeake I of Dauid, when, behold, a greater then Dauid, euen the hope of Dauid, ſuſtayning the heauie burden of our ſinnes, being wounded for our tranſgreſſions, and broken for our iniquities, and powring out his ſoule, found it no eaſie conflict to ouercome the terrour of the Lord, and in the midſt of the beholding of a Ioh.11.42. to ſay at another time, [a] I know (O Father) that thou heareſt me alwayes, yet now (as it were) at a puſh, while the Lord ſeemed to turne aſide his face, was troubled. It is neceſſary then that the breadth, and length, and depth, and height of the louing kindneſſe of the Lord, ſhould be thorowly vnderſtood, that when the ſoule moſt needs it, it may vnderſtand how beſt to apply it. Know then this, that it is euen vnpoſſible for thee to be ſo ready to ſinne, as the Lord is forward to forgiue: thy tranſgreſſions cannot bee multiplyed beyond the number of his mercies, nor thy faylings renued more often then his fauours. If any man periſh in any of his ſinnes, it is not for want of compaſsion in God, but onely for want of repentance in himſelfe. Among Schoole-Diuines, Deſpaire is determined to bee a ſinne more grieuous then Preſumption: and this is giuen as a reaſon, Becauſe it is more proper to God to ſpare, then to puniſh: the one appertayning to God ſimply and in it ſelfe; the other, being occaſioned onely by our ſinnes. How rightly this matter is diſcuſſed, I will not now diſpute. But, doubtleſſe, it is a wrong done of an high nature vnto God, when any man ſhall hopeleſly conclude againſt himſelfe, that with God, for him, there is no mercy. why why thou ſhouldeſt be receiued into grace. If thy ſinnes bee many, behold, here are compaſsions many; it is impoſſible for thee to bee ſo giuen ouer vnto ſinne, as God is reſolute to forgiue. His mercy is not prouided for petty ſinnes alone, or for faults of a ſmall ſize; but it is his glorie to paſſe by great offences, and he will bee magnified in reſcuing thoſe from out of the iawes of the Deuill, which were carryed captiue of him at his will. He that commands me to forgiue, g not to ſeuen times, but to ſeuentie times ſeuen times, ſhall I dare to ſet any bounds to his grace? Lay vp this point in ſtore (if thou be wiſe) vntill the time of need. It may bee vnto thee as the Balme of Gilead, or as that h ſeaſonable Word, which is, as Salomon ſaith, like apples of gold with pictures of ſiluer. Vnderſtand thus much, if thou haſt not yet found it in experience, that albeit it bee ſo ordinary to preſume vpon Gods mercy, yet when the ſoule is ſet vpon the racke, thou ſhalt find it one of the moſt hard taskes which thou euer vnder-tookeſt, to maſter thy owne doubtings of thy owne vnfaithfull heart, and to attayne to this comfortable concluſion, That there is compaſsion with the Lord for thy ſoule. There is no man more apt in the Day of ſpirituall diſtreſſe, to exclude himſelfe from out of the reach and compaſſe of Gods kindneſſe, as he that hath indeed moſt intereſt into it. The caſt-downe ſoule, the perplexed ſpirit, the agrieued heart, hath moſt right vnto this infiniteneſſe of Gods mercy: and yet Satan is forward to ſuggeſt to it, that there is hope for any rather then for it. Whoſo therefore loues his owne ſoule, and regards the things which belong vnto his peace, let him labour the right vnderſtanding, and the carefull ſtoring vp of this point, viz. That let the worſt that can be, be made of ſinne, yet for largeneſſe, for variety, for vnweariedneſſe, the louing kindneſſe of the Lord doth farre exceed it. And to the end that now for the preſent, thou mayſt know if thou haſt heedfully regarded what hath hitherto beene ſaid, whether thou haſt rightly conceiued of this Doctrine, conſider well what in thee hath thereby beene moued and affected moſt. If thy naturall diſpoſition hath thereby beene cheered, and thou made apt to thinke; (it will be no great danger to take a little libertie now and then, for I ſee I cannot ſinne beyond the wideneſſe of Gods mercy,) this is dangerous, this is a graceleſſe abuſe of a gracious Doctrine. But if thou haue now learned, according to that of Dauid, to deriue i feare out of the report of mercy: that is, to reuerence and honour God, and to ſtand in awe of him ſo much the more, becauſe of the graciouſneſſe of his nature, and to k feare in thy ſelfe, leſt at any time thou ſhouldeſt be depriued of this ſo great a good, and come ſhort of that large grace, whereof thou heareſt ſo much teſtified; this ſhall bee a notable witneſſe to thy ſoule, that thy heart is right in the ſight of God, and that thou haſt none of the ſmalleſt ſhares into this great commoditie. Let me craue of euery of you the conſideration of himſelfe vpon this one point. There is no man, hearing this, touching the Goodneſſe, and Mercy of God, but if hee haue any thing, or in any meaſure obſerued it, hee muſt needs bee affected one way, either to take heart to be the more ſecure, conſidering that the Lord is so inclinable vnto grace, and so easie to be won, or else to bee strooken with feare of missing this so great a good, and rauished with a desire of enioying it. See whether of these two is wrought in thee: if the former, thou suckest venom out of hony, and it will bee bitternesse in the end: if the latter, thou applyest aright, and it shall surely turne vnto thy comfort. And thus of these two points, that mercy is the ground of Pardon, and that mercy is exceeding large. Both the Lords giuing, and his Forgiuing are without bound: [l] with the Lord is mercy, and with him is great redemption. Thus then we haue heard of the excellency of Pardon, of the nature of Pardon, of the ground of Pardon. Now, that wee may leaue nothing in these two Verses vnexamined, the condition and state of that which must be pardoned, is to be considered of. Concerning which this Doctrine,

The second Doctrine.

That sinne, of all things else, is one of the most foule, and the most dangerous. This I shall soone manifest out of this place. First, For the foulenesse of sinne, it is iustly concluded out of Dauids request, to haue it washed and cleansed, and that thorowly: washing, presupposeth foulenesse; cleansing, is an argument of a stayne. Thorow or much washing, is a signe that the filth is deeply set; it is such a kinde of spot as cannot bee easily wiped out. Secondly, Touching the dangerousnesse of sinne, the terming of it Iniquitie, is one euidence thereof; that being a word which betokeneth a falling away from our due allegeance to the Maiestie of God, a kind of rebellion against him: and is it, thinke we, a small danger to bee before God in the state of Rebels? How can their case be otherwise then fearefull whom God so esteemes? what can be their portion so continuing, but a fearefull looking for of Iudgement, and violent fire to deuoure? Then, blotting out, is an argument (as in part was shewed the last day) that sinne is in the nature of a debt, and that the multiplication of it is a kinde of running further and further on the Score: and is it nothing to be in the Lords debt, and to bee lyable to an Arrest vnanswerable when he pleaseth? So that here we see is euidence inough of this truth. Sinne is foule, for it requires washing: it is filthy, for it needs cleansing: it is dangerous, for it is rebellion against God: it makes a man more and more in debt vnto him; the Accounts due to whom no man liuing is able to discharge. Dauid, in saying, [m] Blessed is the man whose sinne is couered, argueth it to bee a kinde of nakednesse; which being so, confirmes that which I haue said: for who knowes not both the deformitie and the perill of nakednesse? All those purifyings and cleansings of vessels, garments, and bodies, enioyned by the ceremoniall Law, whereof were they pledges, but of this truth touching the pollution of sinne? Man in his first estate had the Image of God engrauen in his soule; what greater glorie? hee was in fauour with God, and intereſſed into the attendance of Angels; what greater safetie? sinne is the rasing out of this Image, and a planting in, in stead thereof the very feature of the Deuill: can there bee deuised more deformitie? man is hereby cast out of grace with God, depriued of the guard of those ministring spirits, and laid open to the spoile

of that roring Lyon that seeketh to deuoure. Is his danger small that is thus exposed? There is nothing so odious and hatefull in the sight of God, as a man in his sinnes. God being (as he is) Light, and Puritie, and Perfection it selfe, cannot but euen detest and abhorre that which is his contrarie. Now, detestation with God, must needs haue danger to attend it. What hazzard is not he in, whom the soule of the Lord cannot endure? Consider a little, how this, that is thus in the generall said of sinne, is shewable by Scripture touching some particulars. How foule is the sinne of vncleannesse, when it is accounted a [n] dishonour to the body: and the practisers of it are compared to [o] Dogs, and to [p] fed Horses? How dangerous is it, when it is said [q] to carry downe to the chambers of death, and that [r] Whoore-mongers and Adulterers God will iudge? How foule is the sinne of drunkennesse, when it is described euen by bodily deformities, that accompanie [s] it? how dangerous, when in the end it will [t] bite like a Serpent? How foule is the sinne of Oppression, when the practisers of it are likened to Man-eaters, that liue vpon [u] flesh? are compared to Beasts of an enlarged [x] swallow: and how dangerous, when the Lord threatneth a wo to such: yea, such a [y] plague, out of which they shall not plucke their necks? How foule is the sinne of Idlenesse and Sloth in ministeriall duties, when the Lord compares those in whom it is, vnto dumbe, yet [z] greedie dogs? and how dangerous, when [a] the bloud of the people shall be required at their hands? How foule is the sinne of going backe in Religion, when it is said, that the [b] soule of the Lord taketh no pleasure in such? when they are likened to a Dog, running to his vomit, and to a Sow that is washed, and falleth againe to [c] wallowing in the myre? and how dangerous, sith the state of such men is [d] worse then the first? Thus I could easily descend into particulars, and let you see how Foulenesse and Danger are the inseparable Attendants vpon all sinne. Euery sinne is a blot, euery sinne is a debt. There is no beautie in blots, no safetie in debt. Surely, if it were possible for a man with the eyes of his body, to see the filthy vglinesse that is in him through sinne, it would make him euen afraid of himselfe: and whoso might behold vnder one view the largenesse of the score betwixt God and him, and how deeply he is in debt in the Lords Booke of Account, it would make euen his heart to quake within him to consider it. Thus touching the Doctrine.

This is first, to cure in vs two speciall euils, both in vs by nature, and by vse and custome both increased: one is Pride, the other is Securitie. We are naturally Proud, and well opinioned of our selues; we are naturally Secure, and apt to thinke wee stand vpon termes of exceeding safetie. Consider we a little of this Doctrine, and wee shall soone see there is no cause for either. This one thing, that thou art a sinner, should bee inough to abate thy Pride, and to awaken thy Securitie. Saweſt thou euer a Leper, or the like diseased person, all whose body is bespred with sores, such as thy very eye is vnwilling to behold? Here is a representation of thy soule, ten times more lothsome before God, then this poore wretches wretches caſe is before thee. Hath hee cauſe to be proud; or haſt thou any reaſon to eſteeme thy ſelfe? Kneweſt thou at any time a man in debt more by many pounds then hee is worth, one for whom Writs are out from euery Court, and for whom the Bayliffes and Sergeants lie in wait at euery corner? Here is another ſhaddow of thy natiue ſtate. A world of actions hath the Lord againſt thee, and his Iuſtice is ready to attach thee, and to ſeize vpon thee euery houre. Doſt thou wonder that hee which is ſo much in debt, and ſo continually laid for, is ſecure: doſt thou maruell at his frollikeneſſe and iollitie; and yet thinkeſt it to be no fault in thee, that in the midſt of all this thy ſtate with God, thou art preſumptuous? Oh, that wee could thinke well on this! No doubt it would make vs vnſatisfied in the abaſing of our ſelues; it would cauſe vs giue our ſelues no reſt till we had made peace with God. Thou beholdeſt abroad a vaine perſon fairely ſet out to the eye, tricked and trimmed vp after the beſt faſhion; it may be thou knoweſt of ſome ſecret foule diſeaſe he hath, or of ſome great debt hee is in: doeſt not thou in thy thoughts ſcorne his folly? doeſt thou not ſay to thy ſelfe, No maruell he ſhould bee ſo proud, that hath vnderneath that gayneſſe ſuch a deale of filthineſſe, and that lyeth in euery bodies debt, and oweth more then he can diſcharge? Turne this now to thy owne ſoule, and wonder at thy ſelfe that can bee ſo careleſſe, ſo feareleſſe, ſo preſumptuous, when thy ſoule hath ſuch need of waſhing, and there are againſt thee ſuch Bils of iniquities, for ought thou knoweſt, not yet blotted out before the Lord. I pray let this bee the vſe of this Doctrine, to take downe our Pride, to rowze vs from Securitie. Canſt thou thinke well of thy ſelfe, that haſt by nature ſuch a filthy ſoule? canſt thou be ſecure, when the Lord hath ſo many things to lay vnto thy charge?

2. Vſe. Secondly, this ſhould prepare vs for Chriſt, and teach vs to value him aboue all. What is the reaſon the tidings of Chriſt are ſo little reckoned of? whence is it that the Doctrine of ſaluation by his bloud is harkned vnto with ſo ſmall reſpect? Is it not becauſe men know not how foule they are through ſinne, and in what danger by rebelling againſt the Lord? were they aware hereof, how ſweet ſhould that Word be vnto them which is now deſpiſed? how precious thoſe Sacraments, which are now paſſed by as matters of but little worth? He that ſaw the filthineſſe of his inward man, would be glad of a drop of that bloud of that Lambe vndefiled, and without ſpot, by which hee might bee preſented blameleſſe before God. He that vnderſtood the multitude of his debts to God, oh, how he would imbrace him, by whom the Bils of account ſhould be canceled, and ſhould engage himſelfe as a ſurety for him to the Lord? Happie is he whom the feeling hereof makes to long in his ſoule for Chriſt, and to count all things dung in reſpect of him, that reioyceth in that fountaine of grace which the Lord hath opened for ſinne and for vncleaneneſſe, and triumphs in his Spirit, becauſe of the hope to bee diſcharged by another, of that for which himſelfe cannot ſatisfie.

This

This ſhould alſo make ſinne hatefull to vs, and eſtrange our affections from it, and teach vs to make conſcience of auoiding it in our liues. Shall wee delight in that which makes vs lothſome to God? ſhall wee take libertie to our ſelues in that by which wee doe but heape vp danger vpon our ſelues? wee would thinke him mad, that had no felicitie but to lay downe and tumble in the mire. Common ciuilitie teacheth vs to chooſe our way, and not wilfully to runne in the durt: ſhall it not bee ſpirituall frenzy, to take a pleaſure in the filthineſſe of ſinne, and to account it our glory the more we can beſpot our ſelues with preſumptuous euils? Though we cannot, but while we liue here, receiue ſome ſoyle, yet farre be it from vs to wallow in vncleaneneſſe. For caſuall defilements there is hope, but for wilfull pollutions there is little. It is a part of pure [e] Religion, to keepe our ſelues vnſpotted of the world: and it is an euidence of [f] our partaking with the godly nature, if wee labour to flee the corruptions which are in the world through luſt.

VERS. 3, 4, 5, 6.

For I know mine iniquities, and my ſinne is euer before me.
Againſt thee, againſt thee onely haue I ſinned, and done euill in thy ſight, that thou mayeſt be iuſt when thou ſpeakeſt, and pure when thou iudgeſt.
Behold, I was borne in iniquitie, and in ſinne hath my Mother conceiued me.
Behold, thou loueſt truth in the inward affections: therefore haſt thou taught me wiſedome in the ſecret of mine heart.

THe matter of theſe foure Verſes, is a ſerious and ſincere acknowledgement of ſinne. They depend vpon the former requeſt for pardon, as an enlargement thereof, and as a reaſon alleadged by Dauid, why he ſhould be ſo earneſt with the Lord therein; yet they bee alſo inſerted by him, as an inducement to God, ſo much the rather with grace and pitie to reſpect him: as if he ſaid, Great cauſe haue I, O Lord, to importune thy Maieſtie with this ſute, and to intreat thee againe and againe in this matter: for I am very ſenſible of my offending thee, and my heart now telleth mee what I am before thee, and in what reſpects I am lyable to thy iuſt diſpleaſure: and now, Lord, I hope and aſſure my ſelfe, that this diſtreſſedneſſe of my caſe which I thus vnfold vnto thee, ſhall mooue thee, being ſo gracious and pitifull as thou art, to haue compaſsion on mee. Thus is the courſe and connexion of theſe Verſes. Now for their order reſpectiuely the one vnto the other: we may conceiue them thus, viz. That in the former mer of them there is a matter auouched; in the other three, there is a making good of that which therein is auouched: I know, or acknowledge mine iniquities, &c. and that shall thus appeare: for behold, Lord, I here freely and frankly confesse, that against thee, against thee only haue I sinned, &c. and that both by practice and by birth, I am a grieuous wretch before thee. Thus briefly and plainly for the laying forth the state of this place. Begin we now with the former Verse. This Doctrine is from thence, and from the maine scope thereof very direct,

The first Doctrine. That by how much the more fully any man vnderstands his owne estate in regard of sinne, by so much the more will hee bee earnest and importunate to find grace and mercy with the Lord. This we may perceiue by Dauid. Wee haue heard him euen passionately earnest with the Lord for pardon, Haue mercy vpon mee, O God, &c. and wee shall heare the like againe fromhim often in this Psalme. Now what mooued Dauid to this eagernesse? what made him to behaue himselfe herein as if hee would take no nay? Is not the whole reason deliuered in this Verse, O Lord, I cannot hold my peace, I am not able to temper my selfe from importunitie in this sute, that thou wouldst haue mercy on me, and wash me thorowly from my sinnes: for I see well the wofulnesse of my estate, neither can I hide from the eye of my soule, the foulenesse of my sinnes. So that it is plaine by this, that according to the measure of ones feeling and knowledge that he hath of sinne, is his sute for grace. If the former bee effectuall, surely, the latter cannot choose but be importunate. Hee that knoweth his Iniquities, will neuer giue the Lord ouer, till he hath obtained some euidence and token of his mercy. If we shall take view of all those in Scripture, of whose petitioning to the Lord for fauour there is any mention, in them wee shall see this truth, that the sight of their sinnes, and the vnderstanding of their estate, made them earnest with God for the inioying of his grace. That notable prayer of [a] Ezraes, now many times made vse of, how full is it, as of importunatenesse with God to find refreshing, so of euidences of abounda nt feeling? scarce a word but may be a witnesse, that he like our here penitent Prophet, knew his iniquities: [b] Our iniquities are increased, our trespasse is growne vp to the heauen: [c] wee haue beene in a great trespasse, &c. Marke what termes he vseth of euill deeds, [d] great trespasses; If wee looke well vpon his earnestnesse, we shall see plainely, that it was the feeling and knowledge of sinne that begate it. Manasses (saith the Text) [e] when he was in tribulation, he prayed, and the Lord heard him. Marke what is said to testifie his earnestnesse with God, he prayed, and prayed: that is, he plyed the Lord with sute vpon sute: well, what went with it? he humbled himselfe, &c. Whence came this humiliation, but from the sight of his sinnes? Consider how things were wrought: Tribulation made him looke into himselfe, and grow into a consideration of his estate: the viewing of himselfe, made a muster of his sinnes to bee presented to his thoughts: the beholding of his sinnes, afflicted his soule, and hereupon to pray and pray, and neuer to forbeare, vntill God was intreated of him, and did heare him. It is a speciall all example for this purpose. Iob neuer demeaned himselfe with such euidence of an hungry soule, as when out of the aboundance of his inward feeling, he cryed out, [f] Behold, I am vile: and, [g] I abhorre my selfe, and repent in dust and ashes; then he came in with, [h] Heare, I beseech thee: I will demand of thee, and declare thou vnto mee. What made the poore Cananite [i] so to vrge the Lord Iesus, as one that would not bee shaken off with one deniall? When the first (Haue mercy on mee) seemed to haue perished in the aire, yet shee set on him with a fresh charge, worshipping him, and crying, Lord, helpe me: we may be sure the sense of sinne bred all this: no doubt her feeling was not small, that could patiently beare the imputation of a dogge, and submit her selfe to challenge no more then some crummes of fauour. The woman that fell downe at our Sauiours feete in the Pharises house, we read not that she said much; yet her whole carriage, if it bee considered of, sauoureth of much earnestnesse to find grace, and of much sense of her owne iniquities: wherefore sought shee out Christ? why fell shee at his feete? why was her behauiour towards him so full of respect? was it not to obtaine somewhat from him? Our Sauiours answer to her, [k] Thy sinnes are forgiuen thee, argueth that she went on the same errand to Christ, on which Dauid went in this Psalme; Mercy, and compassion, and clensing from iniquitie, was her whole desire: and shall wee thinke all this had any other ground, then an effectuall vnderstanding of her present estate? Her casting her selfe downe at his feete, and that behind him, so, as not worthy to behold his face; her weeping, and that so plentifully, that with her teares shee could wash his feete; did not all these things euen in her silence testifie aloud, that shee was abundantly sensible of her sinnes? No doubt she remembred how her eyes had beene full of adulterie, how her haire in pride and vanitie had beene platted, and curled, and laid out to the view, her wanton kissings, and prouoking perfumes, were fresh in her thoughts; the more she considered them, the more she lamented them, and the more affectionately she euen hung vpon Christ, as the onely refuge of her soule, as the sole foundation of her hope. Her heart was full, and shee imployed her eyes by weeping, her mouth by kissing, her haires by wiping, her hands by anoynting, to speake that for her which her tongue was not able to expresse. What hastned the poore Prodigall home to his Father, what made him begge so earnestly to bee vouchsafed the state of an hired seruant? was it not that which is called, [l] his comming to himselfe, by which he saw what he had done, and into what misery hee was falne? Marke his speech vnto his Father; and see whether as the last doth testifie the strength of his desire, so the first doth not discouer the plenty of his feeling, Father, I haue sinned, &c. I will conclude this suruey of examples with the [m] Publican: his sute is for fauour, O God, be mercifull: the ground thereof, the vnderstanding of his sinnes, O God, be mercifull to me a sinner. It appeares by his gesture, that his feeling herein was not small: poore man! his heart was so strooken, that he durst not come neere, hee stood a farre off, as vnworthy in his

his owne seeming, to approch that part of the Temple where God was wont especially to declare his presence: not so much as his eyes would he aduenture to lift vp towards heauen: Alas, thought he, who am I, that I should behold the Throne of my God! hee smote his breast in a kinde of holy indignation with himselfe, that had so offended God. See well whether earnestnesse and feeling did not meet together, and euen kisse each other in this man. So I hope these particulars may satisfie vs some way for the truth of this point. Indeede (in reason) what can make a man earnest and feruent in his desire after any thing, if hee feele not a necessitie and want of it in himselfe? If a mans feeling bee but slender, surely, his indeuours to obtaine will bee but cold: who is forward to craue a Phisician, but hee which conceiues his health to bee in danger? Be a thing neuer so excellent, if a man bee not sensible of some neede of it in himselfe, hee will sooner contemne it then desire it. It is hard for a man so much as to counterfeit an earnestnesse, when he is not aware of some occasion in himselfe to quicken him thereunto: so naturally doe these two things concurre, earnestnesse and feeling: a man cannot keepe himselfe from earnestnesse in crauing and seeking that, in the want whereof he feeleth smart: neither can hee worke himselfe to put on a shew of importunitie, when he is vnsensible of some speciall necessitie. So that there can bee no doubt made of the truth of this point, Dauids ground for importunitie, Behold, Lord, for I know mine Iniquitie.

The Vse. Remember wee what wee haue heard heretofore, that the mercy of God in the pardon of sinne, is a blessing of exceeding worth. Better for vs neuer to haue beene borne, then to misse this fauour, and to be called to an account with God, though it were but for one of our sinnes, and the same the least that euer wee committed. Now the way to obtaine this blessing, is, as wee may learne by Dauid here, to petition for it at the Throne of grace. Cold and superficiall requests herein can neuer pierce the clouds, nor finde any manner of accesse to the Seate of God. They bee but as those vapors, which are drawne vp out of the earth into the ayre, which suddenly wanting strength to mount higher, either vanish into nothing, or fall backe againe from whence they were exhaled. Wee shall heare among men many formall, idle, and as I may call them, yawning requests for mercy: you shall haue one in a moode crie, Lord, haue mercy on mee, another leanes on his elbow betwixt sleeping and waking in the congregation, and darts out that forme when it comes in course. These be not the suites for mercy which the Lord will harken to. Hee will haue that which is called [n] the crying of the heart, before he will afford this fauour: when the soule thirsts, when the [o] flesh longs, then he will graciously declare himselfe ready to bee found. Now we are here taught, which is the only meanes to bring vs to this feruencie of praying: when thou art once come with Dauid to bee able to say with feeling, Lord, I know mine iniquities: then will thy soule to some good purpose crie out, Haue mercy vpon me, Lord. So that here is that thou must labour in, to haue a feeling and an effectuall knowledge of thy sinnes:

ſinnes: neither muſt thou imagine that this is a thing eaſily attayned vnto: ſuch a knowing as Dauid here ſpeaks of, is a matter of no little difficultie. There is more belongs to it, then the common profeſſion, that wee are all ſinners. If any man had asked of Dauid before hee was thus rowzed vp by Nathan, what hee thought of himſelfe; I doubt not but he would haue ſaid, I am a ſinner; yea, for this very particular, he would haue yeelded himſelfe to haue done amiſſe, and to haue offended God: yet there was more went to it then ſo, before hee came to this which hee here affirmes. Saint Paul, before his conuerſion to Chriſtianitie, would not haue denyed himſelfe to be a ſinner: a man of his breeding, and of his knowledge in the Scripture could not but know, that all the poſteritie of Adam was guiltie of ſinne before God: yet there was ſome more ſpeciall working before he came to that, p I know that in me, that is, in my fleſh dwelleth no good thing. To iudge of ſinne aright, and to ſee indeed the eſtate of a mans owne ſoule in reſpect thereof, is a matter that requires ſome labour to attaine to. When Dauid profeſſed here to know his iniquities, his meaning was, that he knew how foule, how ſcandalous, how hatefull, how dangerous, how manifold his ſinne was: he beheld it in the true proportion: hee ſaw now that it was otherwiſe by many degrees, then at the firſt he apprehended it. It may be he was apt to ſlight it ouer before, and to thinke that though he had committed adulterie, yet it was no ſuch great matter, for it was but that one time: and neither was hee alone, or the firſt that had ſo offended: hee might deceiue his owne ſoule with the excuſes that he had framed, as, that his hand was not vpon Vriah, it was the ſword of the enemie that had ſlaine him: and thus he might flatter himſelfe in ſecret, and make the matter to himſelfe much more tolerable then it was. But now he knew, and conſidered the matter better: he now ſaw that this ſinne was fouler in him then in another, by reaſon of his knowledge, by reaſon of his profeſſion, by reaſon of his place and dignitie, by reaſon of the many fauours which God had heaped on him, in rayſing him from behind the Ewes with young, to bee the Head and Leader of his people: hee now ſaw the particular euils that accompanyed this one ſinne, how that it well might bee called like the euill ſpirit in the Goſpell [Legion] becauſe indeed it was a compoſition of diuers euils: he had endangered the ſoule of Bathſheba, by drawing her to conſent vnto him: hee had brought others into wickednesſe that were his inſtruments, ſome in going as meſſengers to Bathſheba, ſome in bringing her ſecretly to his chamber, ſome in making Vriah drunke, and Ioab in particular in imploying him, to leaue Vriah to the hazzard of the enemie. He perceiued what a diſgrace he had brought vpon his profeſſion, how he had grieued the hearts of many of his ſubiects fearing God, how he had giuen a preſident to men of vicious and luſtfull diſpoſitions: yea, the very endeuours vſed by him to conceale the whole matter, went to his heart, and the endangering of his owne ſoule, by lying ſo long in his fault before a thorow-repentance: all theſe appurtenances to this one ſinne, hee was now better aduiſed of then hee had beene formerly. Not one of these circumstances but he had pondered in his mind, and pressed vpon his soule to the humbling thereof: So that in saying, hee knew his iniquities, there was a great thing comprehended. Some little smart he had felt before, but it was soone healed vp, and a skin was drawne ouer the sore: but now the wound was searched to the bottome, now it bled afresh, and neuer till now did he know the depth thereof. Consider then, I pray you, that when the knowledge of sinne is commended to vs, as a meanes to make vs earnest with the Lord for his grace, there is more to be conceiued to be in it then this, to say, I am a sinner; there must bee a distinct vnderstanding of the particulars, and circumstances tending to the aggrauation of sinne: it is necessarie that a man doe see sinne in his colours, and so doe studie vpon it, and proceede from point to point in his thoughts, that so he may perceiue the measure of his guilt. This will make him come like the man in the Gospell, [q] crying with teares, Haue mercy vpon mee, O God, &c. Now, the true way to bring vs to this thorow and effectuall vnderstanding of our estate through sinne, is the powerfull pressing of the Word of God vpon our soules: which cannot bee more strongly proued then out of this present example. For what brought Dauid to this, but Nathans ministerie? that wrought vpon his conscience, and made him say, Now I know mine iniquities, &c. not as if he had not knowne afore that Adulterie was a sinne, that Murther was a wickednesse; but because hee knew it not to the purpose vntill now. Had the Crucifiers of the Lord of Life, that denyed the holy and the iust One, and desired a Murtherer to be giuen them, beene euer [r] pricked at their hearts, had it not beene for the power of Peters ministerie? When had Paul vnderstood, as was necessarie, that lust was a sinne, if hee had not beene set to Schoole to the Lesson of the Law, [s] Thou shalt not lust? There can be no better euidence of the working of a powerfull ministerie to this end, then the lothnesse and vnwillingnesse which Satan works into the hearts of men, to come within the reach of that preaching, by which sinne is wont to be laid open as it is. How vsuall is it with many to shrinke away from that Ministerie, by which the nature of particular sinnes is most effectually displayed? There be diuers could be very well content to heare, were it not for that, that their personall euils are made to appeare to their consciences more foule by farre, and more vgly then they deemed them. So some things which they thought to be no sinnes, are manifested to them to be sinnes: and some which they conceiued to be but petty, are proued to be hainous; and some which they supposed to be but single, are discouered to be manifold; and some againe which they thought they had repented of, are shewed plainly to be yet not so sorrowed, not so lamented for, not so reformed as is necessarie. Now this secret backwardnes which men shal feele in themselues, to come vnder the working of the Ministerie, by which their soules shall thus be rifled, and their sinnes thus scanned, and searched, and improued to the vtmost, is a plaine proofe of this, that this is indeed the meanes, to bring a man to know his iniquities as he should. I will boldly appeale to the soule and conscience of

of euery humble, and attentiue Hearer, whether it bee not true which I say in this, that he hath beene, notwithstanding some former knowledge, of the corruption of mans nature, yet by the power of the Word faithfully dispensed, made to vnderstand more both touching sinne in generall, and touching his owne sinne in particular, then euer he was ware of. Certainely, one of the first workings which the Word of God hath vpon the soule of a Christian, is to make him say, Verily, I now see my selfe to be worse by many degrees, then I supposed: I thought euer I was a sinner, but I neuer vnderstood till now, what it was to bee a sinner: and there bee many things which I supposed were very tolerable, which now I see and confesse, were very vile before the Lord. Here is then the issue of my speech: Wouldst thou haue grace and mercy with God? I say with the Apostle, [t] Let vs goe boldly to the Throne of grace, that wee may receiue mercy, and find grace, &c. Desirest thou when thou commest thither, to be feruent in spirit, and to beg with importunitie, because thou heerest it taught, that the Lord loueth such Petitioners? Oh, then labour to haue an effectuall feeling of thy sinnes! If thou once art sensible of them, oh how thy soule will pant, how thy spirit will worke with sighes and grones, which cannot bee expressed! Perceiuest thou some insufficiency in thy selfe this way, and that thou hast not such a feeling as is necessarie? Goe then to the House of God, wait vpon the powerfull dispensation of his Word; pray before, that thy soule may be wrought vpon, that thy conscience may bee spoken to. Bee glad when thou heerest sinne set out at full; especially when thou heerest thy speciall corruptions come into handling, oh, then listen aboue all: what if it smart a little, whiles the instrument is thrust in? yet doe thou labour to reioyce, when thou art so smitten. This blueneſſe of the wound shall purge out the euill: harken not to those nice ones that will say, [This is the next way to bring thee to despaire, take heed, thou mayest bee cast downe too much:] No, no: there is no feare of curing thee, when once the dead flesh is fretted out; when thou art once brought to say, Oh, now, now I know mine iniquities. O, Lord, little did I thinke I had beene so naught, so vile, so corrupt. It may be, the Deuill will goe about to discourage thee, and say, Thou art past pardon, there is no mercy with God for such as thou. But greater is he that is in vs, then he that is in the world. It is as sure as the Lord liues, that he who hath brought thee thus farre, will not so leaue thee, but will put into thee the Spirit of Adoption, which shall cry aloud within thee, Haue mercy vpon me, O God, &c. For, behold, I know mine iniquities, &c. It is thou that hast wounded me, and it is thou which must heale me; thy Word hath smitten mee, how shall I thinke but this, euen thy rod and thy staffe shall comfort me? I beseech you, let mee intreat you to the embracing of this course, of which I will not doubt to say in the words of the Prophet, [u] This is that good way, wherein, if you shall walke, you shall find rest for your soules. If you will looke into the path which I now speake of, and doe not see the prints of Dauids feete therein, I will giue you leaue to disclayme my counsell: but I am sure, this way hee went:

Nathans faithfull miniſtrie brought him to know his iniquities. This knowledge made him preſſe vnto the Lord with a ſute for mercy: and this ſute, I am ſure, was not ſent emptie away. It was not pocketed vp, as the lot of many Petitions is, neuer to bee looked vpon, but the Lord gaue him his hearts deſire, and fulfilled all his mind. Goe thou, and doe likewiſe. Thus of the generall Doctrine of this Verſe: the more ſpeciall Doctrine followeth out of theſe words, and it is thus;

The ſecond Doctrine.

That it is a great bleſsing of God, to haue a tender and a wakefull conſcience. We ſhall not be able to denie that to be a bleſſing, which God vouchſafed vnto Dauid for his ſpeciall good: and that I am very ſure was ſuch a conſcience as I now mention. Obſerue wee Dauids words: My ſinne is euer before me: meets me, as it were, at euery turne: I can doe nothing, I can goe no whither, but ſtill my late fact, with all the dependances thereof, is preſented to my thoughts: mee thinks, I ſtill heare NATHAN ſaying vnto me, Thou art the man: It ſeemeth to me, that I doe ſee that honeſt, that faithfull, that innocent VRIAH, how he preferred his ſeruice to me, in lying as a Watchman at my Chamber doore, before his owne eaſe and contentment, to which in ſubtilty I perſwaded him. I cannot but remember how readily, and with what obſeruance the poore ſoule went from me, with a Letter vnto IOAB, the tenour whereof was his deſtruction. It comes to my minde, as if I ſaw him fall by the ſword of the enemie; euen his bloud hath a voice in my eares, and cryeth from the earth againſt me. Thus are my thoughts exerciſed one while with one particular of this monſtrous ſinne, one while with another; neither ſleeping nor waking can I put it from me. Walke I on my Roofe, then it is preſently in my mind, that from thence I beheld BATHSHEBA with a luſtfull eye: goe I into my Chamber, the very ſight of my bed reuiues the memorie of my ſinne. If I heare a Drum, or behold any preparation for the Warre; if IOAB my Lieftenant come into my preſence, if I am about to write a Letter, if the tidings of any mans death be brought vnto me, euery of theſe ſeemes to tell me of VRIAH. If NATHAN come before me, then, lo, I ſeeme to my ſelfe to be ſummoned at the Barre of the Lords Tribunall, and I cannot behold him but with awe. Was not here the tenderneſſe and the wakefulneſſe of Dauids conſcience? What was it but conſcience, that was ſuch a continuall Worker vpon his thoughts? and was not Dauid happy to be thus vrged with an importunate conſcience, and thus to bee pulled by the ſleeue at euery turne? Yes verily. Before hee fell to making of this ſute, he was by this meanes quickned to it; his conſcience would neuer let him bee in quiet, before hee had humbled himſelfe to God, and ſought his fauour by acknowledgement. Thus was it with him now, as at another time, when he ſaid, [x] There was no reſt in his bones, becauſe of his ſinne. He was like a man hauing a Thorne in his ioynt, who for the throbbing and beating thereof, cannot be ſtill till it be plucked out: neither could he be at any peace with himſelfe, till hee had eaſed his ſoule by Confeſſion. So that this was one benefit hee receiued by this inceſſant ſtirring of his conſcience, it did euen driue him to the Lord, and forced him in a manner, to get him vnto him right humbly. Secondly, After hee had thus powred out his ſoule before the Lord, and gotten ſome refreſhing by ſo doing, the being of his ſinne euer in his ſight, by the fidelitie of his conſcience, did worke him vnto thankfulneſſe for eſcaping the perill of ſuch a ſinne; vnto watchfulneſſe to preuent the like inconuenience, vnto commiſeration and pity towards others ouer-taken at any time by infirmitie. This good came to Dauid by hauing ſuch a conſcience. Had his conſcience beene dull, and hard, and vnapt to doe the office of admoniſhing, what ſecuritie would haue crept vpon him? what careleſneſſe to become a Petitioner to the God of mercy for his grace? what neglect in the obſeruation of himſelfe? what pride in reſpect of others? ſo that it was euery way happy for Dauid, to haue ſuch a liuely conſcience, that it was euer preſſing him with the remembrance of his ſinne. And it ſeemes that this was the generall eſtate of Dauids conſcience. Hee did once but cut off the lap of SAVLS garment, and that in an honeſt meaning, that Saul might know his fidelitie, in that when hee did it, hee might as well haue cut his throat; yet he was touched in his [y] heart: and when he had cauſed the people to be numbred, his heart ſmote [z] him: and both the one and the other was for his good: the former was a reſtraint vnto him from violence to Sauls perſon, wherein otherwiſe partly his owne vexation, partly the forwardneſſe of his followers to doe him ſeruice therein might haue preuailed: the latter brought him to his knees, and made him cry out, Lord, I haue ſinned exceedingly, I beſeech thee, take away the treſpaſſe of thy ſeruant: for I haue done very fooliſhly. And indeed if it were not a bleſſing to haue ſuch a conſcience; wherefore ſhould the Lord threaten the Iſraelites for their diſobedience, to [a] ſmite them with blindneſſe, and with aſtonying of heart? meaning, that hee would inflict vpon them ſuch a kinde of brawny and inſenſible dulneſſe, that in doing euill, they ſhould be vtterly without any manner of apprehenſion of their miſdoing: which ſeemeth to haue in ſpeciall manner ſeized on them, when being vrged by Pilate, in their fury and implacableneſſe againſt Chriſt, they cryed out with one voice, as men deſperate in the buſineſſe, [b] His bloud be vpon vs, and vpon our children. When God would puniſh theſe great ſinnes of the Heathen, (who, when knowing and ſeeing euidences of his power and Godhead in the Creation of the World, glorified him not as God,) [c] he deliuered them vp into a reprobate mind, viz. to commit euill without remorſe: and it is a branch of our natiue corruption, to be [d] paſt feeling: and the conſequent of it, is a working of vncleanneſſe with greedineſſe. The Apoſtle giues this report of them, which in the laſt times being in damnable errors, [e] that they haue conſciences ſeared with an hot yron: comparing their conſciences to ſuch parts in the body, which being found by the Surgeons arte incurable, are ſeared vp, and ſo become vtterly without ſenſe. Theſe things are proofes of this, what a fearefull thing it is to haue a drowzie, a ſilent, a forgetfull conſcience, and therefore by conſequent a bleſſing to haue ſuch a faithfull Admoniſher in ones boſome, as will neuer leaue working, till the knowledge of ſinne is ſo made vſe of as it ought to be.

The Vſe.

This makes vs ſee how much men are deceiued, who pleaſe themſelues in their inward ſenſleſneſſe. Becauſe they are apt either to ſwallow downe ſinne without ſcruple, or if they haue ſome little touch for the preſent, quickly to forget it: therefore they are confident touching themſelues, that they are in an happy caſe. The ſinne which is vaniſhed out of their remembrance, they ſuppoſe to bee alſo wiped out of Gods Record: yea, it is the labour of many, howſoeuer of things pertaining to profit or reuenge, to the ſatisfying of a corrupt humour, they ſtriue to bee mindefull, and are loth to let any thing ſlip from them; yet (I ſay) it is their deſire to put their ſinnes into the backe end of the Wallet, and the leſſe they ſee them, and the more ſeldome they remember them, the better they are pleaſed. Alas, poore ſoules, how buſie they are to increaſe their owne wo! the miſerableſt eſtate that is, to haue a ſleepy conſcience: no hope of his repentance, whoſe conſcience is benummed. Well is him that hath ſuch a conſcience that will ſtirre vpon the leaſt offence, and will awake at the leaſt blow, and will be a perpetuall ſolliciter, till it hath brought a man before the Lord, to diſcouer that to him which from him cannot be concealed. Wee may ſee by Dauid here the good of ſuch a conſcience: Dauid by all probabilitie would neuer haue beene ſo earneſt with God, had not his conſcience with him beene ſo importunate. Hee could haue no peace in himſelfe, vntill hee had laboured to make peace with God. Let mee now, to make this Vſe the more vſefull, adde this;

Vpon what condition a working Conſcience is a Bleſſing.

It is true in the generall, that a working conſcience is a bleſſing: but it is onely with this caution, that if it bee hearkned to. It is poſſible for vs, to turne that which in it ſelfe is a bleſſing, into a curſe. As it is a bleſſing to haue children, yet a man may make them no bleſſing by the neglect of education. It is a bleſſing to liue vnder a faithfull miniſtery, yet through it, if a man be not a good hearer, he may increaſe his owne iudgement. It is a bleſſing to haue a friend, which vpon euery occaſion is apt and ready to admoniſh; but yet if a man bee like the deafe Adder that ſtoppeth his eares, hee ſhall but heape vp wrath vnto himſelfe by that occaſion. There is a certaine naturall power in the conſcience, to giue the checke preſently vpon the doing of euill, ſo farre as the minde hath knowledge to vnderſtand what is euill: and when men come to the hearing of Gods Word, their conſciences are many times wrought vpon more ſtrongly then they would. Now it is good ſimply, for the conſcience thus to moue, and it is a token of Gods great loue vnto man, to furniſh the mind with ſuch a reflecting facultie vpon it ſelfe. But now here is the miſchiefe: it is the fault of many to deale with their conſcience, as rich men doe ſometimes with an earneſt and clamorous Begger; or as great men with an importunate Petitioner, whom they will make as if they did not heare, and paſſe along by without regard, and fall into talke of ſome other matter; purpoſely to auoid the taking notice of the other. Thus, I ſay, many vſe their conſciences, indeuouring not to heare them: and when the heart ſmites, they will not anſwere: when it brings the ſinne to ſight, they turne their heads aſide, and will not behold it. If they find by experience, that when they are alone, it is the fashion of their conscience to encounter them, they will seeke to furnish themselues with such company, as shall bee sure to giue conscience no leasure to speake to them: nay, if they perceiue, that during that little time which is betwixt their lying downe in bed and sleepe, their conscience will bee vpon them, they will preuent that too, by drawing their thoughts another way, or by the presence of some like themselues to hold them with an idle tale, till sleepe haue ouer-taken them: or if it fall out, that the Word of God, when they heare it preached, doth somewhat awaken them, and sets their conscience to doe its office, they will trie perhaps if they must needs bee there, to sleepe it out; or if there bee no remedy but to bee troubled with it for the time, they will bee sure to helpe it when they bee gone, and will seeke occasions to forget it. The poore conscience shall bee shaken off as Paul was, when he disputed before FELIX, of iudgement to come, with, [f] Goe thy way for this time, and when I haue conuenient time, I will call for thee. Such varietie of tricks doth the Deuill teach for the declining and shunning of the power and working of the conscience. Now by this meanes, this which is in it selfe a blessing, becomes a curse; and the vsing of the conscience in this vnkind and careless manner, is the next way to moue God to silence the conscience, and to giue it ouer to a kind of perpetuall drowzinesse. I remember what God said once to Ezekiel, that because of the rebellious disposition of the people, that would neither heare, nor cease when they were spoken to, therefore hee would [g] make the Prophets tongue cleaue to the roofe of his mouth, and hee should be dumbe, and not be vnto them as a man that rebukes. Looke as God dealeth with whole societies of men, in taking away from them the benefit of a powerfull ministery, when the same is not harkned vnto; so dealeth hee with particular persons, in striking a dumbnesse into the conscience, when the voice thereof is not regarded. Thus then wee are all here taught to take it as a blessing, when the conscience shall faithfully present vs with the most exact suruay of our sinnes, and so accordingly to vse it as a blessing. Bee sure neuer to turne thine eyes from beholding that which thy conscience offereth to thy view: whatsoeuer thy conscience doth herein, it doth by authoritie, and speciall commission from God, and as his Deputie, and it deserues regard. I doe not doubt but whiles Dauid liued vpon earth, this particular sin was euer in his sight. What warrant or colour of reason to thinke that there went a day ouer Dauids head, after Nathan had awaked him, in which he thought not vpon this fact? what if thou haue once or twice vpon the importunitie of thy conscience, humbled thy selfe before the Lord, shall it bee any hurt vnto thee to renew thy repentance euery day? Nay, know it, thy repentance is not sincere, nor vnfained, if thou once commest to thinke, that which thou hast done by way of repenting is sufficient. Oh, how happy and profitable shall it bee for thee to bee summoned to a continuall reckoning! how will it auaile thy soule and breake thy heart! how will it season thee with humilitie! how will it quicken f Act. 24.26.

they

g Ezec. 3.26.

quicken thee vnto thankefulneſſe to God, which hath freed thy ſoule from ſuch a treſpaſſe? Neuer doe thou therefore, hauing falne into ſome ſpeciall ſinne, bee angrie with thy conſcience for reuiuing it: doe not giue it a churliſh anſwer, I pray thee tell me no more of this, haue I not heard it of thee often, and wilt thou neuer leaue to trouble mee? Nay, bee ſorrie rather and afraid, when thy heart is ſilent. A forgotten ſinne cannot but hurt; a ſinne that is euer in ſight, to a wiſe Chriſtian, cannot but bee profitable. And thus is the Vſe of this Doctrine. It was well for Dauid that his ſinne did meete him ſtill. It haſtned his iourney to the Throne of God: the more his ſoule beheld his euill, the more he laboured to hide it from the Lord. I remember what is ſaid of Balaam, when hee was riding on his Aſſe to Balak King of Moab, who had hired him to come and curſe the Iſraelites: the Angell of the Lord met him with his ſword drawne in his hand; the Aſſe ſaw the Angell, but Balaam did not; the Aſſe turned out of the way, Balaam ſmote her to turne her into the way: well, the Angell met him againe in a path betwixt two Walls, yet Balaam made a ſhift to force his Aſſe to paſſe by, though it were with the daſhing of his foote againſt the Wall: hee was neuer brought to ſtoope and yeeld, till the Angell met him the third time in ſuch a narrow place, that there was no way to turne either to the right hand, or to the [h] left. I apply it thus: It is euen ſo with euery of vs; as long as it is poſſible to ſhunne the importunitie of the conſcience, and to put by the clamorouſneſſe thereof, wee will bee ſure to doe it; yea, though it be not altogether without ſome danger to our ſelues, yet wee will indeuour it. It is happy therefore for vs, if by the mercy of God, our conſcience ſhall meete vs againe and againe at euery turne, and ſo hedge vs in with vnauoidable conuincements, as that we ſhall ſee plainly that we haue no helpe, but to flie vnto the Lord, and to become ſuters for his grace and mercy in releeuing vs. And thus farre of that which Dauid auouched in this paſſage. He could not but bee earneſt for pardon, for hee knew his iniquities: hee could haue no reſt in himſelfe till hee had ſought the Lord, becauſe of the ſight of his ſinne.

The sixt Lecture.

VERS. 4.

Against thee, against thee onely haue I sinned, and done euill in thy sight.

WHat is the dependance of this Verse vpon the former, I haue shewed before. Dauid would now make it appeare, that he was sensible of his sinnes, and that his conscience charged him with his Iniquities: whereupon hee falls into an acknowledgement of his sinnes: viz. his speciall actuall sinnes in this Verse: his originall sinne, the corruption and sinne of his nature, in the next Verse. Two things in this fourth Verse are to bee considered: First, How Dauid doth charge himselfe. Secondly, How he doth discharge God.

The particulars of the Verse.

First, His charging of himselfe in these words, Against thee, against thee only haue I sinned, and done euill in thy sight. These words must not be so taken, as if Dauid went about to limit, or restraine his sinne, in some such sort and sense, as if because of his greatnesse in the world being a King, hee could not bee said to haue in any respect sinned against man. For had not Dauid trespassed against Vriah, in taking away his life, against Bathsheba in drawing her to vnchastitie, against diuers others, whom hee had vsed as instruments for the promoting of his purposes; what if it might be true, that Dauid thus offending, was exempted from all humane authoritie, whether Ecclesiasticall or Ciuill, that might punish him; Suppose, I say, it were so (for that is a point which I will not now dispute) yet that cannot proue him to haue beene without guilt of any sinne against man: so that Dauid had no meaning here to abridge his offence, and to reduce it only to the Person of God; but hee hath reference in his speech, to that which of all things else went most to his heart, and to that reckoning with God, which hee knew hee could not shunne, howsoeuer hee might finde meanes to shift among men. Wee may conceiue of Dauids meaning, as if he had spoken more largely, thus; O Lord, when I consider duly what I haue done, I see in many respects iust cause of humbling and of sorrowing: but aboue all, this most woundeth me, when I thinke vpon thy Maiestie, what thou art in thy selfe, and what thou hast beene towards me, and how now I haue offended thee. I haue carried the matter with much cunning, and the depth of my sin hath beene hidden from the eyes and knowledge of the greatest part, and I was apt thereupon to be secure, and to thinke my selfe in a kinde of safety: and for those that are in part priuie to it, they are all ready to sooth me vp, and to cherish me in my carelesnes: but now I perceiue that it is all naught before thee: it vexeth me not a little, that I should

should not feare to commit such an euill in thy presence, which yet I was busie to hide from the sight of men: and were this that I haue done no trespasse against men, and such as I were able either to conceale, or to iustifie to the world, yet I finde I haue to doe with thee, and howsoeuer the matter may be borne out here with men, yet still I remaine a sinner against thee: and when I thinke thereon, I can haue no rest in my selfe till I haue sought thy fauour. Thus is the sense of the words. Let vs consider of the Doctrine,

That to the children of God, in the day of their repentance, sinne, in respect that it is an offence against God, is the greatest burthen. DAVID, a child of God, wee cannot doubt; That hee was now at this time in the inditing of this Psalme in the practice of repentance, what more apparant? Now, let the manner of his speaking testifie, how it vexed his soule to haue offended God: among many things that troubled him, yet this was the chiefe; Against thee, against thee haue I sinned. To wrong men, is iniurious; to doe euill in the view of the world, is hatefull: but all this is nothing in comparison of this, that I haue offended thee: mee thinks all other respects and circumstances of sinne, are but a trifles, when I consider this, that I haue presumptuously and rebelliously sinned against thy Maiestie: Against thee, O Lord, whose fauours towards mee are without number, who hast raised me from nothing to a Kingdome, who hast oft saued me from the brinke of destruction, and giuen me my life for a prey, when there hath beene but a step betwixt mee and death: who hast giuen me the knowledge of thy selfe, called mee to the hope of saluation, graced me with many spirituall gifts in a measure farre aboue others; and in a word, hast euen laded mee with thy benefits. This is it which melteth my soule into griefe, and filleth my spirits with the greatest heauinesse. This is the meaning of Dauids [onely] to expresse the depth of Dauids griefe for offending God: neither shame in the world, no, nor yet the consideration of the punishment belonging to this sinne in Hell, touched him so neere as this, It is the Lord my God whom I haue sinned against. The truth is, sinne doth therefore vndergoe the name of sinne, because it is a breach of some Law of God. Now, that which makes an act to be a sinne, ought especially to be respected in performing of repentance for sinne. The same thing which makes it properly to be a sinne, should bee the mayne ground of griefe and sorrow for committing it. It will not be hard to enlarge this point. Our Sauiour had a meaning to shew this in the Parable of the prodigall [a] sonne: viz. in his words of acknowledgement at his returne vnto his father: Father, I haue sinned against heauen, and before thee. The speciall thing that touched him euen to the quicke, was, that hee had abused and wronged the bountie and kindnesse of so good a father. This made him to insist so much vpon the name of Father; I will goe to my Father, and say vnto him, Father. The miserie which followed his miscarriage, and the beggerie that hee was falne into, these things (though grieuous) troubled him nothing so much, as that he had demeaned himselfe vndutifully to a father. Saint Paul treating to the Corinthians of [b] repentance, a thing which

b 2. Cor. 7.

which can neuer be without ſorrow; [c] doth diſtinguiſh vpon ſorrow: making one a worldly ſorrow, the other a godly. A worldly ſorrow for ſinne is, when the heart is afflicted and grieued for miſdoing, out of ſome by-reſpects only. I terme thoſe by-reſpects, in this which concerne ones ſelfe mainely; as when a mans ſorrow is, becauſe of ſome ſhame or detriment to himſelfe. Thus euen the reprobates doe ſometimes ſorrow: Cain had a ſorrow in reſpect of the [d] puniſhment: PHARAOH howled and tooke on, but it was becauſe of the thunder and the haile; when that was ouer, he was as bad as [e] formerly: ESAV wept, but it was onely for the loſſe of the bleſſing; it mooued him as an inconuenience to himſelfe, not as a treſpaſſe againſt [f] God: Saul was grieued, but not till he heard Samuel ſay, that [g] the Lord had caſt him away from being King: AHAB humbled himſelfe, and put on Sackloth, but it was becauſe the Prophet had greeted him from God, with the bringing [h] of euill vpon his houſe, and with the taking away of his poſteritie. This is a worldly ſorrow, and when a man goeth no further then this, this is vnto him but the meſſenger of death. Now the godly ſorrow is of another nature: a way is made to it, by the apprehenſion of theſe ſharper things, ſuch as are the conſequences of ſinne. For ſhame amongſt men, and the feare of Hell, theſe things doe profitably worke vpon the conſciences of Gods children, and hereby their hearts are pricked: but at laſt they come to this, to grieue more for the offence againſt God, then for any manner of reſpect vnto themſelues: ſo that albeit there were no Hell, nor puniſhment to bee looked for, and that they could carrie the matter ſo, as that no diſgrace nor ſhame with men could happen to them, yet this would wound them, and that deepely, that they haue diſhonoured God. Thus is the godly ſorrow. This proceedeth from that Spirit which Paul calleth [i] the Spirit of Adoption: the other floweth from that in the ſame place hee termes, the Spirit of Bondage. The ſlaue wiſheth his offence vndone, becauſe of the whip: the ingenuous child grieues at the diſpleaſure of his father, and accounts himſelfe worthy of the whip for doing that. As this ſorrow iſſueth out of this Spirit, ſo it brings forth ſuch a repentance, as Paul perſwaded to, by the name of [k] Repentance towards God: meaning thereby ſuch a repentance, as the reſpect of the ſoule to God hath cauſed. A man grieues for ſinne, becauſe God is diſpleaſed: a man hates ſinne, becauſe God abhorres it: a man reſolues to forſake it, becauſe God requires it. This is repentance towards God. A rightly diſpoſed Chriſtian looketh more vpon whom he hath offended, then vpon what he hath deſerued by offending. This is that which is vpon the matter required in the firſt Commandement, which binds vs to this, that our regard to God in all things ſhould haue the preeminence. My loue of good muſt be more for Gods ſake, then the rewards ſake: my deſire of heauen muſt bee more for the fruition of God there, then for my owne ſaluation there: my griefe for ſinne more becauſe God is offended, then becauſe my ſoule is indangered: nay, I ought to carrie that minde, rather to hazzard my ſoule for the auoiding of ſinne, then to auoid ſinne only only out of this respect, that I may saue my soule. This may serue for the opening of the Doctrine. It was Dauids maine griefe, that hee had sinned against the Lord.

The Vse. This is to bee made vse of as a marke of triall, whether wee bee the Children of God or no; and whether that repentance, which perhaps we imagine we haue practised, and doe practise, is vntained. It may bee thou hast had in thee at times some kind of remorse, some manner of compunction, thy heart hath been strooken for thy committed euils, and it hath beene so with thee, that thou hast earnestly wished that such and such things thou hadst neuer done. This I will not say hath beene amisse simply. But now consider thy selfe well what it is which doth afflict thee most, and what thought it is among others, by which thou art tormented chiefely: the thought of shame, the thought of iudgement, the thought of Hell, or the thought of God. I will not discommend it in thee, that shame hath made thee sensible of offending: Paul tooke aduantage to worke vpon the Romans, out of their [l] being ashamed of former euils: and hee had a desire, to bring men to shame for some particulars: [m] Some haue not the knowledge of God, I speake this to your shame. [n] Haue no company (saith he) [n] with the disobedient and stubborne person, that he may be ashamed: a good preparation to repentance. It was commendable in Ezra that [o] hee was ashamed to lift vp his eyes: so neither will I checke thee for it, if thy heart be astonished and appaled with the feare of iudgement and damnation. Wee are taught by Christ, to feare [p] God, because of his power to cast into Hell. It was good in Dauid that his flesh did tremble for feare of God, and that [q] hee was afraid of his iudgements: and in Iob, that [r] the punishment of God was fearefull vnto him. But this is it which I perswade thee to trie thy selfe by; What thinkest thou if there were no shame, no danger, no punishment, neither in this world nor in the next, no more to be considered in it, but that God hath forbidden it, hee will dislike it and take it in ill part that thou dost this, and that? canst thou for all this, in case there were no more in it then so, find thy selfe inclineable to sorrow for euils past, and to a purpose of amendment for the time to come; or at the least, dost thou striue to bring thy selfe to this, and out of a knowledge that it ought to be so, labour that with thee and in thee it may be so? this shall be a certaine testimony to thy soule, that thou art a child of God, and that thou art a practitioner of that repentance, which Saint Paul calleth a [s] repentance neuer to be repented of. I pray let vs learne this point, as a point of speciall behoofe to bee made vse of for our resolution in this important matter, I meane our state towards God, and the sincerities and truth of our repentance. It is possible for a Reprobate, for an Hypocrite to bee grieued; such an one may wish from his heart, that some particulars of his actions could be recalled. Doubtlesse, Iudas if he could haue vndone that which hee had done in betraying of Christ, he would rather then any thing haue effected it. But here is the thing; I may be sorrie I haue done amisse, I Note. may determine to doe so no more, and yet my disposition to sinne, my affection affection and loue to euill, bee the same it was: perhaps if I could doe euill safely, in regard of the knowledge of men, and securely, without hazarding my selfe vpon the wrath of God, I would to it againe with a full bent. This is nothing but a spirit of bondage, my respect is herein wholly to my selfe, to God nothing. But if I striue to this, that I may hate sinne, and lothe it, because God abhorres it, and may resolue euen for his sake not to doe it, though in regard of any danger to my selfe, I need not feare it; this is of the Spirit of Adoption, and this was the truth of Dauids disposition in this case. And this is it which limits the children of God, and keepes them within compasse, after they haue receiued the witnesse of Gods Spirit with theirs, that they are the Lords, and that they shall vndoubtedly be saued. Some account this a Doctrine of presumption, and thinke there is a window opened to all manner of licentiousnesse, when men are come to be ascertayned, that nó sinne whatsoeuer shall be laid vnto their charge, no euill shall be able to separate them from the loue of God. But when they are come to this hope, and haue receiued many testimonies of their being so in the state of grace, as that they shall neuer be cast off, the sense of Gods loue, the respect to his Maiestie, the knowledge of sinne to be lothsome in his eyes, preuaileth more with them, both to watchfulnesse, that they may not offend, and to remorse of soule when they haue slipt, then all feare of Hell or of punishment whatsoeuer: nay, euen when by pledges of Adoption, the feare of hell is vtterly remoued, yet they make more conscience of sinne, and are more grieued for offending God, then when in respect of their estate with God, they were most vncertaine. Thus for this, Dauids sorrow for his sin, because it was against God: an abuse of his mercy, an ill requitall of his many fauours, a neglect of his Word, which ought to haue swayed with him aboue all. Let vs proceed, and let vs search and sift this place yet further, to see what holy instruction it may yeeld vs. Thus therefore,

The second Doctrine.

That to sinne without due respect to the sight of God in sinning, is so much the greater sinne, and ought to be a cause of greater sorrow. We must conceiue of Dauid here, as of a most exact patterne, both of a man rightly iudging of sinne, and of one effectually grieuing for sinne. Now consider a little how it was: Dauid saw his sinne now in the true state and proportion of it, and conceiued of it as it was. O Lord (thought he) what a wretch was I? nay, what a beast was I? I was carefull to carry the matter closely, and I strayned my wits to deuise couerts for my wickednesse: I was very industrious that men might not vnderstand what I did: I would haue had my fault with BATHSHEBA cloked by the company of her husband: I imagined if I could haue done so, it had beene all well: that not succeeding, I deuised a plot to haue him slaine, yea, so slaine, as that no man might suspect me to be the authour of his death, and that in hope by the marriage of the widdow, to hide my adulterie from the world. Herein I preuailed, and with this I flattered my soule in secret, thinking my selfe safe and out of danger. Thus I respected thine all-seeing eye and knowledge but a little: I imagined, that if I could escape the notice of the world, I should doe well enough for thy thy knowing: but now, now Lord, I see to my shame and griefe, and to the wounding of my soule, that I was in an exceeding fault, so little to respect thy sight. It grieueth me now aboue all, that I should aduenture vpon such a wickednesse before thy face, and that I should dare in thy presence to commit such an haynous sinne. Oh, why did I forget, that thou wert an Obseruer of my whole carriage? thou sawest the lust of my heart, when I looked wantonly vpon BATHSHEBA: thou sawest the passage of my Messengers to and fro: thou sawest when shee came secretly to my Chamber: I caused all to goe out from me, but I could not shut out thee: I shrowded my selfe in the mantle of the night, but to thee the darkenesse and the light are both alike: I made the Curtaynes to be drawne about me, but all was naked before thee, no Canopie being able to keepe off thy piercing view. I sent for VRIAH from the Campe, vnder a shew of hearing by his report the course of the Warres: I perswaded him to goe to his house, with a pretext to haue pity on his trauell: I gaue directions in priuate to IOAB, for placing him so in the battaile, as he must needs be slaine: I gaue it out that it was the fortune of the Warres that hee was dead, and thereto to be imputed: I comforted his Wife with these fayned words, and thought by a speedy marriage with her to saluc vp all: but in all these thou knewest my heart, and not a particular of my course there was but thou obseruedst it. Wo is me, that I should not thinke on this before, and that I should make so little account of thy presence: what haue I got by secreting this from man, sith there is not any the smallest portion of it vnto thee vnknowne? Thus it was an improuement of Dauids sorrow, thus did it rend his heart the more, thus did his sinne seeme the more foule and haynous to him, because hee had beene so regardlesse of Gods eye: he was afraid to sinne before men, but thought it nothing to offend before the Lord. And had not (thinke we) Dauid cause thus to be affected with this thought? To thinke God looks not on whatsoeuer we are doing, is a kind of Atheisme. The Spirit of God describing a wicked [t] man, proues him [u] to thinke alwaies there is no God: [x] because he saith in his heart, God hideth his face, and will neuer see. If a man thinke God looks on, yet slights it ouer without regard, he doth (as it were) not care though he see: how can this be lesse then impietie? he is loth man should see him, but yet is not afraid though God behold him: is not this a breach of the first Commandement, and an esteeming of man, more then God? I doe not maruaile though it went to Dauids heart, and that hee insisted vpon this as an aggrauation of his sinne, that hee had not feared euen in the sight and presence of his glorious Maiestie to offend. No doubt, this made him sensible of some dregs of Atheisme in himselfe; hee saw hee could not cleere himselfe from a kind of contempt of God. I remember a speech of Ezraes in his confession: [y] Behold, wee are before thee in our trespasse; as if hee said, We haue the more cause of humiliation and sorrow, because wee had no more regard of thy presence: wee gaue the aduenture, because we could find how to excuse the matter to the world; but we stood not in so much awe of thee as we should: but now we see that we were all the while in thy view, and because of our neglect thereof,

we now perceiue we cannot ſtand before thee, if thou ſhouldeſt proceede againſt vs in extremitie. This may ſuffice in briefe, for the laying open of this point. A ſinne is euer ſo much the more foule, by how much the more the Committer of it, did, in committing it, forget Gods beholding it. O, ſaid DAVID, I did euill in thy ſight, and yet I feared it not. I made no ſuch account of thy preſence as became me: how it vexeth me, that I durſt be ſo vile before thee, and ſtucke not vpon the doing of that whiles thou lookedſt on, which I would haue beene aſhamed to haue done, if the meaneſt Officer in my houſe, or the baſeſt Groome in my ſtable had beene by.

This ſerues to be a direction to vs in the practice of repentance. This Pſalme is on purpoſe come to our hands by the prouidence of God, for our guidance in this great dutie of humiliation for ſinne before GOD, without which there can bee no ſaluation. Hee that intends to humble himſelfe before God in priuate for any ſpeciall ſinne, this muſt bee his courſe, if he will doe himſelfe right; he muſt muſter together all circumſtances that he can poſſibly call to mind, which may any way tend to the improuement of his fault. A man muſt not ſpare his fault in this caſe. It is beſt rather to endeuour the aggrauating of it, then in any degree or meaſure, to mince or diminiſh it. The more ſinne ſhall wound our ſoules, the more we are prepared for the Balme of grace to be powred in. Now among other circumſtances, this is a mayne one to bee inquired into, whether at any time thou tookeſt heart to doe amiſſe by the hope of ſecrecy. If at any time it hath beene ſo with thee, that thou haſt aduentured the doing of that, notwithſtanding the Lords looking on, which thy heart knoweth thou wouldeſt not haue performed, in caſe the meaneſt or ſillieſt amongſt men had ſeene thee, learne by this place, and by the worthy Author of this Pſalme, to labour thy ſoule to an eſpeciall degree of humiliation euen for this: O Lord, euen in thy ſight haue I not feared to doe naughtily. I beleeue there are many, to whoſe care and practice the vſe of this point may be well commended. Thinke we with our ſelues, how many times we haue become bold to doe amiſſe, becauſe no eye of man hath ouer-ſeene vs. Much wantonneſſe, much falſhood, much backbiting, many omiſſions of ſpeciall duties to God, many neglects, many iniuries in regard of men are carryed out ſecurely with this; No man beholds vs: the ſight of God all the while is little reckoned of. Let vs bee ſure to remember this in the practice of Repentance, and in the examination and ſurueying of our ſelues. By no meanes let vs paſſe this ouer. If we haue at any time feared the eye of man, more then Gods ſeeing, let vs know, that that very particular doth challenge at our hands a meaſure of Repentance more then ordinarie. 1. Vſe.

Secondly, wee are taught here, that inaſmuch as it is ſuch an aggrauation of ſinne, when the eye of Gods Maieſtie is not duely thought vpon, therefore we ſhould endeuour euer to be ſenſible of this; that whereſoeuer we be, or whatſoeuer wee goe about, wee are before the Lord, not ſo much as a word or a thought being hidden from his knowledge. How direct the Scripture is in this, we haue beene often taught: The eyes of the 2. Vſe.

z Lord in euery place behold the euill and the good. a Can any hide himselfe in secret places, that I shall not see him, saith the Lord,&c? All things b are open vnto his eyes with whom we haue to doe. The very inward meanings of the heart the Lord seeth, as is the true Translation of that saying of c Moses. Though the heart be seated in such a darkesome Closet, that man himselfe whose it is, albeit he would giue a world for a sight thereof, yet could not haue it; yet the Lord beholds it: there is not so much as a thought priuily conceiued there, but hee descryeth it; not a sparke of lust so softly blowne and kindled, but he discernes it; bee it but the smallest seed of vngodlinesse, and neuer so warily couered, yet he obserues it: d The Lord knoweth the hearts of all the sonnes of men: e Hee searcheth all hearts, and vnderstandeth all the imaginations of thoughts. This is a matter of especiall behoofe to bee well thought vpon. It is not our muffling, like Tamar, nor our hiding behind the doore, like Sarah; nor our running among the bushes, like Adam; nor our burying our selues in the keele of the ship with Ionah, that can shroud vs from the Lord: the bolting of the lodging, the closing of the windowes, none of these deuices can preuaile in this case. God knoweth still what thou art doing, and what thou art thinking, euen a great deale better then thy selfe. Labour wee to haue this euer in our thoughts, and when wee finde our selues affected with a kind of awe by the looke of man; let vs thinke what an horrible thing it is, if we shall not be strooken with a regard vnto the Maiestie of God much more. If euer wee come to Dauids feeling, this small respect vnto the sight of God, will grieue our soules aboue all. Thus haue I obserued two speciall causes of Dauids sorrow: First, that he had offended God: Secondly, That he had feared the eyes of men more then his presence. Now, there is somewhat yet to bee noted out of these words, and out of the manner of speech that is here vsed, This euill, &c. Here two things.

The third Doctrin.

First, That in the confession of sinne, it is necessary, as much as possibly one may, to descend into particulars. This is Dauids confession, that we cannot deny; that it is a plat-forme for vs how to confesse, it must needs bee acknowledged. Now, Dauid in confessing, doth not content himselfe with acknowledging of somewhat only in grosse, but hee proceeds, wee see, to the pointing out of particulars; This euill, &c. He passeth not the matter ouer with a generall phrase; Lord, all men are sinners, and so am I: but, O Lord, it is true indeed that I haue sinned against thee, and behold wherein, here is among others a mayne offence, a particular euill which I haue done. This, O Lord, this is it which I haue at this time speciall occasion to acknowledge. Thus at another time he insisted vpon the particular, in his humiliation for the fault of numbring the people: f I haue sinned exceedingly in that I haue done. Thus Ezra in that oft remembred confession, besides the general acknowledgement, that g his and the peoples iniquities were increased ouer their heads, and their trespasse growne vp to heauen, falleth into the particular of matching with the vncircumcised h Nations. See also Nehemiah the ninth, where it is said in the beginning of the Chapter, that the children of Israel being assembled, stood and confessed their sinnes: what specialties are ripped vp, both of Gods fauours to their state, and of their abusings of his goodnesse. There is in that Chapter, whoso shall obserue it, a great exactnesse and diligence that way, euen to enlarge particular euils, and to lay them open before the Lord in their full proportion. The like shall we find in Daniels [i] prayer: there is first the general, [k] We haue sinned, we haue committed iniquitie, and done wickedly: then there follow particulars, We would not obey thy seruants the [l] Prophets: wee haue not heard thy [m] voyce: we made not our prayer before the Lord our [n] God. They were baptized of IOHN in Iordan, confessing their [o] sinnes: Those verie words testifie a descending into particulars: their sinnes, the euils whereof they were specially and particularly guiltie, those they acknowledged: that is, so much the more manifest by their comming vnto Iohn for particular [p] directions, What shall wee doe, &c? an argument that they had sight of their particular faylings, inasmuch as euery seuerall ranke of people was desirous to know, how to giue particular euidence of amendment. Did not Paul bind himselfe to an acknowledgement of particulars, when he setteth downe with his owne pen, that he was a persecutor, a blasphemer, and an [q] oppressor, when he talkes of lust discouered vnto him to be sinne, by the knowledge of the Law, and of the ouer-ruling tyrannie thereof, in carrying captiue vnto those verie things which his soule [r] abhorred? Many of them that beleeued (saith the text of the Ephesian Conuerts) came and [s] confessed. Thinke wee they carried the matter in termes of generall acknowledgement? No, their bringing out into publique of the bookes of those that vsed curious arts, to burne them before [t] all, is a signe that they fell into a suruey of particular sinnes. If this were not verie behoofefull, what should wee thinke to haue beene the reason of [u] Peters course, in labouring the repentance of his hearers, by drawing them into the consideration of a speciall sinne, and by pressing it vpon their conscience so, as that they might plainely see their owne personall guilt in that behalfe? Hee is at them againe in the like [x] sort. The truth is, that this is the next way to bring to that measure of humiliation that is necessarie. While a man goeth no further than this, I know I am a sinner, and so we are all; this neuer workes to any more than a formall kind of repentance, as Lord, haue mercie on me, &c. God, forgiue vs, &c. But when a mans heart is touched with the apprehension of particulars, here is this euill, and that euill, and the other that I haue fayled in, and euerie of them hath these & these circumstances to enlarge it: this wounds the hart, this humbleth the soule, this makes the repentance to become vnfayned. It is said, that [y] if we would iudge our selues, we should not bee iudged. To scape Gods future iudgement, wee must now fall into a iudging of our selues: and in this we must (as much as we may) imitate the same course which the Lord wil then hold. Now what will the Lord doe? will he onely lay it vnto mens charge in generall termes that they are sinners? Nay, I will reproue thee, and set thy sins in order before [z] thee: he will bring euerie worke to [a] iudgement: hee will lighten

The Vſe. We ſee now ſtill what directions we are furniſhed with, by Gods prouidence, for the neceſſarie duetie of repentance. I taught out of the title of this Pſalme, that when the heart is touched indeed, then there is ſtill found an aptneſſe to confeſſe: now here we ſee what is required to confeſſion, an inquirie for particulars. It is neuer as it ſhould bee, till a man be able and apt to charge himſelfe before God with this and this. Wee may finde this in experience, that there be many who will not ſticke at a generall ſpeech, that they be ſinners, and yet will ſcarſely be knowne of one ſpeciall euill to account for. If you fall with them into the ſeuerall Commandements, they will be readie to diſcouer a conceit, that there is ſcarſe one that they are faultie in. In the firſt Commandement they acknowledge no God but one, in the ſecond they doe not worſhip Images, in the third they ſweare as little as any, and neuer but for the truth; in the fourth, they keepe their Church on Sundayes as well as moſt: in the ſecond table, there is neyther Treaſon, nor murder, nor theft, nor whoredome, nor the like groſſe ſinne, but concerning it they are readie to proteſt their innocencie. He that ſhall heare them in particulars, I doe not ſee, how he ſhall beleeue them in the generall, when they ſay they be ſinners: for when you arraigne them at the ſeuerall Commandements, they are readie to plead not-guiltie to them all: ſo long as men are thus without ſenſe and apprehenſion of particulars, there is no hope of bringing them euer vnto good. Happie is he that is pricked at the heart with the feeling of This euill. The truth of repentance for that one, will bring him to a thorow-repentance for his whole eſtate. This one euill thorowly vnderſtood, brought Dauid on his knees, brake his heart, melted his ſoule, made him crie for pardon, beg for purging, and importune the Lord for a free Spirit to eſtabliſh him. Labour then by all meanes, to be able to charge thy conſcience with particulars before God. This will make ſinne bitter vnto thee, and mercie ſweet vnto thy Soule. And by this now we may ſee the neceſſitie of beeing thorowly acquainted with the Law of God: By the Lawe commeth the knowledge of [c] ſinne. This Lawe is exceeding [d] large: and within the compaſſe thereof it compriſeth many things: the more a man ſhall view himſelfe in this glaſſe, the more faults hee ſhall ſpie out in himſelfe. This is the reaſon the Deuill laboureth as he doth, to hinder men from the exact vnderſtanding

d Pſal.119.96.

derſtanding and knowledge of the Law, and indeuoureth to cheriſh in them a kind of contentednesse with the generall words; againſt which if they be no treſpaſſers, he is apt to perſwade them that their ſinnes be but few, and that there is no great matter for which they are countable before the Lord. Vpon the ſame ground Satan breeds in mens hearts a diſtaſte of the powerfull preſſing and application of Gods Word; hee knoweth well that his Kingdome is neuer like to receiue any loſſe, vntill men come to the knowledge of particulars: when their ſinnes are once in order preſented to their thoughts, then he is ſure they are in the way to bee ſet looſe from his yoke, and to bee tranſlated into the glorious libertie of Gods ſonnes. Let this therefore be our ayme, to be acquainted with our particular failings, that when wee haue occaſions to talke with God, we may be able to ſay, This and this, O Lord, is the euill I haue done: and it ſhall bee neceſſarie for vs that are Miniſters, for the furtherance hereof, to open vnto the people the ſecrets of the Law. Men offend in many things, not knowing they offend, and all becauſe the depth of the Law is not diſcouered to them. It ſhall be our part to helpe them herein, that they may bee brought to ſee the length, and depth, and bredth, and height of euery ſeuerall Commandement, and ſo may be the better acquainted with their owne eſtates in reſpect of ſinne. This is the firſt thing which I haue thought to bee conſidered out of theſe words. The other followeth [Euill] thus,

The fourth Doctrine.

That ſinne rightly conſidered, is to be termed euill. Wee muſt thinke it is not for nothing that Dauid calls his ſinne, Euill. Indeede, it is an ordinarie title by which ſinne is ſtiled in the Scripture. It were eaſie to heape vp places, if in a matter ſo apparant, it were neceſſary. Well may it be ſo called and ſo reputed: Firſt, In reſpect of the Author of it, the Deuill: who is called, [e] The euill one: ſuch as is the author, ſuch is the effect. Secondly, In regard of it ſelfe being produced; it is the ſource and fountaine of all euils in the world whatſoeuer: whatſoeuer there is which men account Euill, whence proceedeth it but from ſinne? It is that which hath infected the whole world: and what change and declining there is in the creature, from the firſt eſtate of excellencie wherein God created it, it is ſinne only which hath cauſed it. All iudgements, plagues, puniſhments, all manner of miſeries, whether of ſoule or body, whether belonging to this life, or to that which is to come; what are they but the fruits of ſinne? Before ſinne came into the world, there was no manner of hurt, no manner of annoyance in the world: with ſinne came in a world of miſeries, and as ſinne hath increaſed, ſo haue ſuch euils increaſed. Well then might Dauid call ſinne Euill, that hath ſuch an euill father, and which is ſo fruitfull in an euill off-ſpring: what euill ſoeuer there is, vnto only ſinne wee may impute it. Thus briefly.

e Matt.5.37. & 13.19.

2. Vſe.

This is only noted, to beget and increaſe in vs an hatred and a deteſtation of ſinne. The very name of Euill, is abhorring and fearefull vnto nature, yet the Euill of euils is too much delighted in. It is but a paſtime to to [f] some; some doe make a mocke [g] thereof: to some it [h] is so sweet, that they will not forsake it. These be not aware that sinne is euill. Doth he thinke it euill, that in the practice thereof doth place a kind of happinesse, or he that hates to be reformed? Happy we, if we were aduised of the euill of this euill, and knew that howsoeuer it is sometimes coloured and varnished with the shew of good, sometimes allayed with the pretence of tolerable, sometimes presented to our thoughts with hopes of some kind of sweetnesse and contentment to bee found therein; yet it is euill still, and will shew it selfe indeed to be euill in the end: wee can flie and feare the fruits of sinne, as Plagues, Pestilence, Paynes, Dearths, Stormes, and such other euidences of Gods wrath; but yet the thing it selfe euen into our bosomes we can willingly receiue. Remember sinnes name, it is euill, naught: [i] Yee that loue the Lord, hate euill: [k] He that delights in euill, surely, euill shall hunt him to destruction. Thus of this wherein Dauid chargeth himselfe. We see his mayne griefe: he had offended God, and made small account of his presence. Wee see how hee points out the particular wherein he had especially fayled, that he might humble his soule with the knowledge of his particulars. We see how he now calleth that euill, in dislike and lothing, which was sometimes greedily embraced by him as some speciall good. This is the Summe.

The seuenth Lecture.

Vers. 4.

That thou mightest bee iust when thou speakest, and pure when thou iudgest.

How farre Dauid did charge himselfe in respect of his actuall offending, we haue heard. It followeth now next to consider, how diligent he was to discharge God. Dauid in these words submits himselfe to Gods Iustice, and acknowledgeth that whatsoeuer the Lord hath either spoken to him by Nathans ministerie, or done to him in taking away the life of the child begotten in Adulterie, or should hereafter inflict vpon him, it is all but iust: there can bee no aspersion of seueritie, no imputation of iniquitie laid vpon his Maiestie. This is the substance. For the connexion of the two clauses, the former (I meane) of this Verse, and this now read, wee must not so take it, as if Dauid had purposely sinned to make a way for the manifestation and cleering of Gods Iustice, because hee saith, I haue done euill in thy sight, that thou mightest be iust, &c. This word [that] doth not alwaies betoken an intent, but sometimes it declares the sequell and euent of a matter.

For

For thus now it was come to passe by Dauids offending, and by the conuiction of his conscience, that he must needs yeeld the Lord to be iust and pure euery way. Conceiue it (if you please) as if Dauid had thus said; Lord, thou hast by the mouth of NATHAN spoken to me verie sharpely, and threatned against me terrible things, as that thou wouldest raise vp euil against me out of mine owne house, and that my wiues should become a prey to anothers lust: thou also hast strooken the child which VRIAH bare vnto me, and its dead; I dare not say thou hast in these things in the smallest degree dealt too straitly with mee, the guilt of my sinne hath stopped my mouth, and hath taught me to yeeld that all is iust, there is not the least mixture of wrong in thy proceedings: Thou art in thy speaking iust, and in thy iudging pure. Thus is the sense. Let vs consider of the Doctrine. The first obseruation is thus,

The first Doctrine.

That the children of God thorowly conuicted of sinne, are forward to submit themselues euen to Gods seuerest courses towards them, without repining. Dauid is a patterne to vs of the true disposition of Gods children. That hee was in his soule effectually conuicted of sinne, the whole course of this Psalme makes it manifest: that he yeelded himselfe with all submission to haue deserued the vtmost of all that had beene threatned on him, this clause declareth; O Lord, whatsoeuer thou denouncest, whatsoeuer thou inflictest, yet there is with thee not so much as any smell or shadow of iniustice. And that it may appeare that Dauid carried this mind, not at this poynt of time onely, while the wound was fresh bleeding; but that hee was thus still disposed, wee may take notice of that speech of [a] his; when as vpon occasion of Absaloms treason, hee was compelled to abandon the Court and Citie of Ierusalem: Zadok the Priest and the Leuites with him offered their seruice to beare the Arke, that by the presence thereof Dauid in his heauines might haue comfort; Dauid willed them to carrie it backe into the place thereof; If I shall find fauour in the eyes of the Lord, he will bring me againe, &c. But if hee thus say, I haue no delight in thee: Behold, here am I, let him doe to me as seemeth good in his eyes. As if he said, I am resolued to beare whatsoeuer hee shall be pleased to inflict. I am well aduised he can lay no more vpon me than desert: if he doe bring me backe in peace, I shall haue the greater cause of thankefulnesse. If I fall before mine enemies, and be put to the worse, and become a vassall to mine owne sonne; yet I shall not haue any iust matter of complaint. Ioyne to this, as a further testimonie of his constancie in this thought, that memorable speach of [b] his: I know, O Lord, that thy iudgements are right: and, that thou hast afflicted mee iustly. I humbly acknowledge that the heauiest burthen thou hast layed vpon me, and the sharpest rod wherewith thou hast chastened me, is deserued: I will euer say, yea if thou shouldest damne me to the pit of hell, Righteous art thou, O Lord, and iust are thy [c] iudgements. Of the like nature was that speech of old Eli, and it is iustly insisted vpon, as an euidence that hee was the child of God, notwithstanding his great remisnesse in the matter of his two sonnes, and that heauie hand of God vpon him, when hee fell, and brake brake his necke : when SAMVEL told him (as the words are) euerie whit, and hid nothing from him, to wit, that the Lord would doe a thing in Israel (intending therein the iudgement vpon him and his house) whereof whosoeuer should heare, his two eares should tingle : It is the Lord, said

d 1.Sam. 3.18. he : Let him doe what seemeth him d good. A worthie saying sauouring of great meekenesse, and manifestly shewing that he was so sensible of his owne desert, that hee durst not so much as say, it was hard that God should so threaten him. It is the Lord ; his power is absolute, and his iustice is without controll. It brings to mind that of Hezekiah ; hee had cõmitted a great errour, in shewing his treasure, and his armour vnto the Embassadours of the King of Babel ; which howsoeuer it might be borne out by some plea of State and policie, yet the Lord knew it to proceed out of the pride of his heart ; and for that cause sent Isaiah to him with an heauie greeting ; Behold, the dayes come, that all that is in thine house, and which thy fathers haue layed vp in store vntill this day, shall be carried to Babel, &c. What said he? fel he into a rage against the Prophet? Did he chafe and fret ; What haue these Prophets to doe with the Kings businesse ? such a fellow should bee taught to containe himselfe within his owne element. Is this such a matter for a King to complement with Embassadours ? were they not sent from the King of Babel, one of the greatest Monarkes in the World, and was it not fit to entertaine them with respect ? No such thing fell from Hezekiahs mouth ; but being conuicted of folly, he acknowledged the Lord to be iust in his threatnings, e *Isa.*39.8. and pure in his censure : e The Word of the Lord is good which thou hast spoken. It is but right for the Lord thus to punish my vanity. That same confession made by Ezra, hath beene fruitfull in yeelding sundrie proofes since our entry into this Psalme : It will be of vse to vs in this poynt also ; note the words of ver. 10. Chap. 9. Now, our God, what shall we say after this ? for we haue forsaken thy Commandements. What can we plead? wherein can we accuse thee of seuerity, when as looking backe vpon our selues, we see how wee haue broken thy Commandements ? If we should goe about to reply vpon thee, our owne consciences will enioyne vs silence, and not suffer vs to proceed. I cannot passe
f *Nehem.*9.33 ouer that speech of the humbled people : f Surely thou art iust in all that is come vpon vs : for thou hast dealt truely, but wee haue done wickedly. The affliction which thou hast laid vpon vs is great, and wee pray thee that it may not seeme a little before thee ; yet whatsoeuer it is, we yeeld it to be iust. rather he magnified God, and kissed the rod with which he was beaten; [k] Blessed be the name of the Lord. I know, that extremity of anguish did after wring from him some vnfitting words, as if he had had too great a burthen put vpon him; but when he was (as I set it downe of purpose in the doctrine) thorowly conuicted, then he learned to know what it was to striue with the Almightie, then he laid his hand vpon his mouth, and recalled his errour; [l] once haue I spoken, but I will answere no more, &c.: so that I deny not but some weakenesse this way, sometimes discouereth it selfe in Gods dearest seruants: as once euen Dauid thought it somewhat strange, that he was chastened euery morning, being so carefull as he was to [m] wash his hands in innocency, then, his feet were almost gone: but at last vpon better consideration, he came to [n] that, Yet my Soule keepeth silence vnto God. Thus I haue at full shewed you the common disposition of Gods children once thorowly touched with a feeling of their sinnes. The truth is, they are so affected with the apprehension of them, and they seeme so vgly and so foule vnto them, that they doe rather wonder at the Lords forbearance, and marueile at it that hee layeth no more vpon them, then grudge at that which is inflicted as too heauy: a matter plainely and directly to be gathered out of that speech taught the people by [o] IEREMIAH; It is the Lord: as if he said, We cannot complaine that it is with vs as it is; nay, we must acknowledge, that if it were not for the Lords great mercie, and dealing more fauourably and gently with vs then we can deserue, we should long ere this haue beene quite swept away from the [p] Earth, euen as a man sweepeth away dung till all bee gone. And because one contrary makes the other more apparant, therefore to giue some more light to this point, let this be noted, how it is the propertie of the wicked to obiect against God, and to complaine against his dealings as too hard. Kain repined against his punishment, as too [q] great: Saul tooke it ill to be charged with disobedience euen when the matter was most [r] palpable: when Ahab was reproued for letting Benhadad the King of Aram to escape, whom the Lord had purposely put into his hands that he might die, he [s] went to his house heauy, and in displeasure: he accounted himselfe wronged, to be so taken vp. In Isaiahs time, the Lord was faine to prouoke the people to a pleading with him, and was constrained to submit his courses vnto scanning, they were so forward to impute vnto him an excesse in seuerity: So in the dayes of [t] Ieremiah, I remember how God was wont to instruct that Prophet, how to answere the people in their obiecting against his proceedings; as, [u] When they shall say, Wherefore doth the Lord our God doe these things vnto vs? then thou shalt answere them, Like as yee haue forsaken mee, &c. and so [x] otherwhere: an argument that they thought themselues more straightly vsed then they had deserued; What is our iniquitie, or what is our sinne, that we haue committed against the Lord our God? After the same manner in the time of [y] Ezekiel, they began to contest with God, that his way was not equall: and thereupon tooke it vp as a by-word, The fathers haue eaten sowre grapes, and the childrens teeth are set on edge.

They

They thought it vnreasonable, that they should beare the punishment of their fathers sinnes, not considering their succeeding them therein. Indeed, they were their wayes which were vnequall, yet would they lay that imputation vpon [y] Gods. How ordinarie was it with some, while Malachy propheſied, to reply vpon euery particular, which was vrged against them in the Name of the Lord; [z] Wherein haue wee diſpiſed thy Name? [a] Wherein haue wee wearied him? [b] Wherein ſhall wee returne? [c] Wherein haue wee ſpoyled him? [d] Wherein haue wee ſpoken againſt him? Thus in their opinion, it was all without cauſe which was reproued in them, or denounced against them. Nay, this humour of turning againe, as it were to challenge God, is noted to remaine in the wicked, euen when ſentence is paſſed on them, and that they are euen going away to execution Then, euen then ſhall they ſay, [e] Lord, when ſaw wee thee an hungred, &c? as if they thought themſelues to be condemned against equitie. Thus wee may ſtill ſee how the leſſe grace, the more vntowardneſſe to ſubmit to God; and they which haue moſt feeling of their owne deſert, are moſt readie by all meanes to acquit the Lord.

The Vſe. The beſt vſe that we can put this point vnto, is to apply it to the triall of our ſelues. This Spirit of meekneſſe, when we heare God ſpeaking to vs by his Word, or feele his Hand vpon vs in any manner of affliction, is a iuſt matter of reioycing whereſoeuer it is found. Hath thy heart beene at any time wrought vpon, by the powerfull application of the Word? hath it ſeemed to thee as if thou hadſt beene perſonally and directly ſpoken to, in regard of ſome ſpeciall ſinne wherein thou haſt beene found out? Hath the Rod of God ſeized on thee in any particulars, which haue gone neere vnto thee? Conſider, how vpon theſe occaſions thou haſt found thy ſelfe affected; haſt thou laboured to repreſſe and keepe downe in thy ſelfe all raigning and tumultuous thoughts, and to yeeld to God in the vnfayned and ſincere acknowledgement of his Righteouſneſſe, thinking rather thou art too ſparingly and too mildly, then too ſeuerely dealt with? This thou mayeſt iuſtly reioyce in, as a teſtimonie of a good heart; this is indeed a fruit of that quiet Spirit, which Saint Peter ſaith, [f] is before God a thing much ſet by. But if thou art apt to ſwell against reproofe, and to fret in the day of tribulation, as if ſome wrong or iniurie were done vnto thee, and more put vpon thee then thou haſt deſerued, thou art readie to thinke (Why ſhould I be thus dealt with?) Surely, if thou canſt cheriſh thy ſelfe herein, and pleaſe thy ſelfe in this gaine-ſaying humour, it is a token of an vnhumbled and of a rebellious ſoule. It is a ſigne, that thou haſt not the vnderſtanding and knowledge of thine owne ſelfe, which a Chriſtian ought to haue. This is a matter which will diſcouer many to faile exceedingly. Let it bee obſerued in experience, how much adoe many haue to beare with patience, the preſſing of the Word vpon their conſciences, how readie the moſt are to murmure, and to grudge in the time of affliction, what little yeelding there is when God ſheweth his power, and his wrath by generall viſitations; ſooner ſhall you heare men complaine, and repine, then acknowledge the equitie

of Gods dealing in respect of their owne sinnes. Let, I say, this bee noted in experience, and it will strait appeare, that they bee not many which haue learned to say with DAVID, O Lord, thou art iust when thou speakest, and pure when thou iudgest. If men were perswaded that God did deale according to the right, euen in his straightest courses, and that their sinnes are the cause of all that comes, they would then bee as diligent to remooue their sinnes by a quicke repentance, as they are desirous to haue Gods hand taken off, and themselues eased of the burthen that is laid vpon them. I pray take due notice of this point: for whoso tryeth it, shall finde it no easie thing to keepe downe his owne passions; and when he feeleth the stripes of the Lord to smart indeede, to acknowledge with a calme and subdued heart, O Lord, it is thou which iudgest, and it is but iust, all this which thou inflictest. He hath attained to a great measure of grace that is come thus farre. Wee shall find our selues more inclinable a great deale, to stand vpon termes of our innocencie, and to thinke it somewhat strange, that wee carrying our selues as wee doe, better as wee imagine then any others, should yet bee vsed with more sharpenesse, then it seemes they are. Remember then this, what an euidence of a sanctified Spirit it is, if when thou art censured by the authoritie of the Word, thou canst say with HEZEKIAH, This word which thou hast spoken is good: and if when thou art afflicted in any kinde, thou canst yeeld with Nehemiah, and say, Surely, Lord, thou art iust in all that is come vpon me: thou hast dealt truely, it is I that haue done wickedly. Hee that is sensible of his owne deserts, will quickly be brought to this submisse and yeelding disposition. This is the Vse: which yet I cannot but stretch further, to the laying open of that presumption which wee find in the world ordinarie at this day, in mens calling the equitie of Gods decrees touching man into question. There is nothing more manifest in the Scripture then this, [g] that God worketh all things according to the counsell of his owne will: [h] that hee hath mercie on whom he will, and whom he will he hardeneth: that he hath appointed some to bee vessels of mercy, to the praise of the glorie of his grace; [i] some to bee vessels of wrath, to make his power to be knowne: Yet what more vsuall, then to dispute how this of God can agree with iustice; and with what equitie or reason hee can punish that sinne, which by vertue of a decree was vnauoidable. This is an vsuall Theame for many to trie their wits on; and it is strange, what sawcie, peremptorie, and blasphemous speeches, many sometimes in their cups, and when their full dishes are before them, doe, concerning this point, breake out into: when men talke thus presumptuously, and without feare set their mouth against heauen, and dare reduce God to such termes of reason, as they haue fancied to themselues, it is a signe of a graceless heart; [k] Wo be to him that striueth against his Maker. The Spirit of God puts another manner of disposition into those in whom it is; It makes those that are the Lords, not to dare to entertaine so much as a conceit, that there should bee iniustice with God. If they cannot conceiue how this or that should stand with equitie, they will rather impute it to their owne weakneſſe in apprehending, then imagine any ill in Gods dealing. When they looke into themſelues, and ſee what corruptions ſwarme together in their owne boſoms, they will rather wonder at it that God ſhould ſaue any, then be forward to cenſure it, if hee ſhould condemne all. In this therefore as well as in ſuch particulars, which touch our owne perſons more eſpecially and directly, let vs alſo learne to ſhew our making vſe of this Doctrine. When we conſider Gods courſes, either in the determination of all things vnchangeably beforehand, or in the adminiſtration of euery thing in the world, if we ſee any thing ſtrange and difficult, which we are ready in our corruption to controll, let vs labour to checke our ſelues in our forwardneſſe, and ſtill to reſt vpon this, O Lord, whatſoeuer we imagine, yet thou wilt ſtill be iuſt in thy ſayings, and pure in thy proceedings. SALOMON held it wiſdome for a man to take heed of controlling the actions of an earthly King: [l] Who ſhall ſay vnto him, What doeſt thou? O man, who art thou then that ſhalt diſpute againſt God! The ſame Salomon ſaith, [m] That the heart of a King is vnſearchable; hauing reference, as I ſuppoſe, to the myſteries of State, and policies of Gouernement: ſo that there may be in a courſe preſcribed and followed by a King in his gouernement, ſome ſecret reaſon, which the common Subiect cannot driue vnto. Wee muſt thinke it in Gods matters much more. [n] It is the glorie of God, to conceale a thing ſecret. There may be Equitie when we ſee it not, and Iuſtice when we conceiue it not. It ought to be enough for me and thee, that the Lord will haue it ſo. His will is the rule of Iuſtice; ſuch Iuſtice as we are tyed vnto, we muſt not tye his will vnto. Thus then is this point directly gathered out of Dauids ſcope; which was to manifeſt the thought of his heart, touching the Lords dealing with him. Hee would haue all the world know that hee bare all that befell him with an yeelding ſpirit, and he durſt not any way charge the Lord with too much rigour. This is the fruit of an humbled ſoule. Hee that is aware of his owne deſert, doth rather wonder at Gods indulgence, then any way repine or murmure at his Iuſtice. Thus of the firſt. Another Doctrine is to be drawne from hence, and it is thus;

The ſecond Doctrine.

That that which Gods Miniſters ſpeake by vertue of their office, is to be taken as the Word and Speech of God himſelfe. This is obſeruable out of the words (When thou ſpeakeſt.) That which Nathan ſpake, he accounted it the Lords ſpeaking. For in the iudgement of ſuch as I haue read vpon this place; Dauid had here reference vnto that meſſage of reproofe and threatning, which was brought vnto him by [o] Nathan. Nathan ſpake it but by authoritie from the Lord, and as a Prophet ſent from him, and therefore Dauid accounted it as more then a mans word: hee termed it Gods owne ſpeaking. So that it is plaine, that God ſpeaketh in his Miniſters: As hee ſpake, ſaith Zachariah in his Song (ſpeaking touching God,) [p] by the mouth of his holy Prophets. God ſpake by their mouth. That which they deliuered was no leſſe to be reputed Gods Word, then if the Lord himſelfe had vttered it in ſome ſuch

ſuch ſort, as he ſpake of old vnto ſome, or as he deliuered the Law vpon Mount Sinai. Hereupon is that ordinarie phraſe in the Prophets; The Word of the Lord, which came vnto, or by ſuch a Prophet: and againe, according to the Word of the Lord, which ſuch or ſuch an one ſpake. God told IEREMIAH, [q] I haue put my Words in thy mouth. [r] God made a Couenant with Chriſt, that thoſe words of his which he put into his mouth, ſhould not depart out of the mouth of his ſeede, nor out of the mouth of the ſeede of his ſeede, from henceforth euen for euer: which is an abſolute aſſurance, that God will ſpeake to his Church by the mouth of his Miniſters to the end of the World. [s] We haue not obeyed the voice of the Lord our God, by the miniſtry of his ſeruants the Prophets: he calleth that the Lords voice, which came vnto the people by the Prophets miniſtry. Hee that heareth you, heareth me, ſaith Chriſt to his Diſciples, when he ſent them forth to [t] preach: an argument that he ſpake in them, their Doctrine was his Word. God doth beſeech you through vs, ſaith Paul: and, [u] wee pray you in Chriſts ſtead: he ſaith againe, [x] The Word of his preaching was indeed the Word of God. And that this opinion is to be had of all Gods Miniſters perpetually, may be gathered out of that promiſe of Chriſt: [y] Lo, I am with you alway vntill the end of the world: which cannot be reſtrayned to the Apoſtles, who haue ſerued their times, and are now at reſt; but belongs to thoſe Paſtors and Teachers, to whom the Lord giueth gifts, for the gathering together of his Saints, vntill the end of time. How is Chriſt with them, but by teaching and enabling them what to ſay, and by reuealing by them his minde vnto his Church? Hence is it, that as Chriſt is termed [z] the ſonne of Righteouſneſſe, ſo his Miniſters are called [a] Starres. And therefore as the light of the Starres is, by way of reflection, the very light of the Sunne, which they receiue from thence, and returne vpon earth; ſo is the Doctrine of Chriſts Miniſters, the very Doctrine of Chriſt, and it is by a ſecret enablement from him that they ſpeake. The words of an Ambaſſador, are reputed as his from whom hee commeth. It is the qualitie of all true Miniſters, that they are the Lords Meſſengers, and ſo that which they deliuer, is not mans, but Gods. This is ſo plaine, that I need not to enlarge it, and theſe proofes which I haue produced for it, they are each of them very direct.

The Vſe.

This is to teach vs, with what manner of reſpect to embrace that which is brought vnto vs by this ordinance of God, the preaching of the Word. Wee ſhould make no other account, but that in hearing of Man ſent from God, wee doe heare euen God himſelfe: ſo that looke with what awe, with what reuerence, with what reſpect, with what ſubmiſſion wee would demeane our ſelues, if wee ſhould bee called to heare the Lord himſelfe perſonally ſpeake vnto vs from the clouds; with the ſame ought wee to frame our ſelues to the hearing of them which are amongſt vs in his ſtead, and whom he hath put into his ſeruice: Aſſure our ſelues, we ſhall neuer profit by hearing, till this perſwaſion is ingrafted in vs. This was it that brought Pauls Miniſtry to be among the Theſſalonians, not in word only, but in power. This made it to worke and preuaile ſo mightily as it [b] did. When the Doctrine is eſteemed as the Lords, then it ſettleth faith, then it buildeth vp in ſauing knowledge; when the threatnings are receiued as his, then they ſtrike an awe into the conſcience, then they awaken to repentance; when the comforts that are taught are reputed his, then they are health to the nauill, and marrow to the bones. Dauid eſteeming Nathans word to bee the Lords ſpeaking, humbled Dauids ſoule, and brought him to ſubmiſſion and ſorrow for his ſinne. Though hee were a King, yet hauing this in his heart, he durſt not take it ill that a ſubiect ſhould reproue him, but in all humilitie and compunction of ſpirit, he cryed out, I haue ſinned: and this made the after-ſpeech of Nathan to bee as ſweet vnto him, The Lord hath alſo put away thy ſinne. Hee knew God ſpake the one as well as the other. When this is vrged, it will bee ſaid to vs as Korah and his companions ſaid to Moſes and to Aaron, [c] You take too much vpon you: What doe you make your ſelues? muſt your ſayings bee taken as Gods owne Words? your Doctrine as the Oracles of the moſt High? who can beare it that you ſhould be ſo preſumptuous? It is no preſumption, no arrogancie at all, to ſpeake as the Spirit of God doth in the Scripture. Doth not Dauid terme Nathans ſpeaking, Gods? Why, what of that, you will ſay? bee it that he doth. Then ſay I, it followeth abſolutely, that at the leaſt the words of ſome mortall man may bee called Gods: and wherefore were Nathans ſo called, but becauſe of his office and miniſtrie, and becauſe of the commiſſion into which the Lord had put him. If there bee a continuance of the ſame commiſſion, ſhall not that which is done according to the tenor thereof, bee held in the ſame eſteeme? Now that the ſame commiſſion is continued, it is plaine by Scripture before ſet downe: ſome there are, touching whom God hath promiſed, that his Word ſhall bee in their mouth ſo long as the Moone indureth. God hath not, neither will he leaue his Church without a Miniſtrie; and of what credit or authoritie ſhall this Miniſtrie be, if the matter thereof ſhall be accounted of, but as the meſſage and opinion of a man? You will yet ſay, Why? and muſt wee then take all that euery one, who goeth vp into a Pulpit, and ſaith he is a Miniſter, doth deliuer, to be Gods owne ſaying? I ſaid not ſo: the Doctrine was, if you marke it, touching Gods Miniſters ſpeaking by vertue of their office. In the dayes of old, there were ſome, of whom God ſaid, [d] I haue not ſent theſe prophets, yet they ranne: I haue not ſpoken vnto them, and yet they prophecied. And ſuch there are and will be ſtill, which will prophecie out of their owne hearts, and follow their owne ſpirits. I doe not ſay, that whatſoeuer commeth from a Pulpit, by a Miniſter in profeſſion and name, is eſt-ſoones to bee ſtiled the Lords ſpeaking. I haue many times tooke occaſion to ſhew, how Gods Miniſters may bee knowne from thoſe that are but deceitfull workemen. Let this now ſerue in a word, to be ſome helpe to vs herein. I come to Church, and I heare one preach, I perceiue him to handle the Word with a kind of reuerent plaineneſſe; it ſeemeth to me that in his whole faſhion, he diſcouereth a greater deſire

to bring good to his hearers, then to procure esteeme to himselfe: hee rayseth his Doctrine kindly out of his Text, and laboureth that the meanest may perceiue how that place affordeth it; hee confirmes it by euident and vnstrained testimonies of holy Scripture: hee applyeth it faithfully and powerfully with care, neither to grieue the spirits of the tender, who desire in sincerity to please God, nor to strengthen the hands of any in their coldnesse and prophaneneſſe, but shewes still to whom iudgement pertaines, and to whom comfort belongs, euer ayming at this, that he may separate the precious from the vile; him I will esteeme as Gods Minister: and I will, if I finde my sinne touched by his Sermon, take it as a warning from the Lord, and labour to make vse of it: if I perceiue my heart to be comforted, hauing knowne before the need of comfort I will lay hold thereon as tydings of refreshing come from heauen: vpon the Doctrine so prooued, I will rest my iudgement, I will establish my faith, this Ministerie I will reuerence, as the Word and Ordinance of the Lord. Thus may wee make a profitable vse of this Doctrine. God forbid, I should perswade men hand ouer head, to entertayne euery thing as from God, that commeth from the mouth of euery (so called) Minister. That were the next way to leade the people into a world of errors: so might they bee entangled with contradictions, from which they should not deuise how to bee deliuered. There must bee a care to discerne betwixt one and other: and if any man will doe the Lords will, and submit himselfe in obedience to such a course as he may soone both learne and follow, hee shall know touching Ministers, [e] whether they be of God, or whether they speake of themselues. The rule will neuer breake, [f] Them that bee meeke, hee will guide in iudgement. No better Iudge in this case then an humble soule, the working of the Doctrine vpon his heart to curbe him in his excesses, and to resolue him in his doubts; to comfort him in his perplexities, to encourage him in his conscionable proceedings, shall bee to him an vndoubted pledge, that he whom he heares is Gods Minister, whose Doctrine hee is to esteeme euen as the Lords owne speaking. I wish the well learning of this point, as that without which wee can neuer reape any benefit by the publique Ministery. This is the best motiue to vs, to carry our selues respectiuely in our function, that we are commanded when we speake, to [g] speake as the Words of God: and nothing can worke more awe and reuerence into you that heare, then when you know and are perswaded, that you must heare as the Words of God. This is our comfort in the contempt which is cast vpon vs, that [h] Hee which despiseth, despiseth not man, but God: and this shall be the condemnation of the scorners of the Word, that their disdaine hath reached vp to heauen, and that they haue reiected the Lord in his Ministers. Wee must say as Moses said to the people, when they began to repine against him and AARON, [i] What are we, that ye haue murmured against vs? [k] Your murmurings are not against vs, but against the Lord. They haue not cast thee away, but they haue cast me away, said God to Samuel, touching the people, when thy were wearie of of Samuels gouernement, and in a wanton humour would needs haue a King. Thus from hence, that DAVID termes NATHANS speakings, Gods: therefore God speaketh by and in his Ministers. There remayneth yet another obseruation from these latter words, [When thou iudgest:] it is thus,

The third Doctrine.

That whatsoeuer the meanes be, whatsoeuer the instrument is of any manner of affliction or bitternesse befalling vs, it is best for Gods children to acknowledge all to be wholly from the Lord. [Thou iudgest:] DAVID here calls all that either had already befalne him, or was like hereafter to come vpon him, the Lords iudgement, his chastisements, the correction of his hand. Thus the death of his child, he accounted the [l] Lords infliction: and in the following calamities, he tooke not notice so much of the agents in them, as of the Lord disposing them. He knew that it was of God, that ABSALOM, the sonne which came out of his owne bowels, sought his life: and that made him in his flight so humbly to submit himselfe vnto his [m] disposing. He knew, the Lord had a hand in SHIMEI his cursing him: The Lord (saith he) hath [n] bidden him. Thus Iob in his losses, had not an eye so much to the Shabeans, and to the Chaldeans, as vnto Gods hand; The [o] Lord hath giuen, the Lord hath taken. It is taxed as a great fault, when men [p] turne not vnto him that smites: they regard the meanes, and fret against it, but they doe not consider who disposeth all. It was a point which Paul was diligent to teach the Corinthians, that when they were iudged, that is, when any weakenesse, or sickenesse, or death came among them, it was the [q] Lord that did chasten them. Hereupon it is, that the Scripture is so diligent to informe vs in this point, that out of the mouth, that is, from the decree and ordinance of the most High, doe proceed both good and euill, both prosperitie and [r] aduersitie: and that there is no euill (viz. no kind of calamitie) [s] but the Lord doth it. Now I said, It is best that the children of God, in the day of their affliction and grieuance, doe consider this: for indeed this acknowledgement is the mayne ground of patience. Dauid knew it was his dutie to bee dumbe, and not to open his mouth to repine against that which the Lord [t] had done. Hee could neuer haue borne the base and cursed vsage of Shimei as he did, had he not thought vpon the hand of God therein. This made him also confident, in the expectation of a secret blessing, to spring out of that bitter roote of his cursednesse: assuring himselfe the Lord did it for some speciall good end, and for the preparing of him to some greater comfort: It may bee the Lord will doe me good for his cursing this day. Hereupon is it, that by this meanes the children of God are prouoked to the making of a good vse of that which hapneth to them, knowing that as it is God that smites, so it is for some purpose that he doth it; and that if there bee no sorrow when hee smites, and a refusing to receiue correction when hee [u] consumes, some worser matter will ensue. Thus I say then, It is good for those that feare God to looke vp to God in euery Crosse, and to possesse themselues with this, that it is he that iudgeth them. There can neuer be any patience, any thankfulnesse, any submission, any comfort, fort, any care to profit by the rod, where this particular is not thought vpon. Dauid thought it was Nathan that denounced matters to him, yet knew it was the Lord that did execute the ſame: he ſtrooke the Child, he ſtirred vp Abſalom to rebell, he moued Shimei to curſe: the more ſenſible he was of this, the more was his humiliation, the greater his patience for the preſent, the more ſweet his comfort afterwards.

The Vſe.

This is a good leſſon, and a neceſſary matter of inſtruction for vs all; teaching vs how to demeane our ſelues in the day of triall. It is an hard thing to beare afflictions well: ſomewhat to doe there will be, to keepe downe repining thoughts, it is no eaſie thing to temper our ſelues from vnlawful courſes, by which to wind out our ſelues, and to eaſe our ſhoulder of that burden which lyeth heauy on vs. The Scripture ſpeaketh of [x] reioycing in tribulation; [y] of accounting it exceeding ioy, when wee fall into diuers afflictions. Theſe bee not things which can eaſily bee accompliſhed. For would not the nature of man rather chooſe a perpetuitie of eaſe and quiet, then to bee toſſed to and fro with change of croſſes? and what chaſtiſing is there, but [z] for the preſent it is grieuous, and not ioyous? Now here is the way to come to an holy vſe of all croſſes, to conſider in all, that it is the Lord which iudgeth vs: whatſoeuer betyde vs, it is according vnto his diſpenſing, the beginning, the meaſure, the end of euery viſitation, is by his ordering: who ſhall not be afraid to repine, when this is thought vpon? who will not ſet himſelfe diligently to a making vſe of all, when this is duely pondered? what a confident expectation of a gracious iſſue will this breed, when one well conſidereth that hee is in the hand of a wiſe and gracious God, who knowing what we are, will inflict no more, then himſelfe ſhall make vs able to endure? It is the common manner to grow into an indignation at ſecond cauſes in ſickneſſes; we many times blame the Ayre, the Houſe, the Company, the Dyet; we thinke not vpon God that ordereth all: ſo in loſſes, we cry out vpon this, and rage againſt that; this it was long of, and by that it was cauſed; wee looke not vp as we ought, to him that ſitteth at the Sterne, and guideth all particulars. Let vs learne of Dauid here, to raiſe vp our thoughts a degree higher, and when any thing commeth athwart, let vs pitch vpon this, It is the Lord that iudgeth vs. Little know we, vntill we haue found it in experience, what is the quiet fruit of Righteouſneſſe which will follow hereupon.

And thus farre of the firſt branch of that euidence, which Dauid produceth of the knowledge of his ſinnes. Hee chargeth himſelfe with ſinning in this particular, whereof Nathan had reproued him againſt God; and he held his ſinne the greater, becauſe euen in the ſight of God, hee did not feare to commit it. Hee cleereth God of iniuſtice, hee acknowledgeth him righteous in reprouing, iuſt in puniſhing. Nathans reproofe he accounts the Lords: ſuch was his reuerent eſteeme of Nathans miniſtery: the particulars which either had befalne him, or were like to come vpon him, he termes the Lords inflictions: ſuch was his wiſe and holy account of Gods authoritie. Thus is the Summe.

VERS. 5, 6.

Behold, I was borne in iniquitie, and in ſinne hath my Mother conceiued me.
Behold, thou loueſt truth, &c.

THus farre of DAVIDS acknowledgement of his actuall euill. Now followeth his confeſſion of his naturall depraued-neſſe. In confeſſing whereof, this is his order. Firſt, Hee ſets downe the truth of the thing it ſelfe: viz. that hee is originally corrupt. Secondly, Hee layeth the ſame open more at full. Before I come to handle either of theſe, this is generally to be noted out of both the Verſes, and out of that which in them Dauid aymes: viz.

The firſt Doctrine. That where there is true repentance, there is alſo a diſpoſition to lay to a mans owne charge as much as it is poſsible. Me thinks, in examining this place, I beheld Dauid euen ſtudying to enlarge the Bill of Indictment againſt himſelfe. Alas, Lord, what ſpeake I of this euill, as though that were all whereof I haue to accuſe my ſelfe? this is not the one halfe of that whereof I am culpable before thee: for, lo, euen from my very firſt being in my Mothers wombe, I am corrupt, euen a very maſſe and lumpe of ſinne: I am altogether in my ſelfe varying and ſwaruing from that puritie and holineſſe thou delightſt in, and which thou haſt, by the teaching of thy Word, made me to know to be good and pleaſing in thy ſight. Thus doth he article againe and againe againſt himſelfe, not mincing or extenuating the matter, with this, O Lord, indeed I haue done amiſſe, but it was but this once, this is all my fault: I hope in other things I haue better behaued my ſelfe: let my other better ſeruices be thought on by thee, to make amends for this one fault. No ſuch thing comes from him, but hauing charged himſelfe with one particular, he comes in with a ſecond; Behold, Lord, this alſo I confeſſe: and, behold, againe, thus and thus am I lyable to exception. Vpon this ground was it, that in this Pſalme he vſeth ſuch change of titles for his fault, Sinne, Euill, Iniquitie, Bloud, whatſoeuer hee could thinke on, he brought in for the improuing it. So in his ſubmiſſion for that offence in numbring the people, [a] I haue ſinned, ſinned exceedingly; I haue done fooliſhly, very fooliſhly: as if hee could not bee ſatisfied in heaping vp termes of aggrauation. So in the Pſalmes he accuſeth himſelfe of [b] ſinnes in number aboue his haires: [c] for waight like a burthen: and when hee had found out many particulars whereof to accuſe himſelfe, yet as one ſuſpecting himſelfe further, he cryeth out, [d] Who can vnderſtand his faults? It was his reſolution ſtill to bee [e] more vile, to make no end of the abaſing sing and charging of himselfe. Thus was Ezra minded when he spake of iniquities increased ouer their heads, [f] and of trespasses growne vp to the Heauens. Thus Paul loading himselfe with the tearmes of a persecuter, a blasphemer, and an [g] oppressor: the least of the Apostles, not meet to bee called an [h] Apostle: the least of all [k] Saints. No man desiring his disgrace, could haue said more against him, then hee did voluntarily put vpon himselfe. Thus the Prodigal sonne neuer sought to extenuate his miscarriage, by pleading the instabilitie of youth, by shifting ouer the fault to others, by whose eyther ill example he was poysoned, or bad counsell misse-led: he told not his father, Sir, I know the waste which I haue made, is not much to you, you are able to beare it, considering your wealth, if it had beene a great deale more; but hee sets his course euen vpon the racke, and stretcheth it out to the vtmost pinne, Father, I haue sinned: he stayeth not there, but goeth on, I haue sinned against heauen, I haue sinned against thee, I am not worthy to be called thy sonne, &c. I will not so much as craue to be taken into the state and condition of a sonne; if I may be as an hired seruant, it is more than I can challenge, and it is all that I will aske. Thus true repentance makes a man large and plentifull in the accusation of himselfe. A sinner once thorowly touched and deepely pricked, thinkes all too little that he is to say against himselfe; sinne is so hatefull to him, that he thinkes he can neuer sufficiently display it; and such is his indignation against himselfe for offending God, as that he supposeth he can neuer enough, as he should, blame and censure himselfe in that behalfe: when he is once thorowly touched, he ransacks himselfe euen to his very cradle, that he may acknowledge his faylings: not in the lumpe onely, and in grosse, and as it were by whole sale, but in order and course, he puts his sinnes as it were into a ballance, and waigheth them, that he may bring himselfe to such a right valuation of them as is necessarie. That point of Doctrine which I handled lately touching the insisting vpon particular sinnes, commeth verie neere to this, so that in respect of that which I spake then, I shall need to say the lesse in this. This is the effect, that when the Spirit of God, whose office it is to [l] conuince of sinne, hath effectually touched a mans conscience, so is he disposed, that no malicious, reuengefull wicked man, can so set out the faults of his enemie, whom he hates with a deadly hatred, as he both can and wil, & desireth more and more to do his own corruptions. Let vs learn to measure our selues by this example: & if we would haue some good euidence, and sound assurance to our selues of true repentance, let vs deale faithfully with our owne hearts, and consider our selues well, whether we haue this mind and care, when wee come before the Lord, to be large and plentifull in the accusing of our selues. It is excellent and a gracious qualitie, when a man is afraid that he hath not laied so much to his owne charge as he should; and that when hee hath made into himselfe euen the most diligent search that he can, yet there is some secret euill behind vnespied, which requires acknowledgement. I haue sometimes had occasion to note it, that there be three things, in which a right right Christian can neuer bee satisfied. First, Is the humbling of himselfe for his sinnes against God: Secondly, The assurance that in Christ Iesus all these sinnes are pardoned: Thirdly, The care of his soule to walke with God. In this stands a speciall difference betwixt the naturall man, and the spirituall man. The naturall man, for matter of humiliation, thinkes it enough to say he is a sinner; hee hath no stomacke to that busie worke of the searching and abasing of himselfe, he can content himselfe with a confident opinion of beeing saued, neuer well considering vpon what ground: hee thinkes rather he may be too holy, then hath any dislike of himselfe because he is no more forward. The spirituall man, he is cleane of another making; when hee comes into the presence of God, he striues to lay load vpon himselfe, he will bethinke himselfe of as many things as hee can, and hide nothing from the Lord which hee thinkes on, he will neuer be at quiet till he haue gotten good assurance of forgiuenesse, and he will neuer be pleased in any certaine stint or measure of obedience. I name all these three now againe, because they are still companions, albeit the first of them onely doth appertaine to the present purpose. Take we notice of it then for a triall of our selues. Wee shall heare hereafter in this Psalme, how pleasing and acceptable vnto God a broken heart is. Now a broken heart flyeth out (as it were) into many pieces, and discouereth it selfe in the multiplying of imputations against it selfe: when it is wounded with the due apprehension of one sinne, it takes occasion thereby to suspect it selfe of more, and doth (as a man would say) vrge God once and againe to behold; Lo, Lord, now I haue confessed this, heare this also which I haue to say touching my selfe, and this too: yea, when I haue said all I can, yet I am sure there is more behind, which though I cannot see, yet I am sure thou knowest. This I thought good to obserue out of the generall state of these two Verses. Dauid stayeth not in the mention of this one particular enormitie, but proceedes further, acknowledgeth the vniuersall corruption of his nature, and disconformitie of his soule, from that sinceritie which to his speciall knowledge God requires. Let vs come now to the particulars.

First, Dauid sets downe his naturall estate. In the words there is no great difficultie. Thus in few words we may conceiue it, as if hee had said, This is it, O Lord, which I doe yet further confesse against my selfe, that I haue beene ouer-spred with corruption, euer since the first time I beheld this light: Nay, which is more, no sooner was that substance whereof I am made, warmed in my mothers Wombe, but I was tainted and stayned with sinfull filthinesse. Thus is the sense. The Doctrine is thus,

The second Doctrine.

That the whole nature of man is, from the very first beginning and being thereof, infected with corruption. Wee may see here in Dauid, the common state of all man-kind: For if it were thus with Dauid, why not with thee, and with mee, and with euery one? Can we shew wherein our nature is priuiledged aboue Dauids? Now, we all heare what hee auoucheth touching himselfe. There was not so much as a thought of time time betwixt his naturall being, and his ſinnefull being. Corruption did accompany euen the firſt degree of his conception. Thus was Dauid, thus are we. And then that he meant to acknowledge this, touching his whole perſon, both his bodie and his ſoule, with all the powers and faculties appertaining to them both, wee may gather from the word [I,] which is here vſed by him without any manner of reſtriction, in regard that he did reckon himſelfe to be wholly ouer-ſpred, no part of him being free, neither minde, neither will, nor affection, no one portion either of his outward or his inward man. This may ſhew the truth of this Doctrine out of this Text. Now that I may handle this poynt with the more profit, I will treat of it in this order: Firſt, I will proue it to bee true, that the nature of man is vniuerſally tainted, euen from the very firſt being thereof. Secondly, I will ſhew what is meant by this tainture, and wherein this natiue corruption doth conſiſt. Thirdly, I will declare whence it is, and how it commeth to paſſe, that ſuch a kind of infection hath diffuſed and ſpred it ſelfe ouer all. The handling of theſe three points wil occaſion to deliuer as much as is neceſſarily to be known concerning this Doctrine. Touching the former, that the nature of man is in it ſelfe vniuerſally corrupt; take we firſt for it theſe two ſpeciall euidences. Firſt, Gods owne verdict; and ſecondly, Pauls owne confeſſion. Touching Gods verdict, wee haue it twice eſpecially: firſt, [m] pronouncing of man, that he is but fleſh: viz. a very heape, and lumpe, and bundle of corruption: and ſecondly, The imagination of mans heart is [n] euill euen from his youth: the very frame of mans heart, and ſo accordingly his whole diſpoſition and ſtate, euen from his firſt ſubſiſting, is nothing elſe but ſtarke naught. Pauls confeſſion is touching himſelfe, but yet ſuch as declares a truth touching all, as well as touching himſelfe, I know, that in [o] me, that is, in my fleſh or nature, dwelleth no good thing: He ſpeakes of a certaine Law of Sinne ſwaying in him, and rebelling quite againſt the Law of God. Beſides this, the Scripture ſo ſpeakes of man naturally, as of one in whom that which is the moſt excellent is polluted: It mentions a darkeneſſe in [p] his cogitations: a death and an enmitie againſt God in his [q] wiſdome: a kind of beſtialitie and brutiſhneſſe in his [r] knowledge: a need of renuing in his [s] mind; yea, euen in the ſpirit of his [t] mind: Now if the beſt that is in him bee defiled, what ſhall we thinke of the remainder? If the light originally and primarily placed in man be darkeneſſe, how [u] great ſhall that darkeneſſe bee? No marueile to find weakeneſſe in the will, diſorder in the affections, aptneſſe in euery member to be euen a weapon of vnrighteouſneſſe, when the mind and vnderſtanding, that ſhould be a guide vnto the reſt, is it ſelfe become a ſeruant to corruption. This ſhall ſerue briefly touching that, that the nature of man no ſooner is, but it is corrupt, and that thorowout, euen the very beſt that is in it is out of tune.

The naturall ſtate of man, in regard of ſin, laid forth at large.

Come we to the ſecond, what this ſinne is, with which the nature of man is thus beſpred. It is noted by Diuines, to ſtand in two things. Firſt, The guilt of Adams diſobedience. Euerie man is naturally chargeable chargeable with Adams fault, and lyable to account to God for his tranigreſſion. The act it ſelfe was peculiar to Adam, but the fault lyeth vpon all. The words, Rom. 5.12. in whom all haue ſinned, beeing rightly vnderſtood, makes it plaine. PAVL affirmes, that in one all ſinned: and after, By the offence of one, [x] a fault came vpon all. Wee all were that one man, ſaith AVGVSTINE. His offence is not to be conceiued of as perſonall, but as common; ſuch as into which we are all engaged. Secondly, it ſtands in a kind of ilneſſe and deprauedneſſe, both in regard that that ſingular excellencie, wherewith Adam was once endowed for himſelfe and all his iſſue, is vtterly loſt; and in reſpect that in the ſtead thereof, there is come in a kind (as I may terme it) of poſitiue corruption, which is much like the raging [y] Sea, which cannot reſt, the waters thereof doe caſt vp myre and dirt: ſo is that in man ſtill ſtruggling and ſtriuing againſt the Law of God, and working him to ſome ſpeciall wickedneſſe. Hereupon it is held that that definition of the ſinne of nature, by The want of that goodneſſe which ought to be in it, is too ſcant, not expreſſing at full the whole condition thereof: whereupon Auguſtine (then whom no man euer wrote better) touching this poynt, termes it, An euill qualitie, and compareth it to ſickneſſe: Now in ſickneſſe there is not onely a kind of vacancie and abſence of health, but there is going therewith neceſſarily ſuch a kind of ſtate of the bodie, as cauſeth payne, and workes to the diſſolution of the whole. Thomas termes it, A corrupt habit. It is more than an abſence of good. Thus in a word (as may fit this place) of the ſecond poynt, what that is which is called the ſinne of Nature, in which we are all conceiued. Wee muſt vnderſtand it thus, that euery man, aſſoone as he hath any manner of being, ſo that he commeth to receiue the denomination and title of a Man, is guiltie before God of Adams fault, is vtterly deſtitute of euery whit of that goodneſſe with which God endued the firſt man, and hath in him the ſeed of euery kind of ſinne in act, together with a ſtrength and forwardneſſe of inclination thereunto. This is that ſin, which Chryſoſtome termes, The firſt ſinne. Ambroſe calls it, The defilement of our beginning, and our naturall contagion. PAVLINVS, Our hereditarie poyſon. In teaching, we doe ordinarily call it, Originall ſinne, or the ſinne of beginning, in regard of the ancientneſſe of it, it hauing beene euer ſince the time of Adams fall: and againe, it accompanieth the nature of man at his very firſt being, and it is the ſource and fountaine of all ſinne in practice. The Scripture calleth it the ſinne that dwelleth [z] in vs: it is indigena, a naturall inhabitant, and ſuch an one as nothing but the pulling downe, and diſſolution of this our earthly Tabernacle by death, is able to diſplace. Elſewhere it is [a] called The ſinne that encompaſſeth vs, that cleaueth cloſe to vs; or as we read it, hangeth ſo faſt on.

The third poynt now commeth in courſe, viz. whence it is, and how it commeth to paſſe that the nature of man is thus corrupt. To this the Apoſtle maketh a direct anſwere: [b] By one man ſinne entred into the world: and againe, By one mans diſobedience, many [c] were made ſinners.

ADAM

ADAM was ordayned by God to bee a common roote, out of which should be deriued such a progenie, as himselfe should be when his power of generation should begin. Now, he being once corrupt, how could any [d] cleane matter bee brought out of his filthinesse? [e] Of flesh nothing could be borne but flesh: [f] ADAM begat a child in his owne likenesse, &c. such a sinner and a person so corrupted as himselfe: and so it hath beene successiuely. If the roote had beene holy, so had the branches also beene, according to the rule, [g] but the tree being once corrupt, the fruit could not choose but be [h] according. This is the plaine truth according to the Scripture. I am not ignorant that with this, there falleth in, in the writings of the learned, a great question, diuersly disputed to and fro, touching the Traduction of the soule, which must needs be acknowledged in all reason to be the proper seate of this natiue and inbred sinne. Here is the mayne inquirie, whether the soule comes from the Parents by naturall generation, or whether it be created immediately by God, and infused into the body after that it is once conceiued in the wombe: and then if it be so infused, how it becommeth so corrupted. I know the most receiued opinion is, that the soule is created by God, and so becommeth defiled with sin by the vnion of it to the body; as when a man falleth into the durt and is soiled, and bedawbed, or as water cleane in it selfe, receiueth filth from an vncleane vessell into which it is put. But how this can bee true, let them shew that will defend it. For my owne part I cannot conceiue, either how sinne should first be in the body before the soule is vnited to it, or how the soule should receiue infection from the body. It is well said by a Diuine of reuerend note; that the manner of translating sinne from the father to the child, is rather to be beleeued then searched; may more easily be searched then vnderstood, and may (againe) be better vnderstood then expresst. The safest way is to consider sinne as possessing the whole man, and the whole Man as successiuely descending from whole Adam. God at first gaue Adam power to produce a creature like vnto himselfe. Adam [i] before he exercised this power, did corrupt himselfe, and so God continuing to him that power, hee with the execution of that power conueyed his corruption. The distinction is very good, that now since Adam fell, we must consider God in the forming of man in the wombe, two manner of wayes. First, as a Creator, and so the body and the soule are the worke of his hands. We must consider him as a Iudge too: and so conceiue that it is iust with him in the forming of both to forsake both, and so to giue strength to man to produce such a Creature as himselfe, that yet the Creature produced by him, is euen so corrupted as himselfe. There are then two things concurre in the producing of man. First, The strength of God, as a Creator, whereby he becommeth a man: the curse of God, as a Iudge, and thereby he becomes a sinner. This I thinke to bee the surest tenon. Out of all question sinne is in the soule, before in the body: according to that of Augustine touching ADAM; It was not (saith hee) his corruptible flesh which made his soule to become sinfull, but his sinfull soule made his flesh subiect to corruption. To talke of the bodies begetting the body, and to dispute whether a soule can beget a soule, these things will leade into conceits and doubts, of which there will be no end. Well said he of old, that said, Not one soule begets another, but one man another. But hereof enough, it being a point wherein a man may easily be too curious, and in which (considering the Scripture saith so little in it) it will be no great danger to be ignorant. This is enough to know: vnpossible it is that of a sinner should be begotten other then a sinner: not Christ himselfe being lineally descended from Adam, as Luke deriues his [k] Pedigree; had not God made a precise difference betwixt the order of the birth of that one Man, and the order of the birth of any other man. And thus at last I haue ended this Doctrine. Dauid was a sinner by his owne acknowledgement, euen from his first quickning in his mothers wombe. This is true touching all: the first roote being poysoned, all that haue sprang thence, doe partake therewith. Let vs come to the Vse.

Non anima animam gignit, sed homo hominem.

k Chap.3.

1. Vse. Here we haue occasion to discouer the iniquitie of Popish Doctrine: which endeoureth and laboureth by all meanes to mince and extenuate this point touching mans natiue state. The ordinarie opinions of the Churches of Rome touching Originall sinne, bee, That it is onely a kinde of alteration in man into somewhat a worse estate, then that in which God at first created him: that it is the least of sinnes, and smaller then any Veniall sinne: that it is no such strong bent vnto euill, but that notwithstanding it, there is a certayne abilitie in man, naturally to worke for himselfe in the disposing of himselfe to Iustification, being but a little stirred vp by Gods preuenting grace: he hath still a libertie in his nature to doe good, onely it is restrayned like a man that is chayned and fettered, from whom to the end hee may goe, there needs no more but to take off his gyues. I will not rippe vp so many particulars as I could herein, onely this I adde, That it is maintayned by them to bee vtterly taken away by Baptisme, and that whatsoeuer remaynes as a shew thereof in the Regenerate, hath not the true reason of sinne; but is onely left behind in the wisedome of God for exercise, and for matter of combate for them. Thus for a taste of Popish Doctrine touching Originall sinne, which is such indeede as by no wit of man can euer bee reconciled with the Doctrine of the Scripture touching it. If it bee so small a sinne as they would make it, what neede had Dauid to bemone it as hee doth? and if Baptisme doe now abolish it in the Regenerate, why did not Circumcision so much in those of old? and if it were taken away by Circumcision, why doth Dauid, a man circumcised, accuse himselfe of it before the Lord? why insists hee vpon it by the name of a sinne, and as that which had preuayled in him? yea, and that after so much grace receiued, to plunge him into this foule offence? Indeede, let it bee well considered, it shall bee found no petty sinne. I prooued ere-while that one branch of it, is the guilt of Adams fault; and was Adams fault a little one? Set wee aside that vnpardonable sinne against the Holy Ghost, and what can we imagine to be more haynous?

Non habet veram rationem peccati.

It

It is an excellent ſpeech of Auſtines touching Adams ſinne; By how much the more eaſily ADAM might haue obeyed, by ſo much the more grieuous was his ſinne. Truth is, it was a kinde of compoſition of many ſinnes, Infidelitie, Contempt of God, Pride, Diſcontentment, Beleeuing of the Deuill more then God. The puniſhment following it, by caſting him out of Paradiſe, by inflicting a ſentence of death, by ſubiecting to a world of miſeries, this argueth it to haue beene no little treſpaſſe. Certainely, it is no leſſe in vs then in him. In the ſame meaſure wherein it was in him, it is alſo imputed vnto vs. Hee hath wholly made it ouer to his whole Poſterity. Beſides this, whoſo lookes vpon the report of mans naturall eſtate, as it is recorded in the Scripture, cannot deeme it to bee no more then ſome ſlight declining, or ſome condition of none but ordinarie danger. Is it nothing when wee are ſaid to bee altogether [l] vnprofitable without all feare of God, nothing but deſtruction and calamitie in our waies; [m] vnwiſe, diſobedient, deceiued, ſeruing luſts and diuers pleaſures, liuing in malicioufneſſe and enuy, &c. [n] dead in treſpaſſes and ſinnes, children of diſobedience, in whom the Deuill workes, children of wrath? Thus ſpeakes the Spirit of God in the Scripture touching our naturall ſtate: and how ſhall it bee reputed no ſinne after Baptiſme, when Paul ſo [o] often ſpeaking of himſelfe baptized, giues it that title? and how commeth it to paſſe, that Infants baptized, die before they come to actuall offending, if Baptiſme haue aboliſhed in them their originall ſtaine? Death cannot ſeaze where there is no ſinne. I might eaſily be large in this kinde, but I forbeare to ſpend ouer-much time in theſe kinds of confutings. By the way I could not but ſay ſomewhat thereof, there being ſuch a palpable difference in this point betwixt the Doctrine of Poperie, and the Doctrine of the Scripture. Papiſts cry out with full mouth vpon vs, that in the aggrauating of originall ſinne, we keepe no meaſure: we may rather feare, that we doe not ſo fully ſet it out, and declare as is fit.

To worke that into vs which was in David, when hee indited this Pſalme, viz. true humiliation before God in reſpect of our natiue eſtate. God will looke on none but on him that [p] is of an humble ſpirit: [q] hee will beſtow his grace only vpon ſuch. The more vile any man is in his owne eyes, the more precious hee is in Gods eyes. Now the beſt meanes to bring a man to this baſe and ſubmiſſe opinion of himſelfe, is to reflect his thoughts vpon himſelfe, that he may attaine an effectuall vnderſtanding of his owne eſtate, and may conceiue what hee is in true account before the Lord. In doing this, the ſureſt courſe is, to caſt his eye vpon his firſt beginning, and to behold the Rocke out of which he was hewne. There he ſhall finde, that howſoeuer he is rated here in the world (the iudgement whereof moſtly paſſeth according to appearance,) yet he is indeede ſo ouer-run with a leproſie of corruption, that he ſhall not ſee any the ſmalleſt part or portion in him vndefiled: whatſoeuer excellencie is compriſed in that which is termed the Image of God, according to which man was firſt made, whatſoeuer perfection is required in that moſt exact rule of righteouſneſſe, the Law; he ſhall perceiue in himſelfe, a moſt direct and apparant contrarietie thereunto. No good ſo truely good, but his heart abhorres it; no euill ſo extremely wicked, but there is in him an inclineableneſſe to imbrace it; no ſeruant ſo readie to doe his maſters will, as hee is to doe the workes of the Deuill; no rebell ſo deſperately aduerſe to his lawfull Soueraigne, as he againſt God; no man by any right of inheritance more intereſſed into any earthly eſtate, then is hee to the kingdome of darkeneſſe, prepared for the Deuill and his angels. Let him trie himſelfe when hee heares of any good commended to him out of Gods Word, and marke how vntoward he is to it: and for euill when it is baited with profit or delight, how much adoe hath hee not to affect it: let him note his dulneſſe in ſpirituall things, his quickneſſe and ſharpneſſe of apprehenſion in matters of the worſt ſort: how firme his memorie is in the one, and how ſlipperie in the other, how quicke his ſpirits be in the one, and how heauie in the other: let him, I ſay, thus note himſelfe, that hee may bee ſomewhat ſenſible of that corruption, which hath growne vp with him from his firſt conception; and then let him thinke whether this be not a iuſt matter of humbling, and of being vile in his owne iudgement. I remember what the Heathen ſaid of vertue, that if a man might with his outward eyes behold the beautie thereof, it would ſtirre vp a wonderfull loue to it. I ſay ſo on the other ſide, that if it were poſſible for one to ſee the lothſomeneſſe of his owne naturall eſtate, in regard of that ſinne which he hath brought with him from the wombe; ſurely, it would make him euen in a ſort afraid of himſelfe, and with Iob to abhor himſelfe in duſt and aſhes. Wee may ſee how ſoone fleſh and bloud is puffed vp with the thought of theſe earthly prerogatiues. Hee that can tell how hee is deſcended, how hee is allyed, how his houſe hath beene aduanced by ſuch and ſuch matches, and what eſtate he is borne vnto, thinks himſelfe ſome bodie thereupon. I maruaile wee thinke ſo little vpon that wherein wee were conceiued: I would thou wouldſt often thinke this, What ſoeuer I am elſe according to the fleſh and eſtimation of the world, ſure I am, I was borne in ſinne, I haue not in me by nature ſo much as a graine of goodneſſe: I am a very lump of corruption, I am an enemie to God, and to mine owne ſoule: I cannot ſo much as frame a thought tending to the furtherance of my owne good: euery thing I meddle with, is defiled by mee, the very earth is weary to beare mee, and according to the kinde thereof, both it and all the creatures doe put vp a complaint to God againſt mee. Oh, that I were able to ſpeake that which might make vs ſenſible of this point! The not feeling this, is the true cauſe of all that great ſecuritie, which hath euen ſeared and ſealed vp the hearts and ſoules of the greateſt part. This makes ſo little care of being ſaued; hence is it that the Goſpell preached is ſo ſmally reckoned of, the Name of Chriſt is no more precious, the word of Grace no more honoured, the promiſe of Saluation no more laid hold on, and harkned after, the threatnings of Hell no more ſtood in feare of then they bee. Men perceiue not as they ſhould, ſhould, wherein they bee borne, and what is their due, if God ſhould deale with them by deſert. It is indeede one and not the ſmalleſt part of our natiue wretchedneſſe, that our eyes are ſo holden with ſelfe-loue, that wee cannot perceiue it: nay, we are pleaſed with it, and thinke it a piece of our happineſſe, if we might be ſuffered in it. We haue not only no diſpoſition to goe from it, but which is worſe, a ſtrong deſire to remaine ſtill therein, and a miſlike of what good meanes ſoeuer is ordained for our renuing. Let vs then this day learne of Dauid what we are, and when wee heare him ſo wofully, and ſo lamentably crying out, Behold, Lord, I was borne in iniquitie, &c. Let vs not thinke it can be well with vs, till we are come to make the like acknowledgement; nothing ſo good herein as to compare our hearts with the Law of God, there we ſhall ſee the repugnancie that is in vs vnto all good, and how violently we are bent to ſuch euils, as are there inhibited: when one falls to viewing of himſelfe there with an vnſparing eye, howſoeuer hee was ſecure before, and carried with preſumption; yet then as one amazed, and ſtrooken with a ſudden affrightment, hee will crie out with the Prophet, Woe is me, for I am vndone: little did I thinke that there was ſuch vileneſſe in me, as I now behold: O Lord, I doe euen wonder at thy patience, that haſt ſuffered ſuch a wretch to liue till now, and that thou haſt not long agone condemned me to Hell. I pray let vs thinke on this, and whenſoeuer our conſciences through Gods mercy ſhall ſmite vs for any performed euill, let the thought thereof moue vs to looke to that which is the roote of all: the more wee ſhall ſee and conceiue the deprauedneſſe of our nature, and the peruerſeneſſe of our diſpoſition in regard of good, together with the fruitfulneſſe thereof in reſpect of ſuch things as tend to Gods diſhonour, and to the heaping vp wrath againſt our ſelues, the happier we ſhall be: and let euery one bee bold to take it as a certaine pledge of grace, when hee hath a kinde of aggrieued and diſcontented feeling of this thing: I meane ſuch a feeling as begets ſorrow, and cauſeth a kinde of indignation againſt ones ſelfe, that hee ſhould haue within him ſuch an heape of filthineſſe, ſuch a lumpe of vntowardneſſe. Whenſoeuer we goe to pray, bee ſure that wee haue ſome mind hereon, (our natiue ſtate:) when wee haue laid many things to our charge, yet withall forget not this, how our nature is, and whereof wee are guiltie before God euen from the wombe. And becauſe I taught one branch of originall euill, to be our guilt of Adams ſinne; remember that among other ſinnes which we muſt lament, euen that alſo muſt be ſorrowed for. The ſtorie of Adams fall muſt not be thought vpon, as a matter of another wholly, but as a thing in which we are ingaged; knowing that if God had no other matter beſides it, to except againſt vs for, yet for that he had cauſe ſufficient to condemne vs. Then thus is the ſecond Vſe of this Doctrine, to bring vs to an humble apprehenſion of our eſtate. This is that, at which all Religion in practice muſt beginne. I may truely call it the firſt ſtep vnto ſaluation, and apply to it the words of the Pſalme, [f] This is the gate of the Lord If wee haue not begun our hope of being ſaued at this this point, wee ſhall bee vtterly deceiued in the end. Wee muſt beginne our returne into Paradiſe at that which threw Adam out of Paradiſe. If our hearts bee not made to bleede for our partaking with him in his loſſe, and in the penaltie inflicted thereupon, wee are vtterly vncapable of recouerie. And ſurely, he hath well profited in godlineſſe, whoſo is come ſo farre, as to bee able out of his owne experience and particular vnderſtanding of himſelfe, to beare witneſſe to, and with Dauid in this point; Behold, Lord, I was borne in iniquitie, &c. I ſee that in my nature there is not ſo much as a dram of good, and if God ſhould leaue mee to my ſelfe, I perceiue it well there is no ſo vile a courſe but I ſhould runne into. Well is hee that groneth vnder this burthen, and crieth out with PAVL; Oh, wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliuer mee from the body of this death?

3. Vſe. Wee may iuſtly deriue from hence, the neceſſitie of a new birth, to the end wee may bee ſaued. If mans firſt birth bee ſo defiled, is there any hope for him to bee ſaued, being as hee is? Such a creature as man is in himſelfe, it is not poſſible for him to haue any roome in heauen:

t 1.Cor.15.50. t Fleſh and bloud cannot inherit the Kingdome of God. Take man as hee is, he can neuer come into that preſence of God, where there is fulneſſe x Heb.12.14. x Without holineſſe, no man can euer ſee God. Naturall holineſſe, I am ſure, there is none, there muſt bee ſomewhat elſe in man beſides and aboue that which nature yeelds, or elſe his end will be terrible. If thou canſt ſhew nothing in thy ſelfe more then growes in natures Garden, thy caſe is fearefull; either thou muſt haue ſome euidence that thou art renued, or there is nothing remayneth for thee but a wofull looking for of iudgement, and violent fire to deuoure. No man can come to hea-

z Ioh.1.13. z ſonnes of God are not borne of bloud, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God:) the Spirit of God is the proper Authour of this worke, and hath ſanctified a courſe for effecting it. There is an outward meanes, the miniſterie of the Word: whereupon Paul told the f Act.15.9. g Gal.3.26. birth, is ſaid f to purifie and cleanſe the heart: and to be it whereby g we become the ſonnes of God. So then, this I commend as another Vſe of this Doctrine. Naturally wee are all corrupt: this naturall eſtate muſt bee changed, changed, or we cannot be ſaued. Take vs as we be, there is nothing but Hell which we can looke for. That we ſhould be new Ones it is vnpoſſible, vnleſſe Gods Spirit worke it. The Spirit of God works it not but by Faith, neither doth it ordinarily worke Faith but by the miniſterie of the Word. Here wee muſt begin, if wee would not periſh. Seeke Faith by the Word, a renued eſtate by Faith, Heauen by a renued eſtate. Hee that leaues this way, haply hee may find one which is more pleaſing in his owne eyes; but I may aſſure him, that the iſſues thereof are the wayes of death. You will ſay vnto me; Suppoſe we beleeue you in all this, that there is no ſaluation without the change of nature, without a refining and bettering of our naturall eſtate; and that this can neuer be, vnleſſe it be wrought in vs by the Spirit of God, whoſe worke is not to bee expected in this but only by the Word: how ſhall wee know for our comfort and ſettlement, that wee are thus changed, that wee may haue ſome hope, that we are now become capable of eternall Life? This is a neceſſarie queſtion; wee may for this time bee therein thus briefly ſatisfied. There is no ſurer euidence of a worke of Gods Spirit in vs, for the bettering of our nature by ſauing grace, then, when wee haue a ſecret diſlike of nature, and are ſenſible of the neceſſitie of reforming it, and are ſtill iealous ouer thoſe things which we find to be moſt pleaſing to it. This can neuer come out of nature: Nature is a louer of it ſelfe, ſeekes by all meanes to ſtrengthen it ſelfe, and ſtriues to whatſoeuer by which it may be cheriſhed. When then a man is come to this, that hee doth not approue of his naturall inclination, nor willingly giue way to it, but ſtudies rather which way to curbe it and to reſtraine it, it is a ſpeciall teſtimonie of a worke of grace. It is a ſigne of ſome higher hand, by which nature ſhall more and more be ouer-ruled. I doubt not, but a man after there is ſome change wrought in him by grace, may in ſome particulars receiue a foile by his owne corruption, and by that Law of his members which fights and rebels againſt the Law of God: hardly may a man ſay he is changed by grace, vnleſſe he be ſenſible of the ſtruggling of Nature againſt Grace; but yet ſtill it is a pledge of ſuch a worke begun, as ſhall neuer be broken off, when nature in the proper diſpoſition thereof is become a burthen to the ſoule, and a man would faine be better, and haue it to be other wiſe vvith him then it is. Let no man be diſcouraged with the vnrulineſſe of his nature, if he can be ſure of this, that it is to him as a yoke of tyrannie, from which he would rather then any thing, he might be freed. When the diſeaſe of nature is feelingly complayned of, grace is begun; yea, ſuch grace as ſhall neuer bee extinguiſhed. Thus farre of this. Dauid ſheweth by way of acknowledgement what hee is by nature: in him we may ſee what we are all. He that thinks himſelfe better, is ſo much the worſe for ſo thinking. I haue applyed this againſt Popery. haue preſſed it to the furthering of our humiliation before God: I haue vrged it to the poſſeſſing of vs with the neceſſitie of the new-birth: and ſo ſhewed how the change of nature is effected, and how it may be tryed.

VERS. 6.

Behold, thou loueſt truth in the inward affections.

THe Doctrine of Originall ſinne, as it is plainely laid downe by Dauid, and to himſelfe applyed in particular, wee haue heard of. Now followeth that which is annexed by him, for the further laying open of this our hereditarie and natiue euill, as alſo for the aggrauation of Dauids fault, in being ouer-carryed by it ſo farre as to commit ſuch an euill. This euill of our nature is the greater, becauſe it is directly contrarie to that Truth in the inward affections which God delighteth in; and Dauids yeelding to it in ſuch a meaſure was the more grieuous, becauſe God had taught him better things, and had planted a large portion of holy Wiſedome in the ſecret of his heart. Suppoſe wee, that wee heard Dauid ſaying thus; O Lord, I doe not mention my being conceiued and borne in ſinne, to any ſuch end as thereby to excuſe my ſelfe, as though I thought my ſelfe ſome way to be borne withall, becauſe I am naturally intangled with corruption; rather I ſpeake it to the abaſing of my ſelfe the more, conſidering that when I looke into my ſelfe, I ſee ſuch a diſproportion betwixt my naturall diſpoſition, and that ſpirituall perfection which thou loueſt, and which thou placedſt in man at his firſt creation; the continuance, and eſpecially the preuayling whereof is ſo much the fouler in me, and the more intolerable, becauſe as this inward truth is to thee pleaſing, ſo to me thou haſt made it knowne more then to many others, what is the onely wiſe courſe to recouer the ſame, and to leade ſuch a life as thou mighteſt beſt accept. This (following the iudgement of the beſt Interpreters, whom it hath beene my lot to looke into,) I thinke to be the ſenſe and meaning of the Spirit of God in this place.

Now, to make way to the ſo handling of this place, as that it may be ſeene how it yeelds vs out matter of inſtruction: This we may obſerue, that Dauid doth here acknowledge touching God two things: The one more generall, touching all men; the other more particular, reſpecting himſelfe. The more generall is, God loueth truth in the inward affections. I will at once ſet downe both the meaning and the Doctrine, and that in theſe words: viz.

The firſt Doctrine.

That vprightneſſe and ſinceritie of the heart, is a matter very pleaſing vnto God, and without which all outward conformitie is abominable. This is that which Dauid meanes, by Truth in the inward affections: euen that which Paul commends in the Romanes, vnder the terme of [a] obeying from the heart. It is oppoſite to that guile ſpoken [b] of, and for the free-

dome from which Christ gaue that approuing testimonie to [c] Nathanael. It is said, that the heart of man is in it selfe of all other things, the [d] most deceitfull: and that there is euen a whole bundle of euill in it from ones childhood. [e] God made man righteous, saith Salomon, but there haue beene since [f] sought out many inuentions. Now, this Truth here spoken of, is directly contrarie to this our natiue falshood; and the mayne of it is this, when goodnesse it selfe is more affected then the appearance of it, and the power of godlinesse is more sought for then the shew. That is Truth in the inward affections, when a man endeuoureth especially the approuing of his heart vnto the Lord, and had rather be good indeed before God, then to be taken and thought to be good before men. This is it which God so loueth, and wherein of all other things hee taketh most delight: [g] He will doe good to such as be good and true in their hearts. [h] He will giue grace and glorie, and no good thing will he with-hold from them that walke vprightly. [i] Ioy is sowne for the vpright in the heart. [k] They which are vpright in their way, are the Lords delight: and, [l] Blessed are those that are vpright in their way. [m] The eyes of the Lord behold all the earth, to shew himselfe strong with them that are of perfect heart toward him. These places may shew this in generall, how God is pleased with Truth of heart. Now, how little hee regardeth shewes of Religion, bee they neuer so glorious, when the heart is not right, may bee gathered out of that which wee reade of Iehu, vpon whom notwithstanding his great zeale (as it might be thought) for the House of God, and against Idolatrie; yet the Spirit of God puts this imputation, IEHV [n] regarded not to walke in the Law of the Lord God of Israel, with all his heart. This secret Leauen sowred the whole lumpe; and because hereof, all his forwardnesse lost its grace in the eyes of God. God neuer regards mens comming [o] neere to him with their lips, when their hearts are remoued farre from him: euen to the mouthes of the most wicked it is possible that God may be neere, when yet he is [p] farre from their reynes. PAVL doth not amisse terme sinceritie a [q] Girdle, in the description of the spirituall Armour. It is that whereby all other Graces are (as it were) tyed close, and kept fast to a man. If the heart bee not vpright, what shew soeuer a man makes, yet he is but like an Apple rotten at the Core, or as an house built vpon the Sand, the one of which, though it be beautifull, will soone putrifie, the other, though it be fairely set out, yet will quickly fall. A man may haue many worthy gifts, yet if he want sinceritie, vpon a sudden may be taken from him, both that which [r] hee hath, and that which he seemes to haue; and his end will bee as the [s] Fig-trees, which making onely a shew with leaues, hauing no fruit (being cursed) lost euen those also: it withered away by degrees, and became good for nothing but the fire. Iudas was a man worthily endowed, no doubt, able to Pray, to Preach, to worke Miracles, yet wanting this Salt to season all the rest, how soone did they all rot and putrifie, so that his heart became a very Cage and Stie for Satan, and a fit nest for him to hatch that monstrous birth of the trecherous betraying of the Lord Iesus! Well therefore did Dauid pray, [t] Let my heart bee vpright, &c. as knowing well that hee could neuer auoid the disgrace, and shame, and obloquie of a notable hypocrite, if hee did not set himselfe with his whole heart to seeke the Lord: what goodly shew soeuer he might make for a time, yet it would fall heauie vpon him in the end. Now as the want of this truth is a blemish, euen to the most glorious shewes of Religion, so that they soone languish and come to nothing, either like the greeneneſſe of the leaues on the tree, when the roote is corrupt, or like the beautie and good fauour of the body, when the soule and spirit is departed; so on the other side, euen a little dram and graine thereof graceth a great many of infirmities, and causeth the Lord to winke at them, and as the phrase is, [u] to passe them by as if they had not beene. I remember here a similitude which I haue read, vsed by a reuerend Diuine: viz. that as a husband in loue beareth with many imperfections in his wife, and is content to take no notice of many occasions of offence, so long as shee remaineth true and faithfull to him in the mayne, reseruing her selfe to him onely as she ought: so God connieth many weakeneſſes in his deare children, whom as Hosea, [x] he hath in mercy and compassion married vnto himselfe, so long as they be as they ought to him in the principall: viz. in the truth and sincerities of the inward man. We may to this end, and for proofe hereof take notice of that which is said of Asa one of the Kings of Iudah, after the relation of some infirmities of his; as that the high places were not taken away, and that in displeasure hee put one of the Prophets in prison for reproouing him, and oppressed certaine of the people, and in his sickneſſe sought not the Lord, but to the Phisicians; [y] neuertheleſſe (saith the storie) [z] Asa's heart was vpright with the Lord all his dayes. All these his weakeneſſes are couered (as it were) vnder the mantle of sincerities: according as that in Simon Magus, that his heart was not vpright before the Lord, blemished all the whole profession that he made, in being baptized among the rest of the Samaritans, and continuing with [a] Philip. This in him was like that wild Gourd; which being shred into the pot of Pottage, embittered them so, that none could eate thereof, but vpon the first taste they cried out, [b] Death is in the pot. Vpon this ground Hezekiah was in hope of Gods fauourable respect to those, in whom at his solemne Passeouer there was some defect and want, in regard of some legall performances, appertaining vnto the preparation for that seruice: [c] The good Lord be merciſull vnto him that prepareth his whole heart to seeke the Lord God, &c. Thus a small quantitie of sincerities, sweetneth the whole busineſſe, though otherwise in the rigour of the Law it deserues a punishment. And this is it which makes the little portion of grace to thriue in the hands of Gods children. Their vprightneſſe and faithfulneſſe in a little, brings them to be owners of a greater deale, and to bee [d] owners ouer much. This brought such a plentifull blessing vpon the small beginnings of Nathanael, to whom Christ, because of his truth in the inward affections, promised an enlarged measure of enlightning, and that hee should [e] see still greater things.

e *Ioh.*1.50.

This

This brought such a comfortable increase vpon the dimme knowledge of the [f] Eunuch and Cornelius, they worshipped God in truth of heart, according to the measure of vnderstanding which they had receiued: in them the promise was accomplished, [g] To him that hath, shall be giuen, and he shall haue aboundance: they were led further into that great mysterie of godlinesse, an Euangelist being sent of God to the one, and both an Angell and an Apostle to the other. Wee may yet obserue, for the further manifestation of the acceptablenesse of this truth and sincerities vnto God, that God strengthens it to be a meanes of comfort to a mans soule in his greatest distresses. When Hezekiah was arrested with the sentence of death by the mouth of the Prophet, Put thy house in an order: for thou shalt die, &c. yet here was his comfort, and that which emboldned him to looke death in the face with the more courage; O Lord, thou knowest, or Remember now, (for herein I dare appeale to thy Maiestie) [h] that I haue walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart: hee had done many things of worthy note in the abolishment of Idolatrie, and in the restitution of the true worship of God, but in none of these simply tooke he content, but in the sincerities of his affection in performing them. So Paul in the midst of all his sorrowes, Yet this is our reioycing, not simply that he had preached, that hee had planted Churches, wrought miracles, conuerted sinners, made Satan to fall downe from heauen like lightning; but that in [i] simplicity and godly pureneſſe, we had our conuersation in the world. This puts a kind of Heroicall spirit and Lion-like boldnesse, into the children of God, in the greatest trials. Herevpon Paul was resolute, not [k] to passe for mans iudgement: and Iob was determined, not to be quashed or put downe with it, [l] though his aduersarie should write a booke against him: his heart not reproouing him for the want of this vpright affection, hee had matter of holy reioycing, not only when men were against him, and obiected many things vnto him, but euen when God set him as a marke for himselfe, and did seeme to account him as one of his enemies. Thus haue the vpright in heart [m] the spirit of power, and of a sound minde, [n] when feare seizeth on the Hypocrites, notwithstanding at times they may seeme to bee full of confidence. Thus I haue made to appeare, how true it is that God taketh a speciall pleasure in sincerities, in truth in the inward affections. Hee cannot indure the fairest shewes of pietie, when that wants. The absence hereof (as one saith well) maketh euen talents in Gods esteeme as light as feathers; that which glistereth like gold, is more base then drosse without it. Iudas an Apostle, yet what careth God for him being vnsincere? Againe, the Lord esteemes the smallest seruice seasoned with this grace: this maketh the Widdowes mite more ponderous in the ballance of the Sanctuarie, then the great gifts of vaine glorious Formalists. God takes no notice of faults in themselues vniustifiable and deseruing Hell, when this is found. It is that which hides the deformities of our actions, and maketh the acts of the poorest seruant of God, in his base and despised calling, to bee registred with God vnder the title of good good Works, and is a matter of ſound refreſhing to the ſoule whatſoeuer doth befall. It is eaſie to render a reaſon hereof, why this Truth in the inward affections, ſhould bee ſo pleaſing to God, and the contrarie ſo lothſome to him: [o] God himſelfe is Truth: and, [p] I am the Truth, ſaith Chriſt. God cannot but loue that which is like himſelfe: the more ſincerities, the more affinitie with the Lord. It is one ſpeciall branch of that Image of God, according to which man was made. The greater meaſure of truth in our inward parts, the more are wee (that I may ſpeake with the [q] Apoſtle) changed into that Image: and where this lacks, there muſt be a diſlike of God to it, there being nothing ſo directly oppoſite to the nature of God. It is as poſſible to compact together ſtrait and crooked, as to make an vnion betwixt God and an Hypocrite. Therefore well ſaid Salomon, that the froward or peruerſe in heart, or ſuch as Dauid termes, [r] Turners aſide by their crooked wayes, are an abomination to him. This I haue added in briefe, as a reaſon for this Doctrine. No maruell if God bee ſuch a louer of inward truth: it is a limme, as it were, of his owne likeneſſe: how can he but abhorre the guile of ſpirit, fire and water not being ſo contrarie either to other, as he and it? Thus concerning the Doctrine.

1. Vſe. Firſt, This ſhould, according to the ſcope and purpoſe, and drift of Dauid in this place, increaſe that our humiliation, which wee were perſwaded to labour for the laſt Day in reſpect of our inbred corruption. Dauid was ſo much the more ſenſible of the grieuouſneſſe of it, becauſe he ſaw by himſelfe how contrarie the heart of man is naturally vnto that diſpoſition and ſtate which God takes moſt delight in. Doubtleſſe, hee now perceiued better then he had done before, that there was within him yet remayning a certayne ſecret deceitfulneſſe, a kind of euill and ſinfull guile, directly contrarie to that holy Truth which God approues, and which hee placed in man at his firſt creating him. Behold, Lord, thou loueſt truth in the inward affections, but I ſee what my heart is, euen a very lumpe of ſubtiltie; and that which thou beſt approueſt, that very ſame doe I now finde my ſelfe moſt to want: ſo that this ſhould teach vs now to conceiue, what great cauſe we haue to be abaſed in our ſelues for our naturall eſtate, conſidering how vnlike wee are to God, as full in a manner of falſhood, as is he of Truth, hauing of our ſelues not one mite of that ſincerities and plainneſſe which he moſt affects. It is a labour worthy of a Chriſtian, who deſires ſo to vnderſtand the naturall euill of his heart, that hee may bee the more humbled thereby, to endeuour to know how farre man is of himſelfe from that Truth here ſpoken of; and what a deale of wicked fraud is euen heaped and pyled vp within him. Till a man knoweth this, hee can neuer ſo know himſelfe as is neceſſarie, inaſmuch as it is gatherable by this place, that this is the very mayne point in which conſiſts mans natiue ſinfulneſſe. Hereupon is it that Ieremiah giuing to the heart of man, the title of wicked, ioyneth therewith [s] deceitfull: as if he ſaid, This is the wickedneſſe of mans heart, that it may bee truely ſaid, That deceitfulneſſe it ſelfe cannot be more fraudulent: ſo the Apoſtle

Apoſtle ſpeaking of our inborne euill, termes it [t] the old man, which is corrupt through the deceiueable luſts. Deceitfulneſſe is the mayne ground of all the corruption which is in it. Satan that great deceiuer, and enginer of all treacherie, laboured the raſing out of the Truth, (the Image of God,) and the placing in of falſhood and guile, the very liuely image and pourtraiture of himſelfe. It was he which wrought in that multiplicity of inuentions, which Salomon mentions as the oppoſite to that eſtate of Righteouſneſſe, wherein by [u] God man was made. To lay forth all the particulars of that deceit which is borne with man, contrary to that Truth which God ſo loues, were a great labour; Man is a great deepe, ſaith AVSTIN, eaſier a great deale to know the number of his haires, then of the motions and affections of the heart: whereupon he profeſſed, that he could ſcarcely tell when to beleeue his owne ſoule. The blind corners, the ſecret turnings and windings, the cloſe lurking-holes that are here, cannot eaſily be found out. Experience gotten by the obſeruation of a mans owne ſelfe, may herein teach him much. Hee that ſhall keepe an often Audit with his owne heart, and examine the ſame ſtraitly from time to time, ſhall find a world of falſeneſſe in it more then he imagined. It is ſtrange what ſhifts we haue to deceiue our ſelues, ſometimes to perſwade our ſelues wee are not ſo bad as indeed wee are, ſometimes to poſſeſſe our ſelues with a ſtrong conceit, that wee haue that good and happineſſe which indeed we are vtterly without, ſometimes againe, that the good that is in vs is greater then it is. What cunning Pleas for the defending, excuſing, iuſtifying of euill, and for the leſſening of our groſſeſt faults? What inuentions for the heartning of our ſelues to begin, or continue graceleſſe courſes? Time will not giue leaue to mention all particulars. In a word, we are maruailous ingenious and witty to beguile our owne ſelues, ſo that wee haue none ſo great enemies to vs as our ſelues: not Satan himſelfe ſo hurtfull to vs, as our owne hearts. Our owne hearts are able to deceiue vs of themſelues: Satan cannot without our hearts: our heart is that which giues to the Deuill, againſt our ſoules, all the aduantage. It is well noted, that it is a greater puniſhment to bee giuen vp to a mans owne ſelfe, then to be giuen vp to Satan. The inceſtuous Corinthian being deliuered vp to Satan, came notwithſtanding to repentance, and was freed from the power of the [x] Deuill: but men deliuered vp to themſelues, are noted thereupon to be in a deſperate [y] caſe. This I note, that wee may proceede with Dauid in the vnderſtanding and knowledge of our ſelues. Wee are originally and totally euill of our ſelues, and herein eſpecially, becauſe that Truth in the inward affections, which God ſo loues, wee want, and our hearts are nothing but a very packe and fardle of deceitfulneſſe. A pleaſing euill this is, becauſe it helps to feede that naturall wickedneſſe which is in vs, and which is ſweet vnto vs; but it is a deadly poyſon, and if it bee not purged, it will bee bitterneſſe in the end: and when wee haue a long time delighted our ſelues in a conceit of deceiuing God, and the World, wee ſhall finde at laſt to our endleſſe wo, that wee haue aboue all beguiled our owne ſoules. Labour wee then to know this myſterie of ſpirituall deceit, let vs trauaile with our owne hearts, to bring them to a ſight of this corruption: when wee doe ſee it, it will ſeeme at the firſt to be a matter of diſcomfort, but that God hath made vs able to ſee it, we may embrace it as a matter of reioycing. Hee that giues to ſee it, will alſo giue grace to be humble for it, to grow into a deteſtation of it, and will alſo affoord ſtrength and power to ouercome it. Here is the firſt Vſe, our mayne euill naturally is, that wee haue none of that Truth in the inward affections, which God takes pleaſure in. That which is moſt contrary to God, therein doe we of our ſelues moſt abound.

2. Vſe. Secondly, inaſmuch as this Truth in the inward affections, is ſo pleaſing to God, and ſo ſcant in vs by nature, wee ſhould therefore labour ſo much the more to be endued with it. This is that Truth which Salomon perſwades to [z] buy: that is, to ſpare no coſt, to forbeare no diligence that wee may enioy: and it is it which Iohn ſpeaks ſo often of in his Epiſtle to [a] Gaius. The ſumme is, that wee ſhould ayme eſpecially and aboue all, at the reforming and purging of our inward man, at the ſeating, and placing, and grounding of Religion in our hearts. This is the right method in Religion, to begin firſt with our inſide, that as it by the cunning of the Deuill was firſt decayed, ſo by the power of Grace it may bee firſt reſtored. The heart of Eue was poyſoned before her eye. A man muſt ſet on firſt with the mortification thereof, if he meane indeed to bee religious: [b] O Ieruſalem, waſh thine heart, and [c] clenſe your hearts, you ſinners. It is poſſible to bring the outward man to ſome ciuill conformitie, ſo as one may bee taken by others to bee very religious: and yet all is nothing, if the heart bee not reformed. This is that Fountayne which muſt bee clenſed, before that which iſſueth and ſtreameth from it can bee wholeſome. GOD is not ſatisfied with outward forme, though men bee many times deluded therewith: [d] Hee ſeeth not as man ſeeth: for man looketh on the outward appearance: but God beholdeth the heart. [e] Giue me thy heart (ſaith he) &c. [f] They are onely the Iſrael of God, to whom he is good, euen the pure in heart. This then being plaine, that inward Truth and ſinceritie of heart, is the mayne thing to bee endeuoured for, if we deſire indeed to bee ſuch as God may take delight in, let vs inquire by what meanes wee may attayne hereto, and by what marks we may know our ſelues to be endued herewith. Touching meanes, the firſt general meanes, is conſtant dependance vpon the preaching of the Word. This is proued, [g] Deſire the ſincere Milke of the Word: he calls the Word a ſincere Milke: a Milke without deceit: it is in it ſelfe Truth, hauing the God of Truth for the Author, Chriſt Ieſus the Truth for the Witneſſe, the Spirit of Truth for the Compoſer of it; and then it works Truth into the hearts of thoſe that heare it. It is mightie to the purging out of that leauen of fraud which is within vs; [h] You are cleane through the Word, &c. [i] Sanctifie them with thy Truth, thy Word is Truth: there is the meanes. This is it which begets [k] Faith, and Faith is that which [l] purifieth the Heart. How came the Romanes to that heartiheartineſſe and ſinceritie of obedience, which Paul commends ſo much? was it not by that [m] forme of holy Doctrine which was deliuered them? or as wee read it ſometimes, vnto which they were deliuered? wherein the Truth preached is compar'd vnto a mold into which they were caſt, and by which they were tranſpoſed into a new forme, inabled to walke vprightly, and without halting before the Lord. Then againe it is truely ſaid, that the heart can neuer bee ſincere, till it bee humbled and broken, and brought to the abaſement and deniall of it ſelfe: and what meanes hath God ordained ſo effectuall as his Word, to worke this humiliation of ſpirit? Is not this the [n] Hammer which breaketh the ſtone? Is not this that liuely and working inſtrument, which entreth thorow to the [o] diuiding aſunder of the ſoule and the ſpirit? Is not this it which [p] pricketh the heart, and maketh it to [q] melt: and ſometimes wringeth teares from the eyes of thoſe that heare [r] it? Beſides, what hope that euer any mans diſeaſe of a falſe heart ſhould be cured, vntill he be brought to the ſight of it? Who ſeekes for health till he know himſelfe to bee diſeaſed? and ſhall euer any man bee brought to the vnderſtanding of his defect in this, vntill he hath beene made to ſee it by the Word? This is that glaſſe, in which hee ſhall behold his ſecret falſhood, and by which hee ſhall bee brought to ſee the guile of his inward man. The Well of mans heart is deepe, neither haue wee any pitcher of our owne with which to deſcend into it: [s] The heart is deceitfull, &c. who can know it? meaning, that of himſelfe no man can: but there is a light in the Word, which [t] makes all things manifeſt. If this light bee ſet vpon the Candleſticke of a faithfull miniſtrie, there is nothing ſo cloſely cooped vp in the cloſet of mans heart, but it ſhall bee [u] opened. Paul giues this teſtimonie to the Word, well and ſoundly opened in the Church Aſſemblies, that [x] the ſecrets of the Hearers hearts are thereby made manifeſt. That place in the [y] Hebrewes, if we reade it as ſome doe, and as the Greeke will very well beare it, when the Apoſtle had ſpoken of the power of the Word, he addes immediately, Neither is there any creature which is not manifeſt in the ſight therof: viz. (of the Word) and vnderſtanding by creature, ſuch thoughts, and intents, and motions, as are framed in the heart, which may without any improprietie or ſtraining, be termed the creatures of the heart. I will not binde to this interpretation of this place: only this I am ſure, it holds good correſpondence with the Greeke, with the ſcope of the place, and with the Analogie of Faith, which are our ordinarie rules in caſe of expounding. But howſoeuer I haue alleaged enough beſides, to proue the miniſtrie of the Word to be the light by which the hidden ſubtiltie of mans heart ſhall bee diſcouered, I remember a ſaying of SALOMON, [z] Councell is in the heart of man, but a man that hath vnderſtanding, will draw it out: it is true ſimply in the latter, that a man of experience and iudgement will fiſh out another mans thoughts, and diue into his purpoſes, and ſound into the depth of them by degrees and circumſtances, before he is aware; now much more ſhall hee which hath that [a] wiſedome which maketh a mans face face to ſhine, meaning thereby holy and ſpirituall wiſedome fetched out of Gods Word, ſearch into mens boſomes, and leade them along as God ſometimes in ſpirit led Ezekiel, from one corner of their heart vnto another, making them by degrees to ſee the abominable deceits that are therein. Thus then I conclude, that the maine meanes to worke this truth into our inward affections, which God ſo loueth, is to wait on the Ordinance of God: the Word therein diſpenſed is without deceit, and works ſtill vpon the heart, till it makes it ſtill more and more like to it. It begetteth Faith, which is the Clenſer of the heart: it breedeth that humiliation and brokenneſſe of ſpirit, without which there can be no ſinceritie: it layeth open that guile of ſpirit, with which it is naturally enſnared, and which, vntill it be eſpyed, there can neuer be any truth within: inaſmuch as it is one ſpeciall branch of inward truth, feelingly and vnderſtandingly to acknowledge our owne vileneſſe and vnworthineſſe before the Lord. Here then, wouldeſt thou haue thy ſoule furniſhed with that qualitie, which is in the ſight of God a thing much ſet by (Truth in the inward affections,) looke vp for it to the Father of Lights, from whom commeth euery good and perfit giuing; and vſe the meanes which he hath ſanctified, to make thee become a true Iſraelite, and that is the preaching of that holy Truth, which the Spirit of Truth hath digeſted in the Word. Come thou to this with a prepared heart, making this thine errand, that thy ſoule may be rectified, and that the Image of God, which thou loſt ſometimes in Adam, may be reſtored in thee; then thou ſhalt ſee what a bleſſing will enſue. I ſay to thee, as God ſaid in the caſe of Tithes; proue now the Lord herewith, and ſee whether thou taking this courſe, he will not euen open the windowes of Heauen vnto thee, and powre thee out a bleſſing without meaſure. Neglect this meanes, neuer ſhalt thou come to know the crookedneſſe of thy naughty heart, but this thy natiue euill will increaſe vpon thee, and thy portion ſhall bee with guilefull and double-hearted Hypocrites in the end. And thou which art a conſtant and a conſcionable Hearer, know that thou haſt profited well by thy hearing, if thou art come ſo farre, as to know in ſome meaſure the ſecret ſubtility of thy heart, and ſo accordingly to deſire the conforming of it more and more, to that righteouſneſſe and holineſſe of truth which God approues.

A ſecond meanes to further this Truth and ſinceritie, is to endeuour to poſſeſſe our hearts with this, and to haue it euer in our thoughts, that in all things, eſpecially in matters of Religion, we haue to doe with God, and are euer in his preſence, hee being one (as wee haue often heard) whom no ſhewes, bee they neuer ſo glorious, are able to delude. This was Gods rule preſcribed to Abraham, and it is that which euery child of Abraham muſt obſerue: [b] Walke before me, and be vpright: as if hee had ſaid, Wouldſt thou be vpright and ſincere indeed? Remember then that thou art euer in my ſight, euen when thou art moſt alone, moſt retyred, moſt with-drawne from company, moſt ſilent, and ſecret, howſoeuer diſpoſed, yet I ſtill looke vpon thee and obſerue thee: euen thy thoughts, the moſt hidden motions

motions and passages of thy mind I vnderstand: with what affection, with what mind, with what manner of disposition thou doest whatsoeuer thou doest, I perceiue. This is a notable meanes to bring a man to vprightnesse of heart. It is the very mayne ground of all hypocrisie, that this one thing is not duely thought on. Men forget him that sees in secret, and whose eyes are as a flame of fire, and therewith pierceth further than the outward face; and hereupon they are apt to imagine that when they haue carried the matter smoothly and fayrely before men, all is well. The world eyther applaudes them, or not accuseth them, and hereupon they flatter themselues, like the Whore that wipeth her mouth, [c] and saith shee hath committed no iniquitie. Let vs then remember this, if we would be true and sincere in our hearts; The waies of man are before the eyes of [d] God, and he pondereth all his paths. This kept the Church and people of God, of old, in their sinceritie, and preserued them from dealing falsly concerning his Couenant: they thought with themselues, If we doe thus and thus, shall not God search it out? for he knoweth the [e] secrets of the heart: and this consideration moued Paul to faithfulnesse in his ministerie; We make not merchandize of the Word, but as of sinceritie, but as of God, in the sight of God, [f] speake we in Christ. See what things goe together: doing a matter in sinceritie, and doing it as in the sight of God.

c Prou.30.20.

f 2.Cor.2.17.

A third meanes to beget and increase this sinceritie and vprightnesse in the inward man, and to make vs not to content our selues with shewes and matters of forme, but to labour for the power of religion in our hearts, is, to call our selues to a frequent reckoning touching our carriages, binding our selues to an examination of them, to see how wee bee able to iustifie them before the Lord. He that hath a seruant of whose fidelitie he hath some doubt, and whom he desires if it might be to reclaime, both for the good of the partie, and for his owne particular also, that he may be vsefull to him, he will not let him runne on too long before he call him to an account; he considereth that to be the next way to make him secure and careless. If he expect euer and anon to be reckoned with, it will cause him so much the more carefully to looke vnto his businesse. It is so in this case: The Word of God telleth thee, that thou hast within thee a false, a coozening, a deceitfull heart; a heart that will beguile thee to thine vtter ruine, it is euer ready to practise with Satan the professed enemie of thy soule, to worke mischiefe against thee: wouldest thou reforme this heart, that it might become vsefull and seruiceable for thee, in the great and important businesse of saluation, be sure to call it often to an account; it will be good to reckon with it once a day, to see what hath passed it, to examine what thoughts haue beene framed in it, what purposes, what intents, what acts haue beene done, as effects and fruits of these inward purposes: surely this tying of thy selfe to such an often suruay, and looking backe vpon thy heart, will keepe thy heart in so much the more awe; and when it is once accustomed to the sweetnesse which will be felt: when it can giue account of care, and of obedience, and to the ſmart and puniſhing which followeth the remembrance of fayling in holy duties, it cannot but be kept in ſo much the better tune. The very thought of an after-reckoning will be a ſtay when one is ready to halt, and will be a meanes to keepe him vpright, when his feete haue well-nigh ſlipt. Theſe three meanes I doe eſpecially commend vnto our obſeruation and practice, if our deſire bee to attayne to that truth in the inward affections, of which Dauid giues this teſtimony, that in it God delights. Firſt, Dependance vpon the miniſtery of the Word. Secondly, Serious remembrance, that in euery buſineſſe, and place, and action we haue to doe with God. Thirdly, Often reckoning with our hearts: the often calling them to account, will by degrees inure them vnto faithfulneſſe.

Marks of truth in the inward affections.

The next thing which I promiſed for the perfiting of this vſe, is markes of this Truth: how a man may be able to iudge himſelfe, whether his heart and inward man be furniſhed with any meaſure of ſinceritie. Among many which I meet with, in thoſe which haue laboured to handle this poynt, I will briefly commend vnto you theſe. Firſt, It is a teſtimonie of truth in the inward affections, when one carrieth an vniuerſall hatred of all ſinne, that is, of ſecret ſinnes as well as of open ſins, of leſſer ſinnes as well as of greater euils, of ſuch ſinnes as haue ſome ſpeciall enticement, by ſome particularity of content or profit, as well as of thoſe which afford neyther. Thus more plainely: it is a token of a true and vpright heart, when a man hath a conſtant purpoſe in no one thing, willingly to ſinne againſt God; but rather doth endeuour to the vtmoſt in euery good way of Gods commandements. Dauid giues this note of them that are vpright in their way, Surely (ſaith he) they doe no g iniquitie: meaning, that they liue not in the ſeruice, in the willing, and ordinary practice of any thing that is knowne vnto them to be ſin: and the ſame Dauid oppoſeth h to the vpright in heart, ſuch as turne aſide by their crooked waies, that haue deuices and ſhifts notwithſtanding ſome kind of formalitie, yet in ſome particulars to diſpenſe with themſelues for ſome particular wickedneſſe. There is nothing more ordinary, then to find an vnſound and hollow-hearted hypocrite, to ſhew a kind of hatred of ſome ſinnes, who yet in ſome other will make no conſcience. Saul would ſeeme to carrie a great deteſtation of the peoples eating fleſh with the bloud, and cryed out vpon them with open mouth, i Oh you haue dealt wickedly: but he could thinke it nothing in a rage to ſpill the bloud of guiltleſſe Ionathan his worthie ſonne; and he had done it, if the people had not hindred him. How eager was Iehu in putting downe the Temple of Baal, but the worſhipping of the Calues which Ieroboam had ſet vp, he ſuffered to continue vpon the ſame ground, vpon which they were firſt erected, viz. leſt the going vp of the people according to the cuſtome to Ieruſalem ſhould bee dangerous, and a meanes of reducing Iſrael to the ancient allegiance of the Crowne of Iuda. The Phariſes were very preciſe, and would not come into the common Hall on the day of Preparation to the Paſſeouer, leſt they ſhould be be defiled; yet to satisfie their malicious hearts, they could giue consent to the shedding of the most innocent bloud of the [k] LORD IESVS. This is no sinceritie. I hate all false wayes, that is the voice of him that is [l] sincere. A sincere heart is as tender as the eye, which is troubled and made to smart and water with the smallest Mote; or as a strait Shoo which cannot indure the least stone within it, but makes him shrinke and tread respectiuely, and with a kind of fauour to his foote vntill it bee remoued. This is one marke.

A second, which is in a manner a limme of the former, but yet I choose to note it apart, that it may be the better noted, is a taking heede to that sinne, to which a man finds himselfe most apt; or wherewith he hath at any time beene ouertaken. I ground this vpon a saying of DAVIDS, [m] I was vpright, &c. how doth that appeare? and haue kept me from my wickednesse. What is that which Dauid calleth here his wickednesse? Surely, some speciall euill, which he perceiued himselfe most inclineable to, and of the preuayling whereof against him, he had on some particular occasion some experience. This he calls [My wickednesse] which he more especially was in loue with, which he was most easily drawne into, and whereby he had beene most ensnared. Euery man hath in him naturally the seede of euery sinne, but yet there is some one or more speciall corruption, to which (whoso knoweth himselfe) will say he is more apt; which he may iustly terme His, as being more strong, and more working in him then some others are. Wouldst thou then be assured of thy selfe, that thou art true in thy inward affections; consider thy selfe, and see which is thy speciall wickednesse, which thou hast either oftnest fayled in, or art most inclined vnto. Is it rash Anger, is it Pride, is it Wantonnesse, is it Worldlinesse, is it vaine Pleasure, &c? If thou bee especially wary and watchfull touching that, to preuent the occasions, to stop the beginnings of it, to beware of the inducements to it; this is a notable testimonie of sinceritie. An Hypocrite hath euer some speciall beloued darling sinne which he fauoureth, and will not forsake. It is a common excuse vsed by many, Oh, I pray you beare with me, it is my fault: doest thou thinke to bee borne withall for that, because it is the euill thou art most giuen to? Nay, learne to hate it, and to striue against it so much the more, or else thou art an Hypocrite.

m *Psal.*18.23.

A third, is a willingnesse to lay open euery sinne as soone as it is knowne to be a sinne, and to that end a gladnesse to haue the conscience ransackt and ripped vp, that that which is sinne may bee found out. Dauid spake it out of experience, when he pronounced [n] the man blessed, in whose spirit there is no guile: now this was a branch of that spirituall guile, that hee once thought to helpe himselfe in euill doing, by holding of his tongue; as who would say, hee would forget it and passe it ouer: but he neuer was well, till hee was deliuered of that false tricke, and fell to the acknowledging of his sinne, without hiding his iniquitie: hee neuer had comfort, till hee had confest against himselfe his wickednesse. This hee writes for a patterne, and therefore giues his Psalme a title accordingly [To giue instruction:] and in the last Verse, professeth to doe it for the comfort of those that are vpright in heart; so that herein they shall manifest their vprightnesse, if like him they shall confesse against themselues their wickednesse. This experience taught Dauid to intreat the Lord to pry into him, as fearing himselfe, that he should deale somewhat ouer-fauourably with himselfe: o Trieme, O God, and know mine heart: prooue me, and know my thoughts, and consider if there be any way of wickednesse in me: and, Let the righteous smite me, for that is a benefit: and, p Let him reprooue me, &c. He was desirous to know the vtmost by himselfe by all meanes. When a man loues not those things, which tend to the discouerie of his heart and life, and to the finding out of his secret euils, as reprehensions whether priuate or publique, or serious and earnest confession of sinne before the Lord, it is a signe of a false heart: beware how thou cherish thy selfe in such an humour.

A fourth marke, when a man makes conscience to bee one and the same manner of man at home and in priuate, that hee is abroad and in publique. This is also a branch of Dauids sincerities, and of his resolution to walke in a perfect way: q I will walke vprightly in the midst of mine house: his meaning is, hee will be the same among his houshold people, where few behold him, that hee is abroad where many see him: hee will bee as godly in his chamber, as in the Temple. You shall haue some in whom the saying is verified, Angels abroad, Deuils at home; deuout in the Church, prophane in their Houses: in open places where they may haue praise of men, they will doe some good; but after they are more priuate, they discouer themselues in their kind, and runne freely to their owne race, r as the horse rusheth into the battell. I could name diuers other tokens of this inward truth, but I will take heede to ouer-burthen your memories; you see how farre this one Doctrine hath carryed mee. If you please to looke backe where I began, I hope you shall see, that as the matter I haue deliuered is good, so it is such as springs naturally out of this Text. Dauid enlargeth the foulenesse of our Originall sinne, by noting what that is which God best likes, intimating thereby, that the nature of man is in it selfe most scant of that which God most approues. This that God so much loues, is inward sincerities, when a man laboureth to haue his heart as good before God, as himselfe desires to bee deemed before men. This I proued to be a truth: I applyed it first, as Dauid doth, to the making vs more humbly sensible of our natiue miserie. Next, I exhorted to striue to bee furnished with that which God takes such delight in: and haue amplified that Exhortation, with directions how to get this grace, and how to know our selues to haue attayned it. This is the Summe.

VERS. 6.

Therefore haſt thou taught me wiſedome in the ſecret of mine heart.

DAVIDS ſpeciall purpoſe in this clauſe, is to aggrauate his yeelding ſo farre to his owne natiue corruption, as by it to be ouer-carryed into ſo enormous a ſinne, as that which by the power of Nathans miniſterie, he is brought to acknowledge in this Pſalme. I read it as I finde it in our ordinarie Books, albeit in our reuiewed Tranſlations, that which is [haſt taught me, &c.] is, ſhalt teach me, or make me to know. That reading, I confeſſe, may carry a good ſenſe, as teſtifying the hope that Dauid had, that the Lord would yet bee mercifull vnto him, in furniſhing his heart with all neceſſarie knowledge: but yet (for my part) I cannot (vnder correction) conceiue, how it may ſo well ſort with the ſcope of the place; which is (as yet) more to declare Dauids compunction for his euill paſt, then to bewray his hope for the time to come. I will not waſte time, either in relating or in ſcanning varietie of Interpretations. For my owne particular, I thus conceiue of the place, as if Dauid had ſaid; According as (O Lord) the ſinceritie of the inward man is a thing which eſpecially thou delighteſt in, ſo thou haſt beene pleaſed to conferre a gracious portion of holy and heauenly vnderſtanding vpon my heart, which maketh my ſinne the more foule, it being a kind of brutiſh choking of that ſpirituall Light which thou haſt made to ſhine within mee, by mine vnruly and vnbrideled luſts. I haue not now fayled in dutie, through lacke of knowledge, but I haue euen in a kind of wilfull manner gone againſt thoſe rules of wiſedome, which thou haſt engrauen by thy Spirit in the ſecret of my heart. This is the meaning.

The purpoſe of the words.

Foure particulars doe here-hence offer themſelues to our conſideration. Firſt, There is a wiſedome in Religion. Secondly, God is the Teacher of it. Thirdly, God in teaching it affords a fauour. Fourthly, What ſinne ſoeuer is committed againſt this taught Wiſedome, is in that reſpect the more haynous. Theſe foure points doe very kindly and vnenforcedly ſpring out of this place, according as in the handling of each of them in its courſe and order ſhall appeare. Concerning the firſt, the Doctrine is thus,

That the knowledge of heauenly things appertayning to the right way of pleaſing God, and of ſauing our owne ſoules, is the true wiſedome. This is that which Dauid here calleth Wiſedome, ſpirituall vnderſtanding, ſuch as by which a man is made wiſe vnto ſaluation: God had taught him wiſedome,

The firſt Doctrine.

dome, that is, had endowed him with the knowledge of his dutie owing to God, and of things neceſſarily pertayning to the eternall ſauing of his owne ſoule. This he termes Wiſedome. God commending to the people thoſe holy Ordinances and Lawes, which he acquainted them with by Moſes Miniſterie, Keepe them therefore and doe them, for that is your wiſedome: ſo there is no true wiſedome but in the knowledge of true Religion. Onely this people is wiſe: God ſaith, the World ſhall bee euen forced to ſpeake ſo of the Iſraelites, in regard of their prerogatiue in the meanes and matter of knowledge aboue others. Bee not vnwiſe, ſaith PAVL, a but vnderſtand what the will of the Lord is: there is the definition of Wiſedome, to vnderſtand what the will of the Lord is: and this is that Wiſedome which the ſame Apoſtle begged of God on the behalfe of the b Epheſians, and of the c Coloſsians. When Kings and Iudges are called vpon to be d wiſe, what is perſwaded, but Religious knowledge? who is hee whom Salomon doth ſo often be-foole in his Prouerbs? is it not the naturall man? euery man in himſelfe ſo long as he is vnregenerate? e Fooliſhneſſe is bound in his heart. As wiſe as man takes himſelfe to bee of himſelfe, yet in his birth he is but like a wild Aſſe-colt, ſaid Zophar well in the generall, though preſſed amiſſe in the particular againſt f Iob. Now, what is mans naturall folly, but this, g That he perceiueth not the things of the Spirit of God: he hath no more ſauour of matters of that nature, then an Horſe or Mule: his beſt h wiſedome is earthly, ſenſuall, and deuilliſh? As then folly ſtands mainly in the ignorance of heauenly things, be a man otherwiſe in things appertayning to the world neuer ſo acute; ſo herein is wiſedome euen to know God aright, and him whom he hath ſent, Chriſt Ieſus. This is that which Dauid termes, i good iudgement, and knowledge. Becauſe of this, k He was more wiſe then his enemies, and had more vnderſtanding then his Teachers, and exceeded the Ancients in diſcretion. l Hath not God made the wiſedome of this world fooliſhneſſe? m Knoweth hee not that the thoughts, euen of the wiſeſt, are but vaine? How ſhall he be held for wiſe, who wanteth iudgement and vnderſtanding in the principall? and what is the principall, if not this, to know how to ſerue God ſo here, as that we may be ſaued with him, and by him hereafter? What were a man but a Foole, in caſe he otherwiſe knew all ſecrets, and could ſpeake and diſcourſe in matters of the world, as if one ſpake from an Oracle, or did equall Salomon in diſcouering the natures of Trees and Herbs, n from the Cedar in Lebanon, euen vnto the Hyſope that ſpringeth out of the Wall, if yet he were to ſeeke in the matters that concerne Eternitie? All this is but like that wiſedome which we taxe in a man, when we ſay, He is penny wiſe, but pound fooliſh: he will bee miſerable to ſaue a penny, and yet be prodigall in pounds vpon an humour. This is poore wiſedome: ſo on the other ſide, How can he be taxed for a Foole iuſtly, who, whatſoeuer his reach and depth be in the things of this life, (haply he hath not ſo many politique fetches, nor cannot plod and multiply proiects as others doe,) yet he knoweth the way of ſaluation, he knoweth Chriſt Crucified? Hath not he taken the wiſer courſe, who who hath gotten ſome certaintie for the mayne, howſoeuer it fare with him in the inferiour: ſo that in reaſon it muſt be acknowledged, that the knowledge of ſo doing our dutie to God, as that we may ſaue our ſelues, is the onely wiſedome: where this wants, the greateſt deepneſſe is but ſhallowneſſe. Thus for proofe.

The Vſe. Here wee are taught whereat wee muſt ayme. If it bee our deſire to be wiſe indeede, the attainement of ſpirituall vnderſtanding, it muſt be our chiefeſt ſcope. Hee that knoweth how to manage his affaires here, ſo as that he groweth rich and full, and can goe thorow with ſuch buſineſſes as he vndertakes, and quit himſelfe in regard of the wrongs and iniuries which men dealing in the world are liable vnto; ſuch an one we adiudge wiſe: him wee terme a diſcreete, ſenſible, ſufficient, vnderſtanding man. This opinion wee haue of him, albeit he be as groſſe and dull in matters of Religion, as Nicodemus, and care as little for matters tending and appertaining thereunto, as [o] Gallio: ſo on the other ſide, they which are moſt induſtrious to get religious knowledge, and to that end [p] watch daily at Wiſedomes gates, and [q] runne to and fro, that their vnderſtanding may increaſe, ſeeking it (according to Gods commandement) at [r] the mouth of thoſe whoſe lips ought to preſerue it; they are generally reckoned of as the fooles of the times, and ſcorned and ſet at nought as ſo may ſilly Animals, which albeit it may bee they meane well, yet they know not what they doe. The worldly-wiſe man looks on and laughes at theſe, and applaudes himſelfe in his owne thoughts, who hath (vnleſſe hee deceiue himſelfe) found out a neerer and a ſurer way to heauen then theſe Gadders and buſie Hunters after knowledge are acquainted with; ſuch great difference there is betwixt the iudgement of God and man in the point of Wiſedome: and this is the reaſon, that [s] not many wiſe men after the fleſh are called: the Lord hath hid the myſteries of Religion from the wiſe, and men of vnderſtanding, and reueiled them vnto thoſe whom the world makes leſſe account [t] of. Let vs learne to beleeue God aboue all: that true knowledge of him which brings ſaluation, is the onely wiſdome. Euen Achitophel himſelfe is but a foole in Gods eſteeme, without this. Thus concerning the firſt. The ſecond followeth. The Doctrine is thus,

The ſecond Doctrine. That the Lord himſelfe is the proper Teacher of that ſpirituall and heauenly wiſedome, which is accompanied with ſaluation. [Thou haſt taught me, ſaith Dauid,] acknowledging the information and furniſhing of the inward man therewith, to be the Lords worke. According to this, the Elect of God are termed, [u] taught of God. When Peter made that notable confeſſion of [x] Faith, Fleſh and Bloud, ſaith our Sauiour, hath not reueiled it vnto thee, but my Father which is in heauen; teaching it to bee from God wholly, that any man knoweth and conceiueth any thing in Religion as he ought. It is the Lord, to whom either the reueiling or hiding of matters of this nature appertaines: [y] To you it is giuen, ſaith Chriſt to his Diſciples, [z] to know the ſecrets of the Kingdome of God. So that there is no poſſibility of hauing this kind of knowledge, but but by donation from heauen. [a] From thence is euery good gift, &c. [b] A man can receiue nothing, except it be giuen him from heauen. Man is of himselfe a meere dullard in heauenly things; euen [c] a beast in himselfe before God: [d] the things of God are foolishnesse vnto him, and hee cannot know them. Religion is termed a mysterie: [e] Great is the mysterie of godlinesse: and Paul calleth the Doctrine concerning Christ, [f] The mystery of Christ: like is that phrase, [g] The hid wisedome of God, and [h] The deepe things of God: and all to this end, to shew, that our darkenesse cannot comprehend the things of this nature, without some speciall enabling. None can truely teach the heart, but onely hee that made the same.

The Vse.

The mayne and proper Vse of this Doctrine (which also followeth very fitly vpon the former Doctrine) is taught by S. IAMES, [p] If any of you lacke wisedome, let him aske of God. Would wee that holy and heauenly wisedome before commended to vs, behold here who it is that teacheth it, and who is only able to bestow it. It is the Lord who teacheth it, and settleth it in the secret of the heart. DAVIDS prayers then must be taken vp, [q] Teach me thy way, O Lord. [r] Teach me thy Statutes. [s] Open mine eyes, that I may see the wonders of thy Law: [t] Hide not thy Commandements from me: [u] Make me to vnderstand the way of thy Precepts. [x] Giue me vnderstanding. [y] Teach me to doe thy Will: let thy good Spirit leade me, &c. DAVID is frequent in such kind of requests. His sonne Salomon had learned of him to pray for an [z] vnderstanding heart. May it not generally bee said to vs in the words of S. IAMES: [a] You get nothing, because you aske not? God is ready to giue, and that largely: [b] Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it. Our selues are onely in fault for our owne penurie herein; If thou callest after knowledge, (saith the Spirit of God by SALOMON) [c] and criest for vnderstanding, then shalt thou vnderstand righteousnesse, and iudgement, and equitie, and euery good path. If a King should giue out a mint of Treasure vpon this only condition of fetching it, who would not hasten for his share? Sith God offereth such a blessing, requiring no more vpon our parts but to seeke it; are wee not without excuse, if we will goe without it for lacke of asking?

Perhaps

Perhaps we will say, we aske, we will professe that we are ordinarie suters vnto God for this blessing. It is well if we be: but if we be and yet want, sure it is, because, as S. Iames saith, [d] Wee aske amisse: we doe not seeke of him as we should. Therefore to make all cleere vnto vs herein, it shall bee very profitable to enlarge this Vse by shewing three things. First, How God teacheth this wisedome. Secondly, How wee must bee qualified and disposed, that we may be taught it. Thirdly, How we shall be assured that we are taught it.

d *chap.*4.3.

The point concerning the seeking, obtaining, and enioying of heauenly wisedome, enlarged.

How God teacheth heauenly wisedome.

Touching the first: We must not dreame of any Anabaptisticall reuelations, and I know not what strange and immediate inspirings, but we must haue recourse to a meanes. For so God works ordinarily: and the meanes which for this God hath sanctified, is the ministerie of man. The holy Scripture is the Booke of Wisedome, out of which God will giue vnto the simple sharpnesse of wit: but, teaching by man, is the Pipe by which this sacred Wisedome is to bee conueyed vnto vs from the Fountayne: therefore God honoureth his Ministers with the title of [e] Teachers, and hath ordayned a deputation of faithfull men, which should be [f] able to teach others also. It pleased him to terme such, [g] Labourers together with himselfe: inasmuch as he hath put this teaching-businesse into their hands, and by them teacheth those whom it is his good pleasure to instruct: [h] Goe yee out, and teach all Nations, &c. If a man shall pretend a desire and disposition to be taught of God, and yet shall neglect this meanes, it is but meere presumption. No man hath any assurance by the Word of God, euer to attayne this wisedome but by this course. I remember what Paul notes touching the Church of Corinth, and we may obserue it as a true pourtraiture of the state of our times: one cryed, [i] I am PAVLS; another, I am APOLLO's; a third, I am of CEPHAS: the people began to grow into comparisons of their Teachers, each one as himselfe affected. PAVL, me thinks, is the best, said one: nay, APOLLO's for me, said another: Oh no, PETER goeth beyond them all, said a third. In commeth a fourth, and as taking himselfe to be wiser then all the rest, I will hang vpon none of them all, saith hee; I am CHRISTS, I will beleeue in him, I will not trouble my selfe to harken vnto those: so now, there being a folly among our Hearers, to respect the gifts of their Teachers more then their owne dutie of profiting by their Doctrine, there be that take occasion by their indiscretion to renounce all; Oh, they will depend vpon no men, God is he that is the Teacher of all, and to him they will looke. I beseech you, marke what the Apostle there saith in this case fitly and fully, [k] Is Christ diuided? as if he said, Will you make a separation betwixt Christ and his Ministers, professing a sole dependance vpon him, without the mediation of any mans ministerie? I will hang vpon none of them all, I will depend vpon Christ. It is as great an error so to professe, so to depend vpon Christ, with a neglect of Paul and Apollos, and Cephas, as to hang so much either vpon all of these together, or any one of them apart, as in the meane while to forget Christ, who is the Author of their Ministery, and who is only able to giue a blessing thereunto.

Both extremities must be auoided, and the middle way made choise of, as the safest way. Expect a blessing from the Teacher of the heart, by him that is appointed to be the Teacher of the eare: and so listen to the Teacher of the eare, as to know there is an higher then he, who must make it worke vpon the heart. Here then is the way by which God will bring thee to be wise. If thou scorne this course, and presume so far vpon thy selfe, as to be able to doe well enough without it, thou wilt become of the number of those, touching whom PAVL, [l] Who when they professed themselues to be wise, became fooles: thou wilt perish in thine owne imaginations, and vanish away like a Snaile that melteth, or like the vntimely fruit of a Woman, in thine owne conceit. This is the first point: [m] He that desireth, as Salomon saith, to lodge among the wise, let him prepare his eare to harken to the instruction of life. I know God can teach otherwise, but I haue no warrant to thinke he will. In this case I am sure, I am tyed by a Commandement, and I am encouraged by a Promise; out of this, I goe vpon meere aduenture: it is a thousand to one, but it will fare with me, as with them who would needs transgresse the Lords course in the matter of Manna: they were told, that vpon the Sabbath they should find none; yet they would trie: but what saith the Text? [n] Some of the people went out to gather, but found none: so they were charged vpon the weeke daies to lay vp none, yet they would needs reserue; but it was [o] full of wormes, and stunke. Thus shall it be with me, when in the singularity and pride of my owne heart, I wil forsake the Lords high-way, and goe some by-path of mine owne deuising: either I shall find none, or it will be such as will stinke, and come to nothing. I speake of this point often, and as long as I shall speake, by the grace of God, euer will: because it may be said of this particular way, as was said of the generall way of Christianitie, [p] There is about it stirre and trouble not a little. The Deuill striues to disable it, and to disparage it, to affright and withdraw men from it, as much as is possible. It shareth with him who is the author of it, [q] it being a signe to be spoken against. And as peoples hearts begin to leane towards it, so Satan casts many rubs in their way to keepe them from it; and yet when many ploughers haue ploughed vpon the backe of it, and made long furrowes, so that many euen of those who should of right cry Grace, grace vnto it, doe not yet as they passe by, so much as wish well to it, nor say, The blessing of the Lord bee vpon it: but rather are readie with the children of Edom in the day of Ierusalem, to cry Downe with it, downe with it; yet it shall be the wisedome of God, and the power of God in despight, it shall be iustified of all her children.

How wee must bee qualified, that we may bee taught.

The next point is, touching our disposition that wee may bee taught. In wayting vpon the appointed meanes to get this Wisedome, we must be furnished with two especiall qualities: First, Humilitie: Secondly, Earnestnesse. First, the former I ground vpon that often remembred saying, [r] He will teach the humble his way. Now he is humble in this case, who hath learned to renounce that wisedome, that sharpnesse, that sufficiencie, which he hath in his owne opinion in himselfe. This is that deniall

[f] of a mans ſelfe which Chriſt requireth in his Followers: PAVL, [g] a being a foole, to the end one may be wiſe: a man muſt diſclaime all poſſibilitie of guiding himſelfe, and reſigne and yeeld vp himſelfe wholly to the Lords conduct. They which haue this diſpoſition, are the Babes to which God reuealeth the Myſteries of his Kingdome, when hee paſſeth ouer thoſe which feede themſelues with [u] ſelfe-conceits. Hee that comes to be taught of God in the meanes with this fixed perſwaſion, that he is by nature a very foole in the things of heauen, and can apprehend nothing but by Gods inlightning, and that his reaſon and affection is no fit rule to ſquare Religion by, and thereupon reſignes and giues ouer himſelfe altogether to the Lord, reſoluing to goe as hee leades; that man is ſure to receiue a bleſſing, the very minde of Chriſt ſhall bee reuealed to that mans ſoule. This is the reaſon why many ſilly ſoules, poore fooles in the worlds account, goe away with the ſweetneſſe of Religion, and bee ſatisfied as it were with marrow and fatneſſe, when as diuers others that looke higher, and take more on them, and come rather to iudge and cenſure, then to learne, are ſent empty away. It may bee they get the Shell, the words and phraſes, and an increaſe of ſome kinde of ſuperficiall knowledge, but the others get the Kernell. It may be truely ſaid of many, that if they had beene leſſe wiſe, they had beene more religious: whiles they feede themſelues with their imaginarie wiſedome, the more ſolid Wiſedome of God cannot take place: They muſt bee fooles, whoſo ſeeme to themſelues to be wiſe, that they may be transformed into true wiſedome. This is an hard ſaying, and who will bee content thus to befoole and avile himſelfe in the hope and expectation of wiſedome from aboue? But thus it muſt be, or the Wiſedome of God cannot enter.

The ſecond qualitie, Earneſtneſſe. Excellently is this deſcribed by Salomon: ſee how the termes there vſed doe betoken earneſtneſſe: [x] Cauſe thine eares to harken vnto wiſedome, incline thine heart to vnderſtanding: Call after knowledge, crie; ſeeke her as ſiluer, ſearch for her as for Treaſures: Then ſhalt thou vnderſtand the feare of the Lord, and find the Knowledge of God. What earneſtneſſe greater then that which is for Siluer and for Treaſure? Men deſcend into the bowels of the Earth, to get it out: men iourney for it to the ends of the world: they riſe early for this, and lie downe late, and eate the bread of ſorrow. Nay, in the eager purſuit hereof, men will ſtraine a point of Religion, and aduenture euen their ſoules. Thus the Kingdome of heauen muſt ſuffer violence, and wee muſt goe about to take it as it were by [y] force. In this buſineſſe there muſt be [z] labouring, [a] ſtriuing, [b] giuing all diligence, [c] a ſeeking early. Would wee haue the reaſon of the ſcant meaſure of our wiſedome in ſpirituall things? Sure, wee bee not earneſt: our prayers be cold: our indeuours ſlacke: our affections heauy: we bee not conſtant in our courſes for obtaining it: now and then for a fit we are eager, but vpon a ſudden we are gone againe, and ſo are like a man in a ſlipperie path, who goeth backe with the one legge, as much as hee goeth forward with the other. Hee that will haue it indeed, muſt bring that with him, which

How wee shall know our selues to bee taught.

How shall we know that we are taught? The Text answereth: Where God teacheth, the heart is taught: Thou hast taught me wisedome in the secret of my heart. Looke then what is in thy heart. There be that haue gotten some smacke of this wisedome into their braynes, they haue a kind of lip-wisedome, and can talke somewhat plausibly of Religion, but it is not yet come to their hearts. Their hearts be not humbled, they haue not that which the Apostle commended in the Romans, [h] Obedience from the heart. Is thy heart reformed? is the naturall corruption thereof in some good measure subdued and abated? is obedience sweet vnto thy heart, and that which thy soule delighteth in? this is a signe thou art taught of God. If thy heart be naught still, and the power of sinne no whit subdued nor purged out; if thou couldest speake with the tongue of Men and Angels, yet thou art but as a sounding Brasse, or a tinkling Cymball; thou art no better then a Foole in Gods account. Man may teach the eare, his Arte may preuaile so far as to worke a kind of generall knowledge into thee: but when God takes the matter in hand, hee teacheth the heart, ingrafts such a knowledge by which the heart is changed. Now followeth the third generall point.

h *Rom.*6.17.

The third Doctrine.

That when God bestowes on any man spirituall wisedome, and religious knowledge, he giues such a blessing as deserues acknowledgement. This I gather hence, because Dauid mentioneth this as one of the fauours of God towards him, which he had abused. This and this hast thou done for me, and yet thus and thus haue I requited thee. It is reckoned as one of the priuiledges of the people of God, that [i] they should know the Lord from the least of them vnto the greatest of them. [k] Let not the wise man glorie in his wisedome, nor the strong man glorie in his strength, neither the rich man glorie in his riches: But let him that glorieth, glorie in this, that he vnderstandeth and knoweth the Lord, &c. as though this were the principall glorie of Gods Elect. Christ would haue his Disciples take notice of it, as a fauour conferred on them, that to [l] them it was giuen to know the Mysterie of the Kingdome of God: the very [m] mind to know is a blessing; the thing it selfe then much more. Did not Paul thinke this a Truth, when as hee craued this of God for those to whom hee [n] wished best? so for his owne particular [o] he thought all things losse for it; [p] Without this knowledge, the mind of man is not good: [q] A mans Zeale is little worth: his deuotion and seruices which hee tendereth to God are in [r] vaine. So long as a mans [s] cogitations are darkned through ignorance, he is a stranger from the Life of God. [t] My people are destroyed, saith God, for lacke of knowledge. The Vse.

This poynt serues briefly to quicken their thankefulnesse, vpon whom God hath bestowed this blessing, and to stirre vp all our desires to increase therein more and more. Hath the Lord beene gracious to thee in scattering the mist of thy naturall blindnesse, and in enabling thee to see the things which are giuen to vs of God? are thine eyes anoynted with eye-salue, so that thou beginnest to sauour the things of the Spirit, better than in times past? Oh thanke his Maiesty for this mercy, this, a kindnesse of greater value, then at first (perhaps) thou art aware of: labour to increase in this knowledge, striue to haue yet a larger and a fuller measure of this spirituall vnderstanding. Blessed is the man that findeth it, and happy is he which getteth it: the merchandize thereof is better than the merchandize of siluer, and the gaine thereof is more than gold. All that thou canst desire, is not to be compared to it. It is a tree of Life to them that lay hold on it; [x] Blessed is he that doth retaine it. [y] Many say (saith DAVID) who will shew vs any good? Behold here the maine good. If the Lord, who commanded light to shine out of darkenesse, shall shine into our hearts, to giue the light of the knowledge of the glory of himselfe in the face of Iesus Christ; here we may say like [z] PHILIP, Lord, shew vs this, and it shall suffice.

The fourth Doctrine.

Come we to the fourth particular propounded, concerning which this Doctrine: That by how much the more any man knoweth in matters of Religion and Godlinesse, by so much the fouler is his sinne, when he falls into any great offence. Wee are now come to the speciall thing intended by Dauid in this Clause. He is so much the more ashamed of his fault, and acknowledgeth it to be by many degrees so much the more hainous, because he was one whom God had abundantly enlightened with holy knowledge aboue others. O Lord, I haue the lesse to say for my selfe by way of excuse, nay, I am so much the more to be reproued, yea and the more iustly (if thou shouldest deale according to my deserts) to be condemned to the pit of Hell, because thou hast measured vnto me a larger portion of knowledge in thy wayes, then vnto diuers others: Well did I know the hideous hatefulnesse of the sinne of Adultery, it was not hidden from me, that no such thing ought to be done among the people; euen in the very act my heart did tell me, that I did that which thou abhorrest. It was not vnknowne to me, that thou art the auenger of bloud, and that the cunning carriage of the businesse could not hide it euer from thy sight; and yet wretch, that I was, euen against this knowledge did I sinne, contrary to this apparant light shining in my heart haue I gone. I haue a witnesse in my bosome that condemnes me; My owne soule taught by thee, cryeth shame against me; My conscience checked mee; My vnderstanding presented a rule of holinesse vnto mee, and yet behold what I haue done, as it were in despite of all this, I haue thus transgressed. Thus doth DAVID improue his sin. A man so taught, so to offend; a man knowing so much, to sinne so enormously;

mouſly; Oh how did this adde to the anguiſh of his ſoule, and employ his wits for the aggrauation of his fault before the Lord! hee could not tell how to terme this euill, or with what one word to expreſſe it as it was. Sure it was preſumption in an high degree. Now the generall truth of this poynt, is eaſily manifeſted by the Scripture: [a] That ſeruant which knew his Maſters will, and prepared not himſelfe, neyther did according to his will, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes. The more knowledge then, the greater the offence, and the heauier will the iudgement be, without repentance. [b] If I had not come, and ſpoken vnto them, they ſhould not haue had ſinne; but now haue they no cloake for their ſinne. They had yet had ſomething to plead, if they had not beene taught: but now the truth being ſo plainely manifeſted vnto them, they had no excuſe: [c] To him that knoweth how to doe well, and doth it not, to him it is ſinne. It is ſinne (howſoeuer) not to doe well, but in him that hath knowledge of his dutie, and yet tranſgreſſeth, in him it is ſinne with a witneſſe, it is a kind of doubled iniquitie. The very Heathen for ſinning ſo directly againſt the light of nature, were iudged of God in that very [d] particular: ſo grieuous a ſinne is it to ſinne againſt knowledge. It is one of the neereſt ſteps vnto that vnpardonable ſinne againſt the Holy Ghoſt: what is that, but a deſpitefull oppoſition to a mans owne knowledge in the things of God? and if a man begin once to make it ordinary, to treſpaſſe againſt his knowledge, and to aduenture vpon thoſe euils, which are manifeſtly knowne to his ſoule and conſcience, by the Word of God, to be ſinnes againſt God, ſuch is the nature of ſinne to increaſe, and ſuch a hardneſſe and cruſt will by little and little grow vpon ones inward parts, that he will be ſuddenly plunged into that wofull ſinne before he is aware. [e] I was receiued to mercie, ſaith Paul, becauſe I did it ignorantly, ſpeaking of his preſuming courſe before his calling: ſome fauour yet when a man doth [f] not know that he doth euill: it excuſeth though not from the whole, yet from the meaſure: but when the mind is enlightened, and the iudgement informed, and the particularity of the euill wherein one offends is knowne, then it is fearefull: and when the conſcience is awakened, it will giue the deeper wound, and fill the heart with the ſharper griefe, and the face with the greater ſhame.

1. Vſe.

This in generall may be made vſe of for the declaring of the extreme wickedneſſe of theſe preſent times. The light ſhineth now in a greater meaſure than it did in former ages. The Scriptures are more common, the preaching of the Word more frequent, good bookes for the diſcouery of holy knowledge, more plentifull than in the dayes by-paſt. Certainely God lookes for better things at the hands of the men of this generation, then of thoſe that liued in the dayes of ſparer and ſcarcer meanes. The great ſinnes of our times proceed not hence, becauſe men are not taught otherwiſe: may we not make the demand of the Apoſtle, [g] Haue they not heard? did not Iſrael know? It cannot be vnknowne to theſe times generally, what dutie we owe to Gods Sabbath, what reſpect to his name, what reuerence to his Word. This age is better acquainted with

with theſe things then thoſe before vs: yet how doe theſe times abound with the prophanation of Gods Holy-day, with the abuſe of his Titles, with the contempt and ſcorne of his Word? Is it newes to men at this day, that they ought not to liue in vncleanneſſe, in drunkenneſſe, in oppreſſion, in pride? &c. The very plaine Text, if men haue no more, is enough touching ſuch things as theſe, to leaue them quite without excuſe: and yet how doe theſe ſinnes fill the Countrie from corner to corner? theſe be the euils which yet for all this depart not from our ſtreets. No doubt God hath a ſpeciall controuerſie with theſe times, and ſome extraordinarie vengeance is iuſtly to bee looked for, if the Lord bee not quickly appeaſed by ſome great repentance more then ordinarie. Why was it to bee eaſier with Sodom and Gomorrha, then with Capernaum? Was it not becauſe God had taught Capernaum more then Sodom? where much is beſtowed, there is much required: and if Gods expectation be diſappointed, there will be alſo much inflicted. Neuer any Nation ſo ſeuerely iudged as that of Iewes: and why? God neuer dealt ſo with any Nation, ſo long as that was a Nation, for the meanes of knowledge.

Secondly, this may bee applyed from the times generally, to ſeuerall Pariſhes and Congregations more eſpecially. As our times in the generall are times of more knowledge then the former, and therefore our ſinnes fouler; ſo by Gods ſpeciall diſpenſation, there be ſome Pariſhes which haue the meanes of holy Wiſdome more ordinarie, more ample, more at full, then ſome others haue. They may drinke Water out of their owne Ciſterne, and neede not bee ſcattered abroad like the poore Iſraelites, when by the Egyptian tyranny they were forced to gather Stubble in ſtead of Straw: they haue among them a faithfull and a wiſe Steward, to giue them their portion of meate in ſeaſon. Let all ſuch know, that by how much the more diligently, and effectually, and powerfully they are taught, by ſo much the greater is their ſinne, if they receiue the Grace of God in vaine. When men cannot ſay in truth of heart before the Lord, that they are ignorant in the Myſterie of Chriſt, to ſeeke in duties pertayning to God and their Neighbour, that they come vnpreparedly to the Sacrament, that they are inſufficient to performe houſhold holy duties for lacke of direction, for lacke of teaching, for lacke of calling vpon; their ſinne is grieuous, their caſe dangerous, their end will bee terrible if they doe not beware. It is hard [i] eſcaping when men neglect ſo great ſaluation.

This is yet further to be preſſed to particular perſons. Art thou a Profeſſor of Religion, an ordinarie hearer, an vſuall frequenter of holy exerciſes, and hath God bleſſed theſe courſes vnto thee, to the increaſing of thy knowledge, to the perfiting of thy vnderſtanding in matters of Religion? Is thy heart ſeaſoned with ſome portion of this wiſedome here ſpoken of? take heede how thou ſinneſt againſt that light which the Lord hath ſet vp in thee to direct thee. Thy fault ſhall be more hainous then ten others, to whom God hath not giuen to know ſo much as hee hath hath to thee: the ſcandall will be greater, the wound vnto good profeſſion deeper, then if one had done it, that profeſſeth and knoweth nothing more then ordinarie. This had needе to bee vrged vpon many, who make but little conſcience of ſinnes againſt conſcience, and of going cleane againſt thoſe holy Rules, which the Finger of God, by the teaching of his Word, hath written in their hearts. This makes the beſt courſes to be ſo ill ſpoken of, and the ſeeking after knowledge to be ſo much condemned, as the ground of all licentiouſneſſe. Too many are more forward to know, then to obey.

4. Vſe. Yet againe more particularly according to the preſent example, this is to bee made vſe of for direction in the matter of repentance. Haue I, or haſt thou committed any ſpeciall ſinne, and hath God beene pleaſed to make our hearts to ſmite vs for it, and to ſummon vs to an humiliation before the Lord? Let vs not then goe about to hide our ſinne, or to extenuate it, but let vs lay it open before him, from whom it cannot bee concealed; let vs make the worſt of it rather then otherwiſe; and among other circumſtances, let vs inquire whether it bee not an offence againſt ſome particular wherein the Lord hath taught vs better: if wee finde it to be ſo, oh, let this wound vs to the quicke, let vs labour that this may grieue vs aboue all, and when wee come to this part of our confeſſion betwixt God and our ſoules, O Lord, wee know wee ſhould not haue done thus and thus, and yet wee haue committed it: wee know wee were bound to theſe and theſe particulars, and yet wee haue neglected them; then let vs cry out vpon our ſelues, and ſtriue to worke our hearts to a deeper apprehenſion of our fault, knowing that the Lord hath ſo much the more cauſe and matter of condemning vs if he would. How often ſhall many of vs haue cauſe to be humbled for this particular, euen for going in a kind of violent and careleſſe manner, cleane againſt that light which ſhineth in our ſoules? Let vs learne then of Dauid for this eſpecially to lament, Thou haſt taught me wiſedome, &c. and yet thus haue I done: what ſhall I ſay? whatſoeuer ſome other herein might plead excuſe, yet I cannot: I knew better, I profeſſed better, I perſwaded others better, my heart was ſtored with holy Precepts receiued from thee, cleane againſt this courſe, yet as it were in very deſpight and defiance of them, all this haue I done. This was Dauids accuſation of himſelfe, thus let ours bee: and let vs beware how wee giue way to our owne luſt, to carry vs away againſt our knowledge. It may pleaſe, or at the leaſt, not mooue for the preſent, but it will bite deepe in the end.

VERS. 7.

Purge mee with Hyſope, and I ſhall bee cleane: waſh mee, and I ſhall bee whiter then ſnow.

HItherto we haue heard Dauid begging earneſtly for the pardon of his grieuous ſinne, and withall both improouing it, and accuſing himſelfe as much as he could. There needs no profeſſed Attourney to open his Inditement before God, who hath an awakened conſcience. His owne feeling furniſheth him, both with will and skill to bee his owne accuſer to the vtmoſt. The truth hereof we haue ſeene in Dauid thus farre. In this Verſe hee renueth his requeſt for pardon, but withall ſhewes what it is wherein and whereby it is his hope to obtayne it. We may note in this Verſe two things. Firſt, What Dauid craues: (purging, &c. and waſhing.) Secondly, What is the good which he looks to enioy, if hee may bee heard in his crauing: (I ſhall bee cleane, and whiter then ſnow.) Of the firſt, Purge me with Hyſope, and waſh me. Theſe termes preſuppoſe filthineſſe and vncleanneſſe: and if this Verſe were to be handled apart, iuſt occaſion might here be taken to treat of the nature both of Forgiueneſſe of ſinne, and of ſinne it ſelfe; but thereof I ſpake in the examination of the two firſt Verſes; I will therefore now tye my ſelfe to that which is peculiar to this Verſe. In taking vp the termes of Purging and Waſhing, DAVID hath reference to the cuſtomarie Ceremonies of theſe times, in which many outward ſprinklings and clenſings were in vſe: and as he ſpeaks particularly of purging, ſo he makes mention of purging by Hyſope, an herbe in vſe of old among the Iewes, and that by Gods ordayning, in their ſacred and religious Seruices. When the Paſſeouer was firſt inſtituted, at the point of the Iſraelites departure out of Egypt, it was ordered that with a bunch of Hyſope, dipped in the bloud of the Lambe, the Lintel of the houſe ſhould be ſtrooken, that thereby in the going through of the Angell to deſtroy, the houſe of an Iſraelite might bee diſtinguiſhed and knowne from the houſe of an Egyptian. Such an vſe there was of Hyſope in the clenſing of the [a] Lepers, and in that Ceremonie which was obſerued about leſſer kind of [b] vncleanneſſes. But now of this Hyſope thus vſed, I may ſay as Paul of the two ſonnes of ABRAHAM, [c] The one by a ſeruant, the other by a free Woman: By it another thing is meant. It is (as Baſil termes it,) the ſhaddow and repreſentation of ſome further matter. If wee conſider theſe places named wherein the vſe of Hyſope is enioyned, wee ſhall find that the bloud of ſome ſome ſlaine, either Beaſt or Bird, accompanied it; the Hyſope was the inſtrument to ſprinkle that bloud. When wee vnderſtand whereof that bloud was a type, what it was which Dauid meant by deſiring to be purged with Hyſope, is quickly vnderſtood. All that bloud which was ſhed of old, of Bulls, of Goates, and Calues, of Kine, of Lambs, of Sparrowes, was not to ſettle the hope of the people in outward and e 1.Pet.1.19. Peter termes, [e] The precious Bloud of Chriſt, as of a Lambe vndefiled and without ſpot. Why God choſe Hyſope rather then any other herbe for the application and ſprinkling of this bloud, to me it ſeemeth hard to determine. I am not ignorant, that here ſome take occaſion to diſcourſe of the nature of Hyſope; that it hath a kinde of natiue propertie to o-

Whether God appointed Hyſope to this vſe, for any naturall propertie thereof in medicines, or becauſe of the fitneſſe thereof, hauing diuers ſprigs to beſprinkle with, I thinke it no great wiſedome to diſpute. Wee can haue little certaintie herein, inaſmuch as it ſeemes there was a great difference betwixt that Hyſope which was among the Iewes, and that which wee haue now with vs. Where ſhall wee find ſuch an Hyſope ſtalke as was vſed to lift

Doubtleſſe God ordained ſomewhat to ſprinkle the bloud with, to teach the neceſſitie of applying the bloud of Chriſt to a mans owne ſoule. Now what is thus ſaid touching purging with Hyſope, the ſame is to bee ſaid in effect concerning waſhing: the legall waſhings vſed by the Prieſt towards themſelues, or towards others by diuine inſtitution, had an ayme at the ſame

The firſt Doctrine. The words being opened, let vs proceede to inquire for Doctrines. Thus therefore, That ſuch outward things as God hath ordained, as helps in matters of Religion, as they are not to bee neglected, ſo neither are they ſo to be reſted in, as if any good could come from them ſimply, without a ſpeciall speciall blessing from the Lord. This is gatherable out of Dauid here. His speech here wherein he mentioneth Hyssope, is an argument that howsoeuer in the opinion of flesh and bloud, the sprinkling of ones face or bodie with bloud by a branch of Hyssope, was but a pettie seruice, yet sith it was the Ordinance of God, hee would not despise it, nor refuse, when occasion was, to bee partaker of it: then againe, his desiring the Lord to purge him with it, is a token that hee rested not in the bare act, as sufficient for the clensing of his soule: he knew well, that besides that which the Priest did herein to the outward man, God must conferre some secret vertue vpon the inward man, or else all would be in vaine. So that hence is a rule for vs, touching all such outward and visible performances, as God hath appointed to be vsed in Religion. The least of them must not be despised, and yet withall none of them all, depended vpon as sufficient in it selfe to be a meanes of grace, and good without the Lord. The truth of this, besides that which may be, and is collected thus out of this place, I will briefly shew: First, That nothing among the Rites prescribed of old by God, was to bee slighted ouer as superfluous and vnnecessarie, and of no great behoose whether it were done or no, is thought to be iustly concludeable out of that, [k] These are the Commandements, Ordinances, and Lawes, which the Lord your God commanded me to teach you, that yee might doe them, &c. These are three words, to expresse the three sorts of Lawes which were ordained by God among the Iewes; the Morall Law, compriſed in the ten Cõmandements, by the word Commandements; the Ceremonial Law, the Law of rites and vsages appertaining to Gods outward worship, by the word Ordinances; the Iudiciall Law, which was about matters of Ciuill gouernement, by the word Iudgements: now euery of these the Lord straitly required to be obserued, vntill the time came which [l] is called the time of reformation: vnderstanding thereby, the time of Christs reuealing, who was the body of all those shaddowes: it was not safe or lawfull, to omit any one of them willingly and carelesly: Euery disobedience and transgression in this kinde, [m] receiued a iust recompence of reward: and, hee [n] that despiseth MOSES Law, dyeth (saith the Apostle) without mercy, &c. Hereupon is the commendation of Zacharias and Elizabeth (the parents of Iohn Baptist) that they walked as in all the Commandements of God: vnderstanding thereby matters of morality, and of perpetuall necessitie; so in all his Ordinances, meaning thereby all such outward appurtenances to the Worship of God, as were [o] required. How strait was the Law concerning Circumcision? he that wanted it voluntarily, was to [p] be cut off from Gods people, as a breaker of the Couenant: the like about the Passeouer, [q] All the Congregation of Israel shall obserue it: and whosoeuer for the space of those seuen daies in which leauen was forbidden, [r] should eate leauened bread, that person shall bee cut off from the congregation of Israel. How hot was the wrath of the Lord against Moses for failing in one of these outward Rites? The Lord [s] met him, and would haue killed him. The Priests washing their hands and

and feete in the brazen Lauer, when they went into the Tabernacle of the Congregation, or to the Altar to minister, was but a shaddow and a ceremonie; yet saith God, [c] Let them doe it, lest they die: and in the same Chapter touching the Oyle appointed for the anoynting of the Tabernacle, and the Arke, &c. and Aaron and his sonnes, if any man should aduenture, contrarie to the commandement, to put that Oyle to any other vse, as to make any [u] composition like it, he was to be cut out of Gods people. In the like sort Aaron was vpon paine of death, to [x] cause the Bells which were vpon his Garment, to sound when he went into the holy place before the Lord. It was but the breach of a Ceremonie which God in Vzzah punished with present [y] death. So strait was God in requiring the performance of the smallest things by him prescribed. This was the ground of Moses his precisenesse, when hee would not giue way to the leauing of so much as a hoofe behinde, when he was to be gone out of Egypt, [z] for thereof must wee take to serue the Lord our God, &c. Our Sauiour was an example of this respect due to Rites of Gods prescribing, in being circumcised the eight day, in being presented into the Temple, according to the Law, requiring the offering of the first-borne vnto the Lord, in comming vp at the times appointed to Ierusalem, in inioyning the Lepers whom hee cleansed, to goe shew themselues to the Priests, and offer such gifts as were required by the Law, in obseruing the Passeouer, &c. And his Apostles after him, when the time of those things was out, yet in regard they were in their nature of diuine institution, they had care (as is said) to giue them a kinde of honourable burying, and did not abruptly and with contempt breake them off, but discontinued them by degrees, and both bare with them, and prescribed them vpon occasion, vntill they had made the matter cleere, touching the abolishment of them by Iesus Christ. Thus much may shew vs, that such outward obseruances in matters of Religion, as are of diuine institution, are not to bee neglected, or despised, or disused, vntill hee that ordained them shall bee pleased in expresse termes to disannull them. Euen the sprinkling with a bunch of Hyssope ought to haue an honorable respect, if God require it.

Now for the second branch, that these things were not so to bee respected, as to thinke the naked and bare performance was sufficient, without some other inward worke whereof God was the Author: that is also easily to be shewed. There was one generall name giuen vnto all those ancient Rites which confirmes this. They were called [a] signes, [we see not our signes:] it was a part of the complaint made in the time that the Church of God was in affliction, and the Worship of God in publique interrupted. By signes they meant as one well obserueth, the teachings of Ceremonies. Now this that they were termed Signes, is an argument that they were but representations of other things, without which they were fruitlesse and vnprofitable. They were Signes of the same thing of which the Sabbath, viz. that [b] the Lord is the Sanctifier of his people. Moses did therefore not only binde them to the circumcision of the flesh, flesh, but required also a [c] circumcising of the foreskin of their hearts. Nothing more ordinarie in the Prophets, then a repining of the people for their satisfying of themselues with outward complements: as they thought it enough to tread in the Lords Courts, and to come with their offerings of Rams, with the fat of fed Beasts, with the bloud of Bullocks, &c. all these their Oblations were said to be in vaine, yea an abomination vnto God, such as were euen a burden vnto him, and which he was weary to beare, in asmuch as they contented themselues herewith, looking nothing at all to the mayne thing, whereto all these did [d] tend. When the Lord could not reproue them for matter of sacrifices, or because their burnt offerings were not continually before him, yet he had matter to testifie against them; they stayed in these things, and thought Religion stood in these things simply, and fayled in the [e] principall. Whereupon Saint Paul saith of the old Israelites, that notwithstanding they [f] were all baptized vnder MOSES in the Cloud, and in the Sea, and did all eate the same spirituall Meate, and drinke the same spirituall Drinke, yet with many of them God was not pleased: they thought if they were partakers of the outward ceremonie, it was sufficient: whereupon Stephen iustly challenged the Iewes in his time, for their vncircumcised hearts, when yet they could boast of the circumcision of the [g] flesh Circumcision is profitable if thou doe the Law, saith the Apostle, otherwise if thou be [h] a Transgressor of the Law, thy circumcision is made vncircumcision. If there be a resting in the outward cutting as sufficient, and no care for that which is shaddowed by it, it were as good not haue it. It is nothing what one is without, if he want that which [i] is of the heart in the Spirit, the praise whereof is not of men, but of God. I spake not, saith God, vnto your fathers, nor commanded them, &c. concerning burnt offerings and sacrifices: [k] But this thing commanded I them, &c. meaning, that hee neuer taught them to thinke it was enough, if they presented him with outward seruices. I did alwayes looke for some further matter, saith he. It was euer a truth which is deliuered by the Apostle, that in Religion bodily exercise in it selfe simply considered, [l] profiteth nothing: and that the [m] Kingdome of God is not meate nor drinke: such things as these, are not properly the true solid substance and matter of pietie. Thus it is also plaine, that the people were neuer allowed to thinke outward performances to be sufficient, in matters betwixt God and them. All such things were in their owne nature but figures for the time present, such as of themselues [n] could not make holy, concerning the conscience, those which did the seruice. Men were euer taught to looke for some more inward and spirituall things: euery Rite had a reference to something to bee wrought within in the heart, the accomplishing whereof they were to looke vp to heauen to obtayne. And so haue we the Doctrine of this place. Dauid doth neither despise the Legall sprinklings, neither yet doth hee trust to them as sufficient, vnlesse the Lord worke therewith. The outward Hysope he was able to command, the Priest would not dare to denie it him, but for that which was the life of all, he is here a Petitioner and Suter to the Lord, who was to ſprinkle the bloud of Chriſt by Faith vpon his heart, as wel as the Prieſt the bloud of a beaſt with Hyſope vpon his body.

The Vſe. This is a Doctrine of very eſpeciall vſe vnto vs at this day. God hath now vnder the Goſpell, diſcharged vs of that multitude of ceremoniall Rudiments, to which the people of old, before the reuelation of Chriſt was tyed; and thoſe many Rites which were then, he hath now reduced to Sacraments, in number feweſt, as Auſtine ſpeaks; no more but two, Baptiſme and the Lords Supper. By them hee preſents that to our eyes, and feeling, and taſte, which in the diſpenſation of the Word is offered to our eares; Ieſus Chriſt the propitiation and atonement for our ſinnes, being the ſubſtance of all both Sacraments and Sermons. Now, this Doctrine teacheth vs how to walke in a middle courſe, in the vſe of the two Sacraments, neither ſcorning them with the prophane, becauſe of the ſmalneſſe of their ſhew; nor yet placing confidence, with the Papiſts, in the very bare acts, without due reſpect vnto the principall. True it is, there is no great matter in outward appearance in either of the Sacraments: what is the caſting of a little water vpon the face of an Infant? what is a ſmall morſell of bread, or a little quantitie of wine? How can the reaſon of fleſh and bloud imagine any great matter in theſe ſlender ſeruices? ſo may I ſay, what is the ſprinkling of a mans perſon with a bunch of Hyſope? and how eaſily might a man extenuate all thoſe ancient Ceremonies, appertayning to the ſeruice of God in Moſes dayes? How many will ſeeme trifles, and little better then ridiculous, if the wiſedome of our nature come to examine them? I doubt not but it is found in experience, that many doe deſpiſe the Sacraments of the new Teſtament at this day, becauſe they make no greater ſhew, and come ſo ſeldome to the Lords Table, out of a kind of a baſe conceit of the nakedneſſe and ſimplicitie of the ſeruice. They are apt to thinke, as Naaman the Syrian did of the waſhing in Iordan, inioyned by the Prophet for the curing of his leproſie. Hee thought the Prophet would haue beene more complementall, then to ſend him ſuch a ſlender meſſage, as to goe waſh ſeuen times in Iordan; Abanah and Pharphar Riuers of Damaſcus, why might not they haue ſerued my turne as well? If waſhing in a Riuer be enough, I could haue done that at home, and neuer haue come ſo farre for ſuch an end. This is the reaſon (I verily perſwade my ſelfe) why Poperie hath ſought to make the Sacraments ſeeme to carry ſome more ſtate, by an addition of ſo many ſignificant Rites, and by inioyning ſuch a deale of Ceremonie in the buſineſſe of them both. It is imagined a good way, to preuent the contempt, which might otherwiſe be caſt vpon them, ſhould they appeare in their natiue baſeneſſe, clothed with no more ceremonies then they were borne with in their firſt inſtitution. But indeed no better way to bring theſe things to their due valuation, then when it is conſidered who ordayned them; euen that great and ſole Law-giuer, who is able to ſaue and to deſtroy. It cannot be vile, or petty, or contemptible which hee appoints. It is the fitneſſe of the Rite to repreſent that to which it hath reference, and the familiarneſſe of

of it for their vnderſtanding, to whoſe vſe it is offered; which the Lord reſpects more, then the ſtate, and forme, and complement of the ſeruice. Learne we then here, firſt, to honour that which is of the Lords ordaining, how weake ſoeuer it ſeeme to vs. A ſmall piece of Waxe, with the Kings Seale ſet thereon, carryeth more authoritie where it comes, then ten times ſo much vnſtampt. Halfe a morſell of bread, no more Wine then may wet thy tongue, deſerues more reſpect, and ſhall bee a meanes of more good to thee in the Church at the Lords boord, then a whole Batch of the one, or an Hogshead of the other in thy priuate houſe. Dauid reſpected Hyſope, not for the herbes ſake, but for the Ordinance ſake; waſhing, not for the waters ſake, but for the Inſtitutions ſake. The appointment of God is much euery way, and in euery thing. Why ſhall that which is preached in the Church by a Miniſter, ſooner beget faith in me, then the ſame matter read to me, or by me in a priuate houſe? is it not becauſe of Gods Ordinance? The Papiſts haue at this day a deuice of Holy-water, and it is as formally ſprinkled with an inſtrument for the nonce, and with as much Ceremonie, as the ſprinkling of Hyſope in the time of the Law. A naturall man will finde no reaſon of his owne, why the one ſhould not doe as much good as the other; but Religion teacheth vs a difference: the one was of Gods ordaining, and therefore reuerent; the other of mans deuiſing, and therefore contemptible. Euer then let vs know how to value Gods Ordinances: the leaſt thing deſerues reuerence, and brings a bleſſing, if God haue eſtabliſhed it. The very caſt of the eye vpon a piece of dead Braſſe, ſhall inſtantly cure the mortall ſting of a fiery Serpent, if the Lord haue ordained it.

Well, now withall we are to beware of running too much on the other hand: the Deuill teacheth to runne from one extreme to another. It is the Lord that purgeth, not the Hyſope: it is he which waſheth, not the Lauer. It is the generall and groſſe miſtaking of our people at this day, that they reſt in the thing done, and thinke (like Papiſts) that the performance in it ſelfe ſimply brings grace. If they haue had the Water of Baptiſme, they make no doubt of their Chriſtendome. If they haue eaten and drunke the Bread and Wine of the Lord, they are vpon a ſure hand, and feare not to affirme, We haue receiued a good Man to day. Hence cõmeth the ſlender reſpect to the Doctrine of Baptiſme, to the Doctrine of the Supper. Fathers are in poſte to haue their Children baptized, they care not a whit though they bee neuer catechized. They will needes come to the Communion. If you goe about to inſtruct them in the manner [how,] they be diſpleaſed. Theſe doe, as it were, call to the Prieſt for the Hyſope, but they ſeeke not to the Lord for the Purging. I may ſay as Saint Peter, of the mockers of the laſt times, ° This they willingly know not, that if Chriſt baptize not with the holy Ghoſt and with fire, Iohns baptizing with water will be but vnto greater iudgement, and that it is poſſible to eate the Bread, and drinke the Cup of the Lord vnworthily, and for men to come together vnto Iudgement. Let this then be our course and care; let vs honour the Sacraments, because they bee Gods Ordinances: whatsoeuer is presented to vs, with the stampe of Gods appointing it; seeme it neuer so meane, let it haue esteeme: but beware wee become not like Pharises, to esteeme the Gift aboue the Altar that sanctifieth the Gift, the Gold aboue the Temple that sanctifieth the Gold, the Sacrament aboue the Doctrine that must instruct vs in the Sacrament, aboue the Lord that must giue a blessing to the Sacrament. If God worke not with the outward instrument, all is in vaine, and God will not worke with it, if wee labour not to vnderstand the purpose of the instrument, and to set our selues like Dauid here, to seeke him in the vse of the instrument.

The second Doctrine.

The next: That the bloud of Iesus Christ is the thing ordayned by God, for the purging and washing of our sinnes. Thinke we that Dauids prayer here, was not for that which was intended by the sprinkling with the Hyssope? DAVID knew, the vse of the Hyssope had reference to a more high and excellent matter; he could not be so simple, as to thinke that a bunch of Hyssope, applyed to the sprinkling of his body, could preuaile to the washing away, and purging of the filthinesse of his soule. Now all those sprinklings with bloud in the time of the Law (for [p] almost all things were by the Law purged with bloud, and without shedding of bloud there was no remission) they had all (I say) a meaning of the bloud of Christ: for that bloud which was then vsed, was but the bloud of Beasts, and [q] it was vnpossible that the bloud of Bulls and Goats should take away sinnes. All the sacrifices of the Law were types of Christ, [r] Who gaue himselfe for vs to be an offering, and a sacrifice, &c. [f] And was once offered, to take away the sins of many. Why was it commanded that they should be [t] without any blemish; neither blind, nor broken, nor maymed; but to [u] betoken Christ holy, harmelesse, vndefiled, separated from sinne: and (as Peter termes him) a [x] Lambe vndefiled, and without spot? What did their bloud signifie, but his precious Bloud? and why doth S. Peter vse that phrase, [y] of the sprinkling of the bloud of Iesus Christ, but to shew it to bee the substance of all the Legall sprinklings whatsoeuer? and vpon the same ground Paul mentions [z] a sprinkling in our hearts from an euill conscience. So that if we will yeeld, as we must needs, that Dauid had an ayme to the matter shaddowed out by the Hyssope, and that also is plaine, that by the sprinkling thereof is meant the inward purging of the soule by the bloud of Christ, it must needs follow that in Dauids iudgement, and so by the verdict of the Spirit of God, directing Dauid in this Psalme, the bloud of the Lord Iesus is that which God hath sanctified for the vtter remouing, and purging out the filth of sin: and as this was meant by the Rites of the old Testament, so it is also intended by the Sacraments of the new. What doth Baptisme betoken, but that Christ hath giuen himselfe for his Church to sanctifie and to cleanse it, and to make it vnto [a] himselfe a glorious Church, not hauing spot or wrinkle? what is the Lords Supper, but [b] the Communion of the bloud and body of Christ Iesus? How plainly doth the Scripture speake, touching the vse of Christs bloud respectiuely to sin, and to the power of cleering cleering vs from the guilt of sinne before God: [c] God hath set him forth to be a reconciliation through faith in his bloud: [d] being now iustified by his bloud. [e] By whom we haue redemption through his bloud, &c. [f] The bloud of Christ, which through the eternall Spirit, offered himselfe without fault to God, shall purge your conscience, &c. [g] We were not redeemed with corruptible things, &c. but with the precious bloud of Christ, &c. [h] The bloud of Iesus Christ cleanseth vs from all sinne: [i] he hath loued vs and washed vs from our sins in his bloud: [k] Thou hast redeemed vs to God by thy bloud, in the Song of the Elders to the honour of Christ. Thus speakes the Scripture ordinarily and frequently herein, making the bloud of Christ to be that, by which our iniquities must be purged, that we may be presented blamelesse before God. This is that fountaine for sinne, and for vncleanenesse, [l] which God promised to open vnto the house of DAVID. If it be demanded, how Christs bloud commeth to haue this power and force, to purge away sinne: I answer, that it is not by a visible or materiall sprinkling, or by any such washing, as when one puts a cloth into a vessell of water, and there scoureth it with his hands, or the like: for the bloud of Christ, in the generall nature of it being as our bloud is, and the proper seate of sinne being in the soule, it cannot bee that there should any such kind of vse be made of Christs bloud for the soule: but thus wee must conceiue of it, viz. that it is the purger and washer out of mans sin by Gods acceptation. Man being a sinner, was in the iustice of God to be punished with eternall death: otherwise then by death this iustice of God could neuer be appeased: Christ commeth betwixt man and God, and offereth himselfe to death for man, and to giue his bloud to redeeme man from that, to which he was liable, and which of himselfe he was neuer able to endure, nor to escape. This act of Christs, God is pleased to accept, and with it to account himselfe satisfied, and to be perpetually at peace with all those, to whom the efficacie of this bloud shall be applyed by faith. For as in the rites of the Law, there was a necessitie of sprinkling the bloud vpon the partie desiring to be clensed, as well as of shedding of it; so in this case also, there must be a translating or making ouer of Christs bloud, the vertue and power whereof to the soule by faith, as well as a powring it by him, to such an end and vse, as the washing out of sinne: so then thus it is; This is Gods ordinance, that the bloud of Iesus Christ shed vpon the Crosse, should be the ground and the foundation of the atonement betweene himselfe and those that beleeue.

I cannot but here take occasion to commend to our consideration, the greatnesse and largenesse of two speciall things: first, Our sinne: secondly, Gods mercie. First, Sinne appeares by this to bee exceeding great and hainous, in that nothing was found able to satisfie the wrath and the displeasure of God against it, but the bloud of Christ. Well may we measure the grieuousnesse of sinne, by the nature of the price which was payed to make satisfaction for it. There is not any the smallest sinne, such as we are apt to tush at, as not worthie the censuring, as scarce deseruing blame, bee it but an idle word, or a vaine looke, or a vicious thought, thought, but the same was so hainous in Gods account, that the foulenesse thereof, but by the precious bloud of Iesus Christ, could neuer haue beene purged. Why should we so sleight ouer sinne, and thinke it so small and so triuiall a matter to transgresse the Law, when no lesse a thing than bloud, nay the bloud of the most righteous, harmelesse, and innocent partie that euer was, was able to redeeme it? Why should it not wring sighs, and teares, and sorrow of hearts from vs, which drew bloud from out of the heart of the Lord Iesus? We would all thinke, that sure he had done some great offence for whom there could be no redemption, vnlesse the heire apparant to the crowne should be put to some ignominious and cruell death to deliuer him. Let vs thinke on this, wee that are apt to make a mocke of sinne, and to whom it is a pastime to doe wickedly, and who neuer yet could grone vnfainedly in our hearts for offending God. Sinne (we see) is another manner of thing then we suppose, eyther the bloud of Christ must bee shed out for it, or else man must eternally be tormented for it in the pit of hell. Thinke we on this, when we feele a dulnesse in our spirits, a deadnesse in our hearts, a flintinesse in our soules, that wee cannot sorrow and grieue for sinne as wee ought to doe.

Secondly, May not also the largenesse of Gods mercie be concluded hence? It is said of the Church of God, that [m] it was purchased by him with his owne bloud. [n] Greater loue then this hath no man, saith our Sauiour. [o] In this God set out his loue, saith the Apostle. [p] In this it appeareth, saith S. IOHN. Indeed what could discouer it more, or in so great a measure as this, that hee should not sticke at his owne bloud, for the furtherance of an atonement and reconciliation betwixt man and himselfe? To shed it for a righteous man, or for a good man, it had beene no such strange matter; but for sinners, for rebels, for enemies to himselfe, to doe it euen for such, it is singular from all example, it is such a loue, the bredth, and length, and depth, and height whereof it is no easie thing to comprehend. It is a great euill that we make not this the frequent matter of our best and most aduised meditations, that wee might be able to say out of our owne full acknowledgement with DAVID, [q] O Lord, how great is thy goodnesse! [r] How excellent is thy mercie! This is one vse. Is Christs bloud the redemption of sinne? Oh how hainous is sinne that needed such a price! how notorious is that mercie, that thought it not much to pay such a ransome!

Secondly, here is matter of direction for euery soule, which is truely sensible of it owne manifold and grieuous sinnes. Art thou pricked in thy heart, and ready to cry out, Oh, what shall I doe? my sinnes haue taken such hold vpon me, that I am not able to looke vp: they are more in number than the haires of my head, they doe continually muster together in my thoughts, and are as a waightie burthen euen much too heauie for me: methinkes I am like a foule Leper, in whom, from the crowne of his head vnto the soles of his feete, there is no whole part, nothing but wounds, and swellings, and sores full of corruption: Oh how shall I dare to come into the preſence of ſuch a ſincere, and ſuch a righteous Iudge, as is hee to whom I am countable! Loe, here a meanes of purging prouided for thee, waſh thee there, and thou ſhalt become more white than ſnow: a drop of this precious bloud is able to make thee cleane from all thy ſinnes. It may be thou beleeueſt this to be true, but doubteſt ſtill of two things: firſt, How thou mayeſt obtaine this fauour, to bee purged and waſhed in this fountaine of Grace, the bloud of Chriſt: ſecondly, How thou mayeſt know and bee aſſured that thou art cleanſed. I will direct thee for both in a word, out of 1. Iohn 1. Touching the former, how to obtaine this benefit of cleanſing, ſee verſ. 9. If wee acknowledge our ſins, he is faithfull and iuſt to forgiue vs our ſinnes, and to cleanſe vs from all vnrighteouſneſſe. Can there be told thee a fayrer or a directer courſe? Labour then to vnderſtand thy ſinnes, as diſtinctly and effectually as poſſibly may be, and according as thou ſhalt increaſe in knowing them, ſo proceed in a ſincere and an heartie acknowledgement of them daily before the Lord; bewayle them before him, accuſe thy ſelfe for them, diſclaime all hope of euer eſcaping the condemnation due vnto them, ſaue onely by the moſt precious bloud of the Lord Ieſus. God hath ſo tied himſelfe by a rule in this poynt, that he cannot but in iuſtice purge and cleanſe thee from all vnrighteouſneſſe. If thou fayle in this, whom canſt thou blame but thine owne ſelfe, if thou ſtill continue in the guilt of thy ſinnes before the Lord? For the ſecond poynt, to know how thou art purged (ſee ver. 7.) If we walke in the light, &c. the bloud of Ieſus Chriſt cleanſeth vs from all ſinne. What is it to walke in the light? In the precedent verſe, the Apoſtle ſpake of walking in darkneſſe; the one phraſe will expound the other: to walke in darkeneſſe, is to liue in ignorance and impietie: to walke in light, is to liue according to knowledge, and in ſinceritie of heart, and holines of life before the Lord. A man walkes in the light, when he makes conſcience of his waies, and ſtriues to ſhine like a light among men, and to keepe himſelfe vnſpotted of the world. Thy care to keepe thy ſelfe cleane, muſt be thy euidence and the ground of thy aſſurance, that the bloud of Ieſus Chriſt hath made thee cleane. Doſt thou labour and ſtriue to be blameleſſe and pure? doſt thou tye thy ſelfe to a warie and circumſpect kind of walking? art thou payned at the heart when thou art through want of watchfulneſſe, and for lacke of that keeping thy ſelfe, [f] ſpoken of, defiled and tainted, and blemiſhed with ſome ſpeciall euill, that hath preuailed againſt thee? is it thy conſtant endeuour, notwithſtanding the contempt of the world, which is caſt vpon ſtraitneſſe and preciſeneſſe of carriage, yet to pleaſe God in euery good word and worke? this ſhall teſtifie to thy ſoule, that the bloud of Ieſus Chriſt hath purged thee from all thy ſinne, and that thou ſtandeſt, through him, without ſpot and blame before the Lord. If thou be careleſſe and diſſolute in the matter of thy conuerſation, not ſtriuing to be vndefiled in the way, accounting it but niceneſſe and folly, curiouſly to ſtand vpon euery trifle, ſo that thou canſt eaſily ſwallow vp ſuch and ſuch things without ſcruple, or cheriſh thy ſelfe in ſome ſecret euill; euill; surely thou walkest in darkenesse, and thou art yet in thy filthinesse, thy very mind and conscience is defiled before the Lord. So farre of that which Dauid craued, to be purged with Hyssope, and to be washed. Now followeth the good which he expected hereupon; I shall be cleane, and whiter than snow. The Doctrine is thus,

Touching purging with Chriſts bloud, how obtained, and how diſcerned.

The third Doctrine. That the purging of a sinner by the bloud of Christ, is such an absolute worke, that it doth not leaue a man guiltie before God of the smallest sinne. O Lord, saith DAVID, may I obtaine this fauour to be purged with spirituall Hyssope, dipped in the bloud of thy deerest Sonne, I know the foulenesse both of this and of all other my sinnes will bee so rinsed out, that I shall bee absolutely without all manner of guilt and fault in thine account. This is DAVIDS meaning. He thought not, that if he were purged in Christs bloud, he should be by and by without all blemish of sinne simply, hauing no manner of corruption left within him: for Dauid knew the worke of sanctification in this life to bee but in part, and that sinne remaines in some measure euen in the best; but this was his mind and opinion, that the worke of Iustification is complete, and that it is a totall discharge from the imputation of any manner of sinne euen at once. I know, O Lord, and am assured, that if thou purge away my sinne, it will be all one as if I had neuer committed it. This is that beeing as white as snow, which he here speakes of: and therefore thereto (as Austine vpon this Psalme makes that place and this to hold proportion) agreeth [t] that, Though your sinnes were as Crimson, they shall bee made white as Snow, &c. and that [u] of Christ, making his Church a glorious one, not hauing spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. The same Apostle termes it otherwhere, [x] a being made vnblameable, and without fault in Gods sight. Behold, thou art faire, &c. saith Christ to his Church in respect of [y] this. Austine makes the whitenesse of Christs garments, at the time of his transfiguring in the mount, to be a type hereof; [z] they were as the light. Thus as there is nothing so foule as a sinner vnpardoned: so nothing so gracious and comely, nothing so faire and beautifull, as the man whose iniquities are forgiuen, and whose sinne is couered.

u Eph. 5. 27.
x Col. 1. 22.
y Can. 4. 1.
z Matth. 17. 2.

1. Vse. This makes first against Papists, who seeme to cast an aspersion of some kind of imperfection vpon the bloud of Christ, in making a man euen after his iustification lyable to an account, so as that he must make some satisfaction to God more or lesse himselfe, before he can come to that full happinesse which he looketh for. In handling the Doctrine of Forgiuenesse, in the beginning of the Psalme, I spake of this more at large: a touch of it now by the way shall be sufficient. Certainely where there is whitenesse, and cleanenesse, and purity equall to that of the Snow, wee cannot reasonably thinke there is any after-reckoning.

2. Vse. Secondly, what a motiue should this be to vs for Repentance, and for speedie embracing the Mercy of God offered vnto vs in the bloud of his Sonne? Thou art now wallowing in thy filthinesse, like the Sow in the Mire, Mire, more then beſpotted with groſſe ſins; thy ſtate is now euen a filthy kinde of nakedneſſe, nothing more lothſome in the ſight of God: Oh, that thou wouldeſt caſt away thy tranſgreſſions, and ſhake off thy moſt ſweet and pleaſing ſinnes, like a menſtruous cloth, and begge of God day and night, as for life and death, ſo to waſh and purge thee, and ſcowre thee in the bloud of his Sonne, that none of thy tranſgreſſions, which thou haſt committed, ſhall be numbred vnto thee. Iniquitie ſhall not be thy deſtruction: the Robe of Righteouſneſſe, and Garment of Saluation, ſhall hide away all thy ſinnes from the ſight of God.

The twelfth Lecture.

VERS. 8.

Make mee to heare ioy and gladneſſe, that the bones which thou haſt broken may reioyce.

THe mould and ſhape of this Verſe, plainely ſheweth it to be a Requeſt: It may bee for teaching-ſake parted into two portions: of which the former is the Requeſt properly: the latter the end and purpoſe, for which that which is requeſted, is deſired.

The partition of the Verſe.

Of the firſt. In diſcourſing vpon it, the ſpeciall thing to bee firſt enquired into, (to make way to the finding out of ſuch matter of inſtruction as the place affords) is, what is that Ioy and Gladneſſe, which it is the deſire of Dauid to obtayne. No man will reaſonably thinke it to be in the generall any other then a ſpirituall ioy. They are wholly ſpirituall things, of which Dauid treateth in this Pſalme: it can be no other then an inward and enlarged peace, confirmed and ſealed vp vnto the ſoule, by receiuing an aſſurance of the free and full forgiueneſſe of this grieuous ſinne. Hitherto hath Dauid made Petition to bee pardoned: now hee deſireth to haue his ſoule gladded, and his ſpirit refreſhed by the certainety of pardon. This is the mayne of this firſt Clauſe: whatſoeuer elſe belongs to the fuller vnderſtanding of it, ſhall bee diſcouered to vs in the opening of the particular obſeruations to bee hence deriued.

There be then here foure things deſeruing note: Firſt, Out of the ſubſtance of that which here Dauid craues. Secondly, Out of the hope conceiued by him to obtayne it. Thirdly, Out of the meanes by which he expected it. Fourthly, Out of his directing his ſpeech to the partie, vpon whom he relyed and truſted to effect it. Theſe things are neceſſarily and naturally to bee noted from this firſt clauſe. Of the firſt, this is the Doctrine,

That

The first Doctrine.

That that contentment which the soule doth feele in the assurance of Gods fauour in the pardon of sinne, is that which deserues indeede to bee termed Ioy. This I thus collect. It is first very apparant, that this was that ioy and gladnesse which Dauid meant, euen some secret feeling in his soule, that according to his sutes hitherto made, the Lord had washed him thorowly from his Iniquitie, and cleansed him in the precious bloud of the Lord Iesus from his sinnes. It is the very same which hee termes the ioy of the Lords saluation, Vers. 12. Now, in that Dauid intending a ioy thus grounded, a gladnesse thus occasioned, calleth it ioy and gladnesse simply, without any terme of distinction, it is an argument that this is that which is the only Ioy, this is gladnesse indeede; whatsoeuer else carrieth the name, whatsoeuer else is so termed, it is but counterfeit: It is but a verball ioy, it is but a titular gladnesse: the newes brought from heauen to a mans soule, that God is pacified with him through Christ, and by purging him with his bloud, hath made him whiter then the Snow; that breedeth that which is the solid ioy. This is that louing kindnesse, which being felt and [a] shed abroad in the heart by the holy Ghost, [b] is better then life: [c] the soule is satisfied with it, as with marrow and fatnesse. PAVL calleth this [d] Ioy in the holy Ghost: the holy Ghost works it in the heart, and that witnesse [e] of the Spirit, is the ground of it. Saint Peter for the dignitie of it, commends it to be both vnspeakeable and [f] glorious: the Angels to the Shepheards called it [g] great Ioy: our Sauiour [h] a full Ioy. It is elsewhere well stiled, [i] The ioy of Gods people, as being their peculiar. The stranger from the commonwealth of Israel, meddles not with this Ioy: some of them sometimes haue some kinde of flashing like it, (as may bee gathered out of Luk. 8.13. and Ioh. 5.35.) but the substance thereof indeede, they neuer are acquainted with. To come somewhat neerer to the direct proofe of this Doctrine. There bee two speciall reasons by which to proue this to be the Ioy, which is only worthy to be called Ioy.

Reasons to proue the Ioy arising from the assurance of Forgiuenes, to be the only Ioy.

First, This will ouercome and swallow vp all other occasions of sadnesse and discouragement. Paul saith, that this hauing peace towards God through our Lord Iesus Christ, where it is felt, begets a [k] reioycing in tribulations. It sweetneth all afflictions whatsoeuer: it resolues the soule, that how sharpe soeuer they are in present sense, yet they are the Lords chastnings, to preuent future [l] condemnation; and that in them [m] the Lord offereth himselfe to vs as vnto sonnes: and that a quiet fruit of righteousnesse shall follow [n] thereupon. This will releeue and reuiue a mans spirits, when the pangs of death are vpon him, and the sorrowes of the graue doe incompasse him. This will breed that [o] boldnesse towards God, and that lifting vp the head, which our Sauiour speaks [p] of, in case we should liue till that time, in which the heauens shall passe away with a noyse, and the earth with the workes that are therein shall bee burnt vp; though then the hearts of the wicked shall faile them for feare, and for looking after those things which shall come vpon the world. A wounded Spirit, saith the Scripture, [q] who can beare? when a man is distressed in soule, ſoule, and encountred with inward perplexities, and buffetings with Satans meſſengers, and is as Iob, [r] like a leafe driuen to and fro, [ſ] his heart vexed, and his reines pricked, what if hee were the Commander of the world, yet it is not all the wealth and glorie vnder the ſunne, which can in ſuch a caſe afford a dram of comfort. Bee it that a man hath formerly liued in all kinde of outward contents, not withdrawing from his heart any of the ioyes which the world affects, [t] and doteth on; yet one fit of ſoule-diſturbance, will make all thoſe kinds of gladneſſe to flee away like a dreame, and to paſſe as a viſion of the night. Saul might put by his vexing pangs for a time by muſique, but they returned vpon him againe with a doubled force. In ſome ſickneſſes, you ſhall ſee a man forget himſelfe a little by ſome fogging ſleepe; but oh how ſicke is he when he awakes? ſicker by much then he was before: ſo theſe outward things, as companie, and ſport, and merry diſcourſe, when one is in inward perplexitie, may cauſe a little forgetting of the paine; but when it is paſt, and there is a returning againe to the heart to commune therewith, lo, the caſe is worſe then it was. Now that which the world with the fulneſſe thereof cannot remoue, this Ioy here ſpoken of, this Gladneſſe here deſired can effect. This is as cold water to a wearied ſoule, as the Balme of Gilead for a diſtreſſed ſpirit: this is the oyle to aſſwage the raging and racking ache of an aggrieued heart: therefore the Church of God in diſtreſſe, and being fed with the bread of teares, cryed out, [u] Cauſe thy face, O God, to ſhine, that we may be ſaued: as if they had ſaid, We are now inwrapped in much perplexitie, let vs haue of thee but this one fauour, Lift vp the light of thy countenance, and ſaue vs: ſpeake peace vnto vs, make vs to know that thou art pacified towards vs, notwithſtanding our ſinnes, and wee ſhall be ſafe: this one thing ſhall be able to acheere vs. Shall not this then be called true Ioy, which is able to allay the ſorrow, and to mitigate the griefe which commeth by the greateſt grieuances? Well may a man ſay of this, as Dauid ſaid of Goliahs ſword, when he deſired to borrow a weapon of Abimelech, and he told him hee had none but it, [x] There is none to that, giue it me.

Secondly, This is the only Ioy which is perpetuall: Chriſt commended it to his Diſciples, by the name of a [y] Ioy which no man ſhould take from them. I confeſſe, it may ſometimes be interrupted, and ouer-clouded with ſad paſſions: ſo was it in Dauid at this time, as wee ſhall haue more direct occaſion to conſider, Ver. 12. but it can neuer be cleane extinguiſhed. God doth ſo ſometimes hide away his Face from his deareſt ones for their humbling, that they are troubled not a little; but it is an abſolute and neuer-failing truth, he will turne againe and quicken them, that his people may reioyce in him. As for the Ioy that is in outward things, as in the wealth, honour, pleaſure, glorie of this life, it is but vaniſhing, [z] like the noyſe of Thornes vnder a Pot, which crackleth and blazeth exceedingly for a time, but it is gone at once. It is a ſhort reioycing, it is a [a] Ioy but for a moment. As the things themſelues are tranſitorie and vncertaine: ſo muſt that Ioy that is taken in them be. Vanitie it ſelfe selfe is not more light: and then for the most part, these shallow and soone-drying streames of outward Ioy, doe empty themselues into a Sea of heauinesse. They are as a short winters day, the faireneſſe whereof in regard of some few breakings out of the Sunne, is at last swallowed vp into a gloomy and tempestuous night. That light which is sowne for the righteous, meaning by it the ioy prepared for the [b] vpright in heart, notwithstanding it is sometime darkened, yet it neuer goeth out; it doth alwayes scatter and disperse, like the Sunne in his strength, all clouds of affrightment and discomfort whatsoeuer. Thus of the Doctrine. The content that floweth from the feeling of Gods fauour, in the forgiueneſſe of sinne, is the only Ioy: this indeede is Gladneſſe. This releeues the soule, when as other [c] ioyes doe deceiue a man like a Brooke, and as the rising of the Riuers doe passe away. This may sometimes bee missing, but it can neuer bee lost: others are sodainely gone, and fade away like a rotten thing, or as a garment that is Moth-eaten.

The Vse.

This Doctrine is a direction for the guiding and ordering of our desires in the matter of Ioy. Our nature affects ioy, it is euery mans wish, if hee could, to haue a glad heart: but in the point it selfe touching Ioy, and concerning Gladneſſe, therein generally wee mistake. One man placeth his Ioy in this, that his [d] substance is great, and that his hand hath gotten much. Another is glad, with Haman, for his [e] promotion. A table richly deckt, an ouerflowing cup, a faring deliciously euery day, there is the Epicures Ioy: the most dote vpon that mad mirth, which Salomon speaks [f] of: and if they may liue in pleasure and wantonneſſe, making to morrow as to day, and haue their house peaceable and without feare, without any rod of God vpon them, then they be glad, and many fooles are apt to thinke them happy who thus liue: Oh, say they, they liue a braue life, as men inioying their imagined felicitie. But, alas, how much are men deceiued herein! What are all those Ioyes, in comparison of this we now treate of? Indeede if it be rightly considered, what true comfort can a man take in any thing, so long as he knoweth not how the case stands betwixt God and his soule, and what shall become of him in the day of the great account and reckoning for his sinnes? Howsoeuer the Deuill teacheth men to forget the consideration hereof, that so he may leade them on like an Oxe to the slaughter, or as a foole that goeth to the Stocks for correction, not knowing that they are in danger; yet if euer at any time, the conscience bee a little awakened to thinke on this, the very remembrance of it is like the beholding of the hand vpon the wall to Belshazzar, which when he saw it, put him quite out of his humour of iollitie: it was not the presence of his Princes, nor the companie of his Wiues and Concubines, nor the beholding of the golden Vessels which hee had taken out of the Temple of the Lord, nor the pleasing taste of the Wine which was before him; none of these could keepe his countenance from changing, and his thoughts from troubling [g] him. So indeede nothing can ouercome the terror and amazement, which is wont to astonish the soule guilty of sinne in it owne apprehension,

sion, and sensible of the terror of the Lord; and yet ignorant withall, and without all manner of assurance to be pardoned. Thinke in what a wofull case thy soule will be, when as thou art breathing thy last breath, and art euen ready to bee driuen out of the world by a violent and tormenting sickenesse: thou shalt see the sinnes of thy life mustering together before thee, and the iust wrath of God readie to seize vpon thee, and hell in thy owne conceit euen wide gaping to receiue thee, and yet hast no feeling of this Ioy issuing out of the knowledge of Gods being graciously reconciled to thee in his Sonne. Oh, then let vs labour for this Ioy aboue all, let vs neuer giue any rest to our thoughts, till wee bee brought to heare of this gladnesse; a dram of this is better then all the mirth of the world besides, and shall be a secret comfort to thy soule, when all that the earth affords, cannot yeeld thee so much as a drop of true refreshing. And now, if this vse preuaile ought with vs, let vs addresse our selues to heare what followeth.

Note.

Thus therefore is the second Doctrine: That it is no vnpossible thing, for a man to haue ioy and gladnesse in his soule, out of the gracious assurance that his sinnes are pardoned. This I gather out of the hope which Dauid had to obtayne this in praying for it. Shall we thinke that this prayer of Dauid was not the prayer of Faith? Would Dauid euer haue craued it, had hee not knowne it to bee a matter possible to inioy it? This example of his doth both binde vs to make this suite, and assure vs too, that there is hope that God in mercy will fulfill our desire in that particular? and the request which Dauid makes (Vers. 12.) is a strong proofe that Dauid did sometimes know in his owne personall feeling, the worth and excellency of this Ioy: he desires then the restoring of it, that is an argument that hee sometimes felt it, though at this time, through his raging sinne, he was not so sensible of it as he wished: and indeed this is that very [h] ioy of heart (which he saith) the Lord hath giuen him: farre exceeding and surpassing the content which the men of the world haue, when their Wheat and their Wine abounds. It is said, that [i] God will withhold no good thing from them that walke vprightly, and that hee which giues Christ, will [k] with him giue all things also: what better thing can God giue a man, then comfort in his soule by the knowledge of forgiuenesse? and how shall hee bee said to giue all things that are of necessarie behoofe for those which are deare vnto him in Christ, if hee should finally leaue them vncertayne in this, without the vnderstanding whereof, they haue no true content? Will God forgiue them their sinnes, and not let them know that hee hath forgiuen them? Had not the Virgin Mary this Ioy, when shee professed the [l] reioycing of her spirit in God her Sauiour? And had not Paul it, when he could say, that [m] being iustified by faith, he had peace with God: and that hee was [n] perswaded nothing should be able to separate him from the loue of God which is in Christ Iesus: and that he was [o] receiued to mercy, notwithstanding hee had beene sometime euen the chiefe of sinners: and that a [p] Crowne of Righteousnesse was laid vp for him at the day of Christs appearing? May not Hezekiah his case be brought in for a proofe, q Thou hast cast all my sinnes behind thy backe. Had he not Ioy and Gladnesse in his heart, because his sins were pardoned? This of him, and of others knowing the same with him, is written, as all other Scripture is, r That wee with comfort might haue hope: now, it were a poore comfort to vs reading of, or hearing this touching the Saints and Seruants of God in the Scripture, if there were no possibilitie for vs to obtayne it. What comfort to mee to know that Hezekiah had ioy in his soule, that his sinnes were pardoned, if the case be so, that there is no hope for mee to haue the like assurance? This shall rather increase my sorrow, and make my thoughts desperate, then yeeld me that comfort and hope, the feeling whereof within my soule, is the scope and purpose of the Scripture. Dauid by the direction of Gods Spirit, doth place happinesse in the forgiuenesse of f sinne. Can I bee happy in that whereof I am ignorant? Happinesse is a matter of feeling and apprehension. May it bee truely said that he is happy, that feeles Gods Spirit secretly testifying to his soule, that his sinnes are pardoned? Surely, then it may be said as truely, that he is vnhappy which is not sensible of any such testimonie. What is the meaning of the Article in our Creed, I beleeue the forgiuenesse of sinnes? Is it no more but this, I beleeue that there is a possibilitie for sinne, through Gods great mercy, to be pardoned? Thinke we that the Deuill himselfe is not perswaded thereof? If I goe no further in that acknowledgement, how doe I then professe that Faith by which I hope to be saued? I here testifie somewhat that doth in a speciall sort concerne my selfe: I beleeue my sins to bee both pardonable and pardoned, and that therefore the Resurrection of the body, which I looke for, shall be my passage and conuoy to eternall Life. It were easie to be large in this proofe, but in a case so plaine, and so often comming in the way to be handled, I will be sparing. The very state of this place is enough to make the point good, if there were no more to the purpose in all the Scripture. Farre be it from vs to thinke, that Dauid did here make a hopelesse suite, plying the Throne of Grace with a Petition for that he could not haue: was hee herein as one that beateth the Ayre, or as one that runneth vncertainly? It were impious and vngodly so to thinke. If I then may be bold in prayer to vse Dauids words, I may also be bold to powre them out before the Lord with Dauids hope, and resolue, that as Ioy and Gladnesse is the thing I pray for, so Ioy and Gladnesse is the thing which in Gods good time I shall obtayne. What soeuer I may lawfully pray for, that same I may lawfully expect: nay, if I doe not as confidently expect it, as I doe earnestly begge it, my prayer is in vaine: It seemes I either distrust Gods Power, or make a question of his good Will; to stagger about either of which, is no little sinne.

f Psal.32.1.

1. Vse. Here I might take occasion to taxe the comfortlesse doctrine of Poperie, which maintaynes there can bee no other ordinarie knowledge in this particular, touching the pardon of sinnes, but that which is out of opinion and ghesse. If any man (say Papists) haue any other certainety herein, it is to be imputed rather to some extraordinarie reuelation, then thought to proceed out of the ordinarie and vſuall courſe which GOD takes with his children. Surely, if the aſſurance in this matter be but imaginarie, the Ioy that followeth it, can be no better then a meere conceit: and it were ſtrange to thinke, that Dauid prayed to haue his fancie fed with a ſuppoſition. If Dauid could by his prayer obtaine no more then a ſuperficiall refreſhing, proceeding out of an opinion that hee was purged; ſurely, hee ſhould haue beene more vexed with the feare of miſtaking, then it was poſſible for him to bee confirmed with the ſtrength of his conceit. This is one of the grand abominations of Poperie, that it brings vp the ſoules of men in a kind of continuall ſuſpence. It can neuer bring a man to that Ioy and gladneſſe which Dauid here did pray for. The mayne grounds of it, doe put the heart quite out of heart in ſeeking to enioy it. Haply it will giue thee leaue to wiſh it, but it will giue thee no hope at all to obtayne it.

2. Vſe. Now for a ſecond Vſe, obſerue, I pray you, how fitly this followeth vpon the former Doctrine. There we were perſwaded to affect this Ioy, and to preferre it to all other, euen our moſt chiefe contentments. Here we are aſſured, that our labour, and deſire, and endeuour for it, ſhall not be in vaine in the Lord: thou ſhalt haue Ioy in ſeeking for this Ioy, it ſhall be Gladneſſe to thy ſoule to labour for this Gladneſſe. God may not giue it (perhaps) ſo ſoone as thou deſireſt it, but hee can as ſoone deny himſelfe, as herein finally deny thee. If he ſeeme to keepe thee off in crauing it, it is not to diſappoint thee, but it is to enlarge thy heart, and to increaſe thy deſires, and to put edge and eagerneſſe to thy ſuites, that thy portion of it may be larger when it comes: and if after he hath comforted thee with ſome beginnings of it, he ſeemes to withdraw it from thee, it is but to teach thee to value it the more, and to double and to treble it vpon thee when it returnes. Oh, that thou couldſt euer bee perſwaded to ſet on in good earneſt with this worke, and in a kind of diſtaſte of all other theſe baſer ioyes, which are not worth the naming that day that this is ſpoken of, to cry out like them, [t] Lord, euermore giue mee this Ioy; thou ſhouldſt ſee what ſweetneſſe thou ſhouldſt find in the very entrance into this courſe, and how notwithſtanding the opinion of the world, that it is a dull and a tedious thing to bee religious, yet the very ſight of this, before thou come to it, ſhall ſo rauiſh thy ſpirits, that thou ſhalt quickly confeſſe, that there is no Ioy indeed worthy the hauing, in reſpect of it. So then thus farre we are come. We haue found which is indeed the true Ioy, the feeling of pardon and purging by the bloud of Chriſt ſealed vp vnto the ſoule: we haue gotten aſſurance, that it is haueable: God is able to beſtow it, and he will not deny it.

Note.

Come wee to the third point, touching the meanes by which Dauid did expect it. Thus is the Doctrine,

The third Doctrine. That hearing is the meanes which God hath ſanctified for the begetting of that Ioy, which proceeds from the aſſurance of Gods fauour in the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. DAVID deſires that he may heare it, that as by hearing he was brought to humiliation; ſo by hearing hee might bee reſtored to comfort. He ſeekes to be cured by the ſame meanes by which he was wounded. Hearing had broken his bones, he lookes that hearing ſhall reioyce his bones. It may very well be, and there is nothing againſt it in the Scripture, that Dauid made this Pſalme betwixt the time that Nathan came vnto him to conuince him, and the pronouncing of forgiueneſſe to him by the ſame Nathan. [u] For howſoeuer that time is recorded as following immediately vpon the other, cauſing vs ordinarily to conceiue it thus; viz. that aſſoone as Nathan told Dauid plainely of his fault, hee forthwith acknowledged it, and aſſoone as he acknowledged it, Nathan gaue him aſſurance of Forgiueneſſe; yet for my part, I can eaſily thinke with Caluine, that there was ſome diſtance of time betwixt, in which God would vex him, that hee might humble him. And it is ordinary to find thoſe things conioyned in the courſe of the holy ſtorie, which yet in time doe not agree: ſo that it may bee very well, that Nathans comming to him with the word of Comfort, (The Lord hath put away thy ſinne,) was vpon this ſute, To heare of ioy and gladneſſe, &c. Me thinks it is not likely that Nathan would be ſo forward, ſo preſently to comfort Dauid: but left him rather, to thinke well on it a while, and to ſee how that ſcowring potion of Reproofe would worke to his humiliation, before he would miniſter to him any Cordials. Or be it ſo that Nathan did immediately, and at the time of his reproouing him, propound ſome words of refreſhing to him; yet wee may well thinke, that Dauid was not ſatisfied with once or twice in that kind, but deſired to heare againe and againe for his ſettling and ſatisfaction in this poynt. Howſoeuer it was, Dauid did now (as Auſtine ſaith) addreſſe himſelfe rather to be an humble hearer of ſomewhat for his comfort, then a bold ſpeaker in the defence or mitigation of that he had done. Sith we haue found this collection hence, let vs examine the Scripture, and ſee whether we can confirme it thence by further teſtimonie. Elihv in Iob ſaith, that when a man is ſtricken with ſorrow vpon his bed, and the griefe of his bones is ſore, ſo that his very ſoule draweth to the graue, and his life to the buriers, the way by which God will haue mercie on him, and giue euidence that he hath receyued a reconciliation, is by a meſſenger or interpreter that comes vnto him to declare his Righteouſneſſe. It is an excellent place, and worthie our due conſidering. It ſhewes how God preſerues a ſinner from falling: how hee reſtores a ſinner being falne: he preſerues by admonitions, and chaſtiſements: hee reſtores by ſending to him a miniſter, here called a Meſſenger, or an Angel: hee carrieth the ambaſſage of the Lord of Hoſtes; and an Interpreter, one enabled to declare aright the Doctrine of reconciliation betwixt God and man: hee is no ordinary man, (one of a thouſand:) a good Miniſter indeed is not common; his office is to declare to a man his Righteouſneſſe: viz. to aſſure him that whatſoeuer he is in himſelfe, a foule and lothſome ſinner; yet in Chriſt Ieſus he is iuſtified, and through him accepted righteous before God. Now this courſe being taken, God will haue mercie on the poore ſinner, and his ſoule ſhall bee deliuered and freed from the pit of hell. It is a place deſeruing ſpeciall note for this purpoſe, ſhewing plainely the miniſtry of man, to bee ordayned to ſeale vp comfort to the ſoules of the humble, by aſſurance that their ſinnes are pardoned. To his Miniſters God [x] giues the tongue of the learned, to know how to ſpeake a word in time to him that is wearie: a place primarily meant of Chriſt, & ſecondarily of all the true Prophets & Miniſters of the Word, to the end of the world. [y] The Lord hath created the fruit of the lips to be peace: [z] God hath cõmitted vnto men the miniſterie of reconciliation. His Miniſters are appoynted [a] to bring the glad tidings of peace, and of good things. They be they which muſt [b] ſpeake comfortably to Ieruſalem, and tell her that her iniquitie is pardoned. [c] This is that building and planting which is a part of their commiſſion: [d] euen a power of remitting (when it is rightly vnderſtood) is committed vnto them. [e] Was it not by hearing Philip, who was his guide in opening the Scripture to him, that the Eunuch went on his way reioycing? [f] was it not by dependance on the ſame mans miniſterie, that there was ſuch a deale of Ioy in Samaria? [g] Was it not hearing that gladded the heart of the poore Iaylor, before ſo much aſtoniſhed, that he was about to haue ſlaine himſelfe? It is plaine then, that by Hearing comes this Ioy. [h] The Word of God, which hath a ſecret vertue to reioyce the heart, is made effectuall to that purpoſe by this meanes.

This ſtill ſerues to iuſtifie the ſo much barkt-at courſe of Hearing, the diligence wherein is reputed by the moſt, one of the greateſt follies, and againſt which euery day we heare new exceptions: yet it is here approued by him that knew well the worth of it, as the meanes to worke that ioy and gladneſſe in his ſoule, which of all things hee did moſt eſteeme. Whatſoeuer therefore the miſiudging world ſhall ſay in this caſe, and concerning this courſe, ſome thinking it ſuperfluous, ſome accuſing it as the meanes to fill mens minds with tormenting fancies, and whereof if one doe take a little too much, he ſhall no more be maſter of himſelfe; yet doe thou, if thy ſoule doe indeed thirſt for true conſolation, and for that peace which paſſeth vnderſtanding, count it both thy dutie and thy glory to be a conſtant hearer. Dauid was as well able for his gifts as any man now aliue, to worke out his owne comfort, by his owne perſonall and priuate induſtrie, and he was no ſleight Student in Gods Word, yet Hearing was it by which he lookt to haue the oyle of gladneſſe conuaied into his ſoule. He knew well, that the ſame matter applyed by himſelfe to himſelfe, vpon the ſame grounds, yet could not be ſo effectuall, nor ſo ſweet vnto his ſoule, as if Nathan, or ſome ſuch one ſent of God vnto him ſhould deliuer it. Let this then ſtop their mouthes, that cry out vpon hearing, as the occaſion of diſtraction, when it is indeed the true meanes of the trueſt ſettlement. Let it winne them to a more conſtant dependance hereupon, that thinke they may doe well enough without it.

The Vſe.

For my part, I thinke a man hath little cauſe to truſt to that comfort, which he cannot or wil not ſay he hath gotten by this meanes. And then thirdly, let it put heart into thoſe which runne this courſe; the ioy and gladneſſe which they ſhall get by hearing, ſhall make amends abundantly for all the ſcorne, the reproch, the trouble, the diſgrace, which a man ſhall ſuſtaine in the world by attending it. Well may a man reſolue in this caſe with Iob, that conſidering the comfort which comes by it, If an aduerſary ſhould write a Booke againſt him, to diſgrace him for this, yet ſo farre he would be from being put downe or diſcouraged by it, that he would take it on his ſhoulder in a kind of triumph, [i] and tie it for a crowne vnto him. Thus of the third.

Note.

i Iob 31. 35,36.

The fourth followeth: Let vs marke the order, and obſerue it diligently: we ſee which is the onely Ioy; wee ſee it is obtaineable; we ſee that Hearing is the meanes ordayned to conuay it. Now come we to the next; touching the partie vpon whom Dauid mainely relyeth in the vſe of the meanes: where the Doctrine is thus,

The fourth Doctrine.

That though hearing be the meanes of ſpirituall Ioy, yet it can neuer worke it, vnleſſe the Lord ſhall giue a bleſsing thereunto. DAVID deſires that he may heare ſome good newes, which may bee the matter of his Ioy, but withall he prayes God, that hee would make it to bee Ioy vnto him when it comes: O Lord, doe thou direct the tongue of him whom I muſt heare, that he may ſpeake that which ſhall be beſt agreeing to my preſent caſe, and vouchſafe alſo to open my eares, and to vnlocke my heart, that I may entertaine it as I ought, and ſo lay hold vpon it as may be for my good. I know there is no Prophet, no Seer, that can ſpeake that which is fitting for mee at this time, vnleſſe thou enable him: and I know againe, there is no power in mee to make vſe of it, when I heare it, vnleſſe thou worke it in me by thy Spirit. My hope is only in thee therefore, to make thy ſeruants ſpeake that to mee which I would faine heare, and to make me able to heare that which they ſhall ſpeake. Who is PAVL then, or who is Apollos, ſaith PAVL, excellently to this purpoſe, [k] but the miniſters by whom ye beleeue? It is not wee who worke faith; it is the Lord which begets it in you, and beſtoweth it on you by our Miniſterie: [l] one planteth, and another watereth; but all is nothing, except God giue the increaſe. [m] Wee are helpers of your ioy, ſaith the ſame Apoſtle to this purpoſe, and not the authors of it: [n] When God opened LIDEA'S heart, then did ſhee attend to the things which PAVL ſpake. This worke of God in her, made PAVLS miniſtry towards her to become effectuall. The Miniſter is neyther the author of the reconciliation betwixt God and man, (for that is the God-head it ſelfe,) neyther the worker, (for that is the ſecond perſon Chriſt Ieſus,) neyther the aſſurer and ratifier of it to the ſoule, (for that is the Holy Ghoſt,) no nor yet in ſtrait ſpeaking is hee the inſtrument, (for that is the glad tydings of the Goſpel:) but as Elihu ſpake ere-while, he is the Interpreter, one that is to open it and expound it, what it is, how it is wrought, and how, and in what ſort it may be applyed to the ſoule. It is the tongue of the learned, by which [o] a word in ſeaſon is ſpoke to him that is wearie, but it is God which giueth it: [p] the fruits of the lips is peace, but God createth it. It is well noted, that when the two ſiſters, Martha and Marie, mourned for dead Lazarus, many well-well-disposed Iewes came to comfort them; yet they had no comfort indeed vntill q Christ came: not thereupon to tie comfort to the bodily presence of our Saiour, but to shew, that mans indeuour can doe nothing, till the Lord put to his hand. Nathan may speake to the eare, but vnlesse God doe speake to the heart, DAVID cannot feele that Ioy and gladnesse which he would. I remember when Paul had indeuoured to comfort and settle the minds of the Thessalonians against the troubles present, and those which were to come, at last he shuts vp his exhortation with a Prayer to God, that he would r comfort their hearts: as if he had said, I haue deliuered vnto you the matter and ground of Comfort, but both you and I must looke vp to the Father of mercie, and the God of all comfort, that he would be pleased to make it to become effectuall.

First vse, for vs that are Ministers: this may teach to enter vpon the Lords worke in humblenesse of mind, without any presuming vpon our owne skill. Wert thou as MOSES, s learned in all the wisedome of the Egyptians, and mightie in words: t as MICAH, full of iudgement: as u APOLLOS, eloquent, and mightie in the Scripture: x as good a man, and as full of the holy Ghost as BARNABAS: y Speaking as many languages as PAVL: z were thy tongue as fined siluer: or hadst thou such a speciall gift in laying open the promises of the Gospel, that thou mightest seeme another IOSES, a euen a sonne of Consolation: yet couldest thou not speake peace vnto a broken heart, vnlesse the Lord shall make thy tongue to be health: without his speciall enabling, thou shalt be but as sounding Brasse, or as a tinckling Cymball. If grace be not first powred into thy lips by the God of grace, neuer shalt thou be able to powre out grace for others good. How should this make vs desire of God to breathe vpon vs by his Spirit before we beginne, while we are in our studies, and at our priuate meditations? Our rash aduenturing, as if we could doe somewhat of our selues, keepes backe the blessing of God from that which we vndertake.

Secondly, this concernes hearers too. Remember when we commend hearing to you, wee doe not commend it so, as if wee were able to beget your hearts by our owne power. Wretched were wee if we should encroach so farre vpon the Lords right. Nay, we tell you plainely and directly, that were we able to speake vnto you with the tongues of Angels, yet could we not doe you good, vnlesse the Lord shall bee pleased to water our words with the dew of Heauen, that they may take deepe roote in your soules. Wee will say willingly to you, as Peter and Iohn said to the people vpon occasion of healing the Cripple at the Temple gate; b Why looke you so on vs, as if by our owne power and godlinesse wee could doe these and these things? Wee protest vnto you, that you must so heare vs, as that you must desire of God to make you so to heare, as that you may find rest and comfort to our soules. No doubt, as diuers of our Sermons many times are raw and rude, hauing as little taste as the white of an egge, and lose their grace among the people, because wee presume to declare Gods ordinances, and to take his Couenant into our mouthes, mouthes, before we haue ſought the Lord in priuate as we ſhould; ſo as often many ſound Doctrines, and ſauoury Exhortations, are vnto the Hearers like water ſpilt vpon the earth, or as an vncertayne ſound, by which no man is prepared to the battell, by reaſon that wee doe not firſt deſire the Lord to make vs heare, to bore our eares, and vnlocke our hearts. Thinke you that are here, put caſe you ſhould bee forced to diſcouer how you haue prepared your ſelues to this preſent buſineſſe, whether you muſt not needs ſay that you came without this ſute: haply you thought to get ſome good by comming, but you did not begge of God to make you capable thereof: whom now ſhall you blame but your ſelues, if you depart without a bleſſing? If the Lord giue, you may gather; if he open his hand, you ſhall be filled with good things. If hee take away the breathing of his Spirit from our Sermons, wee may diſcharge our dutie; but to you they ſhall bee vnprofitable. Remember then if thou haſt waited now ſome time vpon the Ordinance of God, and haſt not got that comfort, and ſpirituall refreſhing, and ſatisfaction by it which thou lookedſt for: ſee if this bee not the cauſe, and then trie another while, whether thou being frequent and earneſt in this requeſt, the Lord will not open the windowes of Heauen vpon thee, and powre downe a bleſſing vpon thy ſoule. And thus of the firſt part, the ſubſtance of that which Dauid here craues, or the Requeſt properly.

The ſecond, the end for which that which is requeſted is deſired, That the bones which thou haſt broken may reioyce; that is, whereas through thy iuſt indignation, I am now grieued and vexed exceedingly, euen to the piercing of my bones, and to the anguiſh of my ſoule in an high degree, I may at laſt finde refreſhing, and may haue a meaſure of comfort proportionable to the extremitie of my preſent ſorrow. Thus is the ſenſe. Such is the riches and plenty of the Scripture, that this place and theſe words, though but ſhort and few, affoord diuers particulars, which I am very loth to paſſe by without noting. The firſt is thus,

The firſt Doctrine.

That albeit ſinne, while it is in the act and in performance, pleaſeth; yet when the conſcience is awakened, it will proue exceeding terrible. DAVID now perceiued a great difference betwixt the practice of his ſinne, and the ſequell of his ſinne. No doubt, his dalliances with Bathſheba were full of content for the time to his corrupted nature, and he was ſo beſotted therewith, that he thought not of any following ſting: and his policie in preuailing ſo cunningly for the hiding of his euill, and for the carrying of the whole buſineſſe ſo couertly, and without any ſuſpition to the world, pleaſed him not a little. Theſe things went downe at firſt pleaſantly, and without any manner of annoyance: But when Dauids conſcience was rowzed by Nathans miniſterie, and ſet vpon the racke, ſo that hee now was ſenſible of the terrour of the Lord, and of the haynouſneſſe of his ſinne; this caſe was altered, and that which before pleaſed him at the heart, was now a paine to his heart, the vexation farre exceeded all the former pleaſures that he found. The pleaſingneſſe

of ſinne was gone, the torment following it ſtucke by him, and it was no eaſie matter to remooue it. Hee was now like one whoſe bones (according to the manner of execution in ſome countries yet) are broken into pieces on the Wheele, not a ioynt, not a Sinnew in whoſe body but is full of anguiſh: hee knowes not which way to turne, or where to beſtow himſelfe to find any eaſe. This may bee conceiued as a repreſentation, or a ſhaddow of Dauids caſe. I thinke I ſhould not ſay much amiſſe, ſhould I ſay, that ſauing for the eternitie thereof, Hell it ſelfe for the preſent time could not haue beene much more grieuous: ſo terrible is the torment of an awakened conſcience after the committing of a grieuous ſinne. Truely is it ſaid, that the conſcience is appointed in man for two ſeruices, to be a Bridle, and a Whip. If it cannot preuaile as the one, but that a man will needs aduenture to follow his owne luſts, to the greedie committing of vngodlineſſe; a man ſhall ſurely feele it as the other, to torment and ſcourge him in extremitie. Adam and Eue were bewitched with the beautie of the forbidden fruit, and the opinion that it was to bee deſired to get knowledge; but when they had eaten, they found an alteration, they knew not what to doe, or where to hide, to eſcape the voice of the Lord, and to auoid the continuall checks of a galled [c] conſcience. Thinke wee that the vexation of Samſons ſpirit, after he had betrayed himſelfe vnto Dalilah, by being ouercome with her bewitching intreaties, did not farre ſurpaſſe all that pleaſure that hee found in her wanton company? Peter liked it well for the time to denie his Maſter; at leaſt, it troubled him neuer a whit, or hee thought hee ſhould quickly ouercome it; but oh the Gall and Wormewood that came after, when the looking backe of Chriſt at the crowing of the Cocke, had awakened his ſleeping ſoule! Oh, what a caſe was hee (poore heart) in, when hee had no helpe but bitter weeping for his fault!

Oh, how ſhould this make vs to bee wiſe againſt the deceitfulneſſe of ſin! Take but that ſin, wherein Dauid was intangled, the ſin of Adultery: how many pleaſing baits hath it, by which to draw into it, and to coozen him that is not wary of it! It makes to forget for the time, whatſoeuer might hinder from performing it, (the preſence of God, the danger to the ſoule, the ſcandall to Religion, the wrong to others:) there is nothing preſented to the thoughts for the time, but, I know not what baſe content in taking our fill of loue. Thus haply the matter may goe on a while when the act is paſt, without any manner of compunction, or touch more then ordinary. But when God ſhall be pleaſed to awake the ſoule, and to make ſenſible indeede of what is done, oh, what a caſe ſhall a man then be in! ſooner may a man imagine it, then deſcribe it, and yet neuer ſo imagine it as it is, vntill hee doe feele it. Had a man vpon him at once the moſt painefull diſeaſes in extremity, as Gout, Stone, Strangury, or whatſoeuer elſe is moſt vexing, it were nothing to the perplexitie of the ſoule vpon ſuch an occaſion. Oh let vs not buy the vaniſhing pleaſures of ſinne at ſo deare a rate. This that I ſpeake of

But if God giue thee ouer to thy ſelfe, and leaue thee to the iudgement of the great Day, then thus and more then thus ſhall it bee with thee euerlaſtingly. If God thus ſcourge his owne, what will hee doe to thoſe whom he will forſake? If the righteous ſcarcely bee ſaued, where ſhall the vngodly and the ſinner appeare? If this be the torment of an accuſing conſcience for a time, making way to repentance, what ſhall their ſtate be, vpon whom the Lord will powre out the full Vials of his wrath for euer and euer?

The thirteenth Lecture.

VERS. 8, 9.

That the bones which thou haſt broken, may reioyce.
Hide thy face from my ſinnes, and put away all mine Iniquities.

I Said in my laſt Sermon, that this, touching the breaking of DAVIDS bones, was like to afford vs more matter then I could then conueniently diſpatch. Now then, to that which I haue ſpoken out of this Clauſe, I adde this, viz.

The firſt Doctrine.

That ſpirituall diſtreſſe and anguiſh of ſoule, occaſioned by the ſenſe of ſinne, is no certaine ſigne of a deſperate and forſaken ſtate. Thinke wee that Dauids caſe was not very perplexed, his griefe violent, and his vexation of ſpirit more then ordinary, when he compared himſelfe to a man all whoſe bones are broken; whoſe paines in euery mans vnderſtanding cannot chooſe but bee exceeding great? Wee may gather out of other places, and by other ſpeeches of his, that he was accuſtomed to paſſions at times full of bitterneſſe. What thinke wee of that, which hee calleth roring all the day, and [a] the turning of his moiſture into the drought of Summer? What caſe doe wee imagine him to bee in, when [b] feare and trembling were come vpon him, and an horrible feare had couered him? [c] When his heart was like Waxe, euen molten in the midſt of his bowels? [d] His ſtrength dried vp like a Potſheard, his tongue cleauing to his iawes, and himſelfe brought to the duſt of death? [e] Innumerable troubles compaſſed him, his ſinnes tooke ſuch hold vpon him, that he was not able to looke vp. [f] Hee had no reſt in his bones, becauſe of his ſinne; [g] went mourning all the day: nay, [h] fainted in his mourning: [i] his ſoule was ſore troubled. Doe not ſuch ſayings at theſe, ſparſed here and there thorow Dauids Pſalmes, argue ſpeciall conflicts, ſharpe agonies, a kind of inward torture in extremity? yet were theſe no ſignes of a man forſaken, and giuen ouer to the power of diſcomfort, to be ſwallowed vp of heauineſſe irrecouerably.

couerably. We see here how he takes heart to himselfe to come to God, to craue Reioycing, as knowing this kind of case to be no pledge of Gods forsaking; nay, he affirmes [k] after, this inward breaking to bee a pleasing sacrifice vnto God. What say wee to Iob? It were long to mention all his particular complaints, testifying his case in this particular to bee equall vnto DAVIDS: [l] The Arrowes of the Almightie were in him, the venome thereof did drinke vp his spirit, and the terrours of God did fight against him. [m] God set him as a marke against him, so that hee was euen a burthen to himselfe. [n] God vsed him as an enemie, hee was like a leafe driuen to and fro, or as the dry stubble: bitter things were written against him, and he was made to possesse the Iniquities of his youth. God (saith he) [o] hath taken me by the necke, and beaten mee, hee cutteth my reines, and powreth my Gall vpon the ground: hee hath broken mee with one breaking vpon another: my face is withered with weeping, and the shaddow of death is vpon my eyes. Thus, and much more largely then thus, doth Iob often set out the bitternesse of his soule: and yet though God (as his Words [p] bee) had compassed him with his Net, yet did not hee hereupon conclude himselfe to bee finally cast off; but in the midst of all resolued, [q] though God should slay him, yet to trust still on him: and comforted himselfe with the thought of his Redeemer, and with the assured hope that hee should one day [r] see him in his flesh. It was hard and sharpe with Hezekiah, when God brake all his bones like a Lyon, making him to mourne as a Doue, and to chatter like a Swallow; yet hee was able euen then, to looke vp hopefully to the Lord, and to crie, [s] O Lord, it hath oppressed me, comfort me. These three examples are very full and pregnant for the iustification of this Doctrine. Christ himselfe in this particular exceeded all these: witnesse his Agonie, in which [t] his sweate was like drops of bloud, trickling downe to the ground: his being grieuously troubled, [u] so that his soule was very heauie euen vnto the death: yet wee all know he was neuer really and indeede forsaken, though speaking according to a present apprehension, hee once cried out, and yet therein too, with no small or obscure euidence of Faith, My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken mee? Nay, (which I had thought to haue handled as a particular Doctrine by it selfe, but that I find it to fall in fitly as a proofe of this) so farre is this spirituall perplexitie and distresse of spirit, from being a signe of a forlorne and left estate, that it is the ordinary way by which God brings those to sweetnesse of inward comfort who are his. They haue first some taste of that which is here meant by the breaking of bones, before they haue any certaine experience of that Ioy and Gladnesse, which it was DAVIDS desire here to bee acquainted with. This was anciently meant by those sowre herbs, with which that tastie meat, the Paschall Lambe (a type of Christ) [x] was to bee eaten. It hath beene a receiued speech among good Diuines, that God leads his to heauen by the gates of Hell, and prepares them to that which Paul names [y] euerlasting consolation, and good hope through grace, by a wounded spirit. He purgeth and bringeth low by the bitter Aloes of the Law, before he doth refresh and and comfort with the Cordials of the Gospell. All Gods Children haue not their fits of spirituall breakings in the same measure, neither all in the same time. For measure, they are in some more outwardly sensible, by which the parties exercised with them, are drawne forth to publique note, euen to be the talke of the World, and the wonder of the Countrey, and the matter of descant and obloquie for the profane. In other they are more secret, and (as I may say) more still and silent: yet so, that by how much the more they come behind the former in measure of extremity, by so much they do exceed them in oftennesse and frequency. And for times there is also a difference: for somes first conuersion is begun by some such sharpe course, euen as violent as PAVLS [z] astonishment, being strooken to the earth: or as the Iaylors trembling, when hee was about euen to [a] kill himselfe. Somes entrance into the state of grace is more easie and gentle, in respect that by the honestie of their education, they haue beene preserued from grosser sinnes; but after, vpon occasion of some great fall, or some speciall slip, they then come to haue more full acquaintance with that breaking of the bones here spoken of: so that though he haue beene in the state of saluation a good while, yet then he begins to be more sensible of those pangs which accompany Regeneration: yea, such an alteration he shall find in himselfe, that he shall thinke that to be the time of his first turning, whereas indeed it is rather to be reputed a confirmation in grace, then a beginning thereof. And this I may well say was Dauids case. Though he had beene a Professor of holinesse, and that in sinceritie now a good space, yet no doubt, hee neuer so knew before this time, what belongs to spirituall distresse: now he fell to begge for [b] the creating of a cleane heart within him: as if hee had now beene to begin Religion, and had had no sense of that changing of the heart, which still goeth with conuersion. Some againe neuer come to any great touch in this kind, vntill their last act, and till that sicknesse which brings them to their graues. From thence comes it, that many worthy Christians, who haue passed the time of their dwelling here with much conscience and comfort, are exercised with strange passions in their end; so as some not knowing how to iudge, are apt to iudge that all their former profession was but vaine, and that it is no wise course for a man to be so religious. I remember in the storie of the Gospell (and well may it bee a shaddow of this Truth) that one of the vncleane spirits which was cast out by our Sauiour, at the very point of his remouall, after he was commanded to come out, rent the partie so sore, that he was as one dead, insomuch that many said, [c] Hee is dead: his last vexation was the most violent. But howsoeuer it bee, that in some their spirituall pulls are more apparant and notorious then in others, in some more early then in others; yet it is a course which all are tyed to by anguish of soule, to come to that measure of inward consolation, which the God of all comforts hath allotted for him. So that so farre is this renting of the heart, and anguishing of the bones, from being a testimonie of danger, that it is rather a signe of safetie, as being the way by which God bringeth bringeth vnto heauen, such as in his eternall counsell are ordayned vnto Life.

This Doctrine is properly to reforme the common error, and mistaking of the world, concerning these fits and moods of spirituall distresse, proceeding from the touch of conscience, smiting secretly for some or more speciall sinnes, and accompanyed with doubtings and questions touching the soules estate towards God; out of which come oftentimes feares, griefe, sadnesse, vncomfortablenesse, disquiet, some seemings of hopelesnesse and despaire: when the world heares of any thus taken, it is apt to determine their case to bee so wofull, and so certainely leading downe to hell, that they will not sticke to professe, they would not for so much and so much bee in like. And if the parties so afflicted bee such as haue beene formerly of any note for matter of Profession, and ordinarie dependance vpon the exercises of the Word, then is this matter enough for some to shoote for arrowes bitter words against good things. Then, This is the fruit of Religion, This is the effect of this ouer-forwardnes; then shall Preaching and Hearing be sure to receiue a blow. Then will the Deuill strengthen euill men in their neglect of godlinesse, and confirme them in their wretched opinion, that ignorance and hauing little to doe with the Scripture, and with Preaching, is the surest and the safest course. This Doctrine serues directly to discouer, and confute this common fancy. Alas, full little doe they know that thus speake and thinke, what belongs to Religion, and to the great worke of new making a mans heart, and of translating him from out of the state of nature into grace. They measure Religion by carnall and naturall sense, and thinke that to be best which doth maintayne the heart in the greatest dulnesse. Wofull is their case, who are neuer cast downe and confounded in themselues: the not ploughing vp of their hearts by such meanes as this, is an euidence against them that God neuer did, neuer will cast into them any seeds of sauing grace. It shewes plainely that that strong man keepeth his hold within them, sith all things in them are in peace: and they whom they so taxe and censure, how hard soeuer their care seemes to be to them; yet are they in the way of the greatest comfort, and there is a time comming wherein these shall sing for ioy of heart, when [d] they shall cry for sorrow of heart, and howle for vexation of minde.

This must also bee taken notice of, for the settling of their thoughts, who haue experience in themselues of these perplexed and grieuous passions. The Deuill doth as much labour to dishearten such, as he doth to harden and to make secure those who are free from such things. Hee teacheth them to make desperate conclusions against themselues, such as was that of Dauid, when he said, [c] He was cast out of Gods sight. Now this Doctrine may assure, that they haue no iust cause or matter of discouragement. Their case cannot in this kind bee so violent or extreme, but they shall find some of those which haue beene deare vnto God, to haue drunke of the same cup, and to haue as great terrors laine vpon them as euer they had any; euen then when they conceiue theirs to bee moſt extreme. Neuer may a man with ſuch boldneſſe and confidence become a Petitioner vnto God for comfort, as when he feeleth himſelfe moſt deiected. It is one of Gods Titles of honor, [f] To be the God which comforteth the abiect. The Garment of gladneſſe, belongs by a kinde of right (in reſpect of Gods promiſe) to thoſe which haue beene exerciſed with the ſpirit of heauineſſe in the greateſt [g] meaſure. And thus is that now performed, which I began to deliuer in the laſt Sermon, touching the end of Dauids ſuite, To heare of ioy, that the bones which thou haſt broken may reioyce. Albeit hee ſaw now a great difference betwixt the practice of ſinne, and the conſequent of ſinne: the one being very pleaſing, the other very piercing; yet in this hee was happy, euen in the midſt of this anguiſh, he was neuer ſo capable of true reioycing, and in this Requeſt hee could neuer come vnto God with ſo great aſſurance to be heard. Thus of this Verſe: the ninth followeth,

f 2. Cor. 7. 6.

g Iſa. 61. 3.

Hide thy face from my ſinnes, and put away all mine iniquities. Wee ſhall find in this Verſe that to be true, which I once ſaid in the parting of this Pſalme into ſeuerall branches, viz. that Dauid inſiſts more then once vpon one and the ſame generall ſuite. There is a due and iuſt method, I confeſſe, obſerued in this Pſalme: but yet ſo, as that one ſpeciall requeſt is here and there inſerted often: according as here now wee haue an inſtance. Pardon of ſinne, was the thing, with the crauing whereof Dauid began. Hee renued the ſame againe, Verſ. 7. And hee is now at it againe the third time in this Verſe. Wee may briefly obſerue thence, before wee come to the examination of the particular words of the Verſe,

The ſecond Doctrine.

That albeit the committing of a great ſinne bee a matter ſoone done, yet the obtayning of pardon for it after it is paſt, is no eaſie ſuite. DAVID had quickly contracted and brought vpon himſelfe the guilt of a foule offence; that was done (as one would ſay) with the turning of an hand; but ſee now! he cannot ſo ſoone get comfort in the aſſurance of forgiueneſſe. His breaking out ſo often into this kinde of requeſt, Haue mercy vpon me, Waſh me thoroughly, Purge me, Hide thy face from my ſinnes, Put away all mine Iniquities, doth plainely teſtifie that hee had ſomewhat to doe, before hee could haue any ſettlement in his ſoule that God was pacified. The Storie ſaith of Manaſſeh, that indeed God was intreated of him, and heard his prayer: but it coſt him deare ere hee came to that: ſee and obſerue how the Text reports it: [h] Hee prayed to the Lord his God, and humbled himſelfe greatly, and hee prayed vnto him. It is no vaine repetition, He prayed vnto the Lord his God, and againe, He prayed vnto him. It is purpoſely put to ſhew, that Manaſſeh was faine to ply the Lord with ſuite after ſuite, and to humble himſelfe extraordinarily, before he could come to that ſenſible recouery of the ſauour and goodneſſe of God which hee deſired. Thinke wee that Peters comfort was ſo ſoone wrought as his fall? There was no great time to bring him to the firſt Denyall of his Maſter; the firſt was ſuddenly followed with the ſecond, and the ſecond as ſoone accompanyed with the third.

h 2. Chron. 33. 12, 13.

But

But there was more went to his fetching againe. Who can thinke with reaſon, that his fit of weeping was no longer then his falling? and was it not our Sauiours purpoſe to touch him againe after for it, and that to the quicke, when he preſſed him ſo about the point, of louing him three [i] times: ſeeming, by asking him the ſame thing ſo often, as though hee made ſome doubt of his ſoundneſſe and ſinceritie in that particular? His meaning was, to bring his heart to a bleeding afreſh for his threefold denyall, by vrging him to a treble proteſtation of his loue. Wee haue had occaſion now to note the place often of a wounded ſpirit. It ſhewes that a great ſinne makes a great wound. And who knowes not that a wound may be giuen in a thought of time, which yet may be in healing aboue a yeere? One ſtroke may cauſe it, but many ſtirrings and dreſſings cannot cure it. Dauid here compares the effect of ſinne, when the conſcience is made ſenſible of it, to the breaking of the bones. A bone is ſooner broken, then the beſt Surgeon in the world can make it whole againe. Well is ſinne compared vnto debt: Forgiue vs our debts, ſay the words of the Lords [k] Prayer. It is a matter ſoone done to come in debt, but it is not ſo eaſie a ſeruice to diſcharge it. A man may engage himſelfe further in an houre, then he can free himſelfe from while he liues. It is true, that [l] God is readie to forgiue, and is eaſie to be intreated; but yet in his Wiſedome he will make euen thoſe, to whom he intends the greateſt fauour, wait attendance, ſo that [m] they ſhall be euen weary with crying, and their eyes ſhall faile with expectation. Hee will teach them by this meanes to beware how they prouoke him, they ſhall know what ſinne is, and what the price, and worth of his fauour is, before they come to full aſſurance of diſcharge. God herein deales ſomewhat like to Dauids carriage towards Abſalom: his heart was towards him when hee had offended him, and Ioab, who vndertooke to mediate for him in the time of his baniſhment, found it no difficult ſuite to obtayne fauour for him. But, ſaith DAVID, [n] when he comes into the Land, let him turne to his owne houſe, and not ſee my face. No doubt, Dauid did it to make Abſalom the more ſenſible of his fault, when hee ſhould perceiue the King his father was not eaſily wonne to let him come to his preſence. Thus God cauſeth his, whom he yet loues in Chriſt ſo dearely, that they cannot finally bee caſt off, to come as Petitioners againe and againe: they put vp ſuite after ſuite, yet in their owne feeling they are neuer the neerer. Sometimes a little comfort they haue, and behold, vpon a ſudden it is gone: they ſeeme at a time to behold Gods gracious Countenance, anon they are depriued of it, and the anguiſh of their ſoules, which began ſomewhat to aſſwage and to be abated, doth increaſe. Why is this? God will teach them what it is ſo to ſinne againſt him, ſo to abuſe his mercy, ſo to giue way to their corruption, ſo to dally with the baits of euill, and to play with the deceitfulneſſe of ſinne. Thus, I ſay, the guilt of ſinne is ſooner contracted, then remoued. Dauid got not that hee would at the firſt asking, no, nor yet at the ſecond. It was well for him, if this third time did preuaile.

1. Vse. To take away the presumptuous conceit which men haue, who imagine that albeit they spend their dayes in the pleasures of sinne, and commit vngodlinesse euen with greedinesse, yet in the latter end of their dayes, such a word as Lord haue mercy vpon me, shall discharge them: Oh, the mercy of God is in their conceit the easiest thing to bee had of any: they may get Gods good will with a trice; it is but aske, and it is Note. by and by obtained. You that so thinke, I pray you learne by this present example not to be deceiued. It cost Dauid many a deepe sigh, many an earnest and importunate request, before hee could see any other but Gods angry face against him for his fault. Could there bee a more piercing prayer, a more feeling and passionate suite, then that which is in the two first Verses of this Psalme? and yet Dauid as a man not satisfied, not speeding as hee would, sets to the same afresh in the seuenth Verse, and againe in this Verse. Surely, Dauid, though he were not out of hope, yet hee was not come to that full comfort and feeling that hee laboured for. And shalt thou thinke to speede better then Dauid did, and to haue a more quicke accesse to the Throne of grace then hee had? What hast thou done, that being a presumptuous offender all thy time, art resolued with thy selfe to trust to a few words in thy latter end, thou shouldst immediately be heard; when as Dauid, a man after Gods owne heart, and o 1. King. 15. 5. of whom the Scripture giues this Testimonie, o that hee turned from nothing that God commanded him all the daies of his life, saue only the matter of VRIAH: when as hee, I say, was glad to intreate so often, and to begge so earnestly, and hee could not by and by get that which hee desip Gal. 6. 7. red? p Bee not deceiued, God is not mocked: and what is this but a meere mocking of God, to thinke thou mayest cast his Word behinde thee, and walke in the waies of thine owne heart all thy time, and yet at last, after a continuall abusing of his mercy as thou list, winne him with a few words, and make him thy friend by a formall shew of sorrowing for sinne, when thou art out of hope to liue any longer in the world to commit sinne? Thou hast rather cause to feare that iudgement which is q Isa. 1. 15. threatned, q When you shall stretch your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; and though you make many prayers, I will not heare. There is a time r Ier. 15. 1. in which God will not be found, and wherein r though MOSES and SAMVEL should stand vp before him to intreat, yet his affection will not bee wonne. Beware of sinning in this kind. I marke the folly of some, when in their humour they haue sworne a great oath, of which there was no great vse, but might in euery respect much better haue beene spared: you shall haue them smite their brest, and lift vp their eyes, with God forgiue mee, I was a beast to sweare so; thus they thinke they haue licked themselues whole, and the worst is past with them for that fault. But (alas) there is more then so to the obtaining of the fauour of God in the forgiuenesse of sinne. If euer God bring vs to repentance, and giue vs feeling of sinne indeede, hee will make vs know it was another manner of thing to sinne against him, then wee thought, and that the guilt of sinne is not shaken off as we supposed.

Secondly,

Secondly, this may bee a ſtay to the children of God, who are humbled before him, and wounded in ſoule for offending him. If it bee thy portion (as it is very poſſible that it may bee, and very probable that it will bee) to humble thy ſelfe often before God for thine offences, and againe and againe to begge grace and pardon, but yet not to haue that ſweet and gracious feeling of it which thou wouldſt, learne by this place not to be diſcouraged: know that euen Dauid was forced to renew the ſame ſuite more then once. Labour to make good vſe of thy being delayed, for humiliation and for increaſing the ſenſe, and griefe, and acknowledgement; but doe not hereupon put thy ſelfe out of hope. Doth God owe thee it of right, by and by to giue thee that comfort which thou craueſt? Nay, what if hee ſhall neuer affoord it thee in that meaſure thou deſireſt, vntill thou art euen readie to goe out of the world? Hath he done thee any wrong? nay, haſt thou not cauſe to magnifie his Mercy towards thee, that yet at laſt hee was pleaſed to reſpect thee? There is not the leaſt drop of heauenly Comfort, but if a man ſhould wait for it as long as he did for helpe, which lay by the Poole of Bethesda, [f] eight and thirty yeeres, nay, his whole life: if it ſhould be ſtretched out to the vtmoſt length that euer any did attayne vnto, it were well worthy his awayting, and he might iuſtly thinke himſelfe as happy, if at the laſt after long looking, and after much intreatie he obtayne it. [t] It is good both to truſt, and to wait for the ſaluation of the Lord. This was to be obſerued out of Dauids frequency in this ſuite. This is now the third time in which he reuiues his mayne Petition, that his ſinne may bee pardoned; neither hath hee done ſo, wee ſhall find him in the ſame tune againe, Verſ. 14. God will teach his by this meanes to know what ſinne is, what his fauour is, what forgiueneſſe is.

2. Vſe.

Note.

f *Ioh.*5.5.

t *Lam.*3.26.

Let vs come to the words of the Verſe. The latter part of this Verſe agreeth in termes with the latter of the firſt Verſe, Putting away of ſinne, or blotting out of iniquities, is made mention of in both places. I ſhewed there, that Dauid did account his ſinnes to bee vpon the Score with God; that they were ſet downe (as it were) vpon a reckoning, and thereupon both there and here. he craued that the Score might be wiped out, the Booke of account croſſed, that he might neuer bee called into queſtion for this euill. Now, in the firſt clauſe, he vſeth a kind of phraſe which he hath not yet vſed, Hide thy face from my ſinnes: or, as TREMELIVS, Hide thine angrie face. His deſire is, that the Lord would looke no more in diſpleaſure on his ſins, but that he would ſo diſpoſe of them in mercy, as that hee may neuer more behold them: as if he had ſaid, I know, O Lord, my ſinne is not hidden from thee, though I in the folly of mine owne heart, thought to haue made all ſafe, that the matter ſhould neuer haue beene ſpyed; yet my wayes were before thine eyes, and thou didſt ponder all my paths, and now by the fruits which I feele in my ſelfe of thy frowning countenance, I am yet more aſſured, that thou tookeſt direct and perfect notice of all particulars. Now, I pray thee, looke no longer on me in diſlike, doe not ſet my euil before thee, nor my grieuous ſin in the ſight of thy countenance.

Thus haue we Dauids meaning in this verſe. The ſubſtance of his requeſt is the ſame which formerly, only the phraſe of ſpeech in the firſt clauſe is ſomewhat varied. He would haue God not to take an angrie and diſpleaſed notice of his ſinnes, but ſo to doe them cleane out of the way, as that they may bee neuer called to account. Let vs examine now what we may get here, which may be reputed peculiar to theſe words; conſidering that concerning Forgiueneſſe of ſinne, the worth of it, and the neceſſitie of it, and the nature of it, hath beene ſpoken before. This firſt,

The third Doctrine.

That the anger and diſpleaſure of Almightie God is exceeding terrible. Wee may gather this out of Dauids ſuit, to haue the Lords angrie and wrathfull, and offended countenance, turned away from his ſinnes, and from him becauſe of his ſinnes. Dauid was in a pitifull taking all this while that he was ſenſible of Gods anger. All the kind lookes of all the men in the world, could not relieue nor comfort him, ſo long as with the eye of his ſoule he ſaw the Lord looke frowningly vpon him. He could haue no reſt and peace in himſelfe, till he had gotten the Lord to lift vp the light of his countenance vpon him, and to cauſe his face to ſhine. O Lord, thou looke ſt wrathfully and refuſe vpon my ſinnes: what ſhall I doe? whither ſhall I goe? either alter thy looke, and behold me graciouſly and kindly in thy Sonne, or elſe I periſh. Thus was Dauid aware of the terribleneſſe of Gods indignation. Me thinkes, Dauids ſuit here was like that of the whole Churches. [u] Turne vs, O God, of our ſaluation, and releaſe thine anger towards vs: wilt thou be angrie with vs for euer? and wilt thou prolong thy wrath from one generation to another? Wilt thou not turne againe and quicken vs, that thy people may reioyce in thee, &c? See what earneſtneſſe the people of God vſed to be diſcharged of Gods anger, and to enioy his kind and louing Countenance. Thou, euen thou art to be feared: [x] and who ſhall ſtand in thy ſight when thou art angry? [y] The earth trembled and quaked, the foundations of the mountains mooued and ſhooke, becauſe he was angrie. See the fruit of Gods anger! [z] If his wrath be kindled but a little, (as our common reading hath it,) it is terrible. It was time for Moſes to call vpon Aaron to make haſte, and goe quickly to make an atonement, when there was [a] wrath gone out from the Lord. It is called [b] Gods fierce wrath, [c] his ſore diſpleaſure. [d] O doe not rebuke in thine anger, ſaid DAVID: he cared not what God did lay vpon him, ſo that it were not in anger. SALOMON ſaith, [e] The wrath of a King is as the roaring of a Lyon: and the roaring of a Lyon is ſo terrible, that when he roareth, [f] who will not be afraid, ſaith the Prophet? If the wrath of an earthly King be ſo full of feare, what ſhall wee thinke of his diſpleaſure, by whom Kings raigne; who is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. Indeed well may the greatneſſe of Gods anger be valued, by the greatneſſe of his mercie. Euerie thing, when it turnes to the contrarie, falleth into a kind of extremitie. What blunter then yron and ſteele in it ſelfe? let it bee once ſharpened, and what is more piercing? Nothing ſo calme as the Sea naturally: when it is once ſtirred, nothing more tempeſtuous. The moſt perfit & palate wine (they ſay) doth make the

the quickeſt Vineger; ſo nothing being ſo mercifull in himſelfe as God is, if he be once prouoked, there is nothing more terrible: g Euen our God is a conſuming fire: h and it is a fearefull thing to fall into his hands. The bitterneſſe of Gods wrath may bee concluded out of our Sauiours agony. It was no little thing which made euen him ſtanding in our roome, i to offer vp prayers and ſupplications with ſtrong crying and teares, to bee ſaued from that which he feared. Maruell wee not that Dauid prayed, that he might haue no more of the euidence of Gods anger, and that he would no longer looke in diſpleaſure on his ſinnes.

To moue vs to be of the ſame minde whereof DAVID was, euen to feare and grieue for Gods diſpleaſure, and neuer to be well in our owne opinion and thoughts, vntill we haue appeaſed and calmed the wrath of God, hauing iuſtly moued the ſame againſt vs by our ſinnes. I remember, how the counſell which is giuen of yeelding obedience vnto Chriſt, ſet vp by God to be the King and Lord of his Church, is edged by this, k Leſt he be angrie: ſo that it ſhould be an eſpeciall motiue to vs to doe this, or to take heed and beware of that, leſt wee ſhould moue the Lord to be offended with vs. We find this to be at this day a verie weake argument to perſwade by: Tel men it is their beſt courſe to looke to themſelues in ſuch and ſuch particulars, leſt the Lord be angrie, alas, it works but little. Say to the ignorant perſon to the Contemner of the Word, to the man which liues in careleſſe and carnall ſecuritie, to the blaſphemer of Gods name, the neglecter of Gods ſeruice, the prophaner of Gods Sabbaths, the vicious perſon, the Riotor, the oppreſſor, the vncharitable man; Oh! take heed, beware how you continue in this courſe; make haſte to be reformed; come out of the ſinnes wherein you haue ſo long continued: otherwiſe, God will bee diſpleaſed, his face will bee againſt you, he will frowne and looke angerly vpon you. Alas, it is a matter not eſteemed, mens hearts are not touched therewith, it is no occaſion to them, eyther to be ſorrie for their former euils, or to reſolue vpon an after-amendment, but they ſit ſtill euen as if they heard it not, though a man doe vrge it on them, in as earneſt and forcible a manner as hee can. This is the miſerable hardneſſe and obſtinacie of our dayes; the hearts of men are ſo frozen vp, and ſuch an hard skin is growne vpon their conſcience, that, that which they ſhould feare moſt, euen it they doe leſt eſteeme. Had wee euer felt that which Dauid did, our Prayer would be as Dauids was, euen that wee might be diſcharged from the Lords anger. Had wee euer taſted of that bitterneſſe which proceedes from his deepe diſpleaſure, and knew what it were to haue him looking fiercely and wrathfully on our ſinnes, wee would neuer let the temples of our head to take any reſt, vntill we had laboured him to atonement, and had gotten ſome good euidence to our ſoules, that he were pacified towards vs in his Son. Vntill we were ſome way reſolued thereof, we would euer be in feare, and ſtil doubting leſt ſome heauie iudgement from heauen ſhould ſeize vpon vs to deſtroy vs. And let vs know this for a certainty, that whoſo neuer was aware and afraid of the ſeueritie of Gods wrath, ſhall shall neuer be acquainted with the sweetnesse of his fauour. He whose thoughts were neuer affected with the terrour of his angrie looke, can neuer bee refreshed with the amiablenesse of his louing countenance. Thus I thought good to note this out of Dauids request here, Hide thy face from my sinnes, &c. Oh! how terrible it was vnto him, that the Lord did still looke sternely on him? Let vs labour from hence to conclude the fearefulnesse of Gods displeasure, and to beware how we prouoke him: [1] The louing kindnesse of the Lord (the Psalmist saith) is better then life. Hell it selfe cannot be worse than the Lords anger, when it is come once to an extremitie. It is an euill signe, when we shall feare the angrie face of a man, a King, a Lord of our estate, a great man which dwelleth by vs, and who (as wee conceiue it) may either preiudice or pleasure vs, but yet shall neuer be troubled about this, that we haue angred the Lord, and haue no certainety of his fauour to vs in his Sonne.

1 *Psal.*63.3.

There remayneth yet another speciall obseruation from this place, to wit, out of the second clause, and thus it is,

The fourth Doctrine.

That the children of God being truely touched with, and for some one or two speciall sinnes, doe thereby take occasion to consider and examine themselues thorowout. I gather this from the manner of Dauids speech here in the latter Clause of this Verse. Hee begges the same thing (as I haue said) in the generall, which he before craued, viz. pardon of sinne; the putting away, the thorow-washing, the clensing, the blotting out, the purging, the turning aside of the Lords angrie face: all these particulars hitherto mentioned in this Psalme, haue reference to that one thing, that hee might bee pardoned. But now whereas in the former verses he spake ordinarily, so as that he might seeme to intend onely the sinnes appertayning to this great Euill of his, whereof Nathan had reproued; yet now he speakes as a man charging himselfe in his owne thoughts with sundrie other things, Hide thy face from my sinnes, and put away all mine iniquities, which to me is an argument he had taken occasion by the awaking of his conscience after this great offence, to suruey himselfe more exactly, so that now he had many more things else, whereof to accuse himselfe, and for which to craue forgiuenesse, then this one with the appurtenances: as if he had said, O Lord, this worke vpon mee by NATHANS ministerie for this hainous Crime, hath moued me to fall into an exact consideration of mine owne estate, and to a diligent viewing of my selfe in the glasse of thy Law; and now the more I looke, the more I find: I see well, that as this sinne hath many more limmes and branches then I supposed, so I my selfe in many other particulars, am iustly chargeable: and therefore I am now a suter to thee, not for the pardon of this sinne onely, but I pray thee to bee gracious vnto mee in the washing out of all mine iniquities. Guiltie I am in many things, let thy mercie reach to the washing, and purging, and remitting of them all. Thus we see how Dauid increased in the vnderstanding of his sinnes, and how good it was for him, that hee had not by and by that assurance and feeling of Gods reconciliation with him him which he craued: for this putting him off in his ſute, made his prayers more feruent, and his ſearch into himſelfe the more exact. In the beginning he tooke occaſion by his great ſinne in act, to conſider the ſinne and ſtayne of his nature. It ſeemeth now by his words [all mine iniquities,] that he was gone a ſtep further, and ſawe yet more and more into himſelfe. Thus is the diſpoſition of a man truely touched, there is no end of his iealouſie and ſuſpition towards himſelfe, when hee is once deepely ſenſible of his owne failing in ſome ſpecial particulars. He deales with himſelfe in this caſe, as a man would doe with a ſeruant whom hee had truſted long, and after finds him in ſome two or three matters of importance to haue much deceyued him, he falls then to examining him againe and againe, hee reneweth his accounts, lookes backe vpon old reckonings, ſearcheth his cheſts, maketh inquirie here and there, where and with whom he had any dealings; he thinkes, If he haue beene falſe to mee in theſe things, why not in ſuch and ſuch things alſo? So he hauing found out the falſhood of his heart, and the power of his corruption in ſome few ſpecialties, begins eft-ſoone to pry further into himſelfe, and to fall to that which [m] is called the ſearching and trying of the wayes. DAVID termeth it (and it is an euidence of his practice in that which I note from him) [n] a conſidering his courſes. Hee now doubts all his carriages, and thinks, Why may I not haue ſinned in this and in that, as well as now in theſe things? This makes that plenty of confeſſion in thoſe that repent truely. A carnall man that ſhould heare what they lay to their owne charge, would thinke them to be euen the worſt of men, becauſe of this their peremptorie dealing with themſelues.

m *Lam.*3.40.

n *Pſal.*119.59.

Let me now in this Vſe commend this to you as a certaine marke of true Repentance. There is a counterfeit repentance, as well as a true. There be ſad and heauie fits, which are like theſe which are cauſed by a wounded conſcience, but yet indeed are no other but fruits of worldly ſorrow, which the Apoſtle ſaith, cauſeth death. There is a great likeneſſe in melancholicke paſſions to a troubled conſcience: but our beſt Diuines with one conſent, doe make this one ſpeciall and maine difference betwixt the one and the other, viz. the melancholicke perſon in his dull fits, hath a kind of trouble about ſinne, but it is only in a confuſed manner, more out of ſome affrighted imagination, then out of any diſtinct and certaine apprehenſion: yea, and ſometimes is more troubled about ſinne, ſo ſuppoſed to bee, then out of one that is ſo indeed. Now the man afflicted in conſcience, his trouble ariſeth out of ſome certaine knowne corruption, and out of a true conceyuing of Gods wrath, and then he ſatisfieth not himſelfe in the generall, but proceeds, as I note in Dauid here, with himſelfe, from poynt to poynt, from one degree to another, till he can come to ſpeake betwixt God and himſelfe of many Iniquities, ſuch as he aduiſedly knowes to be ſinnes, and himſelfe to be guiltie of. Obſerue this then as a ſpeciall matter; If ſinne felt, moue thee to a further triall of thy ſelfe, that thou maieſt ſee more and more into thine owne ſoule, and ſo charge thy ſelfe before God with particulars,

The Vſe.

Note.

culars, this is a token of a true touch; this is a pledge of true Repentance. I see no reason, but I may iustly conclude from this speech, that Dauid diued further and further into himselfe, and was carefull against euery particular time of asking pardon, to find out in himselfe more and more to acknowledge and to craue forgiuenesse for. He spake of Sinne at first, after of Iniquitie; but now hee is come to talke of all his Iniquities; as though the number of his sinnes did muster before him in a greater summe then at the first.

The fourteenth Lecture.

VERS. 10.

Create in mee a cleane heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within mee.

HItherto Dauid hath beene a Suiter to God for forgiuenesse, and for the assurance thereof sealed vp vnto his soule, for the settling of his ioy; and for releeuing of that anguish of soule, into which he was brought by this great offence. Now hee falleth to craue for sanctification, and for settlement in a better course for time to come. This is the effect of this Verse. And inasmuch as this is the matter of the whole Verse, therefore before I come to the particular handling or diuiding thereof, I will note this Doctrine out of the order and coherence: viz.

The first Doctrine. That the true and sincere desire of the soule to haue sinne pardoned, is, and must be accompanyed with crauing and caring to be preserued from the power and seruice of corruption. DAVID is here as earnest to haue his heart purged from the inclination to sinne, as himselfe to bee freed before God from the guilt of sinne. Hee begs of him to shew him that mercy, that Corruption may not hereafter be so strong in his heart, as to ouer-carry him againe either into the same, or the like offence. He is herein a patterne to vs, how to carry and frame our Petitions for forgiuenes: viz. so as that we may shew our selues as desirous to auoid future euils, as to be set free from the condemnation of those which we haue already done. A like disposition vnto this here wee shall find in this Dauid, Psalm. 19. If wee begin at the 11. Verse and so descend, wee shall find how in him, the knowledge of Gods Law had brought forth the knowledge of sinne. For out of his meditation touching the Law, and the worth and excellency thereof, he breaks forth into a confession, Who can vnderstand his faults? with the acknowledgement of his guilt of a numberlesse number of sinnes, he ioyneth a prayer for forgiuenesse, Cleanse me from secret faults. Presently vpon that, followeth a request for the time time to come, [a] Keepe thy seruant also from presumptuous sinnes, &c. See: there his desire to bee kept from following Corruptions, equall to his willingnesse to bee deliuered from the guilt of former euils. This is taught vs in the very mould and course of the Lords Prayer: next to the Petition for Forgiuenesse, is annexed the request for not being led into Temptation: because as they which are in the greatest fauour with God, as hauing obtayned the forgiuenesse of sinne, are most subiect to temptation; so they which haue obtayned the one, must make it their care to be fenced and preserued from the other. There is this mayne reason for this point: In all our desires and indeuours in whatsoeuer wee intend, God, by vertue of the first Commandement, ought to haue the preeminence; his Glorie, his Honor, the doing of his Seruice, the pleasing of Him ought to be preferred before all. Thus must it bee in the matter of sinne: I must hate it more for Gods sake, because by it hee is displeased, then for my owne sake, because I, through it, am indangered. Now, if I shall desire forgiuenesse of by-past euils, not caring to haue my heart so cleansed, as that I may not againe be ouer-carryed, whom doe I herein respect most? God, or my selfe? Surely, my selfe. It is a signe that I loue sinne still well enough; the committing of it I like, onely I am loth to feele the smart that followeth it: whereas, if I did (as I should) desire forgiuenesse of euils done, out of sorrow of heart to haue offended God, and for that especially; then the same reason which moues mee to bee earnest for pardon respectiuely to sinne done, would induce mee to bee as earnest for grace respectiuely to sinne yet to come. Inasmuch as God (to whom especially my eye must be) shall be dishonored by the one as farre forth as by the other: when a man prayes to bee forgiuen for sinne, and not withall to be restrayned from sinne, it is a meere mockerie, it is a token that he aymes onely at his owne libertie, and not at Gods glorie; and that if it were not for the iudgement of sinne, hee would neuer bee much troubled about sinne: so that when the heart is rightly affected, there is suite as well not to sinne, as not to be called to an account of sin. Dauid begged a double clensing, one from the guiltinesse of sinne; another from the filthinesse of sinne: a double discharge, one from the damnation of sinne, another from the dominion of sinne: a double grace, the one a remitting grace, the other a renuing grace. Hee knew Iustification and Sanctification to be vndiuidable; [b] He that confesseth his sinnes, and forsaketh them, he shall haue mercy. He that ioynes with his acknowledgement of what he hath offended in, a setled purpose to renounce and striue against the same, yea, and all Corruptions else, he it is whom God accepts; this is he which shall find fauour with the Lord.

The Vse.

This Doctrine in the Vse vrgeth this vpon vs, that forgiuenesse of sinne is not to bee asked of God, with an intent to embolden our selues vpon the hope of fauour, to make lesse conscience of our wayes, and to giue aduenture vpon any knowne euill so much the more; but it is to be asked, as that it may quicken in vs a care to walke afterwards with the greater circumspection, and with the more desire to keepe our selues vnspotted

Note.

ſpotted of the world. Nay, let vs know this, that wee are hereby to bee iudged of, whether wee pray vnto God for pardon in ſincerity, and ſo are pardoned accordingly; namely, if we ſtand vpon our guard againſt ſuch ſinnes, whereunto the corruption of our nature, helped forward by the cunning and policy of the Deuill, doth incline. If the queſtion bee put to vs, whether our daily and earneſt requeſt bee, that God would forgiue vs our ſinnes; no doubt we will be ready to ſay, and to anſwere boldly, that it is: and we will be very confident in it, that there is not a day paſſeth ouer our heads, in which wee doe not heartily crie God mercy. But how ſhall wee bee tried whether wee doe as we ſay, but by this? whether with our deſires and ſuits for the pardon of ſinnes paſt, we haue a care that we may bee ſtrengthened by grace to preuent ſinnes to come. I pray conſider this. It is a ſpeciall teſtimonie to a mans ſoule, that all the ſinnes which he hath heretofore committed in all his life paſt are vtterly pardoned, and waſhed cleane out in the bloud of Chriſt, if in truth of heart, and in feeling of ſpirit, and in ſinceritie of affection, he couple together theſe two requeſts, Hide thy face from my ſinnes, and, O God create in me a cleane heart. O Lord, forgiue me my former offences; and not ſo only, but inable me by thy ſpirit for hereafter, that I may liue more vprightly, and haue an happy victorie againſt my owne Corruptions. Neither let vs deceiue our ſelues, as wee are apt to doe, in thinking that we thus pray againſt future ſinnes, and that we doe deſire God to preſerue vs from falling into ſinne: but if we make this Requeſt indeed, it will appeare by our conſtant ſtriuing againſt ſinne, and by our watchfulneſſe to preuent ſinne, and to auoid the occaſions of ſinne. He that makes no conſcience of ſinne, hath no forgiueneſſe of ſinne: and hee who in his courſe ſheweth himſelfe fearefull to offend, and wary of euill, as one that had beene once ſtung and bitten by it, that mans ſinnes bee pardoned, that mans ſoule is diſcharged through Chriſt before the Tribunall ſeate of God. I would wee would not forget this. Doth thy Conſcience ſmite thee for ſome groſſe ſinne, and art thou afraid what will become of thee becauſe of it, and wouldeſt thou faine be deliuered from it? Behold, we haue an Aduocate with the Father, Ieſus Chriſt, &c. goe to God in humility of ſoule, and ſorrow of heart, and deſire him to purge thee with the Hyſſope dipped in his bloud; but beware of dallying with him, bee ſure thy reſolution bee as ſtrong againſt ſinne to come, as thy deſire is feruent to be releaſed of that which is paſt, or elſe be aſſured thy prayer for pardon is in vaine. By a kind of naturall inſtinct, a man may haue an earneſtneſſe of deſire to be releaſed from the guilt of ſome great ſinne with which he is intangled; but it is grace when one ſo deſires to be freed from a former fault, as that hee may bee vpheld by the power of God from any the like euer after. Chriſt offereth himſelfe ſo to diſcharge from ſinne, as that wee ſhould not hencefoorth liue in the ſeruice of ſinne. Euer then be ſure when thou commeſt to treat with God in the matter of ſinne, to caſt the eye of thy minde two wayes; vpon the time paſt, and vpon the time to come; vpon ſinnes which thou haſt

Note.

beene

beene ouer-carryed by, and vpon ſinnes which thou maiſt fall into: and in crauing fauour for the one, craue alſo ſtrength againſt the other. Thy ſincere & heartie deſire for the latter, is the beſt euidence thou canſt haue of a grant in the former; and the former is but hypocriſie, when the latter is forgot. Sanctification is the ſureſt pledge of Iuſtification: and the deſire to haue a cleane heart, the moſt certayne teſtimonie of an acquitted heart. My ſaying, when I haue done amiſſe, I crie God mercy, ſhall not ſerue my turne, if my heart be not bent to offend no more. This was to be obſerued hence, that Dauid, after his importunitie for pardon, falleth now to bee Petitioner for a better heart, and that his ſpirit may bee confirmed in good for the time to come. It ſeemeth that hee had well profited in the ſchoole of a wounded conſcience, that he was ſo fayne to haue his heart cleanſed and purged from Corruptions.

The Verſe deuided.

I come now to the words of the Verſe. I will deuide the Verſe, according as it is apt and ready to deuide it ſelfe, into two Clauſes, ayming in common at the ſame thing, but yet as ſhall appeare in handling, with ſome difference of matter, giuing iuſt cauſe to take view of both apart. The firſt, Create in me a cleane heart, O God. Here wee are to obſerue; firſt, The matter ſpecially asked, A cleane heart to be created. Secondly, The partie of whom it is asked, (O God.) In the former, I am firſt to open the three mayne and principall words; firſt, Heart: ſecondly, Cleane heart: thirdly, Create: theſe three expounded, will make way to that matter of inſtruction which the place affords.

Heart, what it meanes.

Firſt, For the word Heart, thereby is not here meant that fleſhy part of the body, which we commonly ſo call, though ſo the word be ſometimes taken in Scripture; as when it is ſaid of Iehoram, that the arrow which Iehu ſhot at him, [c] went thorow his heart: But by it in this place we muſt conceiue, that which ſome learned call the Heart of the heart, euen the ſoule which keeps its chiefe reſidence in the heart.

c 2. King. 9. 24.

Cleane heart, what.

Secondly, For Cleane: By it is intended a purging from Corruption. By cleane, Verſ. 7. was meant freedome from the guilt of ſinne; by it here, freedome from the filth thereof.

Create, what it ſignifieth.

Thirdly, Touching the word Create: In ſtrait ſpeaking, it betokeneth the making of a thing of nought: ſo, that to Create a cleane heart, is properly to begin in a mans ſoule, a worke of holineſſe and ſanctification yet vnwrought. Which although it bee the true meaning of the words, yet we muſt not ſo conceiue of them, as if there had neuer yet beene any worke of grace in DAVIDS heart, no manner of inward cleanenеſſe: far be it from vs ſo to thinke. It was a fruit and a teſtimonie of inward cleanenеſſe, that Dauid did here pray to obtayne it: a thing which hee could neuer haue done, had he not beene in part cleanſed. Alwayes the ſincere deſire of any ſpirituall good, is an argument that there are already ſome beginnings of that good. But thus wee muſt vnderſtand it, that Dauid here ſpeaks according to his preſent feeling. This great ſinne of his, had ſo (as hee thought) killed and quenched all goodneſſe in him, that hee ſpeaks as one, conceiuing himſelfe to be vtterly deſtitute of all, euen the ſmalleſt ſparks of holineſſe. And then beſides, as in other things, the feruency of a mans deſire to haue more, makes him to thinke that which he hath in that kind to be nothing; ſo Dauid being ſtrong in his deſires, to haue that [d] which is called full holineſſe wrought in his heart, accounted that meaſure which he had herein, to bee not worth the ſpeaking of. Thus is the ſenſe. We may yet better vnderſtand it, if we ſuppoſe Dauid thus ſpeaking; O Lord, this my foule ſinne, me thinks it hath made ſuch an vtter ſpoile of all goodneſſe in me, that I muſt now become a ſuiter to thee to make all new: I can ſee nothing but a lumpe, and euen a very world of filthineſſe and corruption in mee: I pray thee caſt my heart into a new mould, and plant in my inward parts ſuch a meaſure of true holineſſe, as that the natiue naughtineſſe of my diſpoſition, may neuer any more breake out into any ſuch foule and ſcandalous enormitie. Thus haue we the full meaning and purpoſe of Dauid in this Clauſe. Now, here I mought ſpeake of the hauocke and ſpoile, which a great ſinne committed makes in a mans ſoule. As indeed, inaſmuch as this Verſe, and the two which follow, doe all ioyntly giue euidence thereof, it ſhall not be amiſſe briefly to ſet downe that concerning this Doctrine, d 2.Cor.7.1.

The ſecond Doctrine.

That the falling of a child of God into ſome great and ſpeciall ſinne, doth robbe him in his owne feeling of all former graces whatſoeuer. This appeares by Dauid in this Verſe, and the two next. Touching the poſſibilitie for a deare child of God to bee ouertaken with ſome foule treſpaſſe according as Dauid, here is a proofe; ſo I handled that point at large in my firſt Sermons vpon this Pſalme. Now, what a change was wrought in Dauid hereby, theſe ſpeeches of his doe make it manifeſt: looking into himſelfe, he ſaw an vtter waſting of all former goodneſſe, he felt no power of godlineſſe, no working of Gods Spirit, no comfort in the aſſurance of Gods fauour, nothing could he perceiue in himſelfe, but corruption and filthineſſe, and the ſame working ſtrongly in him to the drawing him on to a renuing of his ſinne, and to a continuance therein; deadneſſe of heart, dulneſſe of ſpirit, horror of conſcience; himſelfe in ſuch a caſe as if he had not knowne what grace or goodnes meant. Here he prayeth for cleanneſſe of heart, as if he had neuer any: for the renuing of good motions, as if they were now vtterly decayed. He ſeemes after as he were in the way to be vtterly caſt off, and quite depriued of the ſauing graces of the Spirit, and craues for the ioy of ſaluation, as if it were vtterly gone. Thus was this ſin in him like that wild Bore, to which the Pſalme compareth the enemy that had ſpoiled the Church of God, which layeth waſte the [e] Vineyards. Or like that [f] raging raine that leaueth no food. Or as ſome violent fit of ſickneſſe, with which when [g] God doth chaſten man for his Iniquitie, like a Moth he maketh his beautie to conſume. There was a kind of Winter come vpon Dauid, and his ſinne like a boyſtrous and a biting wind, had withered and blaſted the former flouriſhing of Gods graces in him. Hee himſelfe when hee came to take view of himſelfe, ſaw himſelfe ſo ſtript, and ſo diſrobed, that as a man that was to beginne all againe, hee ſueth for holineſſe, and comfort, and

and the like, to bee euen now as it were afresh planted in him. And as concerning this particular request, it doth iustifie that which is taught by Diuines concerning sinne, viz. that in an euill committed there are foure things: First, the Fault, whereby Gods Law being broken, hee is offended. Secondly, The Guilt, through which the offender is (as it were) bound ouer to punishment. Thirdly, The punishment it selfe in Gods Iustice appertaining to it. Fourthly, A certaine staine or blot left behind in the offender, by which his naturall corruption being stirred vp and wrought vpon, hee is become the more apt and prone, either to the same offence, or to some other. Thus was it now in Dauid: and thus was that staine left behind by that great sinne, like that slime which the Snaile leaues when it creepes. Thus had it, I may so speake, mudded his heart, and made his corruption worke more strongly in him, so that hee felt himselfe more apt and inclineable to commit such a sinne then hee was before: like a dropsie-man, who the more hee drinks, the more he desires to drinke. Dauid was so sensible of a kind of positiue and working filthinesse within him, which the desire of his soule was might be remoued. The most fitting example which I can remember in all the Scripture, for the iustification of this truth, is that of Samson. The storie is well knowne: how hee was intangled with the loue of Dalilah, who being hired by the Philistims, neuer left importuning him, and working vpon him, vntill shee had wonne him to let her know wherein his great strength lay: when he had told her, and she had made vse thereof, sending for a man to shaue off the locks of his head, at his awaking he arose vp, and went out, thinking to doe as in former times, not being aware whereinto hee had cast himselfe by this sinne: like a man whose Ware-house being robbed by night, knoweth not what hee hath lost, vntill the light of the day discouer it. But the Philistims his enemies come vpon him, and he thought to haue resisted them, as in times past; then he found an alteration, and that the graces which hee had inioyed were feebled, darkened, and euen drowned in him, as if he had lost them altogether. Wee may see in Dauid and him too, what a wofull estate men bring themselues, by sinning against God. Salomon by his fall, being the wisest among the Sonnes of men, brought himselfe to a kinde of sottishnesse. Little would any man haue thought, that one of his extraordinarie gifts, and of his knowledge in heauenly things, and who had with such speciall wisedome spoken for others instruction, touching the subtiltie of the sinne of wantonnesse, how a man not warie of it, is led by it like an Oxe to the slaughter, and as a Foole to the Stocks for correction, should yet bee so farre intangled and so besotted that way, as that to please them with whose loue hee was so insnared, his heart should turne after other gods, and he should worke wickednesse in the sight of the Lord, which yet we read he did: and so much did he dishonour himselfe, and diuest himselfe of all his admirable gifts by this course, that albeit there may be good probable arguments of his recouery, yet it is so left in Scripture, as a matter not without some question altogether. It may very very well be, that he neuer attayned againe to that measure of spirituall worth from which he fell, nor to haue that honour and esteeme in the hearts of Gods people, which he sometimes had. Shall we thinke that Peter when he had denyed his Master, wept only for the offence simply, and not also for the change he found in himselfe, the graces of God being weakened and shaken in him by this fall? Thus, to shew to what exigents euen the children of God doe bring themselues, by giuing way to their owne affections. A great sinne puts all out of order, and is like a pestilent burning Feuer which distempereth the whole body, and makes all a mans former health and strength, all his vigour and stomacke, and whatsoeuer else doth accompanie a sound estate, as if it had neuer beene.

The Vse. To warne all that feare God, to beware how they suffer themselues by their owne vnbrideled disposition, to bee carried away into any great offences. The entrance into an euill is pleasant and intising, it comes creeping and with great shew of submission, and with many faire and subtill promises to be admitted; Oh, it will remaine but a while, it will not be ordinarie, it will giue place when you will, and that you bee disposed to remoue it by repentance. But if it bee once let in, and giuen way to, it playeth the Tyrant, and like some treacherous enemie, who in the besieging of a Towne, promiseth the inhabitants that vpon their yeelding, hee will giue them their liues and goods, and desires no more but to be master of the place; but when he is once got in, makes spoile of all, giues leaue to his Souldiers to take their pleasures, and commands the slaughter of all that may be found: so it, notwithstanding the fawning and crouching thereof that it may be receiued, and the promising to bee ruled as the committer will, yet when it hath obtained entrance, it layeth about, and puts downe godlinesse from the power and authoritie that it had, and sets vp it owne banner as a signe of victorie. I see no reason in the world, but that I may say this touching Dauid, that while he was consulting with himselfe vpon the sight of Bathshebah, about the fact after committed (for it is against all sense, to thinke that hee fell to it without some discourse and parley with himselfe about it) hee gathered together many particulars that might embolden him to aduenture: Haply thus; It should bee but once, and that could not bee very dangerous; and no sooner would he haue done, but he would repent and bee humbled for it: no doubt he should be able to recouer againe, without any great hazzard to his soule: one fact hee might hope should not so much weaken the gifts and graces that were in him. Thus was Dauid like a man giuen to his appetite, who being charged by his Physician in any case to beware of such and such meates, yet when he seeth it, cannot temper himselfe from it; Oh, it shall be but a draught, or a morsell, and a little will doe but a little harme; and if it be a meate like to ouercharge the stomacke, perhaps it is hoped that a little Aqua vitæ, or a cup of Sacke taken after it shall helpe all. But (alas) poore Dauid, when hee had once yeelded to his owne inchaunted and beguiled heart, to taste of this forbidden fruit, he

he felt now the ſurfet thereupon to be ſo extreme, that hee was almoſt brought to a kinde of hopeleſneſſe of recouerie. Nothing now ſaw hee in his heart but corruption, and a ſtrong bent to that ſame vngodlineſſe; his motions were vnchaſte, his deſires vicious, his ſpirit dead in regard of that ſtate which was wont to bee; no comfort to thinke on God, no aſſurance of ſaluation, but a kind of an affrighting horror, in ſtead of that ſweet and gracious comfort which ſometimes hee did inioy. Oh, that we would learne by this example to beware of relapſe, to take heed of falling into knowne euils after grace receiued! It is vnpoſſible for a man to take libertie to himſelfe to liue after the fleſh, though as hee fooliſhly thinks, but in ſome one particular, and that but ſparingly neither, and yet to keepe the Lord ſtill cloſe with him, ſtill to retayne his zeale, his ioy, his comfort in Gods promiſes. No, no, this begets an euill conſcience, cold comfort, few, and thoſe faint prayers, leſſe fellowſhip with God in our ſuites, no aſſurance of ſaluation: yea, which is worſt of all, ſometimes there is cauſed hereby ſuch a ſtupefaction and benummednesſe, that theſe and the working of them being abated, yet they bee not miſſed, but the matter is borne out without complayning: and to that wo ſometimes is one brought by this meanes, that there is ſuch a ſtrange change in him, that when as in the dayes wherein Gods Spirit was liuely in him and his conſcience working, hee would haue beene grieued for the decay of the leaſt grace, now the want of a great deale neuer troubleth him. Doubtleſſe, ſome ſuch kind of ſenſleſneſſe was growne vpon Dauid, vntill Nathan rowzed him, ſo that hee was not ſenſible of his owne ſpirituall loſſes by this raging ſinne: but now that he was awaked, he ſaw how it was, and he began to make an Inuentorie of particulars; and happy was hee in this in the midſt of all his other miſeries, that hee was now come to ſee where hee was, and whereto hee was come. This brought him vpon his knees, and wrung out theſe feeling prayers from him; Oh cleanſe my heart: Renew my Spirit: Caſt me not away from thy preſence: Take not thy holy Spirit from me: Reſtore to me the ioy of thy ſaluation: Stabliſh me with thy free Spirit. All this is ſtill ſpoken, to let vs vnderſtand, how dangerous a thing it is to turne the graces of God into wantonneſſe, and to dally ſo long with the enticements to knowne euils, till like the fiſh after long playing with the bait, wee bee caught with the hooke, and then loſe wee know not what, till wee are brought to feele it to our ſmart. Remember by this place, that ſinne playeth Rex where it comes: we muſt not thinke, it is no more but to doe it, and when the act is paſt, the euill is gone. It is like an vnruly ſwaggering gheſt, who leaues behind him in his lodging the remembrance of his diſorder, when hee is departed: ſo doth a great ſinne, ſuch as Dauids here, leaue a noyſome ſauour after it, a filthy ſlime behind, which is not eaſily voided, is not ſoone removed. A man neuer yeelds to his owne corrupt diſpoſition for the committing of any ſuch euill, but hee is ordinarily more willing to the ſecond act then to the firſt; ſo ſubtill is the Deuill to make roome for himſelfe, when hee hath once got in his claw. This was neceſſarily

Note.

to be obſerued from hence, that Dauid, a man not vnſanctified, a man not vtterly depriued of Gods Spirit, a man not caſt out of the fauour of God; yet prayeth here for holineſſe, as if hee had none; for good motions, as if all of that kind were dead within him; for the ioy of ſaluation, as if he felt no comfort. Oh! ſee the ſpoyle that followeth a mans yeelding to a knowne ſin after grace receiued, though it be but once. Be wiſe, neuer to truſt ſinne, though in ſeeking to win thee to it, it ſeemeth neuer ſo reaſonable. The more grace any man hath receiued, the more hurt he receiues by a great ſinne: according as if a ſwine, or a beaſt of waſte, breake into a field of goodly corne, or into a fine and flouriſhing Garden, it makes more ſpoyle by farre, then if it get into a barren paſture.

I proceed, and in proceeding I find much matter to offer it ſelfe vnto mee, and euen as it were to preſſe vpon me. But I will order ſuch particulars, as I thought once to haue handled apart as ſeuerall Doctrines, ſo as that I will reduce them all to one head, thus;

The third Doctrine.

That a cleane heart is a Iewell of great price, and eſpecially to be deſired and ſought by euerie Chriſtian. What a cleane heart is, I haue acquainted you; a heart freed and purified from Corruption, ſo as that though Corruption remaines, yet it is ſubdued, it is not delighted in, it is not cheriſhed, it preuayleth not to the carrying of a man away to the ordinarie practice of apparant Euils. This is a cleane heart, this was the heart which DAVID prayed for. His praying for it, argueth it to be a matter of ſome ſpeciall worth. His preſent caſe had made him to know the excellencie of it now more then euer. And then againe, we are bound by his example, both to eſteeme it, and to labour for it: If it were Dauids dutie to indeuor it, why ſhould we thinke him more to be bound in this, then we our ſelues are? So that this, that I haue named, cannot with any colour of reaſon be denyed to be the Doctrine of this place. Now giue me leaue to ſhew the truth thereof yet a little further. The ſaying is well knowne; k My Sonne (ſaith God) giue me thy heart. Shall we denie God in this? Hath he not beſt right vnto the heart, that made the ſame? Now, if we ſhall giue him our heart, what maner of heart ſhall it be? God is light, and puritie, and perfection it ſelfe, an vncleane heart he cannot delight in: and what is more impure or vnclean in it ſelfe then mans heart? l It is wicked aboue all things. m The imaginations of it are onely euill continually. n The thoughts of it are an abomination to God. o It is defiled. p Out of it come euill thoughts, murthers, adulteries, fornications, theſts, &c. Such a heart is not fit to be preſented vnto God. they which are the Israel of God, euen the pure in heart? there is the marke. Who shall ascend into the Mountayne of the Lord, (that is) who shall be a true member of Gods Church on earth, and remayne and dwel for euer with him in Heauen? Hee makes answere, [x] Euen hee that hath innocent hands, and a cleane heart. [y] Blessed are the pure in heart: they shall behold his louing Countenance here reconciled to them in Christ, and enioy hereafter that presence of his, in which is fulnesse of ioy. Then thirdly, the heart of a man is the Fountayne of all his actions; [z] Thereout commeth life. All working deriues its beginning thence. Now in reason the Fountayne must be sweet, before the water can be wholesome: The Tree good, before the fruit sauourie; according to our Sauiours [a] Rule: There must be first a renued heart, before there can bee a reformed life. Fourthly, the Lord measureth all our actions by our hearts. The most glorious, and among men not onely vncontrollable, but commendable action, is hatefull before God, if the heart be naught. What did the Lord esteeme the [b] Pharises and Scribes, who did onely cleanse the vtter side of the Cup and of the Platter, but within they are full of bribery and excesse? and are therefore iustly by our Sauiour compared [c] to whited Tombs, which notwithstanding they appeare beautifull outwardly to the eye: yet are within full of dead bones and filthines. Therefore in all things, howsoeuer men looke no further then the outward appearance, yet God [d] beholds the heart. Lastly, albeit a man begin in a commendable course, and giue therein good hope to others, that he is in a good way; yet if the heart be not as it should be, there can be no continuance, there will be a falling backe againe to the old wont. It is herein as with the Tree whereof [e] Iob, of which though the body be cut downe, yet the roote remayning in the ground, it will sprout by the sent of water, it will bud and bring forth boughes like a plant. And hereof wee haue a pregnant example in some of the old Israelites spoken of, [f] When God slue them, they sought him early. This was well, was it not? Yes, as farre as man could iudge it was excellent; yet the Spirit of God addes immediately, They flattered him with their mouth, and dissembled with him with their tongue: and whence came that? see Vers. 37. Their heart was not vpright with him. This made them [g] to turne like a deceitfull bow. Thus I hope, now it is plaine and manifest vnto vs, that a cleane heart is a precious pearle; and worthy by all meanes to be prayed for, and laboured after. DAVID thought so, and so must we. His thoughts and courses are discouered to vs for example: God requires it, and he enioynes no base things, neither is it fit for vs to deny him what he craues. It is that which only makes capable of all both present and future spirituall blessings. It is that, without which none of our actions can be good; wee are Hypocrites in our best courses if it wants: we can neuer perseuere in any honest way, if we be not so furnished. This is the summe of my proofe for this Doctrine.

The Vse.

You will easily conceiue (I suppose) to what vse you must put this Doctrine. For, wherefore should I commend vnto you a cleane heart, by the termes of a precious Iewell? or why should I goe about to proue it it to be worthy the desire of euery Christian, but to winne and to perswade all you which heare me, with the same feeling (if it be possible) and with the same feruency, to make continually the same suite which Dauid here did, Create (O God) in me a cleane heart. Saint Paul saith, Holinesse is a thing, therefore be followed, because without it no man [h] shall euer see God. [i] God hath called vs with an holy calling: and, [k] redeemed vs by Christ, that we should serue him in holinesse before him all our dayes. Howsoeuer the world makes a iest of holinesse, yet vntill wee may bee truely called like the Hebrewes, [l] Holy Brethren, wee can haue no assured hope of being saued. All Gods Promises doe euen vrge it vpon vs, that wee should striue to [m] grow vp into full holinesse. Now, if we haue any desire indeed to be holy, and are as willing to be sanctified, as to be iustified; here is the Rule, to begin first with our hearts. Let the life of Corruption, which is naturally in our hearts, be choked, the fruit of sin will quickly decay and languish in our liues: Otherwise, though it may for a time seeme to be quelled, yet it will at last breake out againe; according as the hypocrisie of Simon Magus soone bewrayed it selfe, because his heart (notwithstanding the faireness of his profession) was not right in the sight of God.

Touching a cleane heart more at large.

To perfit this Vse, I will shew briefly: First, How and whence a cleane heart must be expected. Secondly, How it is wrought. Thirdly, How it is discerned. The former of these might bee handled by it selfe apart, considering how I made it a branch of this first Clause. But for shortnesse sake I will comprehend it vnder this, yet so, as that nothing necessarily appertayning to it, shall be let slip. Thus then first, a cleane heart is to be craued of God; so here DAVID, O God, acknowledging it to be his worke wholly: and euen a kind of Creation, which is Gods peculiar, whereupon a regenerate man is termed a [n] new Creature: [o] Gods workemanship: It is [p] the God of peace which sanctifieth. Hee assumeth it to him to [q] put a new spirit within the bowels. It is vnpossible that mans heart, being naturally such a sinke as it is, should cleanse it selfe. Out of his filthinesse, how can there come any such [r] cleanenesse? Indeed wee are willed to make [s] a new heart, and a new spirit: from whence some would conclude some ableness in man for this worke: but such places doe rather shew what a man should doe, then what he can doe; and tend to the making of him sensible of his owne vnableness; which when he hath found vpon triall, he may be moued to seeke to him, [t] who worketh both to will and to doe. So then if we would haue cleane hearts, we must [u] lift vp our eyes to him that dwelleth in the heauens.

Secondly, Hee works this by meanes. The outward meanes is the [x] Word: [y] Sanctifie them with thy Truth, thy Word is Truth. The Commandement of God is said to be pure, and the Religion grounded thereon [z] is cleane: not only in respect of it selfe in it selfe, as being without mixture of any the least falshood or corruption, but in regard of the efficacy thereof; it makes cleane, it causeth to be pure: How shall a man cleanse, &c? (so is the meaning of the word) [a] in taking heed according to the Word.

The inward meanes, the Spirit of God; by which the Word is made powerfull, and applyed to the cleansing of the inward: so PAVL, [b] You were thus and thus polluted and defiled, with those abominable and filthy sinnes; but now are yee washed and sanctified in the Name of the Lord Iesus, and by the Spirit of our God. This Spirit working with the Word, and by the Word, begets Faith; and Faith hath a speciall gift to [c] purifie the heart.

Marks of a cleane heart.

Thirdly, How is the cleanenesse of the heart discerned. Here I could name many particulars: I will commend to your consideration these especially. First, A sincere and an heartie desire of inward cleanenesse, both to haue it, and to increase in it. It is a sure rule in Religion and Diuinitie, that the desire of any grace, is a pledge of the beginnings thereof; because God works that in vs which he will bestow vpon vs, by mouing our hearts and soules to long after it, and to become earnest suters vnto him for it. Then againe, when a man desires inward cleanenesse, and that his soule may be purged from corruption; it is a token that he feeles corruption to be in him, that he is wearie of it, that he abhorres it, that it is irkesome to him: and none of those things can be without speciall grace. It was an happy turne for Dauid, that his heart was moued to pray thus for a cleane heart. No Swine takes more delight to wallow in the myre, then euery man naturally doth in the filth of sinne. Therefore nature is changed, and grace is begun, when cleanenesse is loued, and an increasing in it is desired. Neuer be gladder of any thing, then when out of the sense and dislike of thine owne corrupted nature, thou canst pray heartily for a cleane heart. The second marke is that which Iames notes as a part of pure Religion, the care [d] to keepe ones selfe vnspotted of the world. This is that cleanenesse of the hands, coupled [e] with the cleanenesse of the heart. A man striues out of Conscience towards God, to [f] keepe himselfe, &c. and walketh in the world as a cleanely neat man doth in a durty street, warily and with choosing his steps, and with gathering vp his clothes: so hee is loth to bee stayned and blotted with the grosse euils of the times; hee considereth his wayes, and maketh strait steps to his feet, and is still in feare, and looking vp vnto God to begge of him to order his goings, and is curious to auoid euen the least spot; this is an excellent signe. Such an one may now and then be sprinkled; as the person I spake of, notwithstanding all his care, cannot but receiue some spot, either by his owne or some others trampling, or by the rudenesse and touch of some not so carefull as himselfe; but it grieues him when it so falls out, and he is ashamed of it, he will not be at rest, vntill he hath rubbed and wiped it out by repentance. Marke this: A cleane life must be the Iudge of a cleane heart. That is a cleane life, which is free from willing defilements. Neuer speake of thine heart, how good and vpright it is to God, when thy life is stayned with grosse and willing sinnes. The best of Gods children are now and then to bee dashed as they trauell thorow this oosie and muddy world. But they which can lye downe and wallow in the filth, and take pleasure therein, wo bee to those, they are none of Gods.

VERS. 10.

Renew a right ſpirit within me.

THis is now the ſecond Clauſe of this Verſe. In regard of the generall matter, it agreeth with the former. Dauid doth here (as in it) craue for ſtrength to withſtand corruption, that for the time to come hee may walke better then hee hath done formerly. The ſpeciall matter here to be inquired after, is, what is meant by a right Spirit.

Words opened.

By Spirit, DAVID doth here vnderſtand the diſpoſition and ſtirring of the heart, the motion of the mind. [a] My ſeruant CALEB (ſaid God, after hee had taxed the diſobedience and vntowardneſſe of the greater part of the Iſraelites) had another ſpirit: that is, He was a man of a better diſpoſition, he had a more yeelding, a more tractable and obedient heart. A right Spirit, is a firme, a conſtant, a ſtable Spirit, a heart reſolued and ſettled to pleaſe God, and to be vpright before him. Now, to Renew, we all know, is to refreſh and reuiue a matter, which is perceiued to bee in the way of decaying, and which is now not ſo good, nor ſo abſolute as it hath beene. Thus we may conceiue of Dauids Petition here, as if he had ſaid, O Lord, I find in my ſelfe an exceeding change; it ſeemeth to me that the way of holineſſe is not ſo ſweet, ſo pleaſing, ſo delightfull to me as it hath beene: I doe not ſo affect good things as ſometimes I did; and when I am in a good way, me thinks I am very apt and eaſie to be turned from it: I pray thee to reuiue and quicken thine owne graces in me: vouchſafe that I may againe feele in my ſelfe, that firmeneſſe and ſtedfaſtneſſe of deſire and care to pleaſe thee, which I was wont to feele: and that I may no more bee drawne away by the cunning of the Deuill, and the deceitfulneſſe of ſinne, as I haue lately beene. This is the ſenſe. Let vs conſider of the Doctrines: This is firſt to be obſerued out of the generall ſtate of the words;

a Num. 14. 24.

The firſt Doctrine.

That the graces of God, euen in the beſt, are ſubiect to ſuch a kind of abatement and decreaſe, that they ſtand in need of oft r uing. This truth is here very manifeſt in Dauid. A man in ſpirituall gifts and graces farre exceeding many: nay, we reade of but a few that did come neere him. Now, here wee ſee how directly and plainely it is gatherable from his owne words, that there was a maruailous alteration in him, a great decaying and languiſhing of the working and power of thoſe ſpirituall endowments, with which God had furniſhed him, ſo that he prayeth that he may be vouchſafed a renuing & a re-quickning of that heauenly Life, which was wont in time paſt to be more actiue and ſtirring in him, then

now it was; a plaine euidence of this truth, that there bee abatements ſometimes of holy motions euen in the beſt men. They come ſometimes to that low ebbe, that they ſeeme to be as perſons quite deaded, reſpectiuely to thoſe good duties and godly ſeruices which ſometimes they delighted in. This ſeemeth to haue beene the ſtate of diuers of the Galatians, in whom there was a ſtrange aſſwagement of their firſt zeale, with which they imbraced the Goſpell of ſaluation at firſt; [b] They were remooued vnto another Doctrine, from him that had called them in the grace of Chriſt: and that Paul whom they had once receiued as Chriſt Ieſus, they were apt to eſteeme as little other then an [c] enemie; yea, ſo much they were gone backe, that Paul profeſſed hee was faine to [d] trauaile in birth againe with them: they were falne ſo low, as that all was to begin with them afreſh, as if they had neuer had any true and effectuall ſeaſoning with Religion. Was not here a neede of renuing? All Pauls labour among them was as a matter vtterly loſt, and altogether in vaine: he crieth out vpon them by the name of [e] fooliſh Galatians, and blames them for their not running ſo well ſtill, as they had done at firſt. And yet to the end we might bee aſſured that they were not all Apoſtataes, and Backe-ſliders in extremitie, to whom hee thus ſpeakes, but ſuch as were yet in the ſtate of grace, notwithſtanding their thus declining; hee profeſſeth that he [f] had truſt in them through the Lord: and his gracing them with the name of a [g] Church, ſheweth that he reckoned them ſtill in the number of the Beleeuers. The like may bee gathered touching thoſe of [h] Epheſus; the vrging of them to remember whence they were falne, and to doe their firſt works, is an argument they were much gone backe: and yet with all the commendation giuen them for Labour, Patience, &c. is a token that they were yet ſtill, notwithſtanding this declining eſtate, in the ſtate of grace. Hezekiah was ſo worthy a man, that it is ſaid, that [i] none was like him among all the Kings of Iudah; yet whereto came hee, when [k] God left him to trie him, &c? That of the Apoſtle, [l] in putting TIMOTHY in remembrance to ſtirre vp the gift of God which was in him, which properly ſignifieth (as it were) a blowing vp the fire which is begunne to dimme, and to bee ſmothered with aſhes, is an argument that there is a time (ſometimes) euen in the beſt, in which the graces of God are not ſo liuely, nor ſo working as at other times they were. They to whom Saint Peter writes, though they had pure minds, yet the Apoſtle thought it [m] neceſſary to warne them, and to call things to their remembrance; a thing needleſſe, and a courſe ſuperfluous, if holy and religious perſons were not ſubiect to ſome kinde of decreaſe in holineſſe. Euen the wiſe Virgins, had their ſlumbering and drowzie fits [n] too. What a dull kinde of ſpirit ſeized vpon the Apoſtles, when our Sauiour taking them with him at the time wherein hee fell into his ſpirituall agonie, the night before his ſuffering; though hee told them that his purpoſe was to pray, and that his ſoule was very heauie euen vnto death, and therefore would haue them tarry and watch with him; yet the firſt and the ſecond time he found them aſleepe, as men without life life and ſpirit, without care for him, or apprehenſion of that dutie which was owing from them to him. Thus is the ſtate of a Chriſtian, as the ſtate of a man, with great care, and much Phiſicke, recouered from ſome grieuous ſickneſſe, by which hee was brought to the very mouth of the pit, and to the dore of death; who yet after, by ſome diſtemper commeth to bee as weake againe as hee was at firſt, and to take his bed, and there to bee in his former fits, and to ſtand in as great neede of Phiſicke, as before; his ſtomacke is gone, his powers of nature vtterly enfeebled, and his caſe ſuch, as cauſeth euen a kinde of hopeleſneſſe in himſelfe and his friends, to regaine any more his wonted ſtrength: hee is vp and downe, this day ſomewhat acheered, all as bad to morrow, and in euery mans opinion, more likely to die then to recouer. Or as a man at Sea, who hauing eſcaped a grieuous ſtorme, and being come within ſight of Land, yea and euen to the mouth of the Harbour, is by ſome ſodaine tempeſt carried backe into the Maine, and there in a farre greater danger then before: ſuch are the manifold dangers, that befall euen the beſt Chriſtians. The graces which they haue receiued, haue their Winters, in which they ſeeme to be quite dead and withered, as wel as their Springs, in which they be freſh and flouriſhing, to the great reioycing of themſelues, and of thoſe that knew them. Hereupon is that opinion of Diuines, that howſoeuer a man regenerate is, by the mercy of God, priuiledged from any ſuch totall decreaſes, as that there ſhould be in him any vtter decay of holineſſe, ſuch as whereby there ſhould be nothing left: yet hee is ſubiect to ſuch a generall decreaſe, that all the parts of renued holineſſe, and of ſpirituall graces receiued, be diminiſhed; and hee like one in a ſwoune, betwixt whom and one that is quite dead, in outward appearance there is no difference: or as thoſe creatures, who lie all the winter long in holes of the earth, without eating, drinking, ſtirring, or hauing any iot of heate, ſenſe, or life in any of their outward parts, and yet ſtill haue a remnant of life, and of heate, lurking in the heart; which being ſtirred and wrought vpon by the Summers Sunne, cauſeth a reuiuing, and an ability to goe, to runne, to flie, and to performe all naturall actions as before. This cannot happen without the good will and pleaſure of God, by whom as all things are diſpoſed, ſo eſpecially thoſe particulars are ordered, which concerne thoſe vpon whom hee hath beſtowed ſauing grace: and he ſuffers this to fall out, not out of any neglect of them, or out of any impotencie to continue thoſe good things which he hath once giuen to them, but in great wiſedome for their after-good. For in aſmuch as that corruption of nature which remaineth in the beſt, is apt to bring forth ſpirituall pride, becauſe of the aboundance of grace receiued; therefore it pleaſeth God ſometimes (as euen now hath beene ſaid of Hezekiah) to leaue them ſo, and ſo to withdraw the aſſiſtance of his Spirit, that they are ouercome by ſome temptation, and ſo are brought low by the ſight of their owne weakeneſſe, and by the apprehenſion of that vnability which they perceiue in themſelues, to reſiſt the corrupt motions of the fleſh: and thus they are brought to a great great measure of humiliation, in respect both of God, and of their Brethren. Thus that God, who causeth light to come out of darknesse, out of these very decayings raiseth vp a great deale of good to those which are deare vnto him, and maketh them after more strong and firme then they were before. Satan, I know, is the worker in this businesse, who out of his malice to the Womans seed, is continually seeking which of the Faithfull hee may most hurt; vsing to the vttermost, all that libertie which God granteth him, and imployeth his whole time about no other businesse, but in putting euill motions into the mindes and wills of Gods children, and in casting of baits and allurements before their eyes and other senses, wherewith to intangle them: so that by this meanes, a Christian hauing in his owne bosome a great deale of corruption, and being incountred in the World, with manifold occasions of all manner of sinnes, the same being also vrged and made vse of, by the malicious craftinesse of the old Serpent, is many times brought to a low estate for spirituall things. And no more is it to be maruailed, that hee is thus put backe in his good proceedings, then that hee should bee wounded, who is in the midst of many malicious enemies; or he scorched, who is forced to carry fire in his bosome; or that man defiled, who is alwayes in the midst of vessels full of pitch. I shewed you in my last Sermon, what spoile a great sinne maketh in the inward man; it doth so lay all waste, that there seemeth to bee a kind of necessitie of a new Creation; all is so quite out of tune, that there will bee sometimes no lesse adoe to reduce the person so decayed to his wonted state, then there was at first to worke him out of the state of Nature into Grace. The Deuill hauing in some measure preuailed, doth (as I may so speake) so deface and marre the fashion of the soule, that all the first worke must be (as it were) taken into pieces againe, before it can be brought to the former handsomnesse. Thus, I hope, I haue laid open the truth of this Doctrine, touching that languishing and abatement of holinesse, which the best of Gods children are subiect to: sometimes they are growing forward, and ripening apace; sometimes by some vnkindly blast, they are declining as fast, and come to such weake degrees, that there is a necessitie of renuing. There will be well-neere as sensible an alteration, as was in the Fig-tree which Christ cursed: full of leaues the Disciples saw it to day, and the next time they came by, behold, it is withered, and the leaues were falne.

The Vse.

Here is necessarie matter to be learned by vs: first, in respect of our owne selues: secondly, in regard of others. First, In respect of our owne selues, we are here taught two things: first, A matter of aduertisement, to preuent Presumption: secondly, A matter of satisfaction, to keepe from Despaire. Concerning the first: from hence all that haue receiued any measure of spirituall grace, are necessarily to be admonished, to beware how they grow secure thereupon. A Physician, hauing recouered a Patient from a dangerous sickenesse, so that now the partie is able to walke abroad, and hath gotten sharpenesse of appetite, and strength of concoction, forthwith begins to aduiſe him, to take heed to himſelfe, and to obſerue his dyet, and to beware of cold, &c. and not to bee too venturous to goe out into the ayre; or if hee goe forth ſometimes, not to remayne abroad ouer-long; hee is not ſo ſtrong, but that hee may indanger himſelfe, and make his next recouerie much more difficult then was this. Such kind of counſell muſt we, that are ſpirituall Phyſicians, giue vnto thoſe, to whom God hath bleſſed our labours in the Word, ſo as that thereby they are brought into the way of Life. Hath God ſhewed thee mercy, in furniſhing thee with ſome portion of ſauing grace, ſo that now thou feeleſt in thy ſelfe ſome ſweetneſſe in Religion, ſome ioy in the Holy Ghoſt, ſome comfort in the ſight of Gods gracious Countenance reuealed to thee in Ieſus Chriſt, ſome power of godlineſſe, ſome working of Gods Spirit in thee to direct thee in an holy courſe? thou haſt here a great deale of cauſe of reioycing, much matter of thankfulneſſe; but withall, beware thou grow not preſumptuous hereupon; thinke not thou mayeſt now betake thee to a kind of reſt, as though there were no more remayning to bee done; or that thou mayeſt take ſome kind of libertie to thy ſelfe, like a man that is but newly crept out of his ſicke bed, and vainely imagineth that he may now goe any whither, or eate any kind of meate he hath a mind vnto: Nay, thou haſt now as great a taske lyeth vpon thee, to cheriſh the graces thou haſt receiued, as thou hadſt firſt to obtayne them; as much buſineſſe by way of taking heede not to quench and grieue the Spirit of God, as there was to enkindle it in thee. The preſeruation of good, hath euer beene reputed as difficult and as commendable, as the purchaſe. See here by this Doctrine, and by this example of this worthy man Dauid, whither it is poſſible for thee to caſt thy ſelfe, by thine owne aduenturing: thou mayeſt ſo grieue the Spirit of God, that thou mayeſt thereby loſe all thy wonted comfort, and ſo come againe vnder the tyrannie of ſinne, as if thou wert wholly captiuated, and giuen ouer thereunto. For lacke of making much of thoſe good things which God hath beſtowed vpon thee, thou mayeſt bee plunged into a kind of comfortleſſe deadneſſe, to the great diſhonour of God, to the reioycing of the wicked, to the diſcredit and diſgrace of good Profeſſion, to the grieuing of the godly, that haue beheld in thee better fruits, and to the wounding of thy owne ſoule.

Note. And be it, it is not denyed vnto thee, but that thou mayeſt in the mercy of God recouer that which thou haſt loſt; yet aſſure thy ſelfe, thou ſhalt know and feele to thy no little paine and ſmart, what it was to haue

o Cantic. 5. beene careleſſe in the keeping of thy heart: and as the ° Spouſe hauing neglected to open the dore to her Well-beloued, at laſt when ſhee would haue inioyed him, could not find him; and not onely ſo, but was well beaten, and ſmitten, and wounded, before ſhee could regayne him: ſo ſhall this thy preſumption bee ſurely puniſhed: thou ſhalt find it no eaſie matter, to renew that againe in thee, which thy careleſneſſe hath decayed. I am verily perſwaded, that the pangs which Dauid felt in this his languiſhed and relapſed agonie, before

hee could get againe his ſpirituall loſſes, were more ſharpe and vexing, then thoſe that did accompany his firſt conuerſion vnto grace. Oh then bee ſure that thou make much of receiued grace, bee euer labouring to bring it onward vnto more and more perfection. Remember the Apoſtles counſell; p Bee not high-minded, but feare. Bee not ſecure and bold becauſe of the meaſure thou haſt attayned to, but according to the counſell giuen to q TIMOTHY, r Watch in all things, and let thy heart be in the feare of the Lord continually. Bind thy ſelfe to the vſe of all good meanes, by which thou mayeſt keepe life and heate in theſe graces of the Spirit, which God hath giuen thee. The exerciſes of Hearing, Praying, let them bee ſweet to thee, and thou in them conſtant. Often conſider thy owne wayes, when thou findeſt any the leaſt ſwaruing, labour quickly to recouer it. Take heed of the World, and the inticements thereof, nothing being more powerfull to coole good things. Beware of cheriſhing in thy ſelfe vile affections, raging luſts, which like a violent fire conſume and eate vp holy motions. Shun the familiaritie of irreligious and graceleſſe perſons, by whom it is vnpoſſible but to receiue infection. Couple thy ſelfe in league with ſuch as truely feare God, by whoſe example thou mayeſt be drawne on, and by their counſell quickned. This is the beſt meanes to preuent decaying: thou ſhalt find all to be little enough for this purpoſe, to hold faſt that which we haue once got.

Secondly, Here is alſo, as I called it, matter of ſatisfaction to preuent deſpaire. For, albeit no man muſt bee emboldened to the neglect of good duties, yet becauſe in many things wee faile all, there muſt bee care had, not to leaue thoſe to bee ſwallowed vp of hopeleſneſſe, which fall by infirmitie into ſuch a meaſure of declining, that they need renuing. What warrant haue wee to denie them that, which God hath not denyed them? It is condemned by the Churches of God as an hereſie, that opinion whereby recouerie by Repentance is denyed to thoſe that fall into ſinne after Baptiſme. It is a grieuous and a wofull thing, to ſee a Chriſtian that hath ſometimes beene forward, earneſt, zealous, carefull in good duties, taking delight in holy Seruices, euer ſhewing miſlike of all, euen the leaſt euils, ready to prouoke, and quicken, and call vpon, and ſtirre vp others, now to be quite falne from all theſe, giuing no euidence of any forwardneſſe, backward and heauie in religious exerciſes, apt to ſwallow vp ſuch euils, which were ſometimes abhorred; I ſay, this is a pitifull ſpectacle: yet thou, whoſe caſe this is, albeit thou haſt here a great deale of matter of humiliation, yet of vtter diſcouragement in thine owne ſoule thou haſt none. God hath not left thee in his Word without hope, hee hath here left an example of one of the moſt abſolute men, which euer liued vpon this earth, yet ſo caſt behind in regard of the beſt things, that hee ſeemed to himſelfe quite dead to all good; all his former gifts of Sanctification were euen blaſted; hee had not now that life of godlineſſe which he was ſometimes acquainted with. When thy caſe ſhall bee ſuch, that thou findeſt thy ſelfe cleane altered from that thou haſt beene, and ſuch duties of Reading, Hearing, praying, as were ſometimes pleaſing to thee, are now harſh and vnſauourie: ſo that thou art in a manner purpoſed to renounce them, and thou art withall more inclinable a great deale, and more ſtrong in thy deſire to that which is euill, then to the good which formerly thou madeſt conſcience of; I denie not, but thou haſt cauſe of ſorrow, I will not forbid thee to grone in ſpirit with Dauid, and ſmite vpon the breſt with the Publican, and to crie out with Rebecca, Oh, why am I thus? Nay, thou ſhalt be happy, if thou come thus once to complaine: but yet in grieuing for this with Dauid, I would haue thee with him to take heart alſo, and not to determine againſt thy ſelfe, that for thee there is no hope; Lo, yet there is a poſſibilitie for thee to ſtrengthen that which remaines and is ready to die; there is yet a ſparke within thee, which may be brought to ſuch a meaſure of holy heate, as may reſtore thee againe to thy wonted liuelineſſe. Therefore when this dull fit is come vpon thee, doe not doe as the Deuill would haue thee, draw temptations againſt thy ſelfe, that there is no helpe for thee with God; but learne here what thou muſt doe: Firſt, plucke vp thy ſpirits, and goe with Dauid vnto God, (this preſent place is purpoſely written to inforce it vpon thee) and then begge of him to quicken thee, and to put a new life into thee, and to bring thee backe to that from which thou art falne. Reſolue with Iacob, when hee wraſtled with God, that thou wilt not let him goe, vntill hee bleſſe thee: vrge him with that which himſelfe hath reuealed in his Word, that [f] he it is which giueth ſtrength vnto him that fainteth, and increaſeth power vnto him that hath no ſtrength. I ſay, ply the Lord hard with this ſuite: only beware thou enter not into conditions with God, for the hauing of that thou wouldeſt, as, And when thou appointeſt: but remember and know, how that ſpeech is inlarged, [t] They which waite vpon the Lord, ſhall renew their ſtrength: they ſhall lift vp their wings, as the Eagles: they ſhall runne, and not be wearie, and they ſhall walke, and not faint. They, which as they beleeue God is able to renew them, ſo are content to tarrie his time; they bee the perſons ſhall be comforted: be ſure to note that; leſt delaies may adde, through the ſubtiltie of the Deuill, to thy diſcouragement: and in the meane reſt thy ſelfe with thankefulneſſe herein ſatisfied, that God hath giuen thee grace to pray for renuing; euen that ſhall bee a pledge vnto thee, that the reſt is comming, and that God will fill thine hungrie ſoule ere long, and that thou ſhalt be able to ſay with DAVID, [u] My ſoule, praiſe thou the Lord, and all that is within me, praiſe his holy Name; which ſatisfieth thy mouth with good things, and renueth thy youth like the Eagles. Know it is an hard leſſon, that of a waiting vpon God, inaſmuch as it is true which Salomon ſaith, that [x] the hope which is deferred, is the fainting of the heart: but yet it muſt be remembred withall, that [y] the patient abiding of the Righteous ſhall bee gladneſſe: and that this long delayed deſire, when it is accompliſhed, wil be like a Tree of life; and accompliſhed it ſhall be: For [z] they ſhall not bee aſhamed which waite for mee, ſaith the Lord.

I muſt

I muſt ioyne this withall, that together with thy praying for grace to bee renued, there muſt bee an vſing of the meanes which God hath ſanctified to that end. For, to profeſſe a ſeeking of good from God, without taking the courſe by him preſcribed, is but mockerie. Now, the maine meanes which God hath deputed to this end, is his Word; [a] My ſoule ſaith DAVID, cleaueth to the duſt: quicken mee according to thy Word: and, [b] Thy promiſe hath quickned me. PAVL, when he vnderſtood the Galatians to be declining, and in the way to an abſolute reuolt, he fell to this, as to the only courſe of fetching them againe, to trauell with them in birth againe, vntill Chriſt was formed in them. His Miniſterie was to be the mould into which they were to be new caſt, to bring them backe to that eſtate from which they were falne: ſo that together with thy praying, thou muſt couple thy depeudance vpon a powerfull Miniſterie: by this (there being according to the charge) [c] a crying aloud without ſparing, thy ſleepy heart ſhal be awaked: this wil be as a hammer knocking at the doore of thy drowzy ſoule; this wil make thee ſee whēce thou art falne, into what danger thou art running, and will neuer giue thee ouer, vntill it hath (as it were) ſet thee againe on foot, and haue brought thee to a conſcionable cheereſulneſſe, to run the race which is ſet before thee.

Note.

c Iſa.58.1.

There be two things obſeruable out of experience, to iuſtifie this of giuing attendance vpon a faithfull miniſtrie, to be the meanes to renew decayed grace. Firſt, That perſons well affected, and commendably forward in the beſt things, yet diſcontinuing their attendance herein, and falling to a contenting themſelues with any miniſtrie, preſently manifeſt a kind of ſlaking and fading in good duties. You ſhall quickely perceiue an alteration in them: Euen as you ſhall in the Corne, if after the ſowing thereof, there come dry windes, or long drought; wee then perceiue it to become ſhort and thinne, and to looke yellow, much adoe to hold out: ſuch is their ſpirituall eſtate, who fall to a diſvſe of this meanes; a certaine ſecret coldneſſe making their outward fruits of godlineſſe to wither by degrees, creepes vpon them at vnwares; ſo that they become on a ſudden, to be (as it were) other kind of perſons and people then before they were. Now, that the want whereof breedes a decay in goodneſſe, the inioying thereof muſt needes (through the bleſſing of God) cauſe a renuing and a reuiuing therein: according as, to make vſe of the former ſimilitude, the ſeaſonable falling of raine, furthereth the re-ſpringing of the languiſhing corne, euen as the want thereof, made it to loſe both ſtrength and color, and to be in hazard wholly to become vnfruitfull.

Note.

The ſecond euidence is, that ſuch as doe decay and goe backe in godlineſſe, doe alſo decay in their affection to this meanes, ſo farre, that they doe not onely thinke they ſhall doe well enough without it, but that they ſhall do the better by neglecting it: they are apt to ſay, Wherein are they the better for their hearing? they ſee it is to no purpoſe; and ſo ſtrengthen themſelues in an alienation and eſtrangement of their mindes, euery day more and more from Gods ordinances. Now this is an absolute argument, that the ministry of the Word is the meanes to renue and quicken the grace of God when it is decaying. For inasmuch as this withdrawing proceeds from the perswasion of the Deuil, (for from God it cannot be, who neuer is the author of the contempt of his owne ordinance,) it sheweth plainely that Satan hopes to aduantage himselfe this way, assuring himselfe if he can once win to a giuing ouer of this course, he shall easily preuaile to carry away to a totall Apostacie: His motions and workings are still cleane opposite to God. As therefore God commands to attend vpon the [d] Word of his Grace, that we may be built further: and to grow in knowledge, that wee may not bee plucked away with the error of the wicked: so the Deuil on the other side, that there may be a declining further, draweth, as much as he may, to a neglect of the Word of grace, to a distaste thereof, and to a dis-regard of knowledge, that so errour and falling away, both in iudgement, and in affection, and in practice, may preuaile. Againe, it is in the spirituall man in this, as in the outward man. In the bodie euerie humour desires that, by which it selfe may be cherished, and it is wisedome for a man in such a case to forbeare that to which he finds himselfe to haue most desire: so in spirituall dulnesse and decay of grace, a man shall of himselfe be verie desirous to forbeare comming to this exercise; which is a signe, that this same is in it selfe very necessarie for the curing of that euill. The euill brings a man to effect that least, by which it selfe might be remoued. Thus then you see, for those in whom there is some decay of grace, matter there is of sorrow, but not of despaire; there is a remedie to helpe it, prayer to God who is onely able to quicken his owne graces, and constant dependance vpon an effectuall Ministerie, the best meanes to awake a dull and drowzye heart.

d Act. 20. 31.

Now I added, that there is a dutie taught vs also here in respect of others: and that is, to beware of rashnesse in censuring those, in whom we see such a kind of declining and going backe, as Dauid here was sensible of in himselfe when he made this prayer. Those that are so, they ought to pitie and to pray for: and if they be such in whom they haue any speciall interest, to endeuour their reclaiming, and to labour with them by all meanes for their stirring vp and quickning: but to condemne them and tax them of hypocrisie, as who would say, that in their former course there had beene no sincerities; or to shunne them as persons forsaken of God, and giuen ouer into a reprobate sense, there is no warrant at all in Gods Word. In this case, that of the Apostle deserues remembring, viz. [e] Euerie man to consider himselfe, and to know also that it may be also so with him. And therefore it shall be better for him, by this, to learne to feare himselfe, then to determine peremptorily and vncharitably touching others. And thus the excellencie of this poynt hath carried me further then I ought. Indeed it is as behoouefull a matter as can (lightly) be, for the children of God to be made acquainted with the manifold changes which the best estate of a Christian is subiect to. The not

not knowing thereof, begets much either presumption, or discouragement touching themselues, and causes a great deale of vncharitablenesse concerning others.

Now come we to obserue somewhat out of the thing it selfe in particular, which Dauid here prayeth for. Renuing is a more generall matter, respecting the whole spirituall estate. This of a Right Spirit, is more particular. According therefore to the interpretation and meaning which I made in the beginning, I, concerning it, set downe this Doctrine,

That a constant purpose in the heart, and a steady indeuour in the life and course, to walke so as may please God, is a matter much to be desired by euery one that would be saued. DAVIDS desire is a Rule for euery one that desires to inioy that eternall Blisse, which we are all perswaded, and that vpon good ground, that now Dauid is partaker of. Now, Dauid in desiring a Right Spirit, begged this, as I haue shewed before, that hee might bee so disposed in his soule, as that, if it were possible, hee might not haue so much as a thought arising vp in him, tending to any way of sinne, but might walke sincerely and vprightly all his dayes. This was his prayer: He would haue a firme Spirit, a heart vnmooueably and vnalterably set to please God, in an holy and vndefiled Conscience. This is that which he calleth, [f] A determining to keepe Gods Word: [g] A chooſing the way of Truth: [h] A cleauing to the Lords Testimonies: [i] A desiring his Commandements: [k] A keeping them with his whole heart: [l] A swearing to keepe the Lords righteous Iudgements: and he manifested this kinde of Spirit to be in him, when he prayed to haue [m] his steps so directed in Gods Word, that none iniquitie might haue dominion ouer him: and when hee professed [n] to hate all the wayes of falshood, and [o] to set no wicked thing before his eyes. BARNABAS perswaded it to the Antiochians, by the name of [p] cleauing to the Lord with purpose of heart. PAVL prayed for it on the behalfe of the Colossians, in desiring that [q] they might walke worthy the Lord, and please him in all things, being strengthned with all might, through his glorious power: and for the Thessalonians, when hee craued that [r] their hearts might bee made stable and vnblameable in holinesse: and, [s] might be stablished in euery word and good works: and for the Hebrewes, that [t] they might bee made perfit in all good works: and for the Ephesians, that [u] they might bee strengthned by Gods Spirit in the inner man. The mayne matter which is intended in all these places and speeches, is, a settled bent of the soule, in nothing to sinne against God, and a course of life according, discouering such an inclination, by our diligent auoyding of euery knowne euill way, and the earnest striuing vnto euery good and holy dutie, which a man vnderstands and perceiues that God commands. And the commending hereof in Scripture, and the praying for it by holy Men, either for themselues or for others, to whom, in the Lord, they wished all good, is an absolute proofe of euery mans being bound in conscience to desire it. Settlednesse and firmenesse is the glorie and grace of good things. To haue a kind of humour towards good good for a fit, or to ſet vpon ſome courſe of godlineſſe for a bowt or two (as I may ſo ſpeake) it deſerues no commendation. Nay, by how much the better any mans beginnings bee, by ſo much the more it is to his reproch, if his proceedings be not anſwerable. His ſliding away from that which hee hath once ſeemed to affect, will increaſe both his ſhame and his iudgement too in the Day of reckoning. And then if a man ſhall ſeeme to ſettle himſelfe to the embracing of ſome one or two good duties, and bee remiſſe in other; or to the ſhunning of ſome euill courſes, and in ſome other take a kind of libertie to himſelfe; this were but a mockerie, neither is it indeed poſſible ſo to pleaſe the Lord.

The Vſe.

This may teach vs all whereto eſpecially to ayme, if our deſires be to be ſuch as we ought to be, euen as Dauids phraſe is, that [x] our foot may ſtand in vprightneſſe: and that wee may bee ſo ſettled in a right way of pleaſing God, and that in all good duties, as that we may neuer decline, but goe on ſincerely, and vnremouably to the end. There is no hope of ſaluation, where this kind of ſpirit wants. If a mans heart be not ſet to it, and himſelfe reſolued that thus and thus by Gods inabling his courſe ſhall be, and he will not alter it, and he will euen bind himſelfe as it were by a couenant to God, that from this and this which he ſeeth is good and right before God, he will not be remooued; he can neuer hold out, hee can neuer ſo runne that hee may obtaine. Therefore, that is the thing which euery man beginning to effect Religion, and to looke towards heauen, muſt indeuour for, a firme and conſtant ſpirit, a minde bent and reſolued to ſtriue towards all good duties, and to ſet it ſelfe againſt all vngodly courſes, and herein to perſiſt and ſtand euen to the end. Now becauſe no man can come to this of himſelfe, (for to reſolue this out of his owne ſelfe, is but preſumption) therefore this is (as here wee ſee in Dauid) to bee begged of God. If hee leaues vs neuer ſo little to our ſelues, we fall immediately, like a ſtaffe from which the hand of him that beareth it is with-drawne: [y] In his owne might ſhall no man bee ſtrong: but [z] I am able to doe all things, by the helpe of Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth mee. If the Lord ſhall put ſuch a Spirit of ſtrength into vs, (as it is [a] called) we ſhall runne our courſe with conſtancie, and make our works more and better at the laſt then at the firſt. And it is a certaine ſigne that a man hath ſuch a ſpirit as Dauid here prayes for, when in deſiring it, the ſenſibleneſſe which he hath of his owne weakeneſſe, makes him in a kind of holy feare, reſpectiuely to himſelfe reſolue with DAVID, [b] It is good for me to draw neere to God: I am ſure, if he ſhall [c] guide mee by his counſell. In this caſe a man may make vſe of that ſaying of PAVLS, [d] When I am weake, then am I ſtrong. The power of Chriſt dwelleth moſt in mee, when I am moſt humbled with the apprehenſion of mine owne infirmities. Thus we ſee at laſt, the whole of that which Dauid requeſts in this Verſe. In generall, that he may bee ſanctified and deliuered from the ſeruice of ſinne, as well as freed from the guilt of ſinne. In particular, that his ſoule may be cleanſed from that world of corruption, which hee now felt in himſelfe to be reuiued and increaſed by this monſtrous

VERS. 11.

Caſt me not away from thy preſence, and take not thine holy Spirit from me.

DAVID ſtill continueth his ſupplications, ſeeking a remedie of thoſe manifold miſeries which he found by experience, this his foule ſinne had brought vpon him. Hitherto wee haue heard him lamenting as one ſlaine and deaded in reſpect of any grace or goodneſſe, by the preuayling of a grieuous Euill. Now he ſeemes to feare, that as the dead are in a manner abhorred of the Liuing, and are therefore as Abraham ſaid of Sarah when ſhee was dead, diſpoſed out of ſight; ſo the Lord ſhould throw him out of his preſence, as a thing abominable, and not to bee indured: ſo that the purpoſe of this Verſe, is to obtaine of God the diuerting or turning by of ſome great iudgements, which hee knew hee had iuſtly deſerued by this great offence; and thoſe iudgements are here named two eſpecially: Caſting away from the Lords preſence; and, The taking away of his Spirit. Of theſe in order.

a *Gen.*23.4.

The ſtate of the place.

And firſt, in the handling of the firſt, we muſt inquire what Dauid did meane, and whereto he did ayme, when hee prayed not to bee caſt out of Gods preſence: for, out of the preſence of God, in ſome ſenſe, it is vnpoſſible for any man to bee remooued: [b] Whither ſhall I flee (ſaith Dauid himſelfe) from thy preſence? directing his ſpeech to God: and, Doe not I fill heauen and earth, ſaith [c] the Lord? Generally to be caſt out from Gods preſence, is to be throwne out of his fauour and protection. It is an alluſion to the faſhion of the Great men of the world, who denie their preſence to them with whom they are diſpleaſed. Thus Dauid would not allow ABSALOM [d] to ſee his face: and hereupon was it, when that great Monarch teſtified his indignation againſt Haman, that the Attendants there immediately [e] couered his face; hee ſhould not haue ſo much priuiledge as any more to ſee the Kings face. Oh, that ISHMAEL might liue in thy preſence, ſaid [f] Abraham, that is, that thou mighteſt bee pleaſed to take him into thy fauour. This is the mayne of the torment of Reprobates, [g] They ſhall be puniſhed from the preſence of God: they ſhall be throwne throwne for euer out of fauour. But now withall more ſpecially, the preſence of God is found in Scripture, to ſignifie two other things.

Firſt, The place where God is truely worſhipped by his people, in the performance of ſuch holy ſeruices as himſelfe requires. Thus Dauid in his baniſhment ſighed out his ſpeech; [h] When ſhall I come and appeare before the preſence of God? that is, When ſhall I (as I was wont) ioyne with the reſt of Gods people, in the duties of his publique worſhip? Thus is that vſually expounded which is ſaid of CAIN; [i] He went out from the preſence of God: that is, departed from that Land where God was firſt publikely worſhipped by ſacrifices, and where he ſhewed viſible euidences of his preſence. So when Ionas was loth to goe to Niniuch, and withdrew himſelfe, it is ſaid, [k] He roſe to flee from the preſence of the Lord: that is, from the place where God was ſerued, and where by viſions and apparitions hee was wont to haue intercourſe with God.

h *Pſal.*41.2.

i *Gen.*4.16.

k *Chap.*1.3.

Secondly, To be in the preſence of God, is to bee imployed by Gods appointment in ſome ſpeciall ſeruice of his, the deputation whereto, is a ſpeciall grace and honour to a man. This interpretation may bee iuſtified by that which Chriſt ſaith of the Angels, that they alwaies behold the face of his [l] Father. The meaning is, they are his ſpeciall Seruitors; Happy are theſe thy Seruants, (ſaid the Southerne Queene to [m] SALOMON) which ſtand euer before thee, which are next about thee, and are eſpecially imployed and intruſted by thee. [n] CARSHENA, ſaith the ſtory, SHETHAR, ADMATHA, TARSHISH, MERES, MARSENA, and MEMVCAN, the ſeuen Princes of PERSIA, which ſaw the Kings face, and ſate firſt in the Kingdome: It is vnderſtood they were men of ſpeciall truſt aboue others, and of the moſt chiefe imployment: Whereas the Kings of Perſia kept extraordinarie ſtate, ſo that none might come neere them without ſpeciall allowance; theſe might come when they would, and were cuſtomarily about him as they pleaſed. Now theſe two laſt ſenſes of being in Gods preſence, are iuſtly to bee reputed branches of the firſt: they being both euidences and teſtimonies of Gods fauour. For by the libertie of ioyning with Gods people in holy ſeruices, his fauour is aſſured, and from thence a man may gather more and more certainty thereof to his ſoule: and ſo alſo it is a token of Gods reſpect, when a man is aduanced by him to a calling and a ſeruice of ſpeciall truſt, ſuch as was that of a King, which Dauid did now ſuſtaine, at the time of his inditing this Pſalme. After all this, now the queſtion is, to which of theſe particulars which I haue named, Dauid had here the chiefeſt reference; whether to all, or if not to all, then to which aboue the reſt. Surely, I make no doubt, but he intended that which I termed the generall ſenſe of this phraſe; and prayed that God would not now (as he might) iuſtly caſt him for euer out of fauour: but yet in aſmuch as his ayme hath beene to that in this whole Pſalme hitherto, and more ſpecially (Verſ.9.) where (as wee haue heard) hee beſought the Lord not to looke in anger on his ſinnes, which is all one in effect with this, to be throwne out of fauour; and

l *Matt.*18.10.

m 1.*Kin.*10.8.

n *Heſt.*1.14.

and becauſe alſo we find that Dauid in making repetitions, doth in each adde ſomething (according as I haue obſerued once or twice in ſome of the precedent Verſes;) therefore I am of this mind, (neither am I alone therein,) viz. that Dauid craued here not to be depriued of thoſe ſpeciall euidences of Gods fauour; namely, the libertie of worſhipping him in his Houſe, with the reſt of his people; and the honour of being His King. He would not that God in his wrath, ſhould thruſt him out from his preſence in the place of his worſhip, as he did Cain; not caſt him off from being King, as hee did Saul. For ſo, for my part, I am very apt to ioyne with thoſe, who (vpon this Pſalme) thinke that Dauid growing into a ſerious conſideration of his ſinne, was inwardly terrified with thoſe examples; eſpecially of Cain and Saul; of Cain, becauſe he was a murtherer, and of the like ſinne Dauid apprehended and confeſſed himſelfe to bee guiltie: and of Saul, becauſe hee was his Predeceſſor, and for the violent and wilfull following of his owne head-ſtrong affections, (wherein Dauid conceiued ſome likeneſſe to bee betwixt himſelfe and him) was depriued of the Kingdome. Thus it is to bee vnderſtood, as if hee had ſaid, O Lord, though my ſinnes (as I doe heartily and ſincerely acknowledge) doe equall CAINS and SAVLS, the one a ſpiller of innocent bloud, the other an abuſer of thy great goodneſſe, in raiſing him vp from nothing to be King ouer thy people; yet I beſeech thee, doe not puniſh mee ſo as thou haſt done them: let me ſtill inioy thy preſence in thy Houſe, and among thy people: let me ſtill ſerue before thee, and not receiue that diſgrace in the eyes of the world, as to be diueſted of that royall dignitie, to which it hath beene thy pleaſure to aduance mee. Thus is the ſenſe. Let vs ſee now concerning the Doctrine. Thus then it is, firſt;

The firſt Doctrine.

That it is a grieuous thing, to be debarred the libertie of Gods Houſe, and the freedome of worſhipping him there with the reſt of his ſeruants. This was one of the things which Dauid feared, againſt which he here prayed, and from which it was his humble ſuite vnto God that hee might bee freed. He knew what his deſert was in reſpect of this ſcandalous ſinne, euen to be ſhut out from the ſocietie of Gods people, and (as that good Chriſtian Emperour ſaid at the time of his ſubmiſſion, after hee had beene excommunicated by AMBROSE) to be trodden vnder foot as vnſauoury Salt. And albeit (haply) his outward greatneſſe (being a King) might beare him out herein, and free him from any publike cenſure; yet hee knew how many wayes God could bring this vpon him; hee might diſable him by ſickneſſe, hee might giue him ouer to the power of ſome enemy, by whoſe violence he might bee hindered from that comfort of Gods preſence which he deſired to inioy, (according as he was in a faire way thereto, when as by Abſaloms inſurrection, hee was forced to flie from Ieruſalem, hopeleſſe almoſt of euer returning thither.) Hee knew againe, that God might ſo curſe theſe ſeruices to him, that albeit hee were preſent at them, yet he ſhould receiue no comfort by them. Therefore hee deſired the Lord, that hee might no way be ſo depriued of this fauour, as not to haue free acceſſe with comfort into his Houſe, there to heare heare his Word and to call vpon his Name. There be many teſtimonies in Dauids Pſalmes, of his valuing the libertie of worſhipping God, by the exerciſes of pietie in his houſe among his people, at an high rate. O Lord, [o] I haue loued the habitation of thine owne Houſe, and the place where thine [p] honour dwelleth: [p] one thing I haue deſired of the Lord that I will require, euen that I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord all the daies of my life, to behold the beautie of the Lord, and to viſite his Temple. This was a matter which hee deſired aboue all things; and for the obtaining whereof hee was purpoſed to be euen importunate with God. For this, his [q] ſoule did pant as the Hart brayeth for the Riuers of water. [r] How amiable are thy Tabernacles! My ſoule longeth, yea and fainteth for the Courts of the Lord: Bleſſed are they which dwell in thine Houſe. One day in thy Courts is better then a thouſand other-where. Thus Dauid ſpake, when through the practices of his enemies, hee was debarred from all acceſſe vnto the publike worſhip and ſeruice of God. In the times of his baniſhment, through the furie of Saul, he had many occaſions of ſorrow and griefe; he could not inioy the ſocietie of his friends, but was forced to range abroad among ſtrangers, in a continuall hazzard, of his life: but this troubled him aboue all others, as appeares by his expoſtulation with Saul, (when at a time they two met) that hee was caſt out from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord; and ſo in hazzard, through the crueltie of his aduerſaries, to bee drawne to the [s] ſeruice of other gods amongſt Infidels. Theſe ſpeeches are plaine arguments, that Dauid ſaw and conceiued ſome ſpeciall and extraordinarie benefit comming to his ſoule, by ſeeking the face of God in his Houſe, (as himſelfe doth name [t] it,) which made him ſo loth to loſe his freedome. He was willing to redeeme it, with the ſuſtaining of many outward inconueniences. The place of a Doore-keeper there, the meaneſt roome, the loweſt and moſt contemptible outward eſtate there, would giue him more content, then without it to poſſeſſe euen the higheſt places of the earth. Me thinks, Moſes was much like him in affection, [u] chooſing rather to ſuffer aduerſitie with the people of God, then to be called the ſonne of PHARAOHS Daughter, and to inioy the treaſures of Egypt. When Hezekiah was ſicke, and had receiued the ſentence of Death by the meſſage of Iſaiah, at laſt, vpon his prayers and teares, the Lord was pleaſed to reuoke the ſentence, and to adde to his life fifteene yeeres; and note in what termes the goodneſſe of God towards him herein was declared; [x] Behold, I haue healed thee, and the third day thou ſhalt goe vp to the Houſe of the Lord. This ſpeciall fauour hee ſhould haue, not only health and life, but ſtrength with that ſpeede, that within a few daies, he ſhould be free and able to returne to that, which he ſo much deſired, (the worſhip of God in the Houſe of God.) Vpon this ground was that complaint of the people of God, touching that effect of the rage and furie of Inuaders; [y] They razed the Sanctuarie to the ground, defiled the dwelling place of Gods Name, burnt vp all the Synagogues of God in the Land: like that of Ieremie in his [z] Lamentations, The wayes of Zion lament, becauſe no man commeth to the ſolemne Feaſts: all her gates are desolate. If it were not a grieuous thing, thus to be cast out of that presence of God, which is inioyed in holy Assemblies, why should that censure of excommunication be reputed so great a punishment, that it is accounted a [a] giuing ouer to Satan? It is like a mans being out-lawed in matters of ciuill gouernement. Lawyers doe define an out-lawrie, to be the losse or depriuation of the benefit belonging to a Subiect; that is, of the Kings protection, and the Realme. Such is the nature of this censure rightly executed. It cuts a man off from the priuiledges of a Christian, hee is out of Gods protection for the time, and reckoned as a stranger and a forrainer, as a Heathen, or a Publican, according to that of our [b] Sauiour. This was the reason that these primitiue Beleeuers, one of their first courses was to maintayne a holy fellowship among themselues, in which they might liue together in the vse of the Apostles Doctrine, [c] in breaking of bread, and prayer. And this Fellowship they were counselled and aduised by no meanes to [d] forsake. Now that this Doctrine, when it comes to vse and application, may be the more vse full; let me declare what they lose that are depriued of this libertie which I treat of, and which Dauid here prayed it might not bee taken from him. That they are depriued of Gods more especiall and gracious presence, I need not say: for that is the ground of the whole matter, which I haue now in hand, (Dauids calling this the presence of God.) Whence it is that such places are termed (Bethels) Gods Houses: they are (as it were) the Presence-Chamber of the great King, The glorie of the Lord filleth them, as was once said of the [e] Temple. [f] Christ himselfe is here present: and, IOHN [g] saw him walking in the midst of the seuen golden Candlesticks. Now, it is no small losse, to be depriued of the benefit and comfort which may and must needs come to a mans soule by such a Presence. But let it bee withall further considered, what bee the things there to bee inioyed through Gods mercy, and then the matter will bee manifest. It is said by Saint Peter, that they be matters of that worth, that the Angels themselues doe desire, and euen stoope downe to [h] behold. There is the most comfortable and precious Treasure of Gods holy and sacred Word: there is [i] the Ministerie of Reconciliation: there is the Preaching of the Word, which [k] is the doore of Faith; that Ordinance of God, [l] By which his Saints are gathered, and the Body of Christ edified: that powerfull meanes, by which Satan [m] is made to fall from heauen like lightning, and his [n] strongest holds beaten downe: that [o] Key of knowledge, by which [p] is opened vnto vs the whole Counsell of God. There be the Sacraments, [q] Seales of the Righteousnesse which is by Faith; both of them as Glasses, by which we see more cleerly into the mysterie of our Redemption; and as Monuments before our eyes of Gods exceeding loue vnto vs in Iesus Christ. There is also the exercise of Common Prayer and praysing God; in respect whereof, is that terme of the [r] House of Prayer: and prayse (saith the Psalmist) [s] wayteth for God in Sion. It cannot be small, to be depriued of the fruition of these things. By the want of Ministeriall instruction, a man is in darkenesse, and in the shad-dow of death, and he is in apparant hazzard of eternall perishing. By the want of the Sacraments, he misseth that spirituall nourishment, by which his soule should bee refreshed, his faith strengthned, and his assurance of the loue of God in Christ confirmed. By the want of publique Prayer, he is destitute of that quickning which the children of God receiue, by being prouoked through one anothers forwardnesse; and hath no interest into that blessing which the ioynt prayers of the faithfull (being like an vnited force, more forcible) doe bring downe with a full measure vpon those by whom they are offered vp, and presented to the Throne of Grace. By the want of publique prayses, a man loseth that reuiuing and alacritie of his spirits, which he might inioy by hauing fellowship in those spirituall Songs, wherein the people of the Lord doe sing of his Righteousnesse. And, howsoeuer a man in his owne reason might imagine, that he might doe well enough with the priuate vse of the Word, though he inioy not the publique; and could pray well enough by himselfe, though hee haue no societie at all with these generall and publique deuotions: yet this, that there is no such promise of blessing made to the priuate as to the publique, (nay, none at all to the priuate, if the publique be not wayted vpon and desired) that cuts off all, and confirmes it still to bee a wofull thing to bee sequestred from the presence of God in the holy Assemblies. It is said, still [t] the Lord added to the Church such as should be saued: meaning, that those whom God gathered vp daily by the Preaching of the Word from the World, (in it selfe lying in wickednesse) the same hee drew to the visible societie and fellowship of his people. This is Gods ordinarie proceeding.

The Vse. This is mayntly to be vrged and pressed to the reproofe of our common and vniuersall vnthanktulnesse, who hauing freedome to inioy that presence of God, which here Dauid prayed not to bee cast from, doe yet not so value, nor esteeme, nor prize it as we ought. I am afraid, that if we were well inquired into and searched, what reioycing we haue in our spirits, what gladnesse in our hearts, and so thereupon what vse to thanke God for it in our ordinarie priuate deuotions, that wee haue the libertie of true Religion, and that wee may in peace, without any manner of molestation, worth the speaking of, (for what should any man so trouble himselfe, as to be discouraged with the barkings and out-cryes of men of corrupt minds?) come before God in publique meetings, and in them be partakers of the exercises of pietie; I am afraid, I say, that vpon an exact inquirie, our owne hearts and consciences must testifie against vs, that wee are exceeding faultie. Wee reioyce not in this great goodnes of God as we should, we returne not vnto God so much thanks for it as we ought. Indeed, wee doe not generally vnderstand our owne happinesse herein, and as Christ said to the Woman of Samaria, [u] Wee doe not know the gift of God, nor what we haue, inioying this. We are by many degrees more sensible of outward and earthly commodities, then of this. With what cheerefulnesse would men enter into the Lords Courts, how would they serue him with gladnesse, and come before him

him with ioyfulneſſe? how precious would a day or an houre be that is thus beſtowed? how forward would they be to take all opportunities to this end? how would they ſtriue to redeeme time from the World, which they might ſpend before God in the aſſemblies of his people? how would they prouoke one another, x*Come, let vs goe vp to the mountaine of the Lord, to the houſe of the God of Iacob, and he will teach vs his wayes?* and how glad they would be, with Dauid, when any ſhould ſay vnto them, y*Wee will goe into the houſe of the Lord:* z Vp, let vs goe and pray before the Lord, and ſeeke the Lord of hoſtes: I will goe alſo? Thus would it be if we had DAVIDS heart. How wofull ſhall wee then thinke their eſtates to be, who doe euen wilfully excommunicate and baniſh themſelues from Gods houſe, and from the aſſemblies of the faithfull, ſo as do not only ſome Separatiſts, who as if our Church (becauſe perhaps ſhe wants ſome beautie, hath therefore vtterly loſt her face) doe flye from our Congregations, as if there were ſo many cages of vncleane birds; and our Recuſants, who becauſe they ſee not their breaden and woodden gods amongſt vs, refuſe all ſocietie with vs in holy things; but many others alſo, that yet make ſhew of a kind of a conformitie to the times, but indeed their Religion is but a ſeruice of the time: and therefore, ſauing onely for the ſauing of their purſes, or their credits, that they may not be thought plaine Atheiſts, do otherwiſe in a manner caſt themſelues out from the preſence of God, in their carnall lazineſſe and prophaneneſſe, paſſing ouer many Sabbaths, eyther in whole or in part, wherein the ſeruices of Gods houſe can haue no attendance from them; they haue no loue at all to the preaching of the Word, no reſpect, nor appetite to the Sacraments, no delight in the duties of inuocation and prayſe. They neuer ſhew themſelues ſo dull, ſo lumpiſh, ſo heauie, ſo ſpiritleſſe, ſo deſirous to haue done, as when theſe things are in hand. Our Pariſhes euery-where doe ſwarme with ſuch. They could euen wiſh for that, againſt which DAVID prayed; and account that a piece of their happineſſe, which hee feared as an heauie iudgement. Tell them of the preſence of God, they conceiue not what you meane, they ſee no ſuch worth in theſe things as you ſpeake of, they ſauour not of the things of God; and their opinion of thoſe, who ſhew a ſharpeneſſe of deſire towards thoſe holy things, is like that which FESTVS had of PAVL when he ſaid a hee was mad. Well (for my part) I wiſh that to them, which once befell Iacob. God appeared to him, but he was not aware of it, it was in his ſleepe; but when he awoke, he recouered his thoughts, and ſaid, Surely the Lord is in this place, and I did not know it: ſo the Lord is preſent, and diſcouereth himſelfe vnto vs in the aſſemblies; many doe not perceiue it, the reaſon is, they are euen aſleepe, and in a dreame. Oh! that the Lord might pleaſe to awake them, then they would ſay with Iacob, Surely this place is reuerent, whatſoeuer we haue thought, it is no other but the houſe of b God, euen the gate of Heauen. Wee, who are called of God to the worke of the Miniſtrie, might further this much, this awaking of carnall and and careleſſe perſons, that they may come to vnderſtand what that preſence of God in his Houſe is, which they ſo little reckon of. By vertue of the Miniſtrie of Reconciliation [c] committed to vs, we are in the aſſemblies in Christs ſtead: by our lifting vp our voyces like a trumpet, wee ſhall bring them to ſee that they haue to doe with God; and when wee ſhall ſo preſſe the Word with power and authoritie vpon their ſoules, as that the ſecrets of their harts be made manifeſt, then ſhal they be brought to ſay plainely, [d] that God is in vs indeed. And thus farre of the firſt thing intended by Dauid in this ſuit; that God would not ſo caſt him out of fauour, as to take away from him the libertie of his worſhip. Let vs come to the ſecond; where the Doctrine is thus,

c 1.Cor.5.20.

The ſecond Doctrine.

That it is a great iudgement of God, when a man is not followed with the fauour and bleſsing of God, in that calling and place which he doth ſuſtaine. This ſhall eaſily appeare to be the Doctrine of this place, if we ſhall ſuppoſe we heare DAVID ſpeaking thus; O Lord, I acknowledge thy great goodneſſe towards mee, thou haſt taken mee from the Sheepe-fold, from behind the Ewes with young, to feed thy people Iacob, and thine inheritance in Iſrael: and here I ſerue before thee, and goe in and out before this great people, as thy Lieutenant: I confeſſe, I haue abuſed my place, and emboldened my ſelfe (by my greatneſſe) to laſciuiouſneſſe. Iuſt cauſe haue I giuen thee, to caſt me out from ſeruing any more before thee (as thou didſt SAVL) and lay all mine honour in the duſt: but yet (I pray thee) for the continuance of thy mercie towards mee, let mee ſtill inioy the benefit of thy protection and grace, in the managing of this great Calling, to which thou haſt aſsigned mee. I ſhall vtterly loſe the honour of my Place, if I loſe thy fauour in ſuſtayning it. This is DAVIDS meaning, and it is a manifeſt cleering of the poynt I named. If God doe not countenance a man in his Calling, it is a grieuous iudgement. This was the ayme of Dauid, (as I am verily perſwaded) in this clauſe. We muſt not thinke that Dauid was thus earneſt in this, out of a carnall reſpect, as a man vnwilling to loſe a Kingdome; but Dauid was loth to haue the world, and eſpecially the enemies of him for profeſſions ſake, to behold any euidence of Gods indignation towards him. It would haue been a notable triumph to the vngodly, if God ſhould haue ſhaken off Dauid, as hee ſhooke off Saul; and then we may very well thinke, that Dauid beeing ſenſible (as appeares by Verſe 18.) of the hurt and preiudice which he had done to the whole State by his fault: (by it, it may be, ſome were emboldened to doe wickedly, ſome grieued, and the whole bodie of the Kingdome, lyable to iudgement; inaſmuch, as God puniſheth the ſinnes of [c] Kings in the ſubiects:) therefore he was carneſt with God, to continue his fauour towards him, in his place and gouernement, that he might make a kind of amends for after, for the hurt he had done in this great tranſgreſſion. Thus I indeuour to cleere this place euery way, that I may ſatisfie touching the rayſing of this Doctrine from theſe words. Now for the ſtate and manner of the iudgement, how great it is, we may behold it in Saul: For his diſobedience in the ſeruice againſt Amalek, this ſen-

tence was passed vpon him; [f] God hath cast away thee from being King. Now marke, Saul was not presently decrowned, or actually divested and stript of his Regall authoritie, hee continued King after this some yeeres, euen to his dying day. How then was he cast off? Surely, in this respect, that he lost the fauour of God in his place, and so the wrath and displeasure of God followed, and euen pursued him in his place to the end. And although hee had the Crowne, and the Scepter still, yet hee lost the Honour of his place, and the hearts of his People. Something that way we may gather out of a speech which fell from his owne mouth vpon a time, when hee was following after Dauid. Standing vnder a Tree in Gibeah, with his speare in his hand, and all his seruants about him, he began to complaine, as a man forsaken, euen by his neerest [g] followers; a token that he was in feare and full of distrust, euen in regard of those of his owne Line. God did not answere him in his needs and doubts, [h] Neither by Dreame, nor by Vrim, nor yet by Prophets. It is worth the noting, how the Scripture speaks of Sauls raigne, limiting it to two [i] yeeres; whereas it is manifest hee raigned longer; but all the time that he liued, after this sentence pronounced of reiection by Samuel, is reckoned as nothing, because he was (as I may so speake) none of Gods King that time. Hee raigned rather as a Tyrant, then as rightfull Gouernour. For, though it was not lawfull for any man that while to lay violent hands vpon him, (which was the reason that Dauids heart smote him for a small indignitie offered to him, it being no more then the cutting off the lap of his Coat, for a declaration of his owne fidelitie, who might as easily haue killed him;) yet in Gods account he was then no King, he did not serue (as I may so speake) in his presence. This is a pregnant example for this, to shew how fearefull a thing it is, though a man doe not lose his place, yet to lose the fauour, respect, and assistance of God in his place. Somewhat like to this wee may see in another function. There was some distance of time twixt the doome passed vpon Eli by the mouth of Samuel, touching his reiection from the Priesthood, and the reall execution thereof: yet the taking away the blessing of God from Eli in his place was punishment inough. This claue so neere vnto Eli, that it tooke him out of the world in a strange and wofull manner by the breaking of his necke: [k] Because thou hast refused knowledge, I will also refuse thee, and thou shalt bee no Priest to mee, said God: like enough, the partie to whom this was spoken, continued in the office of a Priest still, but (vnhappily) wee may bee well assured, when Gods approbation was withdrawne. So we may say of those threatned by Malachy, that the Lord would send a curse vpon them: what though they carried the name still? yet they lost their honour, when God said, He would cast dung vpon their faces, and that [l] he had made them to bee despised, and vile before all the people. It is a generall rule appertayning to all callings, and to all businesses, that without the blessing of God nothing prospereth: [m] Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vaine that build it: except the Lord keepe the Citie, the Keeper watcheth in vaine. If God doe not caſt his fauour vpon the worke, howſoeuer it may ſeeme to thriue, yet it is a curſe to him that vndertakes it. In caſe a man bee not as the Lords Agent and Seruant in that which hee hath in hand, the iſſue will bee fearefull, and there is a ſecret curſe followeth all that is performed whatſoeuer it be. God told the Prieſts by Malachy, that [n] hee would curſe their bleſſings; meaning, that the things which were in themſelues bleſſings, as their increaſe and plentie, and the like, ſhould to them bee accurſed: like that which Dauid by way of foretelling, prayed to come vpon his enemies; [o] Euen their proſperitie ſhould bee their ruine.

o Pſal.69.22.

The Vſe. This is properly a warning to all, whom God hath ſet in Callings and Places of any note and eminency here in the world, that if they doe deſire to haue comfort in their places, and to haue ſucceſſe in the affaires belonging thereunto, they beware how they make God their Enemie by preſumptuous ſinning againſt his Maieſtie. There is no mans outward eſtate can priuiledge or exempt him from the reach of Gods hand, if he once giue way to his owne vile affections, and take libertie to himſelfe for groſſe offences. This is the way to caſt a man out of the Lords preſence, and to bring a curſe vpon him in that particular ſtanding wherein the Lord hath ranged him. The Rule euer holds, [p] Them that honour me, I will honour; and they which deſpiſe me, ſhall be deſpiſed. DAVID had iuſt cauſe to feare to loſe the honour of his place, when he had now diſhonoured God in ſo high a degree. It is a neceſſarie Leſſon for Magiſtrates and Miniſters eſpecially. It is not Titles of greatneſſe, it is not Names and Termes, ſuch as belong to their places and callings, that can vphold their reputation and eſteeme; if once they haue made God an Aduerſarie, by a godleſſe courſe, their hearts not being ſet to ſeeke his Glorie, he caſts them off, and ſo they, loſing their reſpect with him, become many times as vile as the very dung among men. Their Callings being in themſelues Honorable, yet (in them) loſe their grace, and they are alſo with a kind of lothing and indignitie caſt out of the hearts of all that feare God. It is a thing iuſtified in experience, eſpecially touching Miniſters, how being in their places vnfaithfull towards God, God makes them lothſome and abominable before men. The Lord giues a ſecret power to his people to find them out, notwithſtanding their paſſing vnder the ſame Names and Habits with the moſt ſincere; ſo that that which they doe, though it be ſometimes well ſet out, and carry in the performance a tolerable ſhew, yet it wants authoritie, and becommeth as a meere beating of the ayre, the Lord not being pleaſed to honour it with a gracious iſſue, or to crowne it with ſucceſſe. Euery man may make vſe of this in his place, Maſter of a Family, the Seruant, Artificer. Each one muſt ſtriue in his degree, to keepe (as I may ſay) Gods good-will, by labouring to be vpright in his way, and to take heed to himſelfe according to Gods Word. If a man cannot aſſure himſelfe, that hee laboureth in his Calling, as ſeruing therein before the face of God, and as one who deales by his appointment, he can neuer expect a bleſſing.

p 1.Sam.2.30.

blessing. Hee may domineere ouer others in gouernment as a Tyrant, he may rake in a great deale together as an Vsurper; but he can neuer be truely respected by his Inferiours as an Agent among them vnder God; he can neuer find any true content in his hauings, but rather he lyeth open to that heauie curse, of [q] the reseruation of riches to their owners for their hurt. Thus haue we seene what Dauid did especially pray against in this first request; the losse of Gods fauour so, as to be shut out from his presence, in the place and meanes of his publique worship; and to be depriued of his protection and blessing in his place: that so he should not raigne still as his Officer, and as one in mercy deputed by him to the office of a King.

q Eccl.5.12.

The third Doctrine.

There remaineth yet one thing to bee obserued from this place: That Gods iudgements vpon others, ought to be matter of feare to vs, lest wee so offending God, should also so be punished. This is here obseruable, because (as I shewed at first) it is at the least probable, that Dauid remembring the manner of Gods dealing with Cain for killing his brother, and with Saul for back-sliding and falling away from the Lord; and perceiuing such an agreement betwixt his sinne and theirs, mooued him to make this request, that God would not cast him out of his presence. Hee was afraid the more herein, especially for that which himselfe in his owne time had seene to haue befalne his Predecessor Saul. By dishonouring God, he lost the honour of a King. Paul saith, touching the examples of Gods ancient iudgements recorded in Scripture, that they are written to admonish vs, that wee should not doe like [r] them: whereupon hee names many particular sinnes of the old Israelites, and insists vpon the iudgements which came vpon them, and still puts in this, Let vs not doe this or that, as some of them, &c. What did our Sauiour intend, when he bade, [s] Remember LOTS wife, but to moue to consider her sin, and her punishment, that so fearing the one, we might learne to take heede of the other? How doth the Spirit of God insist vpon the iustice of God vpon the Angels, [t] which kept not their first estate: vpon the world of the vngodly in the dayes of NOE: vpon the Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, turning them into ashes: but to the same end, that as Salomon saith, [u] All the children of wisedome may feare, and depart from euill? God complained against his people by Zephaniah, how that hee cut off the Nations, and made their Towres waste, and their Streets desolate, thinking that surely because thereof his people would feare, and receiue instruction; but [x] they still corrupted their works: which is an argument that God lookes for it at our hands, that wee should make vse of his iudgement vpon others, and learne thereby to receiue some good to our selues: The iudgement vpon a few, ought to be made vse of as a matter of instruction vnto all. This made Christ presse vpon these that were about him, the lamentable euidence of the sudden slaughter of the Galileans, whose bloud PILATE mingled with their owne sacrifices: and of the falling of the Towre of Siloam vpon the eighteene men, who as it seemes were labouring at it. They were apt to fall a censuring them: our Sauiour aduised them them to lay it to their owne hearts, and to make vse of it to y themselues.

The Vse.

This teacheth vs what vse wee should make of all the examples wee heare or reade of out of holy Scripture: euery one ought to be a lesson to vs, to beware how wee prouoke God. If God finde vs so offending as hee hath done others, why should wee not feare to bee so punished as were others? If thy conscience tell thee, that surely thou hast done such a fault as such an one or such an one, whose punishment is recorded in the storie of the Bible, it is time to make haste, and to goe quickly to the Lord, and to begge of him with all earnestnesse, that he would not doe to thee, as he hath done to those and those: acknowledge thy desert, but labour by prayer to auert the punishment. And thus must euery iudgement of God, which wee are witnesses of in our owne time and experience, be made vse of, euen to make our hearts to stand in awe of God, that it may stirre vp our care and watchfulnesse before wee offend, and hasten our repentance when wee haue offended: and if God doe not presently punish thee, as he hath done others, impute it not to his either not seeing thy fault, or not misliking it, or not being able to auenge it. Know, it is his mercy to bring thee to repentance, the conclusion whereof, if it bee not accordingly made vse of, will bee so much the more fearefull. When God warnes vs both by Doctrine and by example too, the fault is the greater, and the iudgement will bee the heauier when it comes.

The seuenteenth Lecture.

VERS. 11.

Take not thine holy Spirit from me.

THis is the second of those iudgements due to Dauids sinne, which he laboureth to turne aside by prayer. In this Verse our first labour here must bee, according to our wonted course, to make inquirie touching the sense, which being once found, the way to the Doctrine, and instructions of the place will be more easie. The word of chiefe difficultie is the word [Spirit.] Concerning which, albeit I find a generall concurrence of opinion in Interpreters, that by it is not meant the very Essence of that third Person in the blessed Trinitie, which we terme the Spirit; but rather some effect, and worke, and power of that Spirit: yet, herein I obserue a difference, that all doe not vnderstand it of one and the same kind of spirituall gift. Some doe expound Spirit here, to betoken the sauing graces of Gods Spirit, those spirituall blessings in heauenly things, which God

God is wont to beſtow vpon his Elect, as pledges of Adoption; ſuch as Faith, Hope, comfortable feeling of Gods fauour, ſtrength againſt ſin, ableneſſe in ſome meaſure to walke ſo as may pleaſe God, &c. Others againe doe make Spirit here, to intend ſuch indowments and gifts, as whereby the Hauer of them is abled of God to performe, and to diſcharge the ſeruices of that calling wherein God hath placed him. Indeed the word [Spirit] is often ſo taken in the Scripture; whereupon is that phraſe of the comming of the Spirit of the Lord vpon ſuch or ſuch a Iudge: as, [a] The Spirit of God came vpon OTHNIEL, and [b] vpon GIDEON, [c] vpon IPHTAH, [d] and SAMSON: all to ſhew how theſe men were inabled of God to thoſe high places of Rule and Gouernment whereunto he had aſſigned them. That skill to worke for the Tabernacle which Bezaleel and Aholiab had, is called [e] the Spirit of God, and an [f] excellent Spirit. Now, for mine owne part, I ſee no reaſon at all, why I ſhould reſtraine or limit the Interpretation of the word Spirit here, to either of theſe two ſenſes. For, inaſmuch as the word Spirit doth comprize vnder it (in the language of the Scripture) both ſauing graces, and gifts pertayning to ones perſonall and particular calling, and that the ſcope and nature of the place may well beare the expounding of Dauids purpoſe touching both; why ſhould we not vnderſtand the word at large, touching all ſuch ſpirituall gifts, the impairement whereof in himſelfe, by reaſon of his great offence, Dauid feared? Onely here will bee the doubt, this Interpretation being made, firſt, If by Spirit wee vnderſtand ſuch graces of the Spirit as doe accompanie ſaluation, and are wont in loue to be conferred vpon Gods Elect; How doth Dauid pray, that ſuch may not be taken from him, ſith wee all hold that the gifts of that kinde are neuer taken quite away from thoſe vpon whom they are once beſtowed? Whereto this is anſwered; firſt, That euen thoſe gifts in themſelues ſimply conſidered, are lyable to taking away. Their perpetuall remaining where they are once giuen, proceeds from Gods ſo working, and he continueth them by meanes, amongſt which meanes, the earneſt prayers of his children that they may ſtill inioy them, is not the ſmalleſt. Secondly, that albeit through the goodneſſe of God, thoſe ſauing graces are neuer ſo withdrawne, as that they which haue them are finally depriued of them; yet there is ſuch a kinde of reſtraining and of ſcanting them, as that the power and comfort of them is not felt, and the party (hauing them) ſeemeth to himſelfe vtterly to haue loſt them, by occaſion whereof there followeth much wo, and a great deale of diſmayednеſſe in the ſoule and conſcience of a Chriſtian: ſo that this can bee no preiudice to the interpreting of the place, touching the gifts of ſanctification; becauſe though God will not finally ſtrip his children of them, yet he may if he will, (and his will by prayer muſt bee laboured for;) and then the comfort and feeling may bee miſſing, to the no ſmall vexation of the ſoule, though the being of thoſe graces be continued ſtill. Againe, there will be yet another doubt, thus, viz. that if by Spirit wee vnderſtand ſuch gifts as pertayne to a mans calling, it will be a queſtion, how that Expoſition ſition can agree with the title of [Holy] here vſed; how ſhall theſe gifts be termed Holy, ſeeing euen many reprobates and caſt-awaies doe inioy them? It is anſwered; that howſoeuer it be, theſe gifts are in themſelues, and in their owne nature holy, as comming from ſo holy a perſon as is Gods Spirit: and then they retaine and beare the title of [Holy,] not ſo much becauſe of this effect, as making thoſe holy in whom they are, but becauſe they ought of right to be vſed in an holy ſort; ſo that all things conſidered, I take the ſenſe of this clauſe to be all one, as if Dauid had in other words ſpoken thus; The more (O LORD) I conſider my ſinne, the more ſenſible I am what I haue deſerued by it. Thou haſt, out of thy bountie, endowed mee with many worthie gifts, both for my owne ſaluation, and for the diſcharge of that high place to which thou haſt aduanced mee. It were but iuſt, if thou ſhouldeſt vtterly, and at once, ſtrip me of them all: and whether I looke vpon that which I in part feele in my ſelfe, or vpon the ſeueritie of thy wrath towards others, I haue cauſe herein to feare not a little. I beſeech thee deale not with mee as thou mighteſt, but let me ſtill feele thy Spirit both working effectually in mee, the things which concerne eternall happineſſe, and inabling mee to goe in and out before this great people, as beeing (by thy appoyntment) their King, and Gouernour, as becommeth mee. Thus is the ſenſe. Dauid had a Spirit of Regeneration, he had a Spirit of gouernement; his ſinne had giuen God cauſe to depriue him of both: his prayer is here, That hee may ſtill, in the goodneſſe of God, inioy both. The Doctrine of the place is thus,

The firſt Doctrine. That to be depriued of ſpirituall gifts and graces, hauing once receyued them, is a grieuous iudgement. The earneſtneſſe of Dauids praying againſt this, is an argument, that it is an heauy thing, when this is any mans caſe to haue the Spirit of God taken from him. No doubt, if Dauid might haue beene put to his choyce, what to haue ſuſtayned, or in what ſort to be puniſhed for his ſinning in this kind againſt God, hee would ſooner haue choſen any puniſhment then this, The loſſe of the Spirit. Therefore whereas many particulars were worthily deſerued, yet againſt this and the appurtenances to it, he prayeth eſpecially; as not caring what befell him in other things, ſo that in this he might eſcape. The Spirit of God, is one of the chiefeſt Iewels which he hath to beſtow; [g] I will powre out my Spirit, &c. It is one of the ſpeciall prerogatiues promiſed to be conferred vpon beleeuers after Chriſt: [h] My Spirit vpon thy ſeed, and my bleſsing vpon thy buds. [i] Becauſe yee are ſonnes, ſaith PAVL, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Sonne into your hearts, &c. Therefore to be depriued and ſtripped of this Spirit, is a wofull loſſe. Suppoſe we ſeriouſly what was Adams caſe, when by yeelding to the ſuggeſtions of the Deuil, his eyes were opened that he ſaw his owne nakednesſe; ſuch is his eſtate from whom God hath in his wrath withdrawne theſe ſpirituall ornaments. ADAMS caſe was farre worſe then that poore [k] Trauellers, who as hee went betwixt Ieruſalem and Ieritho, fell among Theeues, who robbed him of his rayment, and wounded him, and at their departure left him halfe dead. Now by how how much the losses of the inward man, doe exceed the damages of the outward; and the taking away of spirituall things more lamentable, then the with-drawing of things temporall; by so much was Adams estate more distressed then his, and may be taken notice of, as the liuely picture of the man, vpon whom that iudgement against which Dauid here prayeth, is inflicted. The Scripture accounts the state of such as haue once beene made partakers of the holy Ghost, and haue receyued spirituall inlightening, and then after are depriued of that which they once inioyed, to be [l] past recouerie by repentance. In such there remayneth nought but [m] a fearefull looking for of iudgement, and of violent fire to deuoure. [n] It had beene better for them neuer to haue knowne the way of Righteousnesse, saith Saint Peter: [o] The last state of such men is worse then the first, saith S. Luke. There is a greater measure of inward hardnesse seizeth on them, and the power of Satan, sometimes in some degrees restrayned, when it doth (as it were) againe reuiue, becomes farre more fierce, much more raging and violent then at first. In experience it is true, that in matters of Religion, none proue more dull and careless, then such as haue once beene somewhat forward, and doe then decline: their turning aside is for the most part into an extremitie, they fall apace, when they once begin, from the cold louing of good things, to a meere neglect; from thence, to a detestation and hate of that which they sometimes seemed to delight in. It is a terrible thing to thinke vpon the condition euen of a child of God, who hath, by the heauie hand of God vpon him, for some grieuous sinne, receyued some spirituall losse: for notwithstanding the hope that may be had, of the recouery of such an one to his ancient state; yet whose soule would it not wound for the present, to behold such a pitifull decay, as is the ordinary companion of such a forlorne estate? To see no manner of life in good seruices, no ioy in holy duties, no cheerefulnesse in matters which concerne God, a bent rather and an inclination to the worst courses, not a word sauouring of any grace or goodnesse, speeches (perhaps) of loathing and dislike of the best things, words of despaire and hopelesnesse: I say, what good heart would it not grieue to looke on these things, in one who hath bin sometimes seene euen to flourish aboue others in the best courses? Such a decayed estate cannot but be very grieuous, and full of pitie to behold: and their recouerie from out of it, will, whensoeuer it comes, abundantly iustifie the case to haue beene fearefull. There will be no little adoe before this deadnesse be reuiued, and ere a man shall bee able to fetch againe those losses which he hath receyued in spirituall things. It is like his setting vp againe, that is become a bankerupt, or as the bringing into order and good fashion, an house which hath long beene waste, and hath lyen open to the weather, and to the comming in & out of whatsoeuer would, without an inhabitant. Many a heauie sigh it will cost, many a salt teare, many a heart-breaking grone, many, and many a longing looke vp towards God, before that feeling which is gone, can be regained, and that sweetnesse which is in a manner vtterly vanished, can be quickned.

quickned. This then to ſhew the truth of this Doctrine thus far; It is a teareſull thing to loſe in ſpirituall things. The more common gifts of inlightning, and taſte of godlineſſe, when they are withdrawne, are accompanied with a kind of irrecouerable Apoſtaſie: the graces of Regeneration and Sanctification, when they are abuſed and brought to a kinde of languiſhment, it is a lamentable thing to behold the change; and no ſuch ſmart as that which is cauſed by the reuiuing and fetching againe of a decayed Chriſtian. It is (that I may allude to that Verſ. 8) as the ſetting together of a broken bone, the anguiſh whereof is inough euen to make ones heart to melt in the midſt of his bowels. Now for the fuller vnderſtanding of this point: yet, let vs ſee what it is to loſe ſuch gifts of the Spirit as concerne a mans particular function, and that calling of life, in which God hath ſet him. There bee two or three very pregnant examples in the holy Scripture to declare this. The firſt is of [p] Samſon, by his yeelding to the ſubtill perſwaſions of his Miſtris Delilah, hee diſcouered to her wherein his ſtrength lay: it is ſaid that the Lord hereupon [q] departed from him. It is meant, that on a ſudden he loſt all his wonted excellencies, with which God had indowed and furniſhed him, fit for a head and Iudge amongſt his people; by meanes whereof he fel into great miſery. For howſoeuer after vpon his true repentance, the Lord reſtored his loſſe, yet he ſmarted the while, falling into the power of his enemies the Philiſtims, who vſed him moſt baſely, put out his eyes, bound him in Fetters, and made him to grinde as a ſlaue and vaſſall in a Mill. Hee was the ſame man ſtill in outward appearance for fauour and perſonage, and for body, but yet when God had withdrawne his Spirit, ſee how of a man of valour and maieſty, he was transformed on a ſudden into the ſtate and condition of a drudge. Another example is of Saul; God called him out from amidſt the multitude, to be the King ouer his people: Inſtantly hereupon Samuel told him, [r] The Spirit of the Lord ſhould come vpon him; and ſo [ſ] accordingly it is ſaid, God gaue him another heart, and turned him into another man: that is, the Lord ſupplied him with Princely gifts, ſuch as were neceſſary for that place to which hee had aduanced him. But after followeth how, as a iudgement vpon Saul; [t] The Spirit of the Lord departed from him. God tooke away from Saul thoſe gifts with which he had adorned him. In the roome of this good Spirit, there came an euill ſpirit vpon him, that vexed him: and there followed a ſenſible change and an alteration in him, vntill hee loſt both Life and Kingdome with diſgrace. With what feare was hee after this continually exerciſed, in a perpetuall ielouſie of his owne followers, and ſo hanted and dogged with the terrours of a tormenting conſcience, that in the end after the ſeeking of helpe from a Witch, he became with his owne hands the ſlaughterer of himſelfe. To theſe two wee may annexe that of Nebuchadnezzar, one of the moſt potent and abſolute Monarchs vpon the earth; yet ſo ſtript in the Iuſtice of God, of all thoſe indowments which concerned a King, that hee became no better then a beaſt, and was therefore [u] driuen out from men, and had his dwelling with the the beasts of the field, and did eate grasse as the Oxen for a time, vntill God was pleased to restore him. And this may very well bee reputed the meaning of that which is said of Nabal, that [x] his heart died within him, and hee was like a Stone. God in his iustice depriued him of all ordinary gifts, so that he was meerly besotted, and infatuated; and had no power to make vse of any thing for his owne best good. And thus may wee euery way see the truth and certainty of this Doctrine, what a fearefull thing it is to bee depriued of the gifts of Gods Spirit: whether they be such as concerne saluation more directly and properly, or such as appertaine to a man in his place and calling. Though a man doe recouer againe, through Gods mercy, his losse in the best gifts; yet his case is lamentable for the present, and it will cost him deare, to come backe vnto his first estate: and when one is bereft of such gifts as belong to his calling, he is made a scorne to the wicked, a prey to the Deuill, and becomes euen a continuall vexation and burden to himselfe.

x 1.Sam.5.37.

The speciall and proper Vse of this Doctrine is, to admonish vsall to beware how we prouoke God, so farre as to bring vpon vs that heauy iudgement, against which here Dauid prayed. Thus we should still be stirred vp by the examples of the Scripture, what good thing soeuer wee find any of the Lords Worthies to haue sought by prayer, the same should we striue with our selues, that wee also may both loue and intreat for: and whatsoeuer againe we vnderstand any of them to haue feared, and accordingly to haue begged of God, that they might escape, the same should we labour by all meanes to be deliuered from If we cannot feele nor perceiue in our selues a conformitie herein to the affections and desires of Gods children, (viz.) that wee loue that which they desired, and be afraid of that which they did feare should come vpon them, wee doe but presume in thinking our selues to be the Lords. Well, to come neerer to the point: It is plaine by this place, that such a iudgement there is, as the losse of Gods Spirit; and sith Dauid prayed against it, now vpon occasion of this his grieuous fall, we are thence assured in the generall, that it is sinne against God, that doth expose a man to this spoile. And it hath beene taught vs formerly in the opening of some particulars in this Psalme, what hauocke sinne makes in the soule of a man, where it once preuailes; so that this thence is inferred, that sinne must be taken heed of, if wee desire that we may escape this iudgement. But now to the end that wee may profit (as it is meete wee should by this Doctrine) let vs inquire more narrowly what are the speciall euils, for which God is wont thus to punish, that so our care herein may bee the more distinct. It is not inough for a Phisician to giue his Patient a charge in the generall, to take heed how hee mis-diet himselfe; but it is fit he let him know what particular meats are to bee taken heed of, as being like to surfeit him so, as to bring him backe to his old disease. Thus I must not only giue you a watch-word in grosse, (Beware of sinne) if you would not lose the Spirit of God; though that bee a sound and a true aduertisement: but I must acquaint you with some such

The Vse.

What speciall sinnes God is wont to punish, with the withdrawing of his Spirit.

ſpecials, as if they bee not heeded, will certainely lay vs open to this danger. Firſt therefore this learne, by occaſion of this example which we haue now in hand. The giuing way to a mans owne luſts and inordinate affections, in reſpect of ſome ſpeciall ſweet ſinne, is a meanes to plucke downe vpon the ſoule this iudgement. Dauid tooke libertie to himſelfe out of a preſuming vpon Gods mercy, and in an opinion of the vnchangeableneſſe of his eſtate, (being indeed Regenerate) and in a conceit withall of recouering himſelfe quickly by Repentance, to indeuour the fulfilling of his fleſhly luſts. He thought, he might be bold for once to aduenture vpon that, which he knew in his owne heart to be a great offence. See now whereto he is come, euen to an horrible trembling before God, to loſe all both whatſoeuer might grace him as an holy Perſon with God, and which might commend him as one fit for his place and ſtate before men. In regard of the gifts of the one ſort, he felt in himſelfe (as hath beene often ſhewed) no little change; his comfort was gone, his feeling was decayed, his apprehenſion of the fauour of God was vaniſhed, horror, and diſmayedneſſe, and affrightment of ſoule was come vpon him; hee was vexed with continuall doubtings what would befall him; he could not pray with ſuch cheerefulneſſe as in times paſt; his heart was not able to affoord him that ſweet content which it was wont; the people of God began to looke heauily vpon him, as fearing him to bee but an Hypocrite; his caſe was very diſtreſſed euery way: and then for the gifts of the other kind, hee could not but remember how it had fared with Saul, himſelfe had ſeene (being one of his neere Attendants) what became of him when the Lord forſooke him, what mad and frantike paſſions came vpon him, how vnproſperouſly the affaires of State went with him. Oh! how theſe things went to the heart of Dauid, and made him cry out, O thy Spirit, O Lord, thy holy Spirit! me thinks it is euen ready to goe from me, nay, I know not well on the ſudden, whether or no I doe inioy it: I am more apt to thinke it is gone, then otherwiſe: take it not from me, I beſeech thee: the loſſe of my Crowne and Dignitie cannot grieue me ſo much, as to be thus depriued. Thus this makes it plaine, that when a man of many gifts and graces of God, turnes them into wantonneſſe, and falleth to the obeying of ſinne in ſome of the luſts thereof, it hazzards him exceedingly in this kind; what better concurreth herewith then that of [y] Samſon? was it not his intangling himſelfe with vnlawfull deſires, which brought that vpon him which the Storie calleth, The Lords departure from him? The more familiar was his Dalilah, the more was his God a ſtranger to him, and he paid full deare for his venturing. I perſwade my ſelfe, Saint Paul had an ayme at this, when he commanded [z] not to grieue the holy Spirit of God. How may we vnderſtand this? Surely, in my poore opinion thus; The Spirit of God is as one taken in to dwel with a man, and to ſoiourne in his houſe. Now, ſuppoſe ſuch an one remayning with any of vs; it may be he is not ſo rudely dealt with by vs, as to be bidden get him out of dores; he is not told in plaine termes, We would rather haue his roome then his companie;

z Epheſ.4.30.

companie; yet notwithſtanding there is ſuch rule kept in the houſe, as we know he cannot abide; ſuch perſons are welcome to vs, and come and goe, as wee are well aſſured hee cannot brooke: here is a grieuing of the gheſt; this is a kinde of wearying of him out, and this is the next way to giue him occaſion to depart: ſo in this: The graces of Gods Spirit haue taken vp their lodging in a mans heart, there they beginne to worke and ſhew themſelues; he that hath them, is glad of them, he takes comfort in them, he would not loſe them; he is farre from being ſo egregiouſly impious, as to deſire the diſplacing of them: yet notwithſtanding in a kinde of looſe and careleſſe diſpoſition, hee harboureth in the ſame boſome the loue of ſome ſpeciall ſinne, it may be wantonneſſe, it may be pride in apparell, it may be couetouſneſſe, or ſuch like; this he cheriſheth and makes much of, it is welcome to him, and he giues maintenance and entertainement to it. Here now the Spirit of God is grieued; this gheſt which comes to dwell in with it, is ſuch a vexing to it, as ESAVS Wiues were to ISAAC and REBECCA, when they came to dwell with [a] them. And indeede if this bee not ſoone and effectually diſplaced, Gods Spirit will ſhew it ſelfe to bee diſcontent, hee will bee gone out of the way before one thinks, and it will bee no eaſie thing to obtayne his returne. Thou wilt ſay, Oh, thou neuer wiſhedſt his departure. But what meanedſt thou to admit ſuch a mate into thy heart, with which Gods holy Spirit cannot ſort? And thou for grieuing this Spirit on this faſhion, ſhalt bee ſure to haue griefe good ſtore, before thou get againe thy wonted comfort. Oh, then harken to this, all you that feare God. Haſt thou receiued of God any ſpirituall gifts; gifts of knowledge in the things of God, gifts of vtterance, gifts of prayer, gifts of comfort? feeleſt thou in thy ſelfe an effectuall working of the Spirit of God, ſuch as whereby thou canſt comfortably aſſure thy ſelfe that thou art in the ſtate of grace? Take heed now that thou harbour not in thy boſome, or ſecretly admit into thy life and courſe the loue and liking of any ſpeciall ſinne. Thou ſhalt haue many furtherances to preſumption herein, and ſinne is full of deceit, thy heart full of guile, and the Deuill full of ſubtiltie: but if thou eſteemeſt thoſe gifts which God hath giuen thee, if thou wouldeſt be loth to loſe the ſweet and comfort of them, take heed how thou aduentureſt, though it be but in the leaſt degree. Thou canſt not but take ſome loſſe in regard of thy beſt bleſſings, if thou wilt needs preſume. Beware of grieuing and ſadding the Spirit of God, if thou makeſt any true account of ſuch a gheſt; doe not purchaſe the pleaſure of a baſe ſinne at ſuch a rate, as that bitterneſſe which will certainely inſue, when thou haſt once loſt thy wonted feeling. So then this is the firſt euill to be ſhunned, as neceſſarily bringing this iudgement; cheriſhing in the heart any vile affection, together with a thought-taking and a ſtudying to fulfill it.

Note.

[a] Gen.26.35.

Secondly, Is ſpirituall pride: when a man begins to lift vp himſelfe in his owne thoughts, becauſe of the ſpirituall excellencies which God hath giuen to him, which hee hath not giuen vnto others. This is an euill hardly ſhunned. It is vnpoſſible to haue good parts, and not to know it; and it is a very difficult thing for a man to know ſo much touching himſelfe, that he is thus and thus qualified, and not (ſuch is the great corruption of nature euen in the beſt) to be the better opinioned of himſelfe thereupon. It is truly ſaid, that ſpirituall pride ariſeth out of the aſhes of other ſinnes, ſo that with the abatement of other euils, and with the increaſe of ſanctification, I know not how euen at vnawares that ſteales in, and (which is ſtrange) it is noted to ſpring euen out of humilitie. A ſecret pride is ſometimes occaſioned, by not being proud. Wee ſee how God was faine to medicine Paul, for the preuenting of this ſpirituall maladie; [b] Leſt (ſaith he) I ſhould bee exalted aboue meaſure, there was giuen vnto mee a prick in the fleſh, the meſſenger of Satan, to buffet me. Thus there are ſome beginnings thereof euen in the moſt reformed. But when it comes to any greater meaſure, ſo that a man feeds this humour in himſelfe, and is ſo farre from controlling and checking it in his heart, that he rather ſeeks to vphold it, and to adde matter to it, and withall (as it moſtly falleth out) bewrayeth and diſcouereth it in the auilement and contempt of others: then looke as bloud-letting is neceſſarie, notwithſtanding the vſefulneſſe of bloud to the life of man, when the abundance thereof is apt to cauſe a diſeaſe; ſo God abates that which is made the matter of ones lifting vp himſelfe aboue his pitch. God doth alwayes reſiſt the proud, in what kind [c] ſoeuer, but hee giues grace to the humble: which ſpeech proues the point in hand, that he withdraweth and withholdeth grace from thoſe whoſe hearts bee not ſeaſoned with humilitie. It is a thing found true in experience, how ſome of excellent and extraordinarie knowledge in matters of Religion, and in worthy gifts farre exceeding a great many, who priding themſelues therein, and forgetting thereby to ſeeke the glorie of the Beſtower, haue in a manner beene vtterly infatuated, and haue runne themſelues out of their owne reach, through the violence of ſelfe-conceit: loſing ſometimes the very things themſelues, at leaſt, the power of vſing them as they ſhould. Some againe, a long time ſtrengthened by grace to a blameleſſe courſe, yet not being ſo thankefull for it as became them, and aſcribing therein too much vnto themſelues, and withall ouer-eager againſt the faylings and infirmities of others, not remembring the Apoſtles rule (of [d] conſidering themſelues,) haue beene left a little to themſelues, and let to receiue ſome great foyle, that they might be aduiſed, who it was by whoſe ſtrength they ſtood; and might alſo know, how to bee more tender towards others. This is a ſecret in Religion worthy the learning: and let euery one, whom God hath gifted in any ſpeciall meaſure, take notice of it, that he may remember that of the Apoſtle, [e] Bee not high-minded, but feare. If God haue graced thee with the ornaments of his holy Spirit, Knowledge, Vnderſtanding, Memorie, power to temper thy Affections in many things, wherein many others are ouer-carried ſometimes to their ſhame; Beware of being lifted vp hereupon in thy owne thoughts. No veſſell ſo fate to preſerue them in, as a Boxe of ſobrietie lined lined with humilitie. God will withdraw his ornaments, if we once begin, like little children, to looke and poynt where we be gay; [f] Wisdome takes vp its dwelling with the lowly. Remember often and put it well vpon thy soule; [g] What hast thou, oh man, that thou hast not receyued? These spirituall things are very rightly termed gifts, inasmuch as they bee matters of donation; and hee that giues them, reserues to himselfe a power (at pleasure) eyther to impayre them, or withdraw them.

g 1. Cor. 4. 7.

Thirdly, Negligence in vsing such gifts as God bestowes, to the end for which they are bestowed. [h] This our Sauiour taught in the parable of the Talents. Hee that kept his Talent in a napkin, not imploying it to the behoofe of his master, according to appoyntment, from him the Talent was taken, and giuen vnto him that had beene better husband. There shall be a continuall supply of the graces of God to those that make conscience of good things; [i] The liberall person shall haue plentie. God will still adde to him who is carefull to imploy that good which he hath receyued. Thus Paul, inasmuch as being called to the worke of the Ministrie, hee [k] straightway preached Christ in the Synagogues, &c. he increased in strength. And therein [l] the way of the righteous, is as the Sunne which shineth more and more vnto the perfit day. God doth on the contrary, curse their gifts, and make them to abate, and languish, and to decay by little and little in them, who are careless in imploying them. Here also in this we may appeale to experience for proofe. There is nothing more ordinary; men of excellent parts, to become (as I may so speake) euen no-bodie through their owne neglect. Their gifts perish in them for lacke of vse; euen like a womans brests, which doe soone dry vp, if they be not well and often drawne. Thus, many of great sufficiencie for matters of gouernement in the Common-wealth, for the worke of the Ministrie in the Church, become in the iudgement of God, vpon their conscionlesse vse of the things which God hath measured to them, like [m] the Vine; of the timber whereof a man cannot take for any worke (no not) as much, as to make a pinne to hang a bottle on. Thus many priuate Christians through disvse become cold, slacke, heauie, heartlesse, spiritlesse in the best performances, and for lacke of spending their gifts so, as that they might increase their owne store, and be vseful also vnto others, grow backe more and more, till they come almost to that nothing spoken of by [n] Paul. And when men of knowledge, and the like gifts, doe not conscionably and studiously diuert their gifts to the guiding and ordering of their owne wayes, and to the reformation of their owne liues, but only satisfie themselues with a kind of contemplatiue religion, those parts with which God hath furnished them, become meere bubbles, and are turned into that which the Apostle termes [o] vaine iangling, and they themselues become [p] vaine talkers. This holds with that the Apostle saith, how that [q] some, putting away a good Conscience, haue made shipwracke concerning Faith: vnderstanding by Faith, the knowledge of the Doctrine which is according to godlinesse, and teaching therein thus much, that when men regard holineſſe but little, not caring to ioyne practice with their knowledge, they loſe euen it alſo; their verie profeſſion and knowledge vaniſh into nothing. Nay, wee ſee this curſe of God to follow herein ſo cloſe, that euen men loſe their outward ſufficiencie through neglect. Men apt and actiue many wayes for many things appertayning vnto outward life, and that can doe things with much ingenuitie aboue other men; yet while they are careleſſe of walking to the glorie of God in a profitable courſe, they loſe their dexteritie, and become like drones, that can flye about and ſuck from others, but can gather nothing. Here is then matter againe of calling vpon all, to whom God hath giuen gifts, that they be diligent in imploying them. A little meaſure made vſe of, groweth to a great perfection: a great deale lapt vp in a cloth, doth quickly come to nothing. He that vſeth his knowledge to the inſtruction of others, and to the reformation of himſelfe, the more he ſpends, the more he thriues. There ſhall be ſtill a giuing vnto him, and he ſhall haue abundance.

Fourthly, The loue and care of earthly things. This alſo is a cauſe of Gods withdrawing the gifts and graces of his Spirit. Hereupon it is ſaid by our Sauiour in the parable of the Seede, that with this, men are choked as with Thornes, ſo that the Word of God receyued into the heart, [r] bringeth forth no fruit. Hence alſo is that of Saint PAVL, that [ſ] the deſire of wealth carrieth into many fooliſh and noyſome Luſts, by which men are drowned into perdition, and are ſoone carried away to an erring from the Faith. Hereby are many diſabled, and ſtrangely altered, both in matters of Sanctification, and in the things that concerne their ſpeciall callings. For matters of Sanctification, by this meanes many loſe their zeale, their care, their forwardneſſe, and whiles they looke too earneſtly on the world, grow ſlacke in the things which concerne eternitie. Whereupon is that which our Sauiour ſaith touching [t] the impoſſibilitie for a rich man to enter into the Kingdome of God. [u] The amitie of the World, is the enmity of God: and, [x] If any man loue the World, the loue of the Father is not in him. This carrieth away the time, and ſtealeth away the thoughts, ſo that there cannot through it, be ſuch a thriuing in mattters of God as ought to be: and when there is no proceeding therein, there is a manifeſt and a certaine going backe. The Spirit of God is withdrawne, when the gifts and graces thereof doe not increaſe: and then agayne, for the things which concerne mens particulars and perſonall callings, what one thing is there, which doth ſooner dull vp the heart, and beſot the mind, then the ſtrength of the affection vnto earthly things? The Spirit of God ſaith, that [y] gifts doe blind the eyes of the wiſe: The reſpect thereto robs a man of his other gifts, and makes him that he cannot eſpie the difference betwixt good and euill, betwixt iuſt and vniuſt; it beſots him ſo, and ſo bereaueth him of ordinarie conceit, that as a man giuen ouer vnto baſeneſſe of diſpoſition, without reſpect vnto ought elſe ſaue only gayne, [z] He will tranſgreſſe for a piece of bread: he will not ſticke at ought for the ſmalleſt profit: and to what a wofull full passe are many brought, that are of great endowments for the seruice of the Church, whiles with Demas they fall to embrace the present world? their hearts being set vpon the basket, and vpon the store, there is a kind of fatnesse commeth vpon their hearts, and they haue neither care nor power to be profitable to Gods Church. And thus it fareth also with priuate Christians for their particular estates, that by falling too much in loue with the world, they goe backe in spirituall things apace, they lose more in the one, then they can with all their greedinesse purchase in the other. Thus haue I thought good to inlarge this point, it being (vnlesse I much mistake) exceeding necessarie. Dauid prayeth that Gods Spirit may not bee taken from him, that neither the gifts of Sanctification, by this his foule sinne may be impayred, nor the gifts necessarie for him in his calling as a King, might bee withdrawne. His thus praying argueth this kind of losse to bee a grieuous iudgement, and so much hath beene also cleered vnto vs by the Scriptures: sith it is a wofull thing to be thus punished, we haue beene exhorted to beware in generall how that wee prouoke God; especially wee haue beene vrged in particular, to stand vpon our guard against foure sinnes, as especially pulling on this iudgement. First, Harbouring in our bosomes the affection and loue to some sweet sinne. Secondly, Pride in our selues in respect of those gifts with which it hath pleased God to furnish vs. Thirdly, Carelesnesse to make good vse of the gifts which God hath giuen vs. Fourthly, Strength of loue, and too much bent of affection vnto earthly things. It hath beene prooued to vs, that whereas sinne generally robs the soule of that spirituall furniture with which God adornes it, these foure sinnes especially. And therefore if we desire, that the graces of God once conferred on vs, may be continued and increased in vs; here must bee our care, to suppresse and mortifie all vnlawfull motions, to striue to increase in humilitie, according as wee shall increase in other gifts, to bee faithfull Vsers of the graces of God which wee doe inioy, and to beware of insnarement with the desire and loue of earthly things.

And thus we haue in two Sermons, that which Dauid prayed against in this Verse. He would still liue before him in his Church as a Christian, serue in his place as his King; he would neither lose those spirituall gifts which concerned saluation, nor those without which hee could not discharge his high calling of a King and Gouernour as became him.

VERS. 12.

Restore to me the ioy of thy saluation.

AS Dauid proceedes and goeth on still in petitioning the Lord for such things as were necessarie for his present case; so the generall mould and carriage of the seuerall Verses, especially of the three next going before, and this wherein his requests be presented, are alike. He links his suites in by payres and couples, ioyning them neerest together in current and course of words, which in their nature and state did best agree. So that here in this Verse, we are occasioned to take notice of two further Requests of Dauid, couched and carryed in the like forme; and are therefore to bee handled and treated on after the same fashion. First, Restore to mee the ioy of thy saluation. Secondly, Stablish me with thy free Spirit. I desire not to vary in my manner of proceeding; and therefore now that I haue, as it were, taken the Verse abroad, and parted it into two Petitions, the next thing that you shall expect from me, is the sense and meaning of the words of the former; and after that the Doctrine. Restore to mee, &c. The very first view of the words giues to vnderstand, that Dauid craues here the restitution of a decayed and lost commoditie, which here hee termes the ioy of Gods saluation; wherein what he craues wee must now inquire. Generally, by Ioy of Gods saluation, hee vnderstands, Comfort and inward reioycing in the assurance of saluation. But now more particularly wee must consider, that Saluation in Scripture betokeneth two things. First, The estate of blessednesse in heauen, which we commonly terme saluation; and so it is opposed to damnation, by which wee vnderstand the condition of those which are adiudged to Hell: so is the word often vsed, as, [a] Finish your saluation, &c. and, [b] Which are kept, &c. vnto saluation, &c. Secondly, Outward safetie and protection in this world, preseruation from dangers, deliuerance from enemies, shelter and shrowding from such mischiefs as the life of man is subiect to. Thus is the word vsed in the speech of [c] Moses to the Israelites, when they were pursued at the red Sea by the Egyptians: Feare yee not, stand still, and behold the saluation of the Lord, &c. so [d] Dauid being greatly persecuted and prosecuted by violent and malicious enemies, desires God to assist him, and to stand on his side against them, and so to assure him, that whatsoeuer befell him, he would bee his saluation, hee would bee his defence and shield against all his opposites. Now as I said in my last Sermon of the word Spirit, that so long as it was not found repugnant

Saluation signifieth two things.

to the ſcope and purpoſe of the place, it could not be amiſſe to take it in the largeſt ſenſe, ſo ſay I now touching the word Saluation. I ſee no inconuenience in it at all, to vnderſtand as much by it as the word betokeneth in the language of the Scripture, eſpecially when being ſo expounded, it ſorts ſo well with Dauids intendment here, as ſhall appeare if wee turne his ſuite into other words, on this faſhion: I was wont, O Lord, to feele in my ſoule much comfort: and the aſſurances which I had, both of future happineſſe, and of the benefit of thy continuall watching ouer me to preſerue me in my waies, did afford me great content; but ſince my fall into this euill, I perceiue my ſelfe in a manner quite depriued of this ſecret ſweetneſſe. It is thou only, who art able to repoſſeſſe mee with this Iewell: Oh, I beſeech thee reſtore it me againe, and let mee reioyce as I was wont, both in the certaine expectation of eternall bliſſe, and in the aſſurance to be ſhaddowed vnder the wings of thine eſpeciall prouidence whiles I liue. Thus wee haue the ſenſe and meaning of theſe words. The generall matter of Requeſt, is the reſtoring of a ſpirituall loſſe: the particularity of that thing loſt, is comfort in the knowledge of Gods fauour toward him, and care for him both in regard of preſent ſafety and in reſpect of future bleſſedneſſe. Indeed the one of theſe depends on the other; the one cannot be without the other. Thoſe whom God will ſaue in heauen, of them hee takes an eſpeciall charge whiles they are here on earth: and the ſafety which men haue here in the world in outward things, is no ſafety indeed, but a preparing for the day of ſlaughter, if they haue not a well-grounded hope of eternall ſaluation with God in his Kingdome. Let vs conſider now of the Doctrine. There is a twofold Doctrine hence. The firſt is thus,

The firſt Doctrine.

That it is the nature and property of ſinne, to rob a mans ſoule of all true comfort. We cannot be better aſſured hereof, then by looking well vpon this example. Dauids words doe argue in him an abatement and a loſſe of comfort: and what ſhall wee, what can wee thinke to haue beene the cauſe thereof but this great ſinne? The guiltineſſe thereof brought ſuch an horror into his conſcience, that all the ſweet refreſhing which his ſoule was wont to feele in the apprehenſion of Gods fauour towards him, was now quite gone and vtterly decaied. He felt nothing now but trembling and diſmayedneſſe, there was (as it were) a continuall ſound of feare in his eares: and hee whoſe heart in the time of danger, was wont to be as [c] the heart of a Lyon, hee did now ſhrinke and faint, and euery ſmall occaſion was inough to amaze his ſpirits, and diſcourage him. Dauid conſidering his place, who was a King, wanted not ordinary outward meanes to acheere his heart, ſuch as the men of the world doe much both eſteeme and vſe in thoſe caſes. What pleaſure might he not haue had, whether by Muſike, or Paſtimes, or Company? yet the ioy of ſaluation being wanting, the whole world was not able to yeeld that which might indeede content him. The remembrance of his foule fact was euer ſmiting vpon his heart, and raiſing vp affrightment in his thoughts; the guilt hereof was like a Thorne in the ioynt, which

c 2. Sam. 17. 10.

which cauſeth a continuall aking and beating, and giues a man no reſt, but rather doth become ſorer and ſorer vntill it be remoued. Thus this example makes it playne, that the entertainement of ſinne into the heart, ſo as to fall into loue and liking with it, & in ſome ſpeciall particulars, to indeuour and labour to accompliſh it, is a meanes of baniſhing out all true comfort. Securitie there may be, preſumption there may be, carnall confidence there may be, a ſecret bleſſing of ones ſelfe (by ſaying, Tuſh, I ſhall haue peace) there may be; but true comfort, ſuch as ſhal inable a man cherefully to rayſe vp his thoughts towards heauen, and thinke vpon God with reioycing and contentment, and to goe on in ones courſe, in a reſolued expectation of his gracious protection, ſuch I am ſure there cannot be; no more then there can be gladneſſe in a malefactor, at the ſight of an officer; or willingneſſe in a man conuicted in himſelfe, and knowne to others to be chargeable with a foule offence, to come into the face and preſence of a Iudge. Looke mee vpon the firſt offender that euer was, and ſee how the loſſe of inward ioy in God, was one of the firſt things which diſcouered it ſelfe in him, after he had falne from God by diſobedience: whence came that hiding from the preſence of the Lord, and that fearing of the voyce of God: What ayled Adam, that he, who was wont to be (as I may ſay) bold before God, and full of life and ſpirit in his preſence, ſhould now be ready to thruſt his head into a buſh, and to deſire rather to be any where, then where God was; what ayled him (I ſay) or whence was this, but from the conſcience of a fault? Euery noyſe now makes him afraid, the wagging of euery twig in the garden, was enough to make him quake, when before, while he was in his innocencie, nothing was able to dishearten him. Where was PETERS ioy? where was his comfort, when he had doubled and trebled the deniall of his Maſter? What was he able to looke on, that would not be ſome occaſion to diſmay him? To caſt his eye on Chriſt, how could it but fill his face with ſhame, and rent his heart in twaine, to conſider how worthie a Maſter he had diſclaimed, and againſt whoſe gracious warning he had ſinned? if he lifted vp his face towards heauen, what could he fetch thence but more vexation by the thought of him whom he had denied in this ſort, and by the expectation of ſome great vengeance to come vpon him for Apoſtacie? Returned hee home into himſelfe, it was worſt of all. What could his owne heart doe leſſe, then vrge him with his owne fact, and cry ſhame vpon him for his groſſe preſumption, or for his fainting ſo ſoone euen at the words of a ſimple Maide? Should he go to his fellow Diſciples? Alas, with what face could he look on them? who had heard him warned, and had beene witneſſes of his confident proteſtation, neuer (no not with death) to be put downe; and ſhould now ſee him come, among them, like one foyled in the combat, or as a runne-away in the open field? The very ſight of the high Prieſts houſe, yea the very crowing of a Cocke, euen ſuch things as theſe, were enough to ſad his ſoule, and to increaſe the horror of his perplexed ſpirit. Neuer could he be well, vntill he had wept his fill, and had laboured red by humiliation to make peace with God, till he was brought in hope of the remouall and riddance of his sin by a gracious pardon. Indeed in reason, how can a man with comfort rayse vp his thoughts towards his God? how can he with cheerefulnesse present himselfe vnto him? how can he look to receiue any good from him? how can he promise vnto himselfe eyther future happinesse in heauen, or the Lords good hand to be vpon him for his protection and guidance, and safe conuoy thorow this earth, so long as he lyeth wallowing in that which God abhors, and is chargeable in his soule with that, which separates and diuides betwixt a man and his God? It was an excellent speech of Azariah the Prophet, to King Asa, and all Iudah and [f] Beniamin: The Lord is with you, while you are with him; and if yee forsake him, he will forsake you. God is with vs by protection & fauour, so long as we be with him by obedience: [g] Walke before mee, and be thou vpright, and I will make my Couenant betweene mee and thee, said God to ABRAHAM. [h] His Angel pitcheth about them that feare him, [i] to keepe them in their wayes. Thus are the promises of Gods protection and kindnesse, limited to our obedience and conscionable walking; so that [k] in the feare of the Lord there is assured strength. When a man walketh in the waies of his owne heart, he cannot haue assurance of being (as it were) vnder Gods charge, and of hauing the benefit of his particular prouidence, in respect whereof [l] the eyes of the Lord are said to be vpon the righteous. Now what true solid comfort can a man haue, hauing no certainty of interest into Christ; nay, rather when the conscience of his owne vnconscionable course shall make him feare God as an auenger; which he cannot chuse but doe, [m] when Iniquitie shall compasse him about, as at his heeles? And thus far of the proofe of the Doctrine, that wee may see what a theefe sinne is, and how pretending to giue vs satisfaction one way, it robs vs of a most precious Iewel; Ioy in the saluation of God, another way.

The Vse.

This Doctrine still presseth that vpon vs, wherof we haue had often occasion to be remembred in this Psalme: viz. a taking heed to our waies, that we cherish not in our selues any knowne euill, nor giue ouer our selues to the willing practice of any apparant sinne. Corruption striuen against, sinne falne into by occasion, and through infirmitie, cannot depriue a man of his comfort; nay, it shall be to the increasing of a mans ioy, when his soule can testifie, that corruption is irkesome to him, and that it is a kind of vexing to him, that he cannot master it: but when he doth aduisedly, and settledly, and with deliberation and purpose do that which is naught, seeking to gather arguments together in his thoughts, whereby he may imbolden himselfe to doe amisse, and to continue in the practice of it, when he hath begun, and pleaseth himselfe therein, hauing a kind of resolution (at the least not yet) to doe otherwise: this will certainely depriue him of all sound comfort. He may in such a course sooth vp and flatter himselfe, and make himselfe beleeue it is all well enough; and he may for the time receiue such a kind of sensuall and brutish satisfaction, by the pleasure of sin, that he will not reckon much (for the

the time) of any other comfort: but when his conſcience comes to bee awaked, and he ſhall, by occaſion of ſome affliction or ſickneſſe, or ſome powerfull working of the Word of God vpon his ſoule, retyre himſelfe into his owne thoughts; then he ſhall plainly ſee, that ſinne hath bereft him quite of that which is his comfort indeed. How can hee vpon any good ground, expect any thing from God but iudgement? how can hee promiſe to himſelfe a bleſſing from him in any of his vndertakings? how ſhall hee chooſe rather but feare, that the Lord will curſe all vnto him, when hee ſeeth by the plaine and vndenyable euidence of his owne conſcience, that his whole courſe hath beene euen an abuſe of Gods goodneſſe, and a turning of his graces into wantonneſſe? he cannot then but be aſhamed and confounded to lift vp his eyes towards God, the continuall thought of vengeance euen to hunt him to deſtruction, will diſmay him. Oh! then if thou deſireſt that thou mayeſt indeed haue peace towards God, that the Lord may be to thee as he promiſed to be to ABRAHAM, [o] Thy Buckler, and thy exceeding great reward, that [p] he may compaſſe thee with fauour as with a ſhield, that [q] he may make a hedge about thee, and about all that thou haſt on euery ſide, as he did to Iob: that [r] he may cauſe whatſoeuer thou ſhalt doe to proſper: bringing [s] all things to worke together for the beſt on thee: [t] keeping thy ſoule, and preſeruing both thy going out, and thy comming in: bind thy ſelfe to a circumſpect walking, [u] ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy wayes be ordered aright: beware of yeelding obedience to ſinne in the luſts thereof; ſtriue to haue thy fruit in holineſſe; aduenture not to diſpenſe with thy ſelfe for any thing, which thou knoweſt to be a ſinne againſt God. No man knoweth but he which hath felt it, no man can ſo much as coniecture it, but he to whom it is manifeſted by experience, what ſweet comfort the ſoule of that man feeles, in the aſſurance of Gods continuall ſhrowding, who thus binds himſelfe to keep his heart continually in the feare of God. Though the world thinks him to liue a kind of dull and vncomfortable life, becauſe he doth abridge and ſequeſter himſelfe from thoſe vanities, wherein ſome place their chiefeſt happineſſe; and liue, as it were, cooped vp in regard of thoſe wayes of libertie wherein other walke, yet what ioy or what happineſſe can equall this, when a man can looke vp cheerefully to God, without any checks of conſcience for any preſumptuous and wilfull ſinning againſt his Maieſtie, and can in all things comfortably expect a bleſſing from him, as hauing cared to walke before him in ſinceritie? Men neglecting this holy and religious courſe, and emboldening themſelues to liue after the fleſh, and to doe that which is right in their owne eyes, and to faſhion themſelues like vnto the world, may beare it out confidently awhile, as if they had all the Ioy; but when theſe outward contentments ſhall forſake them, and they can no more inioy them, and that their thoughts are ſummoned to the remembrance of ſome further matter, where will their comfort bee? It will euen vaniſh like a rotten thing, and as a garment that is Moth-eaten. Let this be a motiue to vs to a religious and conſcionable courſe; let vs bind our ſelues to the good behauiour behauiour towards God, if we desire the ioy of his saluation: why should we haue comfort from him, if hee shall receiue no constant and conscionable obedience from vs? And let those that haue once felt this Ioy, which Dauid here speaks of, bee aduertised by Dauids example, to beware of impeaching it. It is sweet inioying ioy, it is wofull losing it: wee see here how much once aduenturing to sinne against knowledge, and against conscience, did indanger it. I am perswaded, that at this time Dauid would willingly haue giuen his Kingdome to regaine it. It is no safe meddling in this kinde. There is nothing promiseth to bring a man so much ioy as a grosse sinne, when it presseth vpon a mans thoughts for intertainement; but it giuing ioy to the flesh, takes away at vnawares the ioy of the Spirit. Thus concerning the first Doctrine. The second followeth, and it is thus;

The second Doctrine.

That it is not vnpossible, but that the ioy and comfort which some great sinne hath taken away, may againe by true repentance bee restored. This point is as iustifiable from hence, as was the former Doctrine. Dauids losing this Ioy, is a proofe, that by a great sinne a man may bee robbed of this Iewell; his prayer for the restitution of it, confirmeth it also that wee may pray so too, hauing receiued the like losse. To what end shall such a prayer be, if there be not hope of obtayning that for which the prayer is? Farre be it from vs to thinke that Dauid prayed at vncertainty herein, and powred out this request to God vpon no ground. No doubt, he knew the possibility of recouering his losse, by the prayers of repentance: yea, and did also in time come to as great a feeling thereof as euer at any time he had inioyed. It is generally thought, that Psalme 32. was made vpon the same occasion whereupon this Psalme was. It is manifest that it was indited vpon occasion of some great sinne: for therein Dauid shewes how his carriage was therein, seeking ease by silence, but finding none, vntill he had laid open his fault at full by sincere confession. Now we know that Dauid was neuer ouertaken with any foule offence, saue only this one: now there wee haue a sure proofe of his recouering this Ioy: for there (Vers. 7.) hee speakes very directly, and very effectually, as one sensible of that, which he here seemeth to haue lost. Hee saith confidently, that God is his secret place, and the compasser of him about with ioyfull deliuerance. Certainely, when hee spake this, he was ioyfull in the Lords saluation, and thereupon hee both annexeth to that Verse, that note [Selah] which is generally thought to be a marke of some speciall matter, when it is vsed; and withall writing that Psalme to giue instruction, (as the title sheweth) he exhorts all the Godly to reioycing and gladnesse, Vers. 11. both that they should ioy on his behalfe, vpon whom God had looked now so graciously, and should take heart to themselues also, out of assurance by his example, that God will not take his seruants at the hardest: but that albeit hee may withdraw the feeling of this good for their humbling, yet after he hath schooled them well, he will restore it againe vnto them for their comfort. For a further proofe yet, it is out of all question, that the third Psalme was made after this Pſalme: for it is intituled, A Pſalme of DAVID when he fled from ABSALOM: a matter (wee well know) occaſioned after this fault; and indeed it was a part of that correction, with which God was pleaſed to exerciſe Dauid for this treſpaſſe, according as Nathan told him, [x] That God would rayſe euill againſt him out of his owne houſe. Now, marke what hee ſaith in that Pſalme, and in what excellent ſpeeches hee reſts himſelfe vpon the ſaluation of God. He profeſſeth, that howſoeuer his Aduerſaries were multiplyed, and began to triumph againſt him, as one forſaken and left of God; yet he knew the Lord was a Buckler for him, his Glorie, and the Lifter vp of his head: he had called vpon the Lord with his voice, and he heard him out of his holy Mountayne: he would amidſt all theſe dangers ſleepe ſecurely vpon the lap of Gods protection, not fearing for ten thouſand that had ſet themſelues againſt him round about. Hereupon he ſpeaks confidently of the ouerthrow of his enemies, as if he ſaw them alreadie to be diſcomfited: Thou haſt ſmitten all mine enemies vpon the cheeke bone, Verſ.7. Shall we thinke other, but Dauid had now recouered his loſſe? had not Ioy triumphed ouer Diſcouragement? had not the bright beames of comfort diſperſed the miſts and fogs of all diſmayednеſſe? Marke how comfortably againe Dauid ſpake in thoſe which are called [y] the laſt words of DAVID: The Lord hath made with me an euerlaſting Couenant, in all points perfit and ſure: was not Dauid well come to himſelfe againe, ſhall wee thinke, when he thus ſpake? How feelingly, when he was neere his end, could he call God to witneſſe in a matter of importance, about the ſettling of the Kingdome in Salomon, by the name of that Lord, [z] Who had redeemed his ſoule out of all aduerſitie? had he not comfort in his God when hee ſo ſpake? Thus it is euery way manifeſt, that both Dauid, when he thus prayed, hoped, and that by Faith, to get againe his decayed ioy, and had it againe accordingly. As much may be euidenced by the example of Peter. His weeping bitterly argued the impairement of his ioy; and if hee had not againe recouered that ioy, could he (as it is ſaid he did) haue [a] reioyced in being beaten for the Name of Chriſt? could he haue ſpoken ſo feelingly of Gods [b] abundant mercy begetting vs vnto a liuely hope by Ieſus Chriſt, and of that ioy vnſpeakable and glorious, which comes to the Elect of God by the triall of their [c] Faith? could he with that peacefulneſſe of ſpirit haue ſpoken of the neerneſſe of the time, in which he was to [d] lay downe his Tabernacle? Thus may a man conclude, that albeit God doe ſhew his children great trouble for offending him, and make them know by turning their wonted ioy either into dulneſſe or vexation, what it is to abuſe his mercy: yet he will returne and reuiue them, and renew them like the Eagles: [e] The Lord will not forſake for euer, he will haue compaſſion according to the multitude of his mercies. This may ſerue to proue this Doctrine.

The Vſe.

This is not to embolden any to runne wilfully vpon the hazzard of loſing his feeling and comfort in the fauour of God, becauſe of the poſſibilitie of regayning it: for what wiſe man will voluntarily ſuffer ſhipwracke, and caſt away all that euer hee hath at Sea, becauſe a man may by

by the helpe of good friends, or some like meanes, recouer all his losses, and be a richer man then he was before? It is better to keepe, if it may be, that which one hath, then put the matter to such an aduenture. But this Doctrine is to cherish an hope in such as haue beene ouer taken by the subtiltie of the Deuill, and haue taken a foile in some particular in such a measure, that they haue lost that sensible sweetnesse in Religion, and in the working of the graces of God within them, which they were sometimes partakers of and so now begin to droope, and hang downe their heads through discouragement. I would not speake any thing to the abatement and lessening of that dutie of humiliation whereto such are bound. Iust cause haue they to bewaile with bitternesse the miscarriage of themselues while they liue, but yet it is necessarie they should know, that God hath not left them vtterly without hope. Dauid is both an example to vs, how a man may hazzard himselfe, and how hee may recouer himselfe in this case. A great sinne may depriue him of this Ioy: vnfayned Repentance may againe restore him to his Ioy. Hast thou gone after Dauid in the one, and smarted with him accordingly in taking like losse to that he tooke; Oh! labour to follow him in the other, and thou shalt assuredly euen as hee did, recouer all againe with an aduantage. Indeuour the ripping vp of thy heart, get thee to the Lord in humilitie, bewaile there thy selfe, that hast thus wilfully depriued thy selfe of such an inestimable Iewel, as the ioy of his saluation, neuer leaue crying with importunitie with Dauid here, Restore, restore, O Lord. Giue mee againe, although vnworthy, that which I once had, and am now, for not due esteeming it, very deseruedly bereft of. And though thou doe not get it by and by vpon the first or second asking, yet doe not giue ouer; who art thou, that thy prayers should receiue such quicke successe? vnderstand the cause of Gods putting thee off, not to bee because hee meanes vtterly to denie thee, but because hee would yet more humble thee: the longer thou art in recouering this Treasure, the more thou wilt apprehend thy fault in losing it, the more thou wilt esteeme and value it when againe it is restored. And if thou feelest in thy selfe that thou canst gather heart and hope out of such an example as this is, to goe to God to craue this fauour of him, this may be a sure pledge vnto thee that the rest is comming. He that hath giuen thee a heart to desire it, the thing it selfe also in his appointed time hee will certainely bestow. And thus haue I shewed what wee may learne out of the first Clause of this Verse; wee see what sinne in Gods iustice can doe. Bee a man neuer so full of feeling, neuer so abundant in the comfortable apprehension of Gods fauour, neuer so sensible of the working of the graces of Gods Spirit within him, neuer so ioyfull because of the assurance of Gods continuall and gracious protection; yet if he shall yeeld so much to the lust and inordinate affection of his owne heart, this shall strip him cleane of all, and turne all his Ioy into horror and dismaydnesse. Wee see againe what Repentance through Gods mercy can doe. Be a man neuer so perplexed in himselfe, neuer so much out of heart, neuer so much to seeke of comfort, neuer so much in a continuall feare to be seized vpon by some heauy iudgement for offending God: yet shall this restore him againe to his former estate, this shall lift him vp againe by degrees, vntill he come to his ancient feeling. Both these are to be taken together, because of Satans subtiltie. Before a child of God yeelds to an euill of an hainous nature, the Deuill will make him beleeue he may doe it without preiudice; God will not by and by withdraw his grace: his loue is more constant and stable vnto those whom he hath once imbraced. Thus hee beguiles. But when one is in, and ouertaken, and hath lost that which hee thought could neuer haue beene withdrawne; then hee workes on the other side: Oh, God will neuer bee reconciled, he will neuer restore that, which hath beene so wilfully cast away: It is in vaine to imagine a recouery. If it be possible, let him deceiue thee neither way: not the first, if it may be, in drawing thee through a presuming vpon thy state into a foule offence; yet at the least, if he haue beene too hard for thee in that, yet neuer yeeld to him in the other: make no doubt of restitution by repentance. Labour thou to make Dauids suite with Dauids heart, thou canst not misse of the like successe as Dauid had. This is the summe.

Note.

The second Clause followes, Stablish mee with thy free Spirit. Here two things. First, The particularitie of the fauour which Dauid craues. Secondly, The instrument or meanes whereby hee would that fauour should be wrought. First, The particularity of the fauour which Dauid craues, Stablishment, Confirmation in good.

The third Doctrine.

The Doctrine is, That without Gods vpholding, man hath of himselfe no power to withstand any the least occasion or temptation tending vnto sinne. DAVID speakes here as a man sensible of his owne weakenesse; he knew well, that howsoeuer he was now in the way of Repentance, and was looking towards a better course, yet as hee was not come about of himselfe, so neither could he persist in it by his owne strength: if the Lord should leaue him to himselfe, hee conceiued it to bee very possible for him to fall againe and againe into this very sinne; and the Deuill, who had preuailed against him in this, in other things also might intangle him: therefore he desires the Lord to stablish him. Weake, O Lord, I am of my selfe; O let it bee thy gracious pleasure to vphold mee. In such kinde of requests as this, Dauid is frequent: [f] Keepe thy Seruant from presumptuous sinnes: [g] Stay thou me, and I shall bee safe: [h] Direct my steps in thy Word. These speeches argue Dauid to haue felt that weakenesse in himselfe, that vnlesse the Lord did vnder-prop him, there was no euill so foule, no sinne so grieuous, but hee might againe and againe fall into it, yea, and euen bee ouercome and mastered by it. What is the reason our Sauiour in his Prayer teacheth vs to pray, not to bee led into temptation, and to the same effect [i] else-where, but because of our selues wee are vnable to resist temptation, or to saue our selues from becomming euen the very slaues of sinne, vnlesse the Lord in mercy shall inable and strengthen vs thereunto? [k] In his owne might shall no man be strong, said

ſaid ANNAH, SAMVELS mother. PAVL exhorting to be ſtrong againſt Satan, deliuereth this exhortation thus; [l] Be ſtrong in the Lord: inſinuating that a man muſt ſeeke ſtrengthening from aboue, if he deſire to haue the victorie. Take vs as wee are of our ſelues, wee haue [m] no ſtrength. Wee ſee Satan preuayled againſt Adam in his innocencie: how can we thinke to ſtand out againſt him of our ſelues in our decayed eſtate? The Deuil is too ſubtill for vs, that wee ſhould be able to wind our ſelues from him, vnleſſe the Lord giue vs that wiſdome which hee gaue to Paul, not to [n] bee ignorant of his wiles. There is no euill which he ſhall at any time ſeeke to draw vs into, but our nature is inclineable to it, and the baits by which he ſeekes to allure vs, are all of them very pleaſing and delightfull vnto vs. Whom will not profit perſwade? whom will not pleaſure entice? whom will not example and cuſtome draw? let a man be left vnto himſelfe, theſe are arguments too forcible, and too full of power for him to reſiſt. How ſoone was LOT ouertaken? [o] how eaſily drawne to the firſt and ſecond committing of an vnnaturall ſinne? How quickly was our Dauid intangled? the very ſight of Bathſheba caught him, and carried him (as it were) captiue into a double euill; adulterie, to ſatisfie luſt; murder, to conceale [p] adulterie? It ſeemes there was no great adoe to bring Peter to the deniall of his Maſter, the very firſt onſet ſhooke him in no ſlender meaſure; and if the Lord in mercie had not looked backe vpon him, thereby to worke vpon his conſcience, well may we thinke he would haue gone on from one wickedneſſe to another, paſt all hope and poſſibilitie of returne. Was not Paul ſenſible of a great deale of weakneſſe in himſelfe, when he ſaid, That though to [q] will was preſent with him, yet he had no power to doe that which was good? Let it be noted and conſidered in experience, with what violence men are carried euen head-long into euill; how ſmall occaſion preuayleth with them to make them ſinne, how forward they be of themſelues without a perſwader; and then what adoe there is to ſtop them in an vngodly courſe, and to bring them to any meaſure of repentance: it is a kind of death to them to breake off an euill; it is like that which Chriſt calleth the plucking out of the right eye, or the cutting off the right hand: I ſay, let but this be obſerued as it falleth out in common courſe, and wee cannot but acknowledge it to be true, that man of himſelfe cannot ſtand againſt the allurements and prouocations tending to the drawing of him into ſinne: it is impoſſible for him of himſelfe to ſtand vpright.

This is the reaſon why ſtabliſhment is in the Scripture ſought for from God, and to him aſcribed as his proper act: [r] All ye that truſt in the Lord, bee ſtrong, and he ſhall ſtabliſh your heart: [ſ] the Lord vpholdeth the iuſt men. [t] The Lord ſhall confirme you vnto the end: [u] It is God which ſtabliſheth vs: [x] The Lord make your hearts ſtable, &c. [y] The Lord is faithfull, who will ſtabliſh you: [z] The God of all grace, &c. ſtrength and ſtabliſh you. Thus is the truth of this Doctrine plainely and ſufficiently made good. Man is not able to ſuſtaine or beare vp himſelfe in any good

1. Vse. This should bee vnto vs a cause and matter of humiliation, and of bringing vs to be base and low in our owne eyes, (a vertue which is in the sight of God much set by:) and what can bee more effectuall to humble vs, then when we consider the weakenesse and wickednesse of our nature? weakenesse, in that the least wind of temptation is able to ouerthrow vs; wickednesse, in that there is not so foule and vgly sinne, but we are inclineable to it of our selues. What hath a man to boast of, whose case is thus? Is not this of force to avile vs in our owne conceyuing? Alas, if the hand of God did not sustaine vs, our aduersarie the Deuil, who goeth about seeking whom he may deuoure, would euen at once bring vs to an irrecouerable confusion, and quickly should wee be plunged euen into the most grosse and hatefull enormities. He deceiueth himselfe much whosoeuer he be, that imagineth that whereas he is free from such and such foule sinnes, with which some others are ouertaken, it proceedeth from himselfe, and that it is out of his owne strength, that he is of a more blameleſſe conuersation: Nay, be it knowne vnto thee, That if God in mercie did not restraine thee, there is no man so notoriously wicked, but thou wouldst euen be as vile as he. Looke vpon him, whosoeuer he be, that lyeth wallowing in the most hatefull and noted sinnes; pride not thy selfe in respect of him, but know thou that hast in thee a nature euery way as corrupt as his is; there is no more naturall strength in thee to withstand euill, then there is in him. Learne therefore in him to see what thou art, and let that beget in thee a humble thankefulnesse, and a thankefull humilitie, taking to thy selfe the shame of thine owne sinnefull weakenesse, and giuing God the glory of thy freedome from presumptuous sinnes.

2. Vse. Secondly, this is a caueat, not to presume vpon our owne strength in spirituall things. The first man, created after God in his owne Image, when he was once left vnto himselfe, was soone beguiled by the Deuill. Full small was the time of his continuance in his excellencie, when hee had no other prop, but his owne freedome to vphold him. Who can hope to be exempted from temptations, when the Serpent could find a meanes of creeping into Paradise? or what man shall bee confident touching his owne firmenesse, when euen righteous Adam was so quickly conquered? It is strange to see how secure we are, as if Satan durst not set vpon vs, or as if wee were easily able to withstand all incounters. It was the purpose of God, that Adams fall should read vnto vs a perpetuall lecture of mans weakenesse; and should also remaine as an assurance of the Deuils steadie course of assaulting these most, vpon whom God hath bestowed most. As the more excellent Adam was, the more was the eagernesse of Satan to seduce him. Here wil be our only course then to, repose our selues vnder the shadow of the Lords wings: b Cursed is hee which maketh flesh his arme, &c. but they

which truſt in the [c] Lord, ſhall be as mount Sion, &c. He that in diſtruſt of himſelfe, betakes himſelfe to this refuge, [d] he ſhall be compaſſed with fauour as with a ſhield. Men doe many times wilfully expoſe themſelues vnto temptations; as when they aduenture themſelues into euill company, when they thruſt themſelues vnneceſſarily and vnwarrantably into the inticements of ſinne, as pleaſures, ſports, &c. when they hazard themſelues into the affaires of the world, without due conſideration of the many auocations and withdrawments from good, which they are ſure to meet with; and by this meanes, how vſually are they ouertaken, while they ruſh on, as though no companie could infect them, no pleaſure draw them into exceſſe, no profit carry them away? ſuddenly are they carried captiue by the Tempter, at his will. Thus while Iudah goeth abroad vnſenced, Satan catcheth him at vnawares in the ſnare of [e] luſt. While Dauid forgets his owne infirmitie, he is ſoone drawne, euen by ſo ſmall a beginning as a wandring looke, into [f] adulterie. While Peter preſumes vpon going into the high Prieſts houſe, not conſidering himſelfe, behold, he falls into a firſt, a ſecond, and a third deniall of his [g] Maſter. It is euer a mans beſt courſe to be afraid of his owne weakeneſſe. He that is priuie to himſelfe of the ill diſpoſition of his ſtomacke, and ſo obſerues himſelfe in his diet, that man ſhall ſeldome ſurfet. Excellent is that ſaying of the [h] Apoſtle: When I am weake, then I am ſtrong: viz. when he was moſt weake in his owne apprehenſion and acknowledgement, then was he moſt ſtrengthened by a gracious ſupply from an higher hand.

Thirdly, it is a quickning to Prayer. Satan is ſubtill, and we ſimple, he is mightie, and we weake, he hath many aduantages againſt vs, wee haue no power of our owne to make our parts good againſt him. What more ſhall we doe? nay, what better can we doe, then to flye vnto God for his ayd? [i] He is greater then all. [k] His name is a ſtrong Towre, &c. Take Dauid for an example; as ſoone as he felt the rebellion of his heart, and perceiued how little power there was in him to maſter it, hee cryed to the Lord; [l] Keepe thy ſeruant from preſumptuous ſinnes: Let them not raigne ouer mee; there was his refuge. Oh if Dauid had done ſo euer, he had neuer falne ſo foulely as he did, hee had neuer beene ſo wofully ouertaken as he was. Paul, when he was buffeted and chaſed with a ſore temptation, ſuch as he termes the meſſenger of Satan, he went preſently to the Lord by prayer: [m] For this thing I beſought the Lord thrice, &c. Nay, euen Chriſt himſelfe, the author and finiſher of our faith, when hee had an inward conflict, betwixt our naturall frailty (whereof euen he had a taſte) and the wrath of God due to our ſinnes, fought remedie by prayer (Mat. 26.) as we may ſee three times in that one Chapter. The [n] Apoſtle makes mention of it (In the daies of his fleſh he did offer vp prayers and ſupplications, &c.) This courſe he commended to his Diſciples alſo. Thus then is our duety; when we feele our rebellious heart fighting againſt the good motions of the Spirit, and perceiue that we haue much adoe to reſraine from groſſe euils, and find Satan labouring againſt vs, to to prouoke vs vnto that which is naught, let vs humble our ſelues at the Throne of grace, let vs powre out our ſoules before the Lord, and beſeech him to be gracious to vs, to keepe vs from ſinne, to arme vs againſt Satan, to vphold vs by his hand, that we fall not into euill. Certainely, this courſe ſhall haue ſucceſſe, either the temptation ſhall ceaſe, or elſe thy ſoule ſhall receiue ſuch anſwere as PAVL, ° My grace is ſufficient, &c. And here wee may ſee how little cauſe there is to wonder, that wee are carryed away as we be, with the common corruptions of the times; for we doe not out of the feeling of our owne weakneſſe, pray the Lord to deliuer vs from euill. Who is wont to ſay betwixt God and himſelfe, *O Lord, I liue in an euill age, in a place ſtayned with much wickedneſſe, and I, for my part, am as bad in the diſpoſition of my nature as any: I know I ſhall meete with many prouocations, and my owne heart will helpe the matter forward. VERS. 12, 13.

And ſtabliſh mee with thy free Spirit.
Then ſhall I teach thy wayes vnto the wicked, and ſinners ſhall be conuerted vnto thee.

Stabliſhment and vpholding in good, is the ſubſtance of the thing which in this ſecond Clauſe Dauid craueth. The next thing to be ſpoken of, is the inſtrument by which hee deſires, this good in him may be accompliſhed, [Thy free Spirit.] Let vs indeuour firſt to know what this meanes.

Words explaned.

By Spirit, Dauid doth here vnderſtand, An inward and ſecret diſpoſition, ſtirred vp and wrought in him by the power of Gods Spirit, from whence, whatſoeuer good is in the hearts of Gods children, doth proceed. A free Spirit, is, as ſometimes we ſpeake, an ingenious Spirit, that is, a kind of cheerefull and forward diſpoſition, ſuch as may affect good for Gods ſake, and for it owne ſake, more then for any by or ſecondarie reſpect elſe whatſoeuer. This is the ſenſe in few words. Some thinke that Dauid intended here, to begge of God a certayne Generous, Heroicall, or Noble Spirit, ſuch as was fitting for him in his place and calling as a King: becauſe this very word here tranſlated Free, is the Title giuen ſometimes to Princes Princes in the Scripture, betokening magnificent and worthy Persons. This may seeme probable: but surely, Dauids intent and scope was more large: he had fayled and offended more then as a King, and therefore craues such a Spirit, as by which he might be vpheld, not onely as a Commander amongst men, but as a Regenerate person, and as a Child of God. No doubt, the effects of this kind of Spirit, would and did discouer themselues in Dauid in his place, and in the managing the State-affaires; but the principall matter was a disposition meete for him, as a man in all things bound by dutie to obey God. Thus therefore is the Doctrine;

That to be freely, willingly, and cheerefully disposed in the wayes of holy obedience towards God, is a speciall blessing, and such as we ought all earnestly to desire. This was the very thing which Dauid craued. His desire must be a rule to ours, and his suing for it, is a sufficient proofe that it is excellent. He knew he could not stand without the Lords sustayning; and assurance to be vpheld by God he could not haue, vnlesse he found in himselfe such a kind of liberall and ingenuous Spirit. For where good duties are not done cheerefully, they can neuer bee performed constantly. Dauid therefore craued such a disposition to be wrought in him, as a pledge of Gods gracious purpose to establish him. Then, besides this, there was also a particular reason of his praying for this kind of Spirit at this time. Dauid perceiued that sinne had gotten a great power vpon him, and that his affections were so secretly insnared with it, that he had no such pleasure, hee tooke no such felicity in the performance of holy seruices, as he was wont: they were irksome and burdensome vnto him, he went on in a kinde of dull, and heauy, and vnlusty manner with them: as one weary of this vntoward and sluggish disposition, he prayeth here for a more free kinde of metall to be wrought into him, that hee might finde himselfe cheerefull, and glad, and of a liuely spirit, in the doing of the things which God commands. This was that kinde of disposition, which God required to bee in those, of whom any offering should be receiued towards the erecting of the Tabernacle: [a] Receiue of euery man whose heart giueth it freely. [b] Whosoeuer is of a willing heart, let him bring. God would haue no mans largesse for the furtherance of the building, but his that should giue with a cheerefull heart: hee would not accept of that which should bee wrung out by a kinde of drawing and compulsion. It remaynes vpon Record to the renowme of the people, that were moued by Dauid to contribute towards the Temple, which he purposed to erect, that they offered willingly: it was to themselues a comfort, and to Dauid a matter of [c] reioycing: and he gaue publike thanks to God, for putting such a Spirit into him, and into his [d] people: Now therefore wee thanke thee, and praise thy glorious Name: who am I, and what is my people, that wee should bee able to offer willingly after this sort? &c. Their very heart was to it, as the phrase is in a like [e] case. Truth is, this willingnesse is the property of Gods [f] people; they are euen glad of an oportunitie to shew duty. Paul termes it, [g] readinesse

to euery good worke. One is towards God, as a true hearted friend is to him, to whom he profeſſeth loue: an occaſion is welcome to him, wherein hee may ſhew him kindneſſe. The Apoſtle notes it touching the Romanes two times eſpecially: Firſt, [h] in reporting them to haue obeyed from the heart the forme of Doctrine. All their beſt affections claue vnto it. It was euen a delight and a pleaſure to them to obey. Secondly, [i] You haue not (ſaith hee) receiued the ſpirit of bondage to feare againe; but ye haue receiued the Spirit of Adoption: you are not ſeruilely diſpoſed, ſo as to doe nothing but out of a baſe feare of the whip: but you are of a more free and liberall temper. God hath giuen you the Spirit of Adoption, hee hath made you to be affected towards him as Sonnes, euen in loue to him; you are apt and forward in any thing to performe obedience to him. This was in the Macedonians, whom in that particular Paul commends to the Corinthians for imitation, when as euen in extreme pouerty there was found in them a richneſſe of liberality, a willingneſſe euen beyond their power, and a preſſing vpon the Apoſtle with great inſtance, to receiue that which they had raiſed for the neceſſitie of the [k] Saints. This kind of diſpoſition is ſuch, that God reſpects nothing that is done, what ſhew ſoeuer it makes, if this be wanting. A Magiſtrate in his place, whatſoeuer he ſhall doe, is of no account with God, if he may be accuſed like thoſe of whom Ieremie complayned, to [l] haue no courage for the Truth. A Miniſter in preaching ſhall haue no reward, vnleſſe hee doe it [m] willingly. If hee doe it more by conſtraint, then of a ready mind, the Lord doth not regard his [n] courſe. In giuing, [o] It is the cheerfull Giuer whom God loues. In hearing, It is the ſwift Hearer [p] whom he takes notice of. This is the giuing of a mans ſelfe to God, [q] ſpoken of by the Apoſtle. Thus is the proofe of this point, Dauid begging of God ſuch a diſpoſition; Gods requiring it in ſuch as profeſſe to performe any ſeruice to him: the commending of it in thoſe in whom it hath beene found; the impoſſibilitie of conſtancy where it wants; the diſ-eſteeme that befalleth the moſt glorious actions which bee not ſeaſoned herewith: theſe things ſhew plainely, that this is a bleſſing of a worthy nature, and ſuch as euery one deſiring to pleaſe God, ought to be in loue with, and to indeuour by all meanes poſſible to obtayne.

The Vſe.

What ſhould be the Vſe of this Doctrine other then this, euen to put life into our affections, that we may with our ſtrongeſt and moſt earneſt deſires, ayme at that which with the loue whereof we ſee Dauid was inflamed? The hauing hereof is a ſpeciall teſtimonie of a mans diſcharge, by the mercy of God from the thraldome of ſinne. Euill is ſometimes curbed in a mans outward carriage, but the heart is intangled with the loue thereof as much as euer; and ſome good things are to bee ſeene at times in ſome mens practice, but they haue not true loue within, to that which outwardly they make ſhew of. Man lookes to no more then vnto the outward act, neither can hee; God obſerues with what kind of ſpirit and affection euery thing is done, and meaſures the action accordingly. Let euery man conſider himſelfe well touching this, and remember member in all his courſes hee hath to doe with more then man, euen with that God, who [r] tryeth the heart and reynes. Reſt we not our ſelues in the deed done, but labour we to vnderſtand our ſelues well, how wee are affected and diſpoſed in performing it. It is a mans ſpeciall honour, when he may be called the [f] Lords Free-man. It is no hard matter for a man to iudge of himſelfe herein. Take wee notice of theſe marks by which to trie our ſelues in this matter.

Tokens of a free Spirit.

Firſt, Our praying vnto God for ſuch a Spirit, out of the ſenſibleneſſe of our naturall ſlauerie and bondage vnto ſinne. When a man is aware of the forwardneſſe of his nature vnto euill, and of the ſtrong bent thereof vnto ſinne, and feeles that of himſelfe hee hath no heart to the things which God commands; his very ſtomake (in a manner) is againſt them, and ſo accordingly begs earneſtly of God, that he would, as Dauid ſaith, [t] Inlarge his heart, and [u] quicken him in his Righteouſneſſe: this is a good euidence, that at the leaſt God is beginning in him the worke of a free and liberall Spirit. I haue often mentioned the rule, and it is to be remembred euer, that God prepares his to that good, which he means to beſtow on them, by ſtirring vp in them a ſenſibleneſſe of the neceſſitie of it, and a feruencie and truth of deſire to inioy it. Certainely, a free Spirit is, as it were, a breeding in a man, when he begins to be diſpleaſed with the proieneſſe of his diſpoſition vnto euill, and is diſcontented with himſelfe that good duties are ſuch a burden to him, and ſo thereupon prayeth God to turne him about quite, that holy ſeruices may be as pleaſing vnto him, as by the bent of nature euill is; that hee may become as Paul ſaith, [x] The ſeruant of Righteouſneſſe; and may be as cheerefull at the command thereof, as the ſeruants of the Centurion were at his; [y] He ſaith to one, Goe, and he goeth; to another, Come, and he commeth; and to my ſeruant, Doe this, and he dothit.

t *Pſal.*119. 32.
u *Verſ.*40.

x *Rom.*6.18.

y *Matt.*8.9.

Secondly, A free Spirit is diſcerned by an eaſineſſe to be perſwaded to good duties. To a willing mind there is no need of many arguments. The making it to appeare that the buſineſſe is good and neceſſary, and ſuch as God requires, and will be much pleaſed with if it be done, is a ſufficient motiue. How eaſily was Paul perſwaded at Antioch to deale vnto the people preſent, the Goſpell of God? the Rulers of the Synagogue ſent to him and Barnabas, to requeſt them, if they had any word of exhortation, to deliuer it: the Text ſaith, [z] Then PAVL ſtood vp, &c. This was an euidence of that which in this buſineſſe he calleth [a] his good will: ſo farre was he from looking to be preſſed with multiplicity of arguments, or from needing to be wrought vpon by importunitie, that he was rather glad of the occaſion. It is an euill ſigne when there muſt bee ſo much vrging, before a man can be brought to an inclination towards that which ought to bee done. A word is inough to a cheerefull Spirit. A Horſe of mettle is more quickned with the ſound of a wand, then a dull Iade with many ſmitings of the Spurres. I would not perſwade raſhneſſe, I know it is poſſible for a man to be ouer-haſtie, and, zeale not guided by knowledge, may ſoone ouer-carry. Let euery man bee ſure firſt, z *Act.*13.15,16.

a 1.*Theſ.*2.8.

firſt, that the matter is good and neceſſary; and when that is once made plaine to a mans conſcience in the ſight of God, if yet there bee much adoe to worke him vnto practice; it is a ſigne of an illiberall and ſeruill ſpirit: and it is ſuch as we meet with ordinarily abroad. How hard a matter is it to bind mens affections to that which they cannot, being ouercome by the weight of truth, but acknowledge to be good: when they haue in a manner yeelded that this and that ought to bee, and that it were well, if it were accompliſhed? yet what wofull flinching and drawing backe, what deuiſing of excuſes, what tricks to delay time, when it comes to the poynt of their owne perſonall and particular practice? There is no Preacher, that hath experience of mens diſpoſitions, but he finds it a farre eaſier taske to conuince mens iudgements, then to ouercome their affections. It is an harder labour to preſſe a matter effectually in the vſe, then to confirme it ſubſtantially in the Doctrine: ſo little freedome of Spirit is there amongſt men. When a man is ſo clay-like, ſo ſtiffe to be wrought vpon, ſuch a while before he can be won to ſet on with a good buſineſſe, and muſt haue a continuall ſpurring and prouoking, when he hath a little begun, it is a wofull thing. Where ſuch a diſpoſition is cheriſhed, ſurely there is no ſparke of that freeneſſe of Spirit which here Dauid ſpeakes of.

Thirdly, A man ſhall iudge of himſelfe in this poynt, by his going on in a good way, euen when he is not egged on by ordinary outward prouocations; nay, when (perhaps) in ſtead of them he meets with diſcouragements. As for example, to make my meaning plaine; ſuppoſe a good duetie, to which a man is not bound by any humane Law, nor vrged by any ouerruling authoritie, nor preſſed by the perſwaſions of ſuch as haue intereſt in him, nor inuited by the hope of any profit or praiſe, or approbation with the world; nay, it may be theſe things are againſt him herein, law ſeemes to inhibite, authority giues no countenance, friends, in ſtead of perſwading, labour to withdraw, there is like to be ſome preiudice to profit, there is poſſibilitie of beeing exerciſed with reproach, and of loſing of eſteeme and reputation amongſt men; here is a time for a free Spirit to ſhew it ſelfe. He that in this caſe is ſo in loue with the duty, and ſo deſirous to approue himſelfe vnto God, that hee holds on ſtill, hauing no eggings on, but rather variety of withdrawments, him will I terme a free-ſpirited man. Conſider thy ſelfe well concerning this. I ſee many ſomewhat forward in matters of Religion, where law doth eyther require that they doe, or not gaine-ſay, whiles they are prouoked by example, countenanced by friends, wrought vpon by thoſe that haue power in them, ſo long as they ſuſtaine no loſſe, receiue no diſgrace; but if they ſee a cloud ariſing, the law eyther will abridge, or at leaſt not iuſtifie, company in the courſe begins to decay, there is no bodie left that eyther by authority can vrge, or in loue will prouoke, mens mouthes are opened to gaine-ſay and to ſpeake euill, then on a ſudden their forwardneſſe doth abate, and they doe euen at laſt giue ouer the very ſame, which before they made a ſhew to be very earneſt in.

This

This is no free Spirit: indeede it is like that loue which Salomon saith, [b] much Water cannot quench, nor the Flouds can drowne it. If thou doſt no more then thou art vrged vnto, and perſeuereſt in a good courſe no longer then thou art whetted on by example, or others importunitie: ſo that if thou be once left to thy ſelfe to doe or not to doe, there is an end of thy courſe; this is no free Spirit. It is very like this, to that baſe Eye-ſeruice, which Paul ſpeaks [c] of; a ſeruant workes hard whiles ſome that haue command vpon him lookes on, but when hee is alone, and no eye of man vpon him, then is the time to try his faithfulneſſe. Thus haue I preſſed this point touching a free Spirit. DAVID deſired of God ſuch a diſpoſition, as that he might be cheerefull in good duties, and doe them with an ingenuous and liberall mind. God reſpects not that obedience, which comes not but by drawing and haling: a ſeruice which comes not off willingly, and out of a loue to it in it ſelfe, God eſteemes not. To this wee haue beene perſwaded, how we may iudge of our ſelues in regard of it we haue beene taught. A vſing to pray for ſuch a Spirit out of the apprehenſion of our owne naturall bondage vnto ſinne. An eaſineſſe to bee wonne to the practice of that which is manifeſted out of the Word of God to be our duty. A holding out in the beſt courſes, when there is nothing left but the bond of conſcience to God, and the reſpect to good it ſelfe in it ſelfe to keep vs in, otherwiſe there is no outward matter to conſtraine vs, nothing to inuite vs, but many things rather to diſcourage vs; theſe be certaine & vndeniable pledges of a free Spirit. Make much of them when they be: labour for them, and be not quiet without them when they are not. So farre of this requeſt. Now, before Dauid proceeds to the next, he inſerts a promiſe, wherein he declares what he will doe, in caſe the Lord ſhall pleaſe to heare him in this Petition.

b Can.8.7.

c Epheſ.6.6.

Then ſhall I teach thy wayes vnto the wicked, and ſinners ſhall bee conuerted vnto thee. There are in this Verſe two things conſiderable. Firſt, The dutie, which Dauid as it were, by vow bindes himſelfe to performe. Secondly, The good ſucceſſe which hee promiſeth to himſelfe thereupon. In handling the former, I might here ſpeake of the duty of thankfulneſſe which is owing to God from all, vpon whom hee beſtoweth ſpirituall fauours; but of that I ſhall haue more iuſt occaſion to ſpeake (*Verſ.*14.) My method in treating vpon this Clauſe ſhall be this. Firſt, I will ſpeake of the generall matter of it. Secondly, I will examine ſome particulars iuſtly gatherable from the ſeuerall words. The generall matter is: Dauid receiuing mercy himſelfe, will indeuour to be an inſtrument of good vnto others. Any man may ſee that in the very face of theſe words: and the Doctrine thence is as euident, viz.

The ſecond Doctrine.

That true repentance and conuerſion vnto God, breeds in a mans heart a ſincere deſire of being an inſtrument of the like good by all meanes poſſible vnto others. DAVID here is a patterne of a man repenting truly, and looke what affections, and purpoſes, and deſires were in his heart, God being pleaſed to turne him from this ſinne, the ſame are in ſome degrees and manner in all thoſe, to whom God hath vouchſafed the like grace.

Now, Dauid as he could not chooſe but promiſe thankefulneſſe to God, vpon the reſtoring of him to his ancient ſtate; ſo, becauſe he knew, that d his goodneſſe could not reach to the perſon of God, therefore he could not conceiue wherein better to diſcouer it, then in labouring to doe others good, by indeuouring their conuerſion. The Talent of Mercy which hee hoped to receiue, hee voweth to imploy to others edifying. The Scripture confirmes the being of this diſpoſition in all whom God hath truly turned, by varietie of examples. When Andrew had found Chriſt, hee had no reſt vntill hee had called e Simon; neither could Philip forbeare vntill he had brought f Nathaniel. What haſte did the Woman of Samaria make to runne into the Towne to call her g Neighbours? How earneſtly did Paul wiſh that others were in Religion, in the knowledge and obedience thereof, like h vnto him? The Iaylors ioy was not full, till he perceiued that his houſhold as well as himſelfe beleeued vpon i Chriſt. When Chriſt had called Matthew, he inuited Chriſt to his houſe, and there were (ſaith the Text) k a great companie of Publicans and of others. Can we thinke they came into Matthews houſe without his leaue, or that Matthew inuited them with any other intent, then that they might get that good by Chriſt, which his ſoule had reaped? This was propheſied of of old, that it ſhould bee the diſpoſition of thoſe which ſhould be gathered in by the Goſpel to the Chriſtian Church; one ſhould prouoke and call vpon another, l Come, and let vs goe vp to the Mountayne of the Lord, &c. m They which dwell in one Citie, ſhall goe to another, ſaying, Vp, let vs goe and pray before the Lord of Hoſts. Theſe be the n Riuers of water, which flow from out the belly of the true Beleeuer. Chriſt laid it as a taske vpon PETER, o When thou art conuerted, ſtrengthen thy brethren. Indeed God giues no man any ſpirituall good for his owne priuate benefit alone, but that he might be p a good Diſpoſer and Steward of the grace of God for others good. Like as the Apoſtle ſaith, q That God comforted him, that he might comfort others with the ſame comfort which himſelfe had receiued. Whereſoeuer there is true conuerſion, there is true faith: for, how ſhall we ſuppoſe a man conuerted & in the ſtate of grace, who hath no faith? and r Faith worketh by loue: and how can Loue (which is ſaid to bee ſ bountifull,) bee barren and vnfruitfull in this ſpeciall euidence of loue, the ſauing of a ſoule from death? Wee would reckon it a barbarous and a cruell act (and wel we might) if two men in their trauell by the way ſhould fall into a Pit, and the one being by ſome meanes reſcued thence, ſhould goe his way without reſpect to him that was in the ſame danger. Is it poſſible, thinke we, that there ſhould be ſuch an heart in a man, in whom God hath wrought a worke of grace, that being himſelfe recouered from that Pit of deſtruction, into which we are all plunged by Adams diſobedience, he ſhould not care what became of others, that are inwrapped in the ſame miſerie? Gods children are no Niggards, nay, it grieueth them to eate their ſpirituall morſels alone: when they haue receiued any mercy from God, they are as the veſſell whereto Elihu compared himſelfe, which muſt needs haue t vent. u Come, harken, (ſaith DAVID) and I will tell you what God hath done to my ſoule. Here

Here is one of the moſt certaine marks, which wee may iudge of our repentance by. If thou thinke thy ſelfe in the ſtate of grace, and turned about from the power of Satan vnto God, deale faithfully and plainely with thine owne ſoule concerning this; how thou art affected in regard of others. Doſt thou mourne as Samuel did for Saul, ſo for theſe that are in mens vnderſtanding in the high-way to Hell? doſt thou pitie their caſe, whom thou ſeeſt to be carryed captiue by the Deuill at his will, and who walke in their owne wayes without remorſe? doſt thou wiſh in ſincerity before God, Oh, that it lay in thee, though it were to thy great paine and danger, to turne them from their going aſtray? doſt thou labour according to thy calling, and according to the meaſure of knowledge and grace which thou haſt receiued, to worke vpon others by aduice, by intreaty, by admonition, by perſwaſion, all in the Spirit of meekneſſe, that if it were poſſible, they may come vnto amendment? doſt thou indeuour conſcionably if thou bee a Magiſtrate, to reclaime the euill doers? doſt thou ſtriue if thou bee a Miniſter, to winne ſoules, and to turne the people from their euill way, and from the wickedneſſe of their inuentions? doeſt thou bind thy ſelfe being a maſter of a familie, by inſtruction at home, and by bringing to Gods Ordinance abroad, to bring, if it may be, thy Children and Seruants to the knowledge of God that they may be ſaued? Certainly, thou canſt not haue a more certaine euidence then this to thy ſoule, that God hath called thee into that ſtate of mercy, wherein hee will reſerue thee euer vnto Chriſt. No man can truely hunger and thirſt after the ſaluation of another mans ſoule, and accordingly as his place requires indeuour it, vnleſſe God hath ſhewed mercy to him in reclaiming him: ſo on the other ſide where there is a kinde of careleſſe diſpoſition in regard of others, a man troubleth not himſelfe about others ſoules; he thinks rather it is a matter concernes not him, hee is neuer grieued nor troubled with the deſperate condition of the moſt, which (as a man may ſay) ſeeme as if they would needes bee damned. When one hath no zeale as a Magiſtrate, if he be one; or as a Miniſter, if he be called to that ſeruice; or as a Maſter of a family, if he be ſo placed, to procure the ſaluation of others; this is an vnauoidable teſtimonie of ſuch an one as is in his ſinnes, and ſhall periſh in his ſinnes, vnleſſe he make haſte to come out of them by repentance, and to declare his repentance by his care for others ſoules. Doe but marke it in him, who had the leaſt time that euer we read or heard of any to ſhew fruits of his repentance in, and yet as ſhort as the ſpace was, hee diſcouered it in this, euen in his deſire and care to helpe anothers ſoule. You gheſſe, I thinke, whom I meane, viz. the Thiefe conuerted by our Sauiour on the Croſſe: ſee whether his repentance did not ſhew it ſelfe in breathing out words of acknowledgement touching himſelfe, of iuſtification touching Chriſt; ſo of admonition to his fellow, euen to winne him to God, if it had been poſſible: when he heard him rayling, he rebuked him, ſaying, [x] Feareſt thou not God, ſeeing thou art in the ſame condemnation, &c? See how hee would fayne haue wrought him to ſome remorſe, if it had

had beene possible. Obserue it, I pray you, how repentance, though it haue neuer so small a time to shew it selfe, yet it will appeare in this fruit of labouring and indeuouring to doe others good. There is euer iust cause to suspect that repentance, which is destitute of this fruit. It is vnpossible that repentance should be confined to it selfe, it cannot but be fruitfull. Good hath a kinde of spreading nature: I may apply that to it which Salomon doth to another matter, it is [y] as the oyle in the right hand which vttereth it selfe. A perfume in the hand will disclose it selfe, they which goe by or come neere, shall haue refreshing and comfort by the smell. Now as repentance will appeare, so in this. A man cannot hide the ioy, the comfort, which hee feeles in the assurance of Gods fauour, and of giuing victorie against sinne, but hee must needs publish it vpon iust occasion, vnto others for their good. This is the Vse: which yet we may presse a little further not vnprofitably, thus: viz. that if true repentance and vnfained conuersion, shew it selfe in an indeuour to doe good to others in the matter of saluation; then what account shall bee had of such, and in what ranke shall they bee put, who seeke to hinder others in the way of life, who labour to peruert others, to incourage them to euill, to hearten and harden them in that which is naught? Doe our times, doe our dayes affoord none such? Hath not Satan his agents and instruments to inlarge his Kingdome? Nay, wo is mee, for one that truely and conscionably labours to teach Gods wayes vnto sinners, there be scores of such whose ayme and drift is to turne euen the Righteous out of the way, and to make others as lewd in their paths, as they themselues. Iudge vprightly who hath the most fauour and countenance from the most of the men of this Generation, he that runnes to all manner of excesse, or he who tyeth himselfe, to passe the time of his dwelling here in feare. If a man will runne a licentious, carnall, voluptuous course, what a deale of incouragement shall he haue, how many to vphold him, to commend him, to speake for him, to beare him companie? hee shall haue enow to backe him, to applaud him, to tolerate him at the least. But let a man begin to frame himselfe to a better course, to more straitnesse in matters both of the worship of God, and in things which belong to common conuersation, that hee bee once taken notice of for one that withdraweth and separates himselfe from the common guise and streame of the times: alas, full poore incouragement shall he haue to goe on. If scoffes, reproches, slanders, troubles, disfauour of friends, secret perswasions of carnall acquaintance; if such things, I say, as these may turne him out of his way, he shall be sure of them. Thus vnlike are the greatest part to Dauid in this qualitie. Hee had a desire to reclaime sinners: they intend it to confirme and strengthen sinners in their euils, and to make others like themselues: they are more grieued and discontented, when they behold any so much as to incline to amendment. I would no spice hereof were in any of those, who by profession and calling should labour to winne soules, viz. to grudge at others forwardnesse, and to repine at the peoples earnestnesse and readinesse, to presse (as Christ

Note.

Christ saith) to the Kingdome of God when it is preached to them. Wo to them that ayme at the cherishing of the people in a kind of formall Religion, and would haue none to exceede their owne Laodicean scantling. Thus of the generall matter of this Verse. Dauid will labour to doe good to other soules.

Now for the particulars, euery word in a manner may yeeld vs out somewhat for our edifying: for example sake, first, The action which Dauid will performe; Teach. Secondly, The matter thereof; The wayes of God. Thirdly, The parties whom he will teach; The wicked. Fourthly, The time when; Then. Of the first. Wee may out of the action, which Dauid vndertakes to performe, profitably learne this,

That the act of Teaching others in the things which doe concerne saluation, is no vile or vnworthy seruice. DAVID, a King, a chiefe and soueraigne person among and aboue others, yet binds himselfe to bee a Teacher, accounting it no matter of disparagement at all vnto him to be so imployed. Thus, vpon like occasion hee promiseth to [z] instruct and teach. It is not likely, that Dauid tooke on him to performe that act of Teaching, which is properly ministeriall, and to the discharge whereof there is a particular calling of men deputed by God, such as were the Leuites and Prophets in the old Testament, and the Ministers of the Gospell in the new; yet such Teaching, as Dauid might by his place and calling performe, that hee tooke no scorne to doe. Thus he taught by writing, whereupon he intituleth some of his Psalmes, Psalmes to giue instruction, as among the rest, Psal. 32. Thus he taught by domesticall instruction, which, I thinke, a man may iustly gather out of that act of his: viz. that it is said, that when he had performed that solemne seruice of reducing the Arke, he and the chiefe of his Kingdome with him, [a] He returned after to blesse his house. What shall we thinke of that, but that thereby is intended the performance of the seruices of teaching, and praying, and praysing of God in his family? And so hee taught also by speaking occasionally to the people in publique, though not as an ordinarie Watchman for soules, but as a King; such a publique act of his we [b] reade of; and according hereunto wee may vnderstand that which hee professeth in the [c] Psalme. Thus Salomon the sonne of Dauid, no whit inferiour in Royall authoritie to his father, yet thought it no disgrace, to style himselfe [d] The Preacher: [e] And the more wise he was, the more he sought to teach the people knowledge. No disgrace to Noah, but an honor rather, that Peter termes him a [f] Preacher of Righteous. It is reported of our Sauiour, that [g] he taught the people: his imployment in the businesse is a sufficient iustification of the worthinesse of it. A Teacher in Israel was wont to be a Title of [h] respect. Teaching can be no base act, when our Sauiour hath pleased to depute it to bee the meanes for the conuersion of the World, and the gathering together of his Saints: [i] Goe, teach all Nations: he hath giuen some to be Apostles, &c. [k] and appointed Pastors, and Teachers, for the gathering together of the Saints. This briefly, but yet sufficiently for the laying open of this Doctrine.

1. Vse. First, this is a checke to the common opinion of the world touching the Teachers office, which is mostly reputed but a petry-seruice: so that whereas the conscionable performance thereof ought of right to be the improuement of a mans esteeme, it is an occasion of a mans auilement in the eyes of many. Hence is the generall declining and shunning of the calling, by such as are of outward qualitie. Many suppose it were a kinde of stooping downe too low, if they should humble themselues to the seruing of the Lord in this businesse. We see here Dauid was of another minde. It should be his honour, and a speciall pledge of his thankefulnesse to God, in restoring him to his ancient Ioy, to be a Teacher vnto others. Surely, if this secondary kinde of Teaching, to which Dauid vowed himselfe, were not vnworthy of a King, what reason to cast contempt vpon that grand seruice of Ministeriall teaching, from which all other teachings in matters of saluation are deriued? This is not spoken, to vrge outward honour to be conferred vpon Teachers, but to bring the seruice it selfe into iust esteeme: so long as men haue a low and ordinary opinion of that act, they shall neuer reape profit by it to their soules.

2. Vse. Secondly, this may be commended to our consideration that are Ministers, to prouoke vs to obserue what an honourable seruice God hath called vs vnto, euen such as wherein the most renowmed Kings which euer were, were willing to partake with vs. This shall bee our glory and our Crowne, to haue beene diligent in Teaching. The world, the eyes whereof are subiect to dazeling by matters of outward pompe, looke vpon a mans outside, vpon his Titles, vpon his Pedegrees, vpon his Ecclesiasticall dignities, vpon what hee is in wealth and meanes, and how high he is in ranke; but this is that whereunto by the verdict of the Apostle, the [m] double honour is due, euen the labour in the Word and in Doctrine. This is that which shall make vs honourable and reuerend in the hearts of Gods people; whereas all these outward bubbles shall proue as they are, euen lighter then vanitie it selfe; and they which haue, by faithfulnesse herein, turned others to Righteousnesse, shall shine as the Starres for euer: when as others, with their pompe and noyse, which haue beene spare and negligent in this duty, shall be filled with shame, and cast out with the vnprofitable seruant into vtter darkenesse.

m 1. Tim. 5. 17.

3. Vse. Thirdly, this may bee taken notice by all, that no man may account it a disparagement to him, to be a Teacher in matters of saluation. It is a dutie neglected by many in a kind of disdayne, especially (for thereto I ayme) that Teaching-dutie which is required in the Family. Some hold it a kind of basenesse for them, being of place and reckoning in the World, to apply and giue themselues to such a dutie. It is a rare thing to find any man that doth this seruice, but it is a kind of wonder to heare of a Great man that doth it. What art thou to Dauid, that thou shouldst account such a businesse vnworthy of thee? Dauid is not ashamed to professe here to the whole World, that he will Teach. It was one of the best seruices he could thinke vpon, whereby to shew his thankefulnesse:

[n] You

[n] You shall lay up these my words in your hearts, and in your soules, and you shall teach them to your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thy house, &c. Who that hath house, children, seruants, can plead exemption in this dutie? It is scarcely to bee thought that that mans soule is truely taught of God, who is backward, especially out of height of stomake, to bee a Teacher vnto others. Euery true Christian is a Partner with Christ in his threefold Office, of King, Priest, and Prophet; and how shall it appeare that this Prophetical Office of his is in any measure deriued ouer to that man, who either neglects, or scornes, or is vnable to performe this Teaching-seruice, as his place requires it? This I thought good to obserue from hence: DAVID will teach. To be an instrument of God to others, by Teaching in matters that concerne eternall life, is no vile seruice. Of the subiect of his Teaching hereafter.

VERS. 13.

Then will I teach thy wayes, &c.

THat DAVID will teach, and by teaching, indeuour to doe others good, we haue heard: now followeth to consider of the matter which he will teach, [Thy wayes.] Here we must first labour to know, what wayes those are which are called Gods wayes. Some wayes of God are said to be past [a] finding out; vnderstanding thereby the secret reasons and grounds of Gods proceedings, so as in the matter of Election, and the appurtenances thereunto. These are not here meant. For, the things which Dauid himselfe could not know, neither might inquire after, we may be sure he would not take on him to be a Teacher of them vnto others. But here by Gods wayes, DAVID vnderstands such courses of God as are manifest, and which himselfe hath reuealed and discouered vnto men in his Word. Such is that which Dauid elsewhere termes, [b] The way of Gods Testimonies: [c] The way of his Precepts: [d] The way of his Commandements: [e] The way of his Statutes. They be such wayes then as God hath laid forth vnto vs in his Word. Now, these wayes of God reuealed in Scripture are of two sorts: First, They are such as himselfe keeps. Secondly, Or such as hee binds vs to keepe. The wayes which himselfe keeps, may be thus distinguished: They are partly of Iudgement, partly of Mercy. Gods way of Iudgement, is that course which hee takes with impenitent sinners, which is, [f] to walke stubbornely with those that walke stubbornely against him. To this way of God, the Prophet seemes to haue reference when he saith, [g] That God hath a way in the whirlewind, and in the the storme: he hath a course of furie, and indignation, and vengeance when he pleaseth. Gods way of mercie, is his gracious manner of proceeding, which he obserues and holds towards those, which breake off their sinnes by true Repentance. Such are [h] the wayes mentioned by the Prophet, which God opposeth to mens wayes: shewing that his fashion of dealing with repenting sinners, is differing from that disposition which is ordinarily to be found in men towards those with whom they haue once beene at variance, euen when they relent. Men in those cases are hardly wonne to pacification, God is by many degrees much more gracious: that way of the Lord which IOHN Baptist came to prepare, was both the way of Gods iustice, and of his mercie too: for Christ (before whom Iohn came) had his fanne in his hand, both for the fitting of the chaffe to vnquenchable fire, and for the gathering of the [i] wheat into his garner. Now the way which God binds vs to keepe, and which is called his, because he is the author of it, and requires it, is the way of Obedience. This is that which is called [k] The way which we should choose: it is called [l] The way of saluation: [m] The way of peace: [n] The right way: [o] The way of righteousnesse: [p] A holy way: [q] The good way, in which whoso walkes, shall find rest for his soule: [r] The way which leadeth vnto life. In euery of these wayes, Dauids purpose was to instruct sinners. He would teach them the seueritie of God against those that walke on in their sinnes, and hate to be reformed: he would acquaint them with the louing kindnesse of God, and the riches of his grace towards those that turne from their sinnes: he would informe them in the course to be held by all those that haue obtayned, through the fauour of God, the pardon of their sinnes, and doe desire to continue in that happy estate vnto the end. So that this teaching should ayme at the discouery of three things; Danger, Deliuerance, Duetie. Danger, if sinne were continued in: Deliuerance from eternall woe, if sinne were forsaken: Duetie, if the profession to renounce sinne were in sinceritie. This will be your portion, if you remayne as you are. This your happinesse, if you labour to be better. This is that you are bound to, if you would haue your reformation to be held free from hypocrisie. Thus should Dauids Teaching be: generally, the wayes of God: particularly, Gods way of iustice against the obstinate: his way of mercie towards the repentant: their way of obedience if they had a meaning to be thankefull. Now let vs proceed to matter of Doctrine. Thus first:

The first Doctrine.

That the maine and principall matter of all Teaching, by those that intend the good of others soules, must bee the things of God reuealed in his Word. DAVID here in promising to teach, binds himselfe to a precise and certayne Theame or subiect which he will teach. Hee will not teach his owne thoughts, matters of his owne priuate framing, or inuenting: neyther will he goe about to perswade or embolden any to runne such a course as he had done, in giuing scope to his owne violent and intemperate affections: but he will teach them Gods waies, which he finds in the Word, reported of God, and required by God, that will he teach.

The

The ſureſt proofe which I can make for this Doctrine, wil be (to make it appeare) that this which Dauid profeſſed, ſhould be the matter of his teaching, ought to be the ſole matter of all miniſteriall teaching: which when it is manifeſt to be true, it muſt needes follow thence, that no other thing ought to be the matter of any mans Teaching, who takes on him to be a guide and helpe to others in Religion: becauſe all other Teaching muſt be according to it, and muſt bee (as it were) a ſtreame deriued out of that fountaine. Now that the waies of God (vnderſtanding thereby ſuch things as God hath reuealed, & layed downe in his Word) muſt be the onely ſubiect of all miniſteriall Teaching it is very playne; both by the Old Teſtament, & by the New. In the Old Teſtament it was the appoyntment, that they who were by office to inſtruct the people of God, ſhould limit themſelues to this, [f] The Iudgements of God, and the Law of God: and they who were by profeſſion Prophets, were blamed for deliuering things to others, [t] which God neuer ſpake to them; [u] for prophecying out of their owne hearts, and following their owne ſpirits: and it is giuen as a cauſe why many did no good, in turning their hearers from their euill way, becauſe [x] they did not ſtand in Gods counſell, nor declare his words to the people. In the New Teſtament, Chriſt tyed thoſe whom he ſent out into the world to teach; and, by teaching, to conuert the Nations, to [y] the things which he had commanded them: Whereupon, as it was Pauls care to vent nothing [z] but that he had receyued from the Lord, ſo it was his comfort, and the ground of his aſſurance, that he was free from the bloud of all men, in that he could with a good conſcience terme that which he taught, [a] The counſell of God: and leſt others after ſhould thinke themſelues to be at more libertie, it was a Conſtitution, that they ſhould [b] deliuer the ſame in teaching others, and that the matter of Preaching ſhould bee [c] the Word: and if any taught otherwiſe, PAVL cenſured them [d] to bee proud, and ignorant, and the cauſers of ſtriſe: and gaue charge of ſhunning them, and of [e] ſeparating from them. It was euer the rule, that they that taught, ſhould be confined to the Law, and to the Teſtimonie: they were ſaid to haue no light in them, they were to be reputed blind guides, and the miniſters of darkeneſſe, euen of him who is the Prince of darkeneſſe, [f] if they ſpake not according to that Word. In the Old Teſtament, publique Preachers are called, [g] The Meſſengers of the Lord of hoſts; and in the new, [h] Ambaſſadors for Chriſt. Now hee that goeth as an Ambaſſadour from a King, muſt keepe himſelfe to his Commiſſion, and muſt proceed according to his directions, and not runne at large, according as he ſhall be ledde by his owne priuate opinion. By Pauls rule they ſhould be reſtrayned and ſilenced, whoſoeuer ſhould aduenture [i] to teach other Doctrine. God of old made them to be deſpiſed, and vile before all the people, who preſumed to deliuer ought but [k] his wayes: ſo that this is euery way playne, that this ought to bee the onely matter of miniſteriall teaching. Now (as I before ſaid) if of miniſteriall Teaching, then of all other teaching, tending to the ſoule. Therefore the ſubiect of of Abrahams houſhold-teaching, was [l] the way of the Lord: and God (inioyning this ſeruice of inſtruction in the Family) preſcribed a rehearſing to children, [m] Theſe words (ſaith he) which I command thee. A Maſter of a Family cannot be ſaid to haue a Church in his houſe, if he haue no Teaching in it; and if he ſhall not, in Teaching, tye himſelfe to the Rule of [n] Not preſuming aboue that which is written, his houſe, (though he teach) will rather be a Synagogue of Satan, then a Church of Chriſt. And thus muſt it be in the indeuors that are priuately betwixt Chriſtian & Chriſtian, to further the ſaluation one of another by admonition, and exhortation, and ſuch like; out of theſe bonds no man muſt paſſe. All ſuch courſes muſt tend to a [o] prouoking to good Workes: and what Workes ſhall be termed good, vnleſſe it be certaine they be ſuch as [p] God requires? Euery Chriſtian muſt ſet vp a Candle on a Candleſticke, that others may haue good thereby; but it muſt be ſuch an one, as himſelfe hath lighted from the greater light, which God hath ſet vp in his Church, for the guiding of our feet into the way of peace: which is the reaſon that [q] Chriſt (after the Doctrine of hearing, to which euery one is bound) ſet out in the Parable in the Seed, addes immediately, [r] that concerning the Candle, to be ſet vp in ſuch ſort, as others may receyue good by it: both to ſhew, that whoſoeuer is himſelfe inlightened by the Word, muſt ſeeke to giue direction vnto others; and withall, that the light which he takes on him to ſet vp, muſt be ſuch, as hath beene lighted from thoſe who are called, [s] Starres in Chriſts right hand. For my owne part, I haue euer imbraced that ſaying of a worthy Diuine of our times, That it is not for a priuate man to publiſh or broach any poynt of Doctrine, and ſo not to attempt the drawing of others to it, vnleſſe it be ſuch, as is plainely propounded in the Word, and taught by the Miniſters thereof. The neglect of which Rule, is cauſe of many Schiſmes, when men ſhall aduenture to teach others their owne priuat apprehenſions. God requires [t] the ſeeking of the Law at the mouth of the Prieſt. It will be beſt for him that will vnderſtand, according to ſobrietie, to keepe himſelfe there; not tying Faith to any mans iudgement (for ſo ſhould wee [u] bee Lords ouer your Faith, which Paul diſclaimes:) but waiting with the Spirit of meekeneſſe vpon Gods ordinance, as the key of all neceſſarie and ſauing knowledge. Thus for the confirmation and proofe of this Doctrine: onely Gods wayes, diſcouered in his Word, muſt be the matter of that Teaching, by which there is a deſire and hope to doe good to other ſoules.

1. Vſe. Here firſt, it is eaſie to conceiue that there is a Rule for all Teaching; vpon whomſoeuer this duetie of Teaching lyeth, the ſame is bound to Dauids ſcantling here, The wayes of God. It is our part, who be Miniſters, firſt and principally to take notice hereof; we cannot herein be too preciſe, in binding our ſelues to ſuffer nothing to paſſe the hedge of our lips, when we ſtand vp as Teachers in the Congregation; but that which we can aſcertaine our ſelues, that it is the way of God. It is a dangerous thing, when one ſhall ſpeake at aduenture, and ſhall commend that that to the people (especially shall presse it vpon their soules and consciences) which he is not well aduised, is such as God would his people should be made acquainted with. How can a man but tremble to terme that the Word of God, in the audience of a Congregation, which (it may be) is but the off-spring of his owne braine, or the spawne of his owne spirit, or for which he hath forced some Scripture, & drawne it in (as it were) by the neck, for the countenancing of that which is (indeed) rather that which he would haue to be true, then that which he is assured, in the sight of God, is true? It is much worse, when one shall purposely [x] looke out vayne and foolish things for the people; and hunt after such matter, as shall rather tickle mens eares, then edifie their hearts, by the plaine euidence of the Spirit, and of power. Thinke now, in all reason and equitie, what a deale of studie is required; both generally, in the Scripture, for the finding out that which is called, The secret [y] of the Lord: and, [z] The mind of Christ: and for picking out of the course of holy Writ; that which Paul termes, [a] The patterne of wholesome wordes; by which, and according to which, all Teaching must be carried, and proportioned: and particularly, in, and about that speciall Scripture, which we take on vs to vnfold: what need to sift before-hand well, and to examine it? what cause to seeke the Lord by prayer for direction? how meet it is, to ponder and digest euery particular well, before wee publish it? how ill it will become vs, to trust to sudden thoughts, and to present apprehensions (such as shall rise) when we are speaking? There is (I acknowledge) a certaine kind of diuine influence, (as an old Father termes it) which doth, at the instant, bring to the mind of a conscionable Teacher, things before in the particular not thought vpon, which a man may comfortably entertayne, as a speciall pledge of the Lords assistance. But it is no safe way (I thinke) for a man to make it ordinary, only to informe himselfe with certaine generall notions of his Text, and to leaue the rest to be supplyed out of present thoughts. God will punish that rashnesse, and a man shall, by that meanes, at vnawares cast out that, whereof he shall haue cause after, (eyther in regard of the substance, or forme thereof) to repent, and be ashamed: so farre shall he be from hauing comfort in it, as being the way of God. I speake not this, as taking on mee to teach all others how to preach, or by way of censuring, and taxing any mans course; but I note this, (it comming in the stroke) according to my Text, to worke care in mine owne heart, and to put others in mind of that, which (I hope) they doe; I am sure they should doe. Wee shall best approue our selues to euery mans conscience, in the sight of God, by tying our selues to this, To teach Gods wayes; and that, after that way which is his pleasure to prescribe; for so must it be. That same, Teaching none other Doctrine forbidden, [b] hath reference to the forme and fashion of teaching, as well as to the substance of the Doctrine. God hath inioyned both a way to be taught, and a way of teaching it too. There is no man, but he desires good cookerie, as well as good meats: and albeit hunger may make a man man doe much, in a dish ill handled, yet there may be such sauce, and such dressing, that the very sight of the one will cloy the stomake; and the taste of the other will kill the appetite; and cause a regorging of that, which in it selfe is wholesome. A man may haue a good cause in a Court, and yet it may be spoyled, for lacke of a well-framed Declaration. A good way is as requisite, as a good matter. I remember a saying of the Apostle, [c] Desire the best gifts, and yet I will shew you a more excellent way. The substance of their proceeding was good, but yet there was need of bettering in the way; so you see there is much in the way. I must say agayne (to preuent exceptions) which I am very subiect to, I goe not about to reduce euery man to my way: Nay, I will say with the Apostle, [d] If Christ bee preached any manner of way, I therein ioy, and will ioy: yet, why may I not also say with the Poet, If thou knowest a better then mine, shew it mee, and I will ioyne with thee; if not, thou hast no cause but to take mine? I remember, that in the holy Storie, when, after the ouerthrow of Absalom, Ioab had a purpose to send Dauid the newes, he sent Cushi, and away he hasted; Ahimaaz would needs goe too. It was a prettie while before he could get leaue; at last, he went: Though he set out after Cushi, yet (being wise to chuse his way) he ouer-went Cushi; he got the start, by getting the better way: so (I say) it is much in a mans way still, to haue a good way in Teaching Gods way. And it was a good signe in Apollos, though he were an eloquent man, and mightie in the Scripture, yet he was not ashamed to [e] be taught the way of God more exactly. What if I should say, he learned of them to mend the manner of his preaching? I am sure there is nothing against it in the Text. Beza expounds it, The way which leadeth to God. So much of this; I will not say, by the way; for I could not well balke it, it was so full in my way. Now, you also that are Christians, though not Ministers, you haue also cause, with vs, to take notice of this Doctrine. When wee haue taught you, you must also teach others; you must not be so vnkind, as, that when the Lord hath set you into the way, you will not helpe them that wander in finding it. There is no man trauelling towards heauen, but he must be glad of companie, although he must keepe on still, though he haue no companie. Especially our care herein must extend to our Families, and to those that we haue interest in, and conuerse with. Remember euer that of Cornelius, when God had directed him to send for PETER, [f] He called together against PETER came, his kinsmen, and speciall friends; at the least yet let vs goe so farre. Well, now if wee meane (as God forbid but wee should) to doe good this way; forget not our limits, the waies of God. There be, that teach others their owne wayes labouring to make others naught, and licentious, like themselues. There be, that infuse into others, false wayes in matters of Religion, Popish wayes, schismaticall wayes, superstitious wayes, the wayes of their owne hearts; let our Rule be, to teach Gods wayes. That which is manifest to vs by the Word of God, and that which we haue learned from that ministerie (of the the faithfulneſſe and power whereof we haue had experience;) that let vs labour to make others to become partakers of. It is an errour in many well affected, and it needs reforming, that hauing ſometimes mutuall ſpeeches of matters of Religion, they treate more vpon (I may call them) by-matters in compariſon of the mayne, and vpon matters of their owne priuate apprehending, then vpon ſuch neceſſarie points as they haue beene taught, tending indeed to a reciprocall edification in their holy Faith. I condemne not the other ſimply, but I preſſe theſe of the latter ſort farre aboue them, and when they which heare in common, ſhall ioyne together in this, to further either other in their profiting by that, ſurely, it is the beſt. So ſhall we worke conſcience into our ſelues, and into others alſo. And although it be very lawfull for a Chriſtian to ſearch the Scriptures diligently, for perfiting of his vnderſtanding, and for inquiring out the hid myſterie of Gods Booke, euen the very depth and marrow of it; and not only ſo, but to communicate his thoughts to others vpon occaſion, and to debate the ſame to and fro; yet when it comes to the point of Teaching, as in the Family, or in an attempt to draw others to God, there let euery man beware of going beyond his Teacher. Seeke to ſettle no man in any thing, but that which we haue by an ordinarie courſe our ſelues learned to bee the way of God. Be ſure not to exceed this way, the proportion of things manifeſt. It is comfortable to haue beene a meanes of any mans reclayming, but dangerous to haue beene the meanes of infecting any man with a miſ-opinion. This is the firſt Vſe of this Doctrine, reſpectiuely to thoſe which are to teach others, whether in publique or in priuate.

A ſecond Vſe is, to thoſe who are to ſubiect themſelues to others Teaching: for, here they ſee or may ſee, what they muſt learne. GOD binds all to learne in publique of thoſe that are Miniſters. As he muſt be a Beleeuer, whoſoeuer will be ſaued; ſo he muſt be a Diſciple, whoſoeuer deſires to be a Beleeuer. And againe, thoſe that liue vnder others gouernement in a Family, muſt yeeld, and that with all thankefulneſſe, to houſhold inſtruction: and one man muſt heare another in matters of this nature. Now, becauſe there is no man that teacheth, whether in the Church, or in the Family, or in priuate perſwaſion, but that he may erre, and may at a time teach that which is not right; therefore wee muſt all learne, how in ſome ſort to be comfortably aſſured, that wee are taught nothing but that we may ſafely and comfortably intertayne. Generally then, it muſt bee manifeſt to vs to bee the way of God: ſo much wee will grant, it may bee; but here will bee all the matter, how to know that in the particular. What Preacher doth not ſay, that hee doth teach the wayes of God truly? We may ſay in this, as Tully ſaith of Merchants; No man proclaymes in the ſtreet that he hath rotten Wares, or an ill conditioned commoditie to ſell. He that preacheth moſt enormouſly, profeſſeth the cleane contrarie: and wee haue heard out of Prouerb. 9. how folly ſpeaks in wiſedomes tune. Well, to grow to a ſhort iſſue (that I dwell not too long in this one Doctrine,) if we remember how I expound-

2. Vſe.

ded the wayes of God in the beginning, here will bee matter of excellent direction vnto all; and this will furnish euen those of the lowest forme, with skill sufficient in this matter. Remember we the three wayes, and all will be plaine. First, The way of Danger, in respect of Gods Iustice, if we remayne in sinne. Secondly, The way of Deliuerance through his mercy, if we shake off sinne. Thirdly, The way of Duty, if we will be thankfull vnto God for redemption from sinne. Apply this now on this fashion: There is no necessary matter in all Religion, but it is iustly to be reduced to these three heads: according to that of learned Vrsinus, deuiding his Catechisme, wherein he comprizeth the whole body of Diuinitie, to these very three particulars: Mans Misery; Mans Deliuery; Mans Thankefulnesse. Now, that Teaching which doth most at full lay out the extremity of Gods way of Iustice, and of our naturall lyableneſſe thereunto, in respect that wee are vtterly stript of all, euen the least dram of true goodnesse. That which doth most effectually and comfortably discouer the heauenly sweetnesse of Gods way of mercy, by Iesus Christ, freely sauing those, which were euery way vnable to saue themselues. That which doth most straitly, and without giuing any the smallest liberty to the flesh, presse and vrge the way of duty, binding all that thinke to haue mercy, to an absolute renouncing of all vngodlinesse: that teaching is such as a man may safely trust vnto; in it are the Wayes of God truely shewed. And thus still is a man that heares either priuately or publiquely any Teaching, to consider himselfe whether he haue profited thereby. Let him aske himselfe; Haue I learned this day, either to see my dangers more clearely, if I leaue not sinne? or my hope more comfortably through Christ, if I renounce sinne? or my duty to God more playnely? If I meane henceforth no more to sinne, if I am bettered in any of these three, I may assure my selfe I haue profited, and God hath giuen a gracious blessing to my paines. All true teaching aymes at these three: the humbling of a Sinner, the comforting of a Sinner humbled, the begetting of Conscience in him being comforted. That which works best to all, or either of these three, that doe thou imbrace; and as thou shalt finde thy selfe to goe on in humility, because of thy natiue vileneſſe: in comfort, because of the hope of saluation through Christ: in Conscience of thy waies, because of the great things which God hath done for thee, so resolue vpon thy growth in Godlinesse, and vpon thy profiting by continuall Teaching. I pray obserue and remember this Rule. Forget not these wayes of God: and when thou art well guided in the well vnderstanding, and right vse-making of these three, then goe thy way like the Eunuch [g] reioycing. Let this be to thee as the Honny which Samson found in the Lyons Carkasse, feede on it as thou goest; and as he gaue some to his Father and to his [h] Mother, so doe thou impart the comfort thou hast receiued, vnto others, that when they haue eaten thereof with thee, their Soules may blesse thee. Thus of the matter of Teaching. Next, of the Persons to be taught; The wicked. Thus is the Doctrine,

Note.

[g] Act.8.

That

That it is not vnpossible, but that by the meanes of Teaching, euen they which are most vngodly, may be reclaymed. The words are very direct and plaine. Dauids generall drift is as much as he may to doe good: the particularitie wherein he will labour to doe good, is Teaching; the matter, Gods wayes; the parties, The wicked: so that he is not out of hope of being an instrument vnder God by Teaching to recouer euen such. No better euidence to confirme this, then the consideration of the state of the Gentiles, before the labours of the Apostles with them. Who could bee more wicked then they were; suffered by God to [i] walke in their owne wayes; [k] Carryed away to dumbe Idols; [l] Walking in the vanitie of their mind, hauing their cogitations darkened, strangers from the life of God: [m] Vnwise, disobedient, deceiued, serning lusts, and diuers pleasures? And much more to that purpose find we reported of the natural condition of the Gentiles in the writing of Saint Paul; yet the wayes of God being taught among these, how many of them were turned from the power of Satan vnto God? This was the meanes sanctified by God for their reclayming, and by this their soules were won. Thus the Romanes, who [n] had beene the very seruants of sinne: thus the Corinthians, who [o] had beene Fornicators, Idolaters, Wantons, Theeues, Couetous, Drunkards, &c. thus the Galatians, who [p] knew not God, but did seruice to them which by nature are not Gods: thus the Ephesians, who were dead in trespasses and sinnes, and who had had [q] their conuersation in the lusts of the flesh, in fulfilling the will of the flesh, and of the mind: thus they all, towards whom God blessed the labours of the Apostles, in bearing the Name of Christ before the world, they were committers of all manner of vngodlinesse, euen with greedinesse; Saint Paul commends, instructing with the Spirit of meekenesse, as the meanes (if any thing) to recouer those who are contrary-minded; [r] and to bring them to repentance, out of the snare of the Deuill, who are taken of him at his will. Those Cretians, who were naturally euill beasts, and slow bellies, yet Paul had hope, by Titus his paines in teaching, and by [s] speaking the things which became wholesome Doctrine, to bring them euen to soundnesse in the Faith. What a swarme of wicked ones was brought in at once by [t] Teaching? euen such who were guiltie of the crucifying and slaughter [u] of the Lord of Life. They in Samaria, whom Simon had bewitched with sorceries, thus they were brought to imbrace the things which concerned [x] the Kingdome of God. And that we may see the blessing of God vpon the priuate indeuours of men, labouring after their owne taste of Gods goodnesse, to be vsefull vnto others; take notice of the great good done by the inuitement vsed towards her Neighbours of the Woman of [y] Samaria: many of that blind idolatrous people, who worshipped they knew not what, [z] were brought to beleeue in him through her saying. Albeit her speech was not the proper instrument of their conuersion, yet thereby, euen by her acquainting them with that which shee her selfe had found, they were stirred vp to come to him, by whom they were turned to the faith. Thus we see what good, through the mercy of God, Teaching may doe, euen to those, who in themselues are most licentious.

1. Vſe. Firſt, this might, if it were in the hearing of thoſe whom it doth mainely and properly concerne, bee commended to thoſe who haue moſt to doe in matters of publique gouernement. If there bee a deſire of the peoples good, and of recouering them from their lewdneſſe, and vngodly kinde of liuing, there ſhould be a ſpeciall care to eſtabliſh Teaching among them. This is like, through the great goodneſſe of God, to doe that which all Lawes, and externall power whatſoeuer elſe is not able to effect. It was one of the firſt courſes of Ioſiah, that great Reformer, to a 2.Chro.35.2. [a] appoint the Leuites to their charges, and to incourage them to the ſeruice of the Lord. Whence is the continuall ſtriuing of Satan, to leſſen the number of faithfull Teachers, to ſtop the mouthes of thoſe that are moſt diligent in that duty, to raiſe troubles and vexations againſt thoſe that labour in that worke, to be a ſpirit of Gaine-ſaying and wrangling in ſo many, but the experience which he hath of the abatement of his kingdome by the meanes of Teaching. Certainely, whatſoeuer many profane wretches, many men of corrupt minds doe belch out, as if Teaching were that which did marre all, and that the world were ſo much the worſe, and the more abounding in euill becauſe of it, yet if teaching the Wayes of God were more common, publiquely in Churches, priuately in Families, and that countenance giuen vnto it, that ought to bee; the height of ſinne would be abated, and an vnexpected reformation would inſue. Why ſhould wee doubt of the ſucceſſe of the courſe which the Lord himſelfe hath ſanctified? By the mouthes of Teachers it pleaſed him to gather in his Saints, and to bring thoſe which are ordained vnto life eternall to beleeue.

2. Vſe. Secondly, How ſhould this ſtirre vp Parents and Maſters of Families, and all men in their places, to worke thoſe to whoſe ſoules they wiſh well, to a dependance vpon Teaching? If any thing ſhall euer doe good, ſurely, if God be to be beleeued in his Word, this is it. Bleſſed be God, it is ſeene in comfortable experience, that this courſe hath wrought ſtrangely vpon many, to the turning of them (as it were) quite about from liuing after the luſts of men, to liue after the Will of God; and God by theſe meanes, though many doe winke on purpoſe that they may not ſee it, doth daily adde vnto his Church ſuch as ſhall bee ſaued.
b Matt.13.47. This Net of Teaching, doth, I confeſſe, [b] gather in all kinde of things, and many are brought to a kinde of yeelding to it, who yet not only continue, but increaſe in vngodlineſſe: that is no preiudice at all to this truth. This courſe is ſtill the Power of God vnto ſaluation according as Chriſt himſelfe is ſtill the chiefe corner Stone, Elect and precious, c 1.Pet.2.6,7,8. though he be to ſome [c] a Rocke of offence, and a Stone to ſtumble at.

3. Vſe. Thirdly, How ſhould this prouoke all that are called to the office of publique Teaching, to a perſiſting in this courſe, with an hope ſtill to doe good euen to thoſe who are of worſe condition? For ought any man knoweth touching this particular, a good houre may come at laſt, in which God may gather them vnto himſelfe. This is the way, and it muſt bee vſed. God will firſt or laſt make it ſucceſſefull vnto all which belong belong vnto the election of grace. But of this, more in the next Clause of this Verse. In the meane time, thus wee see Dauids hope to bee a meanes of good, euen vpon wicked men, by teaching them; not that he assumed to himselfe, that which is proper to ministeriall Teaching, viz. to bee the next instrument of their reclayming, though Dauid might goe farre this way, the Scripture honouring him with the Name and Title of a Prophet; but his meaning was, that according to his place he would labour to doe others good, and by that teaching which belonged to him in his ranke, seeke to draw them to that other, which God hath more specially and directly deputed to be the meanes of mans conuersion. One thing yet remayneth in this Clause of the time, Then, &c. Thence we are taught,

That he is most fit to teach the way of saluation vnto others, who hath had experience of the mercy of God therein for his owne particular. DAVID promiseth to teach others, when he hath gotten comfort himselfe. When I feele againe in my selfe that ioy which I was wont to feele in the saluation of God, and am sensible of the Lords establishing by his free Spirit, then will I set vpon this worke of teaching others. When I haue gotten power ouer mine owne sinnes, then will I labour to draw others from their sinnes. When [b] thou art conuerted, saith CHRIST to PETER, then strengthen thy brethren. PETER should then know best how to be a confirmer and comforter of others, when he had felt the power and mercy of God in his owne particular recouerie. ISAIAH the Prophet was afraid to goe vpon the Lords seruice; hee cryed out when he was first called vpon to that end, Woe is me, for I am vndone; vntill he had receiued an assurance that [c] his iniquitie was taken away, and his sinne purged. PAVL was first called to be a Christian, before an Apostle; [f] A chosen vessell to God, before a vessell to beare his Name before the Gentiles. It is a speciall thing when a man is able to speake to the people out of experience: It giues life to that which is deliuered, and it strengthens a man to the more boldnesse; and when it is a case of conscience, he shall treate thereof most exactly and properly, and in the right kind, who hath had the feeling of the like in his owne selfe. It is truely reckoned (Temptation, I meane) as one of the three speciall things to the bringing of a man to be a good Preacher: and God is wont to exercise many whom he calleth to that worke very strangely, sometimes with buffetings of Satan tending to despaire, sometimes with sollicitations to euill, by which they are well-neere vanquished, and yet in both sustaineth them, that they may know how the better to discourse to others, touching the wyles of Satan, and touching the deceitfulnesse of sinne. He that neuer saw forren Countries but by Map, and vnderstands the state of them onely by Historie, may discourse commendably thereof, but nothing to him who hath beene there himselfe, and seene and obserued the particular occurrences with his eye. Oh! how could Dauid relate to others, now out of his owne heart, what sleights the Deuill had to draw into sinne, what meanes to intangle, how inclineable the heart of man is to that which is naught, how easily brought to content tent it selfe with a little repentance; how could he tell of the anguish of soule that followeth an awaked conscience, of the terrour of accusing thoughts, of the combates betwixt doubting and comfort, betwixt hope and despaire, of the difficultie of recouering spirituall feeling when it is lost? what a Lecture could he reade of the goodnesse of God, in staying from the extremitie of euill, in making reproofes and admonitions profitable, in giuing ioy and comfort by degrees, in restoring to the gracious feeling of his fauour? How pithily and feelingly could Dauid treate of all these things? and therefore the more fit was he, though hee bought it dearely with much smart and shame, to teach Gods wayes vnto the wicked. There was nothing belongs to matters of this nature, but he could bring in himselfe for a proofe. Then againe, if hee who vndertakes to teach others, be not a reformed man, a man of conscience himselfe; if he liue in open scandall; it must needs preiudice his teaching, and make it hatefull. If he liue in secret euils, the conscience of his owne guilt will dead his spirits, and fill his face with shame, though man bee not able to accuse him. Besides, God doth not ordinarily blesse the labours of vnconscionable and vnreformed persons: g If thou returne (said God to Ieremie) thou shalt stand before mee: meaning, that he would approue his seruice and blesse it, in case he himselfe kept close to God. I say (ordinarily) God doth not blesse the labours of vnreformed persons in teaching. I put in (ordinarily) because I doubt not but that God doth blesse sometimes some mens preaching to others, who themselues haue no interest at all into eternall Life. I am sure, the chiefe Priests and Scribes taught that to the Wisemen, touching the place of Christs birth, which was to their comfort and good, though themselues by it receiued no h benefit. The winning of soules hangs not vpon our being of Gods election, or vpon our personall goodnesse, but vpon Gods Ordinance; and if it were not so, the Hearers shall still bee in doubt of their owne conuersion, till they haue assurance of our election: which were a grosse absurditie.

h Mat.2.3,&c.

The Vse. Here is againe matter of admonition for all Teachers publique or priuate. Labour thou to feele that in thy selfe, which thou wouldest worke into another. That which thou wouldest haue others to make conscience of, doe thou make conscience of in thy selfe: that which thou wouldest haue others shunne, see thou auoid: that comfort whereof thou discoursest vnto others, indeuour to feele the sweetnesse of it in thy owne soule. Thou shalt then be most profitable, thou shalt speake with better assurance, with more confidence, and with greater courage. It is the cause of a great deale of coldnesse, of much emptinesse and barrennesse in many mens teachings; it makes them to haue as little life in them, as when a little Boy saith grace, when as they talke of things which themselues neuer felt, perswade that which they themselues neuer made conscience of. If a man want this experimentall Diuinitie, his teachings and exhortations will want edge, though hee knew otherwise as much as all reading and studying can afford. This out of Dauids order;

when

when he hath gotten power ouer his owne ſinne, then he will be labouring with others to reforme their ſinne; when hee hath obtayned peace to his owne ſoule, then hee will indeuour to bring peace vnto others ſoules. A man ſpeaks but by roate, that ſpeaks onely by booke, and not by feeling.

The one and twentieth Lecture.

VERS. 13.

Sinners ſhall bee conuerted vnto thee.

HItherto of the dutie which Dauid bound himſelfe to: now of the ſucceſſe which hee promiſed vnto himſelfe thereupon, (Sinners ſhall bee, &c.) The Doctrine is thus,

The first Doctrine.

That the turning of ſinners vnto God, is the ordinarie iſſue of faithfull teaching, and ſuch as may comfortably bee expected where that is vſed. This is gathered out of the confident manner of Dauids ſpeaking; He will teach, and ſinners ſhall be turned. Hee doth in a manner aſſure himſelfe of good ſucceſſe vpon the vſe of the appointed meanes. He knew well how God is wont to bleſſe his owne Ordinances, crowning thoſe courſes with a gracious end, which are vndertaken in obedience to his appointment, and in zeale for his glorie. It is an excellent ſpeech to this purpoſe which is in [a] Ieremy, the Lord ſpeaking of the vnprofitableneſſe of the labours of ſome of the prophets of thoſe times, ſaith, that if they had ſtood in his Counſell, and had declared his Words to his people, then they ſhould haue turned them from their euill way, &c. which words doe manifeſtly proue, that the ordinarie ſequell of faithfulneſſe in the Lords worke, is the turning of ſinners from the power of Satan vnto God. [b] The Word which goeth out of the Mouth of God, ſhall not returne vnto mee void, it ſhall accompliſh that which I will, and proſper in the thing to which I ſend it. Wee may ſee in the Storie of the Apoſtles courſes, how mightily the Word of God faithfully diſpenſed by them, grew, and how it did preuaile: Three thouſand ſinners turned at one Sermon of [c] Saint Peters: a little while after by the ſame meanes, the three thouſand became [d] fiue thouſand: and ſtill according as the Word was more and more preached, ſo [e] the number of them which beleeued in the Lord, both of men and women, grew more and more. When Peter came to preach at CORNELIVS houſe, ſee the conſequent, [f] The holy Ghoſt fell vpon all thoſe which heard the Word. BARNABAS laboured in the Word at Antioch, and [g] much people ioyned themſelues vnto the Lord. PAVL and the ſame Barnabas comming together at Iconium into the Synagogues of the Iewes, [h] they ſpake, and a great

a great multitude both of the Iewes and Grecians beleeued. What should I goe thorow particulars? still it shall appeare that the Lord gaue that testimonie to the Word of his Grace, that whersoeuer it was taught, so many as were ordayned vnto Life eternall, did beleeue. This Doctrine must bee rightly taken, otherwise there may insue some inconuenience: which is the reason why in the Doctrine, I put in the word (ordinarie:) because it doth not alway so come to passe, that all faithfull teaching is apparantly and sensibly followed with this comfortable effect of winning soules. Isaiah complayned [i] he had laboured in vaine, he had spent his strength in vaine, and for nothing: and, [k] that he had all day spred out his hands to a rebellious people. IEREMIE making inquirie among the people for whose good he bestowed his paynes, could [l] heare no man speake aright, euery one turned to his race, as the Horse rusheth into the battell. EZEKIEL was sent to those, touching whom God told him, that [m] they would not heare, neither indeede cease. Yea, the Apostles themselues, notwithstanding Gods working with them, and by them extraordinarily, yet in some places found small successe, some [n] expelled them out of their Coasts: yea, euen Christ complained, [o] You will not come vnto me, that you might haue life: and how often (said he to the inhabitants of Ierusalem) would I haue gathered thy children together, &c. [p] and yee would not? Our Sauiour compares the preaching of the Word vnto the sowing of the seede. As then it fares in the matter of sowing, so in the matter of teaching. Good Corne, and a large increase, is not alwayes the recompense of the painefull Husband; sometimes the ground failes, and deceiues his hope; sometimes, some vnseasonablenesse of the yeere frustrates his expecting: and yet it is true, that Tillage doth ordinarily bring a benefit vnto him that vseth it: so when the seede of the Word falleth into some hearers, it becomes vnfruitfull: to some it is a sauour of death vnto destruction: there be many occasions of choking it where it lights, and of nipping it in the head when it is come vp; yet ordinarily it is true, that being sincerely and truely taught, it becomes the Power of God vnto saluation. Then besides this may be obserued, that there may be also a successe in respect of this particular of reclayming sinners, though it bee not by and by apparant. The conuersion of a sinner is not a worke suddenly brought about. The seeds thereof may bee begunne by one mans Ministry, though there be no euidence thereof vntill the matter bee further pressed, and wrought by the labours of another. As in Husbandry, it is possible that the ground may be manured by one, sowed by another, in the dayes of a third come vp, and then yet a fourth may reape the increase: shall not the former of these bee reputed to haue his part in this businesse? shall not the increase be imputed in part to his industry, though it may bee he neuer liued to cast so much as an handfull of seede into the earth? And so in this sense, I am perswaded that there is no faithfull teaching of the wayes of God, but by it this worke of conuerting sinners more or lesse is furthered. A Minister may labour long among a people, and when he hath serued his time, be taken away, having uing much griefe in his heart, that his paines preuailed to the gathering in of a few or none; well, when hee is dead and gone, God in mercy ſends another to goe on where hee left; and as Chriſts Phraſe is in this very caſe, to enter in vpon his labours: in his time there is more obedience yeelded, and the truth preuailes: ſhall not the former of theſe two be adiudged to haue an hand in this buſineſſe? Yes certainely, and euen hee in the day of the appearing of the great Shepherd, ſhall ſhine as a Starre among the reſt of thoſe who haue turned many vnto righteouſneſſe. Then both the former labourer which ſowed, and neuer ſaw the comming of it vp, and the ſecond that came to the reaping of that which the paynes of another had made way for, [q] ſhall both reioyce together. Beſides, let this bee further noted for an explanation of this Doctrine, that it comes to paſſe many times, that that worke of turning ſinners which is wrought by teaching, is not euer effected among thoſe to whom it is intended; which is a thing (which in the conceit of many not knowing how to iudge aright, doth preiudice the reputation of of ſome mens paines) yet that which is not done there, God workes it in ſome others, who hauing hungry ſoules, are glad of ſome of the leauings of that plenty, which others in their carnall fulneſſe doe deſpiſe. I haue knowne in the Vniuerſity, that when ſome Youths caring little for learning, becauſe of their hopes for outward meanes, haue gotten no profit by the diligent readings of their induſtrious Tutor, who according to the truſt repoſed in him, hath laboured their particular good; ſome poore Scholler that hath come in by way of ſufferance only, and hath beene permitted only to come ſecretly to liſten at the Chamber or Study doore, hath gone away with the learning: and ſo it falleth out oft-times, that the people of a particular Congregation, where a Miniſter, becauſe it is his charge, ſpends out himſelfe, eſteeming little the grace of God, and receiuing it vtterly in vaine; ſome notwithſtanding who are but as it were ſtanders by, and were not purpoſely intended by him that taught, get away all the ſweet, their ſoules are comforted by that which the others make no reckoning of. The Tutor I ſpeake of, perhaps hee grieues becauſe his Pupils profit not and receiues ſome diſgrace, becauſe they returne to their Friends with as ſmall a lading of learning as they brought; yet he did good, though he knew it not, there is one of whom he neuer thought, who will be alwayes glad that he did heare him: ſo the Paſtor in this caſe ſorrowes not a little, at the backwardneſſe and vnfruitfulneſſe of the people, to whoſe good hee hath vowed himſelfe: hee doth his duty with much heauineſſe, and like inough hee is cenſured in the world for this; and ſome will ſay, Thus and thus he doth, but ſee what a Pariſh hee hath; here is all after the old wont: yet a thouſand to one if there be not ſome, not particularly thought of in the diſpenſation of the Word by the Speaker, to whom the Lord yet hath made it profitable, who ſhall bee his Glory and his Crowne in the day of Chriſt. Me thinks I conceiue a certaine reſemblance and ſhaddow hereof, in that which I read in the [r] holy Story: Our Sauiour Chriſt going vp to Ieruſalem, ſalem, and being there at one of the Feaſts, when there was a great concourſe of people; being there, they for whoſe ſakes he was there mainly and eſpecially, made no great vſe of his being there: the common ſort ranne a gazing after him, becauſe they had heard ſomewhat of his miracles, ſpecially of that of rayſing vp Lazarus from the dead: but marke, f Verſe 20. f There were certayne Greekes, &c. the chiefe good then of his being then there, returned vnto ſtrangers, and they came to him with a deſire indeed to be acquainted with him, and to learne ſomewhat from him. Thus haue I laboured to cleere this Doctrine euery way. The conuerſion of ſinners, is the fruit of Teaching. Dauid in reſoluing to performe the one, aſſures himſelfe of comfort in the other. How this propoſition is to be vnderſtood, I haue indeuoured to ſhew. Eyther wee may ſay thus, that ordinarily it is ſo; God bleſſeth his owne meanes to it owne end: or we may ſay it is perpetually and conſtantly ſo, though not alwayes euidently and apparantly ſo. Euery teacher liues not to ſee the ſucceſſe of his perſonall paynes: the ſeed ſowne by his hand, may ſpring vp when he is gone; and his labour not working with thoſe to whom he directly meant it, it may in the mercy of God be effectuall to ſome others, of whom he thought not; one way or other to ſome or other God doth proſper it.

1. Vſe. Firſt, this is to be an incouragement vnto all, whom God hath called to teach others. There cannot be a more effectuall motiue to any man to vndertake any buſineſſe, then the hope and expectation of ſucceſſe. It ſhould be enough for the quickning of any man to a dutie, that God requires it of him, and that by his obedience he ſhal pleaſe God; but when there is an aſſurance that the worke ſhall proſper vnder a mans hand, that is a double incouragement. It put a great deale of life into Moſes, when God ſending him into Ægypt to deliuer his people out of the power and tyrannie of Pharaoh, told him before-hand, t The people ſhall obey thy voyce, and PHARAOH ſhall let them goe. So was it with PAVL, when he was aſſured, being at Corinth, that u the Lord would be with him, and that hee had much people in that Citie. Wee ſee how the hope of a good iſſue, when yet men know that there is ſome hazard in the buſineſſe, makes them ſet on with cheerefulneſſe, euen in painfull ſeruices. Thus men labour and toile in matters of husbandry, in hope of a recompence at the harueſt: thus they aduenture their liues and ſtates in Merchandize, and in trauelling to the moſt remote parts of the earth, in hope of a good voyage; and yet it is poſſible that the former by vnſeaſonableneſſe of the yeere, the latter, by Pirates or by ſhipwracke, may not onely not get ought, but loſe a great deale, and be impouerished by their paynes. Behold here then, the Lord hath giuen his Word, euen he who is faithfull, and will alſo doe it, and who cannot deny himſelfe: Doe thou teach the way of God vnto the wicked, and ſinners ſhall be conuerted vnto God. Vp therefore and be doing, the Lord is with thee, and his worke ſhall proſper in thy hands. If thou be a Maſter of a Family, remember thy charge, to rehearſe continually the words of God vnto thy children, and learne of Abraham, to commaund thy ſonnes and thy houſhold, that they keepe the way of the Lord: reſolue thy ſelfe, that hee which requires this of thee, will alſo giue a bleſſing to thee in thy care: perhaps, thou ſhalt not ſee the iſſue preſently; remember thou thy ſelfe wert not wrought vpon at the firſt; and muſt not the x husbandman wait for the precious fruit of the earth, and haue long patience for it, vntill hee receiue the former and the latter raine? Thy ſonne or ſeruant which will not heare thee now, and vpon whom all the good leſſons which thou haſt commended to them, may ſeeme to be euen caſt away; yet another day, when thou art dead, or when they are departed from thee, God may cauſe euen the very things which thou haſt taught them, to worke in them, ſo that when thou ſleepeſt in the earth, they ſhall haue cauſe to thanke God that euer they ſaw thee, or were brought vp vnder thee. Or, it may be, that ſome ſtranger that is caſually within thy gates, and is (as we may ſay) by chance partaker of thy godly admonitions to them, may receiue ſome benefit thereby; howſoeuer it ſhall ſeeme to be for the preſent to thee, yet be aſſured there is a bleſſing followeth thy endeuours; euen that great worke for which Chriſt ſhed his bloud, receyues ſome furtherance by thee, whereof though it bee hidden from thee for the preſent, yet thou ſhalt receiue the reward, and find the ſweet in the Day of reckoning. So ſay I to thee (and yet not I, but the Lord) If thou be a Paſtor of a Congregation, be inſtant in the worke to which the Lord hath deputed thee, be ſtrong and let not thine hands be weake, giue attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine, behold, the Lord of the harueſt looketh vpon thee, and thy labour in him ſhall not bee in vayne; why ſhouldeſt thou doubt, but his Kingdome, by thee, ſhall receiue ſome inlargement? preſcribe not to him how ſoone thou ſhalt ſee the ſeed to grow vp which thou haſt caſt, or whom or how many thou ſhalt gather into the Lords barne. It is well if but one ſoule be by thee after all thy paynes, brought to amendment of life out of Satans ſnares: and what if thou neuer know the particulars, to whom thou haſt done good. Many a ſoule may bleſſe thee whom thou ſhalt neuer heare of: and albeit God may try thee, by not ſeeing any great ſucceſſe while thou art here, yet thou ſhalt haue cauſe of triumph in the Day of Chriſt, in beholding that whereof thou waſt not aware before, that thou didſt not runne in vayne. And this hope ought to egge vs on more, euen to the ſpending of our ſelues in this ſeruice, then all reward or preferment amongſt men, how great ſoeuer it be. I know, that through the corruption of our nature, it is a great deading to a mans forwardneſſe in diſpenſing the Word, when the mouth of the Oxe which treadeth out the corne is muzzeled; and it kills the heart of many a willing labourer, when he feeleth himſelfe ſtraitned and pinched in outward things; I commend it not when it is ſo: this ought to quicken a man more then all the fatneſſe of the earth, and the filling of his barne with abundance, euen the hope that by him ſinners ſhall be turned vnto God. To haue been an inſtrument of God for that, ſhall euer fill a mans heart as with marrow

O happy ſhall he bee, whoſe heart ſhall bee for ſuch a buſineſſe, and whoſe labours God ſhall bleſſe in ſuch a worke. So doing, ſaid Paul to Timothy, (to whet him on to thinke no paine too much,) z 1.Tim.4.16. z thou ſhalt both ſaue thy ſelfe, and them that heare thee. Wo bee to vs if this cannot moue vs to an vnwearied diligence, in dealing vnto the people the Goſpell of God. He that cannot finde himſelfe to bee more quickned with this hope; O Lord, if I teach thy Wayes, Sinners ſhall bee conuerted vnto thee, then with any either applauſe or recompence, ſo that hee would rather hee might bee an inſtrument vnder God of winning one ſoule, then to haue the beſt Benefice in a Countrey, I doubt much, how he can aſſure himſelfe of the vprightneſſe of his heart before the Lord, and perſwade himſelfe that God hath ſent him. Shall wee thinke that Dauids heart did not euen leape within him in his cheriſhing this hope? Oh, (thought hee) in teſtimony of my true repentance, for this my great offence, I will labour to doe as much good as I can in teaching others, and then I hope I ſhall haue much comfort in Gods bleſſing my indeuours, to the turning of ſome wandring ſinners vnto him; and what an euidence ſhall this bee of Gods fauour towards mee, and what a ioy to my heart, when I ſhall meete with thoſe, whoſe ſoules ſhall bleſſe God for mee, that euer they did know mee? I am verily perſwaded, that this hope put more comfort and life into Dauids ſoule, then it could haue done, if any man had beene able to aſſure him of another Kingdome. Marke what was ſaid of Iohn Baptiſt, when the tydings of his birth were brought by an Angell to his Father a Luk.1.14,15, 16. a ZACHARY: Thou ſhalt haue ioy and gladneſſe, and many ſhall reioyce at his birth. For he ſhall bee great in the ſight of the Lord. Well, how ſhould there come by him ſo much Ioy to his Parents, ſo much comfort to others, ſo much honour to himſelfe in the eyes of God? many of the Children of Iſrael ſhall hee turne to their Lord God. Here was matter of Ioy to his Father and Mother, that ſuch a Sonne ſhould come out of their Loynes, matter of reioycing to others, whoſe ſoules ſhould bee wonne to his Miniſtry, matter of true greatneſſe to him, that God ſhould bee pleaſed to imploy him in ſuch a ſeruice. Let vs all here learne to bee in loue with this thing; the turning of Sinners vnto God. Thou art not turned to God thy ſelfe, if thou carry not that heart that thou wouldeſt euen thinke thy ſelfe happy, moughteſt thou bee a meanes to turne another vnto God. Let this be a Spurre to vs all, one man to conſider another, to watch ouer another, to admoniſh one another, to pray for one another; Parents and Maſters to informe their Families, Miniſters to be diligent in ſhewing to their people the whole Counſell of God; euen this hope, that if we doe our duties to one another herein, Sinners ſhall be conuerted vnto God, Satans kingdome ſhall be leſſened, the Glorious King-

Kingdome of Iesus Christ shall be inlarged. I cannot haue a better testimonie to my soule, that my selfe am the Lords, then when I feele my affections inflamed, and my heart moued with this particular. This businesse was Christs [b] meate: the life of PAVL was not deare vnto him in respect of this; he was willing to dye in this [c] imployment. [d] Though I be offered vp vpon the sacrifice and seruice of your faith, I am glad, &c. Thus is the Vse. Thus is the first Doctrine. The second is thus,

c *Act.*20.24.
d *Phil.*2.17.

That no man can assure himselfe, that he hath truely profited by dependance vpon Teaching, vnlesse hee bee indeed conuerted vnto God. This is here set downe as the proper consequence of true Teaching. This was the good which Dauid hoped should follow his indeuours in that businesse. Doth it not follow hence directly, that good is not done by Teaching, till there is conuersion and turning vnto God wrought thereby? That which must be the scope of him that teacheth, the same, vntill it be wrought in him that is taught, he cannot be said to haue profited by Teaching. Both Preacher and Hearers must ayme at one and the same thing: he, that he may turne; they, that they may be turned: he, that he may draw Disciples vnto God; they, that they may become Disciples of God. Teaching hath not attayned to the right end, with those that come vnto it, vntill their soules be turned from the power of Satan vnto God. Thus is this Doctrine manifest out of this place. Dauid accounted this one thing the true and right successe of Teaching. Teaching is then in vaine to me, vntill this is wrought in me. The point needs no great labour to make it plaine. Man by nature is (as it were) a run-away from God: [e] All we, like sheepe, haue gone astray, we haue turned euery one to his owne way: [f] We haue all gone out of the way. Now, what is the drift of all Teaching, but to bring vs backe to him from whom we haue reuolted, and to turne vs about from the way to Hell, in which of our selues we are all trauayling, to the path of Life, which leadeth those that walke in it to eternitie? Returne, returne, yee sonnes of Adam, is the briefe substance and summe of all Teaching. To this one thing it tends. It wants its mayne vse, vntill this bee wrought. Marke and see whether this were not the mayne thing, still prest and vrged in the ancient Preaching: [g] Let the wicked forsake his wayes, and returne, &c. [h] O, yee disobedient children, turne againe, saith the Lord, &c. [i] Returne euery one from his euill way, &c. [k] Returne therefore, and cause others to returne. [l] O Israel, returne vnto the Lord thy God. [m] Turne vnto me with all your heart. [n] Turne you vnto me, saith the Lord of Hosts, and I will turne vnto you, &c. [o] Turne you now from your euill wayes, and from your wicked works. This was the generall voice of all the Prophets; according to that, [p] I haue sent vnto you all my seruants the Prophets, saying, Returne now euery man from his euill way, &c. Thus also began the ministrie of the new Testament in IOHN BAPTIST, [q] Repent: and in Christ, [r] Repent, and beleeue the Gospell. Thus were the Apostles directed to goe on, [s] Preaching repentance in the Name of Christ: so they proceeded, [t] Amend your liues therefore, and turne. [u] We preach vnto you, that you would turne old naturall waies, and to turne them vnto God; surely, then they cannot truly be said to haue made a right vse of Teaching, till they haue repented them: men truly profiting by the Word of God taught among them, are a Luk.3.10, &c. ting by his Ministerie: they came about him, with, a What shall wee doe found them, walking in the same wayes, and running the same courses, how could they haue beene said to haue made any benefit to their soules by his instructing them? so that this is to be rested vpon as a true ground;

he hath not profited by teaching, who is not a man conuerted vnto God.

1. Vse. First, Here first we are all put in mind of this, what must be our principall errand in comming to be partakers of this exercise of Teaching, whereto we must ayme and driue in giuing attendance vpon the posts of those doores, where the wayes of God are discouered, and pointed out by those who are appointed to that worke. Our errand must bee euen this, that wee may bee furthered more and more in this matter of conuersion vnto God; that this worke, if it be not yet begun in vs, may be stirred; if it be in any measure wrought within vs, may be perfited. It is a wofull thing when this is not made the end of hearing. All wee doe, doth but increase to a greater iudgement, if wee leaue out this; and it is a cause that the paynes of many in hearing comes to so ill an issue, their hearts are not set to the right end: some come out of custome, some for forme, some for company, some to bee well thought of, some to marke and spye, and to picke out matter of exception, some to harken out Quid- dities and Questions, and to seele the sufficiency and qualitie of him that speaks: few come, I feare, with an ayme at this, that they may bee turned and brought about neerer vnto God, that the worke of Grace, the Spirit of renuing and sanctification may bee more and more increased

increaſed in them. They come not out of a ſenſibleneſſe of their naturall bondage vnto ſinne, and in a deſire that they may be more and more ſtrengthened by the Lord, and by the power of his might, to get the maſtrie ouer it. I accuſe no man in particular, but as my dutie is, I charge and vrge euery man, to aske his owne ſoule, in the preſence of God, what moues him to come either now or at any other time, where Teaching is, what is his drift and purpoſe, what is the intent and leuell of his ſoule in this action? If thou haſt any other ſcope then, that the worke of Conuerſion may be more and more accompliſhed in thee, and that thou mayeſt become a more holy, and a more religious and obedient Chriſtian by thy comming: learne now by this place, that thou art in no ſmall errour, and labour from henceforth to reforme thy ſelfe therein; and ſtill haue it in thy mind, when thou commeſt to the place of Teaching, that thou art in nature one quite peruerted, vtterly falne from the way of life: this then muſt be thy drift, that thou mayeſt be recouered from that euill way in which thou walkeſt of thy ſelfe, and ſet into the way of God, and ſo ſtill helped forward and ſettled therein ſo, that thou mayeſt come by euery hearing, neerer and neerer to the Lord. If this bee thy ayme, thou ſhalt be ſure to receiue good, and God will bleſſe thy comming to thy comfort.

Here is next a Rule, by which thou, and I, and euery one of vs may be able to iudge of our ſelues, whether hauing beene long partakers of publike teaching, wee haue gotten any true good by it, yea or no; and ſuch as ſhall giue vs comfort and boldneſſe in the day of Chriſt. Here is the point wee muſt buſie our ſelues in, if wee would bee reſolued thereof. What, are wee conuerted, yea or no? if conuerted, certainely, wee haue profited: if not, our hearing hitherto hath beene in vaine. Why ſhould a man in common vnderſtanding and reaſon loſe ſo much time, either from his lawfull pleaſures or profits, or from companying with his friends, or from any other occaſions, to beſtow the ſame in harkning vnto teaching, if there bee not ſome good to bee gotten thereby? and what reaſon can there bee why a man ſhould not alſo labour to know what good hee gets thereby in the particular? It is no wiſedome for a man to runne away with a conceit of getting good by it, if he be not certayne wherein. Now, here is the particularitie then wherein; euen turning vnto God. About this then let a man beſtow his inquirie, if he would be certayne of his profiting by attendance vpon teaching. To the end this, I ſay, may be the more vſefull, it is neceſſarie that I ſay a little touching this point, concerning the turning or conuerſion of a ſinner vnto God, that ſo, when we conceiue thereof aright, we may be the better able by it to iudge and determine of our profiting. The conuerſion of a ſinner may be thus deſcribed; to be a worke of grace, whereby there is a whole change wrought in the whole man. I ſay, it is a worke of grace. It is not in the power of man to conuert himſelfe. Man, by the ſtrength of nature, cannot haue ſo much as a diſpoſition to it. His heart, of it ſelfe, yeelds out no imaginations, but ſuch as are [g] euill. His natiue filthineſſe cannot

2. Vſe.

Touching the conuerſion of a ſinner.

g Gen.6.5.

cannot yeeld out any such cleane thing, as a sincere desire to bee turned vnto [h] God. A conuerted sinner, is called Gods [i] workmanship: Conuert thou me, and I shall be conuerted, said the Body of Gods people of [k] old: [l] Draw me, saith the SPOVSE, and I shall runne after thee: hee works in his that [m] which is pleasing in his sight: [n] euen the will and the deed: so that it is a worke of grace wholly; [o] God doth it of his owne will. Those Exhortations which are in Scripture, such as I mentioned erewhile, in which God bids vs by his Prophets and Ministers, Turne, &c. doe not argue any power in man to turne himselfe, but God vseth them on purpose to bring man to an vnderstanding of his owne impotency in that particular; that so, when he is made thereby sensible of his owne weakenesse, he may the more earnestly looke vp to him from whom this mercy must be sought, and submit himselfe to his meanes and course for his turning. God assumes it to himselfe as his peculiar, to put [p] a new Spirit within the bowels, and to cause to walke in his Statutes. I adde withal, It is such a worke, whereupon followeth a change, a holy change, a change of the whole man. A change in reason it must needs bee, for so much the word turning, or conuerting, doth import. Certainely, there is some alteration in him who is so disposed of. Hereupon it is, that man conuerted, is termed a [q] new Creature: and his course is called [r] newnesse of life: there is [s] a breaking off, [t] and a forsaking of former wayes: [u] A denying of vngodlinesse and worldly lusts, to walke soberly, righteously, and godly in the world. Lastly, it is a change of the whole man: First, a change of the heart, which is called [x] A renewing in the inner man: [y] A purging of the heart. Secondly, A change in the outward man too, which is termed [z] A not giuing the members as weapons of vnrighteousnesse vnto sinne, but a giuing them as seruants vnto righteousnesse in holynesse: the same Apostle termes it, speaking of both together, [a] A glorifying of God both in body and in spirit: he intends it by exhorting to [b] giue our selues vnto God. This is briefly the nature of that, which is called the Conuersion or Turning of a sinner vnto God. God is pleased out of the freedome of his rich grace, to alter and change him thorowout, not in respect of the substance, but in regard of the properties, desires, and practice both of soule and body.

How to iudge of ones owne Conuersion.

The condition and state of that which Dauid here speaks of being thus, let vs now next see how a man may bee able to iudge of his owne conuersion, that so thereby he may conclude and determine touching his profiting by that course of Teaching, vpon which from time to time he hath depended. It were an easie matter to bee large in this, and a man might soone stretch out a discourse concerning this, very farre; but I will reduce it briefly to some necessarie and familiar heads. Let these then be taken notice of as speciall euidences of a conuerted state:

First, A sensiblenesse in a mans selfe of the necessitie of Conuersion to saluation: that is, when a man is confident in it out of that which he feeles in himselfe, that except he be turned and changed from that estate and case in which of himselfe he is, it is vnpossible for him to bee saued.

It

It is an excellent signe of a man in whom grace begins to worke, when there is a thorow-apprehension of such a deale of depraudnesse and wretchednesse in our owne nature, that either there must be renuing, or else there can be no saluation. A man seeth plainely that he is so vtterly corrupt, and so altogether gone awry, that if hee should hold on as hee hath begun, he cannot but be damned. This is that which was in Paul, when he said, he [c] knew, that in his flesh or nature, there dwelt no goodnes. This made him cry out. [d] Oh, wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? If then thou art come thus farre, as to find that true in thy selfe, which the Scripture reports touching that masse of corruption which is in mans nature; and when thou heares ought said thereof out of Gods Word, art apt to iustifie it out of that experience which thou hast in thy selfe, and dost therewithall long for no one thing more, then that God in his mercy would euen new frame thee, and cast thee (as it were) into a new mould; this may be a pledge to thee that this worke is begun in thee. All turnings from euill, the Lord works in his by making them a weary of euill, and desirous to be freed therefrom; and a longing in sincerities for a better estate, is a certayne forerunner of a translating thereunto. He who is well inough content to be as hee is, surely, there is not a little beginning of grace in that mans soule.

Secondly, Because conuersion cannot be, neither is wrought but by a meanes, which meanes is the Word, (e The Law of the Lord is perfit, conuerting the soule,) let him that would bee assured of his conuersion, consider how he is affected to the Word; especially then when it is so applyed as is necessarie for the turning of him to whom it is applyed. There is a kind of respectiue affection in diuers to the Word, either because they haue a generall notion of it, that it is of God, or because it yeelds out in many things a kind of contenting knowledge, to such as haue an inclination and disposition of searching after points of worth and excellency; or, because it discouereth a great deale of mercy in God: such particularities as these doe stirre vp a reuerent, yea, and an affectionate respect in many to Gods Word: but here is the triall; the Word of God is pressed to a mans conscience, to the ripping vp of his heart, to the wounding of his soule, to the taxing of his speciall corruptions, to the working of him from those euils to which he is principally affected, and is as with a kind of violence pulling him from them; he that loueth the Word of God so much the more, by how much the more he finds it to deale thus thoroughly and sharpely with him, and is euen glad when he is smitten by it for his secret sinnes, that man hath profited indeede by teaching; he may be termed a sinner turned to the Lord. Hee is that Wise man, of whom SALOMON, [f] who loueth that best by which hee is rebuked most.

e Psal.19.7.

Thirdly, Because an vniuersall change, a change both of soule and body, is the fruit of true Conuersion, therefore let that in the next place be considered of. Looke first in the heart, the speciall euidence of the change thereof, are theſe two aboue others. Firſt, A lothing and an abhorring, euen of the moſt pleaſing ſinnes, ſuch as wherewith, in regard either of the profit, or carnall delight, or credit that is ſuppoſed to follow thereupon, a man is principally inſnared. Wee muſt needs thinke that man is much changed, who doth euen deteſt that in which ſometimes hee tooke a kind of felicitie. When a man ſhall ſay to that ſinne, euen with a kind of indignation, Get thee hence; which was once dearer to him then his right eye, ſhall wee not vnderſtand ſuch an one to bee ſtrangely altered? Marke and examine thy ſelfe by this: knoweſt thou any ſinne, which ſometimes thy ſoule tooke pleaſure in, which now out of conſcience towards God, thou now hateſt, together with all appurtenances, and inducements thereunto? this is a proofe of thy conuerſion; ſuch a change in the affection cannot bee effected but by grace. Secondly, A deſire and care to know how and which way beſt to pleaſe God; § Oh, that my wayes were directed to keepe thy Statutes. This was a notable fruit of Dauids turning. The deſire and care of a naturall man is, how he may feed, and vphold, and cheriſh his owne naturall inclinations; how hee may approue his wayes vnto God, is the leaſt part of his care. Hath the ſenſe and ſmart of thy former wandrings made thee to long, Oh, that I might pleaſe God better for the time to come? make much of this affection, it is a certayne token of an holy change. When thou haſt conſidered thy ſelfe within, looke how thou art changed without: for the ſtate of thy outward man cannot but bee according to the diſpoſition of thy inward man: ſinne choked in thy heart, out of all doubt it will dye by little and little in thy life and courſe: ſee then how thou art reformed there; how doſt thou caſt away thy wonted conuerſation? how doſt thou ſhake off thy accuſtomed euils? how doſt thou ſhine like a light in the Place and Calling thou art ſet in? Art thou all one manner of man for thy ordinarie courſe and faſhion of life, voluptuous, vicious, proud, contentious, violent, iniurious, greedy as in times paſt? this is a poore change. I confeſſe, thy changed heart may at times in ſome particulars breake out into ſome faylings: but a ſettled perſiſting in euill there cannot bee, when the heart is turned. A man, in whom phyſicke hath ouer-maſtred his diſeaſe, may haue ſome touches ſometimes, and pangs of his griefes, ſome diſtemper by occaſion: but if he lye ſtill by it, and be all one after one faſhion, as before his phyſicke was receiued, will any man thinke his diſeaſe is ſubdued? Thus haue I performed this vſe. Take it thus in briefe: When Teaching works profitably, it works to the conuerſion of the perſon taught. Art thou a continuall depender vpon Teaching? if thou wouldeſt haue comfort in that courſe, ſee what euidences thou canſt find in thy ſelfe of true conuerſion: Feeleſt thou the need of conuerſion, and longeſt for the mercy of God in that particular? loueſt thou the Word euen when it preſſeth moſt eagerly vpon thee, to turne thee from thy pleaſing wayes? is thy heart changed, thy naturall loue of euils turned into a lothing thereof, thy naturall careleſneſſe in heauenly things, turned into an earneſt deſire

of

of knowing how to pleaſe God? is thy life reformed, and thy old ſinnes ſhaken off? and doe now better things then in times paſt ſhew themſelues in thy conuerſation? this ſhewes thou art changed, this proues thou art turned, this is an argument that the Teaching thou haſt heard, hath done thee good. If thou haſt heard neuer ſo long, and it may be, profited in knowledge neuer ſo much, and yet thoſe things thou art acquainted with; thou art yet in thy ſinnes, and thy ſtate is dangerous. Thus of Dauids promiſe.

The two and twentieth Lecture.

VERS. 14.

Deliuer me from bloud, O God, which art the God of my ſaluation, and my tongue ſhall ſing ioyfully of thy Righteouſneſſe.

DAVID, after the interlacing of a promiſe of indeuouring the comfort and good of others, vpon Gods being pleaſed to afford him that ſpirituall refreſhing and eſtabliſhment which hee craued, doth now fall to a petitioning the Lord afreſh. Few words could not ſuffice for the vttering of his griefe, and for the diſcouery of the ſenſibleneſſe of the guilt of that monſtrous, and (as I may ſo terme it) many-headed ſinne which he had committed. The more he thought on it, the more he perceiued the fouleneſſe of thoſe particulars whereof it was compounded. And now one ſpecialty more being preſented to his thoughts, he could not thinke it inough, that it might bee ſuppoſed to bee lapped vp in thoſe generall acknowledgements and confeſſions of ſinnes which went before, vnleſſe he did inſiſt vpon it in the particular, and therein declare both how hee apprehended it, and how much hee deſired to bee deliuered from it. This in briefe for the courſe and order of the place. More ſpecially wee are here to note: Firſt, The mayne ſuite which Dauid makes. Secondly, His obliging or binding of himſelfe vnto thankefulneſſe vpon obtayning it. Touching the mayne ſuite, Firſt, Wee may obſerue what Dauid craues, Deliuerance from bloud. Secondly, How he ſpeaks to him, and touching him, of whom hee craues it. Touching the firſt, in handling it, I will confine my ſelfe to the particular matter thereof, and not fall into thoſe points, which might bee raiſed out of it if it were treated on apart: for I confeſſe, that ſomething might here bee obſerued touching the nature of ſinne, filling the ſoule with horrour, notwithſtanding the pleaſingneſſe of it at the firſt; touching the neceſſity of making particular confeſſion of particular ſinnes, when they are deſcryed, and ſuch like: but theſe bee points before deliuered in the opening opening of this Pſalme : but that which is proper to this Clauſe is thus,

The Doctr. That it is a wofull thing to ſtand guilty of bloud before the Lord. This is plainely and eaſily grounded out of theſe words, in which Dauid earneſtly deſires of God, that hee may bee deliuered from Bloud, hauing reference therein to the bloud of Vriah, who came vnto an vntimely death by his direction. The ſtory of it is not [a] vnknowne. Hee gaue order to Ioab the Lieutenant and Generall of his Army, that he ſhould place Vriah in the front of the battell, and at the ioyning of the two Armies, he ſhould ſuddenly recoyle from him, that ſo he might bee cut off by the Sword of the Enemy. It was done accordingly. The remembrance hereof went now to the very heart of Dauid; and albeit the matter was ſo carried, as that the world could not charge Dauid with the ſlaughter of Vriah, (for who would not impute his death rather to the fortune of the warres, then to any plot?) yet the ſoule of Dauid, being now arraigned at the Lords Barre, could not ſo put it off; he muſt needs yeeld, it was hee who was ſpecially guilty of his bloud. The Lord alſo found him out herein, ſending him an Item by Nathan; [b] Thou haſt killed VRIAH, and haſt ſlaine him with the ſword of the children of Ammon. And then together with the remembrance of Vriahs bloud, there came to his minde the bloud of others, who were ſlaine by that occaſion: for as we may in reaſon thinke, that that recoyling which Dauid preſcribed to Ioab, could not bee with the death of Vriah only, ſo it is manifeſt by the ſtory, that at the ſame time, others of [c] the Kings ſpeciall Seruants were cut off. Now though Dauid could digeſt all this at firſt, yet now his conſcience being thorowly awaked, this alſo was irkſome to him: whereupon it is obſerued, that the word which he vſeth here, is in the Originall, of the Plurall number [Blouds,] becauſe he ſeemed to heare in his eares the voyce of many ſeuerall murthers crying out vpon him, and calling for vengeance againſt him from the Lord. This I make the ſenſe of this place: albeit I am not ignorant, that ſome expound Bloud here, touching bloudy executions which Dauid feared might come vpon his houſe: ſome againe (as Auſtine by name vpon this Pſalme) interprets it concerning all ſinnes in generall, reputing them to be called Bloud by Dauid, becauſe they proceede and ſtreame out of our corrupt nature, which the Scripture termeth, Fleſh and Bloud: but as any man of ordinary vnderſtanding may conceiue this latter interpretation to bee forced and farre fetched; ſo the former is not agreeing to that minde which wee muſt needs thinke to haue beene in Dauid: who (out of all queſtion) was more earneſt to haue the ſinne pardoned, then the puniſhment thereof remooued, and was more troubled, that he had diſhonoured God by ſuch a fault, then that he was lyable to ſuch an heauy iudgement, as was that which Nathan threatned, when hee told him, [d] The Sword ſhould neuer depart from his houſe: ſo that I will reſt vpon this, that Dauid prayed God to diſcharge him of murder; and doe thereupon conclude, what a fearefull thing it is to be guilty of bloud before God.

How

How hateſull vnto God the effuſion of bloud is, there bee many things ſhew. I remember that phraſe [d] of Gods making inquiſition for bloud. The Lord doth make ſearch for euery ſinne; when therefore that act of Gods, which reacheth generally to euery ſinne, is applyed to ſome one particular ſinne; it is an argument that the Lord takes a more ſpeciall notice thereof, and doth euen deteſt and lothe it extraordinarily. Iſaiah ſaith, that [e] he cauſeth the earth to diſcloſe her bloud, meaning, that albeit men ſometimes for the concealing of murther, doe bury the ſlaine carkaſſes deepe in the earth, or otherwiſe cauſe the ground to drinke vp the bloud, yet the Lord will finde a meanes to detect it; according to that ſpeech of Gods to Cain, touching the murther of his Brother ABEL, [f] The voyce of thy Brothers bloud cryeth vnto me from the earth. And we ſee it in experience, how ſtrangely God brings ſecret murthers to light, euen many yeeres after the committing them. All ſtories and times are full of examples herein. That ſame bleeding of the perſon ſlaine, at the preſence of the murtherer, which is teſtified by many Writers, and is reported to haue beene ofttimes found true among our ſelues, is (if it bee ſo) a notable euidence of the ſpeciall prouidence of God for the diſcouery of that kinde of euill. But there is no neede to goe further then the plaine Scripture. God in it teſtifieth plainely, that hee will not put vp that ſinne in whomſoeuer; [g] At the hand of man, euen at the hand of a mans brother, will I require the life of man: the very [h] Oxe that did goare a Man or Woman, that the ſame did die, was to be ſtoned to death, and his fleſh not to be eaten. Bloud (ſaith God) [i] defileth the land, and that land cannot be cleanſed of the bloud that is ſhed therein, but by the bloud of him that ſhed it: and in the ſame Chapter, God would allow no recompenſe for the life of the [k] murtherer. The hornes of the Altar could not protect Ioab, though a man well deſcended, and deſeruing well of the State for his many good ſeruices to it, when hee was to bee executed for this [l] offence. [m] He that doth violence to the bloud of a perſon, let him flee to the graue, and let none ſtay him. God giues a ſpeciall reaſon, why hee would not indure this ſin to goe vnpuniſhed; [n] In the Image of God created he man: man was created to bee among all other his Creatures (as it were) the Lords Vicegerent, the repreſentation of his ſoueraignty, and the ſpeciall euidence of his Wiſdome and Maieſty; and in that reſpect, the wronging of the life of man is vnto him ſo much the more hateſull. It is an abolifhment of that which the Lord appointed to be, for the repreſenting of himſelfe. It is one of Gods Titles of honor, to be the [o] Preſerver of mankind. He then that is the cauſe of the ruine of a man, is in that moſt directly oppoſite to God, and muſt therefore be to him the more abominable. It is the Deuils ſtile, [p] a murtherer from the beginning. This kind of euill doth eſpecially transforme a man into his likeneſſe. Much might be ſaid concerning this; the inward affrightments, the ſecret vexations, the exceeding feares, which they are exerciſed with, who are guilty of this kind of ſinne, are a notable teſtimony of the horribleneſſe of it. It is memorable that which Procopius an Hiſtorian reports, touching one one Theodorick King of the Gothes; how that hauing slaine Boetius and Symmachus, two both noble and innocent persons; the guilt of that horrible fact cleauing close to him, he had a strong imagination, that the head of certaine fish which was set vpon his table, was the head of Symmachus gaping and yawning vpon him: the very conceit whereof strook him into such a quaking fit, as was the beginning of an extreme sickenesse, vpon which he shortly dyed. Such gastly thoughts doe ordinarily pursue those that haue defiled their hands in the bloud of others. Me thinks, when I read that saying of Paul to the Elders of Ephesus, [q] I take you to record, that I am pure from the bloud of all men; I doe imagine with what contentment the Apostle spake it, reioycing in his soule that hee was not chargeable before God with any matter of bloud. These things may serue for the laying open of this Doctrine, though yet I cannot but adde one thing more which now comes to my mind. Dauid had a purpose to build a Temple to God; but God told him he should not: and this was the reason, Thou hast shed much bloud, &c. and agayne, in the same Verse, [r] Thou hast shed much bloud vpon the earth in my sight: which albeit I doe not take it to be an obiecting to Dauid his murthering of Vriah, but onely to be meant touching his courses in following the warres; yet, mee thinks, I may verie well gather thence, that if God thought not the building of a Temple a meet seruice for Dauid, because he had beene a man trayned vp in bloud, though it were in lawfull wars against the enemies of his state and Kingdome; surely then much more is the very soule of the Lord against those that shed bloud vniustly. Euen in that refusing of Dauid for that seruice, God would shew how much, bloud and slaughter doth displease him. I come to the Vse.

q Act. 20. 26.

r 1. Chro. 22. 8.

The Vse.

To make vs all afraid, how we doe bring vpon our selues the guilt of bloud: It is a terrible thing to be chargeable with bloud before God. No doubt it made Dauid shake and tremble, when he considered how the bloud of innocent Vriah, and of other his honest and wel-deseruing followers, was shed by his meanes. Haply by their slaughter, he caused much sorrow and griefe to many fathers, wiues, children, kinsfolke: it might be, that some were vndone thereby, and exposed to the wrongs and miseries of the times. Out of all question, the soule of Dauid was vexed with the seuerall and distinct consideration of these things; euery of these particulars came as freshly to his thoughts, as the cruelty against Ioseph was reuiued in the memory of his brethren: when at their comming into Ægypt, they were like to fall into some trouble; then they could say one to another, [s] We haue verily sinned against our brother, in that we saw not the anguish of his soule when he besought vs. All the concurrences and appurtenances to such a sinne, doe collect themselues together, to the amazing and tormenting of a guiltie conscience. Now this presseth vpon vs a diligent care to take heed of this sinne: which poynt that it may be the more working with vs, I will indeuour to shew how we eyther doe, or may bring vpon our selues the guilt of bloud before the Lord. I might herein inlarge my selfe so farre as the limits of the

sixt commandement, which comprehends within the compasse of it, many things, according to that exposition of our [t] Sauiour, who maketh euen rash anger, and intemperate words, and spitefull speeches, to be degrees of killing: but I will note onely such particulars as are of the most haynous nature in this kind, and doe more notoriously bring the guilt of bloud vpon a mans head. And here my order shall be thus; first, I will discouer how by those of the Magistracie, and persons furnished with ciuill authoritie, this guilt may be drawne: secondly, how by those of the Ministrie: thirdly, how otherwise in common life. Men in authoritie may be chargeable with bloud two speciall wayes. First, by not doing iustice vpon those, who are sheaders of bloud. It is Gods ordinance, that [u] he who sheadeth mans bloud, by man (that is, by the Magistrate) his bloud shall be shed: where there is a default herein, and the spillers of bloud are let to breathe still vpon the earth, they, by whose conniuence this is, are guilty of bloud before God. This may be gathered out of the speech vsed by Salomon, when he gaue commandement for execution to be done vpon Ioab: he would haue it to be, [x] that bloud might be taken away from him, and the house of his father: intimating thereby, that if Ioab had beene permitted by the indulgence of authoritie to haue gone downe to the graue in peace, hauing smitten two more righteous persons then himselfe, both he and the whole Royall Family should haue beene lyable to an account for bloud before the Lord. In matters therefore of this kind, Magistrates cannot be two strait, in making diligent inquiry after bloud, and in following those to the death that haue shed the same. There ought by the Law of God to be no toleration, nor dispensation in this case. It cost Dauid sweetly for passing ouer the murder of Amnon, done by his sonne Absolom. God raysed him vp to seeke his bloud, whose bloud ought of right to haue beene powred out like water on the earth, for the sheading of anothers bloud.

Secondly, Magistrates may be guilty of bloud by carelesnesse, and neglect to vse their power, for the deliuery of the oppressed out of the hands and power of the spoyler. It is an excellent place to this purpose: [y] Ierusalem was full of iudgement, and iustice lodged therein: but now they are murderers: why murderers? because no good Iusticers: they sought not to deliuer the poore from him which was too strong for him, nor him that was in misery, from him that spoyled him: haply they could passe it ouer with that noted by SALOMON, [z] Behold, we knew not of it; or otherwise were willing not to see, or their eyes were blinded by gifts, that they could not see; or else wanting that which is called [a] Courage for the truth, they could be content to let such things alone; neuer binding themselues to that of IOB, [b] The breaking the iawes of the vnrighteous, and the plucking of the prey out of his teeth. We may pray that this sinne may not be laid to the charge of the Magistrates, and great men of our times, among which there are so few which labour to imitate God in that particular, for which he is termed [c] The helper of the friendlesse. It is the glorie of a good Magistrate, when [d] the blessing of him that is ready to perish, shall come vpon him.

Now for Miniſters, they alſo ſhall be guiltie of bloud, it being placed by God to watch for ſoules, they ſhall, by not ſhewing the people the counſell of God, betray them into the power of the Deuill. This is manifeſtly and vndeniably proued, firſt, by that ſpeech of Pauls, which I made vſe of ere-while, who therefore determined touching himſelfe, that e Act.20.27. [e] he was pure from bloud, becauſe he had kept nothing backe: which proueth, that if he had been ſilent and backward in dealing vnto the people the Goſpel of God, he ſhould haue beene guiltie before God of their f chap.3.18. bloud. And then by that knowne ſaying of God vnto EZEKIEL: [f] When I ſhall ſay vnto the wicked, Thou ſhalt ſurely die, and thou giueſt not him warning, nor ſpeakeſt to admoniſh the wicked of his wayes, that he may liue; the ſame wicked man ſhall dye in his iniquitie, but his bloud will I require at thine hand. Doth not that make it playne, that a careleſſe and negligent Paſtor is a murtherer in Gods account? How ſhould this ſtirre vs vp, whom God hath put in the ſeruice of his Church, to be inſtant in preaching, leſt we be called to a reckoning for bloud at that day? And ſurely, by how much the more excellent the ſoule of man is then the body, by ſo much the more haynous is the murther thereof, then the murther of the body. Hereupon, the Prieſts of old, by whoſe neglect the people
g Hoſ.6.9. were deſtroyed for lacke of knowledge, were termed [g] Murtherers in the way. A good caueat for thoſe, who take on them the roome of Miniſters in the Church, and yet want skill to diuide the Word aright, and to giue to thoſe of the Lords Family, their portion of meat in ſeaſon; as alſo for thoſe, who being able, and hauing gifts, yet notwithſtanding doe hide their talent in a napkin, and ſtarue the ſoules which depend vpon them: ſurely, it ſhall be eaſier for theeues and robbers, for murtherers and bloud-ſheaders in the day of Iudgement, then for ſuch. A man cannot ſpeake too much, nor too ſharpely concerning theſe, by whom the kingdome of Satan is ſo much aduantaged, and ſuch a world of ſoules put in hazard for whom Chriſt dyed. If he who withdraweth the corne by which the body is to be fed, ſhall haue a curſe, according to that of h Prou.11.26. Salomon; what ſhall be held to be their due, who keepe backe that food by which ſoules ſhould be fed vnto eternity? And how can it be, but according to the words of that now Reuerend Archbiſhop of Canterburie, in his Lectures vpon IONAS, A mans heart ſhould oftentimes ake, and his very ſoule tremble, to thinke what ones thus faultie, be ouer ſoules yet in many places; and that time hath not yet worn out that vnkind brood, which the Papacie did hatch vp to our Nation; who, as he alledgeth out of IOHANNES AVENTINVS, if they were Laymen, are ſo baſe and rude, they ſhould ſcant be counted fit to keepe Swine? Surely, a man may thinke in regard of thoſe, that he heareth that voyce which Ieremie
i Ier.4.31. ſpeakes of, As of a woman trauelling, or as one labouring of her firſt child; euen the voyce of the daughter of Zion, that ſigheth and ſtretcheth out her hands, with, Woe is mee now, for my ſoule fainteth becauſe of the murtherers. When Dauid longed, being in the warres, for ſome of the water of the Well of Bethlehem, and three of his worthie men had broken into into the Hoſt of the Philiſtims, and brought him ſome of it; vpon better aduice he would not drinke thereof: [k] Be it farre from mee, O Lord, that I ſhould doe this: is it not the bloud of the men that went in ieopardy of their liues? How dare men eate, and drinke, and fill, and make themſelues rich with that which is the bloud of ſoules; I meane thoſe reuenues and profits which they receiue out of Pariſhes, in which they doe not labour to winne ſoules? How doe they not feare leſt this bloud will cry againſt them, in the Day of vengeance? Mee thinks when wee heare Dauid crying out ſo eagerly and ſo earneſtly, and with ſuch an euidence of inward horror, Deliuer me from bloud, O God, it ſhould make vs looke about vs, and conſider how we ſhall anſwere, when the bloud of thoſe, who haue periſhed through our ſilence and vnfaithfulneſſe, ſhall bee required at our hands. In the Name of God, let vs thinke vpon it: we may deuiſe many pretences, by which we may imagine, we ſhall eaſily waſh off this guilt, as Pilate ſuppoſed by the ceremonie of waſhing his hands in the preſence and view of the people, to cleere himſelfe from the bloud of our [l] Sauiour; but God cannot be ſo mocked. The matter of ſoules is of another nature, then that it ſhould bee ſo ſlighted ouer. Remember we euer when we feele in our ſelues any diſpoſition to ſlackneſſe and ſeldomneſſe in our dutie, wee may bring vpon our ſelues the guilt of bloud; and let vs aſſure our ſelues, God will haue an account for euery ſoule which is committed to our charge. It is ſaid in matters of the Common-wealth, that the King muſt know and haue a reckoning of the life of his Subiects; and therefore when any man is found to bee caſually dead, there is ſuch a ſtrait courſe of inquirie, how and which way hee came to his end: ſurely, God will much more call to an account for euery ſoule; and wo to vs that euer wee were borne, if our ſilence and inſufficiency ſhall be found acceſſarie to the ruine of any one. If, as Paul ſaith, [m] the loue of Chriſt cannot conſtrayne vs, yet let this worke vpon vs, Take heed how we come to an account for bloud.

k 2. Sam. 23. 17.

m 2. Cor. 5. 14.

The third branch, is to ſhew how this guilt may bee in common life. And here (not to ſtretch out my ſelfe to euery particular) I will note only two ſpeciall things which are meete to be noted herein. And the firſt is, the courſe of voluntarie Combates. Men fall out, and are at words, and grow to further heate; at laſt they conclude a meeting, and there trie it out at the ſharpe, and one becomes the ſlaughter-man of the other, or at leaſt the effuſion of bloud, and the taking away of life is on both ſides deſired. All the Sope and Nitre in the World cannot waſh away the guilt of bloud from this practice. Whatſoeuer men pretend herein, either for the triall of manhood, or for the putting by the imputation of Cowardize, or for the maintenance of Reputation, it cannot excuſe in this caſe. And howſoeuer the World many times applaudes thoſe things with termes of Worth, of Gallantrie, of Braue-ſpiritedneſſe, and the like, yet it is murther in Gods account. Thy wrong, which thou pretendeſt to right in this caſe, either it is iuſt or vniuſt, either it is true or imagined. If it be true and iuſt, [n] Doth the Magiſtrate beare the Sword in vaine?

n Rom. 13. 4.

vaine? Who art thou, that thou ſhouldeſt take his office out of his hands, o *Rom.*12.19. who ſaith, ° Vengeance is mine, I will repay? If it bee imagined and vniuſt, why ſhould it be maintayned by ſuch a price as thine owne life, or anothers? All the matter mainely is this; a man is vtterly diſgraced, if either he purſe vp a diſgrace, or elſe decline the fight when he is challenged. But to a Chriſtian this ſhould be inough, that it P is a mans glorie to paſſe by an offence: that q he which ruleth his owne mind, is better then he which winneth a Citie. Sinne againſt God is more to bee feared, then ſhame amongſt men; and true Chriſtianitie to bee preferred before idle Manhood. Men are deceiued in the point of Manhood. It is the cauſe which ought eſpecially to be reſpected, and when that is worthy, then it is fortitude for a man to bee prodigall of his life: but otherwiſe for a man vpon euery word, either to aduenture, or to ſeeke bloud, is no true magnanimity. Was Auguſtus Cæſar a Coward in the repute of the Heathen, when receiuing a challenge from Anthony, hee returned him this anſwere, that if Anthony had a diſpoſition to die, or were weary of his life, there were wayes inow elſe to death beſides that. The challenge was reiected, and yet his honour vntaynted. It was a worthy ſpeech which Ioſephus the Iew made to his ſouldiers, being in a Caue where they lay hid after they loſt the City Iotapata, taken by Veſpaſian the Romane Generall; they, rather then they would beare the diſgrace of being taken by the enemie, would needs, like the young Gallants at r 2.*Sam.*2.26. Helketh-hazzurim, r one runne his ſword into his fellowes ſide, and ſo make an end of themſelues. The Reaſon of fleſh, haply, might commend this reſolution; but what ſaid Ioſephus to perſwade them to the contrarie? The Almightie hath giuen vnto vs our life as a moſt precious treaſure, he hath ſhut it and ſealed it vp in this earthen veſſell, and giuen it vs to be kept, till he himſelfe doth aske for it againe. We are neither to deny it when he ſhall require it, nor to caſt it forth till he command it. An excellent ſaying, prouing that a man ought not to aduenture his life, but when he hath ſpeciall warrant from the Author of Life ſo to doe. Now in all theſe quarrels let it bee conſidered, what allowance there is from God herein, and I am ſure, there ſhall be found none. Let it be forborne then to examine theſe courſes by the opinion of men, but let vs trie how they may paſſe for currant before God. Auſtin, ſcanning the particulars of ſ 2.Mach. that fact of ſ Razias, who killed himſelfe, and meeting with theſe words of the Authors, who ſaith, that RAZIAS dyed nobly; Better, ſaith hee, if it could haue beene reported that he dyed humbly. It may be wel applyed to the death of ſuch, as come to their ends by the proſecution of ſuch quarrels. I will conclude this point with an excellent ſpeech of Bernards, concerning vniuſt fightings, and in that number I eſteeme theſe: If in thy fighting thou haſt a mind to kill another man, and then art ſlaine fighting, thou dyeſt a Murtherer: if thou preuaile and kill the other, thou liueſt a Murtherer: whether thou liue or die, be conquered, or Conquerour, it is not good to be a Murtherer. So that the concluſion is, that, which way ſoeuer it fall out, murther it is before God. Miſerable for a man to bee

slaine, and so to goe to his reckoning, whiles hee is maliciously labouring to take away anothers life: as miserable if he kill, to be continually haunted with the conscience of bloud. All the fame and commendation of valour and brauery, and of doing the businesse vpon faire termes, cannot counteruaile that vexation. This much I thought good to speake hereof, this Text affording me so iust an occasion; and it being also one of the euils of our loose daies, that many scarce account themselues men, till they haue made a brawle, and entred a Combat vpon occasion of some word: and euery other-while there commeth newes of some of the Gallants of the times; Oh, they haue beene in the field, the one is slaine, the other is fled; or they be both hurt: and here we harken to the grounds of the quarrell, and to the manner how each quitted himselfe, &c. but we neuer lament the sheading of bloud; and euen therein also wee bring a secret guilt vpon our selues, in not sorrowing that the Land by this meanes should become a very Acheldama, that is, a field of bloud. Thinke not now I reade a Lecture of cowardise, and of baseneſſe. I remember what Hierome saith vpon those words of our Saviour, [t] Iudge not, that you be not iudged: Christ doth not forbid to iudge, but rather teacheth how to iudge: so this is not to ouerthrow valour, but to direct it. True manhood is not in quarrelling and brabbling for priuate iniuries, or in stabbing for a word of disgrace, but in maintenance of Gods Honour, in preseruing thy allegeance to thy Prince, in safe-guarding thy Country. Hee is to bee reckoned among Martyrs, who vpon conscience, and in knowledge, ingageth himselfe vpon these occasions. Remember here by Dauid what it is to bee countable for bloud. Wee cannot say Dauid was a coward: the Text saith, he [u] had an heart like the heart of a Lyon: and yet when he felt the guilt of bloud, it made him shrinke and cry out, as we heare him in this place, Deliuer me from bloud, O God: and why may we not thinke, that whereas Dauid who was neuer knowne to turne his backe vpon his enemy, when he heard of Absaloms treason, was the first which said, Vp, let vs flie: and after wept as hee marched with his Troupes vp the Mount of [x] Oliues? why (I say) may we not thinke that the very remembrance of this guilt of bloud danted his heart, as thinking that now God with bloud would bee auenged for bloud? Well might he thinke so, considering that the Head of this mutiny was a murtherer, whom he himselfe had before suffered to escape: and so be sure, that whatsoeuer thy resolution and spirit bee, yet when thou commest to be arraigned before the Lord for bloud, it will strike thee downe, and bring that [y] sound of feare into thine eares spoken of that [z] trembling heart, that aptnesse to [a] quake at the very shaking of a Leafe.

The second kinde of bloud-guiltinesse which is in common life, and needs pressing in these dayes, is the sinne of oppression. I meane by it, all that hardnesse and extremity of dealing which is in the world, whereby men of more power then others, doe draw much to themselues, by biting, vndoing, keeping low of others. That this sinne is also a sinne of bloud, appeareth by those termes in Scripture, in which, they

which are chargeable herewith, are said to [b] beate the people to pieces: [c] to eate them vp as one would eat bread: [d] to spoile like Lyons: [e] to swallow vp the poore: [f] to eate their very flesh, to flay off their skinne from them: and the aduancing of estates by this meanes, is called [g] a building with bloud: it is euen the very same in effect which is called [h] a building by vnrighteousnesse. These kindes of speaking make it playne, that the sinne of oppression is a bloudy sinne. It makes one man as a Wolfe to another: when Iehoiakim the King is challenged for his sheading of innocent bloud, it was not so much for the verie act of bloudsheading according to the letter, as for his couetousnesse, [i] and for his oppression. How many be there (this being true) who haue iust cause to crie out, Lord, Deliuer mee from bloud: the World being so full of such as (according to that of the Prophet) [k] are become great, and waxen rich, are waxen fat, and shining with that which they haue euen wrung and pressed out of (as it were) the very heart and bowels of others: when it commeth to that which Habacuk calleth, [l] The crying of the stone out of the wall, and the answering of the beame of the timber; it wil be found, that they haue in a maaner layd their foundation in bloud. How otherwise shall we interpret those things which are by vsuries, extortions, rackings, taking of aduantages, and such like? Shall not Pharaoh and his Ægyptians be condemned for bloud at the last day, in that they made the poore Israelites wearie of their liues by sore labours, and with those impositions which they laid vpon them most [m] cruelly? and so no doubt shall they be reckoned among men of bloud, who make the liues of their poore vnderlings irksome vnto them, by their straitnesse towards them, by working vpon their necessities, by griping them in their takings, by keeping them in a perpetuall toyle and drudgerie, that they may be able to satisfie their infinite demaunds: and consider this, yee deceiuers of the people, whose fulnesse and flourishing in the world, is vpheld by others payne and pinching, while by your tyrannie they are made to eate little other then the bread of sorrow; beware of bloud, [n] breake the bands of wickednesse, take off the heauie burthens, let the oppressed goe free. Thinke with Iob; If you continue to doe this, [o] what then shall you doe when God standeth vp? and when he shall visit you for these things, what shall you answer? [p] Woe to thee that spoylest, and was not spoyled. [q] This is an euill sickenesse vnder the Sunne, at this day: Behold, the teares of the oppressed, and none comforteth them. We are euen as [r] the Fishes of the Sea, the great ones deuoure the little ones. Let euery man consider his owne gettings, and looke well to it, that there bee nothing found there, that is gotten with the regreat of others. And thus haue I brought this vse to an end. Wee haue beene exhorted to beware how we make our selues guiltie of bloud. DAVIDS speech here is an argument, that it is an heauie thing so to be. To the end that this might worke the better, I haue touched some particular branches of bloud-guiltinesse, and shewed that albeit a man may be free from the more noted kind of murther, which wee all account so, and which the very light of nature, and

and the Law of Nations condemneth by that name; yet in other reſpects he may be chargeable: as if he be a Magiſtrate, by remiſneſſe and conniuence in the auenging of bloud, by not ſeeking the reſtraint of violent, euill, and vnmerciſull men: if hee bee a Miniſter, by ſlackneſſe or inſufficiencie to deale to the people of God the Bread of life, for the feeding and preſeruing of their ſoules; if hee bee otherwiſe (whatſoeuer he bee) a raſh aduenturer of himſelfe, or an hazzarder of others in quarrels vpon priuate iniuries, or if he be an oppreſſor and cruell-dealer, that ſeekes gaine to himſelfe out of others preſſures. All ſuch haue cauſe to learne here by Dauid, what it is to bee guilty of bloud. I will not make the ſinnes of all theſe equall, but ſure I am, they are all bloudy-crying-ſinnes, and ſuch as to which belongs an eſpeciall wo: I might, I know, haue extended this point further, as againſt the Church of Rome, which makes the effuſion of bloud, euen the bloud of Princes, the Anointed of the Lord, to be meritorious; and which doth generally thorow the world aduance and ſpread it ſelfe by bloud: witneſſe the cruell Maſſacres in France, the bloudineſſe of the Inquiſition in the Low Countries in the time of Duke d'Alua, the barbarous ſlaughters of many milions among the poore Indians, vpon whom, as reports Bartholomæus Caſas, a Biſhop that liued in that Country, the Spaniards aſſoone as they had diſcouered the Nation, fell like Woolues, Lyons, Tygers, and did nothing but teare them in pieces, and torment and murther them by vnheard-of cruelties: witneſſe all the bloudy deſignes for England, though as yet in the mercy and goodneſſe of God neuer accompliſhed. But thus, as the Citie of Rome was firſt founded in bloud, (the two brothers Romulus and Rhemus that firſt began it, the one killing the other;) and as the firſt intitling the Biſhop of Rome, The vniuerſal Biſhop of the Chriſtian world, was gotten by bloud, euen by the bloud of Maurice the Emperor, ſlaine by Phocas, who to gratifie Boniface (the then Pope) for his aſſiſtance in attaining the Empire by ſuch vile meanes, ſtabliſhed that title vpon him, which his predeceſſor Gregorie could not indure to heare of: So it hath continued ſtill bloudy, breathing out like Paul before his conuerſion, threatnings and ſlaughters againſt the Diſciples of the Lord, that ſo ſhee may ſhew her ſelfe to bee indeed that Scarlet-coloured Harlot, deſcribed by Iohn in his Reuelation, who is ſaid to be euen [f] drunke with the bloud of the Saints. Thinke we they ſtood much vpon termes of bloud, who in the Powder-plot were reſolued, not to reckon of the liues of many of their owne fauourites, ſo that with them they might deſtroy their ſuppoſed enemies? No doubt, if it had ſucceeded, ſome of them beholding the euent, and ſeeing the monuments of their crueltie, would haue ſhewed themſelues ſo minded, as was once one Voleſius a Proconſull in Aſia vnder Auguſtus the Emperour, who when he had beheaded three hundred in one day, walked inſolently betwixt the heaps of carkaſſes, and applauding himſelfe, cryed out, O exploit worthy of a King! In ſome ſuch ſort it is likely they would haue triumphed in that bloudy ſlaughter. This matter might thus haue beene followed not vnfitly, to ſhew

the difference betweene the ſpirit of Dauid, and the ſpirit of Poperie; the one trembling at bloud, the other (as it were) triumphing in it; the one troubled for cutting the lap of the Coate of the Lords Anointed, the other diſcontented, that it cannot cut the throats of thoſe that are made Heads by God ouer his people. This is the difference betwixt the Church of Chriſt, and the Church of Antichriſt. The Church of Chriſt is alſo red with bloud, but it is as a [t] Sheepe appointed to the ſlaughter: The Church of Antichriſt is bloudy like the Lyon ſpoken of, which [u] lyeth not downe till he drinke of the bloud of the ſlaine. I could not but giue a touch of this point vpon this occaſion: not ſo much ſimply to make a kind of excurſion or rode againſt the Romiſh Church, as to moue vs to thankefulneſſe to God, who hath beene pleaſed to deliuer vs from the yoke thereof, it being indeed a very butcherie both of bodies and ſoules: and little doe wee conſider as wee ſhould, what God hath done for vs in defeating Popiſh plots, and in turning their bloudy deuices vpon their owne pates. Wee inioy the benefit of this peace and freedome, and ſit euery man vnder his owne Vine, and vnder his owne Fig-tree, but we looke not vp to him that hath done this great thing for vs wherein we reioyce: ſo that notwithſtanding the great goodneſſe of God towards vs, it is to bee feared we will bring our owne bloud vpon our heads, by our ſlighting ouer the bleſſings wherewith we are followed, and by that which is noted in the [x] Iſraelites, viz. that as they were increaſed, ſo they ſinned againſt the Lord.

Thus hath this point of Doctrine carryed mee farre, that I cannot adde other things which were in my thoughts. It ſhall bee well, if wee make good vſe of this, in fearing how we make our ſelues any way guiltie of bloud before God; whether it bee in regard of the bodies or the ſoules, either of others or of our ſelues.

VERS. 14.

Deliuer mee from bloud, O God, which art the God of my ſaluation, &c.

WHen vpon the faſtning my Meditations vpon this Clauſe, [Deliuer mee from bloud,] I perceiued how varietie of matter did euen increaſe vpon me, it brought to mind a ſpeech of Hieromes, which I had read, touching the Epiſtles of Iames, Peter, Iohn, and Iude, that they are both ſhort and long too: ſhort in words, long in ſubſtance: ſo is this ſpeech of Dauid: The forme of words is briefe, the matter to be wrought out of it is more large. Already there hath beene ſo much gathered hence, as hath beene the matter of one Sermon. There are yet two points more to be obſerued hence, not meete to be let paſſe. How he deſired to be diſcharged of bloud, we haue heard. It is now next to bee conſidered, both what drew him to an offence of this kind, and how hee became guiltie thereof: two things iuſtly to bee noted here: for, ſith Dauid confeſſeth himſelfe chargeable with bloud, if God ſhould deale with him in extremitie, it is meete wee ſhould inquire both into that which led him into ſuch a ſinne; and into the reſpect, which brought him within the compaſſe of murther in the Lords account. For, declaring the former, I ſet downe this Doctrine,

That great ſinnes are not wont to goe alone, but one being yeelded vnto, makes way for another as bad, or worſe then it ſelfe. It was a great Euill, that of Dauid, in defiling himſelfe with Vriahs wife; no doubt, hee felt ſmart not a little through that: but behold, by it hee was plunged into another; wee heare him now crying out for bloud. The Deuill preuayling with him in the ſinne of Adulterie, brought him to commit Murther alſo. Bloud muſt be ſhed, to hide vnchaſtneſſe from the World. I ſuppoſe wee are not generally ignorant in the Storie: Bath-ſheba the wife of Vriah, being, in his abſence, (at that time following the Warres) defiled by Dauid, proued with child: and ſent tydings thereof to [a] Dauid: Dauid, now vpon the knowledge hereof, being more deſirous to auoid diſgrace before Men, then to make his peace with God, fell to deuiſing with himſelfe, how to find ſuch a couert for his fault, that the World might not be able to eſpie it. He ſends ſpeedily for Vriah from the Campe, vnder a colour of deſiring to bee made acquainted by his report with the ſucceſſe of the ſeruice; but the truth was, that by his being at home, and companying with his wife, that adulterous conception might be, if not altogether ſecured, yet the leſſe ſuſpected. This plot not ſucceeding, though it was tryed twice, yea and edged, by making Vriah drunke, the thoughts of Dauid did not ſo giue ouer; neither tooke hee occaſion by his being diſappointed in that attempt, to obſerue Gods Hand, and to make haſte to humble himſelfe betimes: but as one carryed with a kinde of violent and deſperate humour, hee deuiſeth how to take away Vriahs life, hoping by that meanes, a free way being made for his matching with the Widdow, to conceale (that which hee reſpected moſt) his owne ſhame. Thus he, who ſtood not out againſt the temptations to the adultery, is become (out of a deſire and hope to ſmother that) a man of bloud. It was farre from Dauids purpoſe, to prepare himſelfe, by wronging Vriah in his bed, to offer violence to his life; but being now taken in a Snare, through want of holy circumſpection, it is not as he once meant, but as he will, euen that Tyrant and enemy the Deuill, to whom hee hath inthralled himſelfe. The Spirit of God hath of purpoſe, as an example to vs herein, left Dauid, that we may ſee what manner of thing ſinne is, and what a dangerous trayne followeth a great euill, which will euen (as it were)

were) throng in, and can hardly be kept out, when that is let in. He that tooke not heede of Adultery, is now called to an account by his owne terrifying and accuſing conſcience, for Bloud before the Lord. And this very particularity, of the following of the ſinne of vncleanneſſe by the ſinne of murther, is confirmed and iuſtified by too much experience. Strange wickedneſſes in this kinde haue beene committed; ſometimes for the furtherance of vnlawfull deſires, and for the procurement of full ſcope to vnbridled luſt: ſometimes for the hiding of ſuch euils, that ſhame and puniſhment may bee eſcaped. How often in theſe times doe wee heare of practices, for the ſuffocating and choking of conceptions, of the ſlaughtering of Infants, and deſtroying them in the birth by the mothers thereof? The ſtranglings of Children begotten by fornication in Abbyes and Nunneries (ſince that time diſcouered by their bones in many places,) may ratifie this point, touching making way to murther by adultery. Now for the more generall point, of one ſinne breeding, and begetting, and making way to another, euen as adultery here drew to bloud, it is no hard thing to proue it. Wee haue a ſaying concerning matters of opinion, that one abſurdity entertayned, brings with it many more: it is more true in matters of life and practice, that ſinnes are ſo (as it were) the one linked in the other, that as in a chaine, the drawing of one linke cauſeth the following of the reſt: ſo the admittance of one notorious ſwaruing from the Law of God, brings with it another and another, vnleſſe God reſtraine it. Euen as a ſtone caſt into a Poole maketh a circle where it falleth, and that circle another, and ſo forward ſucceſſiuely, till it come to the banke; ſo euill groweth of euill, and one wickedneſſe begets another: ſo that in the nature of ſinne, there cannot but be [b] a falling away more and more, and [c] a waxing worſe and worſe, vnleſſe God in mercy put ſome ſtop and limitation thereunto. That which Salomon ſaith of the [d] beginning of ſtrife, is true of the beginning of euery ſinne, it is, as the opening of the waters. Let the water haue but a ſmall hole made for it, it will ſoone make way for it ſelfe, and that which is but a ſlender ſtreame at the firſt, will ſoone grow to a bigneſſe vnreſiſtable. It is not vnfit, the compariſon which is vſed, by which ſmaller euils are likened to ſome companions of Theeues, who being of leſſe greatneſſe, are put in at the window of an houſe beſet, to open the doores vnto the greater; all to ſhew how working one ſinne is for another, and how almoſt vnpoſſible it is for a man to giue entertaynement vnto one, and yet to keepe out the others that attend it. What a troupe of ſinnes brake in vpon Adam, after hee had once begun to lend to his wife a more indulgent eare, then was conuenient? how eaſily did credulity and lightneſſe of beliefe creepe in? Thence came ambition, thence diſobedience, thence a ſhameleſſe excuſing of euill, with a poſting it ouer vnto [e] God. Did not Noah his not watching ouer himſelfe in the vſe of Gods Creatures, carry him headlong into drunkenneſſe? Did not drunkenneſſe ſo bereaue him of all power ouer himſelfe, that contrary to common humanity, [f] hee lay naked in his Tent? Did Lots intemperancy

temperancy reſt it ſelfe in one degree? Did not exceſſiue drinking make way for inceſt, yea, for a doubled euill in that ſ kinde? Peter not being aware of the euill of that ouer-confident humour which was in him, and ſo cherißing it in himſelfe, by it was carried into a place of danger, vnarmed againſt ſpirituall aſſaults, how ſuddenly was hee lapt in with a threefold denyall of his Maſter? When Ionah had giuen way too much to his owne paſſion, how ſoone came he to that extremity of teſtineſſe, that he feared not (as it were) to chop with God, h I doe well to be angry? Who would haue thought that a man of his grace, ſhould haue euer gone ſo farre, as to inſtitute ſuch an vniuſt heate euen to Gods Face? This following of ſinne vpon ſinne, I eſpecially note in the children of God, becauſe it is appeare to be ſo in them, in others it muſt needs be ſo much more. I cannot deuiſe ought to which I may better liken it, then to a mans taking vp money vpon vſury, wherein one biting payment openeth a paſſage for another, and when there is a neglect of a payment or two at the ſet times, then vſurie vpon vſurie groweth ſo faſt, that the charge ſometimes becomes more heauy then the principall. Thus commeth in one enormity in the necke of another. That Dauid, whom we may well thinke that his heart did euen abhorre murder, yet by giuing way to luſt, is now brought to haue neede to intreate the Lord, that he may not bee condemned for Bloud.

h chap.4.9.

To teach vs to take heede how we ſuffer our ſelues to be inſnared with any one ſpeciall euill. There is much deceitfulneſſe in ſinne, and there is a great deale of guile and cunning in mans heart; theſe two meeting together, doe beget a conceit in many, that it is poſſible for them to ſtay in ſome degrees of euill: as for example, that they may giue contentment to their owne corrupt deſires in ſome one ſinne, but once or twice, and ſo giue ouer: or, that they may admit into their practice ſome ſpeciall euill, eaſily reſiſting the appurtenances to it: and notwithſtanding thoſe miſchiefes which may follow thereupon, by this hope they are led on; ſometimes thinking, What is one fault? or, What great matter to doe this or that but once? Now this Doctrine well conſidered, will take away this conceit. It hath beene prooued and made plaine, that great ſinnes are ſo intwined one within another, that a man cannot but bee in danger of the guilt of more, if hee once ſuffer himſelfe to bee made a prey by one. Hee that is an Adulterer, is in a faire poſſibility to become a murtherer alſo. Hee will bee apt to doe any thing, either for the hiding of his euill, or for the getting further oportunitie; to ſate himſelfe with that whereof hee hath once taſted. It is ſo in other euils: as in Couetouſneſſe, let a man bee once poſſeſſed with a deſire of hauing; is he not eaſily to bee drawne into fraudulent, oppreſſing, vniuſt, vnmerciſull courſes, that ſo hee may the ſooner reach to that at which hee aymes? Who euer ſaw a Couetous man, of whom it might bee ſaid, Hee is ſomewhat Couetous indeede, but otherwiſe an honeſt man, that is all his fault? He cannot bee vnder the command of that ſinne, but other things will haue power vpon him too. That humour of his cannot

cannot be fed without ſome attendants and agents, which muſt be ſent abroad, to bring and gather in that which may content it: ſo in pride, put caſe one be giuen that way, to exceed in matter of apparrell; he cannot but be carryed to ſundry other euils, by which that one muſt be maintained: ſo in gaming, drinking, and the like; none of theſe but it will require other particulars (as bad as it ſelfe) by which it muſt be vpheld. In a word, there is no ſinne to which a man doth willingly and aduiſedly enthrall himſelfe, but thus farre it will carrie him; to a deuiſing which way, and by what meanes he may carrie it cloſely and cleanly; how he may defend it, and excuſe it, and make it tolerable. The beſt is therefore to withſtand by all meanes the firſt temptation, and not to giue any credit to ſuch a conceit, that one may commit a great ſinne but once, and haue power ouer himſelfe to ſtay ſo; or that hee ſhall bee able to keepe off the conſequents thereof. It is dangerous aduenturing in theſe caſes: no man knoweth what aduantage the Deuil may get vpon him, or how God in iuſtice may leaue him to himſelfe, when he hath once preſumed. Dauid would hardly haue beleeued it, if one of his inſtruments whom he imployed to Bathſheba, ſhould haue ſaid to him, Sir, beware what you doe, you may happen at laſt to be drawne to take away the life of her husband Vriah. By all likelihood he would haue ſaid, I warrant you for that, I will neuer be ſo impious: but when hee is in, he cannot ſtay himſelfe; bloud followeth luſt; and which is worſt of all, a kind of careleſneſſe, and deadneſſe, and ſecuritie creeps vpon him, wherein he had beene eternally ſwallowed vp, if God in mercie had not awaked him. Thus ſhall we make a good vſe of this particular, if wee learne thereby to beware how wee abandon our ſelues to our owne vnlawfull deſires, though but in one particular. Chryſoſtome ſaith well, this was one reaſon why Dauid was ſuffered to goe aſtray, To make the righteous man looke more earneſtly to his way: and (as Auſtine) that the ſaying of the Apoſtle may euery where be trembled at, Let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall: Let vs learne by it, not to truſt our ſelues in theſe caſes. A man knoweth not how farre he ſhall goe, and into what extremities he ſhall be carried when he is once intangled. This from hence, that Dauid was drawne by Adulterie to bloud, nay to blouds; hee cared not for the time, whoſe life went to wracke, ſo that hee might find (if it had beene poſſible) a couert for his ſinne.

Secondly, in what reſpect Dauid was guiltie of bloud: concerning which poynt, I ſet downe the Doctrine,

The ſecond Doctrine.

That it is poſsible for a man to be guiltie of a ſinne before God, though himſelfe hath no apparant hand therein. DAVID here cryeth out, O Lord, deliuer mee from bloud: Why, what had Dauid done? wee doe neuer read that he offered any violence to the life of Vriah, he gaue him not ſo much as a foule word, but at his being with him vſed him with kindneſſe, and diſmiſſed him with none other then ſhewes of loue. Dauid was farre enough from Vriah when he was ſlayne: he at the ſiege of Rabbath, Rabbath, Dauid at home in Ierusalem. It is very like, the world did not generally suspect any such matter, as that Vriahs death could bee layd any way to Dauids charge: he fell at the ioyning of the two armies, and the sword deuoureth one as well as another. But now Dauid perceiued that this could not answer God; his conscience being ascited to an account before his Tribunall, could not but tell him, Though thou didst not reuile VRIAH, nor lay hand vpon him, yet thou art guiltie of his bloud: for thou gauest direction by a letter to IOAB, to range him in a place of hazard, and by this meanes he was cut off, therefore thou didst murther him. It was the sword of an Ammonite by which he dyed, but it was thy plot, and by it hee was layd open to such a disaduantage, by which he was robbed of his life. Thus wee see now Dauid was a murtherer, though his hands were not actually imbrewed in the bloud of the slaine. Was not Saul guilty of the breach of Gods charge touching the vtter rooting out of the Amalekites, with their cattell, though he (as it is likely) did not himselfe driue that great Herd of the better Sheepe, and the Oxen, and the fat Beasts, and the Lambes, which were brought thence? his conniuence, and forbearance (being the Commander of the Armie, and the Orderer of the Businesse) gaue opportunitie to the people so to doe: He should haue restrayned them therein by his authoritie, and seene to it that no such thing should be done: and therefore his answer to SAMVEL, [i] The people tooke of the Spoyle, Sheepe, and Oxen, &c. could not excuse him; SAMVEL layd it expresly to his charge, [k] It is thou that hast turned to the prey. He might haue said, I draue not so much as an Oxe or a Sheepe, neyther am I the richer by it by a Lambe. What then? the people vnder his command did it, and he should haue hindred them; therefore was he a transgressor. Did not the guilt of that sinne which Hophni and Phineas committed, lye vpon Eli, and yet he neuer came in person to take his allowance from any by force? he neuer lay with the women that assembled at the doore of the Tabernacle of the Congregation: nay, he shewed some dislike of these things, and yet he was guiltie: and how? he neuer aduised, neuer counselled his sonnes so to doe; nay, he reproued them in it: where was the fault? see, 1.*Sam.*3.13. His sonnes ranne into a slander, and hee stayed them not: He did not exercise the fulnesse of his authoritie for their restraynt; therefore God accounteth him chargeable with their fault; nay, the hand of God was heauie vpon him euen for this. It is true, Absalom did not draw a sword, or a knife, or a dagger against Amnon; yet was not he guiltie of his bloud, in commanding his seruants? [l] Smite him, kill him, feare not; haue not I commanded you? be bold therefore and play the men. AHAB (as may be thought) had the least hand of all others, in the vniust putting to death of Naboth. For that course which was followed by the Elders of Izreel against Naboth, in arraigning him, and condemning and putting him to death, was altogether by Queene Iezabels direction, and (as it seemes) Ahab knew not of it till it was done; yet when he was going to take possession of the Vineyard, the Prophet Elias met him, and his

his first greeting to him was, [m] Hast thou killed, &c? Might not Ahab haue replyed here; Why, what did I to Naboth? was he not by an orderly course proceeded against, and by deposition of two witnesses, conuicted of blasphemie against God, and treason against mee? what is this to mee? I but (saith the Prophet) there was a Letter written in thy name, and sealed with thy Seale, and by authoritie thereof, this indirect course was taken against Naboth. Surely (might Ahab againe reply) this is more then I am made acquainted with, I wrote no such Letter, neyther did I euer annex my Seale thereto; I am innocent herein. No, saith Elias, thou canst not so shift it off, for it was thy wife Iezabels doing; and thou shouldest haue had more care of thy Seale, and not so to leaue it at her dispose, to send abroad what commands she list, signed by it: Why art thou King, but to looke to such things thy selfe? Therefore a Murtherer thou art, and this bloud which thou hast thus shed, shall be auenged with bloud. In the place where dogges licked the bloud of Naboth, shall they licke euen thy bloud also. The chiefe Priests and Elders of the people imagined themselues free from the bloud of our Sauiour. Were they not in a great chafe with Peter and Iohn, for laying Christs death to their charge; [n] You would bring this mans bloud vpon vs? And why was this? Forsooth, it was Iudas that deliuered him to them; and they committed him to the secular power: it was Pilate that condemned him to be crucified; they for their parts would not so much as goe that day into the Sessions house, [o] lest they should be defiled: nay, they would not so much as put [p] the money which IVDAS brought backe againe, into the Treasurie, because it was the price of bloud. Thus they coozened their owne soules, and thought of all other men, they were free: as though they were not the [q] men, which sought how they might take IESVS by craft, and put him to death: [r] and who compounded with IVDAS to betray him: [s] and sought for witnesse against him: [t] and moued the people to desire PILATE, rather to deliuer BARABBAS then him: whereupon PETER and IOHN were playne with them, [u] (IESVS CHRIST of Nazaret, whom ye haue crucified.) And thus PILATE fed himselfe with a conceit, that he was innocent from his bloud; imagining to excuse himselfe with this, The people would haue it so. Why? wherefore was he a Gouernour among the people, but to limit them in their outrages and insolencies, and not to giue libertie and passage thereunto? Thus it is plaine by this varietie of examples, that a man may bee chargeable with that sinne before God, which he himselfe doth not actually commit. It may be his, by giuing direction for it, by giuing way to it, by not restrayning it when it is in his power so to doe; yea, and by not sorrowing for it, and taking it to heart when it is done: as I remember, Saint PAVL blames the Corinthians for that incestuous act committed amongst them, and seemes to lay some part of the euill vpon them, because such an euill beeing committed, [y] they were puffed vp, and did not rather sorrow, and seeke the redresse thereof. They were in part guiltie herein, inasmuch as they passed ouer such such a dishonour to God, and such a disgrace to good Profession, by so foule a fact. In that parable of the Traueller, who betwixt Ierusalem and Iericho fell among Theeues, and was left halfe dead; thinke wee that it was not our Sauiours purpose to teach, that the Priest and Leuite, who passed by and tooke no pity, and afforded no helpe, had beene guiltie of his death if hee had miscarryed? Yes verily, they could not haue excused the matter, by saying, We did nothing to him, we gaue him not so much as a stroke, we drew not from him so much as a drop of bloud. What then? if he had dyed through their neglect to comfort, they could neuer haue answered it to God. Whereupon is that excellent speech of IOBS; If I haue lift vp mine hand against the fatherlesse, when I saw that I might helpe him in the gate: so that he reckoned that no better then a kind of violence, if he had forborne and fayled to releeue him, whom he might haue rescued. Whereupon is it also, that at the last Day, the omission of the duties of mercy, shall bee laid to the charge of those that shall be damned, as being an especiall kind of [a] persecution. Thus it is still manifest, that as Dauid was chargeable with Vriah his bloud, though with his owne hands hee spilled it not; so a man may come within the compasse of a sinne in Gods account, though he doe not apparantly and sensibly commit the same.

a Matt. 25. 42.

The Vse.

This is a Doctrine which meets with the deceitfulnesse of mens hearts; we are full of deuices and tricks, by which to shift off from our selues the guilt of sinne: and if we can find any corner to flie into, or any fig-leafe to hide our nakednesse, we imagine we be safe. Like inough that Dauid at first beguiled himselfe with this, that inasmuch as Vriah was slaine in the field, therefore he was cleere; but now he saw this was but a poore shift: God, who was greater then his heart, had now rayled vp his heart, to be a witnesse against him, and to charge him not onely with desiring Vriahs death, but with deuising which way closely to bring him to his end. And thus was he guilty of bloud, who shed no bloud: and so may this bee found true in many others. A Magistrate may bee guilty of the sinnes of the people, by not punishing; or by too slight and easie punishing: a man of rule and reckoning in the world, may be chargeable with the euils of his inferiours, because his example hath imboldened them. A Minister may make himselfe a party in the enormities of his Parish, by not preaching against them, or by being too sparing, or too couert, or too gentle in reproouing them. It may bee I perswade not my people to bee ignorant, to bee superstitious, to bee prophaners of the Sabbath, to bee despisers of knowledge: yet inasmuch as I labour not against these euils in them, and set not my selfe as much as I may against them; my silence, my conniuence, my slighting ouer of these things, strengthneth their hands and their hearts to a continuance therein: by this I become guilty before God. A Master of a family may bee lyable to an account for Drunkennesse, Wantonnesse, neglect of holy duties on the Sabbath, Swearing; who perhaps himselfe for his owne personall practice is sober, chaste, diligent in comming to Gods House, not giuen to blasphemie: and how? these euils are in his family among his Children and Seruants, he lets them alone, seekes not to reforme them, winks at them in these things; those euils of theirs are now made his. Men of abilitie may be guilty of others perishing, albeit they doe to them no kinde of actuall violence; as by not inquiring into the necessities of those that want, by not making them partakers of their plentie. Paul speakes of some, that doe applaud and fauour those that doe [b] naughtily: Salomon of some that [c] delight in the frowardnesse of the wicked: and what more ordinarie then to approoue of others euils, to delight to see others doe amisse? as when men are pleased, to heare another whom they affect not, to bee scoffed at, slandred, backe-bitten, laden with reproches. It likes many to haue swaggering followers, that are apt to fight and brawle vpon euery occasion; to haue polling and purloyning agents and officers vnder them, that can finde meanes for their profit; they are content to sucke the sweet of their falshood; and thinke, if any thing come to light, to lay the whole burthen vpon them, they shall beare the disgrace. Some that liue vpon the sinnes of the people, doe secretly reioyce, when such euils are multiplyed by bribing, for which they get aduantage. I am not able to name all particulars in this kinde: I pray you that it may worke with vs, first to the furtherance of our humiliation before God: for thinke, I beseech you, how many particulars we haue to answere for in this kinde, and how many sinnes God may in his iustice call vs to account for, if he should reckon with vs for those euils which we haue our share in, by counselling, applauding incouraging, abetting, secret liking of for some by-respects, not reprooving, not admonishing, not restraining, not punishing, not praying against: nay, how if the Lord call vs to a reckoning for our not sorrowing for the sinnes of others, and for the great and notorious euils of the times? Little thinke we (perhaps) that we are guilty of the foule and outragious enormities of these forlorne dayes, inasmuch as wee doe not more effectually grieue when we are by our selues, to see how much God is dishonoured, and how many millions of soules are betrayed into the power of the Deuill: and yet if God had nothing else to lay to our charge, that one respect were matter inough for our iust damnation. And thus, as this should be for our humiliation, (as what can be more, when we shall see how many wayes wee are lyable vnto death?) so should it bee for our continuall direction too: remember wee must come vnder a straiter and a more exact reckoning for sinne, then man can call vs to: wee may wash our hands of many sinnes here before men, of which wee cannot cleere our selues to God. A man may be guilty of much before God, whom the Law of men can lay no hold on: hee may come to an account for Adultery, whom for any breach that way, no humane Statute can conuince. God will finde me out to be accessarie to many sinnes, for which no man can challenge me; nay, for which at first mine owne heart doth not accuse me; so that there is a great deale of neede of much watchfulnes euery way. This was to be obserued hence, that Dauid is now within the compasse

compaſſe of murther reſpectiuely to Vriah, that neuer gaue ſo much as a foule word or a blow to Vriah. Thus farre of that which Dauid craues.

The next is, how Dauid ſpeakes to him, and of him, of whom he craues this deliuerance, [O God, the God of my ſaluation.] Here we haue to note two things: Firſt, A generall acknowledgement made by Dauid touching God, [The God of ſaluation.] Secondly, A particular application of that acknowledgement to himſelfe for his owne comfort, [my ſaluation.] Of the former the Doctrine is thus,

The third Doctrine.

That the whole matter of mans ſaluation is to be aſcribed onely vnto God. This is the reaſon and ground of Dauids thus ſpeaking. Hee vnderſtands by the word [ſaluation,] whatſoeuer appertaynes to the chiefe and ſupreme good of man, whether it be for his ſoule or his body; and the ſame he calleth God, the God of, becauſe it hath no other Author or cauſe, ſaue only him. Hereupon is that of the Pſalme: [d] Saluation belongeth vnto the Lord. It is his peculiar to afford that: [e] He is the horne of my ſaluation: [f] The Lord is my light and my ſaluation: [g] Hee works ſaluation in the middeſt of the earth: [h] O Lord God, the ſtrength of my ſaluation: [i] He is the God that ſaueth: ſuch ſpeeches as theſe are ordinarily found in Dauids Pſalmes. [k] I, euen I am the Lord, and beſides mee there is no Sauiour: [l] I, the Lord, am thy Sauiour and thy Redeemer, the mightie one of IACOB: [m] O God the Sauiour of ISRAEL: [n] There is no God beſides me, a iuſt God, and a Sauiour: [o] In the Lord our God is the health of Iſrael. The Scripture abounds with ſayings of this kind. Peter ſpeaking of Chriſt, ſaith; [p] There is no ſaluation in any other: [q] O ISRAEL, one hath deſtroyed thee, but in me is thy helpe: [r] Looke to mee (ſaith the Lord) and yee ſhall be ſaued: as if he had ſaid, Which way ſoeuer, or to whomſoeuer you looke elſe, you ſhall be certainely diſappointed of your hope: [s] By grace yee are ſaued through faith, and that not of your ſelues, it is the gift of God. I could eaſily multiply teſtimonies in this kind. Now theſe places which aſcribe ſaluation to God, doe alſo confirme that which I ſaid in propounding the Doctrine; That the whole of mans ſaluation is from him. For in the things which are ſaid to be from God, he admits no Partners; [t] He will not giue his glorie to another. The whole buſineſſe of mans ſaluation is ſo carryed and diſpoſed by him, [u] That no fleſh ſhould reioyce in his preſence: No man ſhall haue cauſe to ſay, Yet thus far forth in the matter of my ſaluation, I am beholden to my ſelfe, for this or that degree thereof, I may thanke my ſelfe. Whereupon the Church of God freely acknowledgeth; [x] O Lord, thou haſt wrought all our works for vs. It is he who [y] hath rayſed vp Chriſt to bee an horne of ſaluation vnto his people: it is hee which hath ſent thoſe which are by office to [z] giue knowledge of ſaluation: it is by him [a] that the Goſpell is powerfull to ſaluation: it is he which [b] calleth vs to obtayne ſaluation by the meanes of Ieſus Chriſt: [c] The acceſſe or entrance into the ſtate of ſaluation is his: [d] The increaſe and going on therein is his: [e] The making perfect is his: [f] The beginning and finiſhing is his. This may ſerue in briefe to cleere this point, God is the God of mans ſaluation.

1. Vse. This is first to settle our iudgements, and to confirme vs in this acknowledgement, that we may not dare to incroch vpon the Lords right, in assuming ought to our selues in this businesse. It is the highest degree of sacriledge, to ascribe any the least part of our chiefe good to our owne so much as desire, much lesse, desert. Let vs euer labour to say with vnderstanding, and feeling and in sincerittie of acknowledgement, g O Lord, to thee belongeth righteousnesse, and to vs shame. Let Poperie presume to diuide with God, and to challenge some degree of mans saluation to pertaine to the freedome of his owne will, or to his preparing himselfe by the well vsing of his naturall endowments vnto grace: Farre bee it from vs to purloyne or detract ought of that from God, which hee hath reserued to himselfe as his owne peculiar. Certainely he which knoweth well, and conceiues the vntowardnesse of his owne naturall disposition vnto good, and how much adoe there is to worke a man to the willing imbracing of that which he ought especially to regard, will neuer dare to thinke there is any thanke due to himselfe, for the furtherance of his eternall happinesse in the least degree.

g Dan. 9.7.

2. Vse. This is also for our direction. Desire wee to be saued? what shall we then doe but looke vp to him from whom saluation comes? whither shall wee goe but to him who is the God of Saluation: and to that h IESVS the author of eternall Saluation, whom God hath sent and sealed to i saue his people from their sinnes? Shall we not say euery one of vs with DAVID, k Whom haue I in Heauen but Thee, and I haue desired none in the Earth with Thee? Haply we will all say, We looke to be saued by God, wee acknowledge none to accomplish this for vs but IESVS CHRIST: but marke this, It is not euery one that saith, Lord, Lord; nor euerie one who saith, I hope to be saued by God, that shalll come to heauen. Let vs be sure that we haue these things in vs;

Note. Firſt, A sensibleneſſe in our selues of the necessitie of saluation. They be l the lost, whom God hath sent his Sonne to saue. You will say, We are all lost. I confesse it; but in this speech the word lost, is to be vnderstood as the word sinners, in that saying of Christ, m I came not to call the righteous, but sinners, &c. Who are sinners there, but humbled, distressed, grieued, perplexed sinners, such as grone vnder the weight and burden of their sins? So Christ saith in another place; n Blessed are the poore in spirit; all are poore in spirit; but all are not sensible of their pouertie: so all are lost, but all are not aware of the danger and miserie of their lost estate: all haue not learned by the apprehension thereof, o to long (as Dauid speaks) for saluation. It is an idle thing for thee to say, thou beleeuest with Dauid, that God is the God of Saluation; there is no saluation but by him; and to him thou trusteſt; and vpon him thou relieſt for thine happinesse; if thou neuer feltest indeed, and to the pricking and astonishing of thy heart, what it is to be in the way of perdition. He that hath euer felt himselfe ready pressed downe into the pit of Hell, with the weight of his sinnes, and so being euen as it were vpon sinking, hath cried cried out in the diſtreſſe of his ſoule, as the Diſciples did to Chriſt, when being at Sea, they were euen ready to be drowned, p Maſter, ſaue vs, wee periſh. It is he to whom the ſaluation which is of God belongs. p Mat.8.25.

Secondly, A willing care to the glad tidings of ſaluation. Shall ſaluation, thinke we, euer come to him, to whom the Doctrine of ſaluation is not welcome? There is a ſaying of Pauls worthie to be marked, q God will haue all men ſaued, and come to the knowledge of the Truth: Marke the coupling together, ſaluation and comming to the knowledge of the Truth. Now, how is that knowledge of the Truth gotten, but by that which PAVL termes r The Word of Truth, the Goſpel. The Epheſians came to bee ſealed with the holy Spirit of Promiſe, which was an earneſt to them of Saluation; but which way came that? and what went before? ſee Chap. 1. 13. They firſt heard the Word of Truth, the Goſpel of their Saluation; and then after they had beleeued in that, they were ſealed with the holy Spirit of Promiſe: ſo that a man ſhall neuer come to aſſurance of Saluation, but by cheerefull intertayning the glad tidings of Saluation. Is this to thy ſoule a meſſage of ioy? is thy ſpirit glad to be partaker hereof: ſome hope of thy Saluation? What haſt thou to doe with Saluation, by whom the preaching of Saluation is deſpiſed? Will you haue in one word a full proofe for this, looke Pſal. 119. 155. Saluation is farre from the wicked: and who be theſe Wicked to whom Saluation doth not appertaine? and what is the reaſon that they be ſhut out from it, becauſe they ſeeke not thy Statutes? They haue no deſire to bee acquainted with thy Word: there is no hope of their Saluation. Let me adde that to it which is not farre off in the ſame Pſalme, verſe 174. I haue longed for thy Saluation, O Lord, and thy Law is my delight. This is a token of a mans deſire that it is ſincere, and that his hope for Saluation is not in vaine, his delight is in Gods Word. q 1.*Tim.*1. 4. r Col. 1. 5.

Thirdly, An obedience to him, by whom we profeſſe to deſire and expect Saluation. The words to this end are plaine: Chriſt Ieſus is conſecrate and made s the Author of eternall Saluation: but to whom? vnto all them that obey him: no obedience to Chriſt, no ſaluation by Chriſt. This brings to my mind a complaint of BERNARDS, That many doe acknowledge IESVS, who doe not acknowledge CHRIST: meaning that they are glad of him, as a Sauiour to deliuer them (which is the meaning of the word Ieſus) but they are not ſo glad of him, as a King to command them as a Prophet to inſtruct them, which are things betokened by the word Chriſt, which ſignifieth An anoynted Perſon. He hereby intimates a neceſſitie of obedience vpon all, which deſire to be partakers of Saluation. t Vengeance is for thoſe which doe not know God, nor obey the Goſpel of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Take the poynt thus then: Saluation is from God. Doſt thou deſire Saluation? Seeke to God, and to him whom hee hath ſent, Ieſus Chriſt. Thou ſayeſt thou ſeekeſt thus and thus, and no way but thus doſt hope to be ſaued. Thinke not thou ſayeſt true herein, vnleſſe thou be ſenſible of the neceſſitie of Saluation, and be glad of the Doctrine of Saluation, and frameable to walke in the s Heb. 5. 9. t 2.Theſſ 1. 8.

wayes of holy Obedience, which is the onely path vnto ſaluation. If thou haue no feeling of thy loſt eſtate more then ordinarie; if thou findeſt no true ſweetneſſe, nor takeſt no ſound contentment in the Word of ſaluation; nor art willing to walke in obedience to him, who is the Author of ſaluation; it is ſtill true that God is the God of ſaluation, but thy hope of receiuing that from him is vtterly in vaine. This of the generall acknowledgement.

Now, Dauid not ſatisfied therewith, to ſay (O God, the God of ſaluation,) deriues thence a particularitie for his owne comfort; [Of my ſaluation.] We are taught here,

The fourth Doctrine.

That the generall acknowledgement of Gods grace and goodneſſe, can neuer afford to a mans ſoule any true comfort, till he is able vpon ſome good ground to apply the ſame to his owne particular. DAVIDS heart thirſted for comfort at this time; a drop of heauenly conſolation, would at this time haue beene more welcome to him then a Kingdome. Now, marke how he labours to gather comfort to his ſoule, by imboldening himſelfe to apply the ſaluation of God to his owne ſoule. The doubling of the word, an argument of great earneſtneſſe of Spirit, a ſigne that he ſtroue mightily, and wraſtled with all his ſtrength againſt his owne diſtruſt, labouring with confidence in deſpight of all thoughts tending to deſpaire to ſettle himſelfe in an aſſured hope, that the God of ſaluation tooke care for his ſaluation alſo. O God, looke vpon me in this, I pray thee, and deliuer me from this guilt of bloud, which I haue brought vpon me: thou art the God of ſaluation, to whom ſhould I ſeeke in this diſtreſſe, but onely vnto thee? Nay, why ſhould I feare to ſay, The God of my ſaluation? how elſe ſhall I hope thou wilt deliuer me? This is plaine, that Dauid could not with courage and comfort make his requeſt, had hee not beene able through faith, to haue applyed the ſaluation of God to his owne particular. This is indeed the ſweet of all Religion: not ſo much as the Deuill himſelfe, but he knoweth that God is the Author of ſaluation. The generall apprehenſion of good in God, doth but adde to a mans vexation, till hee hath ſome aſſurance of ſome intereſt into it for himſelfe. This was the perfection of Pauls faith; when he could ſay, ſpeaking of Chriſt, [u] Who hath loued me, and giuen himſelfe for me: and of Thomas his, when as after hee had obtayned victorie ouer his doubting, hee could crie out, [x] My Lord, and my God.

u Gal.2.20.

x Ioh.20.28.

The Vſe.

To vrge vpon vs a ſtriuing and labouring after this, if wee deſire to haue comfort. If a man know and confeſſe neuer ſo much touching God, touching Chriſt, touching Heauen, touching Saluation, and can but ſpeake of it as a generall good, without certainty of his owne particular portion in it; he may feede himſelfe with vaine hopes, he can neuer receiue any ſound comfort, when it comes to a fit of inward perplexitie, ſuch an one as Dauid was now in; his ſoule ſhall neuer finde eaſe, till hee can come to particulars. How elſe ſhall hee come to God in faith; and how ſhall comfort and refreſhing come from God, if faith want? I am perſwaded, that Dauid here imboldened himſelfe to ſpeake thus

to

to God out of experience; hee had tasted the mercy of God before, in saving him from the bondage of some other sinnes, and in giuing comfort in the hope of mercy, and vpon this he takes heart to call God, The God of my salvation: as if hee had said, Thus and thus heretofore haue I found thee, why should I now distrust thee? nay, I will still expect salvation from thee. And thus it shall bee a mans best course to strengthen himselfe by continuall obseruing the euidences of Gods mercy to him, that he may be able to settle his application and dependance vpon the salvation of God, out of experience. So farre of Dauids mayne suite.

The foure and twentieth Lecture.

VERS. 14.

My tongue shall sing ioyfully of thy Righteousnesse.

WHat Dauid doth aske of God, in that new request and suite of his which we meete with in this Psalme, we haue heard. We are now come to the other part of this passage, which in the deuision thereof, I termed his obligation, or his binding of himselfe ouer vnto thankfulnesse; and this reacheth to the end of the seuenteenth Verse. In this part there are to be noted these particulars: First, Dauids promise. Secondly, His prayer to God, by him to bee inabled to performe the promise, Vers. 15. Thirdly, His declaration of that more speciall thing, wherein hee did account the making good, and the accomplishing of his promise to consist, Vers. 16, 17.

Touching Dauids promise, before I come to the particular handling thereof, I must commend vnto you out of it, this generall Doctrine;

That whoso receiues or expects any mercy or fauour from God, must know himselfe bound to returne somewhat backe by way of thankefulnesse vnto God. This is gathered hence, that Dauid protesteth a purpose of such a duty, as knowing it to bee a thing which hee was bound vnto. Somewhat that way hee deliuered, Verse thirteenth; but now hauing (as it were) finished all his requests which were (at this time) in his heart to make to God, respectiuely to his great sinne, hee entreth into a kinde of solemne vowing himselfe by some speciall seruice, to declare to the world his sensibleness of that mercy of God, which he was now both in an earnest desire, and in a stedfast hope and expectation to obtayne. Thus Dauid was very constant and conscionable herein; I meane, in tying himselfe vnto thankfulnesse for Gods mercies. Hereupon were those vowes of his so often mentioned: [a] My vowes will I performe before

a Psal. 22. 25.

before them that feare him: [b] I will ſing praiſe vnto thy Name, in performing dayly my vowes: [c] I will goe into thy houſe, and will pay thee my vowes which my lips haue promiſed, &c. and ſo otherwhere. Now theſe vowes were the ſolemne promiſes, by which he (as it were) ingaged himſelfe to God, when he became Suiter to him for ſpeciall fauours; he conceiued it indeed to bee a matter of right and equitie, that the benefits of God ſhould not paſſe away from him without ſome acknowledgement. And then his termes of paying and performing, argue that hee knew that of Salomon, that God doth not delight in Fooles: and that it [d] is better not to vow, then to vow and not pay. This made him to be ſometimes caſting with himſelfe, by what meanes beſt hee might declare his care herein; according as that ſpeech ſheweth, [e] What ſhall I render vnto the Lord for all his benefits towards mee? Vpon this ground are thoſe acts which we reade of in the holy Story; as Noahs building an Altar to the Lord, (the firſt worke of his wee reade of after hee came out of the [f] Arke.) Iſaacs doing the like, vpon occaſion of Gods appearing to [g] him. Iacobs vowing obedience and ſeruice to God, when hee made ſuite for ſucceſſe and protection in his [h] iourney. Moſes his compoſing a ſong immediately vpon the deliuerance of the people by him out of [i] Egypt. Deborah and Baraks thankſgiuing after that ouerthrow of [k] Siſera. Hannah her prayſing God, when hee had giuen her a [l] ſonne. Hezekiah his writing, when God had recouered him from the gates of [m] death. Ionas his [n] ſacrificing to the Lord with the voyce of thankſgiuing, according to that hee had vowed. There is no end of examples, what hath beene done in this caſe; the Rule may generally bee giuen; So many as haue beene faithfull, ſo many haue beene thankefull. The expreſſe commandement of God binds to this: [o] Call vpon me, &c. I will deliuer thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie mee. There is a duty on thy part to me, according to thy expectation of mercy from me. To this may that bee referred: [p] When being come into the land, and haſt eaten and filled thy ſelfe, thou ſhalt bleſſe the Lord thy God. So that there is a kinde of after-duty, ſuch as was that of the Samaritane, [q] that returned backe to giue God thanks, when hee had beene cured of his Leproſie. There were ten that had receiued the like benefit; Chriſt commended him aboue all, becauſe in this duty hee went beyond them all. All ſought mercy, all receiued mercy; but there was but one that returned backe to ſhew duty. Thus in briefe to manifeſt this point, touching the ſeruice of (as I may ſo call it) requitall, to which euery one is bound, who either expects or receiues Gods mercy.

The Vſe. This is a needfull duty to bee preſſed vpon vs: when wee are any way pinched and ſtraitned, and feele any burthen lying vpon vs, wee can generally looke towards God for it, though I confeſſe, not with that faithfull dependance which is fit; but yet howeuer it be, there is more aptneſſe in vs to craue good from God, then to binde our ſelues backe againe to giue meete euidences of our thankefulneſſe to God: many Petitioners there are, but few Promiſers; and amongſt theſe few Promiſers, a leſſe a leſſe few that make any great conſcience to performe what they haue promiſed. Extremitie ſometimes wrings from men ſome kind of vow; as when life, or goods, or credit are in ſome apparant hazzard, then, Oh if God would giue an iſſue ſuch as they would, what they would doe! Their liues being reſpited, or their goods preſerued, or their credit ſaued, great matters they will promiſe; but (alas) when the kindneſſe expected is bestowed, haply while the matter is freſh, ſome formall ſeruice ſhall be ſhewed, but all dieth away quickly by degrees, and the good receyued ſeemeth to haue left behind it no impreſſion. Euen the beſt haue need to be challenged in this matter: HEZEKIAH was a good man, yet herein faultie, that [r] hee did not render according to the reward hee ſhewed vpon him. [r] 2.Chro.32.25.

Wee are too ſuperficiall in the dutie of thankfulneſſe; our fashion herein is much like that of little children, who as they muſt be called vpon to ſay, I thanke you, or to make a legge; ſo when they doe it, it is in a kind of haſte, with a looke another way, as hauing more mind on their play then of their thanks. If wee caſt forth a few odde words of courſe, God be praiſed, or I thanke God) we ſuppoſe wee haue done ſufficient, but as for any ſerious ſetting our ſelues to fall into a conſideration and an account of Gods fauours towards vs, that ſo wee may prouoke and call vpon our ſoules as DAVID did, [s] My ſoule, praiſe thou the Lord, and forget not all his benefits; as for any acts of obedience, and dutie, and reformation, and ſuch as may teſtifie our deſire to walke worthie of that God, from whom wee haue receyued ſo much kindneſſe, in theſe things we be faultie: and when we come to be examined and viewed, what we returne backe to God in theſe kinds, it will be found to be but a very poore meaſure. Learne we here then this leſſon, to accompanie our petitions to God, with vowes and promiſes of after-duties; not as if we would hire God, (for our well-doing cannot [t] extend to him;) but that we may make it appeare that our owne good, and eaſe, and benefit, is not the onely thing we ayme at; but that we deſire eſpecially to doe God ſeruice, and to promote his glorie. This which I perſwade, is the ſame in effect with that of the Apoſtle: [u] Let our requeſts bee ſhewed vnto God in prayer and ſupplication, with giuing of thanks. His meaning is, that thankfulneſſe muſt ſeaſon all our ſuites: firſt, thankfulneſſe in performance, for former fauours: ſecondly thankfulneſſe in promiſe, for ſuch good things as we deſire to inioy. This is the effect of the generall obſeruation which this place affords. And it is a matter which we haue occaſion to put in practice euery day. Euery day we eyther doe, or ought to preſent our ſelues before the Throne of grace, to craue mercies of him who is the Father of mercies: be we ſure that in ſuing we leaue not out this ſeruice: let our promiſes be as frequent as our deſires. Euery day againe we haue matter of thankfulneſſe in abundance; reſt, peace, health, food, libertie; whereupon can wee looke, that ſhall not miniſter ſome occaſion to vs to ſay, O Lord, how manifold are thy mercies? and what is man that thou art thus mindfull of him? There be two things whereof a Chriſtian ſhould euen bind himſelfe to keepe a Catalogue; his owne ſinnes, and Gods mercies; his owne ſins for humiliation, the mercies of God, that he may be thereby quickened vnto thankfulneſſe. It is a worthie and a neceſſarie taske for a man to tie himſelfe to a ſuruey of thoſe two euery day; What hath been his carriage to God? What hath been Gods mercie to him? The one of theſe will helpe to make the other worke the more effectually. When a man ſhall find in himſelfe many defects, and perceiue withall how God notwithſtanding lades him with many fauours; how muſt this needs cauſe his ſpirit within him to be full of anguiſh, that hath ſo badly requited ſo good a God? How can it doe otherwiſe againe then ſtirre him to thankfulneſſe out of this meditation; Haue I beene thus vndutifull, and yet hath the Lord beene thus bountifull? What ſhall I ſay? But I haſten to the promiſe it ſelfe in particular. In the meane time we ſee in the generall, wee muſt as well vow duetie to God, as expect mercie from him.

Touching the promiſe, we haue to obſerue therein; firſt a ſeruice [ſing:] ſecondly, the inſtrument wherewith, [tongue:] thirdly, the matter whereof [righteouſneſſe:] fourthly, the manner in which [ioyfully:] My tongue ſhall ſing ioyfully of thy Righteouſneſſe. Of the firſt, [ſing.] Concerning which this may be the Doctrine,

The ſecond Doctrine.

That the exerciſe and act of ſinging, is a dutie well becomming Gods people, for the declaration of their due acknowledgement of Gods kindneſſe. This I note from hence, in that DAVID purpoſing to ſhew himſelfe ſenſible of Gods mercie in forgiuing vnto him this ſinne, makes choyce of this peculiar kind of ſeruice, as a very fit and conuenient and comely meanes, for the manifeſtation of his inward thankfulneſſe. It was not ſo much out of his affection to muſique, (wherein indeed he did euen excell,) as out of his apprehenſion of the fitneſſe of the action for that duetie of prayſing Gods goodneſſe, which he had determined. Hereupon we find this particular kind of ſeruice to haue beene of very ancient vſe, for ſuch ends as this as DAVID aimed at. [x] Then ſang MOSES, and the children of Iſrael. [y] Then Iſrael ſang this ſong. [z] Write this ſong for you, and teach it the children of Iſrael. [a] Then ſang DEBORAH and BARAK. I need not inſiſt vpon particular places out of DAVIDS Pſalmes, by which to ſhew how much that holy man delighted himſelfe in that kind of ſeruice, and how he prouoked and quickned others thereunto. It was one of his ornaments, that he is ſtyled by the Spirit of God in the Storie, [b] The ſweet Singer of Iſrael. And that we might not conceiue of this duetie as of a ſeruice ceremoniall, and ſo ceaſing in Chriſt, who is the bodie of all ancient types; Saint Paul commended it to the practice of Chriſtians in the new Teſtament; perſwading them to [c] Pſalmes, and Hymnes, and ſpirituall ſongs: and it is Saint Iames his rule, that if any man haue a diſpoſition to diſcouer the inward reioycing of his heart, in the feeling of Gods mercies, he ſhould [d] ſing. It is an excellent meanes to quicken and enliue the dulneſſe of mans ſpirits. It is very effectuall both to diſcouer and ſtirre vp ioy. That cauſed caused Paul and Silas to vse it in [c] prison, both to shew how they reioyced in their sufferings, and to preuent that lumpishnesse and heauinesse, which through naturall infirmitie might ouertake them, by reason of their straitnesse of imprisonment. I will not striue to inlarge this poynt. This little may suffice to make the matter plaine; and withall in my first Sermon vpon this Psalme, I spake of this matter vpon occasion of that in the Title, concerning DAVIDS committing this Psalme to a chiefe Musician: where I treated vpon this poynt more at large.

This is to let vs know, that singing, whether it be to declare, or to prouoke thankefulnesse vnto God, is no arbitrary or superfluous dutie, but a duetie of a great behoofe amongst Christians; and such as indeed we are bound not to omit. We cannot but commend it in DAVID, that he bound himselfe to it. In commending it in him, we lay a necessitie of it vpon our selues: for [f] whatsoeuer things are honest, and of good report, if there bee any praise, thinke on these things: doe, and the God of peace shall bee with you, saith the Apostle. It is an argument of a dull and a dead heart, when there is no life nor contentment shewed in this seruice. It was a matter by which the Christians were knowne of old in the dayes of persecution; they were wont to vse (ante lucanos Hymnos:) Early in the morning before day, they were wont to sound out the prayses of God by godly songs. It is lamentable, that in a Land professing the Gospel, and after the continuance thereof so many yeeres, it should be euen a matter of scorne, in the seeming of some, if this kind of dutie be ordinarily made vse of in a priuate Family. Whereupon he that in euenings passeth along by our houses, shall sooner heare the noyse of gaming, reuelling, and of that madde mirth, which SALOMON speaks [g] of, and of that laughter of fooles mentioned by him in the same [h] Booke; then this godly melody, by which God may be glorified, and our duetie to him declared. Let this place win our respectiue affections to this kind of exercise. Dauid, we see, accounted it one of the best acts by which he could giue euidence of his thankefulnesse to God, in case hee should be pleased to afford him that mercie for which he sued in this Psalme; namely, forgiuenesse of sinne, and the restitution of that peace and comfort, in the assurance of Gods fauour towards him, which he was wont to enioy. There may be, I confesse, much vanitie and hypocrisie in this dutie; and so Satan thrusts in corruption into the best seruices, but yet the dutie it selfe is necessary notwithstanding. And though some doe it idlely and foolishly, and more for time then matter, yet the children of God will seeke to vse it as they ought.

Next is the instrument, [My tongue.] The Doctrine here is, That the tongue and voyce of man, ought to be vsed by him, for the declaring of Gods prayses. DAVID held it a matter of dutie, to imploy his tongue in this businesse, and not to content himselfe with a pretence of praysing God in his heart; he held it necessarie, that out of the abundance of his heart, his mouth should speake. This is a promise which he made often: [i] My tongue shall vtter thy righteousnesse, and thy prayse euerie day:

k Pſal.45.2. [k] My tongue is as the pen of a readie writer. [l] I called vnto God with my mouth, and he was exalted with my tongue. [m] My tongue ſhall talke of thy righteouſneſſe daily. [n] My tongue ſhall intreat of thy word. [o] My mouth ſhall praiſe thee with ioyfull lips. [p] My lips ſhall ſpeake praiſe. This is that wiſdome which SALOMON ſaith [q] is found in the lips of him that hath vnderſtanding: This is that [r] fruitfulneſſe of his mouth: [s] The mouth of the Righteous will ſpeake of wiſdome, and his tongue will talke of iudgement: [t] My lips ſurely ſhall ſpeake no wickedneſſe, ſaith IOB. PAVL makes the confeſſion of the mouth, a ſpeciall part of [u] Religion. What is the reaſon that ſome euill ſpirits, by which ſome were poſſeſſed in the dayes of our Sauiour, tooke away from thoſe in whom they were, the vſe of their [x] tongue; but becauſe in very ſpight the Deuil ſought to rob God of that honour which he ought to haue, and which is due vnto him out of the tongue of man? Aſſoone as Zacharie the father of Iohn Baptiſt was reſtored to the vſe of his tongue, the firſt thing he did, was to ſound out the prayſe of God, as knowing his tongue to be eſpecially giuen him for that end: [y] Hee ſpake, and prayſed God. It was the firſt ſeruice wherein hee imployed his tongue. In the Pſalmes, the [z] Tongue of man is called his glorie: [a] Awake, my glorie. It is called a mans glorie, both becauſe it was one of the excellencies and prerogatiues of man ouer other creatures, that he is enabled to vſe his Tongue to the expreſſing of his mind; and becauſe it is the inſtrument ordained to the ſetting forth of Gods glorie, in the aduancement whereof, the glorie of man, as Gods principall creature doth conſiſt. The ſpeciall matter of prayſing God, is conuayed vnto vs by the Tongue. The knowledge of ſaluation through Chriſt, is the maine ground of glorifying God. And is it not the Tongue of man, which God hath conſecrated to the begetting of it within vs? [b] God puts his words in the mouthes of men: and, [c] He ſpake to the world of old, by the mouth of his Prophets: and, [d] He creates the fruit of the lips to bee peace. Now as God by the Tongues of thoſe whom he hath appoynted to be veſſels of bearing his name to the world, conuayeth the matter of his prayſe into our hearts; ſo by our Tongues he requires a teſtification thereof. By the Tongue we receiue good, by the Tongue wee ought to manifeſt that good wee haue receyued; neyther can there be a more fitting meanes for vs to be inſtruments of good to others, then the well vſing of our Tongues: thoſe dueties of admonition, exhortation, comfort, whereby one Chriſtian is bound to further the ſaluation of another, how ſhall they be ſo well performed as by the Tongue? That Law of grace, which is in the Tongue of Gods [e] children, is that which muſt miniſter grace vnto thoſe which heare vs, according to the Apoſtles [f] rule. There is a certaine holy ſalt in the Tongue of a godly [g] man, by which others may be ſeaſoned; whereupon it is ſaid, that [h] the lips of a righteous man doe feed many: many doe receiue refreſhing and comfort by his talke. Then againe, whether is it not a matter of equitie, that the Tongue ſhould be imployed for his honour, by whom it is indued with that facultie with which which it is accompliſhed? What ſaid God once to MOSES? i Who hath giuen the mouth to man? Hath God beſtowed the Tongue, and ſhall he not be honoured with the vſe of the Tongue? k Who feedeth a flocke, ſaith the Apoſtle, and eateth not of the milke of the flocke? meaning, that euery man expects the returne of ſome benefit, where he hath beſtowed a charge. If God haue beſtowed a Tongue, ſhall he not haue honour and glorie by his owne gift? Then beſides, there is a reaſon out of the right of a mans Conuerſion from the ſtate of nature for this. Naturally there is a certaine poyſon vnder a l mans lips: Curſing and bitterneſſe are things to which he is verie m inclinable. Now, what ſaith the Apoſtle to them that are conuerted through grace? n As you haue giuen your members ſeruants to vncleanneneſſe, and to iniquitie, &c. ſo now giue your members ſeruants vnto righteouſneße in holineſſe. This generall rule is to be applyed to the Tongue in particular. As that is naturally an inſtrument of euill, and of diſhonouring God; ſo ought it to be an inſtrument of good, and of glorifying God. Thus euery way it appeareth, that this is a true Doctrine, that the tongue of man ought to be vſed to Gods prayſe. DAVIDS heart being well diſpoſed, his Tongue ſhall diſcouer it.

Here I haue a large field to enter into, and a doore is opened to me to a great deale of matter. For if it be true which S. IAMES ſaith, That o an euill tongue is euen a world of wickedneſſe; haue I not a wide ſcope, when I ſhall goe about as I muſt (in part by occaſion of this Doctrine,) to diſcouer the generall defect in regard of this poynt of vſing the Tongue to Gods glorie? I will abridge this plentie as much as I may. Firſt, conſider how few tongues are vſed to good and holy purpoſes. Secondly, note how many are imployed to the contrarie, to the diſhonour of God in a high degree. Little ſpeaking there is amongſt men, which may ſauour of the conſcience of that dutie to which Dauid here tied himſelfe. Let a man hearken with p IEREMIE, How ſmall is the religion and grace which is to be found in moſt mens conferences? thoſe duties of admonition and prouocation vnto good, which are the ſpeciall euidences of that communion of Saints, which ought to be among the faithfull; alas, how rare they be? How little is ſpoken when men meet together, whereby as yron by yron (according to q Salomons ſimilitude,) ſo one man by another might be ſharpened, or (as the Apoſtles word is) r prouoked vnto godlineſſe? Indeed there is ſuch a generall barrenneſſe in mens hearts, and there are ſo few Elihu's, who are full s of matter, that they know not what to ſay vpon ſuch occaſions. The Store-houſe of the heart being emptie, the Tongue muſt needs be ſilent. Alas, how vnſauourily doe many ſpeake in theſe things, which yet in other ſubiects are of good ſpeech, and can diſcourſe at large aptly and fitly, and as the caſe requires which is on foot? If they come to ſpeake of any matter of pietie, how harſh are their words? how broken are their ſpeeches? and how imperfect, as if a man ſpake in a ſtrange language, who were but a learner therein; or as if one were treating of a matter quite out of his Element?

Element? Then, ſuch as haue ſome better vnderſtanding in Religion, yet as they are ſparing and ſeldome this way, ſo how dull generally, as if it were ſome vnpleaſing taske to which they are forced, rather then any delightfull ſeruice in which they take contentment? Thus he who made all Tongues, hath yet but a few Tongues by which he is in any meaſure honoured as he ought. Eyther men haue not in them whereof to ſpeak, ſo ſlender is their knowledge; or knowing ſomewhat, they care not how little they ſpeake, ſo ſmall is their conſcience. But now for the Tongues which are imployed to Gods diſhonour politiuely and apparantly, how infinite are they and without number? Such are thoſe Tongues, which ſend forth that which the Apoſtle calleth [t] Rotten communication, in whom filthineſſe and ſcurrilitie is their chiefeſt eloquence; Such are thoſe blaſpemous Tongues, which abuſe and euen pierce thorow Gods glorious and fearefull name by common ſwearing, which whoſo goeth abroad in the world, ſhall be forced to heare on euery ſide to the vexing of his ſoule euery day; Such are thoſe rayling and ſlanderous Tongues which [u] cut as a Raſor, and are [x] whetted like a ſword; Such are theſe inſolent Tongues, in which there is a kind of [y] rodde of pride, [z] who brag in their talke, and [a] ſpeake wickedly of their oppreſsions, and thinke themſelues at libertie to ſpeake what they luſt: [b] Our lips are our owne, Who is Lord ouer vs? Such are thoſe Tongues which are vſed now as of old, to the ſmiting of Gods [c] Miniſters, and thoſe who [d] cruelly, proudly, and diſdainfully ſpeake againſt the righteous, and ſay all manner of euill againſt thoſe which follow goodneſſe, and refuſe to [e] runne with them to the ſame exceſſe. DAVID ſpeaketh of a cutting out which is prepared for ſuch [f] Tongues: which iudgement if the Lord ſhould preſently execute, verily more then the third part of the world would become dumme. If it be but in reſpect of the common curſing and ſwearing which is amongſt men, and in regard of the poyſon and venome which is caſt out againſt holineſſe, againſt profeſſion, againſt Gods ordinance, I am perſwaded there is no one part of the bodie of man, by which God is more diſhonoured. Oh that men could learne to feare that flying booke of Gods curſe, which ZACHARIAH ſaw in a [g] viſion againſt theſe foule abuſes; and that they could think vpon the wofulneſſe of that time, in which for the abuſe of the Tongue, they ſhall lye boyling in eternall flames like DIVES, and begging for a drop of water to refreſh their Tongues, but ſhall not inioy it. Let vs all (while it is called to day) take warning, and ſet our ſelues to learne Chriſt better. Neyther let vs thinke this to be but a pettie matter, becauſe words are but wind, neyther let vs imagine when we tranſgreſſe in our Tongues, that a little formalitie of ſmiting our breſts, with God forgiue mee, ſhall make amends. Remember we what S. IAMES ſaith, [h] If any man ſeeme religious, and refraineth not his tongue, he doth but beguile his owne ſoule, and all his Religion is but vanitie; if he keepe not his mouth as with a bridle that he may not treſpaſſe with his Tongue. all the bodie. The well managing of the Tongue, is a ſpeciall teſtimonie of godlineſſe, and an euidence of a mans ableneſſe, to guide himſelfe thorow-out as becomes a Chriſtian. It is the Sterne or Rudder of the whole [k] man: he hath loſt the command of all, that hath not power ouer that. [l] By thy words thou ſhalt be iuſtified, by thy words condemned, ſaith our Sauiour. Now if we do indeed deſire (being conuicted and wrought vpon by this Doctrine) to vſe our Tongues hereafter to Gods glorie, according to Dauids promiſe touching himſelfe here in this place, I pray be pleaſed to obſerue this courſe.

Firſt, Labour we to be inwardly ſtored with ſuch matter, as is neceſſary for this ſeruice. There muſt be inward abundance, out of which the mouth muſt thus ſpeake to Gods glorie. Note with me a couple of places very obſeruable for this purpoſe: one thus, [m] The mouth of the Righteous will ſpeake of wiſdome, and his tongue will talke of iudgement: For the Law of God is in his heart. His heart is well ſeaſoned, and thence commeth it that his Tongue is ſo well imployed. The other place is, [n] The tongue of the iuſt man is as fined ſiluer, but the heart of the wicked is little worth. That is giuen as a ſecret reaſon, why there is a great difference betwixt the tongue of a good man, and the tongue of an euill man. The tongue of an euill man is not as the others tongue, becauſe his heart is worth nothing. The other [o] layeth vp knowledge, and that maketh his mouth to bee (as is ſaid) [p] like a Wel-ſpring of life: ſo in another place, SALOMON makes the diſ-proportion betwixt the Righteous and the Wicked, in reſpect of not [q] ſpreading abroad knowledge with the lips, to proceed from the heart: their hearts in regard of holy knowledge are not like; therefore their vſing of the Tongue is different. So then, wouldeſt thou glorifie God with thy tongue? looke to this then, that the Law of God bee in thy heart: and conſider what is ſaid, The Law is in his heart. It is not enough that it is in his braine, and that a man be furniſhed with a kind of contemplatiue knowledge ſwimming in his head; ſuch a kind of vnderſtanding in matters of Religion many haue, by whoſe tongues notwithſtanding God receiues no glorie. But the heart is the ſeat of the affections, that is it, [r] out of which commeth life, and which [ſ] God requires to be giuen him: looke to it then that the Word of God be a matter, the good, and ſweetneſſe, and power whereof thou feeleſt in thy heart, and then thou ſhalt be fit with thy tongue to glorifie God. Thou canſt neuer want matter for this good ſeruice of thy tongue, when thy heart is thus diſpoſed. Nay, thy tongue will not be commanded ſilence [t] when it is thus; there will be a certaine ſpirit, within thee to compell thee. This which is in thy heart, will be as Ieremiah ſaid in a caſe very like, (if not the ſame,) like a burning fire ſhut vp in thy bones: it will be euen a payne to thee to forbeare; [u] thou canſt not ſtay: and if thou doſt at any time [x] keepe ſilence from good, thy ſorrow will be the more ſtirred. This is the firſt thing, if thou wouldeſt that God ſhould receiue glorie from thy tongue, labor that the Law of God may be in the heart.

Secondly, Beware thou doe not vſe to defile thy Tongue with vnſauoury ſpeech. Saint Iames (as to mee ſeemeth) compares the Mouth of man vnto a [y] Fountaine: the vſing of euill ſpeech hee likeneth to the imbittering or poyſoning of the Fountaine: which accident, when it hath befalne the Fountaine, it cannot ſend forth at one and the ſame place ſweet water and bitter. Now the accuſtoming of the Tongue to euill ſpeech, is like the poyſoning of the Well; the Mouth and Tongue are thereby quite diſabled to ſpeake to Gods Glory. Can good and euill, bleſſing and curſing, come out of one and the ſame mouth? euen words of bleſſing are accurſed, when they are vttered by a Tongue inured to euill. God will not be honoured by ſuch a Tongue. The Tongue muſt be vſed but one way. A man muſt binde himſelfe to an abſolute forbearance of all corrupt ſpeech, that intends by his Tongue to glorifie God. God doth not reckon himſelfe glorified by that Tongue, which is applied to two ſuch contrary purpoſes: now it curſeth man, talkes viciouſly, ſpeaks ſwearingly; ſuddenly it is framing ſome words of holineſſe and deuotion: this is a mocking of God, this is no honouring of God. And thus haue I made this vſe as ſhort as I conueniently could, touching the Doctrine raiſed out of the conſideration of the inſtrument, which Dauid profeſſed to imploy in the ſeruice. Hee had abuſed his tongue in perſwading Bathſheba, and in flattering and falſe ſpeeches to Vriah: his meaning therefore is to manifeſt his repentance therein by the imployment of his Tongue to better purpoſes.

The third point, is the matter whereof DAVIDS Tongue ſhall ſing, (Thy Righteouſneſſe.) Here might I take occaſion to ſpeake concerning that which ought to be the chiefe and principall ſubiect of our ſinging. Not matter of wantonneſſe and vanity, but matters of holineſſe and of piety. But this in a manner was included within the compaſſe of the former Doctrine: for inaſmuch as the Tongue muſt bee made vſe of to ſet out Gods glory, and to aduance his praiſe, it muſt neceſſarily follow, that there is no roome for idle and laſciuious Sonnets, which indeede doe tend rather to the diſhonor of God then otherwiſe; all ſuch appertaine to that Rule of the Apoſtles, [z] Let them not be once named amongſt you. I will only therefore handle one point which is deriuable out of the true meaning of the word Righteouſneſſe in this place; which is,

z Epheſ.5.3.

The fourth Doctrine.

That it is a matter agreeable euen to iuſtice with God, that he ſhould bee gracious and mercifull vnto thoſe who doe truly repent them of their ſinnes. This is that which Dauid here intends by the word (Righteouſneſſe.) The thing which hee hath eſpecially beene a ſuiter for hitherto in this Pſalme, is the forgiueneſſe of his ſinnes: he promiſeth God, that if hee ſhall pleaſe to afford him this, he will ſet himſelfe to bee a publiſher and a celebrater of his Righteouſneſſe: what is that hee will ſet out? his faithfulneſſe in the performance of his gracious promiſes towards and touching thoſe, that are truely humbled for their ſinnes, and ſeeke vnto him for pardon for the ſame. And thus is the word Righteouſneſſe vſed two times [a] together, where the Apoſtle ſaith directly, that God in orday-

a Rom.3.25,26.

ordayning and ſetting forth Chriſt to be a reconciliation through faith in his bloud, doth declare his Righteouſneſſe, and hath taken that courſe that he may bee iuſt; which as it intends thus much, that God appointed ſuch a meanes as the death of his Sonne for mans reconcilement, that thereby the world might ſee that hee will haue his iuſtice ſatisfied: in regard whereof hee would not ſpare, no, not his owne Sonne, being found as a ſinner by the ingagement of himſelfe for others: ſo this alſo, that hee might thereby manifeſt that which hee had alwayes teſtified touching himſelfe, that hee did not deſire the death of him that dyeth, but would be euer ready to receiue him to grace vpon his returne. According as alſo the ſame Apoſtle elſe-where makes the comfort of them that are ſaued, to proceed from the Righteouſneſſe of God; as [b] well as the vengeance to be ſhewed vpon the vngodly: not becauſe there is any deſert in thoſe whom he ſaues, or becauſe their preſſures here for godlineſſe ſake are meritorious: [c] (for the ſufferings of this life cannot be worthy of the glory which ſhall be ſhewed hereafter,) but becauſe God hath promiſed a recompence of bliſſe to thoſe that ſuffer for the Name of Chriſt: and it is iuſtice in God, to make good all his promiſes to the vtmoſt. Vpon this ground Paul termes that which God will beſtow at the day of account vpon his Elect, a Crowne of righteouſneſſe, and ſuch as ſhall bee conferred by him as a righteous [d] Iudge: not becauſe (as the gloſſe of the Papiſts vpon the place is) workes done after that (which they call the firſt iuſtification) are properly meritorious, and fully worthy of euerlaſting life, reſpectiuely to which workes heauen is a due and a iuſt ſtipend which God by iuſtice oweth; but becauſe God promiſed thus and thus to deale by Chriſt with repentant ſinners: and hauing made himſelfe a debter by promiſe, (as Auſtine calleth God) it is agreeing to iuſtice, that hee ſhould performe that which hee hath promiſed.

d 2.*Tim.*4.8.

The Vſe.

This is a point of ſingular comfort to all repentant ſinners. Is thy heart pricked and wounded with a remorſe of ſinne? haſt thou godly ſorrow for offending God? is thy ſoule deepely and effectually grieued for thy manifold corruptions? doth thy ſpirit droope and grone for thy tranſgreſſions? Behold, thy caſe being thus, God cannot, no, not by the rule of iuſtice with-hold forgiueneſſe from thee; thou mayſt in a kinde of holy boldneſſe euen challenge God in this caſe, and vrge him not with the price and worth of thy repentance, but with the ſtrength of his owne promiſe, with which he hath tyed himſelfe, and which, it cannot ſtand with the honour of his iuſtice, not to performe: [e] Hee cannot denie himſelfe. It is an excellent ſpeech of Auſtines vpon Pſalme 83. Bee out of feare, ſaith hee, hold God as a debter, if thou beleeueſt in him as a promiſer. God ſhould not be iuſt in his promiſes, if hee ſhould not giue pardon to repentant ſinners. This briefely from the meaning of the word Righteouſneſſe. It is no point of liberty; for it miniſtreth hope to none but to the penitent: and for them it is a Doctrine of no ſmall refreſhing. It is euen againſt iuſtice, that God ſhould caſt them off, when

e 2.*Tim.*2.13.

they repent. Remember this withall, that it is alſo a piece of his iuſtice to giue them hearts which cannot repent, who are not mooued to make haſte by the riches of his patience to repent. Thus in a word touching the matter of Dauids ſinging.

The laſt is the manner, [Ioyfully.] Here we are taught,

The fift Doctrine. That all ſeruices tending to the teſtification of our duty and thankfulneſſe vnto God, ought to bee performed with cheerefulneſſe. DAVID will ſing, and he will ſing ioyfully: hee will doe it with a kinde of inward content and with liuelineſſe of ſpirit, being glad that hee hath occaſion ſo to doe. So otherwhere, [f] My mouth ſhall praiſe thee with ioyfull lips: [g] my lips will reioyce when I ſing vnto thee: [h] my heart ſhall reioyce, and with my ſong will I prayſe him: note the coupling the reioycing of the heart, with the prayſing of God by a ſong. Hee prouoketh others to the like, [i] Come let vs reioyce vnto the Lord: [k] Serue the Lord with gladneſſe, come before him with ioyfulneſſe; enter into his Courts with reioycing: [l] Sing vnto him with a ioyfull voyce. This diſpoſition was in the Virgin Mary, when ſhe ſaid [m] her Spirit reioyced in God her Sauiour. There is no man, but he would rather haue his buſineſſe not done, then not done with cheerefulneſſe. Whereupon Salomon ſaith, that a [n] ſluggiſh or dull agent or meſſenger, is as Vineger to the teeth, or as ſmoke to the eyes: it is a matter of vexation and trouble. God himſelfe is all ſpirit, and hee will be ſerued in ſpirit, hee can indure none but cheerefull ſeruitors. In the time of ceremonies, when as God had appointed, that the firſt borne of a mans beaſts ſhould be ſet apart to him, it was with this exception: if it were the firſt Foale of an Aſſe, it ſhould be redeemed with a Lambe; if it were not redeemed, the necke of it was to bee broken; God would not haue that to be ſacrificed vnto * him. Now ſome not vnaptly, in my opinion, make this to be meant by it, that God ſo appointed, as an euidence of his deteſtation of dulneſſe and want of life and cheerefulneſſe in good things, an Aſſe being one of the dulleſt creatures: (Sloth is wont to bee pictured riding on an Aſſe:) God would not bee honoured by the ſacrifice of ſuch a beaſt. It is the badge of Chriſts people, [p] they come willingly at the time of aſſembling. I reioyced when they ſaid vnto me, [q] We will goe into the Houſe of the Lord. Much more may be ſaid hereof, but this may ſerue.

The Vſe. It is a checke to our common lumpiſhneſſe and vncheerefulneſſe, to that deadneſſe of ſpirit which doth generally diſcouer it ſelfe in mens performance of Religious duties: men many times looke when they be hearing, or otherwiſe attending vpon the other ſeruices of Gods Houſe, as if they had no heart; as if, were it not for very ſhame, they would ſay with thoſe in plaine termes, [r] Behold, it is a wearineſſe. The thoughts of many are euen tyred and ſpent before a matter beginnes. Let euery one of vs looke to our owne affections. In all matters which man tenders vnto him, God ſtill loues a cheerefull giuer. Hee would haue nothing taken of any towards the erecting of the Tabernacle, vnleſſe it were of him that [f] had a willing heart. Let vs ſtriue againſt our owne ſluggiſhneſſe, gilhneſſe, and when wee feele a kinde of wearineſſe to creepe vpon vs, let vs checke our ſelues for it, and blame our ſelues, who in other things can bee ſo iocund and freſh, and yet bee ſo dull, and like Men ſtrooken on the head, when matters appertayning to the Seruice of God come in hand: Remember DAVIDS ioyfulneſſe. VERS. 15.

Open thou my lips, O Lord, and my mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy praiſe.

DAVID hauing ingaged himſelfe by promiſe to be a Declarer of Gods Righteouſneſſe with his tongue, doth in this Verſe in a manner correct himſelfe, as that he had vndertaken more then by his owne ſtrength he was able to performe, and therefore hee here beginnes to intreate and pray for Gods inabling; as if he ſaid, Truth it is, Lord, I ſhall haue iuſt cauſe to declare thy righteouſneſſe, when it ſhall once pleaſe thee to afford me that grace and mercy which I craue: but who am I, that I ſhould preſume vpon mine owne ſtrength, as if it lay in my power to accompliſh ſuch a duty? bee thou therefore pleaſed to prepare my heart, and to vnite my tongue, and then ſhall I become a meete inſtrument of thy praiſe. This is the coherence and purpoſe of this Verſe. In further examining it, wee are to conſider two things: Firſt, The matter he deſired of God, Open my lips: Secondly, The effect that ſhall follow it when it is beſtowed. Touching the firſt, this it teacheth,

The firſt Doctrine.

That no man can performe the ſeruice of prayſing God, except God doe by his grace ſtrengthen him thereunto. DAVID flyeth here to God for inablement herein, being ſenſible of weakeneſſe and inſufficiencie in himſelfe; I ſpeake, O Lord, of ſinging with my tongue touching thy righteouſneſſe; but (alas) when I come to the doing hereof, ſuch a deadneſſe ſhall I meete with in my heart, and ſuch a dumbeneſſe in my tongue, that vnleſſe thou worke it in me, I ſhall neuer be able to accompliſh it. There is a ſaying of [a] Dauids which holds good agreement with this: My lips ſhall ſpeake praiſe, when thou haſt taught mee thy Statutes. DAVID acknowledgeth a neceſſitie of being taught by God, before he can be able to vtter ought, which ſhall truely tend to the declaration of Gods praiſe: No man can ſay (ſaith the Apoſtle) [b] that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt. No man can attaine to an effectuall acknowledgement of the condition and ſtate of Chriſts perſon, except the Spirit of God ſhall bee pleaſed to inlighten him. That praiſe of God which a man intends to diſcouer with his

a *Pſal.*119.172.

b 1. *Cor.*12.3.

his mouth, in all reaſon he muſt firſt contriue and faſhion it in his heart. Now how ihal the heart yeeld out of it ſelfe any thing tending hereunto, ſith the imagination of the thoughts thereof, in regard of the naturall diſpoſition thereof, [c] are only euill, and that continually? There is naturally a kinde of pollutedneſſe in the lips of man, whereof Iſaiah [d] complayned, acertaine [e] vncircumciſedneſſe, which, vntill it is reformed and taken away, no ſuch thing can come through them, by which God may bee glorified. [f] We are not ſufficient of our ſelues, to thinke any thing as of our ſelues, ſaith the Apoſtle: and, [g] Without me ye can doe nothing, ſaith our Sauiour. [h] It is God who is the worker in his, of all that which is pleaſing in his owne ſight. The apprehenſion of this natiue vnableneſſe, made Dauid to commend vnto God this requeſt: and then there was another, a more particular reaſon, which mooued Dauid to ſay thus; and that was the effect which he felt in himſelfe of his great ſinne. We haue had often occaſion in this Pſalme, to note the hauocke of the graces of God in him, made by this noyſome treſpaſſe. Hee felt himſelfe much diſabled by it euery way. There was both a decay of thoſe gifts of conceiuing and vttering, which appertayned to this ſeruice; and beſides, hee was as it were a man out of heart, hauing no ſuch feeling of Gods fauour, no ſuch ioy of ſaluation as hee was wont to ioioy, hee could not to any purpoſe doe that which hee aymed at herein. Neuer indeede can a man praiſe God aright, vntill he hath matter for it miniſtred to him out of his owne experience: when his ſoule is ſatisfied with marrow and fatneſſe, which proceedeth from the loue of God ſhed abroade into the heart: then [i] ſhall his mouth ſound out prayſe with ioyfull lips. It is but a cold, barren, and ſuperficiall ſeruice, whatſoeuer a man doth herein, if he bee not furniſhed with matter for it, out of the Store-houſe of his owne heart. If one haue not within, that Ioy which Dauid termes [k] Ioy of heart; and PAVL, [l] Ioy in the holy Ghoſt: (it is in another place termed the [m] Ioy of Gods people:) hee can neuer ſhew forth the praiſe of God to any purpoſe. It is the inward feeling which muſt giue life and being to this buſineſſe. Thus there is a double reaſon by which this point is prooued, that no man can be an vtterer of Gods praiſe, vnleſſe God inable him: the firſt reaſon is drawne from the conſideration of the generall inſufficiencie which is naturally in man for good performances: the ſecond, from the nature of this act of praiſing God; which is ſuch as can neuer bee well diſcharged, vnleſſe a mans ſpirit within doe reioyce in God, and haue ſweet peace ſealed vp vnto it in the aſſurance of Gods fauour. Now this is naturall to no man, it is Gods only free and gracious gift, and vntill the Lord bee pleaſed to afford comfort to a mans ſoule, by ſome good teſtimonie to him that his ſinnes are pardoned; all his attempts and vndertakings to be a prayſer of God, are vtterly in vaine. Let mee haue matter of praiſe from thee (ſaith Dauid,) by ſome gracious euidence that my ſinnes are pardoned, and then ſhall I be a Trumpet of thy glorie. So of the Doctrine.

1. Vſe Firſt, For all Chriſtians generally: Secondly, For ſome more ſpecially.

Firſt,

Firſt, For all here is a direction for vs, what we muſt doe, if wee reſolue as we ought, vpon that duty of praiſing God, to which by occaſion of Dauids purpoſe here, we were exhorted in the former Sermon. Deſireſt thou to bee an inſtrument of Gods praiſes, and to vtter out that which may bee to his glorie, whether it bee in priuate, when thou art to powre out thy ſoule before him for thine owne ſpeciall occaſions; or in publique in thy family, by praying with them, or by inſtructing them; or whether it be in company with others abroade, as in admoniſhing, viſiting the ſicke, comforting the afflicted, or ſuch like? Thou art here taught, to direct thy thoughts to God, without whoſe opening, all that euer thou takeſt vpon thee to ſpeake in ſuch caſes, is but iangling. If thou finde at any time an vnaptneſſe, a dulneſſe, a barrenneſſe in thy ſelfe, in the diſcharge of ſuch duties as theſe be, thou haſt no other thing to impute it to, but thine owne ſlackneſſe in preparing thy ſelfe to ſuch holy buſineſſe, by being a ſuiter vnto him, without whoſe inabling, all thy vndertakings in this kinde ſhall be vnprofitable. A man ſhall heare ſome excuſe themſelues, ſomtimes for their neglect in theſe things. If you ſay to them, Why doe you not vſe to pray with your ſelfe? or if you doe, why doe you neuer labour to ſpeake otherwiſe then you are directed by a booke, or haue learned by roate? why doſt not thou which art a maſter of a Family, vſe to be the mouth of thy Family in prayer vnto God? why doeſt thou not inſtruct, catechize, &c? Why doe you not in your meetings prouoke and ſtirre vp one another to godlineſſe, admoniſh the vnruly, comfort the feeble-minded? The excuſe (I ſay) herein ſtrait, this it is; Oh, alas, I would I could, but I cannot: would I had the gift that ſome haue, but God hath not pleaſed to afford it me. After ſuch a faſhion as this, men thinke to excuſe their backwardneſſe, and deadneſſe, and neglect in ſuch important duties. But I demand of thee, how is it that thou canſt not doe theſe things as thou oughteſt, whoſe fault is it? Is not God able to make thee ſufficient herein? I am ſure thou wilt acknowledge. And hath he not promiſed to ſupply thee in this as in other wants, and to make all grace to abound towards thee? Thou canſt not deny it: where is the want then? Sure in this. When didſt thou, being moued with the conſcience of performing this duty herein, and being humbled with the feeling of thy owne inſufficiencie, lift vp thy ſoule to God, deſiring him to open thy heart, and to vntie the ſtrings of thy tongue, and take away the vncircumciſion of thy lips, and to furniſh thee with matter that thou mayeſt in thy place, and according as iuſt occaſion ſhall bee offered to thee, be a declarer of his praiſe? May we haue this mercy for the asking, and is it worthy the asking, and can wee imagine to finde for our ſelues any colour of excuſe if wee doe not aske? Thou makeſt a ſhew thou wouldſt doe this and that, if thou hadſt abilitie; who but God can inable thee? Be a ſuiter to him like Dauid in this place: he giues to all men liberally, and hee will not ſend thee away emptie. Forget wee not this then. It is a neceſſary matter. I will bee bold to ſay, that there is no Child of God, but hee ſhall ſometimes perceiue a kinde of heauineſſe and and dulneſſe to be vpon him, reſpectiuely to theſe duties of prayer, and ſuch like: now here is a mans beſt helpe in ſuch caſes, to deſire opening from the Lord. And then let him who hath experience of Gods mercie, in being at any time enabled by him this way, beware of falling into any noted ſinne. The preuayling thereof will robbe a man of that inward peace, and ſweet feeling of Gods loue, without which no man can haue any heart for the performance of ſuch ſeruices: ſo long as the guilt thereof lyeth vpon a mans ſoule, it will euen ſtop vp his mouth, and ſo fill him with a kind of confuſion, that ſuch actions will be euen irkſome to him: he can haue no ioy nor comfort in attempting them.

2. Vſe. Beſides this generall vſe for all Chriſtians, there is another more particular and ſpeciall, for vs that are Miniſters: we are by office more ſpecially deputed to the ſhewing forth of Gods prayſes, and to the declaring of his righteouſneſſe in the great Congregation. Now by how much the more weightie and important our ſeruice herein is aboue others, by ſo much the more earneſt and frequent had we need to be in this requeſt. We are lyable to the ſame naturall inſufficiencie for holy duties, that other men be. It is no more ſafe for vs to aduenture out of a preſuming vpon our owne ſtrength, then it is for others; vntill the Lord ſhall purge our polluted lips with a touch of ſome coale from the Altar, how ſhall we haue that law of grace in our lips, by which wee ſhould be able to miniſter grace vnto our hearers? If God ſhall bee with our mouth, according to the tenour of his promiſe vnto [n] Moſes, then ſhall our [o] tongue be as fined Siluer: then [p] will bee health in it, and euen our hearers ſhall haue cauſe to ſay, that God is in vs indeed. I will not take on me to charge any with the neglect of this dutie; I am not priuie to what men doe in priuate to this end; onely as my dutie is (my text giuing me ſo iuſt occaſion) I labour to teach what we ought to doe. This I am ſure, that when we looke vpon that great worke to which the Lord hath called vs, we may iuſtly ſay with the Apoſtle, [q] Who is ſufficient for theſe things? and when we enter into the ſeruice of the Church, there is none of vs all but hath cauſe to cry out with IEREMIAH, [r] O Lord God, behold, I cannot ſpeake: ſo that if we enter not in with a kind of trembling, yet if euerie time we addreſſe our ſelues to any ſpeciall ſeruice of our calling, we doe not out of an apprehenſion of our owne vnableneſſe ſeeke the Lord, deſiring him that he would doe to vs euen as he did to IEREMIE, [f] ſtretch out his hand, and touch our mouth, and put his words into it: There is ſmall hope that our tongues ſhould be as the Pen of a readie Writer, ſo to ſet out thoſe [t] wonderfull workes of God, [u] and thoſe great things of the Law, as that the ſoules of the people ſhall haue cauſe to bleſſe God for vs that euer they did heare vs. Theſe be the two ſpeciall vſes of this Doctrine.

I know I might here confute by this place, that opinion of Poperie expreſſed by BELLARMINE; That euen by the ſtrength of nature, ſome good workes may be done. How ſhall this be accounted true, when Dauid diſclaymeth here all ableneſſe, ſo much as to ſpeake a word of Gods prayſe, prayse, vnlesse the Lord shall strengthen him; surely small likelihood that man should be able to direct his heart to please God, that cannot so much as open his mouth to prayse God. Truely, said AVGVSTINE, Whatsoeuer thou hast wherewith God is pleased, from him thou hast it: Whatsoeuer proceeds from me by which God hath glorie, is nothing but the effect of some worke of grace in me. It is but the reflection of those beames of his fauour, which it hath pleased him to make shine vpon my soule. [x] Who hath giuen to the Lord first? This poynt might be also noted here, as an vse of this Doctrine not vnworthily. I giue therefore a touch of it by the way, though I principally presse this Doctrine to these two ends: first, to direct vs all in generall, to whom we should looke, that we may haue mouthes fit for holy seruices: and then secondly, to prouoke vs that are Ministers in particular, to expect a supply from his hand; which if it shall be once opened to vs, we shall gather and be stored in abundance, for the filling and refreshing of those soules which depend vpon vs for a blessing. And thus farre of the first thing in this Verse: the thing craued, the opening of the lips. No man can speake the language of Canaan, vntill the Lord haue taught it him.

x Rom. 11. 35.

The second Doctrine.

Now followeth the effect, My mouth shall shew forth thy praise. This shewing forth the prayse of God, is the same thing in effect, which Dauid in the precedent Verse called, Singing of Gods righteousnesse. Touching this dutie it selfe, I shall need to say nothing now, hauing spoken thereof in the handling of that which went before. Therefore forbearing to say ought concerning that generall dutie, I will limit my selfe in treating vpon this clause; onely two things,

Firstly That when God is pleased to enable, there neuer wants sufficiencie. Open thou my lips, saith DAVID, and then my mouth shall shew forth thy prayse. I am now insufficient for this dutie, but if thou shalt please to giue strength, then I shall be able abundantly so to accomplish it as is fit. In the daies of his flesh there was one presented to our Sauiour, that stammered in his speech: [y] When he had touched his tongue, and said, Ephatha, which is, Be opened, the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plaine. Thus is it in regard of spirituall speaking: When the Lord shall please to giue power to the Tongue, it cannot but speake so, as that thereby the glorie of him that gaue abilitie to speake, shall be made apparant. Moses complayned much of himselfe, [z] O Lord, I am not eloquent, but I am heauie of speech, and slow of toung. But when God made good his promise vnto him of [a] being with his mouth, and of teaching him what to say, doe wee read of any defect in MOSES after, eyther when he had occasion to speake to PHARAOH, or when he was to be the instructor of the people? [b] Woe is mee (said ISAIAH) at the first, becauſe I am a man of polluted lips; but when his [c] lips were touched, had he not the tongue of the learned, fit to minister a word in time to him that was wearie? The complaint of IEREMIAH was not much vnlike: [d] I am a Child, (said he) I cannot speake. But when God had vndertaken to supply him, [e] Gods words were in his mouth as fire. There was no great matter of art in the Apostles, before their is; wee ſhall neuer heare of any man of whom it is manifeſt that God hath enabled him, but the ſame is found ſufficient for the diſcharge of that to which he hath enabled him. If he once open, what ſhall hinder of this Doctrine. I cannot, thought DAVID, ſing of thy righteouſneſſe, O Lord, without thy inabling mee: but if thou once open my mouth, I know

I ſhall be abundantly able to declare thy prayſe.

The Vſe. This followeth right vpon the former Doctrine: there we were all perſwaded to depend vpon Gods inabling, here we are taught how to iudge in this caſe whether God hath enabled vs yea or no. What ſuffici-encie feele we in our ſelues. Certainely where this opening worke of God goeth before, there this effect of ſufficiencie to ſhew forth the praiſe of God, cannot but come after. Shall he be ſaid to be inabled by God, who is able to doe nothing in this caſe? It is a ſtrange kind of inabling, which

which giueth euidence of it ſelfe by no fruit. Well, to the end we may be able to iudge of this point of ſufficiency for good duties, which is a teſtification of Gods enabling, let vs vnderſtand that as the faculties of the ſoule and body are diuers, ſo this alſo ſheweth it ſelfe in ſundrie particulars.

Touching the ſufficiency for good ſeruices which God giues.

The firſt degree and branch of that ſufficiency, which ſtreameth out of that power for this dutie which God imparts, is ſufficiency in regard of knowledge. For (as I ſhewed the laſt day) if the Law of God bee not in the inward ſtore-houſe, it will be but a barren and an hungrie ſeruice which is outwardly performed. I remember how Dauid coupleth them together: [u] My mouth ſhall ſpeake of wiſedome, and the meditation of mine heart is of knowledge, ſo that God begins this worke in a man by furniſhing him with a competency of holy knowledge. Whereupon Saint Paul intending to perſwade the vſe of theſe holy ſeruices of prayſing of God by Pſalmes, and Hymnes, and ſpirituall Songs; firſt, commends this, that [x] the Word of Chriſt ſhould dwell plenteouſly within. Take this away, in all that a man vndertakes to performe, he is but as a ſounding Braſſe, or as a tinckling Cymball: hee is but as a bankerout ſhop-keeper, which makes a ſhew to the ſtreets ſide, but hath nothing elſe but emptineſſe within. Hence then it followeth, that where ignorance preuailes, where there is no meaſure of heauenly knowledge deriued out of the rich treaſurie of the Scriptures, there is no worke of God begun; there is not ſo much as a preparation to fitneſſe for this act of prayſing God.

u *Pſal.*49.3.

x *Col.*3.16.

The ſecond degree is in the affections. For, after God hath ſeaſoned a mans heart with knowledge, ſo that hee hath matter whereupon to worke, and out of which to raiſe that by which God may haue glorie, then he putteth a kind of life into the affections, ſo that there is a loue to this dutie, a reioycing in it, a making conſcience of it, cheerefulneſſe in performing it, a ſeeking of oportunities and occaſions for it. This Dauid calleth a [y] being quickned in the righteouſneſſe of God: and a little before, [z] a being quickned in Gods way. A mans heart is ſet and bent to a dutie; thereupon he bindes himſelfe to a ſettledneſſe and conſtancy in it.

y *Pſal.*119 40.

z *Verſ.*37.

The third degree is in the outward man, as when one is enabled to imploy his tongue and ſpeech for the diſcouerie and manifeſting of that which his heart hath framed, ſo as others may be edified. Not that euery Chriſtian is made able by God to talke eloquently and largely in matters of Diuinitie, but yet ſo that grace is ſo powred out vpon the lips of all who are the Lords, that they can make their tongues vpon iuſt occaſion, witneſſes of that good, by which through the mercy of God, their hearts are ſeaſoned. Whereupon Salomon deliuereth it for a generall rule without any limitation or exception, that in [a] the very lips of him that hath vnderſtanding, there is wiſedome found, ſo much at the leaſt as [b] to giue a reaſon of the hope which is in him. It is vtterly in vaine to pretend a good heart, when the tongue is able to vtter nothing to declare it. What man of ſo ill ſpeech, but hee can make a ſhift to make his tongue the meſſenger of his thoughts? Nature hath taught vs to vſe our other parts, as Eye, Hand, and Foot, to be ſilent repreſentations of our inward intendments: (as I remember Salomon ſaith, that a [c] naughtie man can make a ſigne with his eyes, can ſignifie with his feet, and inſtruct with his fingers.) It is hardly to be thought that he hath any great meaſure of holineſſe in his heart, that knoweth not how in any meaſure to glorifie God with his tongue. See then whereto wee are now come; where God giues ſtrength to doe our dutie, there cannot chooſe but be ſufficiency. As this hath beene proued, ſo now we ſee what ſufficiency it is. It is threefold: firſt, A ſufficiency in vnderſtanding, to know what pertaynes to ſuch a dutie. Secondly, A ſufficiency in affection, to loue and delight in it, and to be conſtant in performing it. Thirdly, A ſufficiency in ſpeech, to diſpoſe of the tongue, ſo as that others may haue benefit. Now let vs ſet edge vpon all this by application; which application (that I may make my matter cohere together in a comely ſort) ſhalbe according to the vſe of the former Doctrine: firſt, to all Chriſtians generally, then to ſome in ſpeciall. For the application, which reacheth more largely vnto all. Wouldeſt thou know touching thy ſelfe, whether thou art partaker of this grace of God, to be enabled by him to ſuch duties, by which thou mayeſt be an inſtrument of his praiſe? inquire diligently for the effect which doth alwayes follow that enabling; and to that end inſiſt vpon ſome particular good dutie, and trie thy ſelfe therein. Let it be the dutie of prayer and inuocation.

Note.

Here firſt examine thy ſelfe for thy ſufficiency in knowledge: as what vnderſtanding thou haſt of the nature and excellency of prayer, of the Maieſtie of him to whom wee muſt pray, of the Commandement binding to pray, of the Promiſes incouraging to pray, of the Mediator by whom we muſt pray, of ſuch ſinnes of thine as ought to bee lamented when thou prayeſt, of ſuch graces and mercies as are meet to bee deſired, of ſuch kindneſſes for which it becommeth thee to bee thankefull. It is no hard matter to commune with thy ſelfe about theſe particulars: and let mee tell thee this, that if thou haſt ſmall vnderſtanding in theſe things, it is a ſhrewd ſuſpition thou art not yet a partaker of that opening for which Dauid was a ſuiter in this place. If theſe things bee hidden from thee, what ſhew ſoeuer thou makeſt of praying, and of deuotion, ſaying ouer this, and repeating ouer that, it is no acceptable ſeruice vnto God.

Secondly, See what ſufficiency in thy affections, what loue thou beareſt to this dutie, what comfort thou takeſt in thinking vpon the libertie thou haſt to come (when thou wilt) freely into Gods preſence, what conſtancy there is in thee touching it, what care to redeeme times for it: ſuſpect thy ſelfe of inſufficiency, if thou be alwayes dull this way; I ſay, alwayes: for euen the beſt haue at times their ſluggiſh fits. It is a poore teſtimonie of Gods enabling, when a man is ſeldome, ſlight, ſuperficiall in ſuch a dutie as this is.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, Conſider againe what ſufficiency is come into thy tongue. Haſt thou no power to doe thine owne errand, when thou art in priuate betwixt God and thine owne ſoule? put caſe the Booke thou vſeſt be taken from thee, or the vſe of that which thou haſt learned by heart be inhibited, canſt thou not tell what to ſay, or which way to begin, or how in any meaſure to make thy caſe knowne to God? ſurely it is an euill ſigne. My Text is plaine, Let God open the lips, and the mouth ſhall ſhew forth his prayſe. Be vare thou doe not cheriſh thy ſelfe in this kind of inſufficiencie. In thy firſt beginnings to be religious, in thy entrance into profeſſion, many things may be borne with in thee, while thou art yet but a meere learner; and thou which canſt not goe alone, maiſt be allowed to goe by truckles, or as thou art led by anothers hand; and lawfull it may be for thee to ſay after another, who canſt not yet ſpeake out plainely: but take heed of reſting here; let thy ayme be to this, that thou maiſt ſpeake to God out of thine owne feeling, not ſo much what another hath taught thee, as what thine owne ſoule being taught of God hath ſuggeſted to thee. I know there is a preſuming in ſome too farre this way; as in ſuch who before they are well exerciſed, are forward to be the mouth of others in this ſeruice, and ſo they many times eate the fruit of their owne raſhneſſe, and goe away without either comfort from God, or approbation from thoſe who haue ioyned with them: but if a man doe not labour in priuate, to make his tongue the meſſenger to God, of ſuch thoughts as his acquaintance with his owne eſtate hath ſupplyed to him, and rayſed vp in him, I cannot ſee how he can aſſure himſelfe, that he who hath the Key of Dauid, hath opened his mouth to be an inſtrument of his prayſe. There is with many, a kind of ſhrugging at this dutie, as if it were a matter beyond hope to attaine to it. They cry like Salomons ſluggard, There is a Lyon in the way, I ſhall be ſlaine in the ſtreet; and ſo fancie to themſelues a kind of vnvanquiſhable difficultie: but little it is knowne what ſucceſſe would follow vpon triall, and how the vnderſtanding of ſpirituall wants would furniſh with matter for this buſineſſe. What man of the Countrey ſo ignorant and ſo vnlettered, but is able to make his requeſt knowne vnto his Lord of whom he holds his tenements? Shall any man need to teach him what arguments he ſhall vſe to perſwade him by? doth he not know of himſelfe how to moue commiſeration and pittie, and what reaſons to alledge, why he ſhould not be vrged to an higher Fine then himſelfe offereth? The knowledge of the buſineſſe will make him copious and eloquent enough: and ſo labour thou to know thine owne heart; thou ſhalt ſoone be cured of thy pretended inſufficiencie in this caſe. Thus I haue taught thee how to apply this Doctrine: where God makes able, there cannot but bee ſome ſufficiencie. I ſay (ſome,) for I know the whole ſtate of a Chriſtian in this life, is a ſtate of imperfection and ſcantneſſe; yet where God hath a worke, ſome fruit will follow. The Tongue cannot remaine ſtill dumbe which God hath touched; nor the lips can continue mute, if by the hand of God the mouth be opened. I might further ther vrge this to other duties, as admoniſhing, comforting, talking in the companie of others of matters of Religion; none can doe theſe, without God giue power: and where God giues power, there is this three-fold ſufficiencie: firſt, a man hath matter for the dutie: ſecondly, he hath affection to the dutie, and conſcience to performe it: thirdly, he hath the tongue fitted in ſome profitable meaſure, to be an inſtrument for it. This is that ſufficiencie which is of God.

Next, I promiſed to apply this to ſome Chriſtians more particularly, and that is (as before) vnto thoſe that ſerue God in his Church. Looke what ſufficiencie is in a Chriſtian for the duties of Chriſtianitie, the ſame is in a Miniſter inabled and ſent of God for the duties of his miniſtrie. Wouldeſt thou know whether God hath fitted thee ſo for the ſeruice of his Church, as may be for his glorie, for thy owne comfort, and for others benefit: conſider thy ſelfe for this treble, or three-branched ſufficiencie. Haſt thou that, which the Apoſtle calleth [d] Vnderſtanding in the myſterie of Chriſt? Art thou cunning in that which the ſame Apoſtle termes, [e] The patterne of wholeſome words? Knoweſt thou what thoſe things are which may further that godly edifying which is by faith? Art thou [f] a Scribe taught vnto the Kingdome of Heauen, who is like a prouident Houſholder that bringeth forth of his Treaſure things both new and old? Thou art in a good forwardneſſe for the ſeruice. Well then ſee next, Haſt thou a readie mind to feed the flocke, which eyther doth now, or by Gods prouidence ſhall depend vpon thee? Haſt thou a [h] good will to deale vnto the people the Goſpel of God? Is it a ioy to thee to doe the worke of the Lord, and doſt thou bind thy ſelfe conſcionably and conſtant to performe it, reſoluing like the Apoſtle vpon a good courſe, (This I will doe, if God [i] permit?) No paynes ſhall ſeeme too much to thee, ſo that thou [k] maiſt fulfill thy courſe, and the miniſtration which thou haſt receyued of God to teſtifie his Goſpel. This is a degree further. Inquire yet for a third thing. I named it ere-while vpon another occaſion; PAVL calleth it A [l] Doore of vtterance; that is, a mouth able to ſpeake and to expreſſe with ſome grace, and ſo as may be for the common edifying, that which he hath conceyued in his heart. The Prophet therefore ſaid well, That [m] the lips of the Prieſt muſt preſerue knowledge. He muſt not haue knowledge onely in his head, but it is fit he haue it in his mouth & his tongue alſo; and the Prophet giueth a good reaſon for it, (He is the Meſſenger of the Lord of Hoſts:) he is an Ambaſſadour from God to men. Is it not requiſite an Ambaſſadour ſhould be a man able to deliuer handſomely and in good ſort, that meſſage wherewith hee is intruſted? And this is that which is eſpecially intended in that [n] aptneſſe to teach; a gift of ſpeaking that which is in ones heart, ſo as that others may be inſtructed by it. This, as being a matter of very great neceſſitie, PAVL ſhewed himſelfe to affect much in that ſpeech: [o] I ſpeake languages more then yee all: yet I had rather in the Church to ſpeake fiue words with mine vnderſtanding, that I might alſo inſtruct others, then ten thouſand words in a ſtrange Tongue. It was a gift for which he greatly deſired, fired, that he might be able in publique to discourse, and to treat of heauenly things, so as thereby the hearers might bee taught, their soules might receiue furtherance in knowledge, and in grace by his paines. Where there is a concurrence of these three, there can be no doubt of Gods inabling; and how a man may aduenture or promise to himselfe that he is sent of God, being deficient in all, or any of these, for my owne part, I am yet to learne. Sure I am, there cannot be an instance of any one in all the Scripture, of whom it is apparant that God sent him, but the same was an vnderstanding conscionable Speaker; he had knowledge what to teach, he had conscience to teach, he had a tongue and speech fit to teach. Suppose a man haue a good competencie of knowledge in diuinitie, yet if withall he lacke eyther an honest disposition to imploy his knowledge, or else haue no gift of vtterance to conuey that knowledge from himselfe to others, to what end is his knowledge respectiuely to his calling? Be it againe, that a man haue some good honest affections, haply he is willing to doe good, and he hath also some commendable complement of voyce, and is of good speech; yet if he haue not vnderstanding and knowledge, so as to edifie the people in the right, and skill to deuide the Word as it ought to be deuided, that euerie one may in season haue his portion, what good shall the people get, eyther by his honest mind, or by his plausible deliuerie? so that to this necessarily wee must come; that sufficiencie, which must be a Seale and Pledge to thy soule, of thy deputation by God to the worke of the ministrie, must be in each of these three degrees, inasmuch as it cannot be reasonably thought, that God would imploy any, who in any one of these should be found vtterly defectiue: for how should we beleeue that God should allow of him as his Agent, hauing such a maime as by which he cannot otherwise chuse but be vnprofitable? Thus I haue laboured to apply this Doctrine the best I could? DAVIDS so confident speaking (Doe thou open my lips, O Lord, and my mouth shall shew forth thy praise,) doth absolutely confirme the generall ground, that Gods enabling to a businesse, breeds a sufficiencie to discharge it. This I haue made vse of, both generally for all that professe themselues to be the Lords, how they may iudge themselues whether the Spirit of God be working in them; and particularly for vs that are Ministers, how we may be assured that we are called by him to the seruice of his Church. Wee haue seene what manner of sufficiencie that is which may testifie the truth of Christianitie; and with that which may be a testimonie from heauen, of a mans being deputed by God to the worke of the ministrie. And this is that first thing which I said was to be obserued from this clause.

The second, is touching the nature of this seruice of praising God. Where the Doctrine is thus,

The third Doctrine.

That the praysing of God is no easie seruice. This I conclude and gather out of the word, (shew forth:) which apparantly declares, that to the praysing of God well, there is much required. This shewing forth betokeneth a laying out of a matter in some effectuall sort, so as thereby the same sinne may be so presented vnto others view, as that they may be affected with it, and be moued and prouoked to admire it. Whereupon it necessarily followeth, that to prayse God, is a worke of some difficultie: a man must therein be as it were a blazer of that worth and excellencie which is in God, and must be able to set out the particulars of it in some such manner, as that the same may worke vpon the thoughts of those that shall behold it. A man had need to haue much knowledge of God, much vnderstanding of him according to the Scripture, much experience of his mercie and goodnesse in his own particular, before he can performe this dutie as he ought. I will make it knowne to the world, saith Dauid, what admirable riches of vnconceiueable excellencie is in thee; men shall be occasioned through me, to vnderstand more touching thee then they are aware of. This is to shew forth Gods prayse, to read a kind of Lecture (as it were) of such things as deserue admiration in God, and may be motiues to others, eyther to reuerence him, or to loue him, or to stand in awe of him, or to depend vpon him so much the more. Like as when a man, who hath trauelled into forraine parts, is able to make report of the commodities and pleasures of seuerall places, what the fashions of the people, and the state and magnificence of their Gouernours, in such sort as may affect them that heare it. Hereupon is it that Dauid ordinarily in the Psalmes, (especially to giue some instance, in Psal. 109. 116. 107.) prouoking and stirring vp others to prayse God, is verie exact in the recapitulation of diuers of Gods great workes, some of iustice, some of mercie, all of power; and all to make this good, that such kind of matter euery man must necessarily be furnished with, that hath a meaning so to prayse God as he ought. I may note you that especially in one Psalme, [p] Prayse the Lord; there is his beginning: Well, how is that? Declare his workes, talke of his wondrous workes: Remember his marueilous workes that he hath done, his wonders, &c. So that there is no right praysing God, vnlesse a man be well read (as it were) in those workes of God, wherein he hath beene pleased to declare himselfe: so, [q] I will prayse the Lord with my whole heart, (there is his purpose:) presently he falls into the consideration of his workes, [r] The workes of the Lord are great, and ought to be sought out of all them that loue him: His workes are beautifull and glorious, &c. All this still sheweth, that there is much belonging to the well and due performing of this dutie: a man can neuer doe it well, without a great deale of obseruation, and without an indeuour to vnderstand distinctly and in order, the things reported touching God, that so he may passe from poynt to poynt, and shew what be the things in him which are worthie admiration, and are euidences of his infinite goodnesse, wisdome, maiestie, and such like. Thus this may suffice in briefe to lay open this poynt.

r Vers. 2.

The Vse. To keepe vs from deceyuing our selues, when wee shall at any time heare our selues vrged and pressed to this dutie of praysing God. Wee will be readie by and by to thinke that we doe it accordingly, because we doe haply now and then throw out a few customarie words, Praysed be God,

God, or God is a good God. This we thinke is as good a praysing God as we are bound vnto: and we pleaſe our ſelues in ſuch ſuperficiall and curſorie performances, as if we had done what became vs to the full. Remember we now, that there is more then ſo belongs to this dutie. To praiſe God, is to ſhew forth his praiſe: that is, to vnderſtand well what be the ſpecialties in God deſeruing prayſe, and ſo to be able to inſiſt vpon them (occaſion being ſo giuen) in particular: when thou haſt ſtore within thy heart of ſuch obſeruations, then ſhalt thou bee able to doe this ſeruice of praysing of God. So long as men are ignorant touching the things recorded in Scripture concerning God, and careleſſe to take notice of ſuch particulars, wherein euery day God is pleaſed to manifeſt himſelfe, they can neuer be fit inſtruments of his prayſe. Let me conclude with that of DAVID, [f] O my God, I will extoll thee, and will bleſſe thy name for euer and euer: I will bleſſe thee daily, and prayſe thy name for euer and euer. Note what followeth, [t] I will meditate of the beautie of thy glorious Maieſtie, and thy wonderfull workes. He will firſt ſeeke to digeſt the matter thereof by meditation in his heart, and then hee will fall to the actuall performance. That man that meanes to prayſe God, muſt be (as I may ſay) well acquainted with God. Till hee conceiues ſomewhat to the purpoſe of the worth and excellencie of God, he is vterly vnfit for this ſeruice. In reaſon it muſt needs be ſo; Thou ſayeſt thou wilt prayſe God: I will aske thee why? Perhaps thou ſayeſt, Becauſe he is good. If I demaund againe Wherein, or how, or in what particulars? thou art at a ſtand: muſt not thy praying of God now, be a verie poore and barren act?

The ſixe and twentieth Lecture.

VERS. 16. 17.

For thou deſireſt no Sacrifice, though I would giue it: Thou delighteſt not in burnt Offering.

The Sacrifices of God are a contrite ſpirit: A contrite and a broken heart, O God, thou wilt not deſpiſe.

THe Prophet being (as wee haue heard) reſolued by the exerciſe of praysing God, to declare his thankefulneſſe, doth now in theſe two Verſes ſhew what that is, which in the performance of ſeruices vnto him, God eſpecially reſpects. This matter he doth diſcharge two wayes: firſt, negatiuely, declaring what kind of ſeruice it is which the Lord doth not care for: ſecondly poſitiuely, naming that which he doth chiefly and aboue all others moſt accept. The former of thoſe is brought in, by way of a reaſon son alledged, why DAVID vowed no other seruice to God then that of Praise: as if he had said, The cause, O Lord, why I promise thee no other seruice then this of shewing forth thy praise, is, that I know well how little thou desirest Sacrifice, and how small content thou takest in burnt offerings: And shall I tender that vnto thee, wherein thou hast no delight? Thus is the connexion.

Now for the words themselues, there is none among them all of any difficultie: for who is there but conceiues this sense vpon the first hearing, namely, That neyther Sacrifices nor burnt offerings are pleasing vnto God? yet albeit it is not hard to know what is meant by the words, touching the truth of that which is meant, there may iustly be some question: For how can it be truely said, that God careth neyther for Sacrifices nor for burnt Offerings, when as whoso knoweth any thing in the Scripture, can tell, that both the one and the other was Gods ordinance? How had Abel in the beginning of times, offered a Sacrifice by Faith, as is testified by the [a] Apostle, if God had not commanded such a seruice? It is not done in faith, which is not done in obedience to a precept: and how may we thinke that vpon Noahs offering burnt offerings vpon the Altar which he built, presently vpon his comming out of the Arke, the Lord could haue [b] smelled a sauour of rest, if such a course had not beene pleasing to him, as being of his owne prescribing? The Leuiticall Law is full of iniunctions touching these particulars; I need not say much herein: euen hee who saith here to God, Thou desirest no Sacrifice, thou delightest not in burnt Offering, mentioneth in the 19. Verse, Gods acceptance of the verie same, and speakes of the offring of Calues vpon the Altars. How then is this to be taken, That God desires no Sacrifice, delighteth in no burnt Offering? It is easily answered, viz. that the speech is not to be vnderstood simply and absolutely, but respectiuely; as thus, God cares not so much for Sacrifice, as he doth for Prayses and Thanks-giuings presented to him with a broken heart. And thus is the speech like that, [c] I desired Mercie, and not Sacrifice, said God; that is, mercie was more pleasing to mee then Sacrifice: or, I esteeme not Sacrifice where Mercie wants. Such a speech is that, [d] Rent your hearts, and not your garments, that is, your hearts rather then your garments: for the renting of the garments for the testification of inward humiliation, was not vniuersally disliked: or else it may thus be taken; God reckoneth not of Sacrifices being performed, as customarily they were among the Iewes, who rested in the deed done, as if they might please God with naked complements, and ioyned no repentance, nor reformation of life with their outward semblances of deuotion. For which cause God said, [e] They brought Oblations in vaine, their Incense was an abomination to him, his soule hated their seruices, they were a burthen to him: [f] Killing of Bullocks was to him as manslaughter: Sacrificing of Sheepe, as the cutting off a Dogges necke. Thus then vnderstand wee DAVID, I know, O Lord, Sacrifices of Beasts, and burnt Offerings of Rammes and Bullocks, bee not the maine seruices thou delightest in: Thou art a Spirit, and canst not not bee pleased with base bodily performances: thou carest not for any matter of outward forme, when the heart within is not rightly disposed as it ought to bee. Thus, hope I, wee are fully satisfied touching Davids meaning in these words. Proceede wee next to matter of Doctrine: For I will not thriue to make any diuision of so intire a sentence. I will orderly, according to my plaine manner, acquaint you with such obseruations as God shall inable me to collect. This first,

That it is possible for a man to doe that very thing which God commands, and yet therein not to please God. Sacrifices and burnt offerings, things expressely in their time required by God; yet this speech of Dauid plainely sheweth, that they may bee so vsed, as that the Lord therein shall take no delight. In the dayes of sacrifice a man might present himselfe before God, with such a particular sacrifice as Gods owne mouth commanded, & yet therein not to be welcome vnto God. CAIN brought an oblation to the Lord, such as for the kinde thereof was instituted by God; yet to CAIN'S and to his offering had God no regard, saith the Text. The old Israelites in the Wildernesse were all baptized vnder Moses in the Cloud and in the Sea, did all eate the same spirituall meate, did all drinke the same spirituall drinke: these were things of Gods ordayning euery one of them, and yet saith PAVL, [h] With many of them God was not pleased. Prayer, a duty prescribed, and such to which God hath promised a speciall blessing; yet hee told some, that when they made prayers [i] hee would not heare them. Comming to heare, is an act so inioyned by God, that without it ordinarily there can bee no man saued; yet was not the Prophet charged to cry aloud against some that did seeke the Lord daily in the [k] meanes? Making an open profession of Religion, is that which by the Law of God wee are all bound to; yet may a man say, Lord, Lord, who shall neuer come into the Kingdome of [l] heauen. Giuing of almes, hath not God commanded it? and yet it is possible for a man to diuide his goods into portions, and to giue them out by parcels to the poore, and yet [m] be nothing. There is a Law for euery Minister to preach the Word, and to be instant in season, and out of season; yet shall some come at the last day, and say to Christ, Lord, haue we not prophecied in thy Name? who for all that shall bee dismissed with an heauy doome, [n] Depart from me, I doe not know you. IEHV was a diligent executer of Gods particular charges, touching the house of Ahab, and did therein according to all that was in the Lords [o] Heart; yet we know, Iehu was not a man good before God. Herod heard preaching gladly; a good seruice in it selfe: yet Herod a man in whom God tooke small delight. The reason for this is plaine. God regardeth the manner of an action, as well as the substance. How it is done, is more looked after by God, then what is done. If it be not done in knowledge, in conscience of obedience, in sincerity of heart to please God, the deede which is good in it selfe, (as being the matter of some one of Gods Commandements) loseth the grace in him that doth it, and is so far from being pleasing to God, that he doth abhor it, and will punish it. I must be briefe briefe in this Doctrine, because of the affinitie betwixt it and that which I shall next deliuer. This may suffice to make it plaine. God commanded Sacrifice, prescribed burnt offerings, and yet there might bee some respects, for which God could not away with Sacrifice, could not but lothe an offering. God is pleased with nothing, but only that which himselfe requires; and yet the matter may be so handled, as that he may take no delight in his owne requirings.

The Vse. The vse is properly this, to teach vs that it is not inough to make a man religious, that he performe commendable actions. The thing thou dost, may be simply and in it owne nature good, and yet thou naught in Gods account that dost it. Sacrifice may bee good, and yet thou that sacrificest, not delighted in. I doubt not but at the least as many shall be condemned at the last day, for the ill doing of good actions, as for the doing of the things which are directly naught. As many iudged for ill hearing, as for not hearing; for bad praying, as for not praying: for vnworthy communicating, as for not communicating: for vnconscionable preaching, as for seldome: for not giuing aright, as for absolute shutting vp their bowels towards those that want: for insincere professing Religion, as for being quite of no Religion. It is no sufficient plea for thy selfe to alledge; These and these things I doe, and they bee euery one such as God commands, if thou leauest out the manner of doing; this is an vndoing to thy doing. Thy seruice must be Well, as well as Good, or else in thee it is not Good. What if thou dost a good duty out of a glory, or in an opinion of merit, or being carryed with the streame of the times, or led by example, or otherwise induced by some by-respect; shall this be acceptable? It is possible thou maist make hard thy knees in priuate deuotions, waste away thy spirits by fasting, wither thy face with weeping, tyre out thy body with continuall trauaile to be a hearer, weare out the Threshold of Gods house by frequent repayring to it, consume away thy estate by large giuing, spend thy Lungs, and breake thy Sides by often preaching, and by these things get thy selfe a name among men, and yet the Lord say, I haue no delight in thee. Tophet was prepared of old for many that haue gone thus far. I doe not speake to disswade from those, no more then Christ spake against tithing of Mint and Cummine: when hee reprooued the Pharises concerning that, he said withall, ᵖ These things ought yee to haue done. So I wish these particulars were more ordinarie.

Note. But yet here is not all. The principall is yet behinde. Neither I say is this to be so vnderstood, as if there were no hope of the acceptance of our seruices with God, vnlesse we be absolute in the manner of performing them. God forbid any should so conclude. Better to heare in weakenesse, then not to heare: to pray with infirmitie, then not to pray; to communicate with some defect, then vtterly to forbeare; to giue almes with some tainture of a secret imperfection, then altogether to dry vp the Fountaine of liberality; to preach with some mayme, then altogether to hold ones peace. Better to limpe and creepe in the right way, then not to moone at all. It shall be well if we learne to make conscience of the manner, though wee cannot reach to the abſoluteneſſe and compleatneſſe thereof. God will not caſt vs off. Hezekiah was not out of hope of thoſe that came to the Paſſeouer, q though not euery way clenſed according to the purification of the Sanctuary. If we forbeare good ſeruices vntill wee can performe them, ſo as there ſhall bee no defect in our carriage, we ſhall neuer doe them: ſo that here is the right vſe of this point, to teach vs that the goodneſſe of the action in hand, is not inough for vs. We muſt ſeeke for ſomewhat elſe. It may be a ſinne in thee that which in it ſelfe is good, ſome fault of thine may make God euen to lothe his owne Ordinances. Now what that is, which is as it were ſalt that muſt ſeaſon all thy ſeruices, ſhall be ſhewed in the next Verſe. In the meane time, this farre thou art prepared, to know that a dutie preſcribed by God, may yet be ſo done, as that his ſoule ſhall take no pleaſure therein. Good to be remembred euer, when wee ſet hand to any holy ſeruice. In ſome caſe God abhorres euen his owne appointments. Sacrifice becomes an abomination to him, burnt offring is lothſome. Hee deſires not the one, he delights not in the other. Thus is the firſt Doctrine. The next is like vnto this, but yet requires a diſtinct handling. It is thus.

q 2. Chron. 30.

The ſecond Doctrine.

That God requires no ſuch ſeruice in Religion, as hath no more in it then an outward forme. O Lord, ſaith DAVID, it is not bare Sacrifice which thou deſireſt, burnt offrings thou delighteſt not in, when nothing doth accompanie it; theſe naked acts cannot be good in thy ſight. Theſe bee but the ſhels and ſhadowes of piety: the accoutrements, and appendances to Religion, ſomewhat elſe is expected by thee, or elſe all this complement how full of ſhew ſoeuer it be, is but an abomination to thee. Thus is this Doctrine raiſed hence, euen from the reaſon for which Dauid denieth God to deſire Sacrifices, hauing reference to the formalities of ſome, who though that if they preſented the Lord with ſuch oblations and offrings, as were according to the preſcript and letter of the Law, it was ſufficient. Full to this purpoſe is that, r Is this the faſt that I haue choſen, that a man ſhould afflict his ſoule for a day, and bowe downe his head as a Bulruſh, and lie downe in ſack-cloth and aſhes? wilt thou call this a faſting, or an acceptable day to the Lord? as if he had ſaid; This is not the thing which I am pleaſed with, that a man ſhould doe no more then vpon ſome certaine day puniſh his carcaſſe by the withdrawing of his meate; or hang downe his head in ſome deiected manner, like ſome bulruſh that is ouerbent with the ſtrength and violence of a ſtorme, and lie downe and tumble and wallow in the duſt. This is all that is in your faſt: neuer did I chooſe any ſuch. This is but a meere forme; I am not wont to preſcribe ſuch frothy ſeruices. This directly confirmes this Doctrine, and ſhewes that theſe faſhions in Religion, which haue nothing in them but ſhew, are none of Gods ordayning. His ayme in all his requirings is at ſome further matter. To the further manifeſtation of this point, we may take notice of that ſpeech of Gods; * I ſpake not to your Fathers, nor commanded them, &c. concerning burnt offrings offrings and Sacrifices. What shall wee say? did not God giue order touching Sacrifices? was it not his will there should bee offrings? yes certainely: what is it then that God saith, hee spake not nor commanded concerning burnt offrings, &c. surely this, that he neuer prescribed any such manner of Religion, which should haue no more in it then such outward complements: there was another more speciall matter intended by him aboue all Sacrifices. He neuer gaue any cause to make men thinke that he would be pleased and satisfied with outward shewes. In the Prophet Haggai there is a place of note for this [t] purpose. Vnderstand we it thus, The people of the Iewes after their returne from the captiuitie, were very backeward in the reedifying of the Temple, and euery man was more busie about his owne dwelling house, then about the place where Gods Name should bee called vpon. This fault that Prophet was very sharpe against: well, when at the last by his importunitie they had reformed this, and had brought matters to some good outward fashion, because they were apt to content themselues with shewes, and to thinke there was no more to bee done, now they had restored the ancient outward beauty of the Temple, and had reestablished the old course of Sacrifices, and such like then in vse: The Lord willeth them to consider of a case which he would put vnto them, and for their better resolution to aske their Priests. It was this; whether if a man should take a piece of holy flesh (suppose it were a piece of a Sacrifice) in the lap of his coate, the touch thereof was able to make him holy? and againe, whether if a man polluted after the manner of the legall pollutions, should chance to touch any of those holy things which were vsed at the Altar, the same should not thereby become defiled? and wherefore was all this, but to teach that the holinesse of the Temple, and of the things belonging to it, could not doe them any good which repayred to it, and worshipped in it, if that were all they did? and they were such as liued still in their wonted sinnes: nay, their sinnes in which they liued vnreformed, should be able to make all that which they did, or wherewith they had to doe, be abominable. An excellent place to make it to appeare, that God lookes for more at our hands, then a kinde of outward holinesse. Thinkest thou, saith God, that I will eate Bulls flesh, or drinke the bloud of Goats? It was spoken of those who thought they had done enough by outward ceremonies. [u] Bodily exercise profiteth nothing, saith the Apostle, touching naked vsages: and [x] the Kingdome of heauen is not meate and drinke, &c. Religion doth require somewhat more then bare formalities. It is our Sauiours Maxime, [y] God is a Spirit, and must bee worshipped in spirit: that worship which must please him, must be sutable to his owne nature. He is a spirit, and therefore it is a thing vnpossible that he should be pleased with carnall rites. I wish euery carefull reader of the Scripture, to obserue it in the perusing of the Prophets especially: euer he shall find how the Lord fell roundly vpon them, that had a conceit of pleasing him with pompe; and how there is still an vrging of men to some further du-

tie then their outward deuotion. If God might haue beene thus pleased, the Hypocrites of old would haue fitted him exceedingly well. They abounded aboue others this way: they would not onely reach as farre in bodily performances as the Law commanded; but they would adde ouer and aboue out of their owne voluntary. Hence came the improuements of washings, and the like Ceremonies, which our Sauiour met with in his time, and which went vnder the name of the traditions of the Elders. They would supererrogate, and doe more then the Law bound them to. In this particular of outward forme, superstition hath still had the aduantage of true Religion: and as Strumpets ordinarily are more garishly set forth then modest women, so false Religion hath alwayes beene found more outwardly glorious then the true. There was one Celsus a great aduersary to Christian Religion in the dayes of the learned Origen, and among other his exceptions, with which hee fought the disgrace thereof, this was one, the meane shew which their manner of worshipping God did make: They were much behinde the Heathen in the beautie of their Temples, in the array of their Priests: for gesture and significant representations in their deuotions, betwixt the one and the other, there was no comparison. Thus he thought to put downe and disgrace those that professed Christianitie: and indeede therein the Heathen might well contest with the Christians, as outstripping them much in these things. The reformed Religion at this day cannot herein compare with Poperie. If the triall of the title of truth betwixt the one and the other lay in that point, surely Poperie would haue the day: so that this may seeme as a further proofe of this Doctrine, namely, that forme in seruing God, superstition goeth beyond true Religion, and hypocrisie puts downe sinceritie; so that it must needs bee, that God requires more then it in matters betwixt man and him.

The Vse.

This is a needfull point to bee taught: in asmuch as generally we doe no more then make cleane the outside of the dish, in which wee present our seruice vnto God: we partake too much with that Popish conceit of pleasing God with the deede done, as though God might be satisfied and serued with bare acts. A Sacrifice or a burnt offring cannot bee welcome vnto God, when it commeth before him single. Be it that one come often and early to the House of God, and there obserue the full forme of euery publike dutie then performed, kneele to prayer, attend in good deuout and respectiue manner to the reading and opening of the Word; stretch out his voyce to the singing of a Psalme, present himselfe to the Lords board in some such fashion, as the eye of no beholder can iustly blame him; here is not all that God expects. This is but the shaddow of that worship which he commands; nay, though euery of these specialties be such as he lookes for and requires. yet when there is a resting in these, they lose their grace, yea they become hatefull to him, yea and because they are done, he will punish for them much more, then for professt prophaneneese. The life of all yet wants, and that is the labour of the heart, while we are busied in the outward seruices, and the reformation of the life after we haue ended them. That which God said to those in Esay in the case of outward abstinence, the same will hee say to vs in the case of hearing, praying, singing, communicating: Is this the hearing that I haue chosen, that a man should tie himselfe to attendance for an houre, and looke earnestly in the face of a Preacher? is this all that I expect? Is this the praying that I delight in, that a man should cast himselfe on his knees, and lift vp his eyes and hands, and say ouer many words? Or is this the singing which I am pleased with, that a man should enforce his voyce to the common tune? or the communicating which I accept, that one should in an outward humble fashion receiue the Bread and Wine which is offered to him by the hand of the Minister? Can I bee pleased with such lame and vnperfect Sacrifices? Bee wee sure that God expects besides this some further thing: and looke wee to it, that wee can betwixt God and our owne soules, shew (in the witnesse of a good Conscience) some other matter which we haue made to accompanie those seruices, or else (that I may vse the words of Moses,) I call heauen and earth to record this day, that you shall surely perish. God will not be dallyed with, this outward varnish cannot bleare his his eyes; and by how much the more formall we haue beene in our outward deportment, by so much the heauier shall our iudgement be in the day of account. I cannot but obserue it in the Sermons of the Prophets, how disdainefully the Spirit of God speaketh, taking it (as it were) in a kind of scorne, that it should bee thought, that the Lord would so much as cast an eye of respect vpon such lame deuotions, vpon such scraps and parings of Religion; as especially [z] that before noted, Is this the fasting that I haue chosen &c. Thinke you that I can beare it, to bee shifted off in such an emptie fashion as this is; what, with a little sowre looking for a day; when as euery one returnes backe to his race, as the horse rusheth to the battell; and so, will you dare to offer to me such an hearing of my Word, which hath nothing in it, but a sitting in a seate for an houre, euery man in the ende breaking loose, and falling backe to his wont, as if there were no further matter to be looked to. Is this the course which I haue chosen, who required it at your hands to tread in my Courts vpon no other termes? I intreate your serious thinking vpon this. God looks for more, then the outward act performed. The very Soule of the Lord abhorres vs, if we goe no further. Looke to it that we doe goe further. Beware we be not like the Bulrush, to which the Prophet doth compare such Formalists, which how soeuer it bee easily bended with a storme, yet a faire day or two maketh it to stand vpright againe as it did before: so take heede, least when wee haue seemed to bee somewhat affected and inclined towards some good by the power of the Word, yet when we be gone, and haue taken the fresh ayre of the world, wee become as wee were: surely this rushie Religion (as I may terme it in allusion to that place of Esay) will but help to make more fuell for those eternal flames which are prepared for the vngodly. Fitly doth the holy Ghost compare this formality to the bulrush:

z Is. 58. 5.

bulruſh: the colour is freſh, the skin ſmooth, hee is very exact that can find a knot in a ruſh, but if you ſhall pill it, what is vnder it but a kind of ſpongious, vnſubſtantiall ſubſtance, of no vſe in the world worth the ſpeaking of; and ſuch are they who goe no further then a ſhew of godlineſſe: looke vpon them in the houſe of God; who more demure? ſurely, not ſhee whom Salomon ſpeaks of, [a] Who wipeth her mouth and ſaith, I haue committed no iniquitie; all the reſt not worth a ruſh, flat nothing, nay, worſe then nothing, [b] full of hypocriſie and all iniquitie. All this is ſpoken not to taxe all men of good ſhewes for hypocriſie, for, God forbid, that this liuing ſtreame of the Word which floweth from the Sanctuarie, ſhould breed nought elſe but bulruſhes; but it is to warne all that ſeeme good, not to reſt in ſeeming, but to ſtriue for being, and not to grow vp as [c] ruſhes which grow beſt in the myre; but as the [d] Tree which doth neuer ceaſe from bearing [e] fruit, but euen in [f] age is fat and flouriſhing. Thus haue wee two Doctrines hitherto out of this Verſe. Firſt, A man may doe that which God commands, and yet therein not pleaſe God. Secondly, God requires more in the matter of his worſhip, then an outward forme.

The third Doctrine.

The third Doctrine is thus: That an outward dutie pertayning to the worſhip of God, may ſometime bee omitted without ſinne. In the firſt wee ſaw, that a man may euen offend in doing that which is required: now here we are taught, that vpon occaſion, that may be left out which is required, and yet no fault. As for example; Sacrifice and burnt offering being ſuch things as were commanded, yet Dauid makes no doubt but the caſe may ſo bee in which hee may forbeare them. Thus there was a lawfulneſſe to omit the Sacrament of Circumciſion in the Church of Iſrael for fortie yeeres together, notwithſtanding the expreſſe Commandement, [g] Euery male child amongſt you ſhall be circumciſed: and yet it is manifeſt, that during the trauaile of the Iſraelites thorow the Wildernеſſe, it was vtterly [h] diſvſed, and that without ſinne: ſo if a man were in a iourney at the time when the Paſſeouer was adminiſtred, euen by Gods owne permiſſion, he might be diſpenſed [i] with, though the Law went in peremptorie words ([k] all the Congregation of Iſrael ſhall obſerue it.) Thus our Sauiour taught, that albeit the Law of the Sabbath forbad all manner of bodily worke, yet it might bee lawfull to omit that dutie of reſt, for the performance of a neceſſarie ſeruice, for the preſeruation of life, either of Man or [l] Beaſt. Thus Elias went fortie dayes together vpon occaſion of Iezabels ſeeking his life; within the compaſſe of which time there were diuers Sabbaths, and yet was [m] blameleſſe: and when Chriſt foretold the deſtruction of Ieruſalem, he bade them [n] pray that their flight might not be on the Sabbath day, becauſe it could not but grieue them that made conſcience of pleaſing God, to bee forced to forbeare thoſe ſeruices on that day which God required: yet he denyed not to them that freedome, that if it ſhould ſo fall out, they might euen then by flight endeuour to eſcape. It is a generall rule which Chriſt made vſe of to this purpoſe: I will haue mercy, ſaith God, and not ſacrifice, out of o Chap.6.6. o Hoſea: namely, that when the queſtion lyeth betwixt a dutie of mercy, and a ſeruice pertayning to Gods outward worſhip, the latter muſt bee laid by, that the former may be followed. Was not our Sauiours courſe iuſtifiable, in not making haſte to goe vp to Ieruſalem to the feaſt, notwithſtanding there was a Law for an p holy conuocation to be on the firſt day thereof; notwithſtanding he was vrged by his Kinsfolke to goe vp, yet he abode ſtill in Galile, and came not vp till halfe the feaſt was ended, as may be gathered out of Verſ. 14. he had a ſpeciall reaſon of forbearance, though then it became him (according to his owne words) to q fulfill all righteouſneſſe. Theſe few proofes make it to be plaine, that as Dauid might vpon a ſpeciall occaſion, omit the required ſeruice of Sacrifice and burnt offrings; ſo it may be lawfull to let paſſe ſome outward duties of Religion commanded by God in ſome certaine caſes.

q Matth.3.15.

The Vſe. This is not ſpoken to embolden to any willing breach of any of Gods Ordinances, or to make it a matter arbitrarie, whether we will doe ſuch religious outward acts, as God preſcribes in his ſeruice. He that ſhould teach men ſo, ſhall be called the leaſt in the Kingdome of Heauen; but this is to ſettle and informe mens conſciences in ſome neceſſary particulars, wherein many times through ignorance and miſunderſtanding, they are much enſnared: as for exampie, how are many troubled about the dying of an Infant without Baptiſme, as if there were ſcarce any hope left in the mercy of God that it might be ſaued? how are many diſquieted about the hauing or not hauing the Sacramentall Bread and Wine when they bee ſicke? I confeſſe, Baptiſme and the Supper of the Lord are Gods appointments, and ſuch in the willing neglect whereof no man can be ſaued: yet not ſo, but that as Sacrifices and burnt offring, and circumciſion, and the Paſſeouer, (all commandements of God,) might in ſome caſes be omitted without ſinne, (according as I haue ſhewed) ſo theſe alſo may be lacked, as the caſe may be, and yet no tranſgreſſion: nay, there may be a greater fault committed in the eager preſſing for theſe, out of a ſuperſtitious conceit of grace conferred by the outward elements, then can be by omitting them, when with the keeping of Pauls rule concerning comelineſſe and order, they cannot be had: whereupon hath our Church well prouided, both inhibiting the Baptiſme by Women, which was bred by the opinion of abſolute neceſſitie, and in ordering (as appeareth by the booke,) that Miniſters ſhall diligently from time to time, exhort their Pariſhioners to the oft receiuing in the Church the holy Communion: which if they doe, they ſhall haue no cauſe in their ſudden viſitation to bee vnquiet for lacke of the ſame; and withall to inſtruct the ſicke, that if hee doe truely repent him of his ſinnes, and ſtedfaſtly beleeue that Ieſus Chriſt hath ſuffered death vpon the Croſſe for him, &c. he doth eate and drinke the Body and Bloud of our Sauiour profitably to his ſoules health, although he doe not receiue the Sacrament with his mouth. Thus I let you ſee vpon what occaſion ſuch a Doctrine as this is neceſſarie viz. to bee a ſtay to mens conſciences, in ſuch caſes wherin there is not either power or oportunity to performe ſuch outward acts, as God commands to bee vſed in his worſhip. I haue knowne ſome troubled, becauſe they could not kneele in prayer through ſome naturall debilitie, or could not ſing, or the like. The Deuill may ſoone entangle weake conſciences, not rightly informed in this point. Euer this prouided, that notwithſtanding the omiſſion of the outward worſhip, yet wee binde our ſelues perpetually to that which is more inward and ſpirituall; for, that is indiſpenſable. Dauid might vpon occaſion not tender vnto God an outward ſacrifice of ſome Oxe or Sheep, but he might not at any time come before him, without the ſacrifice of a broken heart: a man may omit kneeling in prayer, but not humilitie: though he may bee diſpenſed with, in not ſpeaking with his tongue, yet his heart muſt crie; though hee want a fit voyce to ſing with the Congregation, yet his ſpirit muſt ioyne. Nay, by how much the more a man is ſtraitened in the one, by ſo much the more he muſt ſtriue that he may be ſtrong in the other. The leſſe Dauid was in Sacrifice, the more was he in contrition. When Iohn was driuen from the Brethren, and the ſocietie of the faithfull, by the cruelty of Domitian, that he could not keepe the Lords Day as he wonted with the reſt of the beleeuers, yet [r] hee was raniſhed in ſpirit: hee neglected not the ſpirituall part of the Sabbath-ſeruice, though hee was reſtrained from the outward Epaphroditus the Paſtor of Philippi, though by reaſon of ſickneſſe, he was diſabled to doe his duty of preaching, yet Paul teſtifieth of him, that he [f] longed after them all: his heart was to them, his eare was for them, hee commended them ſtill in his earneſt prayer vnto God. When Ieremie was ſhut vp that he could not goe into the Houſe of the Lord, yet his care to doe good was not reſtrained; hee cauſed Baruch to write ſomewhat from his mouth, and to goe and reade it in the audience of the [t] people: Ieremie knew that albeit hee ſinned not (the caſe being as it was) in forbearing the publike execution of his Miniſtrie, yet if his care to doe the beſt good he could had ſlacked, hereby hee had beene inexcuſeable. Theſe things ſhew, that what is wanting by iuſt and neceſſary occaſion in the outward ſeruice which wee owe to God, muſt be ſupplyed with the inward. If ſickneſſe hinder mee from the Congregation on the Sabbath, yet I muſt indeuour though I be abſent in the fleſh yet to be preſent in ſpirit, and to pant in ſoule after God, and to cry out, [u] Oh, when ſhall I come and appeare before the preſence of God. If in the duties of repentance, my bodily eyes cannot drop downe teares, yet with IEREMIE, [x] my ſoule muſt weepe in ſecret, and my [y] heart muſt melt with IOSIAH. If it fall out ſo that I cannot haue the Water of Baptiſme for my Infant in act, yet I muſt ſtriue by prayer vnto God, that he may haue the matter of Baptiſme, the regeneration of the Spirit. It puts mee in minde of Ambroſe his ſpeech touching Valentinian the Emperour, who died in the way as he was trauailing to be baptized, that he was baptized in purpoſe. That which cannot bee had in act, muſt bee had in deſire. If I cannot communicate with my mouth yet I muſt labour to feede on Chriſt by faith. And thus ſhall the ſeruice bee in Gods acceptance full, though for matter of outward performance there bee a maime. If Dauid sacrifice not Bulls nor Goates, yet offring vp the Sacrifice of a broken heart, the seruice is compleat. I hope wee now see the drift and Vse of this Doctrine; not to warrant the willling omission of any required dutie, for that cannot be without sinne; but to satisfie the conscience, which doubts how God may be answered, if any of his outward worship fall out to bee omitted. Wee see Dauid might for the declaration of his dissent in opinion, from those who thought to please God with outward complements, forbeare the exercise of sacrificing; yet would he not faile in the principall. Let vs euer looke to that aboue all: the outward may be sometimes let passe, the inward neuer.

The fourth Doctrine.

There remaineth yet another Doctrine to be collected hence. Thus it is: That in worshipping God, wee must not so much looke what kinde of worship is pleasing to vs, as what it is which the Lord delighteth in.

This is the ground of all Dauids purpose here; that he will performe such seruice vnto God, and no other, as hee doth vnderstand him to delight in. This and this I will not offer; because they be not the things thou desirest: but a contrite and a broken heart thou likest well, and therefore that shall be my offring. I haue here for the proofe of this point recourse againe to that place of Isaiah, Chapter 58. now already made vse of in this Sermon. The principall reason vsed by God against that kinde of fasting which was practiced by that hypocriticall and ceremonious people was this, because it was not [z] such a fast as God had chosen. It was not such as God approued of, that one thing was inough vtterly to disable it. If it cannot be said to be a course chosen of God, to that ende it cannot be termed an acceptable seruice to his Maiestie. In the iudgement of the best Diuines, the maine drift and intendment of the second Commandement is, to forbid all will-worship whatsoeuer, that is, all seruing of God after any other manner then himselfe pleaseth. Then it is an expresse peremptorie rule, a perpetuall Law touching the worship of God: [a] You shall not doe as you doe here this day, euery man as seemeth good in his owne eye. Man is absolutely restrained from the following of his owne conceits. It is not enough for the iustification of an vse in Gods Seruice to say, sure it liketh vs well, to our seeming it is very fit. All the matter is thus, what is good and right before God; They bee things said God of old by the Prophet, [b] which I neuer commanded nor spake, neither did they come into my minde: that was inough to reiect all, euen the most glorious seruices. That course which Saul and the people toke in reseruing the chiefe of the Cattell from the spoyle of the Amalekits, therewith to sacrifice vnto God, was very good and reasonable in their seeming; yet in asmuch as God desired it not, it was condemned to be as bad as [c] Witchcraft and Idolatrie; and Samuells speech in reproouing Saul is worthily to be obserued, as agreeing well to this present purpose: [d] Hath the Lord as great pleasure in burnt offrings and Sacrifices, as when the voyce of the Lord is obeyed? as if he had said; thou and the people, lead by thine example, haue taken your owne course, and pleased your selues; ſelues; you ſhould haue conſidered what the Lord hath pleaſure in; will you tender any ſuch ſeruice vnto God, touching which you are not ſure that hee deſireth it? There can bee no more ſufficient argument to proue this Doctrine then this, that God generally in the Scripture binds in matters that concerne his worſhip to his preſcripts: profeſſing ſtill to diſtaſte all, whatſoeuer is preſented to him as a ſeruice which is not out of his owne appointing. Who required (ſaith he) [c] theſe things at your hands? It is very formall this that you doe, it makes a good ſhew, it is approoueable in your ſuppoſe, and ſeemeth to be a thing fit and conuenient to honour me by: but where is your warrant from me, what euidence haue you that theſe be things that I deſire? [f] He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good, and what he requireth of thee: that is good which God requires; and nothing can pleaſe him, but that which is required by him. Hence was it that Moſes was tyed by God in the framing of the Tabernacle, to keepe himſelfe to [g] the patterne which was ſhewed him. Hee might not adde ſo much as a welt ouer and aboue that which God had ſet downe, neither might he leaue out ſo much as an hemme of that which he receiued in charge. It was in vaine to attempt ought, touching which there was no aſſurance, that it was the Lords delight. Is not this a matter of equitie. I remember here the ſaying of the Prophet, whereby he went about to ſhame thoſe who offered lame and blinde Sacrifices to God [h] Offer it now vnto thy Prince, will he be content with thee or accept thy perſon? as if he had ſaid, wilt thou dare to vſe God worſe then thou doſt thy Lord in outward things? ſo may I ſay in this. Will any man preſent a gift to a great man whoſe fauour he deſires, vnleſſe he conceiue vpon ſome good ground that it is ſuch as hee delights in; and ſhall wee be careleſſe in our carriage towards God, and put vpon him what we will, and not what wee know and are ſure hee appoints? Thus for this.

This checks the common Religion of the times, which is moſtly no other, then as Paul ſtileth it, [i] a meere voluntarie Religion: a kind of ſeruing of God of mens owne ſhaping: as if God were bound to accept from vs, whatſoeuer we thinke fit to preſent him with. The truth is, we doe ſeldome bind our ſelues to enquire in theſe caſes, what God likes of; but as Dauid ſaith of the vnreformed Hypocrite, [k] We thinke God to be like vs: that which we approue, wee imagine hee miſlikes not. If the moſt ſhould bee asked touching the particulars which they ordinarily practiſe in the worſhip of God; What? are you ſure that God likes of this you doe? Doth he deſire thoſe and thoſe things? Is he delighted and pleaſed with ſuch and ſuch performances? alas, they know not; the beſt reaſon they haue to thinke that God likes, is, becauſe they like; which is a poore argument: Gods approuement muſt be the rule of our liking, not our opinion the ſquare of his acceptance. If God needed our ſeruice, it were another matter, it were fit then hee ſhould take what we will beteeme him: as when a Begger commeth to our dore, we thinke it reaſon he ſhould be thankfull for what wee thinke good to giue him, him, what euer it be: but, worſhip from vs to God, is not a matter of almes, or curteſie, but a matter of homage and dutie: and therefore it muſt not be what we will, but what God delighteth in. Thus out of Dauids ground here, This and this I will not tender to thee, for thou deſirest it not: but thus and thus ſhall my offering be; for that I know thou art well pleaſed with. And ſo haue we, the particulars to bee obſerued, out of this firſt part; wherein Dauid declares negatiuely what God cares not for. Foure neceſſarie points appertayning to the worſhip of God wee haue here learned. Firſt, We may doe the thing which God commands, and yet in doing it not pleaſe him. Secondly, God requires more in his ſeruice, then outward complement. Thirdly, Outward duties in his worſhip may ſometimes be omitted, vpon iuſt occaſion. Fourthly, In ſeruing him it muſt chiefly be regarded, what it is which he delights in.

The ſeuen and twentieth Lecture.

VERS. 17.

The ſacrifices of God are a contrite ſpirit: a contrite and a broken heart, O God, thou wilt not deſpiſe.

WHat manner of ſeruice God eſteemeth not, hath beene ſhewed; it followeth now to conſider, what kind of one that is, which is pleaſing to him, and in which he moſt delights. The Doctrine of this place is eaſily gathered: I will ſet it downe, and in opening it will make all cleere which any way ſhall bee thought to appertayne to the well vnderſtanding of this Verſe. Thus then is the point:

The firſt Doctrine. That of all other ſeruices to be preſented vnto God, a broken heart, and a contrite ſpirit, is in his account the principall. This is the very ſumme and ſubſtance of this whole Verſe. The worth of this kind of ſeruice in Gods eſteeme is ſignified here, firſt, by the word [Sacrifices,] a word of the plurall number; intending this much, this one preſent of a broken heart, is of more value and repute with God, then all the other legall ſacrifices, how many or glorious ſoeuer, where this wants. This is no ſingle ſacrifice, (as the moſt of the other outward ſacrifices was no more:) it is a compoſition of ſundrie ſeuerall ſacrifices, a broken heart being made of many vertues.

Secondly, By that addition [of God,] which in the language of the Scripture, is a marke of ſome ſpeciall excellency; as that one place amongſt the reſt may ſhew, [a] Thy righteouſneſſe is like the mighty Mountaynes: in the ordinarie Margent it is noted that the Hebrew is, The Mountaynes of God, with this adioyned, (for whatſoeuer is excellent is thus called:) ſo, this kind of ſpeaking, [the ſacrifices of God,] doth im-

ply the moſt excellent Sacrifices: they are more eſpecially to be termed Gods ſacrifices, then any other whatſoeuer.

Thirdly, The laſt clauſe, Thou wilt not deſpiſe, is to be obſerued alſo, as being ſuch which in Scripture-ſpeaking betokeneth more then is expreſſed; when God is ſaid not to deſpiſe a thing, the contrarie to deſpiſing is included, as that hee doth highly account thereof: according as when we are bid, not to deſpiſe propheeying, the meaning is, that wee ſhould honour it by all meanes. Thus the manner of ſpeaking vſed in this, abundantly teſtifieth thus much, that this which is here called a contrite Spirit, and a broken heart, is of all other ſeruices and ſacrifices vnto God the moſt acceptable.

What a contrite ſpirit is.

Now what this contrite Spirit, this broken Heart is, which is here ſo much commended, it is our next taske to enquire. Touching the words, Heart and Spirit: by the former is not meant that fleſhy part which is in our breſts, which when the ſeuerall parts of the body are in order thought vpon [illegible]alled; but by it is here intended, that which the Scripture ſometimes termes the [b] inner man, ſometimes [c] the hid man of the heart, and that which wee ordinarily call the Soule, with all the powers and faculties appertayning thereunto: and the ſame is meant by Spirit; vnleſſe wee will, for diſtinctions ſake, conceiue thereby the ſtirrings and motions of the inner Man. They be words which I haue had occaſion to ſay ſomewhat of formerly, viz. in the opening of the tenth Verſe; they are here to bee taken euen as there. As for the termes of Broken and Contrite, though they properly and literally betoken as much as diſſolued, and ſtampt, and bruiſed into many ſmall pieces, as when Corne is groune in a Mill, or any harder and ſolide ſubſtance beaten into powder, or the like; yet here they are (as the other words) to be taken in a ſpirituall ſenſe: and being auouched touching the Soule and Spirit, thereby is ſignified, the humiliation and abaſement thereof, by the due apprehenſion of it owne eſtate through ſinne before God. There is naturally a certayne flintineſſe in mans heart, in reſpect whereof is that phraſe of a [d] ſtony heart, a fit terme to note out the ſtiffeneſſe, and ſturdineſſe, and vn-yeeldingneſſe thereof: it ſtands in it ſelfe in no awe of God, it is no more moued by either Gods Iudgements or Mercies, then a ſtocke or ſtone; it is ſecure, ſenſeleſſe, not at all affected with the conſideration of the caſe betwixt God and it. Now, when this naturall diſpoſition of the heart is changed, ſo that it is become more feeling, tender, tractable, ſubmiſſe, awfull towards God, deiected and abaſed in it ſelfe, more full of compunction and ſorrow, then it is termed a broken heart, then it is called a contrite ſpirit. The Scripture hath ſundrie termes to note out this eſtate of the heart: as, [e] troubled, [f] molten, [g] afflicted, [h] anguiſhed, [i] perplexed, [k] wounded, [l] bruiſed, [m] rent, [n] poore, [o] pricked. All theſe words the Scripture hath, to ſhew one and the ſame thing; ſo that now this is that to which wee are come; namely, that there is nothing which a man takes on him to offer vnto God, can pleaſe him better, or bee more acceptable vnto him, then a ſoule ſoule that is truely humbled, and is full of remorſe and ſorrow in it ſelfe, becauſe it is guiltie of vndutifull and ſinfull carriage towards God. This is the ſacrifice of ſacrifices; this alone will God accept; whereas the moſt glorious and pompous ſeruices without this, are euen an abomination vnto him, and ſuch as hee neither will nor can endure. Teſtimonies of Scripture are not wanting to declare the welcomneſſe of this ſeruice vnto God. [p] The Lord is neere vnto them that are of a contrite heart, and will ſaue ſuch as be afflicted in ſpirit: [q] He healeth thoſe that are broken in heart, and bindeth vp their ſores: Thus ſaith hee that is high and excellent, he that inhabiteth the Eternitie, &c. [r] With him alſo that is of a contrite and humble ſpirit, to reuiue the ſpirit of the humble, and to giue life to them that are of a contrite heart: [ſ] To him will I looke, euen to him that is poore, and of a contrite ſpirit, and trembleth at my words: [t] The Spirit of the Lord is vpon me (ſaith Chriſt) and hee hath ſent mee to bind vp the broken hearted: and, [u] Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit. Theſe are manifeſt euidences of the ſpeciall and extraordinarie reſpect which the Lord caſts vpon a broken heart; the ſweeteſt of his fauours, the choiſeſt of his mercies, euen the very riches of his grace belongeth vnto it. It is an excellent ſpeech that of Eſay which I named out of Chap. 57. concerning that, that God promiſeth to dwell with ſuch an heart; [x] Behold, the Heauen of Heauens are not able to contayne him: yet, behold, how the Lord doth, euen as it were abaſe himſelfe, to honour the heart which is abaſed. Well may a poore ſinner ſay, Who am I, Lord? or, what is my heart? that thou, which art the Lord of glorie, ſhouldeſt come within the roofe thereof? but yet, that [y] God who is the comforter of the abiect, thither he will come, and according to that promiſe of Chriſt, [z] there he will dwell. How acceptable to God was the troubled ſpirit of HANNAH, SAMVELS Mother? Is not that an euidence, that God had a reſpect to her ſacrifice, when after her preſenting it to him, ſhee felt that plentie of inward refreſhing, that ſhee was able to ſay, [a] My heart reioyceth in the Lord, my horne is exalted in the Lord, my mouth is enlarged. Did not God looke graciouſly vpon the melting heart of Ioſiah, when he ſent him that comfortable meſſage: Becauſe thy heart did melt, and thou haſt humbled thy ſelfe before the Lord, when thou heardeſt what I ſpake, and haſt rent thy clothes, and haſt wept before me; I haue alſo heard it, ſaid the Lord: [b] Behold, I will gather thee to thy Fathers, and thou ſhalt be put into thy graue in peace: Did he not caſt a fauourable eye vpon the humbled heart of Manaſſes, when hee [c] was entreated of him, and heard his prayer, and brought him againe to his Kingdome in Ieruſalem? How welcome to him was the perplexed ſoule of Dauid, when [d] he heard the voice of his weeping, [e] put his teares into a bottle, looſed his ſacke, [f] and girded him with gladneſſe? Oh, how good in Gods ſight was the remorſefulneſſe of that poore ſoule, that ſometimes notoriouſly ſinfull Woman, which with many teares in her eyes, but with a much more plentifull meaſure of ſorrow in her heart, caſt her ſelfe downe at our Sauiours feet in the Phariſes houſe; what better euidence of an extraordinarie respect could bee shewed her then when Iesus said vnto her, [g] thy sinnes bee forgiuen thee? Those two Parables, the one [h] of the Prodigall sonne, the other [i] of the Publican, are both patternes to vs of that which is here called a broken heart, and of the truth of this Doctrine touching Gods accepting it. The spirit of them both was full of contrition: the Prodigall discouered his, by [k] his comming to himselfe, by his aduised and serious considering, and musing vpon his present miserie; How many hired Seruants at my Fathers house haue bread inough, and I die for hunger? by his resolution to returne to his Father with all submission, by his penitent acknowledgement of his miserie, when he came in to his fathers presence, by his pronouncing sentence against himselfe, as vnworthy the esteeme of a sonne, well for him if he might bee rancked among seruants. Here was a heart euen groune to powder, a man euen worse then nothing in his owne conceiuing, The Publican was not behinde him herein; he stood aloofe, as not meete to approch the place where God was wont to giue speciall euidence of his presence; his eyes were cast downe as one confounded in himselfe; who was he that hee should looke vpon heauen, that had deserued hell? He beate his brest, as a man vexed in soule for his former wayes, and euen angry with his owne heart, that it would not yeeld and stoope so effectually as it should; he cryed out, Oh, I am a sinner, euen a very lump of naughtinesse; O Lord, if thou be not mercifull vnto me, I shall eternally be plundged into the nethermost hell. Thus was their Brokennesse. Now see how pleasing it was, and how accepted. No sooner had the eye of the Father discried his approching sonne, but as one vnable to temper himselfe, in his relenting affection to him, he goeth out to meete him, he falleth on his necke and kisseth him, hee clothes him not ordinarily but honourably, hee feasts him and shewes himselfe euery way to take exceeding comfort in his returne; all to shaddow out the gratious readinesse of our compassionate God, to take into his armes a broken heart; his Bosome is so open to none as to him that is of a contrite spirit. As the Publican equaled the Prodigall in contrition, so his acceptance was proportionable: [l] Hee departed to his house iustified. He could not haue a greater fauour. For as of all things it is the most fearefull, to bee cast as guiltie in Gods high Court, so to be there acquited and discharged of sinne, is the greatest blessing. Thus haue I laboured the full opening of this point; I haue shewed both what a broken heart is, and haue made it to appeare both by expresse and pregnant testimonies of Scripture; and by direct examples, and by proper Parables, first propounded and framed to that very ende, how acceptable and pleasing it is to God aboue all other seruices whatsoeuer. This is the life of all other Sacrifices; all that killing and slaying which was in the Leuiticall Sacrifices, as it was a type of that expiatory Sacrifice of our Sauiours, and of that fullnesse of sorrowes which hee was to vndergoe for our sakes; so by them was also meant that inward breaking of the heart, and that bruising of the spirit, without which whatsoeuer a man presenteth vnto God becomes abominable The

The Vse.

The Vse is properly this. If wee desire to come so before God, as that our comming may be pleasing to him, and he may accept vs; we must labour, that wee may come before him with contrite and broken hearts. God cannot but abhorre and loth vs, if we be not so furnished. [m] Man looketh on the outward appearance, but God beholds the heart: when wee come into his presence the eye of the Lord is especially vpon the heart, and according to it hee measureth all that is tendered to him: and the heart must be disposed according to Dauids description in this place; or else, it is nothing. Oh, that there were an heart in vs, to haue care that wee might haue such hearts. To the end this Vse may bee the more effectuall, I will enlarge it by handling three points. First, Whence this broken heart is to bee expected. Secondly, How it may bee discerned. Thirdly, How it ought to be preserued when its once obtained. In these three points, I will labour somewhat: sith a broken heart is of that extraordinarie worth, it is worthy our learning to vnderstand, First, how we may get it: Secondly, how we may know it: Thirdly, how we may keepe it. Touching the first, there is no hope of hauing it out of nature. In it selfe, and in it owne naturall constitution, there is no worse thing then mans Heart. It is [n] wicked aboue all things: whatsoeuer comes out of it, tendeth vnto mans [o] defilement. There is a kinde of vncircumcision in [p] it, and for the inflexiblenesse of it, I shewed you erewhile out of Ezek. 11. 19. of what a stony qualitie it is; so that neither the heart in its naturall estate, is that broken heart here spoken of, neither can it yeeld out any such good fruit, as the breaking of it selfe. The stony heart hath no more power to make it selfe a fleshie heart, then the Blackmoore hath to change his skinne. A stony heart (saith AVGVSTINE) signifieth a peruerse and stubborne will towards God: of it selfe it can neuer yeeld. Therefore in that place of Ezekiel, God assumeth it to himselfe, as his owne peculiar, to take away the stony heart, and to giue an heart of flesh, and so [q] againe. We haue had formerly out of this Psalme, Vers. 10. how Dauid calleth this working of the heart, to a better condition, then that which is naturall to it, a creating, and seeks it from God, as not else-where, or from any other to bee looked for: and albeit in the same Prophet Ezekiel, wee reade an exhortation vsed to the people, [r] Make you a new heart, and a new spirit; yet that imports no power in man, to renue his owne heart: such kinde of speeches which are frequent in the Scripture doe rather shew, what mans dutie is to doe, then what is his ability to doe, O Lord, saith IEREMIE, [s] I know that the way of man is not in himselfe, neither is it in man to walke, or to direct his steps: so that thus farre we are come, that when we speake of a broken heart, we conceiue not thereby the heart of a man as it is in it selfe, neither doe we imagine any ability therein to alter it selfe; all it can doe, is to encrease its owne hardnesse, and to make it selfe still more and more inflexible. Hee who first made the heart, is the person alone that can mollifie the heart. To him our thoughts must be directed, if we affect that, which is commended here vnto vs, as the most approoued and and welcome sacrifice. But now because (as wee often heare) God works by meanes, therefore we must inquire into the course and instrument by which God breaks the heart, and makes the spirit of a sinner to become contrite. The Scripture speaks of a certayne Hammer, which the Lord vseth in this seruice of milling and breaking the [t] heart. Is not my Word like an hammer that breaketh the stone? If the heart of man bee as stone, behold, here is a Hammer to bruise it into pieces. This was it that made [u] IOSIAS heart to melt. This wrought vpon the hearts of the people, after their returne from captiuitie, and wrung teares from their [x] eyes. This caused the heart of Hezekiah to [y] stoope. This stirred vp a kind of heate and burning in the hearts of the [z] Disciples: a pricking in theirs at Ierusalem, of whom three thousand were conuerted at one [a] Sermon. This is a thing [b] mighty in operation. It hath a certayne [c] power. Doth not the Doctrine of the Law beate like an hammer vpon the heart when it denounceth a curse vpon euery one, that continueth not in euery thing that is written therein; and when it layeth forth sinne in its true kind, and the terrour of the Lord who is a consuming fire in his wrath, and in whose presence no man can stand when hee is angrie? There is matter enough to make the stoutest heart to shake, and to tremble when it heareth it. It is enough to bring euen a kind of rottennesse into ones bones; and to cast one into such fits of astonishment as tooke the Disciples, when they heard what our Sauiour said touching the difficultie of a rich mans entrance into [d] heauen. Againe, hath not the Doctrine of the Gospell power to dissolue the heart; as when one shall heare out of it the mercies of God, the abundance of his grace, the multitude of his compassions, the sweetnesse of his promises, the riches of his glorious inheritance in the Saints, the excellency of the things which hee hath prepared for those that loue him; how can this but mollifie the hardest heart when it shall be made to vnderstand, how good a God he is against whom it hath sinned, whose grace it hath abused, whose goodnesse it hath despised: euen as the consideration of (his father,) and of his loue, and bountie, and kind affection towards him, made the heart of the prodigall in the Parable to relent more then any thing. No greater astonishment then that which takes the heart, when it thinks with it selfe what happinesse it was like to lose, and in what hazard it was by offending God: nothing afflicts the soule of the godly more, then when they remember the vndutifulnesse of their carriage, towards him who hath laded them with so many blessings, and [e] whose mercies and compassions haue beene renewed euery morning. Thus is the whole Doctrine of Gods Word, as an Hammer to bruise and breake the heart, whether it be that part which brings the knowledge of sinne, and declares that which [f] Paul calleth the terror of the Lord: or that which discouereth the exceeding riches of his grace, and that [g] loue of Christ which passeth knowledge. God doth further this worke of mollifying the heart by afflictions and crosses; as the tribulation of Manasseh auayled greatly to his [h] humiliation; and the many afflictions of Dauid did euen plough vp his heart, which made him say, [i] It is good for mee that I haue beene afflicted: and that miserie into which the prodigall fell by his wastefull course, was a meanes to bring him to [k] himselfe. His being ready to be starued, furthered his resolution to returne in submission to his Father: when these crosses, such as losse, and sicknesse, and putting downe here in the world, are sanctified to a man, then they are very preuayling to the subduing of the heart; but yet still the Word is the mayne instrument. That concurring with these, makes vp the worke: so that here wee are taught, as to acknowledge the breaking of the heart to bee Gods sole and onely gift, and from him to expect it, and of him to craue it: so to conforme and submit our selues to the vse of the meanes which God hath sanctified to that end. There is no hope or possibilitie to haue our spirits made contrite, but by the power of the Word. It is the policy of the Deuill, by all meanes to alienate mens minds and affections from that, to the end hee may continue them in their natiue hardnesse; and the very resistance which is naturally in men to the working of Gods Word, when it is applyed to the beating vpon their hearts, and to the bruising of their soules, is an argument for it, that this is in the appointment of God the onely meanes. The breaking of a thing of that flinty stubbornnesse, of which the heart of man is, cannot bee without many strokes, and those many strokes cannot bee without some paine: and this makes men loth to submit to this course, as being impatient of that beating and hammering, by which the heart must bee dissolued. They be readie many times like an vnruly and distempered patient, who is euen about to flie into the face of him that puts them to some paine by searching of a wound, or by the setting of a bone, so (as Christ [l] saith) to turne againe, and to rent them which labour in this worke; and doe apply the appointed corsiues, for the eating out that dead flesh which is in their hearts, and for the paring off that brawne which is growne vpon them; when they perceiue it to come to the quicke, then they rage, and are like the Sea, spoken of by the Prophet, [m] whose waters cast vp myre and durt. Then they say, [n] It is not possible to beare such words. But if thou desirest indeed to haue a broken heart, determine to submit thy selfe to the stroke of this Hammer; and when thou feelest it to strike hard, and to cause some paine, and smart, and aking in thee, which to thy naturall disposition seemeth irkesome and vnpleasing, then remember that thy heart is in it selfe hard, and stubborne, and inflexible, and such as like an hard knotty piece of wood, requireth an hard wedge to cleaue it into pieces. It will be for the present time the more easie way of the two, to be let alone in thy wonted hardnesse, euen as it is to a wounded man, not to haue his sore with the Surgeons instrument searched to the bottome; but the end will be worse. For as (that I may allude to that of the Scripture, in calling the heart of man stony, or as a stone) in Masonry that stone which cannot bee wrought to that shape and fashion which is intended, that it may bee couched with the building, is throwne away in displeasure, and left to the high way to bee trodden vnder foot of men; so that heart which stands out against this spirituall workmanship, and refuseth the framing of the spirituall Hammer, shall neuer bee a part of that heauenly building, o which being coupled together, groweth vnto an holy Temple in the Lord, and is ordayned to be an habitation of God by the Spirit. Here is then the end of the first point, chosen out for the enlargement of this Verse: A broken heart must be had, or else our presenting our selues before God cannot be accepted. He that thinks to be able to breake his owne heart, or by his owne strength to worke contrition into his owne Spirit, may as well promise vnto himselfe to haue power when he will to adde a cubit to his stature. It is truely termed Gods sacrifice, aswell for the working thereof, as for the acceptance of it being wrought. Let thy prayer be; O Lord, thou requirest in me a broken heart, O giue me that which thou requirest; Breake thou it, and it shall be broken: and with this thy prayer ioyne a dependance vpon the meanes. God will not grant thy prayers in the neglect of that course which he hath sanctified. The word is the Hammer, and this hath God put into the hands of his spirituall Labourers, by whom hee fits and frames all those which are ordayned for the building.

o Ephes. 2. 21, 22.

The second point is, how this broken heart may bee discerned. Certayne marks there are by which it may bee knowne; which where they are, a broken heart is; where they want, there is nothing but that wofull hardnesse, which is the fore-runner of destruction. The speciall euidence of a broken heart, is a kind of inward tendernesse; the opposite to a p stony heart, is a fleshie heart: a heart full of feeling, full of sense. This tendernesse hath three seuerall branches: First, There is a tendernesse in a broken heart, in respect of that whereof it is sensible in it selfe. Secondly, There is a tendernesse in it in regard of that which it heares of God, and from God. Thirdly, There is a tendernesse in it in respect of others.

How a broken heart may be discerned.

p Ezec. 11. 19.

First, The tendernesse of it in regard of it selfe, or of that which it feeleth in it selfe, is that quicknesse of apprehension that it hath of the sinfulnesse thereof. It feeleth with Paul, that in it of it selfe q there is no goodnesse: that it is euen a very fardell of corruption, a mint of vncleannesse, vnholy, wicked, profane, vngodly motions, reprobate to euery good worke, prone euen to the worst, and vilest, and most sinfull wayes. It is aware of the many euils, which from thence breake forth into the outward man, it quickly stirres and checks if there bee but a little going awry in a mans course: a small offence is irkesome to it. This filleth it with much inward sorrow, and causeth it often to lament in secret, to be disquieted and vexed in it selfe. This casts it downe by an humble and base opinion of it selfe, it is bruised euen to nothing in it owne seeming. There can bee no greater torment to it, then to thinke and recount how many wayes it hath offended God; it would fayne, and so striues accordingly to sorrow more for that, then for any other thing in the world whatsoeuer. Thus tender is a broken heart, thus is the feeling and softnesse of a bruised spirit. It owne sinne is euen an hell, and a vexation to it.

it. It conceiues nothing in the world to bee ſo vile, and ſo vgly, and ſo abominable before God as it ſelfe is. This ſenſibleneſſe out of the ſight of ſinne, muſt needs bee in a broken heart. For, as an hard ſubſtance, when it is broken into many pieces, thereby is diſcouered what is within it, which the eye of man before was not able to diſcerne; ſo when the flinty heart of man is broken as it were into ſhiuers, then is much brought to light touching the eſtate thereof, which before, or till then was not thought vpon. I remember what the Scripture ſpeaketh of the r Iſa.59.5. r Cockatrice egge, when it is broken by treading vpon, there commeth out a Serpent: there was no ſuch thing to be perceiued till the breaking: and ſo the heart of man, till it be broken, it is not ſuſpected that there is in it ſuch a deale of Adders poyſon as there is: ſo then the ſenſibleneſſe of ones owne ſinne, cauſing deteſtation, ſorrow, humiliation, deſire of reformation, is the firſt degree of tenderneſſe, which betokeneth brokenneſſe.

The ſecond degree of tenderneſſe, is in reſpect of that which is heard from God. That which is heard from God, is his Word: now, whatſoeuer is heard from God in his Word, may be reduced to theſe three particulars: Firſt, Threatnings: ſecondly, Promiſes: thirdly, Precepts. I will ſhew you how the broken heart is tenderly diſpoſed in regard of each of theſe: when it heares the Threatnings and menacings of Gods wrath and vengeance againſt ſinne, it hath a kind of inward quaking: this kind of tenderneſſe was in Dauid, when

Thus is the contrite ſpirit affected when it heares of Gods iudgements: ſo as were the Diſciples exceedingly amazed, when they heard what Chriſt ſaid, touching the hardneſſe for a rich man to be may be you may see a composition of both these; you shall see that herein I speake not without booke: Dauid speaks of a feare that proceeds out of Gods [d] Mercy. Doth not Paul out of that gracious and comfortable Doctrine of Gods working in his, both the Will and the Deede, raise an exhortation of [e] working out saluation with feare and trembling? What kind of feare this is, it is more specially declared otherwhere, [f] Let vs feare, lest at any time by forsaking the promise of entring into rest, any of you should seeme to be depriued. Here is a good feare: one heares of the mercy of God, conceiues the sweetnesse of it, feeles some comfort in it, and hath thereupon a kind of fearing in himselfe, partly by thinking what a miserable case hee should bee in, if hee should misse that mercy, partly by considering how apt hee is in himselfe, to cut himselfe short of it. Me thinks I conceiue such an affection as this, to haue beene in that Woman which came behind our Sauiour, and was healed of her bloudy issue by the touch of him. Christ looked about, and began to aske, (as a man may imagine somewhat discontentedly,) [g] Who is it that hath touched me? when shee saw (saith the Text) that shee could not bee hid, shee came trembling, &c. Why did shee tremble? had shee not receiued a great deale of comfort, in receiuing such an euidence of Gods approuing her faith, by giuing a present end to that disease, which had held her twelue yeeres long; yet shee trembled: she thought she might (haply) haue miscarryed her selfe in this matter, for which she might receiue some checke, or might be depriued of that comfort which she had receiued: so her ioy in the cure was mixt with trembling. This kind of feare wrought by the mercies of God, causeth that Care [h] mentioned by Paul: it makes one to lay hold vpon euery word of comfort, as the messengers of the King of Aram catched at that word which fell from Ahabs mouth, when he called their Master his brother BENHADAB: it was a word that gaue them some hope of speeding in their suite for fauour; [i] They made haste to take that word: so this feare causeth a man to watch diligently for words of spirituall refreshing, and to make much of them, and as an hungrie body to picke vp euery crum thereof, and to lay it vp safe in the middest of the heart. If it were but that which fell from the Table, the broken-hearted Cananite valued it at an high [k] rate. The Spouse in the Canticles was glad when [l] her Beloued did but looke out of a window vpon her, shewing himselfe to her thorow the grates. Thus the ioy in Gods mercies begets a feare, that feare breeds care, and that care againe furnisheth more and more matter vnto ioy. As there is feare, so there is sorrow also in a contrite spirit, euen because of Gods goodnesse. Not sorrow, because he is good, but because his goodnesse hath beene so much abused, hath beene no more esteemed. This sorrow was in the prodigall sonne. It went to the very heart of him, to thinke vpon his Father, how kind he had beene, how louing, how tender; Oh that hee should wrong so good a Father: as it did put some hope in him, when he considered he was a Father, whom he was to returne vnto; so it added to his griefe, that hee had carryed himselfe so ill to such a Father. Wee haue seene in this [m] Psalme, how the thought of the person against whom Dauid transgressed, wounded his soule aboue all other circumstances: Against thee, against thee I haue sinned, euen against thee of whose goodnesse I haue still had so much experience, and whose fauour I wish euer to enioy. Now the third is, to declare how the man thus hearted, is disposed towards that part of the Word, wherein Precepts and Iniunctions are deliuered. Here the tender heart is sensible of the necessitie of obeying, it is flexible and inclineable, and easily to bee perswaded to that which is manifested to be Gods good pleasure. This is that which Dauid termes, [n] A standing in awe of the Word: the soule dares not but yeeld, where God requires obedience. I will [o] harken what the Lord God will say, said the Psalmist; there is the disposition of the inner man in this case. This yeeldingnesse was in Cornelius, testified by those words to Peter, at his comming to preach in his house: [p] Wee are all here present before God, to heare all things that are commanded thee of God. Thus the softned heart is ready to receiue any impression set in by diuine authoritie.

The third degree of tenderneſſe euidencing a broken heart, is respectiuely to others. The heart that is thus disposed(as hath beene said) in regard of that it feeles in it selfe, and in respect of that which comes from God, is also full of compassion towards others; specially pitifull to and ouer those whose case is like its. Thus shall wee finde Dauid, a man well exercised with inward contrition, to haue had maruailous care for those, whose soules were so brought low as his was: speaking in one Psalme concerning the goodnesse of God towards him, in looking vpon his distressed estate; [q] the humble shall heare of it, (saith hee) and be glad: hereupon he calls on them to praise the Lord with him, and tells them what God had done for him, and how he had deliuered him out of all his feare, and tooke it as a blessing, that such should be able to take heart by his example, and to encourage themselues by saying, [r] This poore man cryed, and the Lord heard him, and saued him out of all his troubles. So Dauid hauing himselfe a broken heart, pitied those who were so affected, and was glad to bee a meanes and instrument of their comfort. What care had Paul for the Incestuous person, when he vnderstood of his repentance and humiliation, when he wrote earnestly to the Corinthians, [s] to forgiue him, and comfort him, and to beware that he were not swallowed vp of ouermuch heauinesse: hee would haue them [t] to confirme their loue to him. Hee being a man who had experience of a bruised spirit, could not but commiserate him, whose soule he conceiued to bee truely and effectually humbled for his sinne. So haue I with as much breuitie as I could, gone through a great deale of matter. I haue reduced the whole estate of a broken heart to this one terme of Tenderneſſe, which yet compriseth vnder it many specialties. All together is a worthy glasse for euery Christian to view himselfe in, who desires to haue comfort in the right vnderstanding of his owne estate. Consider thy selfe by these particulars, and as Dauids councell is, [u] examine thy heart vpon thy bed;

see how it is with thee in respect of these things. What feeling hast thou of thine owne manifold corruptions, what acquaintance with the exercise of humiliation, and sorrow before God, for sinning against his Maiestie; what aptnesse to be grieued vpon the sight and apprehension of thy daily slippes; what burthen is sinne vnto thee, how art thou vexed when thou art ouer-carryed with thy owne preuailing lusts, so that thou canst not so please God as thou shouldst? Then, how is thy heart wont to be affected, when thou heareſt of Gods iudgements, of the rigor and seuerity of his wrath against sinners, of that eternall weight of woe, which he hath prepared for the reprobate? how are thy Spirits enlined and quickned, when thou heareſt of Gods infinite mercies in Christ towards poore sinners; doth the mention thereof make thee long to enioy them, and feare lest thou shouldest bee depriued of them, and care to lay fast hold on them, and to be assured of them? Art thou willing to yeeld to that God commands, and glad when thou canst haue any speciall occasion to shew thy obedience; art thou ready to bemone their case, of whom thou heareſt that they are afflicted in spirit, distressed in conscience, grieued in soule, and so art mooued to pray for them, and to comfort them vpon occasion? these things being in any true measure in thee, manifestly shew thee to haue a Broken heart; and being thus, thou mayest goe boldly to the Throne of Grace vpon all occasions. I may now speake to thee with the words of SALOMON, [x] Goe eate thy Bread with ioy, and drinke thy Wine with a cheereſull heart, for God accepteth thee. Being in this case, thou mayest happily become the contempt of men, and mayest be put to rebuke with the world, and bee a very gazing stocke to many; but be of good comfort, God lookes vpon thee with an eye of speciall fauour, he will satisfie thee good things; he hath euen said of thy soule, as he sometimes said of his Church, This is my rest for euer, here will I dwell, for I haue a delight therein. What a large field haue I here to enter into, if I should apply this further to the discouery of the generall want which is of this kinde of heart. Alas, how few doe know what godly sorrow, what compunction of heart, what remorse of Conscience, what deiectednesse of spirit, what humiliation meanes: what little irksomenesse doe they feelle in sinne, what vnderstand they out of experience, what it is to bee weary of ones owne corruptions? How ordinarily doe men heare of Gods iudgements without trembling; nay, how doe some euen make a mocke of the counsell of the Lord; how little are they thereby awakened out of their securitie: in how small esteeme generally is the Doctine of the Gospell, touching that grace of God which brings saluation; poore is the content that the most doe take therein: what is more abused then that rich bountie and patience of God which should leade to repentance; how is this grace of our God turned into wantonnesse, and made the matter of licentiousnesse; what stiffenesse doe men shew, when they are dealt with in holy dueties prescribed by GOD; what a while before they can bee wrought to any measure of conformitie? what scorne is cast caſt vpon thoſe that doe ſhew the moſt fruits of an humble ſpirit, and thoſe extraordinary fits of diſtreſſedneſſe, with which God is pleaſed to exerciſe ſome of his, how are they cenſured, and taxed, and ſcorned, and wondred at. Theſe are euidences of hardneſſe of heart, of flintines of ſpirit; and yet this is the ſtate of the moſt mens hearts, inough to make a mans heart to melt within him to conſider it. Doe not cheriſh thy ſelfe in thy vnacquaintedneſſe with this broken heart, as thou haſt heard it now deſcribed: the want thereof diſtaſts all thy deuotions, makes God to loth both thee and all thy ſeruices; thou haſt neither part nor fellowſhip in the ſaluation of God by Ieſus Chriſt.

How a broken heart may bee preſerued.

One point remaines which I promiſed, how this brokenneſſe of heart being once had, may be preſerued. Much might bee ſaid herein, but I will draw it to a few briefe directions.

Firſt, Becauſe by the word in the powerfull diſpenſation thereof, the heart is firſt broken, therefore by the ſame meanes it muſt ſtill bee kept contrite. A ſecret hardneſſe and dulneſſe will ſoone creepe in againe, if that meanes be once diſuſed. A man had needs keepe his heart as it were ſtill on the Anuile, vnder the ſtroke of the hammer, if hee deſire it may be continued in that good eſtate: whatſoeuer prooues the neceſſitie of the word for the breaking of the heart, iuſtifieth the neceſſitie thereof, for the continuing and encreaſing of that happy breaking: and in hearing let a man ſtill ſtriue for that effect, which hath beene noted reſpectiuely to Gods either iudgements, or mercies, or commandements then deliuered.

Secondly, There muſt be frequencie and conſtancie in the priuate exerciſes of prayer, of humiliation, of labouring to increaſe the inward ſorrow and compunction of the heart. The more a man ſhall commune priuately with God, the diligenter hee ſhall be in the ſearch of his heart, in the examination of his courſe; the more he ſhall indeuour to worke griefe into his ſoule, the tenderer his heart of neceſſitie muſt needes bee; and the ſlacking or remiſſe following of theſe courſes, cannot but bring a kinde of cruſt of ſecuritie vpon the inward parts.

Thirdly, There muſt be a taking heede of being ouer-carryed to the committing of any ſpeciall ſinne. This in Dauid put his heart quite out of tune and faſhion; the broken pieces of his ſpirit, were, as it were, growne together againe, and there was neede of a kinde of new worke to be wrought in him: therefore fit in this caſe is the Apoſtles councell; y Take heede leſt at any time there be in any of you an euill heart and vnfaithfull, to depart away from the liuing God: But exhort one another daily, &c. leſt any of you be hardned through the deceitfulneſſe of ſinne: ſinne is full cunning, and may breede opinion in a mans thoughts, that it may bee yeelded to in ſome ſpeciall kinde, without any great hazard; but when it is once admitted, it takes away from a man his wonted feeling of good things, bedulleth the tendernes of his conſcience, bereaues him of his former feare to diſpleaſe God, and maketh boldneſſe and ſecurity in a ſtealing and dangerous manner to encreaſe. He that ſhall be carefull of these three duties; dependance vpon a powerfull ministrie, priuate exercises of humiliation and prayer, watchfulnesse ouer himselfe, that he be not entangled with any more grosse or noted euill, shall keepe his heart in that tender, and feeling, and contrite estate, wherein onely God delights.

The eight and twentieth Lecture.

VERS. 18.

Be fauourable vnto Zion for thy good pleasure: build the walls of Ierusalem.

THus farre hath beene Dauids prayer in this Psalme for himselfe, and for his owne particular. Now followeth that part of the Psalme in which Dauid is a suiter vnto God for the Church and State; where wee haue to note two things. First, The petition it selfe, Vers. 18. Secondly, The consequent, and the issue of this petition being granted. The petition is, as I before said, partly for the Church, partly for the ciuill state. In the petition for the Church, two things. First, The good craued; Fauour for Zion. Secondly, The ground of crauing it; according to thy good pleasure. Touching the first, (Be fauourable to Zion, &c.) Zion was the name of an Hill within Ierusalem, vpon which the Temple was (after Dauids time) built by Salomon: there, while Dauid liued stood the Tabernacle, that moueable frame which by Moses at Gods appointment was set vp for holy seruices. It was first placed in Shilo, about the seuenth yeere of Iosuas gouernement, when the people of Israell were become the Lords of [a] Canaan, and there it continued vntill after Elies death. For [b] then God forsooke the habitation of Shilo, [c] and chose the Tribe of Iuda, and mount Sion which he loued. This was the speciall place, deputed by God to put his name there. It is put in Scripture for the Church of God, the societie of Gods people, euen those whom Iude describes by the termes of the called, and sanctified by God the Father, and reserued vnto Iesus Christ. So is the terme of mount Sion vsed in the new [d] Testament. The enemies of Gods Church and people, are called [e] the haters of Sion. And nothing more ordinary in the old Testament, then to describe the beauty, and happinesse, and stableness of Gods Church, to discouer the respect of God to it, and the many promises and priuiledges of it vnder the name of Sion. So that in a point so plaine, I will not say much. It is well knowne it was the name of an Hill, and in reason wee might thinke that Dauid prayed not for it simply, as for a parcell of eminent ground, standing vp higher then the rest of the Towne, but he had respect therein vnto the Tabernacle placed thereon, and and so to the state of Religion, and the worship of God, the welfare whereof (as the times then were) consisted much in the prosperity and safety of the Tabernacle. I will consider in this petition, First, The thing it selfe that Dauid prayed for, the Church: Secondly, The speciall reason of his being earnest in prayer for it at this time. Concerning the former, thus is the Doctrine.

The first Doctrine. That the prosperity and happinesse of Gods Church, is a matter very deare and pretious vnto those that are Gods Children. In Dauid wee may behold the true disposition of Gods Children, being all the Children of one Father, and guided by one and the same Spirit, they haue the same affections. Now Dauid hauing after many petitions for himselfe, and much conference (as it were) with God, gotten some comfort to himselfe, in the hope and assurance of the pardon of his great offence; the first request which he makes, is, that God would bee pleased to continue his grace and mercy to his Church. He puts not in this suite in the second place, as preferring his owne priuate good before the Churches: but as a man knowing, his prayers could not speede for others, till his owne person were accepted, and considering withall in how high a degree hee had offended God: therefore first he laboureth the making of his owne peace, that so he might haue the better assurance of successe in this particular. Testimonies of Dauids respect to the Church of God, we shall reade many in the Psalmes: Sometimes he prayeth for it: [f] Oh giue saluation vnto Israel: [g] saue thy people, blesse thine inheritance: sometimes he describes the beauty of it: Mount Zion lying Northward is faire in situation, it is the ioy of the whole earth: In the palaces thereof God is known for a refuge. [h] Compasse about Zion, and goe round about and tell the towres thereof. [i] It is the perfection of beauty: sometimes he declares the certainty of Gods care for it: [k] God will saue Zion. [l] God loueth the gates of Zion more then all the habitations of IACOB: [m] The Lord is great in Zion: sometimes he prophecieth vengeance to the enemies thereof: [n] They that hate Zion shall bee all ashamed, and turned backward: and much to this purpose in the Psalmes, euery such speech is an euidence of Dauids hearty and sincere affection to Gods Church. We shall find the like disposition to haue beene in others. Whosoeuer was the author of the Psalme 102. whether Dauid, or some other endued with the spirit of prophecie, liuing towards the end of the Babylonian captiuitie, about which time it is probably thought that Psalme was endited, sheweth himselfe to haue like tenderneſse of affection to Gods Church, that Dauid had. How importunate is he with God, to arise and haue mercy vpon Zion; how doth he put the Lord in mind of his promise to restore it? [o] The time to haue mercy thereon, the time appointed is come: how full of passion is that [p] speech, O Lord, thy seruants delight in the stones thereof, and haue pity on the very dust thereof: with this agreeth that [q] report, touching the affections of Gods people, respectiuely to the state of the Church when they were in Babilon: We wept, when we remembred Zion: so many thoughts of the distressed estate of the Church, so many teares. They vowed vowed to haue no reſt in their deſires, and neuer to giue the Lord ouer in their prayers, till he ſhould be pleaſed to reſtore her. Was not Moſes reſpect ſtrong and earneſt to the Church of God, when for the ſake thereof, and for the continuance of Gods fauour to that people, which was then the ſole Church of God on earth, he was content to engage his owne ſoule, chooſing rather that God would wipe his name out of the booke of Life, then take away their being, and their name from vnder [r] heauen. Who can but admire that woman that wife of Phineas, vpon whom the tydings of the taking of the Arke brought the paines of trauaile, whom neither the birth of a man child, nor the kinde and comfortable ſpeeches of the women that aſſiſted her, could any whit content, or make to forget her lamentable note: The Arke of God is taken, the glory is departed now from Iſraell: ſhee was not without her naturall affections: no doubt the death of her Father in law, and her Husband grieued her not a little; but her ſpirituall affections preuailed: and therefore in the declaration of her ſorrow, that of her Father in law, and her Husband, is but once named, but twice it came in, The glorie is departed, The glory, &c. and her ſonnes name was giuen him by her, to beare the memory of that calamitie to his graue; ſhe named him Ichabod, as much as to ſay, [f] where is the glorie. Among others of Gods deare ſeruants, thus piouſly affected to the common cauſe of Religion, and the Churches ſtate. I cannot forget, eſpecially being conuerſant in this Pſalme, that worthy ſouldier and faithfull ſeruant of the Lord and of Dauid, Vriah; when Dauid had ſent for him home from the camp at Rabbah, with an intent by his accompanying with his Wife to hide his fault, he at his comming, being with a ſhew of pitty on him in regard of his trauaile, perſwaded by Dauid to refreſh himſelfe by the comfort of his owne houſe, and by lodging there refuſed vpon theſe termes; [t] The Arke, and ISRAEL, and IVDAH dwell in Tents, and my Lord IOAB, and the ſeruants of my Lord abide in the open fields: ſhall I then goe into mine houſe to eate, and drinke, and lie with my wife? by thy life, and by the life of thy ſoule, I will not doe this thing: as if hee had ſaid, Beſides that the Generall vnder whom I ſerue, and the reſt of my country-men now in armes, lodge abroad in the open fields; the Arke, the Teſtimony of Gods preſence, the liberty of our ſtate is in the campe, and ſo accordingly in ſome hazard; what ſhall become thereof to mee it is vncertaine; what a wound it were to the Kingdome, if now (as once before) by the Philiſtines it ſhould bee taken, I am ſure: this is no time for me to take mine eaſe, I will firſt ſee the iſſue of this ſeruice, before I afford any more then meerely neceſſary contentment vnto nature. And is not Nehemiah worthy to be ranged in this catalogue. heauen: hee wanted no outward comfort, yet when hee heard by certaine men of Iudah, that came to the Emperours Palace in Shushan, how it fared with his poore countrey-men, how they were in great affliction, and in much reproch; the report did euen dissolue him into teares, [u] he sate downe and wept, and mourned certaine dayes, and fasted, and prayed before the God of heauen: after, his resolution was to aduenture all his hopes, and to engage all his fauour and honour with the Emperour, vpon this one point, to obtaine leaue to put an end to this misery, and to restore that decayed and torne estate vnto the ancient beauty; and how he laboured herein, and what hazards he ran, and what difficulties hee went through for the accomplishment of this worke, neuer ceasing till hee renued the wonted course of the assembling of the people to worship God, and had wrought the chiefe of them to set to their seales to a solemne Couenant, neuer to forsake the House of their God, the whole storie maketh mention. I will shut vp this enumeration of examples, with that one of Paul. What meanes it that [x] he had the care of all the Churches, but that the good of Gods Church in euery place, was respected by him: how did his spirit reioyce in beholding the order, and the stedfast faith in Christ of the Congregations where he [y] laboured? what comfort tooke he in this, that Christ was preached, euen then when [z] he was in bonds? the hope of the propagation of Gods Church by that meanes, made him to forget the paines and misery of imprisonment. Thus I hope, wee see how the Children of God are affected to the Church of God; the state of it is to them exceeding pretious. In the flourishing thereof they ioy, euen when themselues haue for their particular, no little cause of grieuing. In the pressures thereof they grieue, yea, though they themselues for their owne personall concernements are in peace: Why should not my countenance be sad, said that worthy [a] Nehemiah, when it is thus and thus among the people of my God. It is their zeale for God, that maketh the Children of God to bee thus disposed, and it is the comunion of Saints, which quickneth in them these affections. They know that by the enlargement and growth of the Church, God is glorified amongst men, and the soules of poore Christians are much comforted thereby; and therefore they cannot but wish all good to Sion, out of the prosperity whereof, commeth so much honour to God, and such a deale of refreshing to his seruants. And thus for the Doctrine.

The Vse. The Vse is, to apply this to our selues, as a marke of triall, by which wee may bee descerned what wee are, whether the Children of God or strangers. No surer signe of translating from death to life, then a sincere and faithfull respect to the good and prosperous estate of Gods Church: whereupon it is noted in a storie both as a worthy act, and as a testimonie of a religious heart, that of one Terentius, a Captaine vnder the Emperour Valens, who hauing done some speciall seruice, for which the Emperour thought him worthy of a recompence, and being thereupon willed by him to demand what he would, presented this petition, that the

the true Christians might haue the libertie of a Church by themselues, wherein to worship God apart from the Arrians, whose Heresie had then spred it selfe exceedingly. The Emperour reading his Supplication, was displeased much, tare it in pieces, and threw it away. Terentius modestly gathered vp the pieces againe, professing to him, that if hee could not bee heard in Gods cause, hee would make no suite for his owne profit. This act, I say, of his is noted as an argument of much pietie, as indeed well it might. For who among many now a-dayes, that had such an offer made him by a potent King, would not rather aske some great office, or some state of command, or some estate; a man to prefer the good of Gods Church, before all concernements of his owne, when will our dayes afford his Peere? And surely, as this in him was an euidence of an holy and zealous disposition, so the contrarie amongst vs generally, is a token that there is but little truth of Religion amongst men. Alas, what is for the most part lesse tendered, then the case and cause of Zion: as in the dayes of Haggai, men were carefull for themselues to dwell in seeled houses, but could let [b] the House of God lye waste: so now, we are mostly so disposed, that so that our Garners may be full, and abounding with diuers sorts; so that our Sheepe may bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our streets, our Oxen strong to labour, no inuasion nor crying out in our Townes: so that peace bee within our Borders, and we satisfied with the flowre of Wheate, we are indifferent for the businesse of Religion. I am perswaded there is no one sinne for which God hath a greater controuersie with the Land then this, that the maymes, and wants, and hazards of his poore Church amongst vs, are so little taken to heart. The ruines and breaches of Zion, we can behold with a regardlesse eye. Let vs not thinke our selues to haue the affections of Gods children, when wee can see the House of God to sustayne any losse, or to be in hazard of waste, without any remorse. I beseech you that we may consider, how farre wee bee engaged in this fault; and let vs learne by Dauid here, to make the businesse and the estate of Sion, one chiefe part of our care, and one speciall matter, which in all our prayers we will specially remember vnto God. And if so we meane, being vrged out of this place and Text, to be more forward in this dutie then we haue done formerly, let me direct you in this what be the speciall fauours which it becommeth vs to begge of God for his Church. Certainely, we must enquire into the Scriptures, and see what be the blessings which at any time God promiseth to bestow on his Church, and so accordingly must our desires be framed in this case. First is, that he [c] will giue Kings and Queenes to be nursing Fathers, and nursing Mothers vnto it: that is, that he will stirre vp the Princes of the Earth to be a protection to it, and to shrowd it vnder the wings of their authoritie. Secondly, that he will furnish it with [d] Pastors according to his owne heart, which shall feede it with knowledge, and with vnderstanding: so that our prayers on the behalfe of Gods Church, must ayme at these two speciall things; that God may please to giue it fauour in the eyes of Greatnesse and Authoritie;

d *Ier.*3.15.

that so it hauing rest, the members [c] thereof may be edified, and walke in the feare of God, and may be multiplyed by the comfort of the holy Ghost: and againe, that he would thrust out many Labourers in the Word and Doctrine, for the gathering together of his Saints, by whose ministrie his Gospel may haue passage, and may more and more be glorified. Doe not our owne hearts charge vs in secret with the dis-regard of these two specialties. It may be we desire the peace of the State for our owne quiets sake, because in the peace thereof we haue peace; but where be our prayers to God for the peace of the Land for the Churches sake. It is a worthy place in the Psalme, and very meete to be [f] obserued: Dauid wisheth peace to Ierusalem, and exhorting others also so to doe, giues the reasons of his desiring, that there may be peace within her Walls, and prosperitie in her Palaces: one is in respect of his Brethren and Neighbours, which I take to be a ciuill respect, viz. that his Friends and Country men might liue in quiet: but another is, because of the House of the Lord our God, saith he, I will procure thy wealth: so for the Churches sake chiefly he desired the prosperitie and quiet of the State: so, the question is, whether in desiring the peace of the Kingdome, our intent bee that the state of Religion may proceed the better vnder the shaddow of that peace. Then againe, if we should be examined vpon this point concerning our binding our selues, to make it one of our constant suits to God, that hee would stablish an able Ministrie thorowout euery part of Sion; it is iustly to be thought, that we should be found guiltie of grosse neglect in that particular: wee pitty not the wants of many Congregations, which are scattered as Sheepe on the Mountaynes without a Shepheard: and such to whom God hath vouchsafed that mercy to haue among them a Scribe taught for the Kingdome of God, who can, like a good Housholder, bring out of his Treasure things both new and old, value it not according as they should; nay, such is the more then brutishnesse of many, that such a blessing is rather reputed a burden then a blessing. I haue ended this first point, concerning Dauids crauing fauour for the Church; and in handling hereof haue declared, how we faile in this; and which way we may reforme our fault in this, I haue also shewed you.

[c] Act. 9. 31.

[f] Ps. 122. 6. &c.

The next thing considerable, is the speciall reason of Dauids being earnest in this request at this time. Concerning which I set downe this Doctrine,

The second Doctrine.

That true repentance makes a man desirous and carefull to repayre such more speciall hurts and wrongs, as he hath done either by his generall euill course before his calling, or by falling into some great offence after his calling. DAVID is here a patterne to vs of a repentant person. Now we may very worthily obserue this in him, that hauing by his great sinne scandalized the Church, grieued many of Gods deare seruants, brought a disgrace vpon good Profession, and hazarded the prosperitie likewise of Sion, by prouoking God to lay some iudgement vpon him, and vpon his Kingdome, he now therefore becommeth the more earnest with God in this suite: As then hee had hurt the Church by his transgression, so

now

now he seekes to make a kinde of recompence for that hurt by praying God, to be mercifull and gratious thereunto. Thus true Repentance teacheth to desire and care there to doe most good, where our former miscariage hath beene chiefely preiudicall. I may couple hereunto that which is to be found in Paul after his conuersion. First, in the generall, as he had beene a great persecuter of the Church, and an enemie to the faith; so he became a great seruitor to the Church, and a speciall instrument for the promoting of the faith: he who had beene an aduersary to the Truth more then others, when it pleased God to touch his heart, he laboured for the truth more abundantly then others: and then in speciall, I remember what is noted in him, that immediately vpon his conuersion, [g] he remayned certayne dayes with the Disciples at Damascus: and why with them? In the dayes of his ignorance and blinde zeale, hee had beene a principall enemie to them; his commission which he had at that time when he was stroken to the earth, was for the Disciples at Damascus. For this cause hee was carefull when God had called him to the knowledge of the truth, to bee first of all an instrument of comfort to them, whom he had chiefely wronged; yea, and there also, and in that Towne, to preach his first sermons for the defence of the faith, where he had declared himselfe to be the most eager & violent enemy to the faith. There he laboured with the Iewes, to bring them to the accknowledgement of the [h] Messias. They had receiued much hardning and encrease of obstinacie, by his ioyning with them against the Doctrine of Christianity, and therefore he made it one of his first taskes, to reclayme them if it had been possible. They which had beene his fellowes in euill, his desire was (if it mought herein so pleased God) that they might bee his companions in grace. That which is reported of Saint Matthew is not much vnlike. It is said in the story that a little after that Christ had called him, he made him a feast in his house, and there were present many Publicans also. Were they not there thinke wee by his inuiting; and why shall we suppose he inuited them but of an holy desire, that they with whom, and among whom he had most sinned, as being his partners in extortion, might bee brought into grace together with himselfe. He knew he had beene an instrument of their hurt, he was desirous therefore if it might be, to be an helper forward of their good. Note we here that of [i] Zacheus, to those, whom before hee knew the truth hee had most pinched, he was now (being turned about) become most liberall: The halfe of my goods I giue to the poore: and hee made his restorings to exceede his iniuries fourefold; he would be sure to repaire the wrongs that he had done, and to manifest his repentance in the things wherein hee had most fayled. The Ephesians hauing done much publique hurt, by the profession and practice of curious arts, made a kinde of amends by making publike acknowledgement: [k] They came and confessed, and shewed their works: they brought their bookes, and burnt them before all men. This concurrence of examples confirmes this point; and sheweth it to be a truth, that when a man by the mercy of God repents, he begins

k Act.19.18,19.

by and by to caſt and conſider, where, and to whom, and in what particulars he hath done moſt hurt, that in the ſame hee may doe moſt good. Manaſſeh had ſinned moſt in polluting the worſhip of God, and bringing in abominable things into the Houſe of God; therefore when God reſtored him, his firſt worke was to redreſſe thoſe particulars; that as he had endangered many ſoules by corrupting Religion, ſo he might be a meanes of good to as many by reforming the [1] ſame. Repentance cauſeth a change in a mans diſpoſition, and turnes into the contrary: ſo that ſtill where that is, this effect followeth, that a man becommeth moſt earneſt in that particular, wherein before his repentance he was moſt remiſſe; and according to the meaſure of his falling in any holy dutie, is the proportion of his ſtriuing and labouring that he may excell therein. In that wherein a man hath beene moſt hurtfull, in the ſame hee will labour and endeuour to be moſt profitable.

1 2.*Chron.*33. 14,16.

The Vſe. Here is alſo a marke by which to trie the truth of our repentance. If a man ſhall ſtriue to excell in that good, in the contrarie euill whereto hee hath moſt faulted, it is a good teſtimonie of ſound conuerſion. It is the euidence of the repentance of a negligent Miniſter, if hee ſhall labour to doe as much good to the Congregation where he liues, by paineſull and ſound teaching, and by giuing countenance and comfort vnto thoſe that are well diſpoſed, as he hath beene hurtfull by ſilence, or neglect, or otherwiſe by ſhewing himſelfe an Aduerſarie to thoſe that couet the beſt things. It is a fruit of the repentance of an euill Magiſtrate, if he ſhall endeuour to profit the Countrey as much by the reſtraint of wickedneſſe, and by giuing good example in his owne perſon, as hee hath beene an hinderance to it by remiſneſſe, and by irreligious and profane behauiour. Haſt thou beene a meanes of endangering the ſoules of any by wantonneſſe, by riot, by hauing fellowſhip with them in the vnfruitfull works of darkeneſſe, and hath God giuen thee heart to affect better things? thou canſt not giue a better pledge of thy being truely reclaymed, then to ſeeke the good of thoſe by all meanes poſſible, who by thy meanes haue beene in hazard. If thou be not as carefull for them, as for thy owne ſelfe, thy repentance is not ſound. Auſtin in his Homilies hath a witty compariſon, by which to diſcouer the ilneſſe of that mans diſpoſition, who hauing receiued mercy from God for himſelfe, ſhould bee careleſſe what become of others. Hee likeneth him to one who is to paſſe ouer a ditch or ſtreame of water, where if he paſſe not he dyeth, if he plunge in he is drowned, and then finds that fauour to haue a bridge or planke of Timber laid acroſſe to helpe him ouer: but when others doe come after, who are in the like ſtate he was, he would haue the bridge or helpe withdrawne from them. Hee condemnes it (as hee may well) for a cruell diſpoſition, and ſuch as cannot bee in a child of God. Now then as the child of God is willing that that Bridge of mercy ſhould remayne for others conuoy, ſo for theirs eſpecially, the guilt of whoſe danger in ſpirituall things, doth lye eſpecially vpon him. If he may bee a meanes of good to him, whoſe ſoule by his ſocietie or example, hath hath beene annoyed, he will account it as a ſpeciall happineſſe. I pray you that wee may heede this point well. Repentance is that without which there can be no ſaluation; nothing more neceſſary then for a man to labour to be aſſured of the truth of his repentance. Now no better teſtimonie of ſincere repentance then this, to endeuour to make ſpeciall recompence, where a man ſhall finde himſelfe to haue done ſpeciall hurt. Dauid had wronged the Church of God not a little by his fall, he laboureth now (his heart being touched) to make a kind of amends, by making this one of his firſt ſuites, after he had recouered ſome hope of his owne peace: O Lord, be fauourable to Sion: I know I haue beene a ſcandall to thy Church, an offence to thy people, a diſgrace to Religion, I haue opened a window for thy vengeance to come in vpon all thoſe that liue vnder my gouernement: O I beſeech thee, let not thy Church fare the worſe for my fault, but continue thy wonted fauour towards it: O that I might be able to be as profitable to it, as I haue beene ſcandalous; and to comfort the ſoules of thy faithfull ones, as much as I haue grieued them. Thus was Dauids minde. If thine be not like, thy repentance is not like. Repentance alwayes frames the heart to a diſpoſition to repayre wrongs. Hee that is not deſirous and carefull to doe as much good in any particular, as he hath ſometimes done hurt therein, what profeſſion of repentance ſoeuer that man makes, it is but counterfeit. Let me enquire if I thinke I am a true conuert, wherein I haue done moſt hurt; whether in ſpirituall things, or in outward; whether to other mens bodies, and goods, and good name, or to their ſoules. If I ſeeke not as much as in me is, to make them amends in that very kinde wherein I haue done the wrong, I ſhall vtterly deceiue my ſelfe, if I thinke I am the Lords. You ſee my ground for it is plaine. Next to himſelfe, Dauid had beene dangerous to the Church of God; now as ſoone as ener hee hath made his peace for himſelfe, his minde is vpon the Church which hee had moſt wronged: and by praying for it, hee declares his deſire to make vp the breach which he had cauſed. So much of the good craued, fauour for Zion. Now next, of the ground of crauing it According to thy good pleaſure. The Doctrine is thus,

The third Doctrine.

That wee muſt not expect or craue any good thing from God, either for our ſelues or others, but only out of the freedome of his grace. As in the beginning of the Pſalme, whatſoeuer Dauid craued of God for himſelfe, he grounded the hope of obtayning it vpon the louing kindnes of God, and vpon the multitude of his compaſſions; ſo now ſuing for the good and proſperity of the Church, he builds vpon the ſame foundation. He knew that neither in himſelfe, nor in the Church, there was any matter of deſert, in reſpect whereof this might bee challenged which is craued; but hee placed all his expectation vpon Gods good pleaſure, then the which there is nothing more free. This good pleaſure of God, to which Dauid appeales in this ſuite, is the ſame which by the Apoſtle is made to be the ground of Gods [m] election; which is not induced by any thing in man, but is the meere freedome of Gods owne good and gratious diſpoſition.

disposition. Paul makes this and mans deseruing, to be in a kind of opposition either to other: [n] not according to our works, but according to his purpose and grace: so that where the purpose, and grace, and good pleasure of God is the predominant, there is nothing of mans hath any part. Thus Nehemiah in that prayer of his which hee had for this very thing for which Dauid here was a suiter, namely, that God would looke vpon the distresses of his people, and prosper his purposes for the relieſe thereof, grounded his requests vpon the same foundation; [o] O Lord, that keepest couenant and mercy for them that loue thee: and to the end it might indeed appeare that he had no hope but onely in mercy, hee makes an exact acknowledgement of the sinnes of the people; [p] Both I and my Fathers house haue sinned: we haue grieuously sinned against thee, &c. so he confesseth that if God should therein deale according to desert, there were no hope of obtayning that for which hee prayed: and that the Church of God was not vtterly consumed and swept away from the face of the earth, the Prophet Ieremie acknowledgeth it to bee wholly out of the mercy of God, and [q] becauſe his compaſſions fayled not. Thus was the carriage of Daniels [r] prayer: O Lord, righteousnesse belongeth vnto thee, and vnto vs shame; yet here is our hope, [t] that forgiuenesse and compassion is in the Lord our God: [t] Wee present not our supplications before thee for our owne righteousnesse, but for thy great tender mercies. See what disclayming here is of all, saue only the mercy and good pleasure of God. This is the point which I handled in regard of the generall substance thereof, in the opening of the first verse; I am now the briefer therein. The choosing of Gods Church, was only out of mercy, whence then should be the preseruation and vpholding thereof, but wholly from grace.

The Vse. To be a direction to vs in all suits, whether for our selues or others, whether for our owne particular, or for the common benefit of Gods Church. Beware euer how wee bring any thoughts, saue onely such as tend to the auilement and abasement of our selues, and may discouer and testifie the dependance of our hope vpon no other thing saue the grace, and mercy, and good pleasure of God in Iesus Christ. The least temper of any the smalleſt conceit or opinion of ought in our selues, for the sake wherof, God might be moued to vouchsafe that to vs which we desire of him, is inough to turne all our prayers into sinne. If there be neuer so little of this Leauen, it is inough to sowre and to distaste the whole lumpe of our deuotions. Let this be euer the mayne of our requests, In thy good pleasure Lord, as here; or as DAVID, [u] for thy mercies sake; or with DANIEL, [x] for thy owne sake; or somewhat to the like effect. The more submisse and deiected the Lord shall perceiue our spirits to bee in the apprehension of our owne vnworthines, and in the vtter renouncing and disclayming of our selues; and the more we shall, as it were, cast our selues into the armes of his grace, the more he will accept vs, the sooner will he cause his face to shine vpon vs, that we may be safe. Thus to doe is a thing easily spoken, and heard, but not easily performed. It is a hard matter to bring flesh and bloud to thinke so demissely and vnworthily of of it ſelfe, as that there ſhould bee nothing in it but that which deſerues the furie of Gods diſpleaſure. Nature muſt bee well ſchooled and humbled, ere it can come ſo farre; and then when it is brought ſo low, it will be ſo hard for it againe to be rayſed vp, ſo as to waite conſtantly, and confidently, and comfortably vpon the grace of God: ſo that howſoeuer it bee a thing much talked of, as if wee were all very cunning and perfect therein, to truſt all vpon mercy, and to looke for nothing in regard of our ſelues; yet the truth is, a man had need to be well exerciſed in Religion before he come to know himſelfe ſo thorowly, as to abhorre himſelfe in his prayers; and can withall when hee ſees ſo much vileneſſe in himſelfe, [y] truſt perfectly on that grace which is brought vnto vs by the reuelation of Ieſus Chriſt. Humilitie and Faith are the hardeſt matters of Chriſtianitie, and they bee the two things neceſſarie for the carriage of a mans ſelfe in prayer according to this Doctrine. A man muſt haue his heart euen broken into pieces, before he can be able ſo in prayer to deny himſelfe: and when he is ſo broken, yet by Faith to build his hope vpon Gods good pleaſure: and to be able to beleeue, that there is ſomewhat in ſtore for him ſo vile a perſon, it is no little difficultie. I ſpeake it to this end, that we may not ſlight ouer ſuch Doctrine as this, as eaſily learned, or as if alreadie knowne. For he who will not beare witneſſe with mee of the hardneſſe of this dutie, in the denyall of himſelfe, to looke for good from God onely out of grace, I will ſay plainely, that man is yet farre from the practice of this dutie.

y 1.Pet.1.13.

There is another thing to be noted out of this ground, (according to thy good pleaſure.) It is this,

The fourth Doctrine.

That in all our prayers, we muſt referre the ſucceſſe of our Petitions vnto Gods diſpoſe. This is alſo intended by Dauid in this ſpeech. He doth diſclayme all hope ſaue onely in Gods free grace, and withall ſubmits himſelfe, for the iſſue of the requeſt vnto God his appointment: O Lord, let it be herein as thou wilt: thou knoweſt what is beſt for thy Church, and for euery limme thereof: I will not take on me to direct thee, let thy good pleaſure bee the rule of all. Thus much muſt needs alſo bee concluded hence: Be fauourable, in or for thy good pleaſure. This referment of our ſelues in our prayers to the Lord, that he may doe with vs and for vs, as he pleaſeth, our Sauiour taught two wayes: Firſt, By appointing vs to pray, that the Lords will may he done; meaning this therein among other things, that we ſhould not ſeeke the aduancement of our owne deſires, but onely ſo farre forth as God ſhall pleaſe; our wills muſt be made ſubordinate to his will: Secondly, By his example: For when he was in his agonie in the Garden, and prayed that if it were poſſible that Cup might depart from him, he preſently added this, [z] neuertheleſſe, not as I will, but as thou wilt: here he ſubmitted his owne will (as a man) vnto Gods will. The promiſe of being heard in our prayers runnes with this condition, [a] If we aske any thing according vnto his will he heareth vs. There is the Caution with which our prayers are hedged in. It is one of the euils noted in the old Iſraelites, [b] They limited the holy One of Iſrael. They tyed tyed God to meanes, and tooke on them to preſcribe to him how, when, in what ſort and meaſure he ſhould ſupply them. We haue an ordinary ſaying, and it may well be applyed to this matter, as being therein moſt true; They which begge, muſt not chooſe. Hee that craues a fauour, muſt be content to ſtand to the curteſie of him of whom he craues it, and not carue out according as himſelfe liketh. Is it meet that man ſhould direct God, as if it were his dutie to miniſter to him, or as if there wanted wiſedome in him, to know how to meaſure out his fauours: [c] It is good, ſaith the Prophet, both to truſt and to wait for the ſaluation of God: that is, to relie vpon Gods helpe in all neceſſities, and to tarry his leaſure, and to yeeld to his courſe, and to receiue all according as it ſhall bee his good pleaſure to allot. This is a ſecond obſeruation out of theſe words. Dauid deſires good of God for his Church, but therein referreth himſelfe to him, as not daring to preſſe vpon the Lord, further then he in his infinite wiſedome ſhall thinke meete.

c Lam.3.26.

The Vſe. This is alſo to be made vſe of (as the former) as a direction to vs in our prayers. There is great boldneſſe, and entrance with confidence, granted to poore ſinners by Ieſus Chriſt vnto the Throne of grace, there they may freely euen powre out their ſoules, yea and vrge the Lord with his owne promiſes; but yet ſtill with this prouiſo, that nothing bee peremptorily asked, but all ſtill with this limitation, In thy good pleaſure, Lord, doe this or that: O Lord, thou knoweſt what is beſt: bee it according as thou wilt: Frame my deſires to thy owne appointments. A man can neuer haue any true comfort in his repayring to God as a Petitioner, vntill hee hath learned this: what a death will it bee to bee delayed and put off, if one doe not know how to ſubmit his will vnto Gods? When hee hath once attayned to this, then he will reſolue with himſelfe, not being preſently ſupplyed according to his crauing, Surely, God knoweth better then I what is fit for mee: when hee ſeeth it meete for mee to haue that for which I ſue, he will certaynely beſtow it. [d] In the meane time, I will yet giue him thanks, and mine eyes ſhall be euer towards him, [e] and waite vpon him vntill he haue mercy. The ſoule of a ſinner wraſtling and combating againſt ſome ſpeciall corruption which it cannot maſter, or elſe labouring as for life, ſo for ſome comfortable refreſhing by Gods Spirit, not putting in this condition, In thy good pleaſure, Lord; how ſhall it vexe it ſelfe, and how will Satan take aduantage thereby to encreaſe it, and euen to ſwallow it with hopeleſneſſe? So then, this one word, thy good pleaſure, hath taught vs two very neceſſarie duties touching prayer: firſt, To ground all our ſuites vpon grace; and, ſecondly, To referre all our requeſts for the ſucceſſe and iſſue of them to Gods wiſedome. So much of that part of this Verſe, in which Dauid makes petition to God for his Church.

The

The nine and twentieth Lecture.

Build thou the walls of Ieruſalem.

DAVIDS prayer for the ſtate of Gods Church, wee haue heard. Now followeth his ſuite for the Ciuill State. Ieruſalem, it is well knowne, was the chiefe Citie of that Kingdome, whereof Dauid was the Head. It was one of the moſt famous Cities in the World, [a] full of People, great among the Nations, Princeſſe among the Prouinces. In one ſpeciall reſpect Ieruſalem exceeded all the Cities of the World; ſhee was entituled, [b] The Citie of the Lord of Hoſts, the Citie of God. By the walls of Ieruſalem, is here meant (one ſpecialtie of that kind being put for the whole) any thing whatſoeuer neceſſarie for the ſafetie and well-being of Ieruſalem. By building vp theſe walls, is intended a ſupply from God of whatſoeuer wanted, for the good, and proſperous, and flouriſhing eſtate of the Citie, and a confirmation, an vpholding, an augmentation of all that was either preſently had of that nature, or by the bleſſing of God might at any time be conferred afterwards; ſo that the effect of Dauids prayer here is, that the Lord would vouchſafe to the State of Ieruſalem, and ſo withall to the whole body of the Common-wealth, of which Ieruſalem was the head Citie, all neceſſaries for the peace, and ſafetie, and proſperitie thereof. This is the ſenſe. Let vs proceed to an enquirie for matter of Doctrine. Wee may firſt gather hence this generall obſeruation,

The firſt Doctrine.

That euen outward things appertayning to this life, and to our ſtate and welfare in this preſent world, are to bee reputed the gifts of God, and his goodneſſe is for them to bee depended on. Euen the Ciuill and Temporall eſtate of Ieruſalem, is ſought here of God, out of an acknowledgement that it cannot bee well with it, no not in matters belonging to the outward happineſſe thereof, vnleſſe the Lord put to his hand. He is entreated to build the walls thereof: (as who would ſay;) Whatſoeuer man did for the defence and ſafetie of the Towne, yet except God did proſper it, there was no hope it ſhould auaile. God was to be the builder, or elſe the walls could not ſtand. This is right according to that in the Pſalme, [c] Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vaine that build it: except the Lord keepe the Citie, the Keeper watcheth in vaine: all to ſhew, that whatſoeuer is attempted or vndertaken either in Family or Citie, for the rayſing vp of the one, and for preſeruation of the other, it is ſucceſſeleſſe, vnproſperous, vnleſſe the Lord doe giue his bleſſing thereunto. The walls of Iericho could not ſaue-gard it from the inuaſion of Ioſhua; when God was pleaſed to forſake it, at the [d] ſound of the Trumpets, and the ſhouting ſhouting of the people, the wall fell downe flat: when God had laid his curſe vpon it, and adiudged it to eternall ruine, iudgement followed; whoſoeuer tooke vpon him to reſtore it: as may appeare by comparing togeher *Ioſh.*6.26. with 1.Kings 16.34. How ſafe were the Iſraelites, during their abode in the Wilderneſſe, notwithſtanding they then dwelled in tents, and had not thoſe ordinarie defences of walls and trenches which Cities haue; the Lord was to them as an Eagle to her yong ones, [c] Ouer whom ſhee ſtretcheth out her wings, taketh them and beareth them on her wings: he was to them as a wall of fire round about, according to that phraſe, *Zac.*2.5. How admirably and beyond opinion, did the walls of Ieruſalem riſe vp after the captiuitie, when God was pleaſed to proſper the buſineſſe. Great oppoſition there was to it, and many meanes vſed to diſhearten the people in their courſe, and to breake off the worke, but [f] God brought their counſell to nought: and the Hand of God was therein ſo apparant, that the enemies of the builders were afrayd, and their courage fayled them; ſo they knew (ſaith the Text) [g] that the worke was wrought by God. On the other ſide, when God was their aduerſary, ſoone was the defence of the height of the walls brought downe. I remember that ſpeech of Ieremies, how foretelling the deſolation of Ieruſalem, for the more affecting of the people, that they might be brought to a conceiuing of the deſolation threatned, as if it were preſent, he doth direct his ſpeech to the enemies, as if they had euen then beene beſieging the Towne: [h] Climbe vp their walls, take away their Battlements, for they are not the Lords: as if he would ſay, Doubt you not of the taking of Ieruſalem, becauſe of the height and thickneſſe of their walls, feare you not the Turrets and the Battlements that are about it, they are not now the Lords as heretofore, hee hath giuen ouer to protect them, goe on therefore the victory is yours, it ſhall bee an eaſie matter for you to deſtroy them. The Scripture ſaith, [i] Niniueth was a great Citie. An Hiſtorian reports that the wals were in height an hundred foot, and the bredth thereof ſo thicke, that vpon them three Carts might meete together; Towres it had one thouſand fiue hundred, the height of each of which was two hundred foote; yet God ſaith to and touching Niniueth; [k] All thy ſtrong Cities ſhall be like the Figge tree of the firſt ripe Figs, which if they be ſhaken, doe by and by fall into the mouth of the eater. Theſe few ſpecialties I haue noted, in alluſion to the words of my Text, concerning Walls, to ſhew how ſufficient a defence the Lord is in himſelfe, and of himſelfe ſimply to a people without walls, how ſtrong and proſperous the walls be which God bleſſeth, and how little auaile there is in them without the Lord. It is eaſie to ſhew how all the outward bleſſings of a ſtate are of the Lord. [l] He makes the barres of the Gates ſtrong, and ſets peace in the borders: [m] He maketh warres to ceaſe. [n] It is by him that Kings reigne, and Princes decree Iuſtice. [o] He makes the Subiects plenteous in goods, in the fruit of their bodies, and in the fruit of their cattell, and in the fruit of their ground. As it is in the ſtate of the Commonwealth, ſo in mens priuate eſtates: all appurtenances to their outward wel-

wel-being, it is from the Lord that they are to be expected. [p] It is only his blessing that maketh rich. No successe nor comfort in a mans endeuours and vndertakings, vnlesse he prosper them. Cannot he make that after much sowing, there shall bee brought in but little; and when that little is come in, cannot he blow vpon it, and make all ones gettings to be as money [q] put vp into a broken Bagge? How easie for him to [r] make the heauen ouer the head to be brasse, and the earth yron: or [s] the seede to become rotten vnder the clods: the very beasts may bee made to mourne, [t] and the heards of cattell to pine away, because they haue no pasture. And be it that all things prosper according to mans desire, in regard it returns into a mans power the expected increase, yet still there is neede to looke vp to God: for is there not yet space for the iudgement to bee executed threatned, [u] Thy Oxe shall be slaine before thine eyes, and thou shalt not eate thereof, &c. When a man comes to the very point of enioying all, yet the hand of the Lord may be reached out, as once vpon the Israelits, against whom, [x] While the flesh was yet betwixt their teeth, before it was chewed, the wrath of the Lord was kindled, that they were smitten with an exceeding plague: or what if that a man escape all this, and doe both feede and clothe himselfe with his portion, yet still God hath a plague; [y] Yee eate, but you haue not inough, you drinke, but you are not filled: you clothe you, but you bee not warme. Yea, and when all those formerly named be escaped, the arme of the Lord is not shortned that hee cannot punish; [z] hee can send leanenesse into a mans soule: hee can cause that [a] which is stored vp, to bee reserued to the owners for their hurt: hee can disappoint a mans hope for conferring it to posterity [b] a strange man shall eate it vp. So that it is plaine, that all outward blessings appertayning either to the generall state of the Commonwealth, or to the particular state of priuate families and persons, are of God. Dauid had cause of the Lord to seeke the setling and protection of Ierusalems Walls. Well might hee erect them, but to no end in the earth for the benefite of the people and inhabitants, except the Lord did prosper them.

This teacheth vs a duty, first, as wee are interessed into the common good: secondly, as wee are considerable apart for our domesticall and personall estates. First, As we are parts of the ciuill body, and lims of the Cōmonwealth, we are here taught in whom to place our hope, and vpon whom principally to depend, and to whom especially to be thankfull, for the common fauours of peace, protection, safety from enemies, gouernement, magistracie, &c. Here is that of the Psalme very fit, [c] some trust in chariots, some in horses, &c. but we will remember the name of the Lord our God: that is, some rely for these things, vpon the meanes, vpon the arme of flesh, vpon men, munition, walls, ships, the multitude of souldiers, the valour of Captaines, and ascribe the continuance and encrease of all their ciuill happinesse to these secondary causes; but our eyes shall bee euer towards the Lord, him will we account our [d] Rocke, and our Fortresse, in him will wee relie as our shield, as the horne also of our saluation, and our refuge. This should bee our minde for this matter: what are walls, walls, when [e] the day of the Lord shall be vpon euery high Towre, and, euery strong wall? What is a nauie of ships, when the Lord shall breake them in pieces, as he did the Fleete of Iehoshaphat at [f] Eziongaber? What are bowes, and speares, and chariots, when he shall breake the first, cut the second, and burne the latter in [g] the fire? What are Souldiers, when he shall make them [h] to become like women, and [i] their hearts faint? What is a populous armie, if hee shall cause [k] fiue to chase an hundred or an hundred to put ten thousand to flight? What are wise Councellors, and men of experience, when hee shall either take them [l] away, or [m] turne their counsels into folly? Thus Scripture makes it plaine, that although such particulars as these are not to bee despised, nor set at naught, yet still we must consider the vanitie of them without the Lord. In the vse of these God must be sought, and in the successe of these, God must be acknowledgd; [n] Through thee haue wee thrust backe our aduersaries: by thy Name haue we trodden downe them that rose against vs. I will not trust in my Bow, neither can my Sword saue me: But thou hast saued vs from our aduersaries, and hast put them to confusion that hate vs: Therefore will wee praise God continually. Here then must be our principall care, that we may keepe God on our side: [o] If he be on our side, Who can be against vs? The way to keepe him our friend, is, to make conscience of obedience to him, and to beware of prouoking him by presumptuous sins. No Canon can be so able to batter downe the walls of a Citie, as the sinnes of the inhabitants. It was Balaams pollicie to teach Balac the King of Moab, desiring to do hurt to the Israelites in the Wildernesse, to indeuour by some meanes to draw them to sinne against their God: hee saw no other plot could preuaile against them, vntill they fell into some notorious [p] wickednesse. And that speech of God to Ioshuah is very obserueable for this purpose: [q] Israel hath sinned, and therefore Israel cannot stand before the enemies. Wee haue the more cause to wonder at the goodnesse of God towards vs in this nation, inasmuch as though we haue filled the Land with filthinesse euen from corner to corner, yet God hath not laid waste our Ierusalem, but hath made vs a spectacle to the world in regard of the blessings, and peace, and victory, and preseruation from hostile attempts, for well onwards vpon threescore yeeres. He hath not dealt so with euery Nation. We haue hitherto beene but as lookers on vpon others troubles; the Lord hath euen compassed vs with fauour, as with a shield. Let vs not be high-minded, but feare. This mercy of God cannot alwayes so continue, if wee goe on so to prouoke the holy one of Israell, by an high-hand sinning against him, especially by our vnthankefulnesse for the Gospell of peace which is preached in our streets: he hath many wayes whereby to bring vs downe, he can [r] breake downe our hedges, so that all they which passe by the way shall plucke vs: hee can [s] bring a Nation vpon vs from farre, which shall eate our Harueste, and our bread, deuoure our Sonnes and our Daughters, eate vp our Sheepe and Bullocks, destroy our fenced Cities wherein we trust: he can inflict that vpon vs which hee threatned of old vpon the Iewes, [t] that the stranger

which is amongst vs shall clime aboue vs vp on high, and we shall come downe beneath below: he can send [u] wicked Rulers, which shall be amongst vs as roaring Lyons, and as hungrie Beares: [x] Kings which shall take our Fields, and our best Commodities, and giue them to their Fauourites: so shall our [y] Inheritance be turned to Strangers, and our Houses to Aliants. Thus and more grieuously then thus shall the Lord doe vnto vs, if there be not an hastening to preuent his furie by repentance: or if these particulars mentioned come not vpon vs, yet cannot he send some such man-eating Pestilence, as that our [z] Cities and Townes which came out by thousands, shall leaue but an hundred: and that which went forth by an hundred, shall leaue but ten. God hath Store-houses of iudgements whereby to bring [a] downe euen wonderfully the glorie and pompe of our Ieruſalem. It is said that Cyrus that Persian Monarch, when as one of his specially respected Horses, was drowned in a Riuer called Gyndes, he threatned to cut out so many Channels into which that Riuer should be deriued, that it should lose both depth, and name, and glorie: Surely, if those large Flouds of Gods great fauours to the Kingdome, doe swallow vs vp in securitie, and doe drowne that thankefulnesse, and that conscience of duty which we should requite him with, he can easily deriue this our happinesse into many Channels, conuey it into many hands, and depriue vs both of the name and glorie which we haue thereby. Oh that we were wise euen in this our day, to vnderstand the things which concerne our peace: surely, by how much the more the Lord hath made vs honourable amongst Nations, by so much the more hee will make vs an hissing and a by-word to the world, if we doe not make haste to out-cry the cry of our sinnes, by the cries and teares of true repentance.

Thus for the duty which we learne out of this first Doctrine respectiuely to our state, as we be members of the state. Now for our owne priuate and more particular estates, hereby we are also taught the like. For euen the commodities that are of a more priuate nature, are from God also to bee looked for; our house-hold walls if hee build not, they cannot stand vp and flourish to our comfort. I know many a carnall man, many a Nabal, hath these temporall things in a large measure; [b] Their houses are peaceable and without feare, their seede is established in their sight, with them and their generation before their eyes: [c] Their Children haue inough, and leaue the rest of their substance for their Children: yet without the Lord there is a secret curse goeth with it, which sticks as close vnto it, as the leprosie of Gehazi, and makes all their fulnesse to become a [d] preparing of them to the day of slaughter: what should bee our duty therefore but this, to acknowledge our dependance vpon the opening of the Lords Hand, by seeking all these things from him, and by crauing of him to blesse the labours of our hands vnto vs, and to make our courses prosperous. Note here how this vrgeth the necessitie in priuate families, of the morning and euening Sacrifice of prayse and thanksgiuing. These Seruices should bee the entring into, and the conclusion of all endeuours for these outward things. Certainely, where this is neglected, either either buſineſſes ſuccede not, men doe not thriue and goe on as they would; or elſe if they doe attaine to their ends, and that things doe encreaſe vpon them as they would, their fulneſſe becommeth a very poyſon to them, [c] their very eaſe ſlayeth them, and their proſperity deſtroyeth them, We may ſee in experience, how many Worldlings that ſhew no ſignes of any feeling of Religion, or of any true ſeaſoning by grace, when they grow full and fat in the world, how ſometimes they are puniſhed with baſeneſſe and vnworthineſſe of diſpoſition, that they haue no fruition of that which they haue, God [f] giueth them no power to eate thereof. The poore Labourer with his Groate or three pence a day, hath more contentment then they with their hands full and Coffers; their ſacietie will ſcarce [g] ſuffer them to ſleepe. Sometimes God raiſeth them vp thriftleſſe and waſtefull children, who ſcatter as faſt as they haue raked: no man that notes the courſe of things, but he may ſee plainely the euidences of Gods curſe vpon ſuch as ſhew not themſelues to ſeeke the Lord, and to waite on him for theſe outward things. And ſtill when men bind not themſelues to this duty, they runne into theſe extremities; when goods encreaſe, they are apt, as the Prophet ſpeaks [h] to Sacrifice to their nets, &c. and to ſay [i] my power, and the ſtrength of mine owne hand, hath prepared me this abundance: when any croſſe comes, then they are ſtroken dead, and know not which way to looke for any comfort; then they rage againſt meanes, and ſecond cauſes, and are ready to doe as fooliſhly as Stories ſay Xerxes that great King of Perſia did, who vnderſtanding that the Bridge which he had made ouer the Helleſpont (a Sea ſo called) was broken downe with the Waues, cauſed three hundred ſtripes to be giuen to the Ocean Sea by way of reuenge: in like manner wee are apt to wreake our teene vpon the inſtruments and occaſions of our grieuances, becauſe not being accuſtomed to waite vpon the Lord, and to commit our wayes to him, we cannot tell how when a croſſe commeth to looke to the hand of him that ſmites. Thus is the firſt point. They be outward bleſſings which Dauid principally intends here in ſpeaking of Building vp the Walls of Ieruſalem. Euen things of that nature muſt be ſought of God: whither for the Common-weale, or for our priuate ſtates, to the Lord we muſt looke, vpon him we muſt waite, if we deſire a bleſſing. Walls of Cities are no Walls, vnleſſe the Lord eſtabliſh them; and in priuate eſtates, haue no true proſperitie, if God doe not giue his bleſſing. Men doe but [k] euen weary themſelues for very vanitie. It is but with them as with him, whom they wonted anciently to picture, labouring hard in the winding of a Rope, and an Aſſe ſtanding behind, cropping it off as faſt as he did twiſt it. So farre of the generall Doctrine. Now followeth the more ſpeciall, and it is thus.

The ſecond Doctrine.

That he who is a good man, is alſo well and carefull affected to the common good. As I ſaid in the laſt Sermon, that Dauid in regard of his prayer for Zion, was a patterne of ſuch affections as Gods Children haue to Gods Church; ſo now I ſay againe, he is in this branch of his ſuite for the Ciuill ſtate, an example of the diſpoſition of a good man towards the

the Common-wealth. I know that mainely and principally Dauid being a King, he is herein a patterne for Kings, and ſheweth in how great eſteeme they ſhould hold the publike good, and how deare it ought to be vnto them. According whereto it is truely ſaid, that this is one principall difference betwixt a good King and a Tyrant, that a good King thinketh the common intereſt his chiefeſt particular, a Tyrant will ſtill frame the Common-weale to aduance his particular. The former acknowledgeth himſelfe ordained for his people, the other thinks his people ordained for him, a prey to his paſſions and inordinate appetites. So Dauid here diſcouered the affections that ought to bee in a good King to his Subiects: which ſhewed themſelues in him not now onely, but at other times, and vpon other occaſions alſo. I remember when the trouble began through the inſurrection of Abſolom, Dauid was then in Ieruſalem; and he choſe rather to ſeeke to ſaue himſelfe by flight, then to hazard the ſtate of the Towne, by remaining there to bee beſieged. So tender was he ouer the people, as not to bring the chiefe Citie into danger through [l] him. At another time, how did his heart ſorrow within him when he beheld ſo many of his Subiects ſwept away ſuddenly with the Peſtilence; he himſelfe in his owne perſon was employed in the ſeruice of making attonement, and knowing his owne guilt at that time in regard of the ſin he had committed in numbring the people, he prayed. [m] Behold, I haue ſinned, yea, I haue done wickedly: but theſe Sheepe what haue they done? let thy Hand, I pray thee, bee againſt mee and my Fathers houſe. Thus was Dauid affected as a good King, more deſiring the publique good, then his owne particular: but hee is herein alſo an example in the generall to all, and declares by his example here, how euery good man ought to regard the common cauſe and buſineſſe of the publique State. When the Iewes were to be carried captiue into Babylon, they had a Commandement from God by the Mouth of IEREMIE, [n] to ſeeke the proſperitie of the City, whither God cauſed them to be carried captiues, and to pray vnto the Lord for it; in the peace thereof was their peace. If they were ſo to reſpect that ſtate, wherein they liued in a kind of bondage, and by which they were ſubdued; how thinke wee became it them to be diſpoſed towards the Common-wealth, whereof they were borne members. It is Salomons charge, in the giuing whereof hee was guided by Gods Spirit, not to meddle with them that are ſeditious, or deſirous of alterations and changes in the State, according to their priuate [o] humors. A good man ought to haue no manner of commerce with ſuch, neither partaking with them in ſociety, nor being like to them in diſpoſition. The Apoſtle numbreth ſeditions (vnder which may bee well compriſed all courſes preiudiciall to the common benefit) among thoſe [p] works of the Fleſh, the doers whereof ſhall not inherit the Kingdome of God. How are they cryed out vpon by the Prophet, and threatned with the iudgement of God, who were all for their owne priuate, euery one looking to his owne way, for his owne aduantage, and for his owne purpoſe: they cared not how it fared with the generall, or who ſmarted, ſo that they might be fat and flouriſhing: ſuch were thoſe ſpoken againſt by [q] Ieremie, and [r] Amos. How did Nehemiah take vp thoſe after the returne from captiuitie, who looking onely to their particular, enriched themſelues by the pawnes and forfeitures of the poore Commons, who were compelled to take vp money to pay the Kings tribute vpon their Lands; and then there falling a dearth withall, they were diſabled to redeeme the things which they had pledged, and ſo were in the high way, they and theirs to be vndone; That which you doe (ſaid that worthie Nehemiah, to them that were principall in this courſe) is not good: Ought you not to walke in the feare of our God, for the reproch of the Heathen our enemies? ſhould you not more reſpect the credit of our profeſſion, and not make your ſelues and your Religion ſcandalous amongſt thoſe that are enemies thereunto? therein ſhewing that manifeſtly which I now vrge, how good men ought not to ſeeke their owne profit further then may ſtand with the aduancement of the common benefit. There is no walking in the feare of God, where that care is left [f] out. Did it not trouble Mordecai, and the reſt of the Iewes liuing vnder the Emperour Ahaſueroſh, that they ſhould haue ſuch an imputation put vpon them, that it was not for the Kings profit to ſuffer them; as if they had beene ſo regardleſſe of the publique weale: whereas indeede they liued vſefully to the State, that it would haue beene a loſſe to the King, if according to the plot of their Accuſer, they had beene cut [t] off. It was prophecied touching the members of Chriſts Church vnder the Goſpell, that they [u] ſhould breake their Swords into Mattocks, and their Speares into Sithes: inſtruments of Warre, tending to the hurt of others, into Implements of Husbandrie for the benefit of others. He cannot be a good Chriſtian, that holds not himſelfe bound [x] to bee a Seruant vnto others by loue. A Shooter, who afarre off aymeth at a Marke in the midſt of a White; hee ſeeth the White, but not the Marke; hee cannot hit the Marke which hee ſeeth not, except hee hit the White which hee ſeeth. It is applyed thus; God is the marke, vnto whom all our loue, and whole bent of all our affections ought to ayme; Man is (as it were) the White which wee ſee, God the Marke which wee cannot ſee; wee can neuer hit God the Marke which wee ſee not, vnleſſe wee touch Man whom wee doe ſee. So that there can bee no ſinceritie of affection to God, when due reſpects to men are wanting. Humane ſocietie is that, which is ordained for vs by our regard to it, to make it to appeare what wee are towards God. The ſeuerall Lines which are drawne from a Circle to the Centre, or pricke in the midſt, the neerer they come one to another, the neerer alſo to the Centre: ſo the neerer men that liue together in one common ciuill fellowſhip, are ioyned in their mutual reſpect each to others good, the neerer are they vnto Chriſt, Euery man for himſelfe, is one of the principles of Atheiſme, not of Chriſtianitie. It is not vnworthy the marking, how God hath fitted euery man for ſome certaine imployment or calling; which alſo is ſuch, that (well conſidered) will ſhew that a man is purpoſely ſet in it, thereby to bee an helper forward of the common good. It is a manifeſt abuſe of a calling, when a man demeanes himſelfe ſo therein, as one that regardeth no body but himſelfe. Thus I hope it is manifeſt, that no man can truely be termed a good man, vnleſſe he bee (as we phraſe it) a good common-wealths man. Dauid is not vnmindfull wee ſee hereof the generall ſtate: the proſperitie of Ieruſalem, is one part of his principall deſires. It was the with and prayer of thoſe that were Witneſſes at the eſpouſals of Booz vnto Ruth, that y he might doe worthily in Ephratath and be famous in Bethelem: that hee might bee one that ſhould ſeeke to doe good in the place and ſocietie where he dwelt. y Ruth.4.11.

If this be a truth, as I truſt it is manifeſt to vs all that it is, that a good man carrieth a reſpectiue affection to the common good; will it not contract and draw the number of good men into a narrow roome, or as the Scriptures ſpeech is, into a z ſhort count? How are wee all generally ſet for our owne priuate behoofe, how it fareth with the generall wee reſpect little, ſo that our particular may goe on. Let it bee but marked in the Countrey ordinarily, how backeward and ſlow men are in things wherein the common commoditie is engaged; as in the matters of High-wayes, Bridges, and things of that nature: how little is done in thoſe kinds, and how little of that little, without meere inforcement. Note it againe, how men ſhew themſelues diſpoſed in the more priuate affaires of Pariſhes, for ordering the buſineſſe of the poore, for preuenting the burdens which fall many times vpon thoſe ſocieties; you ſhall find for the moſt part, nothing worſe managed then that wherein many are engaged. Euery mans Eye is ſo much homeward, that therewhile the publique is neglected. Looke out further into mens dealings and tradings in the World; where ſhall you find a man that tyeth himſelfe to this, not to labour to his owne profit further then it may well agree with the generall behooſe. Merchants, Husbands, Craftſmen, doe wee find them ſo ſcrupulous, as not to runne any courſe, but that by which together with themſelues, the publique ſocietie may receiue commoditie? Nay, let all goe how it will, ſo that wee may aduance our owne particular: this is the moſt ordinary reſolution. What doe we reſpect the walls of Ieruſalem, ſo that our owne walls may bee ſtrong. Let vs not thinke theſe things to bee no matters of Religion; or if they bee, no great tranſgreſſions. Surely there is no Religion, where the good and proſperitie of Ieruſalem is not thought on; no true goodneſſe, where the common benefit is not equally deſired with ones owne: nay, where there is not a diſpoſition to neglect ones owne, to promote the generall. How mought I extend and ſtretch out this point further, conſidering this diſ-regard of the publique profit of Ieruſalem, is not only to be found in priuate ordinarie perſons, but euen in thoſe alſo that are appointed by place and function to bee the Miniſters of God for the peoples wealth; I meane Magiſtrates and men in authoritie. Wee find but few (if any) that are for Ieruſalem indeede that be men of courage, ſet for the common good and comfort of the Countrey. How vnwilling are many to haue cauſes come before them, how loth to bee troubled (as they call it,) how are matters carryed more for fauour and for profit to their inſtruments and attendants many times, then with reſpect to the generall aduantage. Mention is made in Story of one Vercouius, it was in the dayes of the Romane Emperour Alexander Seuerus: he abuſed the fauour of the Emperour, and tooke much money of diuers to preferre their ſuites, but did them no good. When the Emperour vnderſtood it, hee cauſed him to bee hanged vp into a Chimney (as ſome haue it;) or as others, to bee tyed in publique to a ſtake, and there to bee ſtifled with Smoke; an Herald proclayming to the people, Smoke hee ſold, and with Smoke hee is puniſhed. It ſeemes that Iuſtice is too much turned into Smoke: many ſittings and meetings in the Countrey, puts vs in hope of ſome reforming of diſorders, but all turnes into Smoke, and vaniſheth into nothing. Now if men careleſſe of the common good, are worthily taxeable with this Doctrine; what are they who are the profeſſed Horſe-leaches and ſuckers of the Common-wealth, ſuch as make no other vſe of Princes fauours, but by Monopolies and Impoſitions to enrich themſelnes: ſuch are to the ciuill State like theſe Scorpions, with which Reboboam threatned [a] to correct his Subiects, inſtead of the Rods wherewith his Father chaſtned them. Theſe are ſomewhat like thoſe, of whom mention is made in the life of Aurelian the Emperour, of whom it was ſaid, That by them the good and honeſt Emperour, who might onely know what they pleaſed to informe him, was euen bought and ſold. This is to the Common-wealth like the pyning away of the body by famine: when the body is hunger-bitten, there is a kind of proceeding by degrees; the ſeuerall parts they craue from the Veines, the Veines from the Liuer, the Liuer from the Stomacke; ſo long as there is any thing to bee ſucked from the Stomacke, life continueth; but when that ſtore is emptied, there followeth a moſt miſerable wringing and tearing of the entrals, and a wofull languiſhing of the whole. So in theſe caſes: here is one degree pulls from another to ſatisfie the hunger of the greedy and vnſatiable Monopoliſts; ſo that yet the miſerie is not felt: but when at laſt there is no more to be found in the Stomacke, to bee paſſed into the Liuer, and ſo into the Veines, and by them into the parts and limmes, then it will pinch. Surely, our abuſing of our fulneſſe into wantonneſſe, hath iuſtly deſerued ſuch violent euacuations. It is one of the preſages of Ieruſalems vtter ruine by the Babylonians, [b] The people ſhall be oppreſſed one of another, and euery one by his Neighbour. Thus haue I thought to giue a little touch of ſome particulars, manifeſting the paucitie and ſcarcitie of men of ſuch hearts as Dauid here, faithfully affected to the proſperitie of Ieruſalem. Oh, that renowmed ſpirit of Eſther, reſoluing to engage her ſelfe for the common ſafetie; the courſe which ſhe meant to take, was ſuch as could not bee without ſome hazard of her life: yet, [c] I will goe to the King, though it be more then Law will beare me out in: and if I periſh, I periſh. It was as excellent a ſpeech of the neuer-enough-commended Nehemiah, when there was a plot against him to doe him hurt, and he was counselled by some to flie into the Temple, and there to stand vpon his guard; [d] should such a man as I flee? Who is he, being as I am, that would goe into the Temple to liue? I would the same mind might be in all those, who are of gifts, and meanes, and in place to promote the common good; namely, to say euery man when he seeth some discouragement by reason of charge, or disgrace, or of no great hope of preuailing; should such a man as I draw backe? Why should any thing be so deare vnto me as the publique good? Well fare that noble-spirited Souldier, that hauing lost both Armes and Legs in seruice, yet hauing nothing but the trunke of his body remayning to him, yet would needs be in the breach. If I can doe no other thing, saith he, yet perhaps I may keepe off a blow, or blunt the edge of some sword, drawne to the foyling and wounding of some other. If a man cannot doe the good he would, yet it shall be well if he be a stop to some mischiefe which might otherwise haue preuailed.

Now, as the last day, after perswading to haue the state of GODS Church in due regard, I shewed how our respect that way might bee testified; so now, hauing laboured to reforme in vs this great sinne of carelesnesse for the publique Weale, I hold it meet in the next place to giue direction, for the declaring of our good affection herein. Let mee shew this especially, whereto especially our prayers for Ierusalem must ayme, and what be the chiefe outward blessings which we must craue of God for the Common-wealth. They be these principally:

The speciall blessings to be craued for the Common-wealth.

First, A succession of godly Kings. Gouernement is in it selfe so necessarie in a Common-wealth, that wise men haue euer preferred Tyrannie before Anarchie; haue thought it better a Common-wealth to bee gouerned by a Tyrant, then to haue no Soueraigne Magistrate at all. Nothing can be worse, or more confused, then when euery man shall bee left to doe what is right in his owne eyes: as we may see in the storie of the Iudges of Israel, what notorious outrages were among them, in the dayes wherein there was no [e] King. Next it is meet, that as there bee Kings and supreme Commanders, so they bee godly also: much of the Common-wealths happinesse stands in the godlinesse of the King thereof. One good man, though he be but a priuate man, is a meanes of much good to a Common-wealth: [f] The innocent shall deliuer the Iland: much more shall a good man be for the benefit of a Kingdome, being in the place of highest eminency: not his authoritie onely shall doe much to the furtherance of godlinesse, but euen his very example shall draw many. The actions of Leaders are a great spurre vnto their Followers: so farre preuaileth this, that euen (as one saith truely) to follow the vices of Kings, is held obedience. It is said when Alexander King of Macedon liued, because he was a Warriour, euery man would be a Souldier: and in Rome, because Augustus Cæsar delighted in Poetrie, therefore he was accounted No-body he that could not make a Verse: so frameable are the Subiects to the manners of their Princes. Wee reade of a dispute once once among Philosophers, Whether an Armie of Lyons, a Hart being their Captayne; or an Armie of Harts, a Lyon being their Captayne, were more powerfull; and it was determined for the Armie of Harts following the Lyon; to shew what vertue is infused into the Followers by the Leaders. When Ieroboam entertayned Idolatrie, g hee made all Israel to sinne: so powerable is the example of the higher powers. Yet further, as gouernement is a blessing, the gouernement by a godly King a greater blessing, so euen this is improued, when there is a succession thereof. It was a great blessing promised to Dauid, that h God would stablish the Kingdome in his line: and that i there should not want a man of his race to sit vpon the Throne of Israel. So was it a fauour to the State, when God said by the Prophet, that vpon condition the Sabbath were duely kept, there should be a continuall succession k of Kings and Princes sitting vpon DAVIDS Throne.

g 2.King. 3. 3.

k *Ier.*17.24,25.

Secondly, Benefit, good and wise Counsellers, faithfull to God, and to their Soueraigne. l Where no Counsell is, the people fall: but where many Counsellers are, there is health. m The wisedome of such is better then strength, yea then weapons of Warre. Euen Kings going aright, are sometimes misse-led by naughtie Counsellers, as is said of Ioash one of the Kings of Iudah: n He did vprightly all the dayes of IEHOIADA the Priest, but when he was dead, the Princes of Iudah came and did reuerence to him, and he harkned to them, and so left the House of the Lord, and serued Groues and Idols.

m *Eccl.*9.16,18

n 2.*Chro.*24.2. 17, 18.

Thirdly (Not to make a particular branch of euery seuerall blessing) this is also to bee prayed for, that there may bee a diligent and faithfull execution of good and wholesome Lawes. Godly Lawes which are grounded vpon the generall equitie of Gods Word, are the very sinewes of a Common-wealth: if there be neuer so many of this kind, yet if they be let to lie like the sword of Goliah lapt in a cloth behind the Ephod, and not vsed, nor executed by those inferiour Magistrates which are entrusted with the administration thereof, it cannot goe well with the Common-wealth. It is one of Machiuels rules, how a Conquerour might weaken a subdued Kingdome, euen to lay the raynes on euery ones necke, and to allow the people to liue euery one as hee list in a lawlesse fashion. Indeed the next way to dissolue a State.

Fourthly, Here also because the welfare of the Common-wealth, is lapped vp in the peace and flourishing of Gods Church, wee are also to desire and pray for the encrease and continuance of faithfull Ministers: of whom, what base or vile opinion soeuer the world hath, yet they are in Scripture called o the Chariots and Horsemen of Israel. The prayers and paynes of such preuaile much for the common safetie.

o 2.*King.*2.12. & 13,14.

Fiftly and Lastly, here must likewise bee remembred, that God may please to linke the Subiects in loue one to another, and to frame to loyaltie of affection to their Soueraigne. No ordinarie strength comparable to that of a societie dwelling p together: that is, combined together in sinceritie of affection: and what could (vnder God) more comfort Da- uid the King in his troubles occasioned by Absolons mutinie, then to see how his Subiects were affected to him, when as they marching out against Absolom, hee being readie to goe with others, the people answered, ¶ Thou shalt not goe forth: for if we flee away they will not regard vs, neither will they passe for vs, though halfe of vs be slaine: but thou art now worth ten thousand of vs. Here is much matter which it were easie to enlarge: I content my selfe to haue thus named these things in briefe; for a direction to vs in our prayers for the prosperitie and happinesse of the State. These being indeed the walls of Ierusalem, these the strength and firmenesse of a Kingdome; where there is a King ruling godly, Counsellers aduising wisely, Lawes directing wholesomely, Magistrates putting those Lawes in execution diligently, Ministers faithfully instructing, Subiects affected either to other louingly, and to the authoritie vnder which they liue loially; How can that State but flourish? how could we but see the wealth of Ierusalem all our dayes in the concurrence of all these? Remember we then how to stretch out our thoughts in our prayers vpon these specialties: where we perceiue a want, let vs entreat God earnestly; where wee are sensible of our hauing either all or any of these, let vs thanke heartily, and pray for continuance and establishment effectually. Thus shall wee best imitate Dauid in this suite. The season of the yeere doth fit well to call vpon vs to a drawing of our thoughts to these things. This is now the second of that Moneth, vpon the fift day hereof we know there is a solemne assembly by Law established, whereon to reuiue the memorie of Gods miraculous preseruing to vs all the forenamed specialties, by defeating that hellish conspiracy of pretended Catholiques: had that preuailed, wee had lost all: King, Succession, Counsaile, Magistracie, mutuall Peace, and had beene a very world of confusion. To honest and well-disposed men there had remayned nothing but wofull matter of all calamitie. Wo bee to vs that this is in a manner so cleane forgotten of vs; our affections are growne dull and slacke in renuing the memorie of such a mercy: and either we passe ouer the time when it comes, in a kinde of senseless manner, scarse remembring it; or else if wee put on a shew of noting it, with some outward complement, wee are like those of whom the Philosopher by way of checke, who when they met to offer sacrifice to Health, did then banquet most riotously against Health. So when wee seeme to thanke God for his fauour towards Ierusalem, by Prophanenesse, and Riot, and Epicurisme wee doe most prouoke his anger and wrath against Ierusalem. I thought it not amisse to giue a note hereof vpon this occasion, to taxe our vnthankfulnesse euidenced in this as in other things: let vs remember this in a word, there is no Religion, no power of godlinesse in that heart, which is not well affected to the peace and prosperitie of Ierusalem, praying for it, reioycing in it, shewing thankfulnesse because of it, and labouring to promote and aduance it what he may.

VERS. 19.

Then shalt thou accept the Sacrifices of righteousnesse, euen the burnt Offering and Oblation: then shall they offer Calues vpon thine Altar.

THis Verse sets downe the consequent and gracious issue, of the request made in the former; God vouchsafing fauour vnto Sion, and building vp the walls of Ierusalem; both he shall accept the Seruices and Sacrifices which are tendred and presented to him, and the people also shall bee frequent and cheerefull in his publique worship. This is the order and generall meaning of this Verse. Out of this little which I haue said, this much may appeare; that there is here set downe a twofold issue which was to follow the Lords granting the precedent Prayer. One, Gods acceptance of the seruices performed to him; The other, the peoples forwardnesse in those seruices. Concerning the first. The onely difficultie touching the words, is in that terme, The Sacrifices of Righteousnesse, which we also find, Psalme 4. 6. But the sense is thus cleered in a word. They are called the Sacrifices of Righteousnesse, which are offered rightly, and according to the true intent and meaning, and order of Gods Law. The Law of God is the Rule of Righteousnesse, they are the Sacrifices of Righteousnesse which are presented to God according to this Rule. And this interpretation doth easily reconcile the difference, which may seeme to bee betwixt this Verse and the sixteenth. There Dauid said, God desired no Sacrifice; here hee saith, God shall accept burnt Offering and Oblation: when these Seruices may bee truely called the Sacrifices of Righteousnesse, then God likes of them, and approoues them; for that which is rightly performed according to his owne Prescript, hee cannot but approoue: but when this Righteousnesse wants, and they are nothing but matters of forme and complement, he cannot endure them. This briefly for the meaning. For, as for the words, burnt Offering and Oblation, I thinke it not fit to say much of them. They which know any thing, touching the ancient manner of the peoples worshipping God before Christ, can tell this, that sometime they presented God with some speciall gifts, which were termed Oblations; sometimes they offered Beasts by fire, burning them whole before the Lord vpon Altars: these were termed the burnt Offerings. I come to matter of Doctrine. Thus then,

Sacrifices of Righteousnes, which are.

The first Doctrine.

That it is a great blessing when the seruices which men present and tender vnto God, doe find acceptance with him, and are approued by him.

The

The very course of the place declares this; Dauid nameth this here touching Gods accepting Sacrifices, as an happinesse which would follow vpon the grant of his Petition. If, O Lord, thou shalt please to afford that mercy which I haue craued of thee, this is one speciall good which will ensue, our Sacrifices and Offerings shall bee welcome vnto thee: herein wee shall haue comfort, that that which wee performe to thee thou regardest. It is noted as a speciall fauour, [a] The Lord had respect to HABEL, and to his offering: according as it was a iudgement on the other side, that to CAIN, and to his Offering, he had no regard. So is that, [b] NOAH built an Altar to the Lord, and offered burnt Offerings to the Lord thereupon, and the Lord smelled a sauour of rest. The Seruice and Sacrifice of Noah was as pleasing vnto God, as sweet sauours are delightfull vnto men. The people being instructed in the Psalme, how to pray for their King, among other things are directed to intreat for him this fauour, that [c] God would remember all his Offerings, and turne his burnt offerings into ashes: accept his burnt Sacrifice, saith our reuised Translation; yet with an approbation in the Margent of that ordinarie reading, touching turning it into ashes: in which kind of speaking, some thinke a reference to be to that outward testimonie of approuement, which God sometime afforded to some, in consuming their Sacrifices by extraordinarie fire sent from Heauen, according as it is an old Tradition, that some such thing befell the sacrifice of Abel, when as the flame of Cains sacrifice redounded backe vpon himselfe; but howsoeuer that was (because in a matter not reuealed in Scripture, it is not meet to bee peremptorie) it is manifest that when Moses sacrificed, such a thing there [d] was. So when Elias [e] sacrificed, and when Salomon [f] sacrificed: so that this was the request they were taught to make for the King, that God would manifest himselfe to be an Accepter of his seruices, an Approuer of his deuotions: and this was no fauour of a petie nature. It was to bee the ioynt request of all the people, and that on the behalfe of him who was their King. Note we that speech of [g] Salomons. In it there is a speciall testimonie of Gods indignation against the wicked; His sacrifices and seruices are abomination vnto him: like that in the Prophet, where God telleth [h] some, that his soule doth euen hate their deuotions, they are a burthen vnto him, and he is weary to beare them, he will hide his eyes from the stretching out of their hands, and will not heare their many prayers: againe, it is an euidence of Gods respect to the Righteous, his prayers and seruices of the like nature are acceptable to him, according as in an other place, hee promiseth it as a fauour of some singular note; doing thus and thus, [i] Then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall answere: thou shalt crie, and he shall say, here I am: thou shalt offer thy seruice to me, and I will accept it from thee. When the Apostles had prayed together, [k] the place was shaken where they were assembled together. It is reckoned (by the learned writing vpon that place) that God by this externall signe, was pleased to declare how much he liked of that act of their deuotion; and withall that Gods shewing himselfe to approue thereof, was a speciall ciall fauour. If a man bring a preſent to ſome great Perſonage, and the ſame be accepted kindly, and looked vpon reſpectiuely, it is a great cheering to his ſpirits, it puts him in hope that if he haue any buſineſſe with him, or any ſuite to him, hee ſhall ſpeed therein; according as it would daſh him quite out of countenance, and put him cleane out of heart, if he ſhould behold his gift which he brings, to bee caſt aſide in contempt, to be looked vpon in ſcorne, and to bee refuſed with a kind of diſgrace. It muſt needs be thus in the caſe betwixt God and Man much more. It muſt needs put much life and boldneſſe into a mans ſpirit, when he ſhall be able to aſſure himſelfe, that that which hee doth by way of deuotion and ſeruice, whether it bee praying, or hearing, or communicating, or ſinging and prayſing his Name, is accepted graciouſly, and is [l] in his ſight as the Incenſe, or the euening Sacrifice. [m] Goe, eate thy bread with ioy, and drinke thy wine with a cheerefull heart: for God now accepteth thy works. What can put a man downe when he knowes God approueth of his ſeruices? But when a man hath no aſſurance hereof, theſe and theſe things he doth, heares, prayeth, comes to the Lords board, but whether or no God likes thereof he cannot tell; how can this but aſtoniſh him; whether ſhall hee goe who is not welcome to God? or what can the fauour of all the men in the world doe him good, when the Lord caſts vpon him no reſpect? and if his deuotions be abomination to God, which are the beſt things he either doth or can doe, what may hee thinke of the reſt of his actions, but that they are an heaping vp of wrath againſt the day of vengeance? Thus to lay open the truth and certainty of this Doctrine.

m Eccl.9.7.

The Vſe. The Vſe is not hard to be gathered. For if it be ſuch a bleſſing as I haue ſhewed, to haue ones ſeruices and deuotions which hee performes to God, to find acceptance with God; why ſhould not our hearts be inflamed with the loue and deſire hereof? We make a profeſſion and ſhew of ſeruing God: ſhall we be indifferent whether or no that which we offer to God, be welcome to him? as who would ſay, If he like of it, ſo it is: if he like it not, let him chooſe, and what remedie? Farre bee it wee ſhould be ſo deſperate. We will I know, confeſſe, that it were very groſſe and very vnmeet we ſhould be ſo diſpoſed towards God. Well then, if we acknowledge it to be fit that we ſhould haue reſpect to the ſucceſſe of our religious ſeruices, and doe account it to be a matter of happineſſe and comfort, that God ſhould looke graciouſly on them when we come before him; let vs ſet our ſelues to make enquirie touching this, what way is to be taken, and what courſe to be followed, to the end the Lord may accept that which we preſent our ſelues to him to performe. A rule for this may be fetched euen out of this place, (that we may goe no further:) let this be our care, that our ſeruices which we preſent vnto God, be ſacrifices of Righteouſneſſe, and they cannot miſſe of acceptance with the Lord. Vpon this point let vs inſiſt a little. In opening the meaning of this in the beginning, I ſhewed you generally what is a Sacrifice of Righteouſneſſe, namely, a ſeruice preſented to God according to the rule of of Righteousnesse, which is the Law. Now let vs inquire somewhat more particularly, what the Law of God requires in this case. All that the Law requires in this case, may be reduced to these three heads. First, The state of the person that offereth a sacrifice to God. Secondly, The substance of the thing it selfe which must be offered. Thirdly, The behauiour and carriage in offering.

Three things necessarie to a Sacrifice of Righteousnes.

First, Touching the state of the person, hee must bee one who is himselfe in fauour with God. A mans person must first be accepted, before his gift can please. It is an ordinarie obseruation vpon those words, God [n] had respect to ABEL, and to his offering: to Abel first, and then to his offering: the offering was accepted for the mans sake, not the man for the offerings sake. Now a mans person cannot please God, vnlesse he be in Christ: [o] without faith, it is impossible to please God: and Faith is that by which a man is ingrafted into Christ, and made one with him. To be in Christ, and to be in the Faith, are all one. This Faith, which thus incorporates into Christ, is (as we often heare) begotten in the heart by the preaching of the Word. A man shall know himselfe to be in Christ, by that care and conscience, which he feeles in himselfe to walke so, as becomes one that hath learned Christ. He walkes as a man that hath learned Christ, whose heart is in the feare of God continually; and so, liues not in the seruice of any knowne sinne: he goeth not on contentedly and purposely without remorse, without strife, without resistance in any such way, as hee doth either vnderstand, or suspect to bee euill before God; nay, he is iealous ouer his courses, and carefull to trie his wayes, that hee may be sure there is not in him any raigning wickednesse. If a course bee doubtfull, so that it may be there may be somewhat said for it, yet to bee sure of not offending God through willingnesse or neglect, he will vtterly forbeare it. This is a walking as one who hath learned Christ. So then, to this now we are come. The first thing required in a Sacrifice of Righteousnesse (none but which God will accept) is, that the person comming to God to tender seruice to him, bee such an one, who by a conscionable course, and by binding himselfe to such a kind of conuersation as becommeth the Gospell, sheweth himselfe to be by Faith ingrafted into Christ. Whence it followeth, that so long as a man liueth vnder the obedience and seruice of any sinne, not striuing against it, not grieuing for it, not making conscience to reforme it, he cannot offer vnto God any acceptable seruice: such an one is that wicked person of whom Salomon saith, that [p] his sacrifice is an abomination to God; and that [q] sinner whom God will not heare. Excellent is that saying of Dauids to this purpose: [r] If I regard wickednesse in my heart, God will not heare me; that is, [s] If my heart be fully set in me to doe euill, so that [t] there is some sinne which is sweet in my mouth, which I fauour and will not forsake: it is so farre from troubling me in hanging so fast on mee, that I resolue rather like SALOMONS [u] Drunkard, to seeke it yet still; surely, what shew of deuotion soeuer I shall make, God will not only not regard mee, but hee will iudge me as an hypocrite. What hast thou to doe, saith God, to declare

This one thing is inough to turne all our ſeruices and deuotions into ſinne, and to make them euen to ſtinke, and to bee vile and lothſome before the Lord, if wee liue in the practice of any ſpeciall ſinne: hee who doth not make conſcience of an vniuerſall reformation, and reſolue with himſelfe, to renounce and abandon euery ſinne, and to apply and frame himſelfe to the obedience and performance of euery good duty which God requires, and is therefore carefull both to heare what God commands, and what hee forbids in euery particular, and to enquire into his owne ſoule to ſee how it is with him in that behalfe, his ſeruices when hee comes before God, y Iſa.66.3. ſo long as he thus y chooſeth his owne wayes, are as if he ſlue a man. Where then ſhall they appeare, who willingly cheriſh themſelues in noted ſins, in pride, in wantonneſſe, in vſurious gettings, in worldlineſſe, in riot, in prophanation of the Sabbath, who are content to harbour in themſelues ſome ſecret euils vpon ſome by-reſpects, and will needes with a faire profeſſion, ioyne a kind of carnall libertie in ſome things, and it may bee thinke it too ſtrait, and more preciſeneſſe then is meet, to ſtand vpon euery thing ſo exactly: what hope is there that God ſhould giue any manner of approbation and allowance to their Sacrifices. I wiſh this point may be duely thought on, there being ſuch a ſtrange kind of conuerſation to bee found euen amongſt thoſe, who would ſeeme moſt forward in the performance of ſuch religious acts, as pertaine to Gods worſhip: ſomewhat or other there is, wherein they are iuſtly taxable, and in which they diſcouer a kind of willing diſſoluteneſſe: the World takes notice of their ordinarie and groſſe falling in ſome particulars; and Religion and good Profeſſion heareth ill abroade through them. Alas, how can a man dare to come to God, harbouring ſtill ſomewhat in his breſt, wherein he doth not care to offend God? Remember then, I pray you, thus farre. A wofull thing for a man to come into Gods preſence, to offer his deuotion and his ſeruice to him without aſſurance of acceptance. There can be no aſſurance of acceptance, vnleſſe that which a man brings bee a Sacrifice of Righteouſneſſe. The firſt thing required in ſuch a Sacrifice, is, that thou thy ſelfe bee a man in Gods fauour; ſo long as thou doſt not make conſcience of euery ſinne, thou canſt not be in Gods fauour. If there bee any one thing which thou knoweſt to bee an euill, nay, if there be any one particular in thy practice, which thou art not ſure is lawfull in Gods ſight, and touching which thou art not carefull, to warrant it by the Word of God, to bee good before God, and ſo art not fearefull of thy ſelfe, leſt perhaps in ſome things thou ſhouldeſt fayle, deſiring if it were poſſible to approoue thy ſelfe to God thorowout: ſurely, God lothes thy perſon, and hee cannot but euen abhorre all thy deuotions. Where ſinne doth reſt (and it doth reſt where it is not vniuerſally ſtriuen againſt) there God cannot like; out of Chriſt God can accept none. Hee is the only perſon in whom he is well pleaſed; and who ſo [z] is in Chriſt is a new creature: and [a] hath crucified the Fleſh, with the affections and luſts: where the affections and luſts of the fleſh are not ſo ſubdewed, but that ſtill ſome ſinne hath power vpon a man, and he is a willing ſeruitor vnto it, the fleſh is not crucified: a man is none of Chriſts: God can neither accept of him, nor of his ſeruices. This is the firſt thing.

z 2.Cor.5.17.
a Gal.5.24.

The ſecond appurtenance to a ſacrifice of righteouſneſſe, is concerning the ſubſtance of that which is offered vnto God. Concerning which this is the Rule: It muſt be ſuch as God requires. There muſt be a commandement from him concerning it. It is the ancient Canon: [b] you ſhall not doe euery man what ſeemeth good in his owne eyes. It is not for man to appoint a Sacrifice for God. In things of this nature, Obedience is the chiefe thing, as ſaid Samuel to Saul, taking on him to make choice for God, out of his owne [c] humour. It is not long ſince I had occaſion to vrge that in Eſay 58. 5. Is it ſuch a Faſt that I haue choſen? and againe, Verſ. 6. Is not this the Faſting that I haue choſen? So that ſtill the maine matter is in theſe buſineſſes, what God hath choſen. If I would be ſure to bring that to God which ſhall be welcome vnto him, let mee bee ſure that it is ſuch as he commands me to bring; that hee may not haue cauſe to challenge me when I come, with (who required this at thy hands?) God was alwayes an enemie to voluntarie Religion, and will-worſhip, and did euer bind to this; [d] He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good, and what he requireth of thee. This Rule may well put the greateſt part out of all hope of acceptance with God. There is no ſo common fayling in any thing as in this. There are two branches of will-worſhip, of one of which the greateſt part be guiltie. Firſt is, when that which is vſed in worſhipping God, is grounded only vpon mans inuention, and cannot at all be prooued out of Gods Word, to be of his ordayning. Secondly, when though it may be that which is done, is in it ſelfe ſimply of Gods appointing; yet that it is ſo, is more then he knowes, or cares to know that vſeth it. This is it ſpoken of: [e] God ſaid of ſome, that their feare towards him was taught by the Precept of men. They had no ground for their Religion, but only humane iniunction. They had taken vp their courſe out of the Law of the times, and from the common guiſe of others; and ſo bound themſelues to doe as others did, and looked no further, whether or no God commanded that which they did; they neither knew nor put themſelnes to any trouble or buſineſſe to enquire. Now I ſay, in one of theſe two branches men generally faile. For touching the firſt, many place Religion and Seruice of God, in things which the Lord neuer ordayned to that end; as in difference of Meates, obſeruation of Dayes, Feſtiuities, ſome higher ſome lower in their opinion, kinds of geſture, and the like: ſuch things as theſe God neuer choſe for the worſhip of his Name to conſiſt in: ſtrongly notwithſtanding are

Two branches of will-worſhip.

e Iſa.29.13.

many perſwaded, that they ſerue God, and that well, euen by ſuch performances. Nay, how farre reacheth that conceit of ſeruing God by bare acts, as preſence in the Church, repetition of words; if theſe bee ſeaſoned with that which is called a good meaning, which indeed is nothing elſe but an ignorant intent, and a kind of miſ-guided and blind zeale, which knoweth not what it doth; the ſeruice is reputed abſolute, and beyond the reach of iuſt experience: our opinion and thought that we ſerue him, was neuer ordayned by God to bee any ſufficient part of true Religion. Then for the ſecond branch of will-worſhip: how few (in compariſon) doe carrie themſelues in the true parts of Gods worſhip as men of knowledge, aduiſedly vnderſtanding vpon what ground they doe that which they performe. Praying, Hearing, Communicating, preſenting Infants to Baptiſme, are things ordinarily done: but I doubt much, that preſcription, and vſe, and the Law of the times, are the beſt reaſons many are able to produce why they doe them. Fathers ſee it is a courſe to bring little ones to the Lauer of Baptiſme; men behold how it is a matter in vſe, euery body of yeeres (at Eaſter at leaſt) to thruſt in at the Lords Table. It is an order to goe to Church: and aſſoone as they come in to fall downe on their knees, and ſay ſomething, and then to tarrie out a certaine time, ſometimes kneeling, ſometimes ſitting, ſometimes ſtanding vp. I beleeue a multitude of people are able to ſhew little other reaſon of their courſe, ſhould they bee put to this queſtion; What? hath God commanded theſe things? Is this or that his Ordinance? Is it his will there ſhould be publike meetings for religious exerciſes? Is it his appointment that there ſhould be prayer, and preaching, and vſe of the Sacraments? I maruaile what many would ſay? Haply they would anſwere, that they thinke it is; but I ſuppoſe it would not bee found the anſwere of many, that they know it is. I hope no man will ſay, that it is not neceſſarie that euery worſhipper of God ſhall bee able to giue a reaſon of his deuotion, Is it not meete that that which is done in the ſeruice of God, ſhould bee done in obedience. This is the glorie and crowne of all our ſeruices, and what obedience ſhall we call that, which is not induced by ſome knowne commandement. Indeede, there can be no colourable plea for theſe things, vnleſſe we will bring vp Poperie againe, and make Ignorance the mother of deuotion, and teach men to expect ſaluation by an implicite faith. This is the certaine and infallible truth out of Gods Word. God himſelfe is the only author of his owne worſhip. All mans inuentions are abomination to him. It is not formalitie, nor pompe, or plauſibilitie of reaſon which can ſatisfie him, without a warrant from himſelfe. He hath left his Word for an all-ſufficient guide in this buſineſſe. Nothing can be accepted but of his owne chooſing; neither is ought to be reputed as choſen by him, vnleſſe wee can find ſome footing for it out of his Word. Let this then bee that which we learne here in the ſecond place, if wee will offer vnto God a ſacrifice of righteouſenſſe, ſuch as he ſhall accept; let it not reſt either vpon our owne ſeeming, or conceit, or vpon the Tradition and cuſtome of the times, or vpon the Lawes and Ordinances of men, but let our inquirie ſtill be what the Lord hath commanded. All that euer wee doe by way of deuotion, is to no purpoſe in the world, vnleſſe it be to make matter againſt our ſelues, except it be warranted to our ſoules by diuine authoritie. In theſe caſes [f] euery man ought to be fully perſwaded in his owne mind, knowing it to be flat ſinne, whatſoeuer is not of Faith, and it is not of faith which wants an euidence. Faith is no matter of ſuppoſition, but of certainty. It is a ſhame for men to make thoſe babiſh anſwers in Religion, as to ſay, I hope it is right, and if it was good, it is good, and if this be not good why is it vſed, and why do ſuch and ſuch doe ſo; and thus it hath been time out of mind, our anceſtors did ſo before vs, and if it be not right, God helpe vs, many be deceiued as well as wee: I ſay, it is ſhame for men, to make ſuch ridiculous and childiſh anſweres in caſes of Religion, and to aduenture their ſoules vpon ſuch weake grounds. If thou wilt haue God like that thou doſt, thou muſt goe by the rule of his will. It is not thy meaning well, which God will eſteeme of, if thy courſe be not ſuch as he hath ordained. This is the ſecond thing, neceſſarie to a ſacrifice of Righteouſneſſe.

[f] *Rom.*14.5.

The third, is for the manner of vſing. For that is as neceſſarie as the two former. That which is in it ſelfe good, may yet bee ſpoiled and made diſtaſtefull to God by the ill vſage thereof. It is not long ſince we were taught, how poſſible it is for a man to doe that very thing which God commands, and yet in doing it not to pleaſe him. There were of the Iſraelites many, who were baptiſed vnder Moſes in the cloud, and in the Sea, did eate of the ſame ſpirituall Meate, and drinke of the ſame ſpirituall Drinke, [g] yet with them God was not pleaſed. Now the ſpeciall matter in the manner of vſing Gods Ordinances, is that ſpoken of by [h] DAVID, In thy feare will I worſhip towards thine holy Temple. Let vs haue grace whereby we may ſerue God (ſaith the Apoſtle) [i] pleaſing him with reuerence and feare. Now this feare moueth a man to two things. One in reſpect of his carriage before hee commeth into the preſence of God; the other in reſpect of his behauiour there. Before hee comes, this feare cauſeth him to conſider with himſelfe into whoſe preſence he is going, and who it is with whom hee muſt haue to doe, and what a weighty buſineſſe it is which he muſt diſcharge. This is called by SALOMON, [k] a taking heede to ones feete when hee commeth into the Houſe of God. A man binds himſelfe not to aduenture raſhly either to heare, or to pray, or to communicate, but hath a care to ſet his thoughts in order before-hand, and to compoſe himſelfe to a kind of awfulneſſe, reſpectiuely to the Maieſtie before which hee muſt appeare, and ſo lifts vp his ſoule to the Lord, that he would prepare his heart, and make it ready for ſo important a duty, as the comming neere to him in his Ordinances. This was Dauids ſpeciall care: [l] O God, my heart is prepared, ſo is my tongue: I will ſing and giue praiſe. So when he was to pray, deſiring that his petitions might be acceptable, hee entreated God [m] to ſet a Watch before his mouth, and keepe the Doore of his lips. Then when a man is in, and now the action is begun, that feare which mooued him to prepare, n Eccl.8.12. continueth ſtill with him, and cauſeth him to [n] doe reuerence before God; that is, to demeane himſelfe with a kind of diligent watchfulneſſe ouer his owne thoughts, that hee may keepe them together, and may preuent thoſe rouing and vnfitting imaginations, which are wont to fall in moſt, when a man is beſt imployed, and are like the Fowles which fell on the ſacrifices which Abraham offered to God, and were driuen ao Gen.15.21. way by [o] him. It is fit to this purpoſe that which wee find, Mal. 3. 16. where ſuch as made good vſe of the Sermons of the Prophet, and who were not like the reſt that deſpiſed the worſhip of God; they are thus deſcribed, They feared the Lord, and theſe thought vpon his Name: They, viz. ſuch they were whoſe thoughts were fixed vpon the Maieſtie and authoritie of him with whom they dealt; and their fearing God, wrought in them an indeauour to reduce their thoughts into order, when they were before the Lord. Adde we this then to that we haue heard hitherto: and let this bee now the concluſion and ſhutting vp of the Vſe of this firſt Doctrine. It is a bleſſing to haue our ſeruices find grace in Gods Eyes. Deſire wee this bleſſing, would wee not that God ſhould lothe our comming to this place and the like, where his Name is called vpon, his Word diſpenſed, and the pledges of his grace, the Sacraments adminiſtred; labour for this, that we bring nothing to God but that which may be called a ſacrifice of righteouſneſſe. How ſhall that bee? Firſt, looke to our owne perſons, that wee bee in grace with God through Chriſt. God cannot like our deuotions, if he like not vs. The very coherence of the place here confirmes this: Be fauourable, ſaith DAVID, vnto Sion, and then ſhalt thou accept the Sacrifices of Righteouſneſſe: Vouchſafe to accept vs in thy Chriſt, and then wee cannot doubt but thou wilt take our ſeruices and ſacrifices in good part: and if we would be ſure, that we are in Chriſt, let vs looke to our making conſcience of our waies, and our deſire to walke in truth before God. Let mee remember you of p Pſal.26. two worthy ſpeeches of Dauids to this end, both in one [p] Pſalme: I q Verſ.6. will waſh mine hands in innocencie, [q] and ſo compaſſe thine Altar: and ar Verſ.12. gaine, [r] My Foote ſtands in vprightneſſe: I will praiſe thee, O Lord, in the Congregation. Beware of preſſing into the preſence of God without innocencie, without feete ſtanding in vprightneſſe; that is, vnleſſe thou be a man exerciſed in the practice of Repentance, whereof it is a principall part to ſhake off in the purpoſe of thy ſoule, all whatſoeuer is knowne vnto thee to be a ſinne againſt his Maieſtie, thou canſt not bee welcome to God: there may bee many corruptions in thee which are very ſtrong, and which thou canſt not maſter, which yet muſt not keepe thee from comming before God, nay bee they neuer ſo many, neuer ſo violent, if yet thy heart is againſt them, and thou faine wouldſt bee deliuered from them, and thou art aſhamed of thy ſelfe, and angry at thine owne diſpoſition for them, thou muſt come ſo much the more; and (thou) comming in this ſtrife, and compunction, and vexation of ſpirit, art moſt acceptable. But beware of an euill vniuerſally approoued, and not not intended, nor indeuoured, nor ſought by thee to bee reformed, but meant rather to be continued in; this is no vprightneſſe of heart, this is plaine halting with God, and it will turne all thy ſeruices into ſinne. Then ſecondly, when thou haſt thus taken care of thy perſon, and mayſt comfortably perſwade thy ſelfe thou art in fauour with God, becauſe no ſinne is truely in fauour with thee; then let it be thy next care, to bee informed out of Gods Word, touching the things which thou wouldeſt preſent to God; ſeeke to know what be the things, wherein by his owne Law, his worſhip ſtands; that thou mayſt bee guided by a Rule, and lead by a warrant. It is dangerous going by gheſſe in Gods matters. Then (thirdly,) when thou haſt learned what God commands for his worſhip, remember to come before him in feare, and let thy feare appeare, in preparing thy ſelfe, and in ſetting thy affections in order before thou beginneſt; neuer fall bluntly to any religious duty which God requires: at leaſt ſend vp ſome humble thoughts as meſſengers to the Lord, to deſire his enabling; and after thou haſt made an entry, take heede of theſe irreuerent, ſecure, vnprofitable imaginations which Satan will ſuggeſt, and thine owne heart caſt vp; ſtriue to tie thy heart to the ſeruice what thou mayſt. Thus ſhall thy ſeruice bee a ſacrifice of righteouſneſſe, thus ſhall God accept it at thy hand, thus ſhall thy ſoule be ſatisfied as with marrow and fatneſſe, and thou ſhalt feele by degrees that ſweet refreſhing come in vpon thee which ſhall embolden thee to ſay with DAVID, [f] Returne into thy reſt, O my ſoule: for the Lord hath beene beneficiall vnto to thee: [t] and prayſed be the Lord, which hath not put backe my prayer, nor his mercy from mee. I beſeech you in the words of DAVID, [u] Taſte and ſee how gracious the Lord is, this courſe being followed. And ſurely, if we find our ſelues to receiue no ſuch good by the ſeruices which we performe to God, as may bee reputed a pledge of Gods accepting vs; let vs impute it only, either to this, that there is ſome ſecret euill in vs, which is vnpurged and vnreformed, which [x] ſeparates betwixt vs and God, and makes him to hide away his face from vs, [y] and to turne away good things; or to our careleſneſſe to ground our courſes vpon the Rule of Gods Word; or to our want of feare and reuerence in the performance of holy duties: one of theſe is the ſole cauſe of our going out from the preſence of God empty. And thus farre of the firſt branch of the iſſue of Dauids Petition: Mayſt thou (O Lord) be pleaſed to ſhew fauour vnto Sion, then ſhall our ſeruices and ſacrifices finde acceptance with thee. Now followeth the ſecond branch, which indeede ſpringeth and groweth out of the firſt.

Then ſhall they offer Calues vpon thine Altar. Here the Doctrine is this: That it is a great mercy of God, when there is a generall freedome and forwardneſſe in the people, in reſpect of the publique acts and exerciſes of deuotion. Wee muſt thus, for the clearing of this Doctrine, conceiue of this place; that Dauid reckoneth vp here a twofold good, which ſhall follow that twofold bleſſing, for which hee was a ſuiter in the former Verſe. If God ſhould pleaſe to receiue Zion into fauour, and to forgiue

that

that ſinne, by which the proſperitie of the Church was now endangered, then it could not be, but the ſacrifices which were offered by the Children of Zion, ſhould find grace; and then withall, if he ſhould vouchſafe to continue and eſtabliſh the peace of the State, then they being encouraged by ſo many euidences of Gods fauour, and enioying ſuch ſweet quiet, ſhould be frequent in publique duties, and keepe the Altar of the Lord in continuall vſe by multitudes of Sacrifices. Thus is the place; ſo that this is here a matter which Dauid hoped to ſee and deſired to behold, people treading daily in the Lords Courts, and preſenting him with ſuch teſtimonies of deuotion as thoſe times required: My heart, thought he, doth euen reioyce within me, to thinke what will follow vpon the obtayning of this my ſuite, how frequent, and forward, and cheerefull the people will become in the publique worſhip of thy Name, when they feele thee to bee reconciled to thy Church, and peace to be eſtabliſhed in their borders: Oh what courage will there bee on all hands for thy Seruice, what frequenting of thy Houſe, and what compaſſing of thine Altars? By this it is apparant to bee the purpoſe of this place here, to ſhew what a great mercy of God it is, and how much to bee reioyced in, when there is both libertie for the continuance of the publique exerciſes of Gods worſhip, and readineſſe in the people to make vſe of that libertie. Now for this that it is a great mercy, when it is free for men to compaſſe the Lords Altars, and to attend the publike ſeruice of God in the Congregation without feare, it may be manifeſted by the contrarie. We ſhall find it reckoned as a great iudgement of God, when the publique exerciſes of Religion are diſcontinued, and the libertie of Religion is abridged. I remember how Ieremie inſiſts vpon it, as one of the chiefe miſeries of Ieruſalem, being laid waſte by inuaſion: The wayes of Zion lament, becauſe no man commeth to the ſolemne feaſts, &c. meaning, how the pathes which led to the Temple (built vpon Zion) did euen looke rueſully, and in a kind of forlorne and dolefull manner, not being ſo beaten as in times paſt; there was no ſuch ordinarie recourſe to the ſolemne Feaſts at the ſpeciall times appointed as was wont, no ſuch comming in and out, no ſuch going to and fro at the gates thereof, as had beene vſuall: hee ſpeaks as if euen the wayes themſelues did mourne here-with. This agrees with that pitifull complaint made by the Pſalmiſt in the dayes (as is thought) of that famous Oppreſſor of the Iewiſh Nation ANTIOCHVS: [z] They haue caſt thy Sanctuarie into the fire, defiled the dwelling place of thy Name, burnt all the Synagogues of God in the Land: we ſee not our ſignes, there is not a Prophet more: marke how that is inſiſted vpon as a ſpeciall miſerie, the ſtate of Religion was vtterly ouerthrowne: was it not a iudgement which God threatned once, when he ſaid, that [a] the Songs of the Temple ſhould be turned into howlings; that in ſtead of the exerciſes of Religion, by which the prayſes of God were wont to be ſounded out, there ſhould be naught remayning but ſignes of deſolation. From hence wee may reaſon, that it is a great fauour from God, when men may aſſemble freely to worſhip God; it ſhall be no danger to them to come to the Altar of the Lord, and to preſent preſent their offerings there. This was the ground of that which is reported of the men of Bethſhemeſh when they reaping in the Field, on a ſudden ſpyed the Arke of God, which had long beene detayned by the Philiſtims, and which they were now, the Hand of God for the detayning it being vpon them, glad to ſend backe, [b] they reioyced when they ſaw it: in the liberty thereof ſtood the freedome and glory of their publique worſhip: ſo when it was brought into it owne place by DAVID, [c] what gladneſſe, what ſhowting, how did DAVID for ioy dance before it. So when as after the returne from captiuitie, the Temple began to bee reedified, at the very firſt laying of the foundation thereof, the Prieſts being there by appointment, [d] ſang and gaue prayſe to God (for his mercy indureth for euer towards Iſraell,) and all the people ſhowted with a great ſhowt in prayſing the Lord. Theſe things I note, to ſhew how iuſtly this liberty is to be eſteemed as a ſpeciall fauour. Now for the other branch of the Doctrine, the forwardneſſe of the people, to make vſe of this liberty, and for the contentment to bee taken thereat, wee may conſider that of Dauid deſcribing their happineſſe, who tooke ſuch paines, and ouercame ſo many difficulties, in repayring to the publike worſhip of [e] God; and that, concerning his reioycing when the people ſaid to him, [f] We will goe into the Houſe of the Lord: Thither, ſaid he, the Tribes, euen the Tribes of the Lord goe vp, to prayſe the Name of the Lord: and it was prophecied of, as one part of the glory of Chriſts Church, that many people ſhould goe and ſay, [g] Come, let vs goe vp to the Mountaine of the Lord, to the Houſe of the God of IACOB, &c. [h] Vp, let vs goe and pray before the Lord, and ſeeke the Lord of Hoſts. This trouping together to this purpoſe, is likened to the marching of an Army, and there is a kind of holy beauty ſaid to be [i] therein. Thinke wee it was not a great reioycing to Paul and Barnabas at Antioch, when as on the [k] Sabbath they ſaw almoſt the whole City to be come together to heare the Word of God? As this ſight filled the gaine-ſaying Iewes with enuie, who were euen vexed to the very gall to ſee ſuch flocking, to that which they refuſed; ſo it was an occaſion to PAVL and BARNABAS [l] to ſpeake the more boldly. It giues hope that the Word of God groweth mightily, and preuailed, (as Act. 19. 20.) Antioch was the firſt place, the Belecuers whereof were honoured with the name of Chriſtians; and this great gathering together of the people taking the oportunitie which God offered, ſeemeth to haue beene a ſpeciall occaſion thereof. It is ſaid firſt that by the comming and paines of Barnabas there, [m] much people ioyned themſelues vnto the Lord: and then after, when as he deſiring helpe, had drawne Paul thither to aſſiſt, [n] It came to paſſe that a whole yeere, ſaith the Text, they were conuerſant with the Church, and taught much people, inſomuch that the Diſciples there were firſt called Chriſtians. Their earneſt preſſing to the Ordinance of God, and their taking the Kingdome of Heauen by violence, firſt gaue occaſion to that name. Thus haue I opened this Doctrine. This was the ſecond good, which Dauid aſſured himſelfe would follow the grant of his deſire; The people ſhall offer offer Calues vpon thine Altar, that is, they shall haue opportunitie to doe it, the Walls of Ierusalem being built, and peace by thy mercy being there established, and they shall haue hearts to doe it, thou affording fauour vnto Zion: they perceiuing their seruices to find grace and good acceptance with thee, shall be encouraged to thy publike worship, and shall haue ioy and cheerefulnesse in performing it.

1. Vse. This Doctrine teacheth vs, first at what an high rate wee ought to value this freedome and liberty of seruing God publiquely in peace, which Dauid here conceiued as one of the blessings which would ensue his prayer, and therefore no doubt was a matter principally aymed at by him in his request. Wee are herein for the most part exceeding faulty, euen that wee esteeme not this mercy of God as we oughtt to doe. God hath giuen a long time of rest to vs in this Nation, during all which time, in places where the meanes hath beene afforded, there hath beene a comfortable liberty for all men to giue their due attendance at the posts of the Lords Doores, and for the Spouse of Christ to pasture by the Tents of the Shepheards. Wee haue not beene faine to doe as Christians of our profession in other countreys, to assemble by stealth, and priuily, in vaults, and Woods; or else to goe armed to the Churches, for the preuention of some sodaine surprise. The reedifiers of Ierusalem after the captiuitie, ° with one hand did the worke with the Trowell, and with the other held the Sword; wee are not put to any such strait. There bee many of Gods deere seruants in the world, who if they might, would redeeme the one halfe of our freedome, euen with the most of their estates. But how doe wee reckon of it? I doe but appeale in the feare of God, and in his sight vnto your soules and consciences, to say when did wee rouse vp our spirits, when wee haue beene in meditation by our selues, to thanke God for the liberty of his Gospell, for the free vse of his Word, for the peace of profession. The truth is, there bee many things wanting amongst vs, many defects and blemishes in matters of the Church, but I am perswaded, if we were more thankefull then we be for so much as is enioyed, God would goe on in his mercy to vs: but because of our generall vnthankefulnesse herein, and our not prizing the goodnesse of God, as it doth deserue, wee are more like to bee depriued of that wee haue, then to enioy more: why should the Lord suffer vs to see more of Sions beauty, who are not so in loue with this wee see as wee should? I beseech you let vs thinke with what heart Dauid speaks this here, Then shall they offer Calues vpon thine Altar, then shall the Gates of thy House stand open, and there shall be a free accesse into thine Altars; and let vs labour for the same affections. Oh that wee would once truely thanke God for the glorious Gospell of his Sonne; and that for the sound of trumpets, and roariug of Canons which our neighbours in other Countreys haue beene vsed to, wee had the noyse of Bells calling vs to the House of God, to be partakers of his Word.

° Neh.4.17.

2. Vse. And in the second place let vs learne, as of Dauid to bee glad of his freedome, so of the people here touching whom hee speakes, to make

vse

vſe of this freedome: while wee haue the light let vs walke in the light: while the way lyeth open to the Lords Altars, let vs beate the path that leadeth to them. Remember euer the good vſe which the Churches of old made of their peace: p Then had the Churches reſt through all Iudea, &c. and what then? did they grow careleſſe and wanton, did they loſe their firſt loue, and neglect the good oportunities, which God gaue them for their growth in godlineſſe? No; they were edified, and walked in the feare of the Lord, and were multiplyed by the comfort of the holy Ghoſt. Here was an happy vſe of the time of quiet: Oh that wee might bee followers of theſe. Alas (I know not how) plenty hath made vs wanton, and the Ordinances of God begin euen to waxe ſtale; men can let paſſe and neglect many oportunities, and oft-times let the Altars of God lie naked vpon ſmall occaſions. If once God ſhould ſhew himſelfe angry with Sion, and lay downe the Walls of Ieruſalem, it may bee wee would then q deſire to ſee one of the dayes of the Sonne of man, but ſhall not ſee it: ſo is the Lord wont to puniſh, not to giue that which is deſired, when being giuen, it is not valued as is fit. And thus an end of opening this Penitentiall Pſalme.

THE Righteous, saith the Prophet, [a] perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart, mercifull men are taken away, and none considers it, that they are taken away from the euill to come: *by which complaint wee may see, that the Lord, when he thus dealeth, would not haue the matter to bee lightly and slightly passed ouer, but rather laid to heart and lamented, as being both a token of his displeasure for the present, and an argument of further ensuing euill: God herein doing as the man who intending to pull downe an old house, first takes away the props and pillars of it. A PRESENT FOR CÆSAR.

The first Sermon.

LVK. 20. 25.

Then he said vnto them, Giue vnto Cæsar the things which are Cæsars, and vnto God, &c.

CHRIST hauing conuinced them by their owne acknowledgement, presseth that further on them, which hee had exacted from them. How our Sauiour fitted his answere to their captious question, so, as that hee might neither betray the truth, nor himselfe; I haue formerly declared; now this speech of Christs deserues to be well considered, as being a perpetuall Law for the ordering and guiding of our carriage, both towards God and towards him, who is (among men) next to God, to wit, the King. The Iewes thought their subiection vnto Cæsars soueraignetie, to be preiudiciall to their prerogatiue of being Gods people: and some other againe suppose the authoritie of Kings to be so absolute, that they being Subiects are to conforme themselues thereto without limitation, taking all for good, which they command; our Sauiour teacheth a midway, betwixt both these extremities: viz. neither to account it against the libertie of godlinesse, to bee subiect vnto Kings, nor to bee so vnboundedly subiect vnto Kings, as not to regard what is owing from vs vnto God. Giuing Cæsar that which is his, may stand very well with giuing God his due: and yet heed must be taken too, that while wee care to giue Cæsar his right, wee doe not barre the Lord of his. This is the true state of this place. In treating on it, I will diuide it, as well I may, into two parts: the first, Concerning Cæsars due. Secondly, Touching Gods due. The former yeelds vs this instruction; That

Doctrine. That Kings and Princes haue a certayne right and due, pertayning to them by Gods appointment, which it is not lawfull for any man to keepe from them.

This is plaine here, as if Chriſt had ſaid: It is of God, and not without the diſpoſing and ordering of his prouidence, that the Romane Emperour hath put in his foot among you, and is now your Liege and Soueraigne: you your ſelues haue ſubmitted to his gouernement, and haue in a manner ſubſcribed vnto that, which God hath brought vpon you: now certainely there is a right pertayning to him reſpectiuely to his place, this hee muſt haue, and it cannot be lawfull for you, vnder any pretext, to take it from him. So that this ſpeech is a plaine ground for this. There is a due to Cæſar, and it muſt be giuen him. A King, within his owne Dominions, hath certayne rights belonging to his place, and in them, there is no warrant of Religion to debarre him. I need adde no more for proofe hereof in generall, before I deſcend (as neceſſarily I muſt) into particulars, then the Rule of common equitie, which is to giue to euery man that which appertayneth to him; [a] Giue to all men their dutie: [b] With-hold not the good from the owner thereof. This rule reacheth ſo farre, that euen towards inferiors and ſeruants, the Apoſtle doth command it to bee practized: [c] Yee Maſters doe vnto your ſeruants that which is iuſt and equall. Now if euery ordinary perſon, euen ſuch an one as is vnder vs, and below vs, is yet to haue his right from vs, and is by no meanes to bee cut ſhort of that which appertayneth to him, then the King much more, whoſe place is ſo eminent aboue others, and as ſhall be ſhewed anon, the Fountayne of ſo much good vnto humane ſocietie: ſhall it not bee lawfull for mee to with-hold a right from my equall, no nor yet from him, who is below me, and hath a kind of dependance on mee, and yet may it bee free for mee to doe this towards him, who is ſo much aboue mee, and is an eſpeciall Deputie for God amongſt men? This is ſo plaine a caſe, that it were euen pity to ſpend more breath vpon it. It will be beſt and moſt for our good to haue it ſhewed, what be the particulars of Cæſars right, according to Gods Word; ſo ſhall this Doctrine ſooner reach to that end for which it is propounded. That he muſt haue what is his, the very light of reaſon and of common honeſtie will not ſuffer vs to denie; but what that is which is his, and which muſt be giuen him, it may be we doe not all ſo thorowly vnderſtand. I will for mine owne helpe in ſpeaking, and yours in remembring, reduce all Cæſars due to theſe two heads: Firſt, Prayer for him. Secondly, Submiſſion to him. That prayer for him is one of his dues, appeares by the expreſſe command of the Apoſtle, 1. Tim. 2. 1. And it is to bee noted, that that charge was giuen by Paul, euen then when Cæſar was a perſecutor of Chriſtian Religion, and when there were very few in authoritie, but ſuch as were enemies to the Truth and Goſpell of the Lord Ieſus; it binds therefore much more, when a King is a Profeſſor and a Protector of Chriſtianitie. Dauid penned a prayer on purpoſe, in which the people were taught to pray for the King and for his ſeed, Pſal. 72. Now in ſhewing that a King muſt

a Rom. 13. 7.
b Pro. 3. 27.
c Col. 4. 1.

muſt be prayed for, it is neceſſary to ſhew whereat the prayers made for him muſt ayme, viz. at two things. Firſt, That he may be endowed with all needfull graces for his place. Secondly, That he may be deliuered from all dangers to which he is ſubiect in his place. The graces which are to be begged on his behalfe, are, firſt, Wiſedome. This is that which Salomon begged for himſelfe, at his firſt comming to the Crowne. [d] Giue thy ſeruant an vnderſtanding heart. It is the honour of Dauid, that in buſineſſes of State and Gouernement, [e] he was as an Angell of God: and God threatned as a puniſhment, to [f] giue children to raigne; not ſimply children in age, for ſome ſuch haue beene worthy Kings, ſuch was Ioſiah, [g] Whoſe heart was vpright before the Lord, when he was but eight yeeres old; but ſuch children as Paul calleth [h] Children in vnderſtanding: ſuch an one as REHOBOAM, [i] who was fortie yeeres old when hee began to raigne, yet is called [k] a child, becauſe hee wanted wiſedome. And better a wiſe Child, then an old and fooliſh King, ſaid Solomon, Eccl.4.13. Now this wiſedome to be begged, is not that [l] wiſedome from below, which is earthly, ſenſuall, and deuilliſh, but ſuch as is mentioned, Deut.4.6. Keepe the Ordinances of God, this is your wiſedome; ſuch wiſedome Dauid ſpeaks of, Pſal.2.10. Bee wiſe, O yee Kings. This was it which made Dauid ſo wiſe, [m] Wiſer then his Teachers, wiſer then the Auncient.

Secondly, Iuſtice; Thus Dauid taught the people to pray for their King, that [n] hee might iudge the people in righteouſneſſe and equitie. This is a vertue by which the Throne of Soueraignetie is [o] eſtabliſhed; hereby the Countrey is [p] maintayned, and Kings and Gouernours, when they want this, are compared to [q] roring Lyons, and hungrie Beares.

Thirdly, Temperance, that is, Sobrietie, and moderation in diet, in apparrell, in delight, and things of the like qualitie: [r] wo to thee, O Land, when thy Princes eate in the morning, that is, when they are giuen to vnſeaſonable delights, at ſuch times, as ſhould rather be giuen to publique buſineſſes. This [ſ] makes to forget the decree, and to change the iudgement of all the children of affliction.

Fourthly, Zeale, and courage, in Gods matters: the thing which God required of Ioſhua, when hee came to [t] gouerne. And it was that which ſhewed it ſelfe in Ioſias, and Hezekiah, in the reſtauration of Religion, which (vntill their dayes) had beene corrupted exceedingly: againſt this courſe of theirs there was much oppoſing, but they went through with exceeding courage. This is it which will make Kings proſper, as appeares by the charge which Dauid on his death-bed, gaue to his ſucceſſor SALOMON. [u] Take heede to the charge of the Lord thy God, to walke in his wayes, and keepe his Statutes &c. that thou mayeſt proſper, &c. Theſe be the foure ſpeciall good things which we muſt aske of God for Cæſar. Now Kings are expoſed to danger too, and their preſeruation from it muſt be begged of God. They are in danger of two ſorts of enemies, chiefly:

Firſt, Enemies to their bodies, and outward ſtate, as Traytors conſpiracies againſt Princes, make the point manifeſt. Satan maliceth the proſperitie ſperitie of euery good man, of a good King then much more. The truth hereof is confirmed to vs by continuall experience; Prayer therefore in this caſe, and in regard hereof is a duty which Subiects owe to their Princes. For which cauſe Dauid taught the people to pray, that the enemies of the King and State might be made like a * fiery Ouen in the time of the Lords anger, that their fruit might be deſtroyed from the earth, and their Seede from the Children of men: and x that the ſtring of his Bow might be made ready againſt their faces.

* Pſal.21.9.10.

x Verſ.12.

The ſecond ſort of Enemies are to their ſoules, Flatterers; It is one of the miſeries of Kings, that they haue ſeldome ſuch about them as dare ſpeake the truth; but ſuch rather as are ready euer to applaud and ſoothe, and euen (like the Dogges that came to Lazarus) to vſe their tongues to the licking of their ſins, and to the applauding of their worſt actions: from ſuch, prayer muſt be made that Cæſar may be freed, which are ready by ſpeeches fitted to pleaſe, and fawne to betray his ſoule into the power of the Deuill. Thus for the firſt branch of Cæſars due. The duty of prayer vnto God, muſt diligently and carefully bee performed for him, that he may bee plentifully furniſhed with ſuch graces and endowments as his place requires; Wiſedome, fetched out of Gods Booke; Iuſtice, to giue to euery one his due; Temperance, that hee may not bee bewitched, nor beſotted with the pleaſures and delights, which high places haue many aduantages, and allurements to entertaine; Zeale, to promote Gods cauſe, and to proceede with courage in matters appertayning and tending to his glory. Then againe, that in reſpect of Traytors, and men of bloud, his ſoule may be bound vp in the bundle of life, with the Lord his God, and that the ſoule of his enemies may bee caſt out, as out of the middle of a Sling: and withall, that he may haue ſuch about him, as may deale truely with him in matters of his ſoule, and he may not be like the fooliſh King, of whom SALOMON ſpeaketh, which will not be admoniſhed.

Eccl.4.13.

I come now to the other part or branch of his due, and that is, ſubmiſſion to him: by which I meane, an awfull framing and compoſing of the whole man reſpectiuely to his authoritie. And now here, becauſe I mention the whole man, and man conſiſteth of two parts: therefore I will declare firſt, what is the ſubmiſſion of the inner man, due to a King by the Word of God; and then what is the ſubmiſſion of the outward man.

Touching the ſubmiſſion of the inner man; I account the ſubſtance of it to be this. A reuerent and dutifull eſtimation of him in regard of his place. y Feare the Lord and the King, ſaid Salomon, as the fearing of God, argueth an inward reſpectiueneſſe to his diuine Maieſtie; ſo the fearing of the King intends the like, the heart carrieth a kind of reuerent awe vnto him. And this is that honouring the King, which Saint Peter giueth charge of, 1. Pet. 2. 17. Honour is properly an inward act, and we honour a ſuperiour, when our reſpect is to him according to his dignitie. I doubt not but I may ſay, this was in the ſubiects of Dauid, when they

they profeſſed to account him to [z] be worth ten thouſand of them. That this reuerent eſtimation of a King, which I terme the ſubſtance of inward ſubmiſſion, may bee the better vnderſtood, wee muſt conſider touching it two things. Firſt, The ground of it. Secondly, The Companion to it.

z 2.*Sam.*18.3.

Firſt, The ground of it, is a right vnderſtanding of the ſtate and condition of a Kings place: For reuerence hauing its proper ſeate in a mans affections, it muſt haue ſomewhat to guide it, and to beget it, or elſe it will either exceede, and bee more large then it ought to be, or elſe it will faile and come ſhort, and not bee ſo much as is neceſſary. So that to the end the reuerent reſpect of a Subiect may bee ſuch as it ought to bee to his King; hee muſt neceſſarily know and vnderſtand well what is the place of a King: and touching it, hee muſt vnderſtand two particulars. Firſt, The eminencie and height of his place. Secondly, The vſefulneſſe and commodity of his place. Concerning the eminencie and height of his place, hee muſt vnderſtand and know that his place is ſo high, that within his owne Dominions hee is next to God, and no man aboue him. This is the reaſon, that hee who is aduanced to bee a King, is ſaid to be [a] made the Head ouer them; as the head is aboue all the body, ſo is the King aboue all the State: the gouernement and the ordering, and the command of all lyeth in him; no authoritie equall to his, or aboue his, none that may reſtraine or limit his. This is that which is called the ſupremacie of a King: all power eyther Eccleſiaſticall or Ciuill, are ſubordinate to him, to bee commanded and guided by him. Then for the vſefulneſſe of his place, it muſt bee knowne to bee ſuch, wherein ſtands the good and happineſſe of the whole ſtate, both of the Church and of the Common-wealth. Hereupon they called King Dauid [b] the light of Iſrael, as that perſon in whom their glory and their comfort ſtood. King Ioſiah when he was ſlaine, was lamented for, by the name, [c] of the breath of our noſtrils, touching whom, while they enioyed him, the people ſaid, vnder his ſhaddow wee ſhall bee preſerued aliue. What confuſion would there be, if there were no gouernement? In thoſe daies there was no King in Iſrael, what then? [d] euery man did that which ſeemed good in his owne eyes. It is noted as the ground and occaſion of infinite diſorder, both in matters of Religion and in things pertayning to Ciuilitie. It hath euer beene held, that it is better for a Common-wealth to liue vnder a Tyrant, then to haue no King at all. Thus then is the ground of the inward ſubmiſſion; and indeede, when a man is once throughly ſettled in this by the Word of God, viz. the ſoueraignty of Cæſars place, and the benefit that commeth thereby, it cannot but bind his affections to a due reſpect, and bring forth in him an awfull and an honourable eſteeme. This will not ſuffer him to curſe him, that is, eyther to reuile him, or to auile him, ſo much as in a [e] thought.

Now the Companion of this reuerent eſteeme of Cæſar, is a ready and willing diſpoſition to performe to him, and for him, any thing. Hee that hath learned by the conſideration of the eminency of Cæſars place, and the benefit ſtreaming from his gouernement, to thinke honourably of him, how can hee but bee prompt and apt to doe him ſeruice? Such a promptneſſe and willingneſſe of diſpoſition diſcouered it ſelfe in thoſe followers of Dauid, that no ſooner heard of Dauids longing for the water of the Well of Beth-lehem, which at that time was in the power of the Philiſtims, but they preſently aduentured themſelues to fetch [f] it. Here was a willingneſſe to giue him all content, whom their hearts eſteemed and honoured as their Soueraigne. Thus farre of the inward ſubmiſſion due to Cæſar: an honourable eſteeme begotten by a right vnderſtanding of the qualitie of his place, and accompanyed with an inclineableneſſe of will to doe him any ſeruice.

f 2.Sam.23.16.

I come now to ſpeake of the outward ſubmiſſion; which is, that which is for the teſtification and manifeſtation of the inward. An outward ſubmiſſiueneſſe, without an inward awfulneſſe were but hypocriſie; to pretend an inward reſpect, without giuing outward euidence thereof, were but mockery. This outward ſubmiſſion is eyther in word, or in action. In word; when a mans ſpeeches, either to Cæſar, or touching Cæſar, ſauour of reſpect. To Cæſar, as if a Subiect ſhould come to ſpeake to his King, his words ought to bee a witneſſe of his inward acknowledgement. Hereupon was that common phraſe vſed of old, My Lord the King, when they had occaſion to ſpeake to him; ſo touching Cæſar; it were abſurd, a mans tongue to be tyed vp in the preſence of a King, and to haue liberty to ſpeake contemptuouſly or with leſſe reſpect behind his backe, Salomon would not allow ſuch a thing, though it were as priuily done as in a mans [g] Bed-chamber. [h] Thou ſhalt not ſpeake euill of the ruler of thy people. IVDE reckoneth it vpamong great ſinnes, [i] a ſpeaking euill of them that are in authoritie. Submiſſion in action is eyther in geſture, or in other performances. In geſture, binds eſpecially when one is occaſioned to come before a King. God requires ariſing vp before the hoare head, much more due obeyſance to the ſupreme Magiſtrate. When ARAVNAH met DAVID, [k] he bowed himſelfe before him on his face to the ground. When Nathan the Prophet came into the preſence, [l] he made obeyſance before the King vpon his face to the ground That which is in other performances, is partly in conformity to Lawes, partly in matters of neceſſary ſupply.

Concerning obedience to Lawes; [m] Put them in remembrance that they be ſubiect to the Principalities and Powers, and that they bee obedient; that is, that they ſubmit themſelues vnto commands and Lawes. This was that which the people profeſſed to Ioſhua at his enſtalment. nable nable to obſerue them. p He beareth not the Sword for nought, ſaith PAVL, he hath his authority and his power giuen him of God for ſomewhat, and his iniunctions and orders muſt bee reckoned of. This is conformity to Lawes: only it is neceſſary here to adde a limitation, and to enquire whither this conformity be vniuerſall, yea, or no; ſo that all Lawes are to be conformed vnto without queſtion. It is anſwered in a word, out of my Text, according to that which I ſaid in my firſt opening it, that Cæſar muſt ſo haue his due, as that God may not loſe his. If any thing ſhall be commanded by the Law of Cæſar, which being done will neceſſarily cauſe a breach of the Law of God, then muſt that ſaying take place; q It is better to obey God then Man; Kings are bound to command in all things according to God: Wherefore God ordayned of old that the Booke of the Law ſhould bee by them continually, both to frame and execute their r Lawes according vnto that, and if herein they ſhall exceede, they muſt not bee obeyed. Therefore they in the Captiuitie did well, who notwithſtanding the peremptorineſſe of the Kings Proclamation, for falling downe to worſhip the golden Image, yet told him plainely, s we will not ſerue thy Gods, nor worſhip the golden Image which thou haſt ſet vp. And Daniel, then whom there could not bee a better Subiect, for in matters concerning the Kingdome, his aduerſaries could not find any occaſion againſt him, yet when an Edict came forth, which did neceſſarily bring with it, if it were obeyed, a ſinne againſt God, hee ſtood out. t Thus Mordecai, a faithfull Subiect, as appeareth by his diſcouering the Treaſon of two of the Emperours Chamber, yet would not yeeld to the Kings commandement in ſo ſmall a matter (as it might ſeeme) of bowing his knee to u Haman. His ground was, eyther that the honour commanded by that Heathen Monarch to be done to his fauourite, was more then ciuill, or elſe, becauſe he was an Amalekite, one of that Nation, which God had curſed and commanded his people to x deſtroy. So againe, iuſtly did Naboth ſtand with Ahab about his Vineyard: becauſe God by an expreſſe Law had forbidden an Iſraelite to ſell his eſtate, but vpon condition of redeeming it in the yeere of Iubilee: now, Ahab would haue had it outright for him and his heires, for euer (as we ſay) therefore Naboth durſt not alienate it; God forbid that I ſhould giue the inheritance of my Fathers vnto thee. DAVIDS command ſhall not be able to excuſe the fact of Ioab, eyther in the matter of Vriah, in placing him according to direction in the front of the battell, where he was ſlaine; or in the buſineſſe of numbring the People, he knew the courſe to be vnlawfull, as appears by his owne ſpeech, 1. Chro. 21. 3. and therefore hee ſhould rather haue incurred the Kings diſpleaſure, then by obeying him, to haue ſinned againſt God. So then this conformity to Lawes, muſt bee, as the Apoſtle ſaith of marriage, only in the Lord. A man muſt be ſure that in obeying Cæſar, he doth not diſobey God. It may ſeeme that by this there is ſome allowances of rebellion giuen to Subiects in ſome caſe: For if it bee lawfull for them and their duty, to withdraw and keepe backe their obedience, what is this but rebellion. There is difference betwixt not obeying and rebelling; Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, did not obey the Kings Proclamation, yet they made no rebellion: but ſubmitted their bodies and liues to his pleaſure: ſo thoſe profeſſors of Chriſtian Religion, in Queene Maries dayes, would not obey the Lawes for going to Maſſes, for worſhipping of Images, yet they made no commotion, they laid downe their liues with meekeneſſe. And thus muſt Subiects doe. if they cannot with a good conſcience doe things that are required by Lawes, they muſt yeeld to the vtmoſt penaltie of the Law, without reſiſtance. The Word of God alloweth no other weapons in theſe caſes, but prayers and teares, and the giuing of the backe vnto him that ſmites. When Idolatry was ſet vp by ſome Kings, the Prophets ſpake againſt it, and cryed out vpon the people for their ſubmiſſion: as when they are blamed for [x] obſeruing the Statuts of OMRI, AHABS father, a great Patron of ſuperſtition: but neuer did the Prophets encourage or perſwade the people to ſtand vp in armes againſt that, which was put vpon them by authoritie: ſo then it is one thing not to obey; another thing to rebell. God forbid euery one ſhuuld be accounted a Rebell, that out of Conſcience towards God, and for only feare of ſinning againſt his Maieſty, conformes not to euery particular Iniunction or Satute, being otherwiſe ready to obey in all lawfull things, and for the fayling in the things doubted of, to ſubmit with Patience, to whatſoeuer Law or authority ſhall inflict.

x Mic.6.16.

I am now come to the laſt branch of outward ſubmiſſion; which is matters of neceſſary ſupply. Kings places are high and their occaſions great, and many things pertaine to the ſupportation of their ſtate, which the Subiects muſt yeeld or ſupply: and this is twofold, eyther of mens perſons, or of their goods. Their Perſons, as in the time of warre. In this caſe Subiects muſt ſubmit; Moſes had power to command Ioſhua to chooſe out, or muſter men to goe fight againſt [y] Amaleck. and nothing more ordinarie then ſuch courſes among the Kings of Iſrael, and Iuda, they had euer (as it were) their trayned Souliers, to be ready vpon all occaſions. Beſides ſupply of perſons, there is a ſupply of goods. Herevpon the Scripture ſpeaks of [z] Tribute to whom tribute is due, cuſtome to whom cuſtome; and our Sauiour himſelfe, though he might haue pleaded exemption, as being of the bloud, yet hee ſubmits himſelfe to pay [a] Pole money. It belongs not to mee to diſpute how farre this reacheth. It ſufficeth that I ſhew ſuch a branch of ſubmiſſion is required. I know, Kings are tyed to rules of equitie, and moderation herein. [b] The people muſt not be eaten vp like bread, It was well ſaid of that Romane Emperour, limiting himſelfe in his takings from his ſubiects, It is the part of a good Shepheard to fleece, not to flay the Sheepe. but yet if Kings ſhall become to extorting, and abuſe their liberty, to the preſſing of the Subiects, I find not in the Word of God, any allowance at all to make rebellion: ſuch things muſt bee borne with patience. When the people of Iſraell would needes haue a King; Samuell told them how it would fall out ſometimes, and into what extremities free and abſolute

Monarchs

Monarchs doe ſometimes breake; 1. Sam. 8. 11. &c. Samuel ſheweth that there would ſometimes bee a fayling in three things: Firſt, in manner, the King taking from them, not by order of Law, but by violence and compulſion, their Sonnes and Daughters, their Lands and Goods. Secondly, in the end, abuſing theſe things to his pleaſure, and giuing them to his Fauorites and Minions, not applying them to the common benefit. Thirdly, in regard of their perſons, not vſing them as free Subiects, but as ſlaues and drudges. This Samuel tells them, not as warranting ſuch courſes in Kings, and Monarchs, or as allowing them ſo to doe, but as declaring what their power may ſometimes carry them vnto. Now hee doth not giue them any liberty in this caſe, to releeue themſelues by ſtrong hand, but only tells them, yee ſhall cry out in that day, becauſe of your King, &c. That will be, and muſt bee all the helpe, to fly to God by acknowledgement of ſinnes, which iuſtly brings ſuch encumbrances, and by endeauouring to be at peace with him, to ſeeke the remoouall of ſuch preſſures. Then that prayer muſt bee taken vp, Dan. 9. 7. 8. O Lord, righteouſneſſe belongeth vnto thee, and wee ſuffer iuſtly.

Tibi Domine, iuſtitia, nos iuſtè punimur.

Thus haue I laboured to acquaint you with the whole due of Cæſar, according to Gods Word. That which is his, muſt bee giuen him. Hee muſt be prayed for, that God may accompliſh him with the neceſſary graces for his calling, Wiſedome, Iuſtice, Temperance, Zeale; that hee may be preſerued both from treacherie and from flattery. He muſt bee ſubmitted too, both within, by being had in an honourable eſteeme proceeding from the right vnderſtanding of his place, and attended vpon with a will to doe him ſeruice; and without, by ſpeech and geſture arguing reuerence, by conformity to his Lawes; and laſtly, by ſupplies vpon occaſions both of our bodies and goods as there ſhall bee neede. This is the Summe. Let vs come to the Vſe.

The Vſe is to apply this Doctrine to the diſcouery of thoſe, who treſpaſſe againſt this Rule of giuing vnto Cæſar that which is his, that if it ſhall appeare, by that application wee be faulty, wee may ſeeke to bee reformed; if we doe our duty as wee ought, we may be encouraged and prouoked to goe on. Firſt of all then, they robbe Cæſar of his due, and keepe from the King his right, whoſoeuer they bee, that are negligent and remiſſe in this duty of prayer. If I offer not vp to God the ſacrifice of prayer and ſupplication for my King and Soueraigne, ſurely, I am one who doe depriue him of his due. It is like inough wee will all free our ſelues in this, who will not ſay hee prayeth heartily for the King? I anſwere, That to praying for the King there is more belongs then to ſay in common words (God ſaue the King) or to ſay (Amen) to the publique prayers of the Church, which are vſually made on his behalfe. Know we, and conſider wee, what be the moſt neceſſary and important things, which are to be craued of God for him, then there is ſome likelyhood that wee may pray for him: but ſo long as we are ignorant herein, and without any great care to bee better informed: ſome formall words we may chance now and then to ſpeake, but that wee ſhould pray for him it is vnpoſſible. This is to pray for the King: to conſider with my ſelfe what his perſon requires, what things are behoofefull for him to the well diſcharge of his Calling, and whereof principally he is in danger, and ſo accordingly to become a ſuiter vnto God, to furniſh him with the one, and by his mightie power to protect him from the other. If I doe not learne to doe this, I am no good Subiect, I robbe my King of his right, I am bound to pray for him, but I doe not ſeeke and care to doe it as I ought.

The ſecond ſort of thoſe that with-hold Cæſars due, are all ignorant perſons, who doe not vnderſtand out of Gods Word, the true ſtate and condition of the place, and office of a King. What is my reaſon? I muſt giue my King the ſubmiſſion of my heart, and muſt haue him in eſteeme according to his ranke. Now, I can neuer doe that, except I haue learned out of the Scripture, who gaue a King his authoritie, how high and eminent his authoritie is, and what good returnes to humane ſocietie by his meanes: what is there in mee to worke true reuerence to my King, when I want this? How many be there, who bragge of their being good Subiects, that yet doe not conceiue nor vnderſtand the foundation and the beginning of the Kings authoritie? A kinde of ouer-ruling power ſubdueth and keepeth them downe, but there is no tye vpon their conſciences before God, they know not what opinion they ought to haue of ſoueraigne Magiſtrates by Gods Word, and then they may ſoone become a prey to Popiſh factors, and bee carryed away from their allegeance. What aſſurance hath the King of ſuch a Subiect, who doth not feele himſelfe bound by the power of Gods Word, to ſubſcribe vnto his Soueraignetie, and to deteſt all that ſeeke to abridge and limit his authoritie? It is neceſſary therefore to haue teaching and preaching planted abroad among the people, that by it they may bee brought to know what the right of Kings is, ſo long as they bee led only by a kind of blind, vncertayne, and confuſed conceit, they can neuer bee ſuch Subiects as they ought. Men many times vpon occaſion of entring into office, or the like, ſweare to the Kings Supremacy, alas, when they know full little what it meanes, and are farre from knowing it by the Word of God, how God hath placed a King in his Dominions the very next vnto himſelfe.

The third ſort of detayners of Cæſars right, are all Papiſts and Popiſhly diſpoſed, who are ſo farre from hauing this honourable eſteeme of Kings within their Dominions, proceeding from an apprehenſion of the height and ſupremacy of their place, that they maintayne the cleane contrary, and hold that the Pope is ſupreme Lord ouer all Kings, and hath power to depoſe, and to decrowne them, and to diſpoſe of their Kingdomes vnto others. He may curſe and excommunicate them, hee may diſcharge the Subiects of their Othes of fealtie and allegeance to them; hee may warrant them to riſe vp in armes againſt them, to lay violent hands vpon them, or to take away their liues. This is the conſtant ſtant opinion of Poperie at this day. It will haue all Kings to hold of the Biſhop of Rome in chiefe, to acknowledge a dependance vpon him, and their Kingdomes, and their Crownes, to be at his will. A thing for which we find no footing in the Scripture. He who was the high Prieſt in Ieruſalem, whoſe office was a ſpeciall type of Chriſt, wee ſtill find him to haue liued as a Subiect to the Kings of Iudah, to haue beene ſubiect to his Authoritie for calling vpon to doe his Office, for depoſition from his Office. Wee neuer read any ſuch to haue challenged ought aboue any King, or to haue attempted any thing preiudiciall to his Crowne and Dignitie. The Law of God is, [c] that euery ſoule ſhould be ſubiect: ſo that whoſoeuer hee bee, how high ſoeuer in the Church of God, hee can clayme no tranſcendant power aboue Kings. Thus wee muſt learne to reckon and number Papiſts generally within the company of Cæſars enemies. The reaſon is plaine. God giues this right to Cæſar, to bee the higheſt ouer all in his owne Dominions, and giueth them then authoritie vpon all. Papiſts make one aboue Cæſar, that is the Pope, and withall exempt their Clergie from all ciuill iuriſdiction, and ſubiect them onely to the rule, as I may ſay, of their Peeres, thoſe of their owne ranke. Thinke how by this the authoritie of a King is ſtraitned. All his Clergie are vtterly exempted from him: all his other Subiects are but halfe his; for matters of their ſoules they are the Popes, and when hee will hee may take away from Cæſar the ſubiection of their bodies too. I beſeech you, that we may learne to be enemies vnto Poperie out of knowledge: conſider that Chriſt ſubmitted to the higher Powers, paid tribute himſelfe, commanded others to pay it; the Pope and his faction challenge a ſuperintendency aboue Kings, all muſt be ſubiect vnto him, and he to no body.

c *Rom.*13.1.

The fourth ſort of aduerſaries to Cæſar, which alſo robbe him of his right, are ſuch as in corners giue ſcope to their tongues to reproch euen the higheſt in Authoritie, ſpeake baſely, talke tauntingly and diſgracefully; blaſe the imperfections of their King, as if they had a kind of felicity therin: theſe conſider not, that they owe to their King the very ſubmiſſion of their tongues, and that albeit they ought not to abuſe their tongues to the calling of euill, good; yet neither muſt they bee aplyed to the diſgrace of Gouernement. The euils of thoſe that be of higher places, if they be ſpoken of, ſhould be ſpoken of ſparingly, and in pity, and to the end, one man may ſtirre vp another vnto prayer, conſidering that vſually the fayling of Kings is in the iudgement of God for the peoples ſinnes: as when God was angry with the people of Iſrael, hee mooued Dauid againſt them, in that he ſaid, [d] Goe number Iſrael and Iudah.

d 2.*Sam.*24.1.

The Fift ſort are they, who haue no regard of conforming themſelues to the good and holeſome Lawes of Kings. There be many neceſſary Lawes made, ſuch as for ſubſtance are agreeing to the Lawes of God; ſo as are the Lawes, for frequenting the Houſe of God, for often communicating, for cauſing our Families to depend on Catechiſing, for prouiding carefully for the poore and impotent of our Pariſhes, for repayring the the Church, for reſtrayning of Inhabitants in Townes, to goe into the Alehouſe, for Drunkards, for Idlers, for high-wayes, for bridges, many ſuch needfull Lawes there are, which becauſe they tend to the maintainance of Gods worſhip ſo directly, and to the repreſſing of ſinne, and to the promoting of the common good, haue in them the ſtrength of Gods owne Lawes, yet how little conſcience is made of keeping them, who thinks himſelfe euer the worſe Subiect for neglecting them? Men in office and authoritie take away Cæſars right too, in not indeuouring what they may that ſuch good Lawes may be obſerued.

The ſixt ſort, they are keepers backe of Cæſars right too, who doe in a manner make Cæſar to be their God; his Lawes are the rule of their Religion, and the ground of their Faith: which is the guiſe of all Formaliſts and Time-ſeruers, and Church Papiſts. What is required by Statute for matters of Religion, after that length they are cut, they looke no further, neither to proceede higher, or in any other ſort. Theſe robbe Cæſar of his due, for whereas it is his place to bee vnder God, and to command for God, and to bee obeyed only in God, they build on him, his commands are the Articles of their Faith. This is to be ſo for Cæſar, as that in the meane while God is robbed of his right.

Laſtly, they are all tranſgreſſors of this charge, and Theeues againſt Cæſar, that are breakers of the common peace, whether they doe it out of a Popiſh and trecherous diſpoſition, or doe it out of ſwaggering, and tumultuouſneſſe, and careleſneſſe; and ſo are all backward and vncheerefull payers, in neceſſary appurtenances of matters that are to bee ſuſtayned by the common charge, all cunning Defrauders of dues, Cuſtomes, Tallages and ſuch like; theſe had neede to learne this leſſon of giuing vnto Cæſar the things which are his.

Thus haue I laboured to apply this point. Wee haue bene taught this day, what appertaines to the ſtate and condition of a good Subiect. By Cæſar is meant here euery King within his owne Dominion. There are certaine priuiledges and duties annexed to his Crowne by the Word of God, which muſt be giuen him: what they are, I haue ſhewed you; and who they be, that doe take them from him; I haue ſhewed you too. A man can neuer be a good Subiect, vntill he be one for conſcience ſake; Conſcience can neuer bee rightly reformed but by Gods Word. I haue therefore taken this paynes, my Text requiring it, to ſhew you what in conſcience and by the Word of God, wee that are Subiects, ought to giue vnto our King. Thus if wee behaue our ſelues in this matter of a Subiect, as men of knowledge; then ſhall his Maieſtie haue beſt benefit; and our ſelues moſt comfort by our obedience.

A PRESENT FOR CÆSAR.

The ſecond Sermon.

VERS. 25.

And to GOD thoſe which are GODS.

E haue heard that Cæſar muſt haue his due, and what his due is: Now next touching Gods due; (And vnto God thoſe which are Gods:) this is neceſſarily to be ioyned with the former: For it is not inough for a man to demeane himſelfe in ſuch ſort, as that hee may among men purchaſe the name and the reputation of a good Subiect, but his courſe muſt alſo be ſuch, as that he may be truely termed a good man, which cannot bee, vnleſſe he make conſcience of that duty, which is owing from him vnto God. Indeede, though the Heathen Writers touching mattters of State and Policie, haue made a diſtinction betwixt a good Citizen, and a good Man, ſo that as they thought a man might be the one, and not the other, yet in Religion we muſt hold otherwiſe, viz. that whoſoeuer is truely a good Man, the ſame cannot be but a good Subiect, and that he can neuer bee rightly reputed a good Subiect, that is, ſuch an one as he ought towards the King and the State, who is not a good man, viz. ſo diſpoſed, and affected, and tempered in matters of God, as is required. He who is not an obedient and conſcionable Subiect for conſcience ſake, is no good Subiect truely: and how ſhall hee bee dutifull vpon conſcience, that hath not learned the grounds of Conſcience, and is vnacquainted with that which he oweth to him, who is greater then his Conſcience? This I note as an introduction and inducement to that which is now to bee taught, that ſo we may learne not to ſeuer the things, which the Spirit of God hath coupled; Cæſar muſt haue his due ſo, as that God may not bee debarred of his, and our reſpect and carriage to God, muſt bee manifeſted to bee ſuch as it ſhould be, by our obedience vnto Cæſar. Hee that carryeth a right regard to both, hee is indeede a good man. My duty to my King and Soueraigne, is bounded and limited by my duty to God. I muſt know him to be aboue my King: and then my duty to my God is to bee euidenced by my loyaltie to my King. I am no good Chriſtian, if I bee not a good Subiect: I cannot be ſuch a Subiect as I ought, vnleſſe I be ſuch a Chriſtian as I muſt Come wee therefore now from the hearing of what we owe to Cæſar, to the learning and inquiring of what we owe to God. The Doctrine is this.

Doctrine. That it is not Lawfull for any man to depriue Almighty God of that which is his due.

You are carefull, ſaith our Sauiour, (as it ſeemeth) to inquire touching Cæſars right, as if you were ſo tender Conſcienced that you would not keepe ought from him that were his. It becommeth you to be at the leaſt, as carefull for God, there is a right alſo due to him, looke you to it, that you giue it him. Thus is the Doctrine rayſed, God muſt haue his due as well as the King his. Nay he is to haue it much more; [a] He is the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. [b] By him it is that earthly Kings doe raigne, [c] Hee beareth rule ouer the Kingdome of men, and giueth it to whoſoeuer hee will. If this then be a good reaſon (as indeede it is) to ſay. Euery man muſt haue his due from vs: the Kings Maieſty much more. Then is this alſo a good reaſon. Euery earthly King muſt haue his right, therefore hee much more who is the King of Heauen, and of whom all Creatures, and among the reſt all, euen the greateſt Kings doe hold that which they doe enioy. About the equitie hereof, I will ſpend no more labour. I know there is no man here but hee will yeeld to this generall truth, and ſay, farre bee it from me, that I ſhould not giue the Lord his due; It were a wickedneſſe for me to robbe God. To this therefore I will come (after the faſhion by which I proceeded the laſt day) to declare what that is which is the Lords due. Only let this be premiſed. What is here meant by the Lords due. The conſcionable performance of any good duty is in ſome ſenſe the Lords due, becauſe the ſame is required by him; and ſo euen that which was ſpoken of in the laſt Sermon, by the name of Cæſars due, is Gods due, becauſe the Law of God binds vs to it. When we ſpeake therefore of Gods due, we intend thereby that which is more properly, and more immediarely belonging to him; for examples ſake. In an houſe, whereof euery roome and corner is the Maſters, yet that where hee lyeth himſelfe is more particularly called his; ſo whereas all good ſeruices euen thoſe which appertaine to men, are the Lords, hee being the Commander of them, yet thoſe are more preciſely and ſpeci-

aily termed his, which belong to him more directly. And of the dues of this ſort we are now to treate; and theſe may iuſtly bee referred to two generall heads. The firſt I may call his Prerogatiue: the other his Worſhip. vnder Gods Prerogatiue I comprehend two things.

Firſt, That the things which concerne him, muſt haue the preeminence. Secondly, That he muſt haue abſolute obedience in all things.

Touching the firſt, it is Gods right, that ſuch things as doe tend to his glory, muſt be preferred before whatſoeuer elſe, and muſt euer haue the firſt place. It appertaines to the prerogatiue of a King within his Dominions, that that which is called his ſeruice, muſt be followed before any other mans: as if a man bee an Officer, and there bee a buſineſſe brought to him, which is called Buſineſſe for the King, that muſt be done forthwith, and whatſoeuer buſineſſe of his owne he hath at that time in his hand, hee muſt let that alone, to follow the other as the principall; ſo in Gods matters it is, theſe muſt haue the precedence; as a Magiſtrate muſt preferre ſuch things as tend to the glory and honour of God, in the execution of Iuſtice, and in the aduancement of Pietie, before his owne concernements, or the occaſions of his friends. A Miniſter muſt, (as it were) neglect matters appertayning to himſelfe and to his outward eſtate, in reſpect of the Worke of God, to which he is called for the winning of Soules, and for the enlargement of the Church. And euery other man, muſt in euery thing giue Religion the vpper hand; and ſee that God be firſt ſerued. That charge of [d] ſeeking the Kingdome of God firſt, muſt in all imployments and courſes be obſerued; How a man may know God and ſerue him, muſt be the firſt, and chiefe, and principall thing which muſt bee cared for. This muſt bee intended before riches, before honour before health before the fauour of men; Riches muſt be neglected, Honour not regarded, Health hazarded, the fauour of men not reſpected in reſpect of this one thing. Hereupon Chriſt reproued him, who being called by him to follow him, and to attend him in the worke of the Miniſtry, though he ſeemed not vnwilling to it altogether: yet would firſt goe and bury his Father; and another would [c] gee take his leaue of his friends. They which had not learned to know that Gods worke was to be preferred before whatſoeuer elſe, hee held them vnfit to bee his followers. And to the ſame end is that, [f] If any man come to me and hate not his Father, and Mother, and Wife, and Children, and Bretheren, and Siſters, yea, and his owne life alſo, hee cannot bee my Diſciple: not requiring a poſſitiue hatred of Father, Mother, Wife, Children, Life; for Religion doth not ouerthrow duty to Parents, nor teach a man cruelty to his wife and Children, or require violence to a mans ſelfe, but this was Chriſts meaning, that he is not fit to be one of his retinue, that hath not learned to preferre duties and ſeruices appertayning to God, before all other reſpects of nature; and to bee ſo diſpoſed, that when the caſe lyeth betwixt eyther his naturall friends or himſelfe, and God, if he doe that which God commands, he ſhall diſpleaſe and offend friends, or he ſhall faile in that expected of him, in regard of them, or

otherwiſe he ſhall endamage himſelfe; if on the other ſide he ſhall apply himſelfe to his friends, or to his owne content, hee ſhall bee defectiue in that which God requires; if I ſay he hath not learned to be ſo diſpoſed, as to giue himſelfe to God firſt in theſe caſes, he is not fit to be a Chriſtian. So then here is the firſt branch of Gods Prerogatiue. His glory, the pleaſing of him, the performance of his ſeruice, muſt haue the preeminence. This muſt be preferred before all other reſpects. I muſt neglect eaſe, credit, profit, life, for the ſake hereof; nay, this muſt bee dearer to me, and more tendred and reſpected by me, then the ſaluation of mine owne ſoule. My ſleepe, my meate, my reſt, my worldly affaires, I muſt not ſet on with theſe, till I haue performed to God that ſeruice which I owe vnto him, and whatſoeuer I put my hand vnto, I muſt firſt conſider how the proſecution thereof may ſtand with the duty which I owe to God, before I reſolue thereon. If I find that it will be an hinderance and impediment to it, I muſt let it alone, whatſoeuer the inconuenience may follow; and when I ſee I may doe God ſeruice, and aduance his glory, I muſt not refuſe or feare any manner of hazard for the ſake thereof.

The next branch of Gods royall Prerogatiue; I termed, Abſolute obedience in all things: By this abſolute obedience, I intend obedience without queſtion, without ſticking, and ſtaying, and ſtudying thereon. Herein is a great difference betwixt that which we owe to God, and that which wee owe to man. A Subiect is tyed in a great bond of obedience to his King, a Child owes much yeelding to his Parents, a Wife is lyable to much ſubiection reſpectiuely to her Husband, a Seruant is bound farre to his Maſter: but there is a great limitation in all theſe particulars. It is no ſufficient reaſon for a Subiect to ſay vniuerſally, this I may doe, this I muſt doe, for my King commands me; or for a Sonne, this is lawfull, for my Father chargeth me; or for a Wife, hereof I make no queſtion, for my Husband doth require me; or for a Seruant, this of the goodneſſe thereof, I neede make no doubt, for my Maſter doth enioyne it me. In all theſe, there muſt be a reference ſtill to God, I muſt compare the Lawes of the King with the Lawes of God, the commandements of my Parents with the Commandements of God, the biddings of my Husband with the Precepts of God, the iniunctions of my Maſter with the Statutes of God, I am not tyed to any of theſe without limitation, without condition. But now the Commandements of God are of a more abſolute authoritie. This is a ground ſufficient in any thing, I haue the Commandement of God: I doe not, I muſt not, now in this make any further queſtion, any higher demand; I muſt not here enter into a condition, as being a Subiect, whether this will ſtand with the Law of the King; whether being a Sonne, it will agree with the liking of my Father; whether being a Wife, it will ſort with the approbation of my Husband; whether being a Seruant, it will hold with that which my Maſter doth enioyne; or whether it ſtand with reaſon, and bee ſutable to the conceit of fleſh and bloud; this muſt bee inough, God will haue it ſo; like that of PETER, g We haue laboured all night, and haue taken nothing, neuerthelesse at thy word I will let downe the Net; as if he had ſaid, if I ſhould reaſon with my ſelfe herein, I could haue many obiections, why I ſhould bee vnwilling, after the labour of this whole night in vaine, to make a new aduenture, yet ſeeing I haue a charge from thee, that ſhall preuaile with mee aboue all. This is abſolute obedience. In ſubiection to men; It is no ſufficient rule of lawfulneſſe to ſay, ſuch or ſuch a Superior doth require it: this is no ſufficient footing for my Conſcience. In ſubiection to God it is otherwiſe, his ſole command makes any thing iuſt, lawfull, reaſonable, neceſſary; It needs no further nor higher authoritie to confirme it, neither can any ſuch weaken or impayre the ſtrength thereof. I may not vnfitly referre to this as a limme thereof, the yeelding that muſt bee in matters of opinion vpon Gods ſole, and (as I may ſay) bare Word. This alſo belongs to obedience; the other I may terme an obedience for matter of practice, this an obedience for matter of iudgement. For this abſolute obedience owe we to God in matters of iudgement, that there is a neceſſitie of beleeuing a matter, and of entertayning it as a truth, vpon his Teſtimonie. Now the Scripture is his Teſtimonie (often ſo termed.) Be a man neuer ſo learned, neuer ſo iudicious, neuer ſo high in authority, either in Church or Common-wealth, yet his ſaying is no ſufficient reſt for my iudgement, in a matter which concernes my ſoule. Euery mans words and opinions and teachings in matters of Religion, muſt be tryed and examined, and brought to the Touch-ſtone; yea, if Paul himſelfe were to preach to vs, it were our duty, and our wiſedome like the Bereans, h to ſearch the Scriptures to ſee whether the things which he ſpeaks are ſo: nay by Pauls owne rule, bidding vs i to hold an Angell accurſed which brings any other Goſpell: euen ſuch an one were not to be credited vpon his bare auouchment. But now, ipſe dixit; the Lord hath ſaid, is an abſolute foundation; where that is euident, we may, nay, we muſt beleeue, what ſoeuer our owne conceits, or others diſpoſition to cauill, ſhall obiect. Thus in the Doctrine of Predeſtination, againſt all that fleſh and bloud doth or can oppoſe, Paul cites the authoritie of the Scripture, by which to proue the liberty of God, to deale with his owne Creatures as he pleaſeth. k God ſaith to MOSES, I will haue mercy on him, to whom I will ſhew mercy, and will haue compaſſion, &c. and thereby to confirme the vnlawfulneſſe of man to debate with God: ſhall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, Why haſt thou made me thus? which hee fetcheth out, Iſay. 45. 9. teaching euery man to reſt touching this, vpon the authority of the Scripture. It ſeemes to thee, O man, this point is hard, ſtrait, cruell, vniuſt, rigorous; but behold, Gods Teſtimonie for it, to this thou art bound abſolutely to ſubmit. And thus farre of the firſt part of Gods due, which muſt not be kept from him; that I call his prerogatiue, hauing two branches. In all the things pertayning to his glory and ſeruice, hee muſt haue the precedence; abſolute obedience muſt be giuen him, both for matters to be done, it is inough that he commands it; and for matters to be beleeued, it doth ſuffice that he hath ſaid it.

k *Rom.*9.15.

And now I come to the next part of his due, His Worſhip. By his Worſhip is vnderſtood, that more direct and proper ſeruice which wee doe to God for the declaration of our duty to him, of our dependance on him, and of our acknowledgement both to expect and to receiue all good and comfort from him. Here the particulars to be conſidered of, vnder this head of worſhip, are, Firſt, That hee muſt bee worſhipped: Secondly, That he muſt be ſo worſhipped, as himſelfe thinks good.

That he muſt be worſhipped, it is plaine, Matth. 4. 10. This is part of Gods right: yea, it is ſo his right, and his peculiar that hee will not endure the giuing of this to any other. [1] Him only ſhalt thou ſerue. Worſhip God, ſaid the Angell to Iohn to correct his readineſſe, to giue ſome kind of adoration to him; therein hee preſſeth on him a reſeruation of worſhip only to God. God hath not his right, if either hee bee not worſhipped at all, or if his worſhip bee giuen together with him vnto any other. This is the tenor of the firſt Commandement, that God alone is to bee worſhipped. This worſhip of God is either publique in the Congregation, or priuate partly in the family; all the members thereof meeting together to that end, partly by euery ſeuerall perſon apart. My purpoſe is now to ſpeake only of the publique worſhip; not becauſe I account not the other a part of Gods due, but partly for breuities ſake, and eſpecially, becauſe I am ſure that he who makes conſcience, to giue God his due, in regard of his publike worſhip, cannot be remiſſe in the priuate, he will both, haue exerciſes of Gods worſhip in his houſe, and will betwixt God and his ſoule, performe that which is requiſite in this caſe. So then vpon this I reſt as a matter plaine, and ſuch as cannot bee denyed, neither will any open his mouth againſt it, that God in publike muſt be worſhipped.

1 Apoc. 22. 9.

Now for the ſecond point: That hee muſt bee worſhipped as himſelfe thinks good; It is eaſily ſhewed that it is a part of Gods right to preſcribe his owne worſhip, and man is not to aduenture therein to doe what hee thinks good, but to take his rules and directions from the Lord. [m] Yee ſhall not doe after all theſe things, that wee doe here this day: that is, euery man whatſoeuer ſeemeth good in his owne eyes. How ordinarily doth God vrge his people by Moſes for matters of his worſhip, to hearken vnto his Commandements, to walke in his Wayes, to obſerue his Ordinances and his Lawes, as reſeruing that to himſelfe as his peculiar, to ſet downe and ſhew what hee will haue done in theſe caſes; what ſhould I bee long in this? This is the maine drift of the ſecond Commandement, to tye vp man from deuiſing and inuenting, and coyning the way of ſeruing God in, and by his owne wit, and braine, and to bind him to ſerue and worſhip God, as he ſhall giue order. This then is a part of Gods due as to worſhip him, ſo to hearken to him for rules and orders of his worſhip. God would neuer elſe ſo much complaine of it, as of a kind of wrong and iniurie done vnto him, when mens inuentions and precepts, and the worke of their hands are brought into his ſeruice, then the which notwithſtanding there was nothing more vſually condemned in the Sermons of the Prophets.

m Deut. 12. 8.

Now

Now for the more profitable vnderſtanding of this point, touching Gods right and due in the courſe and order of his publike worſhip; I annexe to it theſe three ſpecialties. Firſt, That there is a due to God in regard of the things wherein he muſt be worſhipped. Secondly, A due in regard of the time ſpecially deputed for his worſhip. Thirdly, A due in reſpect of the perſons, ſet apart to attend for the good and guidance of his people, in his worſhip.

In regard of the things wherein God muſt bee worſhipped; Firſt, That hee haue them. Secondly, That he haue them ſo as hee ought to haue them. The things that hee ought to haue for his worſhip, are, Firſt, Prayer; Secondly, Hearing of his Word; Thirdly, Receiuing ſuch outward ſignes and pledges of his grace, and of our obedience, as hee ordaynes. Theſe were euer the three mayne limmes of Gods publique worſhip; Inuocation, Hearing, and Sacraments. It is Gods due publikely to bee called vpon; which is a reaſon, why the Congregation and place of meeting is called the Houſe of Prayer. It is his due to haue his Word heard: [n] Take heede to thy foote when thou entreſt into the Houſe of God, and bee ready to heare. It is his due to haue ſuch Sacraments entertayned as he appoints. So Circumciſion, and the Paſſeouer, before Chriſt; touching each of which, there was a peremptorie commandement that the neglector of them ſhould bee cut off from among the people of God. So Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper, ſince Chriſt; both which are confirmed by Precept, the former, [o] Amend your liues and be baptized euery one of you, &c. The latter, [p] This doe.

Now next as God muſt haue theſe, ſo hee muſt haue them, as hee ought to haue them: and how is that? In a word, [q] In ſpirit and in truth. That is the generall and common appurtenance to the worſhipping of God. In Spirit, the heart muſt concurre, as of ſinging it is required, Epheſ. 5. 19. a man muſt know what he doth, which Paul calleth [r] a reaſonable ſeruice of God; and then, in Truth. In ſinceritie of affection, For [ſ] God loueth truth in the inward affections. A man ſtriues to bee the ſame, and better within, before God, then he ſeemes to be before men. This is the due in regard of the things, wherein he muſt be worſhipped.

The due in regard of the time ſpecially deputed for his publike worſhip, is that, that the time which he hath ſet apart to that end, bee giuen to him accordingly: That time is the Sabbath day, which although all dayes are his, as being the Lord of Time, yet by a ſpeciall right it is called his Day. The ſeuenth day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: and, Reu. 1. 10. This day is to be giuen to his publike worſhip; and when mention is made of a day for God; is it not right, that day ſhould be vnderſtood in as large and in as ample a ſenſe for Him, as we doe for a man; as when a workman is hyred for a day, by day is not meant now and then a ſnatch, or a piece of the forenoone only, or a part of the afternoone alone, but all the day is intended; what right or equitie to abridge or ſcant God, when he requires a day, more then Man? So that Gods due for the times of his publique worſhip is an whole day; not that all the day is is to bee ſpent in the very acts and performances of Gods publike worſhip, but the whole day muſt bee ſpent, either in it, or in preparing to it, and comming to reape good and profit by it; yea, euen the times afforded that Day to nature for her neceſſarie repaſt muſt bee deuoted that way, and accompanyed with that reſpect.

There is alſo a due in regard of perſons, appointed to attend vpon Gods publique worſhip. Such hath God euer had of old; there were that did miniſter about holy things, Prieſts and Leuites; there are ſuch appointed to be ſtill: the Apoſtle makes thoſe, that preach the Goſpell, to become in the roome of thoſe that did anciently [t] wait vpon the Altar. Now, there is a due to God reſpectiuely to them, which is twofold: Firſt, That they be accounted of as [u] diſpoſers of the ſecrets of God. Is it not Gods due, that hee whom hee ſends, ſhould bee receiued, and that commeth as an Embaſſadour from him ſhould be hearkned too? If God had not a due to him, euen in the reſpect to his Miniſters, and in the making vſe of their Calling, and ſubmitting to their Teaching, how is God ſaid in them to bee deſpiſed, *Luk.*10.16.? Is it not plaine by that ſpeech, that when contempt and diſ-regard is caſt vpon thoſe, which are ſent with the glad tydings of ſaluation, God loſeth ſomewhat which he ought to haue, and hath not ſo much honour as he ſhould?

t 1.*Cor.*9.13, 14.

u 1.*Cor.*4.1.

The ſecond due to God in them, is their maintenance. God hath not appointed them to liue vpon mens almes and beneuolence, allowable for them to reſtraine or purloyne as they pleaſe; but hee hath reſerued to himſelfe a portion out of euery mans eſtate, for the maintenance of his publique worſhip; ſo that that whereon they are to liue is his due, it is owing to him, and from him allowed vnto them. And to make it plaine, that the Miniſters maintenance is Gods due, appeareth by that place of Malachy, *Chap.*3. 8. God telleth the people, they had robbed and ſpoyled him: and wherein? in Tithes, &c. Was God robbed when the Tithe was detayned? then belike the Tithe was Gods due. If any ſhall except againſt that proofe, vnder a colour, that forſooth, Tithe was a ceremony, and not appointed ſtill to the end to continue in kind. I anſwere, that let that bee granted (which many Diuines will not yeeld) that Tithes were Ceremoniall, and ſo ceaſed, yet maintenance which is the ſubſtance of Tithe is perpetuall, for ſo hath the Lord ordayned, That they * which preach the Goſpell, ſhould liue of the Goſpell; and being ſo, that is Gods due ſtill, and therefore to be giuen him.

* 1.*Cor.*9.14.

Thus haue I laboured to draw a great deale of matter to a ſhort ſumme, I haue couched it in the eaſieſt and playneſt Method that I could. Giue God that which is his, ſaith our Sauiour, wee will all, I know, ſay it is very great reaſon and equitie that wee ſhould. But wee muſt learne out of the Scripture what is his due: His due is either his Royall Prerogatiue, or his ſolemne worſhip. Giue him his Prerogatiue, that is, Let things which concerne his glory and our duty to him, in all things haue the preeminence; and let both things commanded by him be obeyed without queſtion, and things reuealed by him bee beleeued without gaine-gaine-ſaying. Well, giue him his worſhip. How is that? Let him haue no ſharers with him in matters of that qualitie. Let him be allowed to giue order how hee will bee worſhipped, man not daring to impoſe his deuiſes. Let him be prayed vnto, let his Word be heard, and his Sacraments reuerently entertayned, and let theſe all be done with vnderſtanding and ſinceritie. Let him haue his due-day, one in the Weeke, without clipping it ſhorter then is meete. Let him haue his right in the eſtimation and maintenance of his meſſengers. This is the ſumme of all hitherto. I hope, I haue ſpoken nothing herein without proofe; I know (according as I erewhile ſaid) that neither mine, nor any mans iudgement is to be reſted vpon ſimply, but wee muſt all come vnto triall, but if vpon triall, (I doe not meane a tryall by malice, or preiudice, or a mind bent to cauill, but a tryall in humilitie with prayer to God, and with reſpect to his Ordinance and by the Scripture) it ſhall appeare that that which is ſaid, hath manifeſt ground vpon plaine euidence of Gods Word, then that which is ſaid is no longer to bee reckoned of as the word of a man, but is to bee eſteemed as the Doctrine of God.

I would we could once be brought to ſuch an examination of things taught, we thinke it to be trouble inough to heare, wee are wiſe inough to put our ſelues to an after taske, and ſo wee eſteeme of that wee heare, according as wee taſte it while we heare it, and as it ſauoureth with our naturall palates. Sometimes you heare it ſaid by ſome, that the generall courſe of the Doctrine here taught is falſe and vnſound, and ſo you doe euen let it goe and neuer fall to any due inquirie, wee ſtumble at that, and there lie and goe no further. But God will not be ſo anſwered. He will haue an account from vs why we entertaine any point of Doctrine, and why we refuſe any point of Doctrine: and if any thing now which I haue deliuered to be Gods due, be not credited or beleeued to bee his due, let them that refuſe to accord herein, bee ſure they can giue good reaſon thereof. Conceit and imagination, or this mans ſaying, or that mans opinion to the contrary, theſe are poore, and weake, and ſilly reaſons in this caſe. I come to the Vſe.

The Vſe ſhall bee beſt made after the faſhion of the Vſe of the Doctrine taught the laſt day, viz. to apply it to the diſcouery and laying open of thoſe who tranſgreſſe herein, and keepe away from God that which of right he ought to haue. They are of diuers degrees and ſorts, according as the branches of Gods due are diuers.

The firſt ſort are they, who whereas they ſhould of right giue the things of God the precedence, doe the cleane contrary, euen poſte them ouer into the laſt roomes, preferring other things before them. Thus doe they, who make Religion one of the laſt matters they endeauour for; Firſt, they ſeeke riches, gaine, profit, pleaſure, ſuch things as are for the contentment of the outward man; at laſt (it may bee) they will beſtow ſome thoughts vpon thoſe things which appertayne to God, when they haue ſerued all other turnes, then (perhaps) ſome ſhare will fall out for God. This is a common euill, euen to ſerue the World, and the

Deuill

Deuill, and the Fleſh, before the Lord. How many be there, the greateſt part of whoſe time, is euen in a manner runne out by the very courſe of Nature, yet notwithſtanding they haue not yet ſet themſelues ſo about the things that concerne the glorie of God, and their owne ſaluation, as is neceſſary? If God ought to be the chiefe and the ſupreme in all things, euery buſineſſe ſhould begin in him, the glorie and honour of his Name ſhould be the end and ſcope of all; we ſhould in him, and with him, and by thoughts and prayers lifted vp to him, ſet on with all wee doe, worke, meate, reſt, all our drift in euery thing ſhould be to doe him ſeruice, and to be the better enabled to be inſtruments of his glorie; but, alas, how little is it thought of? In this is God robbed of his due. Hee ſhould bee ſerued firſt, and his glorie made our chiefeſt ayme; the moſt men care to ſerue themſelues firſt, as if they thought, that at the laſt, when they are good for little elſe, it might be time inough to ſeeke the Lord.

The ſecond ſort are they, to whom the authoritie of God is no ſufficient motiue to obedience, nor no ſufficient ground of Faith. If there come a Commandement from God, for a matter, that is not inough to preuaile with them, vnleſſe they ſhall find the ſame either to bee preſſed by man, or elſe to bee ſuch, as they may doe without incurring the diſpleaſure of man. How many things be there, which we that are Preachers, doe vrge out of the Word of God; and for which wee bring plaine and manifeſt proofe from Scripture, which yet are made no account of in the world, but euen with a kind of ſcorne neglected, becauſe either men feele the weight of no other authoritie therein, or elſe feare ſome inconuenience from men if they ſhall obey? As for example, let it be made plaine out of Gods Word by the example of Abraham, that a Maſter of a Family muſt command his Family to keepe the Way of the Lord, and by *Deuter.*6.7. That hee muſt rehearſe Gods Word continually to his Children, &c. yet what force hath this with our Hearers, being the plaine Commandement of the Lord; What is the reaſon? there is no Law of man that enforceth it, there is no penaltie to the Purſe that lyeth vpon neglecting it, and it may be if a man doe ſo, hee ſhall bee taxed in the World, and ſcoffed at; vpon theſe grounds the Commandement of God is of no force at all. I might ſhew you many ſuch inſtances. Doe we giue God herein the prerogatiue, when his Law is of no force at all, vnleſſe there be ſome other Law to compell vs, or when as wee are afraid to doe as hee bids, if wee ſee ſomewhat from men to be againſt vs. God commands mee to inſtruct my Family, God commands mee to prepare my ſelfe to the publique exerciſes of his worſhip, God commands to meditate and conferre about the things I heare, God commands to admoniſh where I ſee a fault, &c. What of this? indeed, theſe things I ſee there is Scripture brought for them, and I cannot denie them, but being a Subiect, I ſee no ſuch matter required by the Law of the King, there is no puniſhment nor forfeit, if I doe not thus; being a Sonne, I perceiue no ſuch matter enioyned by my Father; my Maſter, I being a Seruant, vrgeth on mee no ſuch thing, therefore I will not care to doe thus and thus:

thus: How doe I giue vnto him his due of abſolute obedience? This is the obedience I owe him. His Commandements muſt preuaile with me more, then if all the men in the world require me; nay, if all the world be againſt me in that which he commands, I muſt aduenture my ſelfe vpon the wrath and diſpleaſure of them, rather then not doe it. To this head of failing in the point of abſolute obedience pertayne they, whom, in a point of Faith, the authoritie of Gods Teſtimonie cannot ſatiſfie; if they cannot find this and that, to ſuite with their reaſon, and to be equall by, that equitie which they fancy; Gods Teſtimonie in his Word ſhall not preuaile. They haue not learned to ſubdue, and to reſigne their thoughts to God: the matter muſt be made agreeing with their conceit, or elſe it is nothing. Theſe bee points, touching which ſome are not aſhamed to ſay, they will neuer beleeue them; no not when there is as plaine Scripture produced for them as is poſſible.

The third ſort, are all careleſſe and remiſſe worſhippers of God, ſuch as make no conſcience of repayring to the Houſe of God, there to giue him that worſhip which is due. It were all one to them, and they doe not care, though they neuer came to the publike place; they come no more, nor oftner to common Prayer, Preaching, and Sacraments, then they needes muſt. There bee diuerſe of this place, come to theſe but ſeldome through the yeere, and there be a great many of whom it may be thought, that if it were left to their choice what to doe herein, and that they might ſafely without any ſhame or danger from men, ordinarily abſent themſelues, we ſhould ſee them but ſeldome. Haſt not thou a conſcionable diſpoſition of comming to Gods publike worſhip, art thou not glad of the liberty and freedome of Religion, what doſt thou thinke, were there nothing to enforce thee to come ordinarily to Prayer, and Sermons and Sacraments, and that the caſe were ſo that thou mighteſt bide at home, or follow thy worke on the Sabbath dayes without any checke or controlment from man, wouldeſt thou not yet come of thine owne voluntary, out of a reſpect to Gods Commandement, aske thy ſelfe concerning this; ſurely, if it bee thus with thee, thou art an offender againſt this rule of our Sauiour of giuing God his due.

The fourth ſort are all ignorant and ſuperſtitious perſons, that will haue a kind of deuotion, and to Church they will come, and ſerue God they will, and thereof they bragge not a little, but they doe not know, neither will learne how Gods Will is to be ſerued. It muſt bee inough forſooth, that in that they doe they meane well, and that for that they obſerue, they can alleage cuſtome, generall courſe, faſhion of their Fathers, and ſuch like. Theſe ſwarme euery where; if for an vſage in the publike ſeruice of God, they haue proteſted, they will bide to it, it is good, it hath beene ſo time out of mind; if it were good, it is good; aſſoone ſhall you make Salomons Foole leaue his folly by braying him in a Morter, as beate them from it. They thinke it ridiculous, and vnreaſonable that they ſhould bee bound to inquire into Gods Word what they muſt doe, and when a reaſon is brought out of Gods Word againſt that that they doe, they make no account thereof. Doe they giue God his due, that will not ſuffer him to giue order for his owne worſhip, and when God ſaith, thus I will be ſerued; ſhall ſay in effect, nay, but wee will ſerue thee thus, or not at all?

The fift ſort are they, that limit their worſhip of God only to Prayer, and Sacraments, and ſcarce account the hearing of the Word, and the diſpenſation thereof by preaching to bee a part thereof: they were ſtrongly of opinion they may worſhip God well and as they ought, though they heare no Sermons, they reckon the want hereof no mayme at all to Gods publike worſhip. Theſe alſo take from God his due; for it is his due to be heard in his Miniſters, and it is his Will that his Word ſhould be diuided aright for the edification of the people euery Sabbath day: and hee who turnes his Eares from this, all his other ſeruice is abominable.

The ſixt ſort (to haſten and not inſiſt vpon all particulars, but to name the chiefe,) they are alſo detayners of Gods due, who deale not with him in the matters of the Sabbath according vnto right, I meane that right, which the Lord hath vnto that Day. What ſhall wee ſay? muſt God haue his due, the Text is plaine for it: is the Sabbath a part of his due? the words of the Commandement are expreſſe, The Seuenth day is the Sabbath. Is not a day to be taken as largely for God, as for vs, in a buſineſſe of our owne? then how doe they giue God his due on the Sabbath, who turne it either in whole or in part to their eaſe, to their profit, to their ſport, to their bellies? If any man can ſhew mee how Gods due is not taken from him by this meanes, I will acknowledge my miſtaking, and neuer more ſpeake againſt this Vſe, but both by my teaching and practice giue all the allowance and countenance to it that I can. In the meane while, I muſt ſay, and I know though I may bee gaine-ſayed, yet I cannot be diſproued, that they which make this day, the day of their great Feaſts, of their Reuelling, Fiddling, Dancing, Gaming, Masking, robbe God of his right, and for ought I know, Theeues and Robbers by the high-way ſide may looke to goe to heauen in their courſe aſſoone as they: Giue vnto God that which is Gods. Is the Sabbath Gods? let him haue it: If thou ſpend it, thus and thus as the manner is, it is now not Gods day, but thine: Six dayes ſhalt thou labour, and doe all that thou haſt to doe: that which is thy buſineſſe for thy ſelfe, for thy profit, for thy lawfull delight, or for giuing entertaynement to thy friends; there be ſix dayes for this, but the ſeuenth is his, and to bee beſtowed as hee will and as hee appoints; hath God reſerued to himſelfe but one poore day of ſeuen, and wilt thou take it from him? and muſt God then lacke the due attendance of the people in his Houſe, while they are licking of thy Trenchers, and gaping vpon thy diſorders? Oh, that men cannot yet ſee the equitie hereof; I remember what God ſaid once vpon occaſion of mens thinking any lame offering good inough for God: [x] Offer it now to thy Prince, and will he be content, &c. So ſay I in this, thou doſt not dare deale ſo with a man. There is a due day put in vpon the leaſe to be payd to him that is thy Lord. Dareſt thou deale ſo with him in that duty, as thou dealeſt with God in his due-day. Come in the Morning and cut a Sheaſe or two and then goe thy way, and take thy pleaſure all the day beſides, and ſee whether hee will take this for a ſufficient pay.

The Seuenth ſort, All keepers from Gods Miniſters, that which they ought to haue: God in them is either robbed, or paid of his due: in their contempt, his due honour is withdrawne, in their pinching and vnwilling maintenance, Gods right is taken from him. Whereupon the Apoſtle ſpeaking of this point, of y making him that teacheth, partaker of all his goods. Bee not deceiued: God is not mocked: for whatſoeuer a man ſoweth, that ſhall hee alſo reape. You thinke you haue to doe with no more but man herein; you miſtake, God is a partie herein, he is either paid or patched with, in theſe payments. I content my ſelfe, with a word hereof. I haue thus laboured to apply this point, and I doubt not but this application finds many guilty of keeping away Gods right, either in his prerogatiue, or in his ſolemne worſhip. Conſider your ſelues, and if ought be laid open, wherewith your conſciences charge you touching your ſelues, looke from me to the grounds whereon I haue built, and in repentance for former fayling, reſolue for the time to come, to giue vnto God the things which are Gods. We giuing him that which hee ought to haue, ſhall receiue from him that which we deſire to haue.

A BARGAINE OF SALT.

The first Sermon.

MARK. 9. 50.

Salt is good: but if the Salt haue lost his saltnesse, wherewith will you season it? haue salt in your selues, and haue peace one with another.

LEt vs looke backe a little into the Chapter, that wee may find out the course and order of the place: our Sauiour had taught the necessitie of cutting off al occasions of offence and scandall, yea, though the same may bee as deare vnto vs, and such as we thinke we can as ill spare as our Hand, or Foote, or Eye; Becausе hee knew this would bee thought an hard saying, therefore he sheweth the necessitie of mortification to saluation in the Verse next before my Text, Euery man must bee salted with fire. Hee who escapes the fire which I haue spoken of which neuer goeth out, must passe through another, not materiall, but spirituall fire, which must consume and waste in him his corruptions. And euery Sacrifice must be salted with Salt. Who so will consecrate himselfe to God, and giue vp himselfe as a liuing Sacrifice holy and acceptable to him, must bee powdered and manured with such a Salt, by which the lusts of sinne which are in him naturally, may be so mastered and wrought out, as that he may become an holy lumpe, and may not be reiected of him, as one rotted and putrified, and growne lothsome by his sinnes: Now the naming of this salt, necessarily required to the seasoning of euery one that desires to be a sacrifice of a sweet smelling sauour vnto God, gaue occasion to these words tending to the commendation thereof, while it is strong; and to the dispraise thereof, when it is once become vnsauory. By these degrees did our Sauiour discend to this speech. I may fitly diuide it into two parts.

First, A positiue speech. Secondly, A word of aduise giuen to the Disciples thereupon.

The speech is parabolicall: by it as Saint Paul saith, of the two sonnes of ABRAHAM, there is another thing meant. It was ordinarie with our Sauiour to open his mouth in parables. Indeede there is nothing that makes a matter more plaine to vnderstanding, nothing strikes a deeper impression into the memory then a Parable, when it is rightly vnderstood. In handling our Sauiours Parables, though I will not say with Popish Caietan that it is euen almost impossible to apply them, yet there is great heede and circumspection to bee vsed in expounding them. A man may easily straine too farre, and like him of whom Salomon speaks, which wringeth his nose may make the bloud to come. According as many Instances may be giuen out of Popish Comments, as in that particular touching the Traueller betwixt Ierusalem, and Iericho, and falling among Theeues, by whom, as they will haue to bee meant Adam surprised by the Deuill, so they make vse of his being halfe dead to proue that Adam was not vtterly spoyled of all his first excellencies: and then as by the two pence, giuen to the Host they vnderstood the two Bookes of the Old and New Testament, committed to the Church for the restoring of decayed man, so by, whatsoeuer may be laid out more, they will haue to be meant vnwritten verities, and Ecclesiasticall Traditions whereto they would haue this place giue some countenance. I could, if it were fit, present you with a large suruey of such enforced collections out of the abuse of Parables. It is said not amisse that in a Parable there are, three things considerable. First, Contex, the rind or barke, that is, the words and termes wherein it is deliuered. Secondly, Radix, the roote, which is the scope to which it driues. Thirdly, Fructus, the fruit, which is to be gathered from it. When the rinde is wisely put aside, and the roote discouered, what the fruit is which groweth thereon will be easily knowne. But for this Parable wee shall not bee put to any great strait to find out what it meanes; hee himselfe that deliuered it hath elsewhere reached out a light by which wee may see into it. You are the Salt of the earth, said Christ to his Apostles; and wherefore, but in regard of their Ministry. By the Earth wee are vnderstood, saith Augustine, and they the Salt of the Earth because they are to bee, totius Orbis Magistri, saith Chrysostome, to be the instructors of the earth. Will you therefore that I take of the Rhetoricke of these words, and present you with the plaine and naked English thereof; Then that Salt is good, is as much as to say a preaching Ministry is good. The men of the world were all in their naturall estate, without any smacke of grace, without any relish, or taste of goodnesse: the Apostles were to season them, how? but by the execution of their Ministry, which way can any man else deuise it should be, in case he had a mind to cauill: and what Ministry was theirs but a preaching Ministry? Goe yee into all the world, and preach the Gospell vnto euery creature. Another kind of Ministry was not knowne, nor thought of in their times, so that this interpretation cannot be gaine-said. It were idle to thinke that our Sauiour had here no further ayme, then to ſpeake of our ordering houſhold ſalt and to tell vs how good that is; and ſhall any preſume to giue another ſenſe of ſalt when Chriſt himſelfe hath expounded it touching the emploiment of the Apoſtles in the worke of the Miniſtry. Reſting therefore vpon this, I diuide this firſt part of my Text into two portions. The firſt ſheweth the vſefulneſſe of a preaching Miniſtry. Salt is good. The ſecond declareth the ilneſſe and vnprofitableneſſe of the contrary. But if the Salt haue loſt his ſaltneſſe wherewith will you ſeaſon it? The plaine Doctrine then is this.

That a preaching Miniſtry is a thing in it ſelfe of very great and neceſſary vſe in the Church of God. The firſt Doctrine.

The teaching hereof is the maine purpoſe of theſe words. Materiall Salt ſuch as wee daily vſe in our houſhold buſineſſe, was not the thing at which he aymed, only this, by a temporall commoditie it pleaſeth him to ſhaddow out a ſpirituall benefit, and by the reporting well of our common ſalt to let vs know the worth of that inward ſeaſoning by which the ſoule is preſerued vnto life eternall. That ſeruice of diſpenſing the word of life and grace among men wherein his Apoſtles were imployed, is that Salt which is intended in this place. Looke of what vſe ſalt is, for matters belonging to the body, of the ſame, yea, of farre greater, this is, for the things which appertayne to the ſoule. Euery one knoweth that Salt is that which giueth reliſh and taſte to all things which man eates. That which is vnſauary ſhall it be eatten without Salt? Vita humana ſine Sale nequit degere; The life of man cannot conſiſt without Salt. This, that all things are made taſtie through Salt, is the reaſon that Learned men doe apply this to the Ornaments of the mind, the fruits of a good wit are termed Sales, and hee which hath no matter of worth in him, that is altogether groſſe and and abſurd, the Latins terme, Inſulſum, Inſipidum, as it were a man without Salt, vnſeaſoned, and vnſauery. I haue heard therefore that in ſome parts of Italie, it will be taken for a great indignitie, if a man haue, as he is at meat by one that ſits with him, ſalt offered to him, he takes it for a ſecret inſinuation that he is reckoned but a foole, a fellow that wants Salt, that is to ſay, hath but a little wit. Who knoweth not the power of ſalt to preſerue from putrifaction, in ſo much as that which without it would quickly periſh, by the ſtrength and operation of ſalt, hath as it were a new life put into it, and is made able to endure ſound and ſweet a long time. It is a thing by men of iudgement reputed to bee very phiſicall, and to bee very holeſome to mans body, whence came the ancient preſcript of Phiſicians for the waſhing of Infants newly borne with Salt before their ſwaddling. Thinke not I by the way giue any countenance herein to the Popiſh vſe of ſalting little ones at their Baptiſme. Bleſſed be God, that that Salt was long ſince taken away in the Voider, it is a Phiſicall vſe I ſpeake of, a thing which the Spirit of God giues allowance to, in comparing the ſtate of the Iſraelites before his cleanſing them, to an Infant whoſe Nauell is not cut, who is neither waſhed with Water nor ſalted with Salt. It is obſerued to bee a faſhion in ſome ſome Countries to ſet whole pillars of Salt where their Cattell liue, by the licking whereof they recouer ſtrength and health when they are ill diſpoſed.

4. What is it out of which fruitfulneſſe commeth in the earth, but the ſaltneſſe thereof. It is found in experience that all earth, the better, the fatter, and the more fertile it is, out of it, ſo much the more, ſalt may be extracted. That which in all our coaſts we put into the ground and which cauſeth it to become the more fruitfull, what is it but a kind of ſaltiſh ſpirit, or vigor, that is in it? Our Sand which wee fetch from the Sea, it is only the ſaltneſſe thereof that makes it to become ſo vſefull as wee find it. Euery man knoweth that if it lie ſo long in the heape together in a ſummers day, vntill the ſaltneſſe bee drawne out of it by the power of the Sunne, it becommeth ſo much the more weake to produce that good which is deſired in the ground. Our Sauiours words here in the following part. viz. that Salt becomming vnſauory is good for nothing, are an argument that in it ſelfe ſo long as it retayneth its due ſtrenght it is very good for the fatting of the earth. Thus haue I in few words acquainted you with the goodneſſe of that creatnre of ordinary ſalt which is here mentioned. It is obſerued that there are none of all the creatures, of which God is found in all the Scripture to haue ſaid in particular, they are good, but only Hony, and Salt; Pro. 24. 13. and Salt here; Indeede in generall, it is ſaid, that God ſaw all his creatures and they were very good: but of none it is ſo ſpoken in ſpeciall, yea and that ſince the time of corruption and ſinne, but only of theſe two, and thereupon it is concluded, and (as I thinke) iuſtly, that there is ſome more ſpeciall worth in thoſe two, then men generally be aware of. Touching Salt, we ſee it is of great vſe for ſeaſoning, for preuention of putrefaction, for medicine and for fructifying. Now this ſpirituall ſalt, the preaching of the Word is of like vſe for the ſoule and the things thereof, that this other is for the body, and the matters appertayning thereunto.

Thus looke whatſoeuer this earthly Salt is good for in a naturall ſenſe, the ſame is this miniſteriall Salt good for, in a ſpirituall meaning, what is man in himſelfe, but an vnſauory lump, hauing not in him ſo much as a dram or mite of goodneſſe. What is his heart, but a very roote of rottenneſſe, yeelding out nothing but that which defileth the man? What power is in him to cure himſelfe, when the Imaginations of his heart are only euill? What fruit of holyneſſe can hee bring forth who is euen Reprobate vnto all good works? Thus is man without this ſalt; ſo that that looke of what neceſſitie Salt is in euery family, of the ſame, yea, of farre greater is the preaching of the Word in the Lords houſhold. Except yee beleeue that I am hee, yee ſhall die in your ſinne? there is a certainty of rotting in our ſinnes without Faith: and how ſhall wee haue Faith, without the Word of Faith. And this is the Word of Faith, euen that which is preached. How ſhall men beleeue it? The man of Macedonia whom Paul ſaw in a viſion, praying him to come thither, and there to beſtow his preaching paines; in what words did he deliuer his requeſt, Come and helpe vs. Doth not that argue the vſefulneſſe of preaching. It ſhould ſeeme they of Macedonia were in the way of being vtterly vndone without a Preacher. They were without all ſauour of grace, all relliſh or taſte of goodneſſe, till it was wrought within them by a preaching Miniſtry. What were the Romans without this Salt, and before they were thereby ſeaſoned? the very Seruants of ſinne, but by this they came to bee full of goodneſſe. What the Corinthians? Gentiles carryed away to dumbe Idols: but after that God did manifeſt the ſauour of his Knowledge among them by the Miniſtry of Paul, they did abound in euery thing, Faith, Word, Knowledge, Diligence; and their zeale prouoked many. What the Galathians? but, doers of ſeruice to them which by nature were not Gods. But behold, by hearing of Faith preached, they receiued the Spirit. What were the Epheſians? but ſuch as had their conuerſation in time paſt in the luſts of the fleſh? but when the Word of Life was diſpenſed among them by the Apoſtles preaching, there were many beleeued and ſhewed their works, and the Word of God grew mightily and preuailed. I could ſay the like of others by declaring what they were in themſelues, and what alteration followed in them by a faithfull Miniſtry, which ſerues fully to iuſtifie this Doctrine, in as much as thereby it is euident, that till men are brought to the knowledge of God in Chriſt by preaching, they are without all ſauour of good, and are lothſome and corrupt before the Lord. What is that which makes men vnſauory in the Noſtrils of God, and rotten in themſelues, but the power of their owne Luſts, the raigning of ſinne in their mortall bodies? Theſe in men are like thoſe humours and that remainder of bloud which is in that fleſh we buy for food, which cauſeth it to putrifie and to become offenſiue and vnholſome without ſalting. Now how ſhall theſe ouer-ruling Luſts be maſtered and ſubdued, but by that which is termed, Mortifying of our members, &c. And how ſhall men be brought to this, but by the preaching of Repentance. If they bee not pricked in their hearts by ſome preaching Miniſtry like the Iewes that heard Peter: If they be not made to feele the power of that Word which is as fire, and as the hammer, breaketh the ſtone: if by the crying out of ſome Boanerges, ſome ſonne of thunder; they come not to the ſight and feeling of their ſinnes, their wounds cannot but putrifie, there is no ordinary hope of their comming to amendment of life out of the ſnare of the Deuill, by whom they haue beene, taken captiue at his will. Thus I hope it appeares, that this ſpirituall Salt is good, a matter of ſpeciall vſe in the Church

Church of God. To ſpeake of an ordinary courſe: no ſeaſoning with grace, no purging from the matter and cauſe of ſpirituall rottenneſſe our inbred Luſts, no curing of the maladies and ſickneſſe of our ſoules, no attayning to fruitfulneſſe in good works, but by the meanes of a preaching Miniſtry. It was for their preaching that the Apoſtles were called the Salt of the Earth: This courſe to which they were called is that Salt which for the goodneſſe and vſefulneſſe thereof is commended by our Sauiour in this place.

Obiect. It may (perhaps) be obiected (for I know no point with which men are more apt to picke quarrels then with this) that albeit this Text may proue the vſefulneſſe of the Apoſtles Miniſtry and the goodneſſe thereof, and that it was the ſalt and ſeaſoning of the world, yet it inforceth not the like vſe of a preaching Miniſtry now; for why, wee haue now the Apoſtles Doctrine, wherewith they ſeaſoned the World in the Booke of their Acts, recorded by Saint Luke, and in the Epiſtles written by ſome chiefe among them, what neede we more?

Anſw. I anſwere, Firſt, that the whole world in it ſelfe, euen to this day, lyeth in wickedneſſe, and doth as much ſtand in neede of an inſtrument and meanes of ſeaſoning as it did when the Apoſtles liued. Nor to thinke the world now needing ſpirituall ſalt, as much as then, ſhould not haue a ſupply in that kind prouided for it by God as well as then, muſt needes lay an imputation vpon God of want either of power or care: either he cannot doe now for his Church as heretofore, or he is more regardleſſe of it then in times paſt. Secondly, if he haue ordayned a ſalt for the ſeaſoning of the world, what reaſon is there it ſhould be any other then the preaching of the Word? For if there were formerly a neceſſitie of the Apoſtles preaching for the ſeaſoning of the world, notwithſtanding the world had in it the writings and Sermons of the Prophets, in which thewhole Councell of God was comprehended, it can be now no good reaſon, that our hauing the Apoſtles Doctrine, written, ſh ould make the ſeruice of preaching to become ſuperfluous: eſpecially ſeeing wee find the Apoſtles to haue appointed a continuation of that Act of preaching, in thoſe places in which they had planted the Profeſſion and Goſpell of Chriſt Ieſus. Elders both teaching and gouerning, They ordayned in euery Church; and commanded the people to make much of ſuch; to obey and ſubmit to them, as being the watchmen for their ſoules; vpon them they called, to fulfill their Miniſtry; and to take heede to themſelues and to the flocke, feeding them willingly and with a ready mind: So that it is but a poore weake exception in yeelding the Apoſtles preaching to haue beene ſalt, to deny preaching now to bee ſo: God hath not left his Church now without a meanes of ſeaſoning: there was vſe of the Apoſtles preaching when the Writings of the Prophets were on foote; why not as well now when the Writings of the Apoſtles are abroade. And the Apoſtles not thinking either their owne writing or preaching to bee ſufficient, for the ſtanding and perpetuall good of Gods Church, appointed a ſucceſſion of Preachers, which might teach others alſo. I cannot but but note that of Paul in the end of his Epiſtle to the Hebrewes. I beſeech you ſuffer the words of Exhortation. What were thoſe words of Exhortation, which he would haue them ſuffer, but the further preſſing of the things written by him, by their owne Paſtor? I haue written vnto you in few words. Thinke it not enough you haue my Epiſtle here with you, things in it are ſhort and much abridged; you muſt beſides it haue regard to your ordinarie teaching. So that I remayne ſtill confident in this Doctrine, that to this day the preaching Miniſtry is the ſalt here meant, without which men vſually rot, and putrifie, and periſh in their ſinnes. 2.Tim.2.2. Cap.13.22.

Firſt, this Doctrine ſerues very directly to poſſeſſe vs with that truth which is not to this day ſo generally receiued, and ſo vniuerſally entertayned as it ought, and it is touching the neceſſitie of Preaching. The moſt part thinke verily they may doe well enough for ſaluation, though there were no ſuch thing in vſe, and many there are who perſwading themſelues they haue Religion, and Grace, and ſauing Knowledge not a little, yet will by no meanes acknowledge any beholdingneſſe herein to this courſe. Wee ſee what continuall barking there is againſt this ſeruice euerywhere, as if it were ſo farre from being vſefull, that it is rather to be reputed hurtfull, and the very cauſe of a great deale profaneneſſe and hypocriſie amongſt men. It is rather accounted the Leauen that hath ſoured all, or the Colloquintida in the porridge, which hath poyſoned all, then the ſalt which doth ſeaſon all. Now againſt all the conceits, and challenges, and exceptions of men, wee may bee bold to oppoſe this golden Maxime of our Sauiour, Salt is good: There is not more neceſſitie of Salt in common life, then there is of a preaching Miniſtrie for our ſpirituall life: and let men thinke what they will, they cannot ordinarily haue any true ſauour of grace, any taſte of godlineſſe, vntill it is wrought within them, and conueyed into them by this meanes. When God of old, among the Iewes, eſtabliſhed the forme of his owne ſeruices, and the order of his ſacrifices, he commanded that euery ſacrifice ſhould be ſeaſoned with Salt: ſome ſacrifices conſiſted of Beaſts, ſome of Birds, in ſome was Wine, in ſome Oile, in ſome Hony, in ſome Meale, but in all Salt; whereof was this a type, but of that inward grace, and holineſſe, and obedience, which if a man want, all his ſeruices and deuotions which he tendreth vnto God, are vtterly in vaine? There is a certayne ſpirituall Salt wherewith we muſt be powdered, to the end God may accept vs: and haue Salt in your ſelues, ſaith our Sauiour to all his, generally. Now whence ſhall this come but from this courſe, which our Sauiour is pleaſed to honour with this report, that it is the ſalt of the earth. If you take away preaching, you take away the ordinarie meanes of grace from amongſt men. Doeſt thou thinke thy ſelfe to haue grace, and yet wilt not beleeue that this is the meanes by which it was firſt begun, and muſt ſtill be confirmed and encreaſed in thee? I ſay plainely, thou haſt no grace at all. Shew me, if thou canſt, any other meanes ſo neceſſarie of ſeaſoning ordayned by Ieſus Chriſt, then is this of a preaching Miniſtrie. Neuer did Chriſt ſay to any but to Preachers, Eſtis ſal terræ; Yee are the ſalt of the 1. Vſe. Leuit.2.13. Mark.9.49. Col.4.6. Mark.9.50.

the earth. Oh that we could be perſwaded that wee can no more liue an heauenly life without preaching, then we can a naturall life without ſalt: ſure, our Sauiour was pleaſed to vſe ſuch a familiar Parable of an houſehold commoditie, that whenſoeuer we haue (as euery day we haue) occaſion of vſing this creature Salt, we might be put in mind of the neceſſitie of preaching: according as before hee vſed the ſimilitude of Leauen, in a manner to the ſame end. It were an excellent meditation, if when we are at meate and are reaching to the ſalt, in a manner for euery bit; if when we occaſioned to vſe ſalt in our houſhold buſineſſe, for the ſweet keeping of that prouiſion, which wee meane to reſerue for a following time; if when we are buſie about our Sea-ſand, for the manuring of our ground, the ſaltneſſe whereof is that which makes it profitable, wee would then remember the neceſſitie of this ſpirituall Salt, and learne by the vſefulneſſe of the one to conclude the neceſſitie of the other. It may be wondred (haply) that it being ſo manifeſt by the Scriptures, that the preaching of the Word is of ſo great vſe, yet it ſhould bee ſo generally miſliked, and reiected, and repined at amongſt men; but the reaſon is ſoone giuen; Salt hath a kind of ſharpe and biting qualitie, and when it is applyed to a raw place it ſmarteth not a little: here is the cauſe that the preaching of the Word hath ſo few friends. When it lighteth vpon our ſecret ſweet corruptions, it fretteth, and the working thereof is ſomewhat irkeſome and vnpleaſing at the firſt. It is like a potion giuen by the Phyſician, which is a burthen to the ſtomacke, and is kept in with much adoe. Oh how it vexeth the Whoore-maſter, the Drunkard, the Vſurer, the proud Perſon, the Oppreſſor and the Tyrant of the world, the Deſpiſer of good things, to haue this Salt rubbed hard vpon their ſores? They would rather haue Sugar caſt vpon their wounds then Salt. This makes men ſay of preaching ſometimes, as Amaziah ſaid of Amos his Doctrine; The Land is not able to beare all his words. Who can endure it to be ſo dealt with? ſo proceeded with? But if men were wiſe to conſider the good that followeth vpon this, and how happy it is for a man to haue the ſtrength of ſinne ſubdued and mortified, euen that very thing which makes them repine againſt this Ordinance of God, would make them to loue and eſteeme it ſo much the more. Let this then be the firſt Vſe of this Doctrine, to ſettle vs in this, the neceſſitie of preaching. We are all for ſpirituall things, no other then a rotten, corrupted, and vnſauory lumpe, vntill this hath ſeaſoned vs, we are barren and emptie of grace, and reprobate to good works, vntill this hath made vs fruitfull. How happy ſhould I account my ſelfe, if I might through the mercy of God, preuaile ſo farre with any, as to prouoke them out of the ſenſibleneſſe of the neceſſitie of this Ordinance of God, to endeuour, not hauing it, to enioy it, hauing it to be thankefull for it, and to make vſe of it as they ought. Oh ſeeke it, you that want it, ſtriue if you can to draw it to you, to ſettle it amongſt you: if you cannot draw it to you, then draw your ſelues to it. If there come in a Barke of ſalt at Plimmouth, or Oſon, or ſome other Hauen Towne, doe you not fetch it? Is this ſpirituall

ſpirituall Salt brought in by the hand of God here, or there, or yonder, and will you not ſtriue to bee prouided with it, where it is? I remember how in Scripture a Doue, or a Pidgeon, is a terme applyed to the Church and People of God, and ſometimes ſome qualities of theirs are commended vnto Chriſtians. Chriſt often calleth his Spouſe the Church, his Doue, in the Canticles: and the Prophet Iſaiah foretelling the comming in of the Gentiles, into the Church of God, and their ioyning to it; compares them vnto Doues, flying in at their windowes: and, Bee you innocent as Doues. Now, a Doue, a Culuer, is a bird that loues ſalt exceedingly. It is a faſhion for the drawing of Pidgeons to a Doue-cote, to ſet ſalt ſtones there, which being once found they flie thither by heapes. Certainely, the ſpirituall Doues doe as much affect the ſpirituall Salt, and they will flie farre and neere to haue their fill thereof: and indeed, they who can ſit ſtill and doe well enough without it, well may I ſay, they bee rather Kites then Doues. Now, for you which haue it, doe you know your owne good? I pray God you doe. It is euen the very chiefe appurtenance to the ſeruice of God: therein right like ſalt, which is firſt ſet on the Board and laſt remoued, as being that whereof there is a generall vſe thorowout the whole meale. They bee but ſuperfluous meates which come when the ſalt is gone: to the mayne ſubſtance of foode ſalt neceſſarily appertaynes. Learne to eſteeme it as is fit, take euery one from it for his owne turne, and helpe you thoſe that doe ſit by you. It is an old Tradition, which I approue not, that if the ſalt fall vpon the Table it is bad lucke: I know that is but a toy, but this I am ſure, that if this Miniſteriall ſalt be ouerthrowne, it is a bad preſage. Rottenneſſe, and putrifaction, and abomination to God, cannot chooſe but be the conſequent; this is the firſt Vſe. Is this ſalt good by our Sauiours Teſtimonie, and ſhall it not be ſo by our acknowledgement? well then, and ſhall wee ſay 'tis good, and then verifie the old ſaying: Probitas laudatur & alget. Honeſtie is commended, but it is let to be a cold for all that: ſo ſhall we commend this Salt and yet not regard it? Happy is that ſtomacke that is euen ſicke without it, and thinks nothing to taſte well in his not enioying it. Thou knoweſt, ſaid the men of Iericho, our Townes ſituation is pleaſant, but the Water is naught: What did the Prophet doe? Bring me a new Cruſe and put ſalt, &c, Alas, many a Towne there is, that ſtands in a ſweet aire, fine houſes, many commodities, but the Water is naught, they want thoſe ſtill Waters: none haue they of that Riuer whoſe ſtreames make glad the Citie of God. Sure, no ſuch way to heale this hurt as the Prophets medicine. Take ſome of this ſalt, and put in a cruſe, &c. Set vp a painefull, faithfull, conſcionable Miniſter of Gods Word there, your Waters ſhall bee healed, other outward diſtaſtes ſhall by this become ſauoury. I pray you conſider this point, and the Lord giue you vnderſtanding in all things. If you can confute me, doe you hardly, and I will thanke you, if you cannot yeeld to me: and endeuour to haue this ſalt among your ſelues, pinch in other things to be ſupplyed in this, one diſh well ſeaſoned, is better then a whole Board full, freſh, and flaſh, and vnſauory. In ſome places men plead want of ableneſſe, to reach to the charge of procuring and maintayning ſuch a benefit. Beloued, bee not miſtaken: I will not ſpeake to the abaſing of a fit preparation for a man that laboureth in the Word, and in Doctrine: but bee you not deceiued. All ſalt doth not looke to bee put in Siluer and Gold, but Pewter, and Wood, and Stone, will content ſome. Some Prophet of the Lord, will 2.*King.*4.10. with Eliſha be well pleaſed with a plaine Chamber with walls, without any greater furniture to it, then a Bed, a Table, a Stoole, and a Candleſticke. I doubt not, but there are diuers of good competent gifts, that in zeale for God, and in deſire to doe good, would be glad to be employed vpon eaſie termes. I will conclude this point therefore, with an alluſion to a ſpeech of our Sauiours. Now he that hath none, let him ſell his

*Luk.*22.36. Coate and buy him a Sword. So ſay I, they which haue none, let them ſell their Coates, reſtraine themſelues in their other contentments, and ſeeke to be furniſhed with this ſalt. Salt is good.

2. Vſe. Secondly, This may be alſo commended to the conſideration of thoſe that are called to the worke of the Miniſtry. If our labour in the Word and in Doctrine, bee as vſefull and neceſſary in the Church of God, as ſalt is in the family: why ſhould we not endeauour to make it common? A thing of this nature ought not to be reſtrayned, and as the ſalt melts it ſelfe away in being applyed to our houſhold vſes, ſo ſhould the Miniſters of God euen ſpend themſelues for the peoples benefit, which was the
2.*Cor.*12.15. reſolution of the Apoſtles. I will moſt gladly beſtow, and will be beſtowed for your ſoules. What pitty, that euery Congregation is not furniſhed with this ſalt? ſhall it be accounted a defect in an houſe to haue no ſalt, and no mayme to a Pariſh to haue no preaching Miniſter? And what good commeth by ſalt if it be kept in a Barrell, or Tub, and not applyed to occaſions? and ſo what profit of a man learned and able to inſtruct, vnleſſe hee ſhall accordingly make conſcience to vſe his talent for the common benefit?

This is a point deſerues preſſing too: there is much ſalt is kept vp too cloſe, ſet vp as it were in a Cupbord and kept couered ſeldome brought forth but vpon high dayes, and vpon ſome ſpeciall feſtiuals. It is pitty the people ſhould be kept ſhort herein of their allowance, and that they ſhould be faine through our ſparingneſſe to make many a Sabbath meale without it. We doe our ſelues hurt hereby too, wee grow by our owne negligence more vnſauory, whereas by our conſcionable forwardneſſe this way, there would ſtill be an addition to our ſtore. Let vs rouze vp our ſelues, to deale herein more liberally with the Lords Family, let them haue full meaſure herein, yea, as wee ſaid Water meaſure, heaped vp; though ſome wantons may become full with plenty, and may grow into a deſpiſing thereof, yet the hungry ſoules will bee the more frugall, and they will diligently picke vp euery crumbe. And here by the way, wee may haue a direction, how to deale in the diſpenſation of the Word, not only propounding matters in a generalitie, as if a man ſhould ſet the ſalt in the middle of a Table, for euery man to reach at his owne pleaſure, pleasure, but applying it home to euery one, and laying a portion, as it were, vpon euery ones trencher: some may take too much, some too litle, some none at all, while euery one is left to himselfe. The Minister is an Officer on purpose to iudge in this case what is fit. In our thus doing, so many as haue iudgement and grace, will accept our kindnesse, and though some rude or proud ones may reiect our offer, praying vs not to trouble our selues, they can helpe themselues well enough, yet they shall shew themselues therein to be but vnmannerly, for, to put it backe againe into the place is no good fashion, to throw it ouer the shoulder, or to scatter about the Table is inciuilitie.

Thus here is an Vse for vs also: Let vs neither scant the Lords People of their necessary allowance, it is no good hearing when salt is ouer dainty, neither let vs leaue euery one to his disposition in receiuing it, but see that euery man bee particularly furnished according to his neede. So of the first portion of the first part of my Text: Salt is good. Now of the next, the ilnesse and vnprofitableneſse of the contrary.

If the Salt haue lost his saltnesse, wherewith will you season it?

If the Minister cannot season the people committed to his charge with wholsome Doctrine, What shall bee done to him, what shall bee found to make him good? to make this vp, wee must necessarily annexe that which our Sauiour addeth, Matth. 5. 13. and Luk. 14. 34. It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to bee cast out and to bee trodden vnder foote of men. For indeede though here it bee not expressed, yet it must necessarily bee vnderstood, for if the salt vnsauoury bee not helpeable by any meanes, wherefore is it good? the Dunghill is too good a place for it, the high-way where euery man goeth and trampleth, is fit enough to receiue it; and so, if a man beare the name and title of a Minister, and stands vp for a guide of soules, and either is such an one as hath no power to season, neither endeauours nor cares to haue, or else, is one who through neglect and want of conscience hath lost his strength, What shall be found to doe a cure vpon such an one, there is no remedie, but casting out, euen with a kind of contempt, must bee his portion. This is, as I may so say, the plaine Song of our Sauiour descant, which, what Musicke it will make in our eares, I know not, what it ought to make, I am not ignorant, and I shall shew anon: only first, for fuller explanation of this place, I am to adde this; namely, whether it be possible for Salt to become vnsauory, and to bee vtterly without all seasoning power?

An ancient writer, Hilarius vpon, Matth. 5. saith. Natura Salis eadem est, nec immutari vnquam potest. Perhaps in experience wee shall seldome find salt so to be spent out in the strength thereof, as that it vtterly loseth its natiue taste: yet for my part I cannot but thinke by this speech of our Sauiour, that it is possible for salt to lose the vigor thereof, and to become weake and without power of making that salt to which it is applyed. No doubt we find some salt, more forcible and strong in nature then some other, and that a lesse quantitie thereof will goe further in vſe, then a great portion of ſome other; which in my opinion, is an argument that ſalt may ſo farre degenerate, as to bee altogether vnfit for ſeaſoning. Why ſhould wee thinke our Sauiour would put a caſe of a thing which cannot happen. If for Salt to loſe the ſauour thereof, had beene knowne to bee a matter vnpoſſible, it muſt needes haue much weakned, that, to which it was the purpoſe of our Sauiour to apply it. I haue heard from ſome who vſe to ſalt Fiſh, as Pilcherds in theſe parts, that the ſalt which hath beene once applyed to the ſalting of ſuch a number, will ſerue againe and againe, yet ſtill ſo that it ſpends it ſelfe out, and at laſt it is not vſefull, that which it hath extracted from out of the fiſh, in the end ouercomes the naturall facultie thereof, ſo that it becomes vnprofitable: And I ſee in the houſe, the Brine to bee brought often to the fire, not to be purged only from the bloudineſſe it hath ſucked out of the fleſh put into it, but to be renewed to by the addition of more ſalt, which argueth a ſpending of it ſelfe away. But not to diſpute of matters out of my element, wherein I may bee ſoone taken with an abſurditie, I haſten to the ſpirituall ſenſe, and out of that picke out this Doctrine.

The ſecond Doctrine.

That there is nothing either worſe, or more vnprofitable, then ſuch a Miniſter, from whom the Church and people of God can receiue no ſpirituall ſeaſoning: or thus; There is nothing ſo bad, nothing ſo vile, as an vnſufficient Miniſter. Nothing better then ſalt whiles it is good, nothing more vſefull then a faithfull Miniſter. Nothing worſe then ſalt when it is vnſauory, nothing more hatefull then a Miniſter from whom the ſoules of the people can receiue no benefit. Treading vnder foote, is fit for the one: All manner of contempt is euen too good for the other. Salt is the creature by which other things ſhould bee ſeaſoned, if that bee become naught, what ſhall be found to make it ſauoury? a Miniſter, is he who by his calling and labour, is to be a meanes of grace to others, if hee himſelfe bee graceleſſe how ſhall hee bee cured? It paſſeth any mans skill to make any thing of ſalt which hath loſt its ſtrength, & who can tell wherefore he may be good, that is an vnprofitable Miniſter? Caſting out both for the one and the other, is the deſerued portion. If any man can forbid this Banes, touching the coupling of theſe two things together, in this their due and iuſt proportion, let him ſpeake. Thus is the proportion of this place for the iuſtification of this Doctrine. The truth of this point is the cauſe that the Scripture ſpeakes ſo ſharply and ſo diſgracefully touching ſuch, who bring no profit to the people: they are called dumbe Dogges, and, blind Watchmen: they are termed idle Shepheards. God threatneth them, to refuſe them from being Prieſts to him: hee will make them to be deſpiſed, and vile before the people. Behold, I will come againſt ſuch, ſaith the Lord: theſe are ſaid to deuoure ſoules: and to be like murtherers in the high-way. Chriſt termes them, blind-leaders of the blind, together with themſelues into the Ditch. What are ſuch as thoſe good for, but euen to be caſt out as an offence and burthen to the Church. There is no one thing, by which the kingdome of the Deuill doth ſo much in-

creaſe as it doth by ſuch: ſuch are, as it were, his Net, by which hee catcheth ſoules.

He is called an vncleane ſpirit, and he delighteth in filthineſſe, and where ſalt wants, how can it otherwiſe be, but that all rottenneſſe and putrifaction ſhall abound? There is then ſcope giuen him to play Rex, and to take his pleaſure when ſuch are entertayned and delighted in, who are vnable to ſeaſon the people with the Word of Grace. As there is a double honour due to thoſe that are induſtrious this way, ſo they which are inſufficient in this kind, are to bee euen laded with contempt, not ſo much as the loweſt roome in the Church of God ſhould bee allowed them. Caſt that vnprofitable ſeruant into vtter darkneſſe, ſaith our Sauiour: ſhall hee, for whom vtter darkneſſe is prepared, ſtand in the roome and place of a light in Gods Church? well might our Sauiour here ſay of ſuch, Wherewith will you ſeaſon it? the vnſauory ſalt there is no hope of euer bringing it to be good: and ſo when a man is once ſettled in this ſinne, of taking on him the cure of ſoules, without ſeeking to winne thoſe ſoules vnto God, I ſay, when a man is once hardned in ſuch an euill, and can ſhew himſelfe to bee no whit moued, or troubled therewith, that he ſtands guilty of bloud before the Lord; he trembleth, not to remember what muſt bee required at his hands, may it not bee thought that ſuch an one is incurable? What ſhould bee deuiſed for the recouery of him that is plunged into ſo foule a ſinne, and ſooths himſelfe therein, according as it may bee noted in experience, that very few ſuch are euer found to come vnto repentance. There is nothing ſo bad as ſuch an one, ſo long as hee continueth in ſuch a place, and ſtanding in the Church of God, and cannot chooſe but bee offenſiue, hee is like the Fig-tree, which as it beares no fruit it ſelfe, ſo it makes the ground barren: hee doth not only not make the Lords Field more fruitfull, but through him it becomes more vnprofitable, and is like the field of the Sluggard, growne ouer with Thornes and Nettles, &c. The Church of God can neuer proſper vntill he is vtterly caſt out. To what vſe ſhould he be put as a Seruitor in Gods Houſe, that cannot ſeaſon? What is the houſhold the neerer for vnſauory ſalt, and what profit by that light which doth not burne?

Luk. 4.33.

1. Tim. 5.17.

Matth. 25.30.

Luk. 13.7.

Pro. 24.30,31.

First, this Doctrine ſerues to manifeſt the extreme ilneſſe, and the wofull vnprofitableneſſe of that ſort of men, who in theſe euill dayes are too much tolerated, and who haue much more eſtimation and reſpect then of right they ſhould, that is, ſuch Miniſters who haue charge of ſoules, and yet are vnable to ſeaſon them by the preaching of the Word. It is one of the miſeries of our Church, and wo to thoſe that are the cauſers of it, that ſuch of whom Chriſt here ſaith plainely: It is meet they were caſt out; are notwithſtanding not only ſuffered to remayne within, but to encreaſe alſo, ſo that there is euen a freſh ſpawne of ſuch euery day: ſuch as haue no taſte of grace themſelues, no relliſh of ſuch holeſome knowledge, as is meet ſhould bee in thoſe by whom others ſhould be ſeaſoned.

1. Vſe.

Iustly doth the now Archbishop of Canterbury, in his Lectures vpon Ionas, say, that it may make a mans heart ake, and his very soule to tremble, to thinke how such yet be ouer soules in many places; he calls them an vnkind brood, which Poperie did first hatch vp in our Nation. Another Bishop doth call them the trash and riffe-raffe of the people. What a lamentable thing is this, that that, for which the dunghill is too good, should yet be set in the best roome of all the house: and that that salt should be placed at the vpper end of the board in a siluer plate, which when it is tasted on, hath not so much as any little smatch which can giue contentment? This is like that, which Salomon calleth, the setting of folly in great excellency: that which is good for nothing is had in much esteeme, when that which might be vsefull indeed, is made no account of. Now, besides this euill, which to vse the phrase of the Scripture, doth proceed from the face of some that gouerne: there is another almost as bad among the common sort; it is noted, Ier. 5. 31. The people delight therein, or are well pleased therewith, so it is mostly.

*Eccles.*10.6.

*Ier.*5.31.

The men of this generation are not sensible of this miserie, of hauing none among them but an vnseasoning and vnsufficient Minister: nay, many account it a part of their happinesse that they haue no other; and how apt are the most to plead for such. Alas (say they) poore man, hee doth his best, and would you haue more, he reades faire, and is of quiet behauiour, and carefull to keepe the good will of his Neighbours, and to fit his publike seruices to their contentment. Thus will they plead on the behalfe of such an one, that will yet crie loud against the painefull Teacher, and lade him with imputations of businesse, of cholerickenesse, of maliciousnesse, of pride, of causing diuision, and what not? Thus the vnsauory salt, they could be very willing to retayne, and crie, away with that; without the helpe whereof they are but rottennesse before the Lord. Who so are guiltie this way, let them consider indifferently of this place: Who is the salt here spoken of, but the Minister? Who is the vnsauory salt, but he, who being called a Minister, is vnable to doe the dutie of a Minister? And what is the mayne dutie of a Minister, but to diuide the Word of Truth aright? Is reading out of a booke such a stint of Scripture and Prayer as is limited, the whole required of him that must watch for soules? No, hee doth not his dutie vnlesse hee deale vnto the people the Gospell of God, and doe that for which the Apostles were called Salt, which, whether it were not preaching, or no, I referre my selfe to any iudgement. Hee then, who either for lacke of skill, or for want of conscience is defectiue this way, ought hee to bee esteemed; is it meete hee should bee depended vpon as the Minister of God, and as the Ambassadour of Iesus Christ? when as our Sauiour saith plainely, that casting out should be their portion. Let the matter be duely thought vpon, it shall appeare that I strayne nothing, but that this I teach is deriued kindly and naturally from this place. Let men beware then, how they trust their soules with such, by the wayting vpon whom, only there can hardly bee conueyed any Truth of Grace into their their ſoules. Rather it becomes the people of God euery way to declare, how they doe euen in their ſoules abhor ſuch vnſufficient teachers. We ſhould all earneſtly begge of God to purge his Church of ſuch, and to clothe thoſe that are in authoritie with ſuch zeale for his Houſe, that they may euen throw them forth, as Chriſt did the Buyers and Sellers from the Temple. Thus ſhall wee make the right vſe of this Doctrine. Now we may ſtretch very well this Vſe further to aduiſe vs, not only to beware of vnſufficient Paſtors and Teachers that preach not at all, but euen of ſome that preach alſo: for ſo I made my Doctrine, to be touching ſuch Miniſters from whom commeth no true ſeaſoning. Now it is poſſible for a man to take vpon him the worke of preaching, and yet therein to be no better then vnſauory ſalt. Euery mans preaching is not good ſalt. There be ſome vaine talkers, in whoſe preaching there is no more reliſh, then Iob could find in the white of an egge; ſome ſeeke out fooliſh things for the people; ſome follow their owne ſpirit; ſome vnderſtand not what they ſpeake: and it is to be ſeene in experience, what vnſauory matter falleth from ſome mouthes, ſuch as argueth no paynes, no faithfulneſſe, no deſire to doe good, no ſinceritie of heart, but rather ſmels ſtrongly of idleneſſe, of vnconſcionableneſſe, of doing that which is done for forme, of ſpite againſt the beſt courſes, and againſt thoſe that follow them. Such are as meete to be caſt out, and more alſo then they which haue no word of Doctrine in their mouthes; ſuch, may bee ſaid, not to ſeaſon, but theſe poyſon, theſe build directly to hell; their teaching frets like a canker, and deſtroyes the faith of certayne, and is as that roote of bitterneſſe, by which many are defiled. As then wee muſt take heed of depending vpon thoſe that cannot diſcharge the dutie of a Miniſter, ſo they muſt be wiſe to iudge of Preachers, and conſider whether that which they heare, bee ſauoury and holeſome Doctrine, yea or no. Marke well whether it be the Word of Grace: whether it tends to mortification, to the abatement and killing of thy ſecret luſts, to the helping them forward to a conſcionable fruitfulneſſe in good works. They which ſpeake not according to this rule, they haue no ſalt within them. The lords Huſbandry is not like to proſper by their dreſſing. There may bee a kind of tart ſaltneſſe in a mans preaching, like that which accompanieth the powerfull reprouing of vngodlineſſe, but let it be marked what that is which is bitten by it: all ſome mens girding is againſt the beſt things, againſt forwardneſſe, againſt profeſſion, againſt zeale, againſt care to heare, &c. This is like Salt rubbed vpon the whole skin, ſo long til it frets and makes a wound where was none before. Theſe briniſh inuectiues are vnſauory, which yet are the glory of ſome mens Sermons. Where thoſe groſſe corruptions of formality in Religion, of Laodicean luke warmeneſſe, of time ſeruing, of keeping a kind of ſtint in matters of godlineſſe, which muſt not be exceeded, of prophaning of Gods Sabbath, of negligence in houſhold duties, of vncleaneneſſe, pride, cruelty, &c. are powerfully reproued, and men continually prouoked to a walking worthy of the Lord, all countenance and encouragement being giuen giuen ſtill to thoſe, that deſire to walke as they may pleaſe him, there is a way and courſe of true ſeaſoning, vpon it there may be ſafe dependance. Thus then is the firſt Vſe.

2. Vſe. Secondly, here is an admonition to bee giuen vnto ſuch: not to aduenture to prouoke the Lord by keeping that roome to which they can lay no clayme, and in which they are meere Vſurpers: It will be a fearefull challenge, when the Lord ſhall ſay to ſuch; Friend, how cameſt thou in hither? or, what makeſt thou here? it will euen ſtrike them ſpeechleſſe. I will ſay no more herein, then is to be ſeene by any man that will, in the Preface of the now Biſhop of Worceſter to Vrſinus Catechiſme; to him, who (as he ſaith) thinks it a more eaſie life to ſay ſeruice in the Church, then to doe ſeruice in the houſe; he directs his ſpeech thus. My friend, be not deceiued, awake out of ſleepe and dreame no more. Thou art no Prophet, thou art an Huſband-man, and taught to be an Herdman from thy youth vp. Get away therefore with ſpeed from the Lords houſe, if thou be a Cleauer to thy Wedge and an Axe, if an Hind to thy Maſters Plough: but meddle not with Gods affaires, leſt he breake out vpon thee and deſtroy thee: and after when he hath ſhewne his hopeleſneſſe to perſwade ſuch whom he calleth Braſſe and Iron, becauſe he ſeeth them not to ſtagger a whit, but to runne on like hungrie companions with an eye only to the fleſh pots, and ſo ſell both themſelues and their people for a morſell of bread, and a meſſe of pottage, to the Deuill; hee turnes his ſpeech to God, thus. Nay rather, O God, looke not vpon this droſſe and filth wherewith thine holy Houſe hath beene polluted, but ſweepe them out; and looke, O Lord, with thy tender eyes of compaſſion vpon thy ſilly people, for what haue they done, and ſtirre them vp daily for Paſtors and Prophets, wiſe and skilfull men, whoſe lips may keepe knowledge, and whoſe hands may breake vnto them the Bread of Life: and let all the people ſay, Amen. This I note, that you may ſee that, that which is ſaid in this caſe, proceeds not out of the priuate ſpirits of ſome few Humoriſts in the Countrey, but it is the thought and opinion of thoſe who ſit at the Helme, and are accounted Pillars.

3. Vſe. Thirdly, here is alſo a iuſt aduertiſement to ſuch of vs, if any ſuch be, who through diſpoſe and idleneſſe, and otherwiſe through temporizing and embracing like Demas, this preſent world, haue loſt their ancient ſtrength of ſeaſoning: and like Bees, whoſe ſting is gone, are become Drones, either not teaching at all, or elſe ſo teaching that ſuch as haue knowne them of old, are ſenſible of the change, there being no life nor power in their Miniſtrie, no more then there is when a little child ſaith Grace: Let them in time be admoniſhed of their danger. Me thinks their caſe draweth neere to that vnpardonable ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt: Wherewith will you ſeaſon that Salt, ſaith our Sauiour, as if it were paſt recouerie. Let them yet while it is called to day, remember whence they are fallen, and repent, and doe their firſt works. Let them not ſtand vpon what they haue beene, and ſo fret and fume, becauſe they ſee they haue loſt the hearts of the people, but let them ſeeke to ſtrengthen that which which remaynes, and is readie to die: ſo ſhall the little Flocke haue comfort in them, ſo ſhall the great Shepherd haue mercy on them.

Thus haue I brought you this day a bargaine of Salt, which, what it hath coſt me, I ſay not, only I ſay with DAVID: I would be loth to make an offering vnto God, or preſent vnto his people, that which coſt mee nothing: yet howſoeuer it be, it ſhall coſt you nothing. I ſhall thinke my ſelfe well paid, if that which is by me herein well meant, ſhall be by you well receiued. That which eſpecially moued me, to driue my Meditations this way, was that which I heard to haue beene ſaid here the laſt day: the tydings whereof brought to my mind that which I read, Act. 28.15. As Paul was going to Rome, certayne Brethren at Appij Forum, came to meete him, whom when hee ſaw, he thanked God and waxed bold: ſo, when I vnderſtood what was here ſaid, touching the neceſſitie and worth of preaching, as I could, I thanked GOD, and was emboldened to ſay that I haue.

A BARGAINE OF SALT.

The ſecond Sermon.

MARK. 9. 50.

Haue ſalt in your ſelues, and haue peace one with another.

HOw this Text of Scripture diuides it ſelfe into a poſitiue ſpeech, and a word of aduice giuen thereupon, I gaue you to know in my laſt Sermon. The poſitiue ſpeech, as it declares the vſefulneſſe of a preaching Miniſtrie, and the ilneſſe of the contrarie vnder the borrowed termes of Salt, good and ſalt, vnſauory; I then opened and preſſed as I could. Now, next comes the word of aduice to be conſidered of. This commends vnto Chriſts Diſciples two things. The firſt, in reſpect of themſelues, Salt in your ſelues. The ſecond, in regard of others, Be at peace, &c. Of each of theſe as they lie. In ſpeaking of the former, Haue ſalt, &c. I muſt make way to matter of inſtruction and Doctrine by clearing the ſenſe, and for the manifeſtation thereof, I haue but one word to beſtow labour on; and that is, Salt. In the poſitiue ſpeech, the firſt part of my Text, Salt, did ſignifie a preaching Miniſtrie, here not ſo. For what ſenſe were this (haue in your ſelues a preaching Miniſtrie?) But here it intends that which is wrought in a mans heart by ſuch a Miniſtrie when it is profitable; and that is inward ſeaſoning. I doubt not, but I may ſay it is the very ſame which Paul calleth the power of godlineſſe. Haue, &c. that is, ſee that you haue within you the effect and worke of ſauing grace. Thus in briefe, if I haue not to your vnderſtanding beene plaine enough, bee pleaſed to wait awhile, and in the proſecution of the Doctrine, I hope, I ſhall ſatiſfie you more at full. The Doctrine is this. 2. Tim. 3. 5.

The first Doctrine.

That an inward seasoning with Religion and Grace is such a thing, as all the Disciples of CHRIST IESVS must endeuour for. This charge was giuen to Disciples, and by all Disciples, considering the authoritie of him that gaue it, must bee reckoned of. In enlarging my selfe vpon this point, I must marshall Christs Disciples into two ranks: The first, I may call for this once discipling Disciples, that is, such as haue a calling to call others vnto Christ, plainely, Ministers. The second, such Disciples as haue no place of right in Moses Chaire, but only sit in the learners Forme, in more expresse termes, Professors generally. The necessitie which lyeth vpon each to haue salt in themselues, in the sense now named, I will labour that you may see with the best diligence that I can. First, teaching Disciples, Ministers must bee well seasoned within with the power of godlinesse. I haue here a large field before me to runne out into, and it were easie to make a Sermon in the Explication and Application of this one point. But I will indeauour shortnesse, that if it may be within the compasse of this houre, I may reach to the vtmost period of my Text. And therefore I will of that, which might be said herein, rather giue you only a taste then a full draught. Thus therefore the inward seasoning of Gods Ministers with the salt of Grace, plaine Scripture requires it, good reasons grounded vpon Scripture doe inforce it:

Isa.52.11. plaine Scripture is, that a Minister should be holy. Bee you cleane or holy, you that beare the Vessels of the Lord. And Saint Pauls Bishops must be

Tit.1.8. holy. Now, which is the true and proper seate of holinesse: is it the outward, or the inward man? Can a man be truely called holy, vnlesse,

1.Pet.3.4. as Saint Peter saith, The hid man of the heart bee vncorrupt. Hee that must be holy must haue more then a superficiall outward varnish; if he be not renewed in the spirit of his mind, and decked inwardly; how demure soeuer his deportment be without, hee is but a counterfait. This in a word for plaine Scripture, Bee yee holy, and, haue salt in your selues, Gen.41.25. I say of them as Ioseph said of Pharaohs two dreames, They both are one.

1. Reas. Now for reasons I will confine my selfe to two. A Teacher, who is himselfe well seasoned, is the most fit to season others. There is euer most life in that mans teaching who teacheth from experience. Experimentall Diuinitie is to a mans selfe the sweetest, and it makes his word in teaching to be the heartier. Of the three things specially necessary to the making of a good Diuine, Temptation is said to bee one: No man can euer teach so profitably as hee, who hath felt in himselfe what adoe there is to make one good, and to turne him about towards heauen. When a man speaks of matters of piety only, as it were by rote, or as I may call it contemplatiuely and by booke, I deny not, but by Gods blessing of his owne ordinance he may doe some good, but there is no comparison to that which a man deliuereth out of selfe proofe. A man may discourse well that neuer saw the world but in a Map, and he may tell you of Riuers and Creeks, and Harbors, that hath only beheld such descriptions in a Sea-card. But hee puts him downe quite who reports touch-touching theſe things that which his owne trauaile hath informed him: He is beſt able to preach like a ſound of Thunder, who himſelfe hath trembled for feare of God, and hath beene afraid of his Iudgements, and whoſe hath beene rent in twaine with the terror of the Lord. None ſo fit to be a ſonne of Conſolation, and to powre Oyle into a wounded ſpirit, as he who hath himſelfe beene buffetted with Satans meſſengers, and in that caſe hath found how the grace of God hath beene ſufficient for him. Hee is beſt fitted to comfort others in affliction, that can tell of the comfort, wherewith himſelfe hath beene comforted of God. Si vis me flere dolendum eſt ante tibi---- ſaid the Poet, If thou wilt make me weepe, let me ſee thee weepe firſt. He that ſpeaks of heauenly matters verbally, ſhall moue his hearers hearts but ſlightly. 2.*Cor.*1.4.

My ſecond Reaſon. An vnſeaſoned Miniſter cannot chooſe but breake forth into ſome outward ſcandall. His inward rottenneſſe cannot poſſibly be ſo either ſmothered or tempered, but it will make his courſe to be vnſauoury: Euen they which are beſt powdered within doe faile ſometimes, ſhall not they much more that haue no grace? How can it goe well with a Miniſter when he doth not liue without reproofe, and as a light ſhining before men? Shall he not preiudice that reſolution and confidence, which hee ought to ſhew in the diſpenſation of the Word? How, muſt not this face be filled with ſhame, and his thoughts with confuſion, when his heart ſhall giue him a ſecret checke, in preſſing thoſe things on others, whereof himſelfe makes little conſcience; and in blaming thoſe things in others, which himſelfe ordinarily cõmitted? this ſecret guilt clips off the wings of that boldneſſe and liberty in the Faith, which Paul ſpeaks of, and which a conſtant courſe of godlineſſe doth beget. Secondly, Doth he not make his courſe ridiculous, when he directs his Hearer another way to Heauen, then that hee runnes himſelfe. Thirdly, Doth he not put a weapon into the hands of euill men, wherewith to ſmite himſelfe, when they ſhall haue ſome ground of ſaying to him in theſe words; What, art thou become like one of vs? And of twitting him with the prouerbe, Phyſitian, heale thy ſelfe. In a word, doth he not by this meanes ſtrengthen the hands of the wicked by his bad example, grieue and make ſad the ſoules of ſuch as feare the Lord, lay the honour of a worthy Calling in the duſt, and cauſe the people (as it is ſaid of Elies Sonnes) euen to abhorre the offering of the Lord? Oh, how glad is the Deuill when he can picke out ſomewhat from a Preachers courſe, by which to make both Doctrine and Calling to become abominable. He is wont to make matter where there is none ready made to his hand, he thought to lay an imputation vpon Iohn Baptiſt that he was too preciſe; and vpon Chriſt on the other ſide, that hee was too good a fellow. The Diſciples either they doe nòt waſh, or they doe not faſt. 2. Reaſ. 1.*Tim.*3.13. *Iſa.*14.16. 1.*Sam.*2.17.

Thus haue you my proofe briefly for this, that it is neceſſary for thoſe that muſt teach others well, themſelues to be firſt ſeaſoned well.

Now the next is, that the ſame is to bee endeauoured for by euery Chriſtian, that is, euery Chriſtian muſt labour as to haue a name and a ſhew of godlineſſe without, ſo that he feele the power of godlineſſe within.

1. This is generall, God requires of euery one that would be his, to giue him his heart. Now, in all reaſon, what manner of heart ſhall he preſent him? His heart as it is in it ſelfe naturally wicked and deceitfull, hauing no imaginations nor thoughts, but ſuch as are only euill continually, being the Sourſe and Fountayne of murthers, adulteries, fornications, theefts, falſe teſtimonies, ſlanders, is no meete gift for him who is a God, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that doth not loue wickednesſe. It muſt bee ſuch a heart as Dauid termes a cleane heart: Chriſt, a good and an honeſt heart, before the Lord will ſo much as caſt an eye thereon, and ſuch an heart it can neuer be vntill it is mortified and powdered (as it were) with this holy Salt: vntill this hath fretted out the euill concupiſcence which is in it, and thoſe luſts of the fleſh which fight againſt the ſoule, and are enemies to God, the Soule of the Lord can haue no pleaſure therein.

Pro.23.26. Ier.17.9. Gen.6.5. Matth.15.9. Pſal.5.4. Pſal.51.10. Luk.8.15.

2. Vntill this is wrought within a man, hee is but as it was ſaid of AGRIPPA, almoſt a Chriſtian. He is but the out-ſide and carkaſſe and ſheath, hee is no more a Chriſtian indeed, then that Image was a man, which Michol put in the bed vpon a pillow, to beguile the meſſengers of Saul, which came to ſeize vpon her huſband Dauid in his bed. As it is ſaid of the Kingdome of God, that it is not in word but in power. So may it be ſaid of the Subiects of that Kingdome, they are not triable by what they are in word and in ſhew, but by what they are in power. When the Goſpell hath beene vnto a man, not in word onely but in power, ſo that hee hath attayned to that which the Apoſtle calleth the Spirit of power, then may it be ſaid of him, as Chriſt of NATHANIEL, Behold indeed an Iſraelite. This is in effect that loue which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſo much, without which all other things, both are nothing, and profit nothing. For that is loue and charitie indeed, when as godlineſſe hath that power vpon him, that whatſoeuer hee doth in Religion, hee doth it in ſinceritie, more for the Commanders ſake, and out of a due regard to him, then out of any other reſpect whatſoeuer. Let a man want this, whatſoeuer his ſhew bee, though hee ſhould ſeeme to bee ſo zealous for God, as to bee content to bee burnt to aſhes for the teſtimonie of his Truth, and ſo charitable to men, as to cut his goods into parcels, and to giue them out to the poore, yet were he but as a ſounding Braſſe, or tinckling Cymball, like the Church of Sardie, hauing a name to bee aliue, but dead indeed, or as an vnpowdered maſſe of fleſh, which howſoeuer it may appeare to him that ſtandeth further off, yet when it is come neere vnto and ſtirred, it is enough to poyſon with the ſtench. This is the ſubſtance then of the ſecond Reaſon, without this ſalt in a mans ſelfe, all his Religion is but forme, he is as farre from goodneſſe indeed, as ſhee was from honeſtie, of whom Salomon makes mention, who ſpeaking of Vowes and offerings, as if ſhee had beene a woman of ſome ſpeciall ſanctitie, yet ſought to defile her huſbands bed.

Act.26.28. 1.Sam.19.16. 1.Theſ.1.5. 2.Tim.1.7. Ioh.1.47. 1.Cor.13. Reuel.3.1. Pro.7.14.

3. Vntill this is come vnto, a man doth neuer truely know what Religion gion meanes, he ſpeaks of Religion but by gheſſe and at aduenture, till he hath felt the working thereof vpon his owne ſoule.

Certayne it is, there is no point of Religion is good vnto man, none thorowly ſure vnto him, till he hath found it true in himſelfe, and is able to confirme it by an inſtance from himſelfe. Neuer doth a man know for certayne that the Scripture is the Word of God, though hee haue a whole cloud of outward enducements to encline him ſo to thinke, vntill his owne heart by ſome experiment of the power thereof, can witneſſe it. A man reports vnto mee that Salt is of an acrimonious and biting qualitie: haply, I am apt to thinke it ſo, becauſe of the good opinion of the honeſtie and iudgement of him that doth report it ſo; but I am neuer ſure till I haue tryed it, my owne tongue and taſte ſhall bee better to me herein then a thouſand witneſſes. So for Scripture; what if I haue the great Popiſh argument for the prouing thereof, the authoritie of the Church, am I ſure it is the Word of God? neuer a whit: for how am I ſure it is the Church of God that tells mee ſo? or how if I am? what know I but that the Church of God in ſome particular may miſtake? But when I haue felt the power of it vpon my inward man, how it hath made my heart burne within mee, when it hath beene opened to mee. How it hath entred thorow, and hath beene a Diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of my heart: and like Chriſt to the woman of Samaria, hath euen told me all that euer I did: this is it, by which I am confirmed. I remember two ſayings of Dauid worth the noting to this end both, Pſal. 119. 140. 152. Thy Word is proued moſt pure, and thy Seruant loueth it. I haue knowne long ſince by thy Teſtimonies, that thou haſt eſtabliſhed them for euer. DAVID knew and was well aſſured that they were the Teſtimonies of Iehouah: yet how came hee to know ſo much? the Teſtimonies themſelues gaue him a ſufficient euidence: hee had found the working of them on himſelfe: he had proued them to be true, his owne experience had confirmed him. This is the courſe thorowout: there is no certainety, no ſweetneſſe in Religion, till a man hath felt the ſalt within himſelfe. Take any point of Religion thou wilt, bring proofe for it what thou canſt, thou art neuer firme, till thou canſt fetch a proofe out of thy owne breſt. The Scripture ſaith, that man hath in him no goodneſſe by nature. If a man could alleage a Legion of Texts for that, yet he is apt to be at a fault, till he can come in and ſay with DAVID. Behold, I am conceiued in ſinne: and PAVL, I know that in my fleſh dwelleth no good thing: PAVL was neuer ſo confident in ſaying, that there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus, till hee could proue it by himſelfe: For the Law of the Spirit of life, which is in Chriſt Ieſus, hath freed me from the Law of ſinne and of death. Then he cryed out, This is a true ſaying, and by all meanes worthy to be receiued, that Chriſt Ieſus came into the World to ſaue ſinners; when he had himſelfe for an example, a chiefe Sinner, a Perſecutor, a Blaſphemer, and an Oppreſſor, but yet receiued to mercy, and made an example of Gods long ſuffering vnto others. What is the reaſon that many things, for which in preaching we bring much much proofe out of Scripture, yet are not regarded, ſurely, we cannot winne men to trie matters vpon themſelues. They are ſomewhat for the time conuinced, and ſtroken with the authoritie and name of the Scripture, but it vaniſheth all, becauſe there is no impreſſion made through perſonall proofe. Faith iuſtifieth, the preaching of the Word ſtandeth, Hope ſuſtayneth, Prayer preuaileth, a good Conſcience makes bold: there be many ſuch gracious Maximes diſperſed thorowout the Volume of Gods ſacred Booke. The truth, the good, the certainety, the ſweet thereof is neuer knowne indeed, vntill a man is able to reflect vpon them out of his owne inward feeling, and to ſay with DAVID. Theſe things, Lord, are true indeed, and that my ſoule doth know right well.

*Pſal.*139.14.

4. There can be no conſtancy in Religion where this wants. I may fetch a ſimilitude from out of my Text, what is that requires ſalt can continue ſweet and good, without ſalt? eſpecially if the ſeaſon be very hot, it doth the ſooner putrifie and become vnholſome and vnſauory. It is not poſſible for any man to hold out in a good Profeſſion, except hee bee well ſeaſoned, chiefly when the parching heat ariſeth of that fierie triall, whereof Saint Peter, 1. Epiſt. cap. 4. 12. How ſhall a man remayne ſtrong in the defence of that, the ſweetneſſe whereof hee hath neuer taſted in himſelfe. When he hath not felt the worth of Religion in his owne experience and heart, what ſhould moue him to engage himſelfe, and all that euer hee hath, for Religion? What is the cauſe that wee ſee daily ſo many to fall from their ſtedfaſtneſſe, and to make themſelues lothſome to all good men, by reuolts, and by returning backe to their old vomit, but this? they were neuer any more then ouerly and ſuperficially beſprinkled with this holy Salt, it neuer ſoked and pierced in ſo farre as that, which Dauid calleth, the inward affection, or, the ſecret of their hearts. Euery ſmall blaſt driueth them from their ſtanding, and bloweth off that Salt from them, which was but ſlightly ſhaked on, and neuer went further then their vtter ſide.

*Pſal.*51.6.

5. Laſtly, thoſe duties required of each Chriſtian in his place of admoniſhing, comforting, confirming, exhorting, prouoking, vnto loue and to good works, can neuer be practiſed aright, but by a man who is willing and able to doe them out of perſonall feeling. Dauid then promiſed to teach the way of God vnto ſinners, when God ſhould reſtore vnto him the ioy of his ſaluation: then he called others to come and harken vnto him, with a promiſe, to teach them the feare of the Lord, when his owne ſoule could glory in the Lord. When hee was able to relate to others what God had done for his ſoule, then he was fit to draw others to him, to bee directed by him. That which is in it ſelfe vnſauory, can neuer make another thing to be ſweet.

*Pſal.*51.12,13.

*Pſal.*34.2.11.

And thus haue I prooued this point, touching the neceſſitie of ſpirituall ſeaſoning, lying vpon all the Diſciples of Chriſt Ieſus, both ſuch as ſit aboue in Moſes Chaire, and thoſe that haue their place below in the Learners forme.

The

The Vſe is according to the courſe and order of the Doctrine, firſt, to Teachers, then to all that haue giuen their names vnto Ieſus Chriſt.

Firſt, Wee whoſe Miniſtry muſt bee ſalt to others, haue neede aboue others to haue ſalt in our ſelues; ſo much hauing before beene prooued, they are thereby to be reprooued, which are herein defectiue. I ſhould bethought my ſelfe to be ouer ſalt, if I ſhould ſay the vtmoſt that I could concerning this. A Preacher is now adaies in a kind of ſtrait; If he bee ſilent touching miniſteriall defaults, theſe men (ſay the people) can winke at one another, and though they fall cloſe vpon vs, yet they can baulke their owne enormities. If he deale faithfully and plainely, as one deſiring the refining of the ſonnes of Leui, and the purifying of them as gold and ſiluer, that the Nazerites might be purer then the Snow, whiter then the Milke, and become like the poliſhed Saphire. This is held by thoſe of his owne fether, a kind of vnkind deſiling of his owne neſt, almoſt as bad as Chams diſcouering his fathers nakedneſſe, and an opinion will be had that that man ſeekes the rayſing of his owne eſteeme out of others blemiſhes, and the engroſſing and monopolizing of all reſpect and reuerence to himſelfe. I will walke, if I can, in a middle path, that I may neither be reputed partially by ſaying nothing, nor adiudged too better and cenſorious by ſaying too much. This then is all I ſay, well might it make a man of Dauids conſtitution to caſt forth many a ſalt teare, to conſider the want of ſalt in thoſe who are to ſeaſon others; I meane the little better then irreligion of ſome of thoſe who ought to beget and plant Religion in the hearts of others. When in that deportment of ours, which is outward to the world, and in the view thereof there ſhall bee obſerued pride, exceſſe, riot, couetuouſneſſe, contention, vanitie, when there ſhall be heard vſually to fall from our tongues othes, and ſcurvilous ſpeeches, it will be hardly thought wee haue any ſalt within. Such things as theſe, I may ſay of them reſpectiuely to our Profeſſion, as Salomon doth of honour for a foole, they are as vnmeete and as ill befitting as is Snow in Sommer, or, as is the raine in the time of Harueſt. Then againe, when our Miniſteriall ſeruices ſhall be found (as wo is me that they ſhould ſo be found) ſeldome, ſparing, vnconſtant, heartleſſe, frothy, ſpiritleſſe, ſuch as by which the Hearers are not edified, ſhall it be ſaid that we are ſeaſoned. If the poore hungry ſoules that would bee as glad to receiue ſome ſpirituall refreſhing from vs, as the woman of Canaan was to receiue a crum of grace from our Sauiour, ſhall goe away vnſatisfied, and after our ſermons ſhall find themſelues as the Dreamer in the Prophet, who did imagine, that he was eating, but when he awaked his ſoule was empty; or elſe, ſhall bee turned of as men diſcomfited in the day of battell, galed and wounded as if they were the worſt of all men; and men of corrupt minds ſhall receiue ſtrength in their wickedneſſe, and bee as it were moued and clapped in the backs to goe on in their virulency and ſpite, and ſcorne of good Profeſſion, bee theſe the fruits of ſalt within. A word may ſuffice, and it will enter more into a man of vnderſtanding then an hundred ſtripes into a foole. Let vs labour, I beſeech you, you, to haue our owne hearts well powdered, this ſhall be, a comely ornament to our heads, and as a chaine vnto our necks. It will make our preaching not to be in ſound only, but in ſoundneſſe alſo, our words like Goads, our exhortations will bee the faſtned Nailes ſpoken of, Eccleſ. 12. 11. The withſtander ſhall be aſhamed, the ſoules of Gods people ſhall reioyce. Me thinks that can neuer be too much taken notice of, which is ſaid of BARNABAS, Act. 11. 23. 24. Who when hee came, and had ſeene the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpoſe of heart they would cleaue vnto the Lord, Verſ. 14. For hee was a good man, and full of the holy Ghoſt, and of faith, and much people was added vnto the Lord. That ſame (hee was a good man) it lookes both wayes: Firſt, vpon this, He exhorted, &c. Secondly, vpon this, Much people, &c. Being a good man, and hauing much ſalt in himſelfe, his care was great to bee diligent for a common good, and in as much as he was a good man, of a gracious and holy carriage, hee did much good, the people were the more affected with his Miniſtry. This therefore which I commend vnto you, as it will cauſe diligence, ſo it will alſo bring ſucceſſe. A man well ſeaſoned, neither will he be idle, neither can he be vnprofitable. And ſo for the Vſe of the Doctrine, ſo farre as it concernes Teachers.

Eccleſ. 12. 11.

2. Concerning as Chriſtians.

Now for the Doctrine, as it reſpects all that haue giuen vp their names vnto Chriſt; Here is a matter worth the commending to vs all. The worth of it we haue heard, and in regard of it, it doth deſerue our entertainement: But much more is it meete that this ſhould be euen preſſed vpon vs, conſidering how little of this ſeaſoning is amongſt vs. Certainely, though the numbers of thoſe that doe profeſſe Chriſtianitie be very great, yet the true ſmacke and reliſh of godlineſſe is to be found but in a few. The power of godlineſſe is to bee iudged of by that which is to be ſeene without in mens moſt vſuall conuerſation: The mayne ſeaſoning of the heart is Faith, and ſhew me thy faith out of thy works, ſaith the Apoſtle; and now if how we be ſeaſoned within, it muſt bee iudged by the ſtate of our outward courſe, there will be little reaſon to thinke that we haue, as my Text is, any ſalt in our ſelues. That rotten communication which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, and which is in a manner the Rhetorique of the times, when men belch blaſphemies againſt God, reproches againſt his Seruants, ſcoffes at his Religion, Atheiſtical Maxims, as if all piety were but fancy, vollies of othes, ſcurrilous and obſcene ieſts; when they which are more ciuill, and may bee reputed vertuous in reſpect of the former, haue ſeldome any other ſpeech, but of matters of profit, or vanitie, neuer any thing of Religion, or if any thing, coldly, harſhly, looſely, vnreuerently, is this the fruit of a ſeaſoned heart? This is none of that powdered ſpeech mentioned, Col. 4. 6. which being gracious it ſelfe, may miniſter grace vnto the Hearers. Maruaile not, I inſiſt firſt on this, as a ſpeciall euidence of our want of this holy Salt. No ſurer marke to iudge a man by, then the ſtate of his common ſpeech. Saint Iames ſaith, that a man ſeeming religious, and not refrayning his tongue, deceiues himſelfe, and his Religion is vaine. An vnſauoury ſpeech alwayes alwaies argueth an vnſanctified heart. It ſhewes a man to haue gotten a great conqueſt ouer himſelfe, and that he can well bridle his whole body that hath gotten the maſtery of his tongue. I will take heede to my wayes that I ſinne not with my tongue. DAVID knew, that if his wayes were vnreformed, his tongue would bee the blab, and ſooner or later would bewray it. I know there is many an hollow and ill hearted counterfait, who hath dipped and tipped his tongue with ſome better phraſe, ſuch as giues a ſound of ſome Religion, and vpon fits you ſhall haue them talke like Angels, and yet as Chriſt ſaid of Iudas, are Deuils indeede. Yet certaine it is, that as Peter, in his proteſting and ſwearing to the contrary, was deſcryed by his voyce and Dialect to be a Galilean, and as a man ſhall neuer be able to ſhake off that firſt kind of ſpeaking wherein he was firſt educated ſo, but that ſome touch of it will remaine by which it will be knowne to a diligent obſeruer whence he is: ſo it is impoſſible for a man of an vnſalted heart, ſo to counterfait the language of Canaan, but that his inward naughtineſſe will appeare euen in his talke. He that may come heare him in his right kind, when he ſpeaks freely and according to his heart, not being aware of any by, through an awfull reſpect to whom he might be moued to compoſe himſelfe, ſhall then ſee what he is, and that all his other was but a fained Language. And therefore till the Law of Grace be in mens Tongues: till their tongues bee as fined ſiluer, ſo that there is a conſtant and ſetled auoyding of prophane and graceleſſe ſpeaking, and an ableneſſe to delight and vſe to ſpeake graciouſly, holily, profitably, and according to the Apoſtles terme, as becommeth Saints, they muſt bee thought to haue no other but vnſeaſoned hearts. A mans conſcionable obſeruing of his ſpeech, keeping his mouth with a bridle, knowing how apt that buſie member is to exceede: yea, though God by the naturall ſituation of it, cloſed it in with a double hedge. A mans often lamenting betwixt God & his ſoule, his ſlips therein, praying for a watch to be ſet by his holy hand, for the keeping of the doore of his lips, is as ſure a token of an honeſt, gracious, ſimple heart, as any is. And therefore the generall diſſoluteneſſe that is herein at this day, is iuſtly to be named as a chiefe euidence of our need, to bee vrged to this of our Sauiour, Haue Salt in your ſelues.

Iam.3.2. Pſal.39.1. Mark.14.70. Pro.31.26. Pro.10.20. Epheſ.5.3. Iam.3.6. Gen.19.28.

Many mens Religion, I know, lyeth all in their tongues, but certainely there is no Religion in him, that ſhewes no fruit of care for the well gouernement of his tongue. And now what if I either could not, or would not inſiſt vpon any more euidences of our vnſeaſoned hearts, then this of our vnpowdered tongues, were it not enough? if our owne tongues be againſt vs, what can be for vs? and if it bee true which Saint Iames ſaith, that the tongue is euen a very world of iniquitie, and defileth the whole body: Is there not in this one particular enough laid to our charge? and what goodneſſe can bee in vs when our tongues are euill? But the ill ſauour of mens generall conuerſation, makes them euen ſtinke in the Noſtrils of God, and it is mounted vp aloft, like the ſmoke of Sodome, after it was burnt, which went vp as the ſmoke of a Furnace, and it it is to be wondred, if like the vapours exhaled into the Aire from the Earth, it bring not downe vpon vs ſome raging ſtorme of feareſull vengeance. What elſe can be thought of the whooredomes, the riots, Epicurious and Swiniſh drinkings, from which a man ſhall hardly find a great houſe, a Tauerne houſe, any houſe of meeting, ſcarcely any meeting to bee free; are theſe the effects of ſeaſoned hearts? When you Magiſtrates and men of authoritie, are remiſſe and partiall in iuſtice, ſo that euill doers looke you right in the face, and yet doth not goe away aſhamed, but are encouraged rather; when you great men tyrannize, you rich men doe oppreſſe and eate vp the people like bread, you Ladies and Gentlewomen, and ſuch as haue abilitie, doe euen ſtudie pride and faſhions, you Merchants deale cunningly, and you Tradeſmen falſely, you common people deuoure either other by fraud, and beate your ſelues one againſt another, euen to pieces, by contentions, when the iuſt and vpright man is laughed to ſcorne, and hee that refrayneth from euill makes himſelfe a prey, is there any reaſon it ſhould be ſaid, you haue ſalt in your ſelues? Theſe things ſtrongly ſauour of the dominion of ſinne, they haue no taſte at all of the power of godlineſſe. This holy Salt would mortifie and kill the originall of theſe outragious courſes. I pray thinke indifferently, whether this be not a fit time in which to crie out to you, Haue ſalt in your ſelues. And I beſeech you (Beloued) haue it, and take it while you may. It is proclaymed in your ſtreets, how long it will be ſo, who can tell? Oh that wee could make you to become greedie of this commoditie, that you would preſſe to it, and catch after it, as men deſirous to be ſeaſoned. Bring you euery man his ſacke, and that I may allude to the words of the Pſalme, Open the mouth of it wide, and the Lord will fill it.

Pſal.81.10.

Alas, that we ſhould come as we vſe to doe, ſome with ſacks, before filled with other traſh; ſome with broken ſacks, ſome careleſly managing our ſacks.

Firſt, They which come with filled ſacks, are they, who bring either hearts ſtuffed with preiudice, contempt of Gods Ordinance, ambitious, couetous, worldly, vicious thoughts; what roome is here for the ſalt to be receiued in? we powre it in, but it runnes beſide, there is no roome to enter, it is ſpilt like water on the ground. Oh ſhake your hearts, before you come, as you would your ſacks, that there may be no ſoyle within, whereby this ſacred Salt may receiue pollution.

Secondly, They haue broken ſacks, who here with looſe affections, and with a kind of careleſneſſe, the ſalt runs out as faſt as it is put in, a corne or two it may be here and there ſticks to, but ſuch whereof there can be made but little vſe. We ought diligently to take heede to the things which wee haue heard, leſt at any time they ſhould runne out: ſo is the greeke.

Thirdly, They ill manage their ſacks, who when they haue taken in ſome quantitie of this Salt, care not when they haue done to preſerue it to their vſe: like a man here at market that hath filled his ſacke, and leanes leanes it againſt a wall vntied, and goeth otherwhere, the next horſe or ſwine that comes ouerthroweth his ſacke, and ſpilleth and ſpoyleth his commoditie; thus is hee that on ſuch a day (as this chiefly) heares a Sermon: it may bee he takes in the ſalt of the Doctrine, with ſome indifferent care, but when he hath done, neuer knits vp the mouth of his ſacke, neuer ſhuts vp his heart with any ſecret prayer to God, to giue a bleſing, neuer reflects and turnes backe his thoughts vpon that he hath receiued; the meane while, whiles he hath here and there to doe; ſaluting here, and complementing there, buſie about this and that, his ſacke is ouerturned, his ſalt is gone, a little as good as nothing tarrieth by, but too little purpoſe. Well, yet when you haue done well thus farre, and haue ſafely carried home your lading, what ſhall you doe with it then, not be careleſſe of it, but prouide for ſauing it? Salt requires dry keeping, a veſſell by the fire, in a warme place, to preuent melting, is vſuall. The warmeſt place, I know, to put it in, that it may not melt and moulter into nothing, is, that which Salomon calleth the middeſt of the heart. This was a piece of Maries good huſwifery, ſhee kept all thoſe ſayings in her heart. Therefore as thou turneſt thy ordinary ſalt from out of thy ſacke into thy tub, ſo ſhake this from out of the ſacke of thy memory, into the veſſell of thy heart by meditation. When thou haſt made it ſure by meditation, remember ſalt is for vſe; and ſo is this; vſe for their owne particular, vſe for others.

Pro.4.21. Luk.2.51.

For their owne particular, learne of the houſewife, if there bee any thing in the houſe needes ſeaſoning, ſhee falls to worke with the ſalt forth-with. Looke into thy ſelfe, ſee what corrupt affections there be in thee, what careleſſe deſires, what inordinate motions, what crookedneſſe of will, what barrenneſſe of ſpirituall grace, a thouſand to one if the ſalt were good which thou broughteſt home, it will doe thee ſeruice for the bringing of thoſe corrupt humors to a better temper; chiefely take note of this. I am not aſhamed to vſe this houſhold kitchin ſimilitude ſtill. Shee that powdereth meate to keepe it ſweet, looke what places are moſt bloudy and moiſty, there ſhee euer puts in moſt ſalt, ſuch parts are moſt apt to putrifie: ſo doe thou, conſider with thy ſelfe what is thy chiefeſt ſinne, thy moſt preuailing fault, thy moſt ſtrong corruption, that which thou mayeſt call by Dauids phraſe, My wickednesse; thou ſhalt ſoone know it by the ſtrength of the affection to it, and thy vnwillingneſſe to forgoe it. Oh clap in, put on ſtore of ſalt there, rub it in hard. If thou haſt heard of any Iudgement, or reproofe, thruſt it on cloſe, it may be it may ſmart a little, it is no matter, better ſo then euer ake, this will ſoke out the ranke humours, and make thee become a ſweet lumpe before the Lord. It is a fault many times, men ſprinckle a little ſalt of Doctrine vpon themſelues here and there ſuperficially, they conſider not what be their maſter, their bloudy, their raigning ſinnes, thy ſearch not within and without to ſee where ſalt needes eſpecially, and ſo they become lothſome through the lacke of an effectuall powdering. Neither is this all required in the vſe of this ſalt for ones owne particular, particular, but there is also a more generall and an vniuersall vse to bee made thereof. What day is there in the family wherein there is no vse of common salt. Truth is, there is neither day in the life of a Christian, nor action in that day, wherein this spirituall salt can iustly bee thought superfluous. Euery sacrifice must be salted with salt, it was a rule of the ancient Law; and a man, not in some particulars, but in his whole course throughout, must giue vp himselfe as a liuing sacrifice, holy and acceptable vnto God. And howsoeuer it wilbe reputed an ouer precise Rule to bind a man, to season euery action of his whatsoeuer, with this heauenly salt, that is, to aduenture vpon nothing for which he hath not some rule of Doctrine to confirme it, yet certaine it is, that those particulars of a mans course, wherein this is left out, will like so many vnpowdered morsels mixed in with others, make the whole lump to become vnsauory. Thus much for applying this salt to our personall vse, both for the fretting and working out of vs our corruptions, and for the seasoning of our whole course, that as the Apostle saith, In all things we may be pleasing vnto God.

Pſal.18.23.

Leuit.2.13.

Rom.12.1.

Col.1.10.

There is an Vse, it is to be put to in respect of others, and they are either of our owne houshold societie, or our Neighbors.

For this first, euery man knowes, that the Master furnisheth not himselfe with salt for himselfe only, but for his houshold also. Hast thou stored thy selfe with this ministeriall salt, binde thy selfe to this, that such as are about thee, may bee the better for thy hauing it? well fare Popery for that, I haue heard old folks talke, that when in those daies, they had holy Bread giuen them at Church, they would beare a part thereof to those that did abide at home. Good it were if Masters of families would thinke themselues bound to carry home some of this salt, and bestow it on those that are of their houshold charge. It were a strange thing if a man should keepe all such an vsefull commoditie to himselfe. Nay indeede, he doth but seeme seasoned to himselfe, that makes not conscience to make others partakers with him, of that salt of grace, himselfe hath tasted of.

And yet neither must a mans putting this salt to the vse of others, bee confined and couped vp within his owne walls, but it must stretch further then those bounds. The lips of a righteous man must feede many. When the woman of Samaria had gotten some of this salt from our Sauiour at the Well, shee ranne home and made no dainties of it, all her Neighbours were the better for her store. This is a commoditie will increase by vse, and the more any man maketh it common vnto others, the more it will become plentifull in himselfe. A man can neuer admonish, exhort, comfort, and aduise another, but thereby there returnes an augmentation of good to his owne soule. And thus haue I laboured to presse the Vse of this point to all. I haue shewed the generall want that there is of this salt in our selues: Actions and speeches vnsauoury are signes of hearts and soules vnseasoned. I haue exhorted to endeuour to be better furnished, and haue declared which way you may come by awaiawaiting vpon Gods publike Ordinance, to haue this ſalt in your ſelues. It may be, that in handling this, I may ſeeme to ſome finer eares to haue beene ouer-homely, ſpeaking of Sacks, and Tubs, and Powdering, and ſuch like; but the termes of my Text are my diſcharge: And for my owne part, I will euer be of the Apoſtles mind, I had rather in the Church to ſpeake fiue words, ſo as that I might alſo inſtruct others, then ten thouſand words in a ſtrange tongue; ſo doe I little care how plaine my termes may ſeeme to ſome, whom nothing can content, but matters more remote, in words more refind, ſo that they may be profitable to the ſoules of thoſe that feare the Lord. And I haue the rather fitted it ſo, as you haue heard, that this ordinarie creature of Salt, and our vſefull courſe in buying and applying it to vſes, being bought, may ſtill bee a remembrancer vnto vs of the worth and neceſſitie of a preaching Miniſtrie, and may put vs in mind of what wee ought to doe, both for the furniſhing our ſelues with this holy ſeaſoning which may bee gotten by it, and for continuall making vſe thereof, both for our owne and others comfort. And indeed for my owne particular, I cannot but take occaſion by ſuch places as this and others, in which the Spirit of God comes home to vs in ſuch familiar termes, to admire the goodneſſe of God, that laboureth to put vs in mind of ſome ſpirituall matter by common things, that in the midſt of our ordinarie occaſions, yet we might turne our thoughts to higher matters, and ſucke ſome hony out of all particulars. What a ſort of things could I muſter together, falling into common vſe, within our houſes and about, and in daily buſineſſes, which the Scripture ſome where or other directs vs, how wee may get good by for our ſoules? It cannot be beſides my Text, to giue you a little taſte thereof, that you may perceiue how a wiſe Chriſtian is taught by a kind of heauenly Alcumiſtrie, to extract gold from out of the baſeſt metals. In our priuate houſes and domeſticall ordinarie affaires, wee ſee our Infants, as ſoone as they be borne, begin to ſucke and feele for the breſt, from hence Saint Peter teacheth vs, as new borne Babes to deſire the ſincere milke of the Word; wee feele our ſelues, that are Fathers, readie to giue them things neceſſarie; if they aske bread, wee will not giue them a ſtone; if Fiſh, not a Scorpion; here our Sauiour would haue vs to conclude, that our heauenly Father will much more giue good things to them that aske him. We behold the Mother, what buſineſſe ſoeuer ſhee haue, yet ſhee will remember to attend her ſuckling; God would wee ſhould note that he cannot forget thoſe which are begotten to him by the Goſpell. When we light vp Candles for our houſhold vſes, and then ſet them on a Table, that all which come into the houſe may ſee thereby: Chriſt will teach vs by it, not to hide the graces which God beſtowes, but to employ them to his glorie in a common good. When Leauen is laid into the Meale to make it ſowre, Chriſt by the ſoone working of the Leauen, would haue vs conceiue how grace works to the conuerting and changing of the heart. And Paul would thereby informe vs, how quickly a man is corrupted by the company of the vngodly. The Father lookes for ho-

I could yet goe further this way; ſurely, me thought, when I meditated vpon this plaine ſimilitude, which I find here in my Text, that I ſhould doe you wrong, if I ſhould not acquaint you with that which I had obſerued in my reading of the Scriptures of this kind, that ſo wee might know how to vſe earthly things with ſpirituall minds, and might make the ordinarie matters of the world to bee a Schole-maſter vnto godlineſſe. A man doing thus, may follow his buſineſſe in the world cloſe, and yet therewhile further himſelfe towards heauen. Were it not an excellent thing, if the ſight of Salt ſhould euer mind vs of this Doctrine. What hinderance to him that buyeth it, or to her that vſeth it in her family, to remember what care muſt be to preſerue it, what diligence to apply it, how ſoone wee ſhall rot and putrifie, if wee bee without it? Indeed herein lyeth a mayne difference betwixt the children of God, and the children of this World. The children of this world are like little children, who finding a picture in a booke gaze vpon and make ſport with it, but neuer conſider who it is. The children of God examine the ſtorie which the picture repreſents, they will picke ſome further matter out then that which is preſented to the eye. And it is a ſigne that men haue no mind, but on earthly things, when they take no occaſion by the beholding of earthly things, to ſtirre vp themſelues to heauenly thoughts.

And thus farre of the firſt Branch of the aduice to the Diſciples, in reſpect of themſelues, Haue Salt in your ſelues. You that are to ſeaſon others, ſee that you bee ſeaſoned your ſelues. You that come to ſeeke ſalt from others, ſee that you haue it in your ſelues.

Now of that part of the aduice, which is in regard of others: And haue peace one with another: The Doctrine thus ſtands.

The ſecond Doctrine.

That amongſt the Diſciples of Chriſt, there muſt bee mutuall peace. In your ſelues, ſaith our Sauiour, let there be grace; one towards another, let there be peace. Our God is the God of Peace. Our Sauiour is the Prince of Peace. The Gospell which is preached amongst vs, is the Gospell of Peace. The substance of it is glad tydings of Peace. Our calling is in Peace. They which are the Lords are called the sonnes of Peace: so we ought all to endeauour to keepe the vnitie of the spirit in the bond of peace: and to liue in peace. Christians must follow peace with all men; and if it bee possible haue peace with all men; and therefore among themselues they must seeke it, and ensue it much more. I must open this as the former Doctrine, by distinguishing vpon Christs Disciples: some are Preachers of peace: some are Professors of Peace. Let mee shew you how this Doctrine reacheth vnto both.

The Teachers of Peace, must haue peace one towards another. Their agreement, their peace, their consent, is a great motiue to the people to entertaine their Doctrine. Hereupon was that vse of Pauls, to prefixe the names of others with his owne, as, PAVL, and our brother SOSTENES. PAVL, and our brother TIMOTHEVS. PAVL, and all the bretheren that are with me. PAVL, and SILVANVS, and TIMOTHEVS. Thus he, that the people to whom he wrote, obseruing the consent, might reuerence the writing so much the more. Thus went the Canon made at Ierusalem, with a Preface premised to declare consent. The Apostles and the Elders, and the brethren.

The mayne furtherance to the reedifying of the Temple after the captiuitie, was this: The builders had many enemies, and they consulted, and agreed together, to runne one course, and to assist each other, and by the sound of the Trumpet, to meete at an instant, if there were any opposition. It was like Ioabs policie in fighting against the Amalekites, backed by the Aramites, hee agreed with Abishai his brother, to whose conduct a part of the Army was committed, If the Aramites be stronger then I, thou shalt helpe mee, and if the Children of Ammon be too strong for thee, I will come and succour thee. Their agreement wanted not successe. The case stands in the building of the spirituall body, as it did in the Typicall body, in fighting the Lords battell, by those whose office it is to fight the good fight of Faith, as in the fighting for Israel against Ammon. The agreement of the builders, will aduance the building both with speede and beauty: the ioynt proceeding of the leaders, will vndoubtedly preuaile against the common enemie.

There muſt be mutuall peace among the profeſſors of peace, the places which I firſt named in the beginning of the Doctrine, doe enioyne it. This is the marke by which thy are knowne, By this ſhall all men know, that ye be my Diſciples, if ye haue loue one to another, to loue one another, and to haue peace one towards another, are all one. They are none of Chriſts, if they haue not the Spirit of Chriſt: and one of the fruits of the Spirit is peace. If the truth be not taught in loue, it cannot proſper as it ſhould, and if the truth be not followed in loue, men cannot grow vp in all things vnto Chriſt as they ought. I doe rather ſtriue to abridge this point, then ſtudy to enlarge it. The vſe will require much to bee ſaid, which yet I muſt ſhorten too, and therefore I will purpoſely bee the briefer in the Doctrine, that in the Vſe (as the time will giue leaue) I may be a little more enlarged.

Iob.13.35. Rom.8.9. Gal.5.22. Epheſ.4.15.

And firſt, the Vſe of that branch which concerning the peace, which ought to be amongſt vs Miniſters, that are ſent out like Noahs Doue, with a branch of Oliue in our mouthes, to preach peace and vnitie vnto others, makes me wiſh that I could wiſh truely with IEREMIE, that mine head were full of water, and mine eyes a fountaine of teares, that I might weepe day and night, for the wofull want of peace that is amongſt vs: be that Gath and Aſhkelon, and the Daughters of the vncircumciſed; ſhould reioyce to ſee vs like the yong men of Helkath-hazzurim, euery one catching his fellow by the head, and thruſting his ſword into his fellowes ſide. The one grudging priuately one againſt another, and girding publiquely one at another in the Pulpit, one calls his Fellow Puritane, hee againe calls him Formaliſt! Oh what a reioycing is this to Papiſts abroade, what contentment doth it giue to the ill affected at home, how doth it make the prophane ones ſcoffe, the ſimple hearted to be at a ſtand, not knowing which way to goe, and the poore honeſt ſoule to mourne in his ſoule to ſee ſuch deſtraction? Happy ſhall that man be called, that ſhall make vp theſe breaches, and accord theſe ſtrifes, and cry out to vs; Now, fie for ſhame, what meaneth this, are you not brethren? Haue you forgot the legacy which your Maſter left you; My peace I leaue vnto you, and the charge he hath bound you with, haue peace one towards another. And ſurely, if any mans life and bloud might quench the heate of this vnkinde ſtrife, it were well beſtowed. I am ſure while the laborers are together by the eares, the worke goeth not forward, and while the husbandmen are at variance about bounds and limits, and who accounted the better workeman, all the while the Plough ſtands ſtill, and the Diuell doubleth his diligence in the ſowing of the Tares, ſome fall to Browniſme, ſome to Popery, ſome are Newters, ſome euery thing, ſome nothing, and ſcarce any man what he ſhould be. I would for my part the occaſions of ſtrife were vtterly cut off, but ſith they bee not, let vs diligently and ioyntly, and euery man according to his proportion and gift receiued, promote the

the things wherein we all agree, and although in some secondary things, wee discent in opinion, yet let vs bee one in affection. Remember the
*Rom.*14.3. ground of Pauls saying. Let not him that eateth dispise him that eateth not, let not him that eateth not iudge him that eateth, for God hath receiued him. But I am here necessarily to turne my selfe to the people, which looke vpon our strifes, and with whom it fares, as it doth sometimes with men, intentiuely looking vpon a fray in a Market, and therewhile their Purse is picked; so whiles they gaze at our follies and heede them too much, they lose themselues, they know not what.

1. Shall I councell in the Lord, what ye ought to doe in this case. Know that your sinnes, especially your not valuing the Gospell of Christ Iesus, as you ought, hath brought this. I speake it not to excuse vs, but to admonish you. I am perswaded, if the first breaking in of the light of the Gospell into this Land, had beene more esteemed, and walked in, it had neuer beene as it is. The Lord had iustly troubled the water which men let runne along, not drinking so desirously of it as they should. Labour you to walke more worthy of the Gospell then you doe, and these things through the mercy of God will much be holpen.

2. Be wise and learne how to iudge, and what to thinke in this point of ministerial consent & peace, that you may not easily stumble through mistaking. Here therefore in order, I pray heartily obserue these particulars.

1. First, That consent and agreement of Teachers is no certane marke of *Exod.*32. truth, in that wherein they consent, Aron and all other the Leuites con-
1. *King.*22. sented to the making of the golden Calfe; foure hundred Prophets ioyned together to perswade good successe to Ahab, yet that was false which they perswaded. Our Sauiour was condemned by a common consent of *Reuel.*13.16. Elders and Priests. Great consent and vnitie was propheſied to be in the Kingdome of Antichrist, which is to bee noted against the Papists. They brag of their vnitie, which brag, though it be without ground of Truth, the varietie of opinions and conceits, which is betwixt their greatest and most learned Writers, being infinite: yet if it were true, it were of no force to proue them to be the true Church, because there may be a consent in
*Gen.*49.5,6. falshood. SIMEON and LEVI are brethren, instruments of cruelty, are *Pro.*11.21. in their habitations, &c. The wicked doe ioyne hand in hand, and ga-
*Isa.*8.9,10. ther vpon heapes, &c.

2. Secondly, that it is possible for some dissention to fall out some times *Gal.*2.11. euen amongst the best men. A controuersie betwixt Peter and Paul, be-
*Act.*11.2. twixt Peter and the other Apostles and Brethren at Ierusalem. The diffe-
*Act.*15.38. rence betweene Paul and Barnabas was very eagre. Dissentions in Co-
1. *Cor.*1.11. rinth. Great and vehement quarrels betwixt Austen and Hierome, Cyril and Theodoret, Chrysostome and Theophylact, as Histories and their owne Writings testifie. It is so; first, by the cunning of the Deuill, who to stop the course of the Gospell, laboureth to sow the seeds of dissention. Secondly, by reason of the remainders of corruption which are in all: there is much ignorance and selfe loue euen in the best, and these things cause differences, while men either see not the Truth straight, ſtraight, or are too much deuoted to their owne fancies; fitly to this purpoſe is that ſimilitude, 1. Cor. 13. 12. men dim-ſighted looking thorow Spectacles vpon the ſame thing farre off, will apprehend it diuerſly. Thirdly, by Gods prouidence, for the diſtinguiſhing of true Profeſſors from Hypocrites, and for the better boulting out of Truth. Truth commeth to light by nothing ſo much as by differences amongſt men. The queſtion among the Diſciples, touching ſuperioritie, gaue occaſion to our Sauiour to handle that point more fully. Sundrie points Saint Paul taught and wrought of more exactly, by reaſon of the diſſentions in Corinth, as of the Reſurrection, the Sacrament. This is to be noted, for their ſakes, who condemne the Church of England not to be true, becauſe of differences of opinion, in ſome things, among the Learned. And it is a conceit of ſome profane wretches in the Countrie, O, ſay they, theſe Preachers agree not, you ſhall not find two of a mind, we will beleeue none of them all; which as it a falſe accuſation, ſo were it more true then it is, we muſt know, that among the beſt there may bee ſome diſſention and queſtion for a time, in ſome things, without preiudice to the mayne Truth. And therefore to take away this common ſcandall more fully, which is vſually both among our ſeduced Papiſts, and among other corruptly minded, who would fayne find a colour for their contempt of preaching, this is now thirdly to be conſidered; That among Profeſſors and Preachers of Religion, there is, or may be a threefold conſent. Firſt, in one Faith and Doctrine; namely, a conſent of iudgement. Secondly, in Affection. Thirdly, in Speech; namely, when their teaching and manner of holding and defending of points and Doctrines, is the ſame. Now albeit a conſent in euery one of theſe three were to be wiſhed, yet if there be but the firſt only, it ſufficeth for the iuſtifying of thoſe ſocieties where it is, to be the true Churches of Chriſt. And this kind of conſent, in iudgement, is (bleſſed be God) in our Church, as appeareth by the Articles of Religion, to which euery Miniſter ſubſcribeth at his Ordination: which may be a witneſſe, that in the fundamentall points of Religion we are all of one mind. And how for the mayne grounds of Religion, all the Proteſtant reformed Churches of Europe, which haue diuided themſelues from Rome, doe agree, the booke called the Harmonie of Confeſſions, is a ſufficient teſtimonie, where are ſet downe the particular determinations of euery ſeuerall Church and State, touching the chiefe points of godlineſſe; where any man may ſee how we all hold together in the foundation. Now among our ſelues, and betwixt vs and other Churches, there are ſome differences of opinions, as it cannot bee choſen, ſo long as we carry with vs our naturall imperfections, but yet in the generall grounds of theſe differences we accord. Although the differences are not to be reioyced in nor cheriſhed, but to be ſorrowed for and prayed againſt, yet this wee may boaſt of to Gods glory, and to the ſtopping of the mouthes of Papiſts and Atheiſts, that all this while the foundation of Religion is not razed by vs, but it is kept firme and ſound among vs; and the Lord grant it may ſo bee ſtill. Now concerning the rent, which of later yeeres hath beene in our Church, which if any man might make vp with the losse of his life, it were a happy sacrifice, in which there hath beene, and continueth yet to bee such wars about Ceremonies, and things of that nature: let mee adde a word to take away that scandall, and to settle the minds of all, that feare God. Let it still bee remembred (as I said) that though mens minds are too much stirred in these things (yet God bee praysed) the foundation of Religion is on both sides held and thought sincerely. Some now and then that are either corrupt or ignorant, vent some vnsound opinions, but that is nothing to the impairing of a true being of a whole Church.

Now for the branch of the Doctrine of Peace, to be amongst all; you that are Hearers and Professors, as well as amongst vs, that are Ministers. Is not here also matter of complaint and sorrow, to see how men liue. What brawles, what brabbles, what dissentions, what fillings of all Courts with suits, sauouring only of spleene, and tending only to vexation. There is only one roote of this, which if it could be killed, peace would grow. What is that? Salomon shall tell you; only by pride men make contention; want of the Spirit of meekenesse, which should asswage in vs all swelling thoughts one towards another, and make all our things to be done in loue, is the only thing which doth diuide vs. I say the lesse herein, both because of time, and because matter of this nature haue beene (as I vnderstand) taught and pressed hence, out of the Historie betwixt Abraham and Lot. Only this I adde, we can neuer be true preseruers of Peace, till we begin in the ground of Peace, which is Religion. We must first be pure before we can be peaceable. There is a peace which Christ came not to sound, neither doth he approue. A Minister, vnder a pretence of peace, to let euery man alone in his sinnes; a Christian, vnder a shew of peace, to conuerse with any. There is a peace in a sort, and a loue and league amongst the worst, your good Fellowes be all in loue and peace, and reioyce in the wickednesse one of another, vntill perhaps, as it oft falls out, the Pot doe breed a quarrell.
